I listened to the earlier debate on the motion to suspend Standing Orders. It was interesting to hear some of the parties on the Benches at the top end of the Chamber who, at that stage, were saying to us that we were the chief blockage to the passage of the Welfare Reform Bill and that we needed to get on with it. Other parties said that they did not like the Welfare Reform Bill but they had to accept it. Now, suddenly, they have taken cold feet on the issue and want another week to discuss the Welfare Reform Bill, having lambasted us for the last 10 or 12 months that we needed to simply get on with passing the Bill and deal with the consequences of it.

Everything changed for all of us with the election in May of a single-party Conservative Government that was even more hell-bent on pursuing austerity measures and making those less well-off in society pay for the deficit that that Government and previous Governments had created. George Osborne, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, made an announcement in July. The Tories had dressed up the changes to the welfare system for the last number of years as being something to encourage people out to work. Very clearly, that was proved to be the lie that most of us here knew it would be when they targeted working families and those who availed themselves of family and child tax credits for further swingeing cuts to the resources that were available to ordinary people.

That changed the game for all of us and brought us back to discussions, again, in Stormont House and Stormont Castle about how we would deal with the new situation over the summer months and, in a more intense fashion, over the last 10 weeks. I attended meetings with most of the parties, and I cannot recall a disagreement that all the parties accepted that we had a responsibility, just as we felt that we had a responsibility to deal with the welfare issue, to use the resources available to us to create a safety net for deserving and vulnerable people in society. We all accepted that the tax credit issue changed that and that we needed to look to that issue. We also acknowledged that we had a responsibility to deal with the impending cuts to families as a consequence of the proposed changes to tax credits.

Thus, we set about trying to craft a system that recognised that. As a consequence of the agreement that was reached yesterday, we will have a bespoke system that will be designed with schemes brought forward by a panel headed up by Eileen Evason, who is a recognised expert in this field and someone who, all will recognise, comes from a position of deep sympathy for those people who find themselves made even more vulnerable as a consequence of the British Government's policies. She has a determination to find ways to assist the most vulnerable in society.

That panel will bring forward schemes worth some £585 million to be allocated over the space of four years, which is significantly more money over a shorter period than originally was in the Stormont House Agreement. Interestingly, all parties here agreed that previous scheme, but they did not sign up to the deal when it eventually came out. Nonetheless, they managed to take part in implementation talks over the last 10 weeks to implement the deal that they refused to sign up to. That is the kind of topsy-turvy world that appears in this Assembly from time to time, where people can support things, oppose them, then support them and take the bits that they like and oppose bits that they do not like, and pose in that regard in front of the electorate.

All parties agreed that we needed to do something with tax credits as well as the welfare issue, and I think that what has been proposed and agreed in part of this implementation plan gives us protection measures that are better than those that exist anywhere on these islands for people who are struggling.

I turn to the matter that is front of us today, which is how to give effect to all of this. Over the last number of months, the British Secretary of State, Theresa Villiers, made a number of interventions, most of which were unhelpful, on this matter in particular and on a range of other matters. At one stage, she threatened that, in the event of no agreement among the parties, the British Government would legislate over our heads and against our wishes, and implement in full the welfare reform changes without any of the protections that we had agreed to build into that process. That, clearly, is not what is happening here today. We have an agreement among some of the parties, and some of the other parties have reserved their position on this. Having listened to some of the commentary over the last number of days, I am not clear where people actually stand in relation to the matter that is front of us, but maybe we will find out during the debate.

What we have now is the Assembly agreeing a scheme to look after the most vulnerable people in society and people who will be affected by tax credits. The Assembly will approve the legislation that will go over to Westminster to be passed. In doing so, we will have returned to us at least some of the completely unjust and unjustifiable fines that were being taken as a consequence of our decision-making process on welfare. Importantly, because I have heard people say that we are handing power over to Westminster, the sunset clause in this legislation ensures that this is a one-off process to facilitate this particular arrangement, after which the powers in relation to welfare will come back to the Assembly. That may create further difficulties for us up the road. Who knows what the Tory Government have up their sleeve in terms of further attacks on the poor, the vulnerable and the working poor in society? But we will meet those challenges as they arise, but one thing is certain: this Assembly will retain control over those matters.

We are not looking for credit, and I quite understand people's frustration with all that has gone on here over the past time, but, over the eight or nine years since 2007, the Assembly has acted as a bulwark against austerity policies. We have prevented the introduction of water charges, and we have prevented the introduction of prescription charges. We have capped tuition fees, and we still have free transport for people over 60. All parties in this institution can and do claim some credit for all that. Even parties that consistently voted against the Budgets and consistently voted against Programmes for Government can claim some credit for those arrangements, and I think that we can justifiably be proud that, in a situation where hard-pressed families right across these islands are getting stretched and pressed and squeezed even more, we have taken measures and prevented things from happening to people and to try to give comfort.

As the Executive said at the time, the decision on water charges was taken on the basis that we considered that economically hard-pressed families could not sustain any further attack on them. The Assembly took decisions that others have criticised us for and that have stretched our budgets in other areas even further. Nonetheless, we took those decisions for those reasons, and I think that we can justifiably be proud of them. As I said, even those who have opposed Budgets and Programmes for Government can and do share in some of the credit for that.

I am sure that we will get an opportunity to return to the legacy issues that are outstanding and the refusal of the British Government to come up to the mark on those.

Going forward from today, we can create an opportunity to continue with that work; to effectively use this institution to oppose and challenge continued Tory austerity, as others are trying to do in Scotland and in Wales, although with less success than we have had on some of these issues, by the way; to work with progressive forces in Britain — Scotland, Wales and England — where there is increasingly a debate about the impact of all this on ordinary people and on society generally; to work with progressive people in the South as well; to continue to stand up for vulnerable people in this society; to continue to get the best deal possible and offer the best possible safety net, if you like, for those people; and to continue to ensure that hard-pressed families get our support. From the people here who did agree, in principle, to the measures being taken, given the unfairness and the unjustness of the British Government's approach, there is a determination to try to do things better for the people we represent in this part of the world. I think that the agreement reached offers us an opportunity to do that, and we should take it forward into the future.

Mr McKinney: Mr Speaker, at the outset, I ask for a bit of indulgence in the context of this debate. It obviously comes as a result of the negotiations that have been going on over the last while. I would like to put it on the record that we were, of course, disappointed that parties went off to deal with issues such as welfare and others without fully consulting all the parties. We saw — this is recognised — a major hole in the overall deal in its failure to deal with legacy issues.

For us, there is another major hole in the deal, in that it failed to include major work on the economy. Like other parties, the SDLP recognises that we have the lowest paid economy in the UK. We have regions and government districts in Northern Ireland that, 17 or 18 years after the Good Friday Agreement, continue to top league tables for long-term deprivation and unemployment. It was our expectation and hope that we would not attack those communities further and lead to the potential for a benefits cap or benefits freeze for four years and completely eliminate targets on child poverty. We wanted to see an ambition at the heart of this project that would have seen university places, training, apprenticeships, consistent actually —

Mr Speaker: Could I —

Mr McKinney: I did ask for a bit of indulgence, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: Yes, and I think that you will agree that you got some indulgence. We are actually discussing the legislative consent motion, and I have to strongly advise you to return to that, or else I will be obliged to stop your contribution.

Mr McKinney: Mr Speaker, I was touching, in the context of my remarks, on the issues of the benefits freeze, the benefits cap and the elimination of, or the attempt to eliminate, child poverty, which we should have as a core ambition here. West Belfast, for example, is an area that singularly tops the agenda there.

As for the SDLP's contribution to all these welfare reform issues, our bona fides are clear. We wanted to see this rooted in devolution. We wanted the clauses to appear in the legislation that applies here. I just turn to the Northern Ireland (Welfare Reform) Bill, which will be based on the principle of an Order in Council. I reflect that, rather than "will" or "shall":

"Her Majesty may by Order in Council".

And:

"No recommendation is to be made to Her Majesty to make an Order in Council under subsection (1) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the Order has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, each House of Parliament."

So, I am delighted to see Sinn Féin's new-found confidence in the Tory Government in respect of that. I reflect Conor Murphy's remarks in that I think that we might see some more "topsy-turvy" to come.

As I say, the SDLP wanted to see things done differently. We are concerned about how some of this will be funded. We do not know where the money will come from. It is supposed to be coming from investigations into fraud. We note that just over £51 million of fraud was detected last year, yet there is an expectation to increase that by more than 100%.

It is important to get to the point of exactly what we are being asked to do. We are being asked to diminish aspects of devolution that the SDLP, for one, fought hard to achieve. We reject that. We are being asked to hand over to the Tories, or Thatcher's children, as Martin McGuinness likes to call them, decisions on legislating on welfare.

1.00 pm

Only a matter of weeks ago, Sinn Féin would have described this as a huge, serious mistake, but, now, Sinn Féin is doing Tory austerity, and in spades. By allowing the British Government to implement welfare reform, it is introducing the benefits cap, freezing the benefits for four years and completely eradicating those targets.

I too would like to praise Eileen Evason. She has been a stalwart in defending the rights of the most underprivileged and vulnerable here. I welcome her involvement, but I express a concern that any involvement that her and her team will have will only be consistent with the legislation that comes back to us. For me, that is a concern because it removes the scrutiny that the Northern Ireland Assembly would have over many of these issues.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair)

I touched earlier on the negotiations that led to the debate earlier in the year around all these issues and how other parties sought to reject the SDLP's honest amendments, which were tabled with the real intent of protecting those that we believed would be adversely affected by Tory austerity. We witnessed, against that backdrop, a Sinn Féin U-turn at its conference in the spring. We then had a subsequent debate around some of these issues.

Conor Murphy used the term "topsy-turvy". I do not know the extent to which Sinn Féin is going to engage in the debate, but I will refer to some of the remarks that Sinn Féin Members made at the time of the debate on the Final Stage of the Welfare Reform Bill. Martin McGuinness said:

"Capitulating to pressure and demands from the Tories in London is, in my view, a major tactical error. However, the crisis we are facing, and I say this to all the parties in the Assembly, is not of the making of any of the parties here or in the Executive. The crisis has been created by the austerity agenda of a Tory Administration in London that is attempting to decimate our public services and punish the most vulnerable people in our society". — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p4, col 2].

He went on to reflect on how Sinn Féin had stood against Tory austerity in vast numbers and he reflected on how there were no Tories in Northern Ireland. He said:

"They have no democratic mandate for their austerity policies here in the North of Ireland, yet they have already taken £1.5 billion from the Executive's block grant".

He then went on to say:

"The British Government's Cabinet of Tory millionaires has announced plans for further eye-watering cuts of £25 billion ... Those new cuts are set to begin almost immediately, and they will devastate our core public services". — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p5, col 1].

In that context, I mention the benefits cap, freezing benefits and completely eradicating targets for child poverty. That is what Sinn Féin is asking us to do today.

Alex Maskey, in the same debate, said:

"I will make the point again that the Tory Government, who are the body responsible for the position that we find ourselves in, have no mandate here whatsoever, whereas the parties around the table here do".

And what is it asking us to do today? To hand over that power to the Tories. Alex Maskey said:

"We have a responsibility to discharge that mandate to the best of our ability". — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p13, col 1].

Mr Maskey: Will the Member give way?

Mr McKinney: I will.

Mr Maskey: I will ask the Member two questions, with the indulgence of the Speaker. You mentioned a few minutes ago in your commentary around the benefit cap that your party proposed the benefit cap in the talks that have just concluded. You might need to establish the factual accuracy of that. Secondly, your party colleagues were telling everybody here that you would be kingmakers after the general election at Westminster. Do you not accept in this House that you are only a bit player?

Mr McKinney: I have no difficulty dealing with both comments. I see my colleague Alex Attwood, who is a former Social Development Minister, shaking his head negatively. He was close, in those talks — [Interruption.] Sorry, I will just finish. We did not propose what you are talking about. I heard mention earlier of Mickey Brady. He will be at Westminster all right, but Mickey Brady is going to do nothing. Why should he have to do anything now, when you are handing the authority to the Tory Government to do what they want?

I will continue. Mr Maskey said:

"Nobody in this room, the last time that I checked, represents any electorate outside these Six Counties ... I just want to finish my remarks on this point: parties here have a major responsibility on their shoulders. We in Sinn Féin have no hesitation in standing our ground against austerity." — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p15, col 1].

I ask you this, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: is that what is happening today? Is that what we are being asked to do today?

Some Members: Yes.

Mr McKinney: Well, you tell that to the people of west Belfast and to the people of Northern Ireland. Mr Maskey continued:

“People inside and outside this Chamber have a responsibility to stand up against the cuts to the block grant and welfare, as well as the cuts that are coming down”. — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p15, col 1].

Of course, we will be looking closely for any further budget cuts that will come from the Tory Government in the next while.

I will continue, painful as it is for Sinn Féin to listen to this. Michelle O’Neill said:

“It is comical that Sammy Wilson referred to people burying their head in the sand, because I very much think that the DUP has an ostrich mentality when it comes to standing up to the Tory Government. There are parties ... that are very happy to cosy up ... to the Tory Government and their austerity policies, but not one party in the Chamber stood for the recent Westminster election on the same Tory policy.” — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p20, col 1].

That is the same Tory policy that Sinn Féin will now introduce to Northern Ireland from today, without the big debate that —

Mr Hazzard: Where is the bedroom tax?

Mr McKinney: Well, you do not know.

Mr Hazzard: It is not here.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to direct all his remarks through the Chair.

Mr McKinney: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

It is important to remember that she said:

“The people in the Six Counties did not vote for a Tory policy of austerity; the people in the Six Counties voted for local, elected politicians. ... That is why we are devolved.”

Yet today she and her colleagues are asking for devolution and powers around welfare to be handed back to the Tories to do what they want. I refer again to clause 5 of the Bill. She went on to say:

“We have an opportunity now to stand up and show the electorate of the North that we will work together and face down the Tory policies of austerity.”

I am glad to see that Mr O’Dowd is in the Chamber because he, too, spoke during that Final Stage. He said:

“You are never sure which Government will be returned, but why, after the Tories were returned, was there not more energy and enthusiasm from some quarters to resolve this issue?” — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p48, col 2].

I think that there was, and I think that the SDLP demonstrated that there was. It was not us who sidelined us towards the end of these discussions. It was the two bigger parties. They did that so that they could shove this stuff off their desk. They did not like it, for electoral reasons and, potentially — I heard this mentioned earlier by my colleague Mr Durkan — for weekend reasons.

Mr Hazzard: I thank the Member for giving way. The Member seems to be taking an awful lot of offence that he has to deal with welfare today in one day. The Member will perhaps be enlightened to know that, on 6 October, during the talks, his colleague Alex Attwood asked for a one-day session to deal with welfare. I think that the SDLP should get its facts right on this issue.

Mr McKinney: I am not quite sure whether the Member is now agreeing with me and asking for a greater amount of time to do the talks. If he would like to contribute at a later stage and reflect on that, or maybe even suggest at the end of this process that he will vote against it so that we will have more time to discuss it, I will welcome that, but I see from the look on his face that he will do no such thing. He will put his hand up today, as the rest of Sinn Féin will, for Tory austerity. Forget devolution, forget the people of Northern Ireland, forget the vulnerable and let us hand it all over to the Tories.

I return to Mr O’Dowd, who asked:

“Are we witnessing a choreographed plan? Has the DUP, or elements in the DUP — we have heard about such elements in other political parties — decided to hand back welfare to the Westminster Government? That is a huge mistake, both for the administration of government here and for the protection of — this is a well-used term — ‘the most vulnerable in our society’.”

I wonder now whether he was thinking ahead in how he viewed those vulnerable. He went on to emphasise:

I know that Sinn Féin is fond of rewriting history from 40, 30, 20 and 10 years ago. It is now going to rewrite history from a few months ago. That is why I want to read into the record in this debate exactly what it said then and exactly what it is going to do now.

“Every one of the parties, as far as I am aware, who stood in the general election, apart from the Conservatives, went knocking on doors and said, ‘We are here to represent you. We are opposed to further cuts. We want to stand up for you. In fact, we are going to go back to Westminster’s power brokers and we are going to help to form the next Government because we will stop them doing what they are going to do.’” — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p50, col 2].

That is the point that Mr Maskey was making. At the first opportunity they have of standing up to them, they do the opposite.

Mr Murphy: I thank the Member for giving way. I am interested to note that he has so little to say on his own behalf that he spent three quarters of the time quoting Sinn Féin. Also, if there are any difficult questions asked of him, he intends to pass them on to Mr Attwood to deal with, so I appreciate that he is somewhat limited in his opportunity to reply.

I listened to his remarks, and the only thing that I can find that he objects to is the legislative passage that we are talking about, which he is entitled to object to — the use of the Assembly approving the legislation that goes to Westminster for completion, and an ending to that process with a sunset clause. Has he any other difficulties with the package that is proposed? Does he disagree with £585 million over four years to address these issues? Does he disagree with the fact that we are now trying to include some resource to deal with the issue of tax credits? Does he disagree with the panel being set up under Eileen Evason to bring forward schemes to deal with all those issues?

He almost has the white flag up in terms of complete Tory austerity, but thus far the only point of disagreement that I heard him raise is how the legislation is passed. Can he tell us whether he disagrees with all the mitigating circumstances that are included in this proposition?

Mr McKinney: I do not know if the Member was listening more intently to my latter comments than my earlier comments, in which I did reflect on the money. I wonder where the money is coming from and whether there is sufficient to deal with the issues.

We should all be concerned about this. The reason I am re-emphasising so much what Sinn Féin is about to do is that we are handing over power. We are emphasising the fact that child poverty targets are nowhere to be seen in this. Of course mitigations are welcome, but are they going to apply to the extent that we could and should have argued for? We do not know that, and that is of major concern to the SDLP.

I will finish by quoting Mr O'Dowd again. After the election, he said to the unionists:

"Let us be clear about this: the rebellious Scots have achieved more in the last six months from the British Government than ye have achieved over this last 50 years being loyal to them. So let us learn a lesson from the rebellious Scots; let us learn a lesson from them and stand with them and the Welsh to ensure that George Osborne, David Cameron and others get a very clear message that, while we respect their mandate, they have no mandate to deliver what they are proposing to do to our public services, to our government and to our people." — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p50, col 2].

Mr O'Dowd: Will the Member give way?

Mr McKinney: I am about to conclude, so I will let you do it in your contribution rather than now.

We have seen what has happened here today. I would like to quote, finally, a remark from a senior politician as we neared the conclusion of the talks. I will not say who it was, but they said:

"If we had not reached some form of agreement, then that would have led to the collapse of the institutions. We have averted that, and that is hugely significant."

I hope that we have not done that at the cost of people who need our help.

1.15 pm

Mr Beggs: When I look closely at the legislative consent motion, I see four key aspects. First, the consent that the Northern Ireland (Welfare Reform) Bill 2015, which fell in the Assembly, is to be taken forward by the Westminster Parliament, so I know exactly what that is. Secondly, the approval of the welfare clauses in the Welfare Reform and Work Bill, as initially introduced at Westminster — not as they ended up or were delivered. Thirdly, there is the draft Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 2015. Fourthly, there are the enhanced payments from the agreement announced yesterday. I will try to cover each of those in my contribution.

Ulster Unionists regret the delay in dealing with the significant and important issue of welfare reform; the failure of the Assembly to deal with it; and now, finally, passing the buck to Westminster to deal with it. Just to remind everybody: we were talking about the 2012 Welfare Reform Act almost three years ago. We have had three years to show our political maturity and to take political decisions, but what are we doing? We are now deciding to pass the buck to Westminster, and that does not bode well. The issue has been here for a long time, and we really should have dealt with it ourselves. Indeed, Ulster Unionists had amendments down since 2012 to try to deal with welfare in a mature fashion. Those amendments were on issues such as the bedroom tax, which we felt was inappropriate, particularly as no alternatives were available. We now find that, by failing to deal with welfare reform, we have all had to suffer. Everyone in Northern Ireland has had to suffer. We faced financial penalties in each of the last number of years, and that has adversely affected a wide range of services. I suspect that it primarily affects health, but it also affects education and roads.

Mr Dickson: I thank the Member for giving way. As regards the bedroom tax, the new agreement is over four years. We all had serious concerns, over six years, about what would happen when we fell off the edge of the cliff. Even though we had mitigated the bedroom tax in the previous Bill and there is more money for further mitigation, the reality is that the bedroom tax element will fall off the cliff in four years' time instead of six years' time. That seems to be an amazing achievement for the two parties.

Mr Beggs: The Member makes a valid point, and I will deal with further mitigation, because there is even a question mark over that.

I am talking about delays in introducing the 2012 Welfare Reform Bill and the failure to deal with it maturely in the Assembly. That was certainly not helped by the then Social Development Minister, Nelson McCausland, who brought forward the unamended, unchanged legislation that had been improved at Westminster, which included, for instance, reference to those who had suffered in the London bomb, but there was no regard for those who may have suffered here over past decades. Clearly, there was an imbalance.

There then followed a long delay, and, earlier this year, following the Stormont House Agreement, the welfare reform legislation started to flow properly through the Assembly. That came through the Stormont House Agreement, which was a cross-party agreement. Almost immediately, there was an apparent U-turn by Sinn Féin on what everybody thought had been agreed. Sinn Féin moved from costed, affordable measures to the irresponsible politics of blank cheques.

I have a couple of quotes. This one is from Conor Murphy, who said on 11 March:

“We stressed that any movement away from full protection for current and new claimants would not be agreed by Sinn Féin.”

Martin McGuinness said on 9 March of this year:

“Until such times as the Minister can produce a scheme for agreement which gives effect to the intent of the Stormont House Agreement by providing full protection for current and future claimants, Sinn Féin will not be in a position to support the Welfare Bill going through the Assembly.”

The concern of everyone, including senior officials at the Department responsible for administering social welfare benefits in Northern Ireland, was that that position is not technically achievable. It is impossible to deliver. How do you calculate the difference between what someone might have got a year ago and what they might get in 10 years' time? The position is totally unachievable and unaffordable. The U-turn, when it occurred, turned the Assembly Budget into a fantasy Budget, and there is now a major financial crisis working its way through every Department.

Another implication of not approving the new system and trying to maintain current benefits is that we would need to maintain the ageing UK computer system, which is decades old and due to be turned off in 18 months' time. We were eventually told that, if we wanted to maintain that system, it was highly questionable whether that would even be technically possible. We could revert to a paper system, but, of course, that would be irresponsible, as many mistakes would occur and there would be huge delays. Alternatively, we could have bought an all-singing, all-dancing computer system, to be delivered in perhaps three or four years' time at a cost of £1.5 billion or £2 billion. These were the decisions facing us. Yet there was not the political maturity to take the difficult decision simply to move largely to where we are today by accepting the welfare reform legislation in 2015 and building in some mitigation through amendments so that we could work with the new computer system and produce deliverable and affordable measures of mitigation to protect the most vulnerable in our community. That Bill fell before the summer.

After the summer, the Secretary of State commenced talks at Stormont House. I personally attended on four or five occasions when welfare reform was being discussed, but there was no meaningful discussion of those pertinent issues. Then, suddenly, what do we find, out of the blue comes the two-party, DUP/Sinn Féin agreement, published yesterday. It really was out of the blue. There was no prior sight of it or notice of some of its implications. I got a copy late yesterday evening and spent the evening going through each of the 67 pages, trying to understand it and its implications, particularly for this motion, which I heard rumoured for today. I went to the Business Office before leaving the Assembly last night between 5.30 pm and 5.45 pm and inquired whether the motion was available. It was not.

The motion was published, and, for the first time, I became aware of the draft Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 2015. Prior to that, I was unaware of its existence. In fact, I tried to google it this morning and could not come across it anywhere. I thank the Minister for letting me know that it is on the Northern Ireland Office website. That is good to know, but we are in the middle of the debate now, and I have had little chance to consider its 126 pages. Hence I supported a delay to allow for proper consideration. After waiting three years, surely one more week to understand properly what we were doing and proposing to pass from this House to Westminster would have been appropriate and reasonable. Nonetheless, I respect the decision of the Assembly. Sinn Féin and the DUP have voted everybody else down and decided to push on regardless of others' lack of knowledge. I noticed that some of your colleagues were waving, presumably, that document: I am sorry; I did my best. I did what was reasonable to try to find out what the motion was about and find relevant documents, but I was unable to identify them prior to the debate.

Consenting to pass this over to Westminster is a clear admission of a lack of political maturity. Any reasonable person could have worked out that we would end up here at some point; that we had to implement the 2012 Welfare Reform Bill and make adjustments that were affordable. Sadly, some chose to ignore that, and they have now, finally, agreed to pass it over to Westminster. Maybe they do not want any fingerprints on it, but, in passing it over, they are passing that responsibility elsewhere: they have the responsibility for having taken that decision.

I was listening earlier and may have missed this, but it would be helpful if the Minister could confirm whether all the amendments agreed by the House in the passage of the 2015 Welfare Reform Bill will be implemented or whether it will go back to the original Bill as introduced in 2012. Can he confirm that all the amendments approved by the Assembly up until the Final Stage are included; is that what we are talking about? I want clarity on that issue.

Mr Dickson mentioned the enhanced welfare packages earlier. It is important that we look very carefully at them. When you look at what was proposed originally, and I am looking at what was proposed for the year 2016-17, you see the numbers are around the same. For the year 2017-18, the numbers are roughly the same. Originally, £96.7 million of mitigation was to be built in for welfare; the new proposal is for £90 million. In 2018-19, there was originally £134 million-worth of mitigation built in for welfare; the new proposal is for £90 million. That is £44 million less. I acknowledge that mitigation has been built in for tax credit, but it is strange that those who turned down £134 million in mitigation for 2018-19 a few months ago are now content to approve mitigation of £90 million. That is what is happening. Nobody knew what was coming, but, nevertheless, a higher level of mitigation was turned down.

Why did we, as an Assembly, not have the political maturity to take decisions to deal with the difficult issues, the real political issues, ourselves and deal with them in a timely fashion? That would have been much better.

I will now turn to another aspect of the motion. It references the welfare clauses of the Welfare Reform and Work Bill, as initially introduced in Westminster. I want an explanation of why this has been introduced in this way and why it has to be expedited even before it becomes law in Westminster, bearing in mind, of course, that I would have thought that there is the likelihood of some amendment occurring to that legislation? Why are we approving legislation that has not yet been finalised?

One particular aspect of that Bill is the effect that it has on tax credits. I and many others, and indeed many politicians in the rest of the United Kingdom, have expressed concerns about it. The key issue is the proposal to cut tax credits significantly for those on low incomes. The explanation from the Chancellor was that there were increasing tax thresholds and that individuals would be paying less tax.

The minimum wage would increase, so it would all balance out. It very soon became apparent, however, that the tax credit changes were moving much too fast and that those on a low income would be significantly worse off and, as a result, would not benefit from the increase in the tax threshold and the minimum wage enough to balance out the cuts. That is a live discussion that is still going on at Westminster and even among some key members of the Conservative Party who have concerns about it. If that is a live discussion — we all await a Chancellor's statement — why is it proposed to give consent for the Assembly to pass this over to Westminster to take the final decisions on it? I find it very strange. Why give consent for further changes that have not yet happened and — who knows? — may not even happen?

1.30 pm

I turn to the proposals in the published document. The mitigation for tax credits is flat at £60 million. Why is it flat at £60 million? From following up concerns about the current proposals, my understanding is that the earlier years, before the minimum wage increases and another tax threshold increase, is the time when those who work on low incomes would be most significantly adversely affected. Why are we not at least trying to deal with that issue by providing a higher level of protection at the earlier stage rather than this flat £60 million?

As I said, I have concerns about the delays; the speed — not even in the last 24 hours but the last 18 hours — with which this has moved; the lack of information available to Assembly Members to allow them to come to a reasoned position; and the fact that the motion approves draft legislation that may not end up being the final legislation. For all those reasons, I have great concerns about what Sinn Féin and the DUP are trying to rush through the Assembly today.

Mr Dickson: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on the motion. The last time that I spoke on the matter, it was with a feeling of utter exasperation and déjà vu. I can report that those feelings have not gone away or changed. Nothing much has changed in the intervening five months. I do not feel any more optimistic today about welfare reform than I did five months ago.

This comprehensive agreement, plus the welfare reform proposals, are described as “a fresh start”. They are about as fresh as a student's bag of rugby gear after a game. What we have is a sticking plaster and another crutch for us to limp down the road to the next existential crisis that will leave Northern Ireland, our citizens and our businesses in limbo for months on end as we wait for two parties to show some sort of leadership or to tire of the current round of grandstanding. They certainly seem to have tired yesterday.

As others have said, we have not truly been given the chance to look at the agreement or, particularly for this debate, the elements of the welfare Bill. We are told that we know all its content because it has been debated in the House: that is true, but, in transposing the Bill to another place, the House has given up control of that debate. For me, that is a fundamental issue. Earlier today, we debated the merits of delaying for a week, and, like others, we supported that in the interests of good governance and of what my party colleagues on the Executive said yesterday. That would have allowed us, at least, to have the opportunity to properly scrutinise the document, which many have found difficult to find. I have it in front of me in electronic form, and it is long and detailed. One of the questions I have for the Minister is whether he will bring the detail of the Bill to the Committee so that we can have an opportunity to discuss it. Will he bring the regulations that will flow from the Bill to the Committee for discussion? Even though we were prepared to support the Bill and supported it in its final form, we look forward to the opportunity to re-examine many of the issues. Perhaps the Minister will tell us that all has been denied to us.

We would have greatly appreciated the opportunity to respond to each aspect of the deal, particularly on welfare reform. Today, we have been issued with a document and have been told to sign it off virtually before we have even read it. There is a reason for that which others have alluded to: this all has to be concluded before a particular party's conference this weekend.

I turn now to what might be described as the Sinn Féin/DUP new Christmas parlour game. It is called “pass-the-parcel legislation”. Five months after the fall of the original Welfare Reform Bill, we have an acceptance of that Bill by Sinn Féin, just as it did in December 2014. In the interim period, our Budget and, ultimately, the integrity of this institution were worn down to ridicule through a reluctance to move on matters that could destroy power sharing. Sinn Féin has sought to distance itself from any responsibility at all through the bizarre use of a legislative consent motion, despite the primacy of the Assembly in this area of competence and that party's outrage at the use of that mechanism to, for example, permit the National Crime Agency (NCA) to operate in Northern Ireland.

Martin McGuinness told us that it would be a mistake for Westminster to directly legislate on this matter: will he tell us what has changed? Essentially, a decision that can and should have been taken by the House is being outsourced to Westminster to reduce the collateral damage that Sinn Féin could incur from taking difficult decisions. I am sure that the smoke and mirrors that that party is well used to living through and behind will be well seen through by their probably now former anti-austerity friends north and south on this island. What a ridiculous precedent to set. MLAs of the second largest party in the Assembly have shirked their responsibilities to take serious and perhaps unpopular decisions for the overall good of their constituents.

I really despair at this juncture. The road to a prosperous and united community in Northern Ireland is fraught with difficult decisions — difficult decisions that my party is prepared to take but, clearly, others in the House are not. Just like Sinn Féin's refusal to sit in Westminster, its MLAs appear to be placeholders rather than public representatives. They are afraid to take difficult decisions and are walking away from those decisions. They are working hand in hand with the DUP, which has what might be described as a devil-may-care attitude to devolution — in one day and out the other.

We see no meaningful decisions being taken on spending, taxation and the legacy of the Troubles. There is a clear lack of leadership and, of course, we have seen that across other parties as well, with the opportunistic departure of the UUP and the DUP's crazy ministerial in-and-out strategy, which pandered to the extremes of unionism rather than doing what is best for Northern Ireland.

This country needs sound public finances and a well-resourced and fit-for-purpose public service. Two parties are certainly not serving that to us today.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for giving way. I have listened to the Member through all the hours in which we in the House debated welfare ad infinitum, hours upon hours, and that was only the contribution from West Belfast Member Mr Attwood. However, Mr Dickson was always supportive. Can he tell the House what he actually disagrees with? It has been agreed to mitigate the more severe elements of welfare reform, to help families with working tax credits, to ensure that we end the penalties and fines, and to pass legislation that should have been passed in 2012, and we are now in 2015. We are going to do all of that through this process; we are going to have all the amendments that were agreed in all the debates in the House. So what is he actually saying that he disagrees with?

Mr Dickson: In a sense, that is very simple. My party colleague Stephen Farry said earlier that we will support the legislative consent motion to allow through what has been debated in the House. However, I am trying to castigate the failure of the process that has taken us to this point. We should have made that decision when the Bill was in the House. I make no apology for saying that. The mitigation had been achieved. The bulk of my words here are to say that no one can understand what Sinn Féin Members were actually about in respect of those matters. They —

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for giving way. Let us not allow the SDLP to get out of the mist that I noticed it said, in one programme last night, was over this Building. Let us always remember that when I brought the Final Stage of the Welfare Reform Bill to the House, two parties brought it to its knees, not just one party. Now that party, the SDLP, from which we will no doubt hear later, will try to wash its hands clean of what it did in the past to stall the process. That brought us to the point where we are today.

Mr Dickson: I agree with the Minister, but it is not my job to speak for other parties or, indeed, their ability to change their mind or, perhaps to put it more strongly, renege on agreements that were clearly made.

The Alliance Party believes that we must urgently fix the shambles that is our Budget, and some steps have certainly been taken to do that. However, doing so requires a great deal more than the mess that we have been in for the last number of months. We need clear financial management and a real strategy for growth, stability, skills and education. If we are truly to save on our welfare budget, we need to be able to implement those items in this community. These are the things that we need to do: strengthen this community for growth, provide for stability and deliver skills and education. That allows us to foot the resource for welfare and to direct that resource where it should be: to support the most vulnerable in this community.

I have said that we will support the motion, as it represents the Bill that fell in May. We understand other parties' concerns, particularly in regard to the constitutional and institutional implications. I genuinely understand how other parties feel about that matter. However, it would be unrealistic of us, having stated in the past that we supported the Bill, not to support what is going on today. This is not an endorsement of a deal but a demonstration that the Alliance Party is committed to solving the welfare reform crisis, as it has been for many years, and to placing Northern Ireland's future on a sound economic base.

I have questions for the Minister, and I will repeat some of them. Can the Minister assure us that the new computer system will be operational with regard to the Bill and that those items that the Evason group brings forward will have to operate consistently with it with no additional cost to the computer system? In the previous discussions, one of the fears that we had with the Bill was the cost of transfer from one computer system to the other and the assertion by the Department for Work and Pensions that the new computer system would require us, with very little wriggle room, to operate the welfare regulations as they are in the rest of the United Kingdom. I am looking for assurance that, when the Evason group brings forward recommendations, they will be implementable and financially consistent with the new system.

1.45 pm

Will the Minister also outline for us today exactly what will happen with regard to —

Mr McKinney: Will the Member give way?

Mr Dickson: Yes.

Mr McKinney: Will the Member perhaps reflect on what assurances he has had or understands that that will be the case?

Mr Dickson: That is what I am trying to ascertain from the Minister now: whether the Evason group will bring forward recommendations — many of which were already in the Bill with regard to mitigation, although I accept that some of those will be with regard to tax credits — relating to welfare reform that will be implementable through the new computer system and that that will be at no additional cost. At the time, the cost that was quoted to the Committee was excessive.

Mr McKinney: Thank you for giving way again. I appreciate your giving me the time. Given that you raise such a fundamental issue, how can you say that you have already decided that you are going to vote this through?

Mr Dickson: The reality is that, unless we move forward with this today, we move back into the financial crisis that we have been in for some considerable time. Earlier today, we heard the Finance Minister tell us, with some exasperation, that she was at least able to rebalance her Budget today, and that is based on the figures that have been given in respect of the Bill.

I am incredibly concerned about the way in which the Bill is being handled and the fact that it has been passed to another place for scrutiny. I am looking to the Minister for assurances that appropriate scrutiny time will be given to the Committee, particularly in respect of the regulations, because, to use that well-known phrase, the devil is in the detail. We should remember that it was the detail of the regulations that came to the Committee that finally persuaded Sinn Féin to renege on the agreement that everybody else thought that they had earlier this year. Therefore, it is important that we have a clear understanding of what the relationship is between the House and the Westminster Parliament that will now deal with the Bill and the legislation, and how the detailed regulations that flow from that will be determined locally in Northern Ireland.

I see that the Minister wishes me to give way.

Mr Storey: In my concluding remarks, I will come back to some of the specifics that the Member raises. However, I just want to say something about how the process has been guided. The First Minister and I have repeatedly said this, and those who were privy to the ongoing talks prior to and during Stormont House and Stormont Castle and, subsequently, since: any arrangement or any deal had to be within the financial envelope; it had to be legally competent; and it had to be practicably deliverable. In relation to this agreement, we have endeavoured to stay within that parameter, and I think that that extends to the work that Professor Evason is going to undertake in relation to the panel. I will give some more detail in my concluding remarks, because the Member raised a number of other points. However, it is important that we set that as a context, because what is this all about? It is to achieve those three objectives in very difficult and challenging financial circumstances and in the political realm of the challenges that we have had over the last number of months.

Mr Dickson: I am coming to a conclusion, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

Given those three very important constraints — important constraints, it seems to me, that Sinn Féin was not prepared to be restricted by some five months ago — I challenge Sinn Féin to understand what it is that has changed to allow it to do a volte-face — to turn around today. That is the interesting question for it.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr Dickson: Yes.

Mr Beggs: The Member rightly highlighted the difficulty that arose when the regulations came before the Committee. Does the Member agree that it would be useful to know whether, when the legislative consent motion goes through, which I understand will delegate powers over social security and welfare, probably for the remainder of this year, all the regulations will be put through at Westminster? Does that mean that the Committee will not be able to see, adjust or make a choice on them? Would it not be helpful to have clarity on that issue so that we do not find ourselves back here again when someone finds a difficulty with some of the regulations?

Mr Dickson: I share Mr Beggs's concern about that. As he has heard, that is a question that I have raised with the Minister today, and it is one that I trust he will be able to answer when he responds to the debate.

Ultimately, I have to express my despair at the fact that it has taken us five months to get here and that this institution is to abandon its responsibility to legislate in this area. I find that incredibly disappointing, as, I am sure, will those who are listening to the debate. The Assembly, with the Bill that we had in the Chamber, did its very best to protect —

Mr Humphrey: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. He talked about the last five months, but does he not agree with me and other Members that we have been debating this for three years? As Assembly Private Secretary to two Ministers, I have listened intently to the speeches and the contributions — mostly positive — that the Member has made during that time. The Member made the point that he is voting for this, despite his reservations, to stop sliding back. Considering the cost of the financial penalties that we face paying in Northern Ireland and the protections and mitigations that have been negotiated to protect the people out there — some of the most vulnerable people in this kingdom — surely that is the right thing to do, despite the reservations.

Alliance and my party are the only parties that have been consistent on the issue. Alliance is voting for this because it realises that, if we do not have this agreement and do not vote it through, the realpolitik is that we will not have the protections in place and will have unmitigated Tory cuts imposed here over the heads of the Assembly, the people of Northern Ireland and the people they elected to this House. That is the reality we face. Finally, does the Alliance Party support the package and the protections of benefits in it?

Mr Dickson: I sat on a number of occasions with the Secretary of State during the discussions that took place at Stormont House, as did other Members. I heard her very clearly issuing the threat that, if the discussions did not resolve welfare reform, she would, indeed, legislate. She was not prepared to give a clear answer on whether that would mean pure rest-of-the-United-Kingdom welfare reform, but it was clear to me that that was what she was hinting at. Sinn Féin has come perilously close to allowing that to happen through the way in which it has abdicated its responsibility for dealing with the Bill and their failure to negotiate a Bill in this House rather than allow what many of it sees as the unacceptable face of the United Kingdom in the form of the Tory party.

We have to act consistently, and the Alliance Party and I intend to do so with this. We have negotiated our way through welfare reform for a great length of time. It goes back to the time when our Member of Parliament was involved in the debate in the House of Commons and proposed a great number of amendments to the legislation. Ultimately, much of that was defeated in the House of Commons by democratic decision. A Bill was presented here, and a great deal of time and effort was put into negotiating on it and negotiating mitigating figures. I have questioned the mitigating figures as they stand today, and I honestly do not believe we are much better off or any better off than we were when the Bill was on the Floor. Some things have changed, but they have changed because of tax credits.

When Professor Evason and others start to crunch the numbers in that respect, they will find two things: the mitigation that Sinn Féin has vaunted as a success is probably little different from what we had when the Bill came, and, when it comes to the Budget, the reality is that the DUP has given away more of departmental budgets to provide a small amount of additional cover. It is important that we spend money on welfare, but it has to be borne in mind that every penny extra that goes into welfare comes out of education, health and every other budget in Northern Ireland. The debate about how we balance those issues should be in this Chamber; it should not have been handed away to another jurisdiction.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: This seems like an appropriate time to break for a lunchtime suspension. I propose, by leave of the Assembly, to suspend the sitting until 2.25 pm. The first Member to speak when we return will be Mr Alex Attwood. The sitting is, by leave, suspended.

Mr Attwood: In starting, I want to acknowledge some people and some things. First, as everybody has said so far in this debate on the LCM, arguably, and very probably, the single best servant of those on welfare in Northern Ireland is Professor Eileen Evason. The responsibility that she is now to be given is an immense one. Given the frenzy around welfare and tax credit reform, its impact on an area like this, the proposed mitigation fund and how that will be dispersed among growing numbers of people in need, it is a responsibility that, arguably, no one else could undertake, save Professor Eileen Evason. It is clearly the wish of the House to wish her well in that undertaking, because the judgement calls and the responsibility will be immense, but there is no better person to live up to it. In my short time in the post that the Minister now holds, we contracted Eileen Evason to come in to the Department, I think, two days a month back in 2010. That was done for the simple reason that we needed her guidance and authority as we anticipated what may or may not happen with the Tory welfare agenda. It is timely and welcome that she will play a more central role in that regard.

Whilst the Minister and the SDLP will differ on the LCM today, I want to acknowledge again that the level of qualitative engagement with the Minister on this issue is different from what had been the case heretofore. I have a sense — I am treading very gently now — that he might not have been free to do all that he wanted to do in the quantity and quality of that engagement, and I am not putting words into the Minister's mouth. Nonetheless, I acknowledge that, when we submitted papers, there was a full response on many issues, albeit silence on others. The Minister knows what I am referring to. Nonetheless, increasingly at an official level, and certainly at a ministerial level, there was better engagement on this issue than on some others during the process of the talks that have now concluded, and I want to acknowledge that. That is something to build upon, because wherever this goes over the next while, our job in the Assembly and, certainly the SDLP's responsibility, will be to apply our best minds, if we retain any, and judgement to ensure that the best outcomes are secured in the circumstances that we now face.

I am sure that all parties made submissions in the recent talks process, although I am not sure what those submissions were. I know what our submissions were, and I know with which parties and which Governments we shared papers and documents. However, there was a lack of return of papers in that regard. I presume that everybody was arguing that there needed to be bespoke enhancements to support those on welfare and tax credits. As far as it goes, we acknowledge what is in the proposals. We would like to have seen more bespoke interventions, more money and more done, but we are not going to naysay what is there, even though you can interrogate the figures and try to make sense of them.

To some degree, it is hard to make full sense of the figures, including the core issues of what more is coming into the Northern Ireland Budget, what more is now being spent from the Northern Ireland Budget, and what the net gain is in that regard. Some assessments suggest that there is a net deficit, as well as the other deficits in the proposals that emanated from the DUP and Sinn Féin yesterday, such as those in investment in skills and infrastructure, taking forward the needs of the western and southern counties, disadvantaged areas, the north-west, the city of Derry, city deals and all of that.

It may come as a bit of a surprise to some people in the Chamber that, as somebody said earlier, the election of a Tory Government changed the game for all of us. If you look at Hansard, you will see that, time after time, a number of Members, including the SDLP, in welfare debates in the earlier part of this year, put down very full markers about what the intentions would be on the far side of the election if there were a Tory, or Tory-led, Government. The game may have changed for some in here with the election of the Cameron Government for a second time, but we warned, if it came, what the consequences would be in that regard.

I want to reassure you, Mr Deputy Speaker, that all my comments today will be embedded in the content of the motion before the House. I will try to address the following: the principle of an LCM; the Northern Ireland (Welfare Reform) Bill 2015, referred to in the LCM; the Welfare Reform and Work Bill, referred to in the LCM; the draft Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order, referred to in the LCM; as well as the issue of payments. I want to reassure you that all my comments will revolve around, and address, all that.

I will make this really marginal remark, but it tells you something in general. If you look at pages 34 and 35 of the agreement that emerged yesterday, you will see that it moves from paragraphs 18, 19 and 20 and has no reference to paragraphs 21 to 55, because they were all lost in the issue of the past not being addressed. The fact that the document is so silent in relation to that matter — that the issue of the past is reduced to eight lines/four paragraphs — is a very sobering commentary about how the talks ended and how so many people outside, if not inside, the Chamber are disappointed that paragraphs 21 to 55, which were meant to be in the draft document, are now redacted for many reasons, although the primary reason may be because of those who have responsibilities in state organisations and, in our view, illegal organisations, continuing to deny responsibility, truth and accountability in respect of the past. In that regard, it is a matter of regret that so little is in the document — as opposed to what should have been in the document — about dealing with the past in a comprehensive and ethical way.

I echo the remarks made by other people this morning that we should not be in this place today and rushing through an LCM. In the document released by the DUP and Sinn Féin yesterday, they refer to the fact, and the narrative in the document states explicitly, that an LCM would be required “no later than next week” and no later than 23 November, which is next Monday, and the fact that the Assembly has been put in the invidious place of having to address this matter today. By the DUP and Sinn Féin’s own hands, in a document issued around this time yesterday, they declared that the matter needed to be addressed by the Assembly next week or next Monday.

I do not understand how, on one hand, two parties can declare that next week is, in their terms, sufficient and good time to address this matter yet we were reduced to the Assembly and its Members waiting until whatever time last night to get a copy of the motion that is before the Chamber today. Even that motion, in some parts, is hard to make sense of, for reasons that I will touch upon. That is why Alliance and the SDLP were quite right yesterday to reserve judgement on all this.

This Chamber is a consequence of democratic struggle to secure democratic institutions in a democratic Ireland, and this Chamber has been reduced today to being a messenger on behalf of the DUP and Sinn Féin for those Tory elites in London who have ambitions on welfare and work that we have not seen the half of yet. The Chancellor is preparing himself and anticipates becoming Prime Minister by 2019, and we will then see the full measure of his dogma and ambition. How dare anybody reduce this Chamber to a postbox after the years of democratic struggle and the pain and grief suffered by our people and allow this now to be the statement of democratic mandate? There are people who claim a democratic mandate, and rightly so. How dare they take away from all the rest of us the democratic mandate that we earned over many decades when there were people not far from this place who chose to put all of that in jeopardy? It is a sorry state of affairs that we have reduced our democracy to the shallow folly that we see before us today.

I do not know what it is in full that we are voting on, because, as we know, in the last number of hours, a draft Bill and a draft Order in Council have been produced. It is utterly bizarre that, as this debate began, the NIO posted on its website a draft Order in Council running to all these pages.

Mr Allister: It is 126 pages.

Mr Attwood: Sorry, it is 126 pages. What respect does the British Government have for our democracy when, as this debate began, they chose to publish a Bill of that scale? That Bill is explicitly referred to in the legislative consent motion. How dare they do that. In the course of the negotiations —

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will.

Mr Beggs: Does the Member accept that the British Government have done nothing wrong in publishing the document but that what has been done wrong is including in this legislative consent motion reference to a document that we are not aware of? It is those who have tabled the motion today before the document is published who have done wrong.

Mr Attwood: Yes, they have done wrong, but in doing that wrong, they have partners in the crime, namely the British Government and, in particular, the Secretary of State. During the negotiations, on one opportunity, I had to say to the Secretary of State — this was in plenary format — how dare she compromise the hard-won democratic gains of policing in Northern Ireland. That is what was being proposed in some of the clauses in the legacy Bill. I say this to the Secretary of State again today: how dare she show disrespect to our democratic mandate and to these democratic institutions by being a partner in responsibility for this LCM. The LCM would not go anywhere if, on the far side of it, the Secretary of State did not have that draft Order. It says a lot about those who brought this situation into effect.

In any case, we are being asked to vote on a legislative consent motion and have only now begun to get sight of its core content. There has been no checking of its content, and the Committee for Social Development has not been consulted on its content. Save what happened at the Executive meeting yesterday, there is no Executive view on its content.

Would anybody in the Chamber permit that to happen for any other policy proposal or legislative intervention? Would Sinn Féin allow a legislative consent motion in these terms for legacy mechanisms? Would any other party do anything like that if the British Government or parties in here decided overnight that a legislative consent motion would come before the House to push on with some policy intervention, not least on legacy legislation?

What is the scale of what we are proposing? The legislative consent motion is not just for those matters in the legislative consent motion. It is not just to do with the Welfare Reform Act 2012, the Welfare Reform and Work Bill and the interactions, whatever they are, for the additional support.

It also covers any secondary legislation. Paragraph 3.2 in the proposals yesterday states:

“The Assembly will approve a consent motion no later than next week”

— even though it is this week —

“to enable primary and secondary legislation to make changes to the welfare system to proceed at Westminster.”

We are not only handing over our responsibility for primary legislation but, according to that paragraph, handing over our responsibility for secondary legislation. I say this to the Minister: in the event of a difference of opinion on secondary legislation and the regulations, whose will prevails?

It may be that we will have some knowledge of what the primary legislation is going to be, because of the various publications that have come forward in the last few hours, but what is the situation with the regulations? Therefore, we have handed over, even if only to the end of 2016, lock, stock and barrel, our responsibilities in the 2012 Act and the 2015 Bill. That is what we have done: handed over lock, stock and barrel our particular statutory responsibilities. Is that how some in the Chamber value our democracy?

I think that there has been form on this. When the people of Ireland endorsed the Good Friday Agreement and put in place mechanisms to secure power-sharing, in particular the d'Hondt mechanism to allocate Ministries, all of that at St Andrews was unpicked. Those who unpicked the democratic will of the people of Ireland and put in place mechanisms that served their interests have today gone further. They have unpicked the Good Friday Agreement and the Northern Ireland Act and are putting in place mechanisms, for reasons that I will explain, that serve their interests, in order to wash their hands of something that should be very much the work of Members of the Assembly.

I do not understand how any party can so casually and out of the blue surrender our democratic legitimacy to a Westminster Government when people are arguing that we should have the devolution of more powers.

We are going in the opposite direction to Scotland. As Scotland goes for devolution plus, we go for devolution minus, sending the message to London that, when the going gets hard and London faces us down, rather than face our people with the decisions that we should make in a democratic way in this Chamber — even if we do not like some of the decisions — we send the message to London that it is game on for the further erosion of our democratic institutions and that which was so carefully and with craft embedded in the Good Friday Agreement.

2.45 pm

We were the only part of the devolution arrangements that had devolution of welfare, in order to demonstrate that we were going to be of a significant character when it came to our legislative and policy authority. On a whim, overnight, on the basis of what two parties decide, that will be surrendered. Let me put it mildly: that is an act of the gravest political abdication of responsibility that we have seen in these places when it comes to our statutory function in many a long day. Then, as if to cover some sense of embarrassment, what do the DUP and Sinn Féin put into the proposals? I say this with a straight face, Minister:

“The UK Government legislation will not diminish the legislative competence of the devolved institutions.”

Will someone reconcile for me how London legislating for the 2012 Act and the 2015 Bill — I will come back to that in a minute — accord with not diminishing:

Had I drafted that document, for what it is worth — it is probably not worth very much — I would not have put in paragraph 3.4; it is just an advertisement of what is folly and what is false. It would have been better not said at all than said in such a crass way.

What we are witnessing with the LCM — this is really an irony — is a variation of the DUP's failed policy of being in and out of government. We now have a situation where the DUP/Sinn Féin variation on being in and out of government is being up for a bit of government and not for the rest. That is political leadership in the year 2015. Once again, where the DUP went, in my view, falsely — I think it might recognise that itself — with being in and out of government, Sinn Féin has followed with, “Let us be in on some of our law but outside in many other aspects of it”. This is a calculated dereliction of political responsibility and, if it is not that, it is just downright evasion.

We are told that the reason why the LCM has to come forward today is that there is not enough time to get it through in the mandate. That is the assertion. It is an argument that we have to face up to, because we do not have much time left. The Business Office and the Bill Office will be overwhelmed with legislation and so on and so forth. However, let us remind ourselves of a previous time when there was immense turbulence and difficulty in and around the Chamber and in the Northern Ireland Government, when there was no devolution of justice and policing and when we were told that that was about to bring the institutions to collapse. People were grandstanding in relation to all of that, and others were trying to craft a good outcome in respect of it. How quickly was the legislation passed for the devolution of justice and the creation of the Justice Department? The First Reading of the Bill was on 14 September 2009, followed by the Second Reading on 22 September, Consideration Stage on 10 November, Further Consideration Stage on 23 November and Final Stage on 1 December. Between First Stage and Final Stage of this enormously complex and difficult-to-manage legislation, which had all sorts of political consequences and connotations, there were 12 weeks, if my maths is right. Between Second Stage and Further Consideration Stage, there were 10 weeks. As far as I am aware, we have at least 10 weeks until the dissolution of the Assembly in advance of an election, so the argument that we do not have enough time is a false one.

When the DUP and Sinn Féin wanted to make enough time for the devolution of justice through the creation of the new Department — they were right to do so — we found the time and got the Bill through in good time. Indeed, we had a lot of good debates in the Chamber; I remember proposing a lot of SDLP amendments. The issue of time is a smokescreen. We have a good example of when we can get these things done. There are procedures in the Assembly to bring back legislation, which demonstrates that you can do it and do it in good time.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for giving way. I have listened carefully to him, and I will come back to some of his comments when I sum up. Do he and his party — I tried to make the point earlier — wash their hands of the crisis that they created by signing a petition of concern? When I stood in the Chamber to move the legislation that would have brought welfare reform to Northern Ireland, the SDLP signed the petition of concern that led to the delay and the difficulties and compounded the situation, as opposed to what the Member is trying to tell the House today, which is that somehow the problem is with everybody else.

Mr Attwood: We do not wash our hands of political responsibility for how we have addressed and tried to manage the issue of welfare reform arising from the 2012 legislation. No, we do not wash our hands of responsibility for what we did. The record proves that we were consistent in our arguments and in advocating petitions of concern at critical junctures. We were consistent: you may want to ask others why they were not consistent before and why they are not consistent today. Maybe we will get an answer in the next short while. The issue is not that we washed our hands of the crisis; we applied our hands to the issue. That is what the record demonstrates.

I ask the Minister to apply his hands and his mind to the legislative consent memorandum tabled this morning in respect of the LCM. I ask him to answer a number of questions. The memorandum says in the summary and policy objectives that:

“In addition, agreement in principle has been reached to implement welfare aspects of the GB Welfare Reform and Work Bill as introduced in GB.”

They have not been introduced in GB; they are in Westminster as we speak. What are the welfare aspects of the Welfare Reform and Work Bill that have been agreed in principle? It is hard in the time that we have had this morning to assess the various pieces of legislation to answer that question. That refers to the document yesterday, which also speaks about:

“a Bill in Parliament to allow for changes to the welfare regime in Northern Ireland, including... the welfare provisions only of the Welfare Reform and Work Bill as currently drafted.”

What does that refer to? If you look at the legislation that is before Westminster — I will get a copy of it in a second — you will see a group of clauses headed “Welfare changes”. Those welfare changes stretch not just across welfare, but across tax credit issues. We need to know, and I think we need to know today, what is the agreement in principle. What welfare aspects of the Bill currently in Westminster are we agreeing to? We need to know what that means; otherwise, we are all jumping into the unknown. I ask the Minister to be very precise in that regard because, in my later comments, I will touch upon what I am sure some of that means.

I also ask the Minister to reconcile paragraph 7 of the memorandum of understanding with the LCM. That paragraph states:

“The Welfare Reform and Work Bill 2015 is currently progressing through Westminster. NI will give due consideration to the need for local consultation on social security matters in this regard.”

I do not know how Northern Ireland gives due consideration to anything; I presume it means the Northern Ireland Executive or Government. Will the Minister explain what consultation there will be with Northern Ireland when, today, an LCM based on agreement in principle to implement welfare aspects of the Bill before Westminster will be passed? That consultation sounds very like, “We will tell you what you are going to get” as opposed to, “What do you think about what is being proposed?”

I also ask the Minister to explain paragraph 9 of the memorandum. You will not believe this, but this is what it says:

“An equality screening exercise has been carried out and the Department for Work and Pensions is satisfied that the proposed amendments have no significant equality implications.”

That deserves to be read out again:

“An equality screening exercise has been carried out and the Department for Work and Pensions is satisfied that the proposed amendments have no significant equality implications.”

Does that mean that DWP is masquerading as DSD? The Minister knows where I am going with this. Is DWP masquerading as DSD? It has always been my concern that, at times, DSD has gone in that sort of direction. Or is that actually true? Has DWP conducted an exercise on equality implications? If it is true, let us see it, because you have produced that in writing, Minister.

Let us see what it has said in its equality screening exercise. Let us see whether it was measured against the higher equality responsibilities further to the Northern Ireland Act 1998 in respect of section 75 and other sections. If DWP has somehow or other conducted an equality screening exercise in relation to London legislation when it should have been the case that that legislation came to this Chamber, who gave it the right to do that? If it assumed the right to do that, what was the exercise that it undertook? When was it undertaken? What does it say? Was it undertaken against the right standards; the standards of the statutory equality framework in Northern Ireland? How did it end up concluding that there were “no significant equality implications”?

We struggled over the summer — the Minister will be aware of this because, to be fair to him and his officials, they produced information in the autumn, during the early part of the talks — with how some of the welfare changes in the current Bill would impact on Northern Ireland by way of tax credits and so on. That is how we know that, when it comes to tax credits, the loss of spending power will be £800 million over the lives of the people who will lose working tax credit and child tax credit.

3.00 pm

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

How did it conclude that there are “no significant equality implications” when DSD says that that is the scale of the implications? It is an indictment of this place or of those who are responsible for this that they can serve up, in the heat of the moment, a statement like that, which says that DWP tells us the equality implications of its legislation, never mind the fact that we will not be given the chance to legislate for it. What a withering indictment of this place that we are reduced to DWP telling our people that there are no equality implications in its proposals.

My final point — I know that the Minister might not be able to answer all those questions, so they might be a little rhetorical, but I ask for answers — is to ask Sinn Féin a question, because its Members are the co-sponsors — political if not ministerial — of the LCM. This is what the memorandum says at paragraph 14:

“There are clear benefits to individuals, their families, employers, taxpayers and communities as well as society if the reforms are successful. The proposals will deliver a healthier and more prosperous society with improved support to families and children and a ready supply of skills and labour for employers.”

That is what the Minister’s memorandum says about the LCM that you are supporting. Unless the Minister corrects me, the LCM visits on Northern Ireland, without any proper legislative scrutiny — these are probably DWP rather than DSD words, but they are the words that Sinn Féin is signed up to:

“clear benefits to individuals, their families, employers, taxpayers and communities as well as society if the reforms are successful.”

Those reforms might well include tax credit reforms. Is that Sinn Féin’s position now? Is it that what London is proposing on tax credits will bring:

“clear benefits to individuals, their families, employers, taxpayers and communities as well as society if the reforms are successful”?

Let us look at what the reforms are about. There are 32 clauses in the Welfare Reform and Work Bill as drafted — 32 clauses. Subject to the caution that we do not know — subject to what the Minister might tell us later — precisely what the clauses are that have been agreed in principle but working on the basis that, as a minimum, the LCM captures the discrete welfare clauses in the Welfare Reform and Work Bill, let us look at what the LCM will mean for people in Northern Ireland in the welfare-specific clauses, of which there are a number, potentially clauses 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 15.

I will start with clauses 7 and 8, which we have not looked at in the Chamber. It looks like we will not have much of a chance to look at them either, so we have to rely on good authority in Britain about what is being proposed. Clauses 7 and 8 refer to the benefit cap; I will get the Bill in a second and then I will be able to refer to it. This is what the Child Poverty Action Group says about those clauses, and, if I am right, this is what the legislative consent motion will do in approving those clauses in principle.

This is the consequence. It stated:

“The benefit cap policy severs the historic link between what families need to live on – as assessed by Parliament in its setting of benefit levels – and entitlement. Lowering the cap would mean families could be left with less than enough for their basic needs, such as food and warmth. Evidence on the current cap suggests that fiscal savings have been small (under 4 per cent of the total savings to the social security budget) and the effect on movement into work weak. A lower cap would compromise the wellbeing of more children, as housing security is compromised, school life is disrupted and community links are broken.”

That is what the Child Poverty Action Group stated is the consequence of clauses 7 and 8 of the Bill that is before Westminster, a Bill that, it appears, the LCM says we are agreeing to in principle.

What is our message to the child poverty groups in Northern Ireland or to the 3,000 families who will now have a benefit cap of £20,000? What is our message to them when, on a whim and casually, the Assembly says, it seems to me, that we are agreeing to that, without any assessment or scrutiny by any part of these Assembly structures?

The group stated:

“A lower cap would compromise the wellbeing of more children, as housing security is compromised, school life is disrupted and community links are broken.”

Of course, it is worse than that, and it is worse than that for the following reasons. Recently, Mr Agnew successfully passed a Bill in the Chamber in respect of children’s services. I want to quote from what the Supreme Court found in relation to that stuff. It was actually a former judge from here, Lord Justice Kerr, who was speaking as a member of the Supreme Court. The Child Poverty Action Group reported what the Supreme Court considered the fairness of the cap to be in relation to the rights of the child. It stated:

“In arguments, it became clear that the government’s intention in introducing a cap was not to create parity between in- and out-of-work families but instead, to ensure that the income of out-of-work households was always lower to reinforce work incentives. The judgment called into question the fairness of the cap, with three of the five judges finding that, in introducing the cap, the government had failed to comply with the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child”.

That was something that is in and around Mr Agnew’s Bill. It continued that two — two of the judges of the Supreme Court — found that the cap:

That is how close the Supreme Court was to striking down that provision in law. The Child Poverty Action reported:

“Lord Kerr said that ‘it cannot be in the best interests of the children affected by the cap to deprive them of the means of having adequate food, clothing warmth and housing’ and Lady Hale said the cap deprived children of ‘the basic necessities of life’ and made them ‘suffer from a situation which is not of their making and which they themselves can do nothing about.’”

Yet, Minister, we are being asked to support an LCM that, it seems to me, subject to correction, signs off on the benefit cap. That is what we are signing off on without any scrutiny, assessment, interrogation or having spoken to any of the relevant groups, never mind any of the relevant families.

I want to correct Mr Maskey, who referred to my having made some comments about the benefit cap. I want to read from paragraph 10 of our submission on welfare that was made during the course of the talks. Of course, it was curious that Mr Maskey was relying on what I was meant to have said when, during the course of those negotiations, Sinn Féin did not hand over any documents on anything until yesterday: not a document on the past, we did; not a document on welfare, we did; not a document on paramilitarism, we did; not a document on criminality, we did; and not a document on finance, we did.

We handed over a lot of documents. There were some that we handed only to the British and Irish Governments. This is what our submission said, in case Mr Maskey is in difficulty:

“The benefit cap for Northern Ireland should be £23,000. The multiple differentials between Northern Ireland and Britain make a case for Northern Ireland, such as the case for the higher London cap due to housing costs.”

We did not make an argument for no cap. We did not make an argument for a cap of £20,000. We made an argument for a £23,000 cap. Let the record correct any assertion to the contrary.

I move on from the benefit cap with this point, to quote what we are signing up to. This is clause 8 of the Bill currently before Westminster, unless I am completely wrong. As far as I am aware, the Minister has not corrected my assertions so far, so I will work on that basis and take a chance that they are right. This is what clause 8 of the Westminster Bill states about the review of the benefit cap. Maybe some people are getting weary, but he will be weary again before I am finished. This is what it says about the benefit cap review:

“The Secretary of State must at least once in each Parliament review the sums specified in section 96(5A)”

— which is the benefit cap section —

“to determine whether it is appropriate to increase or decrease any one or more of those sums”.

The keyword there is of course “decrease”. Do you think that this Chancellor, especially if he is under Budget pressure as he prepares to campaign to become Prime Minister, is not going to take another slash at the benefit cap? Does anyone think that “decrease” is the keyword there?

Anyhow, this is how the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions then carries out that review:

“In carrying out a review, the Secretary of State must take into account ... the national economic situation”.

Now, who but the Chancellor wrote, “the national economic situation”? Should the economic situation go down, it may well be that the benefit cap follows it down. The Bill then states:

“any other matters that the Secretary of State considers relevant”.

That is code for whatever the Chancellor Exchequer is telling you. That is in the legislation.

And then:

“After carrying out a review, the Secretary of State may ... by regulations amend”,

the benefit cap:

“so as to increase or decrease any one or more of the sums specified”, in the section.

There is a quite awesome report from the Work and Pensions Committee at Westminster. I rely on it heavily. I have discussed it with officials in DSD. I know that they are considering its content at the moment, which is good because there is a lot of learning in respect of the Work and Pensions Committee’s assessment of how universal credit and all of that has rolled out. The Committee is not consulted. Under law, it is not consulted about a regulation. The Secretary of State and DWP just have to take into account the national economic situation and any other matters that the Secretary of State considers relevant. Is there any reference there to child poverty? Is there any reference there to people’s incomes? Is there any reference there to any of the empirical evidence that you need to have in order to make an assessment about whether a benefit cap should go up or down? Yet it seems to me that that is what this LCM does. Unless I am wrong, it gives a Minister in London the ability to assess the economic circumstances over there, decide whether £20,000 becomes £19,000 or £18,000 and impose that here. That is what this LCM does. It does not just raise questions about the benefit cap policy, it gives a British Minister the ability to say unilaterally, subject to regulation, “This is the new cap and live with it”.

Have we not learnt anything from the past six months? The Tories said that the benefit cap would be £23,000 and £26,000, and then they came back in after the election and said that it would be £20,000 and £23,000.

3.15 pm

Mr McKinney: I thank the Member for giving way. In that context, will the Member reflect on what the group or committee that will look after mitigation here will do when it looks at that in the context of an envelope imposed from Westminster?

Mr Attwood: It makes the challenge to Eileen Evason and whoever works with her even more challenging. While they will have a huge responsibility for the allocation of moneys based on whatever criteria, at the same time, DWP — not in Belfast but over in London — will be at its work. The lesson of the past six months is that, when needs must, the British Government will renege on what they say will be the situation in order to find more money to give it to those whom they want to give it to. You must draw the conclusion that, on the basis that the benefit cap in London has been reduced to £23,000 and elsewhere, including here, to £20,000, there is risk, and that risk is magnified because the drafting of the clause, which, it seems to me, the LCM now wants us to sign up to, is such that Iain Duncan Smith does not even have to discuss this with our Minister. He can ignore the economic circumstances in Northern Ireland if he so chooses, and we know that he will so choose.

It gets worse. This is what the Child Poverty Action Group said about clauses 9 and 10, which, it seems to me, the legislative consent motion obliges us to accept:

“The Bill proposes to extend the freeze on working-age benefits from two years to four years, ending in April 2020.”

I ask the Minister to confirm whether, with the LCM, that is the principle that we are subscribing to. It continues:

“This would end the link with both prices and earnings”.

Remember, that is a freeze on working-age benefits from two years to four years, until April 2020. Noting the sums of money for welfare and tax credit mitigation, at the same time there is a freeze extended from two to four years, virtually for the lifetime of this Parliament and for most of the lifetime of the next mandate of the Assembly. It will be frozen solid. That ends the link with prices and earnings and,

“effectively cuts benefit support loose from the cost of living and the living standards of the mainstream of society. It would ensure”

— said the Child Poverty Action Group, and who are we to second-guess it? —

“the lowest income households will continue to get poorer and follows a series of below-inflation uprating decisions. Between 2010 and 2020, for example, child benefit is projected to lose 28 per cent of its value.”

Is that what we are signing up to today? With the 2015 Bill, is that the principle that the Assembly is being asked to concede to London? If people in the Chamber have not read clauses 7 and 8 and clauses 9 and 10 of the Bill that is referred to in the Chamber, I urge them to read them before they put their hand up to support the LCM. Unless I am completely in error — no one seems to want to correct any error — this is what the LCM means: unilateral change to the benefit cap; reductions in the benefit cap that have immense implications, especially in our region; and the freezing of working-age benefits from two to four years.

The Child Poverty Action Group goes further:

“The Bill proposes to extend the freeze on working-age benefits from two years to four years, ending in April 2020. It excludes benefits relating to the additional costs of a disability and statutory payments. This is projected to save over £4 billion per year by 2020/21 ... We are concerned that this cuts the link with both prices and earnings, and effectively it cuts support for people receiving these benefits loose from the cost of living and the living standards of the mainstream of society. It ensures the lowest income households will continue to get poorer. Analysis by the Institute of Fiscal Studies (IFS) shows that below-inflation increases in benefits would cause relative poverty to rise, as earnings would increase faster than benefits — meaning that households at the median will see their incomes rise faster than those of lower income households, who receive a larger share of their income from benefits and a smaller share from earnings.”

That latter category is us. The people of Northern Ireland, in assessment after assessment, receive a larger share of their income from benefits and a smaller share from earnings. That is what we are washing our hands of in this Bill.

As I said, I am not sure what in the Bill is being signed off on in principle. I ask the Minister whether work-related requirements for parents and the changes in respect of the assessment of child poverty are or are not being signed off in the LCM. Whilst those two matters are definitively welfare related, are we, through this Bill, moving onto the ground of work-related requirements for parents and the Child Poverty Act? This Bill goes after the Child Poverty Act 2010. That Act had four measures of income-based child poverty. That is in a context in which OFMDFM-published data states that relative and absolute child poverty in Northern Ireland will be above 30% on both standards by 2020. That is happening in an environment in which, in July, the High Court in Northern Ireland granted a judicial review to the Committee on the Administration of Justice. Why? Because FM and DFM had not produced an anti-poverty strategy. That case was defended. It had to be defended on the instruction of FM and DFM, otherwise there is only one person running that Department. It must have been signed off in order to give instructions to barristers and solicitors to fight the case. The courts found in favour of the CAJ that there had not been an anti-poverty strategy.

The four measures of income-based child poverty in the 2010 Act are relative income poverty, absolute income poverty, the combined low income and material deprivation measure and a measure of persistent poverty. What does this Bill, which is part of the LCM and may or may not be part of what has been signed up to in principle by the DUP and Sinn Féin, do? It will retrospectively rename the Child Poverty Act as the “Life Chances Act”. What a statement of Tory dogma and what a statement by parties in the Chamber. Rather than name the issue as child poverty, we end up naming it “life chances”. Why in the name of God are we adopting Tory elite language to interpret and explain to people the scale of child poverty in this part of Ireland, if that is what the legislative consent motion means? I look to the Minister for confirmation.

It goes further. Can you imagine any Parliament retrospectively changing the name of a Bill? Can you imagine the ridicule that any of our Ministers would face if they came wandering into the Chamber and said that they wanted to retitle legislation from 2010 because they found it upsetting? They would be taken apart not just by ‘The Stephen Nolan Show’ but by anybody with an ounce of wit. It seems — I am subject to correction — that that is what we are signing up to today. Why would we collude with a Tory elite that does not like the words “child poverty” and replaces them with “life chances” retrospectively?

It then goes further by removing the income-based child poverty measures and targets and replacing them with measures that assess worklessness, educational attainment at 16, family breakdown, debt and addiction, and duties on national and local government to reduce child poverty. The London School of Economics (LSE), following a consultation around this in 2012-13, concluded:

“There is very strong support for the existing measures, and near universal support for keeping income poverty and material deprivation at the heart of poverty measurement.”

It seems that this LCM drives a coach and horses through that narrative and the child poverty strategy, and yet we seem to be casually and idly going along with it.

I will not detain the House in respect of work-related requirements for parents, save to say that, if we sign up to the work-related requirements for parents, which is clause 16 of the 2015 Bill, how that can that be reconciled with the issue of affordable, accessible childcare in Northern Ireland? Essentially, it is proposed that all parents will be expected to be available for and actively seeking work from the time their youngest child turns three in order to claim universal credit.

We have some very useful interventions in terms of welfare management for lone parents. Ministers, including the current one, have been very attentive to making sure that there are specific discrete measures to protect lone parents. If, today, we sign up in principle — I do not know whether we will — to the work-related requirements for parents in clause 15 of that Bill, are we pulling the rug from under the discrete interventions that we have developed over a number of years in respect of lone parents and availability for work?

Clause 16 means that all parents, lone and otherwise, will be expected to be available for and actively seeking work from the time their youngest child turns three in order to claim universal credit. If that is what we are signing up to, it is in open conflict with years of legislation and guidance in respect of how DSD and the Social Security Agency should manage that category of claimant. Irrespective of that fact, what are those parents meant to do when there is a lack of affordable, accessible childcare? If we do not have that protection, we sign up to that principle, which is in open conflict with so much of what our society requires.

I ask the Minister about the bedroom tax. Mr Hazzard asked, “Where is the bedroom tax?”. There is a reference to the bedroom tax in paragraph 1.4 of section C of yesterday’s proposals; it states:

“Within the welfare funding set out above, it has been agreed that the social sector size criteria — the so called bedroom tax — will not apply, as agreed by the Executive.”

Is it not going to apply at all, or is it going to apply only in the terms “as agreed by the Executive”? Mr Hazzard asserts that it is not there at all, yet it is there, but we do not really know what it means. The Minister knows — Mr Maskey will know this because we gave him our paper on welfare, noting that no papers were given to us — that:

“the SDLP oppose the bedroom tax in law and in practice. It should not be applied. Given the segregated nature of housing, the under-provision of smaller units and the purported scale of under-occupation, the bedroom tax would apply to very small numbers. To punish people for purported under-occupation in a long-occupied and possibly family home, with the benefits of a settled life and community environment, is at once punitive and tokenistic. An assessment of the under-provision of smaller units and the under-occupation of existing units should be undertaken in order to produce potential remedies with full regard to the factors above.”

There should be no bedroom tax in practice or law. We have lost the argument in law, but can we win the argument in practice? I quote:

“Within the welfare funding set out above, it has been agreed that the social sector size criteria — the so called bedroom tax — will not apply, as agreed by the Executive.”

What does that mean? Is it gone, or is it not?

3.30 pm

Given that, as I understand it, the Minister has not signed off on, and may never sign off on, any scheme for how the bedroom tax may or may not operate, can I seek an assurance today that it is not going to apply in practice and that, if there is any issue about underoccupation, that will be looked at and assessed in the round, given the nature of the housing environment in Northern Ireland? Otherwise, Mr Hazzard’s assertion that it is not there sounds a bit hollow, because it is there, but we do not know what “there” means. What categories are going to be vulnerable to the bedroom tax, Minister? Will it only, for example, be people who get into work and therefore, in our view, should have an assessment in principle outside the domain of the bedroom tax in law, or will it be other people? What has been agreed by the Executive? Has anything been agreed by the Executive in that regard?

Ms Bradley made the very good point, and this is where there is unanimity, that it is all our constituents who are affected by all of this. To emphasise that, I want to quote what some people have said. This was a question to Mr Gauke, who, I understand, is the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, and the decisions mentioned are those on welfare and tax credits:

“does he recognise that such decisions will have a bigger impact on some parts of the United Kingdom, such as Northern Ireland, which have a high number of people who are low paid, and they are the very parts that he wants to see growing?”

Here is another quotation:

“The Bill makes it clear that the Secretary of State can review the caps at any time. All he or she has to consider is ‘the national economic situation’ and

Then the Government can introduce changes by regulation.”

And another:

“the change in universal credit, the freezing of benefits and the change in tax credits are, as the right hon. Member for Birkenhead (Frank Field) pointed out, an attack on aspiration. It is an attack on people who are in work.”

And another:

“I do not believe there is fairness in this policy, because it does affect those people at the lower wage end of the economy.”

Those are not even the words of SDLP Members of the House of Commons but those of Sammy Wilson MP. That is his withering indictment of much of what is in the Welfare Reform and Work Bill. In fact, I could not see much difference between us on the freezing of benefits, the further reduction in the benefit cap and working tax credits. I wish that he were here. Well, I do not actually wish that he were here, but you know what I mean. I wish that he were here to stand up and concur or not.

To be fair to the DUP, on a number of occasions at Westminster, it voted against the Government and for amendments that would mean interventions of a positive nature. Why, today, go contrary to what your MPs have done on those matters? At the Bill's Second Reading, on 20 July, seven of your MPs voted against what London was proposing. At the Third Reading, on 27 October, eight of your MPs voted against some of the proposals. Remember that that Bill is not through Westminster yet. We will see the full scale of what is next going to be served up on 25 November.

I want to conclude now with this quotation:

“We cannot stand aside and passively accept the swingeing cuts being pursued by a Conservative government wedded to an austerity agenda.”

We cannot stand aside and passively accept: this LCM is passive acceptance of what London is doing. Whatever about legislating historically for the 2012 legislation, it hands over to London our authority for whatever has been agreed in principle on welfare and those elements of the 2015 Bill.

We cannot stand aside and passively accept the swingeing cuts: the LCM is the passive acceptance of precisely that. Mr McGuinness needs to be careful about the words he chooses in future:

“This arrogance must be confronted and challenged at every opportunity”

— but not today. Today is the one day when we do not confront and challenge the arrogance of what London is proposing. In that regard, I refer to Mr McKinney's comments this morning. He exposed very eloquently the scale of what has happened over the last 24 hours.

Even at this late moment, I put it to the Minister that he not move the LCM. That is what I am asking the Minister to do: not to move the LCM, for all the reasons that I outlined. It may be that the Minister will have powerful answers to all those points, shallow though many of them might have been. He may have powerful points, but if there is any element of authority in anything that I said, and if that is only part of what we are doing today in signing up to the LCM — abandoning our democratic authority; abandoning proper scrutiny in the Chamber; allowing the DWP to decide what is or is not an equality impact for our people; saying that DWP can change the benefit cap when it thinks that its national economic circumstances need it and can change the cap even though it has disproportionate and enormous impacts on our people in Northern Ireland — I say to the Minister, “Don't move the LCM”.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Perhaps I should point out that the motion has already been proposed by the Minister and can be withdrawn only with the consent of the House.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. We are well into the afternoon and are, quite rightly, having a lengthy debate, if not necessarily an entirely useful one. I will put some context on the issue. I will not refer to any other elements of the agreement announced yesterday, but I make the point that Martin McGuinness and Peter Robinson publicly announced the agreement that had been reached, which is a fairly comprehensive agreement across a wide range of issues, notwithstanding the very serious difficulties that we have all faced in the last while. Let us remind ourselves that — Mr Humphrey made this point — this debate and discussion have been going on for almost three years.

Other issues have also been going on in the last two to three years. We have had the Haass talks, and, even before them, we had the all-party group, the Executive meetings and failure to reach agreement across a range of issues, to the point at which we all know — every Member knows — that the standing of the Assembly and these institutions has been pretty low in the minds of many of the people whom we collectively represent. I think that we all acknowledge that that is a very unfortunate position to be in. We owe it to the people whom we represent to do the best we can on their behalf. We know that people out there are struggling to get a good education, a proper health service, a job, good opportunities and support when they are in need of support, whether that is through welfare or any governmental intervention. That is the context in which we have to see this.

The agreement that we reached, which has brought us to supporting an LCM today, is part of a wider agreement. Let us not forget that we cannot deal with the issue in isolation. Only if it were possible to deal with the issue in isolation would we all be in a better position than we actually are. I hope, and expect and believe fervently, that, when the people outside whom we represent come to terms with what is in the agreement and what is across the range of issues, we will see that they are, generally speaking — I mean this in the round — better off as a result of an agreement than not having an agreement.

No one has dealt with the elephant in the room: if we did not have an agreement, and if we did not have an agreement now, we would have no political institutions. Nobody, in my view, would realistically and sensibly argue that having no political institutions here and having none of the political representatives exercising their mandates and trying to do their best for the people whom we represent would be a sensible outcome. I hope that it never comes to that. I make it very clear that whilst the parties here have to deal with issues, whether welfare, health, education, employment or any of the other matters that are pressing down on people, no one would suggest that the parties here do not have a responsibility to be seen to working together in the Executive.

In the last few days, in this agreement, we have approved an official opposition. Personally speaking, if I had my way, there would not be an official opposition because I think that everybody should work together and shoulder the responsibility around the Executive table to help this society move from the period that we have come from: decades of conflict, discrimination, direct rule and misgovernment. I believe that the problems that we all face deserve — and we should, rightly, expect — that the parties that have a mandate work together, not pretend that they are in opposition and certainly not when they have not put forward a single proposition as an alternative to what has been agreed. I have heard a lot this morning and afternoon, but I have not heard a single proposition from any party or Member here. Not one person has come up with an alternative.

Earlier, someone said that we do not know what the pot of money is, where it will come from or whether it is enough. That was the deputy leader of a party that has come to the House to say that it does not support this initiative, but he does not seem to know where the money is coming from — £585 million of mitigations — for people on benefit and, at the moment, for the people receiving welfare or tax credits whom we are trying to help. The deputy leader of a political party can come to the Chamber and say, “We do not know where the money is coming from”, and ask, “Is it enough?”.

Let me explain this: the money is coming from the block grant; it is coming from every person we represent. The choices are made because the British Government that we are dealing with ideologically and dogmatically intend to slash and burn welfare, public services and obviously, even more recently, tax credits, even though they promised their own people during the recent election campaign that they would not touch tax credits. You know what? They did. Whatever little bit of a setback they got in their House of Lords, nobody in this Chamber knows what they will come back with. What we do know is that they will come back with further cuts to our grant and to the people who depend on welfare or tax credits. They will come back with those measures.

Therefore, we have to recognise that we cannot say — no one in the Chamber can say — that we will defend all those people to the last penny that they will lose. In fact, I am glad to hear that nobody has suggested it even today. Let us just scotch that and deal with it. People say, “Well, what has changed since when we made those commitments?”. By the way, it was not just Sinn Féin that made those commitments; other parties made them, too. What has changed is that the people of Britain elected an unfettered Tory Government. That is what has changed. That is the same Government that, no later than Friday in the negotiations, said that if there were no agreement on this or the legacy issues, there would be no agreement whatsoever. I would like anybody who wants to spend the day decrying this initiative or the agreement to spend a little bit of time telling us how they got on in their own negotiations with the British Government. Did they get any additional money out of them? Did they get any promise from them that they would not slash and burn welfare? Did they get any promise from them that they would not attack public services continually?

Conor Murphy and I, with other members of our party, met a whole lot of other Members round the Chamber in the bilateral talks. We asked parties directly how they got on when they were talking to the British Government, “Did you get any money out of them?”. No. “Did you get any commitment from them that they would stop cutting welfare?”. No. Do not come into the Chamber and decry the rest of us for trying to do the best we can. I do not stand here and say that British Government policies on welfare, or many others for that matter, are good policies. Of course, they are not. They are not my Government and I do not want them to be my Government. I am quite glad that they are not my Government, but I am stuck with them.

They are holding this place over a barrel.

3.45 pm

For me, whatever came out of the range of issues in the negotiations and the agreement, all the parties here, bar one or two, were involved in the negotiations, that is fair enough, and I accept that. I can understand that a party that was not part of the negotiations can criticise the outcome. I might not agree with them, but they may have the integrity to say that they had a particular view. However, I cannot accept that parties that were involved in the same negotiations that we were involved in can come to the Chamber and talk for as long as they want to but do not have a single alternative to put on the table. That is what is missing in this debate; there is no reality check.

We heard from parties that said that they had a route map. Party leaders — I am talking about Mike Nesbitt — went down to the talks saying that they had a route map to get us out of the mess that we are in. Where is the route map? I have not seen it yet. We had parties saying that they had a prosperity plan. When I asked Alasdair McDonnell, the previous leader of the SDLP, for his prosperity plan, he told me that Fearghal McKinney was just putting the finishing touches to it. We still have not seen or heard about this great prosperity plan. I am still waiting anxiously to get it, because if somebody can show us how we bring greater prosperity, then I'm your man. I might even consider voting for you. Mind you, it will be a tough call to make.

Let me be very clear and very honest about this. I want all the parties around the table to contribute to the solution. We have come out of a situation in this city, so let us bring ourselves back to reality. We can talk all we want about welfare and a range of other issues, but we were confronted in the last few months with the murder of Jock Davison in the Markets, followed by the murder of Kevin McGuigan in the Short Strand. There are some politicians in this Chamber who, shamefully —

Mr McKinney: Will the Member give way?

Mr Maskey: — I am not taking any interventions, sorry — shamefully exploited those killings for narrow, party political interest. They did that to their shame, but, lo and behold, implacable opponents around the table and in this Chamber were able to get together to work with the two Governments and other parties to try to resolve those issues.

Some people may think that they are not all approved, and people talk about the legacy issues. An SDLP contributor said earlier that there was no deal on the legacy issues. There was a lot of agreement, as he knows, on the legacy issues, but that part of the agreement fell down on one point, which was that the British Government said that they would not compromise what they called their national security. There is not one victim or survivor of our conflict, particularly one who has lost a loved one, who is going to thank anybody around the table who would support legislation at Westminster that will allow the British Government to continue the cover-ups that they have been involved in for decades. I am not making any apology on behalf of Sinn Féin for not agreeing to the legacy aspects of the talks.

We agreed all the structures, and it was very good that there was agreement across all that. However, you cannot then say that we are going to set up these institutions, but, by the way, we are going to underpin it with our own get-out clause, which was what the British Government wanted to do. They told us last week that, if we did not agree to that, there would be no agreement. We said, "Well then, so be it, there is no agreement". That is why we are here today. The legacy issues are not included in the agreement, and I deeply regret that. Let me remind some Members that I was a victim of the conflict, so I know what it is like personally and directly —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order. I encourage the Member to return to the motion before the House.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I will do that; I just wanted to provide a little bit of context and a reality check to some Members who have contributed to the debate today.

I just want to make it very clear that Sinn Féin and the DUP — more accurately, the First Minister and the deputy First Minister — have reached a deal between their respective parties, and the two Governments have signed off the agreement. Today is not about us abdicating our responsibility on welfare or anything else; far from it. This is about us taking our responsibility seriously. We are not coming here with empty rhetoric, telling everyone what the problems are. I know what the problems are; I could write the script for what the problems are. I could go to any one of our offices' advice workers who will tell you exactly what the problems are, problems that people are facing day in and day out. That is not only people from the nationalist community that we are told that we represent. I am talking about people from the unionist community and the loyalist community who come to our offices to seek our support on welfare and issues of that nature, and who want to get help, whether they are on welfare, whether they are on sickness benefit or whether they are trying to get a job. We help those people as well, and I am privileged to say that we have the opportunity to do that and do so.

We will not for one second abdicate our responsibility to those people. We are endeavouring to do our best to give them as much support as we can so that, despite the worst efforts of the British Government to have a slash-and-burn policy on welfare and to attack public services, the Executive, even though they are not getting the support from other parties that have members on the Executive and the party that has walked out of the Executive, are doing their level best to support people. Whether it is on the regional rate or supporting the manufacturing industry, or whether it is the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development trying to help people in rural communities and all of the rest of that, John O'Dowd as Minister of Education or Mervyn Storey as Minister for Social Development, the Executive are trying to make sure that we are supporting disadvantaged communities, because that is what they are there to do.

We have a job of work to do, which is to stabilise the political institutions. One way of doing that is to keep the political institutions, and we would not have been able to keep them if we had had no agreement reached in the past number of days. To the parties that were, in my opinion, never intending to reach an agreement, I say this: shame on them. At the end of the day, the people will make their choice on those parties in the election in the next number of months.

Let us be very honest about this: we all know that the Ulster Unionist Party never had any intention of reaching an agreement. It never intended to have an agreement. In fact, one minute, the leader of the party was in the talks and, the next minute, he was out of the talks. The next minute, he was saying, "We have agreed a pot of money for welfare, but we are not agreeing anything else", or, "We are not putting in a paper because you never gave us any papers back", or, "You did not take any notice of our last paper". That is the stuff of five-year-olds, but, at the end of the day, the rest of us got on with the work.

I have to say the same thing about the SDLP. I do not know whether it supports the package on welfare. It has not actually said that. I can take the SDLP's point about it not wanting an LCM to go through and wanting one day for a debate in the Assembly. In October, Mr Attwood asked for a one-day Consideration Stage, so I am not really sure what the SDLP's position is on the package. Let us remind ourselves that the package that we are talking about today and that is going through as the result of an LCM is under section D of the agreement. It is very precise. I presume that the Minister will answer formally and directly himself a number of the questions raised when he is on his feet later. At the end of the day, what we are supporting here is the series of measures that were agreed earlier on in the year among the parties. They all said that they wanted split payments so that people would not have to get payments every month but would instead have the choice. We are talking about lone parents who are trying to go for interviews and so on having latitude to do so because they do not have the childcare that may be available elsewhere. We are talking about a figure of £585 million over four years, and that will be spread across people who currently will lose out as a result of welfare reform or the changes to tax credits. We have all agreed, I believe, that the panel led by the eminent professor, Eileen Evason, will have a very tough job of looking at how to mitigate the situation using the envelope of money that has been agreed.

I heard interviews on the radio yesterday, including those with commentators. One commentator on the BBC said that Sinn Féin has not done enough, yet the person on after said that Sinn Féin has done too much. You can either put too much money into welfare support or you can put too little. It is a judgement call. At the end of the day, we are, broadly speaking, satisfied. Even though we would want 100% support for everybody, that was not doable, and that is the bottom line. What has changed? What has changed is that there is an unfettered Tory Government in Westminster. The bottom line is that, unfortunately for me, the people of Britain returned the Government that they have. That was their democratic choice, but, unfortunately, it impacts very negatively on us. Our job has been to try to do our best to support the people we represent.

The final part of my remarks concerns the fact that Members have talked about the people in Scotland or Wales or England. There is nobody in Scotland or Wales or England who is getting access to this level of support, and I add that nobody in the Twenty-six Counties is getting it either.

We have managed to get a pot of money of almost £600 million to be spread over four years. It is regrettable that we have to do that because that money will come out of our block grant. People have argued that that money would have been better spent on hospitals, schools, the arts or disadvantaged communities. Of course it would, but a lot of other measures in the overall agreement seek to address all those issues. We need to make businesses successful, give our young people, in particular, hope, and to support people, so we are making choices against the austerity programme and the dogmatic and ideologically driven austerity measures coming from the British Government in London. The same measures are coming out of the Oireachtas in Dublin, I have to say.

We have been doing our level best to support people out there who need it. That means that it does cost the health service and the education system, but we are prepared to make those choices because everybody in this room wants the same things: we want to maintain no prescription charges, lower tuition fees, no water charges, and the list goes on. I mentioned some of the other aspects earlier. It is not until we get the financial levers that are currently held by Westminster that we can seriously and fundamentally seek to restructure our economy. This is not a sovereign state. People need to remind themselves of that.

I hear people talk about a dysfunctional Assembly. People out there do see this place as dysfunctional, and I regret that, because, for the first time in my many years as an elected representative, in the last couple of years, I have actually felt that I really do not want to be in this Assembly. I am not interested in working in an Assembly that is not delivering for the people whose vote I am privileged to have. I do not to be party to an institution that will not deliver for the people, or at least try its best. That is what we are here to do, and I think that all the parties need to work together to deliver for the people we represent, even though we may disagree on some aspects of the issues.

However, not one Member who spoke today has said that the £585 million should not be put in a pot to give to people. Not one Member who spoke today has said that Eileen Evason should not be given a panel, that money and the role to try to determine how best to use that money to support the most vulnerable. I look forward to Professor Evason's panel report in January so that we know exactly what that means.

I will you what else has happened. The First Minister and deputy First Minister yesterday committed to accepting the proposals from that independent panel. So when Members here say, "I want to know what it is. I want to scrutinise it", fair enough; that is grand. But this package of support will not be subject to party political dispute. This will not be subject to any one party saying, "Oh, there's my favourite", or, "There's what we want to support." These are the eminent experts in the field who will look at the situation facing them, and they will determine how best to spend the money. I repeat for the record that £585 million will be put at the disposal of that panel to distribute through the system here in the best way possible to support people in need.

On that remark, I will conclude. As I have said, I hope that what we have in the overall agreement is a fresh start. People can ridicule a title and call it whatever they want. I just hope that, when we get beyond today, people out there see that at least the Assembly is starting to work again. I would rather they were hearing that with universal unanimity from all the parties. If that is not the case, so be it. But I know one thing: I accept the integrity of Peter Robinson and Martin McGuinness when they both spoke yesterday and said that they were determined that this, indeed, will be a fresh start, and I look forward to seeing that happen.

Mr Allister: I am not sure the last Member who spoke was so much addressing the House as seeking to address and mend fences with his electorate, who, of course, were so grossly misled by Sinn Féin as to the die-in-the-ditch response that they would forever make to welfare reform. Of course, the truth is that, today, we are debating the most colossal climbdown by Sinn Féin on the welfare issue. Indeed, this agreement, which brings us here today, is typical of the trade-offs whereby the Government operate for what passes as working in this Province, in that there is again in this agreement a massive trade-off; a trade-off of climbdowns. Sinn Féin spectacularly climbed down on welfare reform, and the DUP even more spectacularly climbed down on paramilitarism, and so we get the product which is this agreement.

4.00 pm

The nature of that climbdown on welfare is illustrated in a number of ways, not least by the diminished pot of money that, last March, we were told was not anywhere near enough, but now it is diminished from £564 million for welfare to £345 million — the other £240 million being for the yet uncoded, undefined tax credit consequences. So, what was unacceptable in March — £564 million — is now, when it is reduced to £345 million, a good deal, according to Sinn Féin.

The £564 million was to be spread over six years, and that was giving something like £94 million a year. The £345 million is now to be split over four years, giving something like £83 million a year. So, the pot for meeting the shortfall in benefits, far from being increased — and we were once told that it would take another £300 million, I think it was — has been radically diminished. Yet, we are told through contributions like that from Mr Maskey that this is a great deal for those he represents. Patently, it is a less good deal than what was available at the start of this year.

A question that has not really been addressed in this debate is this: where is that £585 million for welfare and tax credits coming from? One thing is clear: there is not a penny of it coming from Westminster; oh no. It is coming off our constituents who rely for many basic services on the block grant, and the largesse of the two dominant parties is that, in order to placate and keep the benefit level artificially high, they are going to cut the cutters. They are going to cut the block grant in key areas, be it education, environment, agriculture, whatever. It is secondary to sustaining and obtaining the £585 million for benefits and tax credits. So, the loser in much of this will be the non-benefit claiming constituent who will find that services that he already thinks he pays richly for will be diminished to the tune of £585 million. According to those who claim to know, or think they know, that is a good deal.

The other question that immediately arises is this: what happens at the end of the four years? We are going to have GB benefits flatlining or worse. We are going to have Northern Ireland benefits artificially sustained at a higher and widening level, and then we reach the end of the precipice when the money runs out, and what happens then? We are creating and storing up a huge crisis — far bigger than the one that is said to face us in recent times — because there are only four years of purchase on this subsidy.

What happens then? Is it back to — who knows what crisis number it will be by then? — another round of crisis talks? That seems to be the limitation of the thinking of those who brought us here.

What about the great benefit warriors who were going to deliver and die in the ditch over benefits? Yesterday, they crashed, conceded and climbed down in the spectacular manner that they did. We heard why. We heard it from Mr McGuinness, when he told us rather plaintively, “If we had not done this, I would not have a job. There would be no deputy First Minister because there would be no institutions”. There it is: saving the institutions is much more important than benefits and those dependent on them. We heard it from Mr Maskey again today. The great benefit warriors turned turtle and ran pretty fast when the threat was made that there might be no Assembly. Their jobs mattered much more than anything else.

Today, we have the inappropriately named legislative consent motion. I spoke this morning about the fact that three of the four issues in it were not adequately before the House. It seems that, after the House met, there appeared on the NIO website — on prompting or not, I do not know — a copy of the Northern Ireland (Welfare Reform) Bill. Fair enough, I can cope with it; it is three pages. Even I can assimilate that in the time available. However, there also appeared the draft Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 2015, which runs to 126 pages. How many people who will dutifully troop through the “Yes” Lobby tonight will have read even six of the 126 pages of that draft Order? Not very many, I suggest. That will not trouble the fodder that populates many of these Benches — they will do what they are told — but I, for one, will certainly not lend my assent.

Let me make it plain: I have no issue in principle with legislative consent motions or with inviting the Mother of Parliaments in the United Kingdom to legislate. I have no difficulty whatever with that, just as some others, from rather surprising sources, now seem to have no difficulty with that, but I do have difficulty with signing blank cheques. I am not prepared to consent to that which I have not been able to read, study and reach a view on. That is why we should not have even been asked to do it today.

The one document that we had adequate notice of was the Welfare Reform and Work Bill and its welfare clauses. Those welfare clauses, as Mr Attwood articulated, encompass some very strategic issues. They encompass the £20,000 benefit cap. The amazing thing is that some of the people who will vote tonight, in the words of the motion, to approve those welfare clauses come from parties that, in Westminster, went through the Lobbies against those clauses. Take the Democratic Unionist Party. At Second Reading and Third Reading, its MPs voted against the Welfare Reform and Work Bill. Some of them, like Mr Wilson, spoke against it, but tonight their MLAs will vote to approve the very clauses that their MPs voted against. There was expediency somewhere, whether in Westminster or Stormont. The expediency was there, in one place or the other, and that is how they will vote tonight.

We then have the approval of the motion and:

“the Executive’s proposals to enhance payments flowing from the agreement announced on 17 November 2015”.

No doubt the Minister will correct me if I am wrong — indeed, he might even correct me if I am right — but those have to be the proposals that will emanate from Professor Eileen Evason. They are certainly not in the agreement. The agreement manages in a page and a third to deal with welfare and tax credit top-ups. It does not tell us what the Executive’s proposals are to enhance payments flowing from the agreement, so it can be only what the professor tells us are her proposals.

It is a matter for every Member, but I, for one, will not vote for something that I have not seen, for something of which I have no idea what the content will be or for something that I have no idea how it will affect my constituents. We are being invited to rubber stamp blindly in advance whatever it turns out to be or whatever is adopted as the Executive’s proposals, even though those proposals will affect every one of our constituents. How could anyone say that they are representing their constituents in the House and engage in the absurd exercise of voting blind for something of which you have no idea what the contents will be? Although I am not at all ideologically opposed to legislative consent motions, I will certainly not vote for one that asks me to vote blindly for something that I have not seen and, I imagine, no one will see for weeks if not months.

The proposition really takes us to a level that is so surreal that it is unbelievable. In my book, these are obviously politically convenient for some because the overriding desperation was to have a deal — any deal, as it turns out. That seems to have been the motivation of both parties: any deal will do, and this is it. To protect their blushes, they came up with a wheeze: “We will get Westminster to do it. That will keep our fingerprints off it. When public memory fades a little, we will be able to say that the British Government did it; we did not vote that through”. Today, not only will you vote that through but you will vote it through in ignorance of what it is that you are being asked to vote on. You will then go back to your constituencies and say, “Elect us again. Don’t we do well representing your interests?”. I am glad that, in six months’ time, we will all face the verdict of our electorate, and I will be quite happy when some are asked about the climbdown on welfare and some are asked about the climbdown that involved sweeping murder under the carpet.

4.15 pm

Mr Agnew: I welcome the fact that we are back here, debating business, albeit in this extra sitting. I welcome that an agreement has been made. I might not agree with much of the content of it, but I welcome, nonetheless, that we can get back to doing business as usual in the House. Many outside the House have lamented the time wasted with in-out Ministers, the lack of legislation and the lack of Executive meetings in the intervening period. I briefly make the point that, whilst the Executive have been away, no less than three pieces of legislation have come forward from this Bench alone. So, while the Executive have been away, the Assembly has been at work. The new deal does not enhance the powers of these opposition Benches. We have the unique situation whereby, to be in opposition, you have to qualify to be in the Government. That seems somewhat unusual, at best. However, we on these Benches do not wait to be empowered; we empower ourselves.

My party proudly stood against the welfare cuts that came from the Tory Government. We did so from the Second Stage, when there was no top-up fund; and we did so at the Final Stage, when we believed that the top-up fund was insufficient, and we asked that more money be allocated to such a fund to ensure that as many people as possible in Northern Ireland could be protected. I cautiously welcome what appears to be an increase in that top-up fund.

I stand vindicated in the action that I took to block the previous Bill, as it proposed to cut the incomes of some of the poorest in our society. I stand vindicated in the continual challenge that we put to Sinn Féin in its assertion that the previous deal would have left no one in Northern Ireland worse off in benefits under the control of the Assembly. That was never achievable. Even had the demands that came forward from the Green Party been met, we would never have claimed that it was achievable. It was a disservice, particularly to those with disabilities, who would have lost out under that deal had it been passed. I welcome that Sinn Féin, in the end, voted against that deal, but it did not take an ard-fheis for the Green Party to see that the figures simply did not add up. We highlighted those figures and, in my view, there was no dupe from the DUP in that case. The figures were on the surface of the Bill and on the face of the Stormont House Agreement. They never added up, and they never could, to no one being worse off.

The deal we are presented with today is, I believe, a better one. There will be hurt. We cannot say that no one will be worse off, but it has been pointed out that we are in the context of an unfettered Tory Government, which, on top of its previous £12 billion worth of cuts to welfare, are making huge cuts to tax credits that are estimated to affect over 100,000 families in Northern Ireland.

As I said, I give a cautious welcome to what I see as an improved deal, because the devil is always in the detail. Indeed, it was the scrutiny of that detail that led me to reject the previous agreement. I wish to pose a number of questions to the Minister and hope to get answers today.

The agreement states that the sum allocated to the top-up fund incorporates the present discretionary fund. I would like to ask the Minister, in each of the past three years — or from whatever figures are available — how much that discretionary fund amounted to and whether it was a part of the original Stormont House Agreement. My understanding was that the top-up fund in the original Stormont House Agreement was on top of the discretionary fund. I liked Mr Allister's line:

"No doubt the Minister will correct me if I am wrong — indeed, he might even correct me if I am right."

So I seek the Minister's input on that. Is this a change? Is there a concealment to massage the figures of this element of the discretionary fund being added in, and, if so, to what value, because that may make a significant difference to what, on the surface, looks like an improved deal.

My next question is one I asked through all the stages of the last Bill. When we are told that there is no bedroom tax, is the Minister giving a commitment today that there will be no bedroom tax whatsoever? In a debate on the previous Welfare Reform Bill, despite assurances in the Stormont House Agreement that there would be no bedroom tax, the Minister stated:

"the Executive have agreed to create a separate fund of £17 million per annum that will mitigate the impact of this measure by protecting existing and future tenants from any reduction in their housing benefit unless there is a significant change in their personal circumstances or they are offered suitable alternative accommodation." — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 101, p489, col 2].

I would like to ask the Minister this: are there any circumstances in which the bedroom tax will apply? Specifically, if someone does have a change in circumstances — for example, a child leaves the home, vacating a bedroom, and there is suitable alternative accommodation available — will that family be expected to move or face a cut in housing support? Or will that be at the discretion of Professor Evason? Can the Minister say definitively that there will be absolutely no application of the bedroom tax?

Another issue that vexed my party is sanctions. We sought to amend the previous Bill to make sanctions less punitive, and we still stand opposed to a maximum sanction of 18 months — 18 months' cessation of benefits that may be for the individual concerned their only source of income. As I argued then, no one makes a choice that leads to their only source of income being cut. Having worked in the homeless sector, I have sat with people who have been on the receiving end of benefit sanctions and have known the circumstances, whether mental ill health, learning disability, court appearances or whatever, that may lead an individual to miss an appointment.

Knowing those circumstances, I cannot support or comprehend a system that would cease someone's benefits for up to 18 months. Can the Minister guarantee that, as is likely to be the case, the legislative consent motion is passed today and Westminster legislates for the sanctions, they will be the choice and action of last resort? I have asked him before, and I make no apologies for raising the issue again. Will he guarantee that, in Northern Ireland, we will never set a target for the amount of money to be saved through sanctions? To be fair to the Minister, his Department and its agencies, I have never had raised with me any suspicion that a target was being applied in Northern Ireland, but I am asking for that commitment, because we have seen the evidence from Great Britain that targets were set for sanctions to reduce welfare spend. In my view, that is immoral. I ask for his guarantee that that will never be the case in Northern Ireland.

What happens after four years? I am very concerned about the timing. I know that no Assembly can budget ad infinitum, but I worry about the timeline. In the agreement that proposes a top-up fund over four years, there is an agreement to cut corporation tax to 12.5%. My concern is that, when that point comes, the cost of corporation tax of up to £300 million a year, which is the latest figure from the Treasury, would mean that a future Executive would make the decision that that top-up for welfare would no longer be affordable. As evidence of my fears, I will quote David Ford speaking at his party conference earlier this year:

“We can’t protect vulnerable people if we have to take another £200 million or more out of public services to fund further adjustments to benefits ... And we can’t make the step change in job creation if we can’t afford to reduce corporation tax.”

It is clear from that statement that, when it comes to a choice between protecting the vulnerable and giving a tax break to big corporations, there are those in the Assembly who would put the tax break first, over the needs of the most vulnerable in our society. They would cut welfare rather than maintain our level of corporation tax.

The document that we were presented with yesterday speaks of a review after four years. If the Minister can give any detail of the nature of that review and of what power the Assembly will have in influencing and giving power to any conclusions that come from it, I would appreciate that information. Whilst this may give us a better deal on welfare reform than we had before and a better deal than the rest of the UK, I would still not say that it is a good deal. As I said, many of the poorest in our society will suffer as a result of the proposals. However, my fear is that, while we may have a better deal than GB, in four years’ or six years’ time, we will just have full-scale Tory cuts to our benefits system in Northern Ireland. That is why I cannot support the LCM. I cannot cede further power on this issue to the British Government. It is why, throughout our previous debates on the Welfare Bill, I asked why the concessions that we claim to have got on how we do benefits in Northern Ireland and the deal that we got for our people could not be enshrined in legislation.

I note that the reduction in the duration of sanctions will be in the Westminster legislation, but I also note that the bedroom tax will still be legislated for there. We will have the very strange situation that, if there is deemed to be underoccupancy, we will cut someone’s benefits and then top them up again. If we had the power in our own hands, legislated ourselves and ensured that our legislation did not include the bedroom tax, we would simply not apply that cut to people’s benefits and would not have the ludicrous situation that we take with one hand and give back with the other. That is inefficient, and, my fear is that it will only pertain in the relatively short term and we will see the bedroom tax introduced in Northern Ireland in the future.

4.30 pm

I am not compelled by the argument that there was not enough time to pass legislation through the Assembly. I have to question the motivation for presenting us with an LCM today rather than another welfare reform Bill. The DUP and Sinn Féin, who have agreed the provisions outlined in the document released yesterday, have the numbers to push the legislation through. Legislation can pass through the House within three months, which is the time available to us, so I ask whether it is a lack of trust that both sides — the DUP and Sinn Féin — will stick to the agreement. Is it an unwillingness to allow the level of scrutiny that it would receive should it come through the House? Is it simply, as Mr Allister suggested, that parties want to pass the LCM today and then blame the Conservative Government for passing the legislation in Westminster? It seems that that ties in with the narrative of the establishment of the working group under the leadership of Professor Eileen Evason to make the difficult decisions on who gets and who loses out so that, again, the parties of our Executive — in particular, the DUP and Sinn Féin — can wash their hands and, indeed, wring their hands when unpopular decisions are made. They can say, “Well, that wasn’t us, and, in fact, we’re opposed to that decision”. My comments are no reflection on Professor Evason but a reflection of how I believe good governance should take place. It should be open and transparent, and decisions should be taken in an accountable manner.

While I give my cautious welcome to the increased top-up budget and wait to hear a reply to my questions from the Minister, I cannot support the LCM today, as it gives further power to a Government who have done nothing but attack the poor, the vulnerable and the low-paid.

Mrs O’Neill: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle, at this stage of the day, when plenty has been said and we have been debating the LCM for hours — that is fine; it is good to have debate — and without rehashing a lot of what has been said today, I think that one of the key things that my colleague Alex said was that we could not look at the LCM in isolation. We are debating the LCM today because we have a political agreement on the way forward. In debating the LCM, it is important that we continually put that in context when we consider the discussions that we have today.

Throughout today — I have listened to most contributors — we have to remind ourselves of why we are elected: we are elected to make change. I am here to defend the people who elect me and all the people across the North.

We have a job — a collective job — as Assembly Members and as an Executive to stand up for the most vulnerable, the working poor and public services. That is certainly what I am about and what my party is about.

You have to remember why we are having this discussion and why we are in a financial crisis. We are in a financial crisis because the Tories were elected. We are in a financial crisis because they have continually stripped the block grant and our public services and they have continued their attack on the working poor and the most vulnerable in society. I am not apologetic for defending and mitigating, where I can, all those attacks.

When we are out and about, we can all probably reflect upon the fact that, when we engage with people, they want the institutions to work. If the institutions are to work, we have to negotiate, we have to come to political compromise and we have to work together. In this instance, we and the DUP have shown leadership in the political agreement set out before you.

I have listened to a lot of contributors today who said that they have not had the chance to read the Bill and this, that and the other, and that they do not know what is in the Order in Council or what the LCM is referring to. You do. If you do not, you are not doing your job properly. All those things are published and are there for people to read and reflect on.

The bigger picture is that no deal meant these institutions coming down. No deal meant the Tories continuing their onslaught across all the areas that I previously referred to. No deal meant these institutions closing down, with us leaving the public, the population of the North of Ireland, subject to a continual onslaught of Tory cuts in whatever form they decide to take them over the next number of years.

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Mrs O'Neill: Let me go through what I want to say. If I have the opportunity later, I will let you in if I think that it is appropriate.

We cannot get away from the financial crisis that we are dealing with: the fact that the Tories will continue to raid our block grant.

The best deal that we could have got at this moment in time is the deal that has been presented, and the route that we have set out to deal with the legislative consent motion is the right approach, as it allowed us to protect the most vulnerable and secure these additional moneys. I note that a lot of the parties objecting to the LCM approach are those that, in the past, said that we could not get more money. We got more money; we got a pot of £585 million over four years to protect the most vulnerable. It is only right and proper — I believe that all parties in the House agreed it at some stage over the last number of months — that we also need to protect the working poor; those who are trying to make a living and are dependent on their tax credits to shore them up. All parties agreed to that in the past, yet and all today they want to reject that part of the deal. That is what everybody does: they cherry-pick the parts of the deal that they like; they cherry-pick the parts that they do not like.

Without the deal and the LCM going forward, the whole thing would have fallen. In my opinion, and that of my party, the fact that we have a deal is because we believe in showing leadership and standing up for the most vulnerable in society. I certainly believe that that is what we have done.

I listened to a lot of the contributions today about the legislative route. Let us be very clear and let us also be very matter of fact about the process that will happen: the agreement sets out a time-limited process; it also sets out a sunset clause. It is a process that allows the money that was originally earmarked for fines to go back into the system. It is a process that is clearly defined. It does not dilute the powers of the Assembly, in that we are giving permission for the action to be taken. It is a bespoke process that allows the whole deal as agreed to go forward with the envelope for welfare and tax credits. I believe that the panel will use that envelope to the best effect in how we support those who are being attacked by the Tories.

Will it do everything that we want it to do? Absolutely not, but the Tories moved the goalposts when they made their July statement and started to attack the working poor as well. It is right and proper that we look towards how we can mitigate the worst effects of that to the best effect with the envelope that we have.

As I said, I could have written the script for many of the contributions made in the Chamber. There are those in the Chamber who, no matter what we agreed yesterday and no matter what was put in the agreement, would always have said no. There are people in the Chamber who continually say no to absolutely everything. I refer to the SDLP in particular and pick up on some of the points that Alex Attwood made earlier. The SDLP has not said yes to anything since 2007. The SDLP said no to budgets. The SDLP said no to the Programme for Government. The SDLP said no to the Stormont House Agreement, yet and all it has been part of a process over the last number of weeks and months and has been part of implementing the Stormont House Agreement. There are all those contradictions, but they are not for me to answer; they are for the SDLP to answer.

We must not lose our sense of what we are about. We are about representing the needs of the people of the Six Counties. We are about working towards protecting those people to the best effect that we can. We are anti-austerity. These institutions are the only vanguard against the Tory austerity agenda. If we were not here, I certainly would not want to explain to people at their door why certain people and political parties in this institution want it to fall and for the Tories to come in and do their dirty work. I am certainly not going to be about that. I am going to work with those political parties that are progressive. I will be about working with political parties that want to stand up for the most vulnerable. We can make a difference. Our Executive can make a difference. I believe that the public want the institutions to work to their best effect. As I said, the institutions are the only way we can protect our people from the worst excesses of Tory austerity. I believe that they are the best way of delivering public services for our people, including the most vulnerable, and for creating economic growth.

The agreement that is set out clearly looks towards how we can have a prosperous economy that we can grow in the future, how we can protect the most vulnerable and how we can target resources towards those in most need, as well as the public services. There are those who will want to continually cherry-pick the deal and electioneer on all aspects of it. That is all right; you can do that, but I am confident in what we have done, which is to be the only vanguard against the Tory austerity agenda, and I will continue to do that over the months ahead.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I call Dr Stephen Farry, and could I please encourage the Member to refer to the Welfare Bill.

Dr Farry: Thank you very much, Mr Deputy Speaker. I do not think that we are at all in the situation of giving ourselves a pat on the back. Those who claim that they are exercising leadership on this issue need to reflect on the fact that we have been put through the mill on welfare reform over the past two years at least. Severe damage has been done to our budgets — self-inflicted, made-in-Northern Ireland damage — never mind that made by the Conservative Government. That damage has impacted on our public services, not least because we have been handing money back to Westminster that could otherwise have been put to good use locally. So, the fact that we now have a limited deal around how we take forward welfare reform cannot be a cause for celebration. Indeed, it is barely even a cause for relief.

We find ourselves in the extremely strange and very uncomfortable situation that we are now relying on an LCM for Westminster to legislate over our heads because, in essence, we have run out of road and options to ensure that our finances are sustainable. Sinn Féin in particular finds itself in the bizarre situation of being happy to ask the Westminster Parliament to legislate on these matters when, in turn, it does not recognise the legitimacy of that Parliament in the sense that its Members do not take their seats. That is a massive contradiction that is sort of hanging out there and has not really been fully explained to us all. Hopefully, at some stage, someone from Sinn Féin will explain how it can reconcile those two points.

I want to comment on how my party can support the LCM in the context of the deal that was announced yesterday and the deadlock that we have seen around welfare reform. At this stage, Alliance is not in a position to endorse the deal as a whole. We have said that we will look at individual aspects and assess what is in the best interests of Northern Ireland as a whole, and not the interests of our party or narrow party advantage. I want to make things very clear. There is a narrative here where the DUP and Sinn Féin are claiming that they are the ones prepared to take difficult decisions and other parties in the Chamber are not prepared to take their part in those. We are somehow getting the view that the DUP and Sinn Féin are the only grown-ups in the room and everyone else is acting like children and toddlers. People are raising quite legitimate issues today, not least about the timescale within which this debate is occurring. It is important to reference, in that regard, that even yesterday's agreement by the DUP and Sinn Féin, along with the Governments, makes provision for this LCM to be discussed on the week of the 23 November; it does not necessarily have to happen this week.

4.45 pm

We are concerned about gaps in the deal and a lack of clarity around public finances. Above all, Alliance is prepared to stand up for good governance and sound financial management. Often, when we have opposed or criticised Budgets or expressed reservations around particular agreements etc, we have been accused of trying to duck out of our responsibilities. We have often criticised the so-called agreements, or have sometimes criticised or opposed Budgets, not because we are trying to avoid difficult decisions but because we do not recognise that they are sufficiently strategic or comprehensive or that they have lived up to the billing that people set out when they started on processes. We often find that the other parties are ducking the difficult decisions. Our criticism is not based on the fact that difficult decisions have to be taken and that we are, somehow, opting out; it is because the parties that are driving the process have ducked the difficult decisions, with all of the knock-on consequences that flow from that.

I will give one clear example. My party is more than happy to stick its head above the parapet and recognise that, as is the case in virtually every other mature democracy around the world, we have to engage in a degree of revenue raising when we are looking to balance our Budgets, particularly when our Budgets are under huge pressure. We are prepared to show leadership in that regard. That is clearly a risky position, given the attitudes and reluctance of the public in some respects. Nonetheless, it is important to show leadership, and that is what we have been seeking to do.

When we look at the issue of the LCM, we come to the conclusion that it is the only responsible thing to do at this time or, maybe, to turn it on its head, it is the least irresponsible thing to do at this time. Perhaps the latter way is the best way to frame it. Make no mistake about it: the fact that we are potentially voting on an LCM today is a reflection of the failure of our political institutions. It is not a cause for celebration. This is a recognition of failure and about getting ourselves out of that failure as cleanly and as efficiently as possible. Nonetheless, failure it is. These are matters that are devolved to the Assembly. It may well be a technical devolution where we have the responsibility without the effective power, but, nonetheless, we have that responsibility, and that responsibility has been with us since well before the current round of devolution in 1998.

Obviously, we have to work within the parity principle, and that has been accepted by successive Administrations, whether post-1998 or under the previous forms of administration in Northern Ireland. That is the context in which we are operating, but it is our duty to follow through and ensure that we are balancing our Budgets and working within the context of the parity principle, albeit with the scope that we have for local modifications and flexibilities. Quite clearly, we should have addressed this ourselves through legislation and the follow-through in all of the regulations that have to follow.

We are in a mess. We have wasted time, and we have messed around. We have been on a twisted, convoluted journey, and some parties are on a more convoluted journey than others. We are in-year, we are bleeding money in welfare adjustments, commonly known as welfare fines or welfare penalties, going back to Treasury. That has to stop. We are in an unsustainable situation with our Budget. The Finance Minister has balanced the Budget for the remainder of this year, but that is balanced on the premise that we follow through on what we have to do around welfare reform.

There are massive issues with our Budget, which we will come to during a different debate, as it probably stretches beyond the scope of this occasion. We find ourselves in the situation where we have conflicting problems, in that we should, ideally, be fulfilling our duty and taking legislation through all the different stages. Like my colleague, I recognise that a range of constitutional and institutional implications arise from the fact that we are doing an LCM. This is a different type of LCM, where legislation is happening on a UK-wide basis, and, for the sake of convenience, we perhaps buy in to that legislation rather than replicate the legislation here in Northern Ireland. This is a situation where we are asking Westminster to dig us out of a hole because we have left things too late in the cycle to efficiently address the Budget gaps that have emerged. This is an entirely different context for LCMs than has previously been understood.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Dr Farry: Yes.

Mr Beggs: Is the Member not rather uncomfortable that, in agreeing to this LCM, he is authorising approval for new draft legislation that has not yet been approved by Westminster and is still subject to amendment? What is the logic of doing that?

Dr Farry: I am massively uncomfortable with the entire situation, whether we are talking about the 2012 legislation or the 2015 legislation. Of course, an LCM can apply in a situation where legislation is still moving through Westminster, so that is not an uncommon situation for us to find ourselves in. Obviously, given the sensitivity around this legislation, people will naturally be very concerned in that regard. Far be it from me to seek to defend the deal that was passed yesterday, but the LCM applies to the status of the Bill as it stands, so we will need to return to it if that Bill changes in any significant way. That is the last you will hear of me defending the deal from yesterday. We are fair and balanced in the Alliance Party, and we reflect the facts as we find them.

We find ourselves with conflicting objectives. We want to protect the integrity of these institutions, but, above all, they are only a means to an end. That end is the good of the people of Northern Ireland, and it is important that we stop the bleeding in our public finances. We have a duty to ensure good governance, but good governance is there to ensure that we have properly funded public services and that we are investing in the key drivers of change in our economy.

Quite frankly, through the problems around welfare and other issues with financial management, or lack thereof, by the Executive over the past number of years, we are not doing our best in that regard by any stretch of the imagination. We need to turn that situation around. If we are to look ahead to lower levels of corporation tax, we need to be investing much more in skills and we need to have a proper economic plan.

I draw attention to the point that Mr Agnew was making about there somehow being a polarised choice between a lower level of corporation tax and pumping more money into the welfare system. We have to acknowledge that the purpose of having a lower level of corporation is not to give breaks to companies; it is about creating jobs and employment in Northern Ireland, and creating greater prosperity. There may well be genuine issues with ensuring that that prosperity is evenly distributed across society, and I am more than happy to have that debate and look at how we can ensure that that takes place.

However, it is important that we reflect on the fact that we have to ensure that we not only support people who are on welfare but invest in them and see how we can move them into a situation where they have fresh opportunities. That means looking in a more general sense around areas like early years education and public health, which are reflective of intergenerational poverty and lack of opportunity. Then there are the very specific interventions that will allow people to move up and off the skills ladder into employment, such as investment in our schools, colleges and universities; investment in employability programmes that the employment service can offer; and building new apprenticeships and new systems of youth training. All of that is very important in giving people, particularly those who come from marginalised and disadvantaged backgrounds, the opportunity to be stakeholders within our economy.

Mr Agnew: Will the Member give way?

Dr Farry: Just one second.

In doing that, not only do we address those who are on welfare but we invest in growing our economy.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for giving way. He outlined a number of things, including investment in skills and investment in early years. How does he envisage us making an increased investment in those areas while, at the same time, voluntarily cutting our income by £300 million a year?

Dr Farry: First, we need to have a sense of balance and proportion about how much money we are setting aside for further welfare support above and beyond the default GB position. I am happy that we are doing some things in that regard.

We need to reflect on the fact that we have massive inefficiencies in the way that we are spending money in our society. We are squandering hundreds of millions of pounds, for example, on managing a divided society. We have a very segregated education system, which is hugely costly. We also have a health service that, left to its own devices, is set to have a financial pressure in the region of 5% to 6% per annum due to costs as a result of our population getting older, demographics changing and drug treatments getting more expensive.

That is not sustainable, so we need to see a realistic plan for how we reconfigure our health service.

Those are all big-ticket issues that go way beyond the efficiencies that have been listed to date in the deal that was announced yesterday. We need to address the issue of progressive forms of revenue-raising as a means of bringing in additional resource. We can do all those things. We can be smart around how we use incentives to encourage businesses to invest in Northern Ireland and grow. At the same time —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order, please. I politely encourage the Member to return to the motion before us.

Dr Farry: That is grand. I will take your guidance, Mr Deputy Speaker, and bring it very quickly back to the issue of welfare.

Clearly, there are two sides to the coin: supporting people on welfare and ensuring that we create opportunities. There are plenty of ways, through our public finances, in which we can do that.

It is with great sadness that we find ourselves with little option but to support the legislative consent motion. It is too late in the day for us to take through legislation in the Assembly from first principles. Sadly, we lost that with the petition of concern back in the springtime. We have to get on with the issue; it has been debated ad nauseam for several years. We all know the issues, and we know what it is our duty to do. Ultimately, we recognise that it is about good governance and that, most importantly, we have sound public finances and as much money available to invest in our public services as possible. For us not to proceed with the LCM today — or next week, if we had that option — would mean that we had an ever deeper black hole in our public finances, and that is not in our interests. It is not in the interests of our constituents or of Northern Ireland, so it is important that we do our duty, difficult as it is this evening, by backing the LCM.

Mr McNarry: In the Assembly, UKIP is the only national party committed to devolved regional autonomy. That is just to emphasise the fact that there are no Tory, Labour or Liberal Democrat Members about this place.

As a long-time supporter of the moving-on stakes — longer than some seemingly recent converts — I seem, for the first time, to be at odds with the twist that devolution is taking as a result of yesterday's agreement that carries the day in navigating it between now and next May. I see nothing wrong in the motion before us, which covers the long-overdue consent to welfare reform. However, in truth, the Assembly is not consenting to the introduction of welfare reform. The two-party coalition is clearly not agreed on that; rather, it is asking for consent to strip the Assembly of its powers by taking the decision out of our hands and into the hands of London.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

When people call the encapsulation of welfare reform passing out of our hands a “Fresh Start”, let me commend them for their imagination. Let me also condemn the temerity of those using such a falsehood as some kind of progress in the House. When things, in order to reach agreement, hang by such a tenuous strand, they will inevitably be broken when more tension is applied to the weakness so obvious in the presentation of the motion, which, at the moment, seems to be holding strands together. Let no one be fooled that the tensions are resolved in the motion: in reality, is there an undertone in the motion of a final warning from Downing Street?

5.00 pm

The people out there are, yet again, bewildered by how easy it is to turn a crisis into a victory, to go from bust to boom in a matter of hours and to move from disaster to survival and rescue. It seems now that the people outside are being asked to believe and buy into all things bright and beautiful flowing from this agreement. It is not true; in fact, far from it. I will resist saying that it is like Christmas presents for the poor, because that would belittle the poor and the needy and disrespect their unfortunate circumstances. However, people, no matter who they are, are really not switched on to the nuances in this place when they can see the darkness.

Let me put it this way: it was not welfare reform, cuts to tax credits or Tory cuts that put the Executive into a spin. They did that themselves through the poor and ineffective management of funding that they did not know how best to use or prioritise. It was they who made this country debt-ridden, not yesterday, last month or last year but more than four years ago. They have allowed the management of our money to backslide. I heard it today: they say, “We have done a deal with no further borrowing”. Well, jolly good on you. It is a deal quite clearly that has no further borrowing but makes no case to reduce the borrowing that burdens us from expanding our spending needs and developing the economy.

In effect, the motion, attached to the spin of success in meeting our welfare reform obligations, clouds the fact of a devolved Government voting to transfer power. Who ever heard the like of it? The motion does that. It concedes that Stormont has, in effect, lost its financial independence in the sense that it will become primarily an administrative Assembly judged by its paymasters in London on how effectively we manage the money allocated to us. Without doubt, if the move is to transfer the powers by consent, there must also be a pathway to consenting to have the powers returned. I ask whether a date has been thought of or even set between the two-party coalition by which to bring back the powers that we are tossing away.

The motion has to be discussed in the round of the debate, and consideration must be given to ancillary issues regarding this agreement that are of legitimate concern to people. There are consequences of transferring power, as in the motion. It is stipulated in section D 4.2 of the agreement that the United Kingdom Government — the Tories — will only:

“legislate, with Assembly consent, to ensure that the Assembly cannot consider spending plans which exceed the Block Grant allocated by the Treasury or the NIE’s borrowing limits, where planned spending relies on those funding sources.”

In other words, Ministers, you have been caught out; you have been caught on; and you are not to be trusted. The motion is not built on trust; it is built on a bailout. Mistrust is highlighted for us all to see in the formation of a fiscal council that, in effect, is Westminster’s watchdog on Stormont, making sure that Ministers and Departments behave themselves in the future.

It is actually a move I welcome, because I called for it over a year ago. I called for more fiscal responsibility and a professional watchdog. Of course, the Executive were under no pressure from me. Why would they be? They did not take it under their notice. But Dave Boy came on the scene and, my, how times changed.

It is all financial and linked to our financial responsibilities. I fear that devolution is contemplating taking a backward step not only in resorting to handing power back but, in truth, in finding the Executive wanting in their ability to hold on to power and their refusal to recognise that the sovereign Government and Parliament’s right and role in determining welfare proposals are what we have. That is what Sinn Féin rejected a year ago but has to swallow today. It seems so clear that, on the issue of reforms, the consultative process involving an armed army council could not broker or stand over that Stormont House Christmas agreement, so we have a motion that is worked out to be a massive defeat and a retreat from the bogus stance that no one will lose a penny of their benefits, ever and for all generations. I have heard people saying that that lesson has been learnt, but it was stubbornness and foolhardiness that resulted in that stance, with millions of pounds squandered unnecessarily in payback to London — millions lost that could and would have been of help in alleviating the pain and the suffering of thousands on hospital waiting lists, today and for months, seeking relief. It is appalling that Sinn Féin has been so prescriptive and one-dimensional in this debate and this argument over welfare reform in defining the identity of the vulnerable. It is obvious that, on the Sinn Féin radar of people in pain, people waiting three or six or nine months for an appointment, let alone relief, are not, in Sinn Féin’s eyes, vulnerable. They are not in that category.

The motion is the result of where two cannot agree. That is why we have it. It is a cop-out: “Let’s send the matter across the water”. I actually have no problem with the two combining from here as the only coalition in government in Northern Ireland. As the talks have proved, the other two or three, when it was three, were powder-puff Ministers, holding on to office for kudos. One party even walked out in a huff because it did not trust Sinn Féin. It took eight years to find that out, did it? By the time they recover their ideals and principles, they will have been rewritten by themselves —

Mr Kennedy: Hear, hear.

Mr McNarry: — into the joker's Christmas stocking, Danny.

Mr Kennedy: Everybody is wrong but you, David.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr McNarry: Thank you, Mr Speaker; I welcome that. These rowdies over here — what are we going to do with them?

What I am getting at is this: the transfer of power is a dangerous precedent. It does not resolve things one iota — in this case, overturning Tory policies. In fact, it has done the opposite by reinforcing them. I have always, I trust, been swayed by practical politics, despite the fact that I am usually right. [Laughter.] I am swayed by the practicality of the motion, but of course I am not impressed or best pleased, as you might have gathered, with, first, the prevarication, followed by the stand-off, which was all to be rendered impotent by Sinn Féin's feeble rolling over in capitulation last night and endorsing the motion today. Of course it is a motion supporting Tory cuts, and it will be wonderful to read in Hansard tomorrow that Sinn Féin's fingerprints are all over it.

I will support the motion because of the practicalities. It is what I wanted to do a year ago, last Christmas, and what we should have done. I caution that people out there are fed up with the lot of us. They cannot believe that what could not have been done last Christmas is actually being done today. I realise that I am very restricted in this debate from going into my “No guns, no government” argument — where did I hear that so long ago, and where are those people today? — and the shame of an armed army council in control of Sinn Féin in that Government, but it is out there. The motion, in its context and content, is not being given a thought. It is what I said: out there, people do not think that we care any longer, so they do not care about us. Church bells will not ring all over the country to celebrate the transferring of welfare reform to London. As Mr Farry said, the actual doing of the motion in itself represents a monumental failure. Nevertheless, there are vulnerable people who must be taken care of in our country and, perhaps, once we do this, those people will be taken care of.

Mr B McCrea: At this time of the evening, one wonders whether there is anything worth saying. [Laughter.] I have been asked three times on the way to the Benches how long I will be. Obviously there is no concern about what I will actually say, just how long I will be.

As I have sat listening to previous Members, I have been in the Minister's direct line of sight. I wonder — no doubt he will tell us in his memoirs — what he thought about during this long period. You get quite an interesting read of the body language. I can tell you, Mr Speaker — I mean no disrespect to my colleague Mr McNarry — that also in my line of sight is the page upon page upon page that he has so eloquently delivered to us just now. That is a bit of a challenge.

Mr Kennedy: How many pages have you?

Mr B McCrea: I actually have but one page of notes that I have taken, having listened diligently.

Mr McNarry: Excuse me; I need a comfort break.

Mr B McCrea: Mr McNarry needs some comfort, and he is away to get that.

I have but one page of notes. I tried to take some wisdom from the contributions here today. Paula Bradley started off. I got to hear her say that she had looked over the contributions that people had made in the previous debates and found that nobody really had clean hands on this, or something like that. I checked to see what position I had taken in previous debates on the issue, and I was relieved to discover that I have been remarkably consistent and that I have indicated that I will support the motion.

That leads me to something that is worth saying, though: it is all terribly confusing. Some of the people who were against it in principle are now voting for it because they think it needs to be done.

Other Members are against it because we were not given enough information, but they think that it should be done nevertheless. Even Members who argued strongly that it is a good idea took up most of their time saying why they think that there are bad bits about it. All of that gives a terribly confusing image to the public.

5.15 pm

I have said in previous speeches that I wish, such are the difficulties of dealing with the important subject of welfare reform, that it was a five-party coalition. In fact, I wish that other parties had been involved in the debate that led to an agreed way forward. These issues are so difficult that they cannot be resolved against a background of political opportunism, because that destroys the public's belief in the body politic. Mr McNarry, who is not yet back from his comfort break — I hope that it is going well for him — said that this was how people look at us. They look here, and they do not see this great debate.

There were some good contributions that I was impressed by. I did not catch everybody's contribution, but I caught Mr Maskey's. I thought that he spoke very strongly and very eloquently. I say that because, nearly every time that I talk to Mr Maskey, he, at best, tells me off and, at worst, tells me that I am talking rubbish. I am a bigger man than that, and I can say that his was a good contribution. I expect people to come out strongly, fight and say that this is the best deal that we can get, so I will not be one of those chiding Sinn Féin for the deal that it got. Sinn Féin negotiated and negotiated hard. I do not know what is in the deal because I have not read the 126 pages, but Sinn Féin believes in what it got and is fighting for it.

In a similar vein, I was aware of the challenges that the DUP had. At the time, the Minister of Finance went to great lengths to explain to the Assembly that we had to pass the so-called phantom Budget — otherwise, we would not have the authority to spend. Yet we passed a Budget that we did not have the resources to meet. Part of the problem was that we could not get agreement on welfare reform. For what it is worth, I understand the difficulties that the DUP and Sinn Féin have tried to address.

Other parties now take some issue with the deal that has been put forward. I am someone who has long advocated opposition. I think that there should be an opposition in any democratic forum, but it should not be opposition simply for opposition's sake, taking an opportunistic stance and saying that we might get a few electoral votes out of it. It has to say that there is an alternative. What this place really needs, in my opinion, is not just an opposition but an effective alternative, and those of us who disagree with the current system need to come forward with one.

A few issues probably need to be changed. People say, "I would like you to show leadership", but they mean by that, "You are absolutely wrong. I do not agree with you". The truth of the matter is that very few people get thanked for showing leadership in this place. Absolutely the last thing that you want to be doing is showing leadership. It is the ministerial equivalent of, "Yes, Minister, a very courageous decision". Who wants to make a very courageous decision with an election looming? That is why politics in this place do not work.

The issue of tax credits is associated with welfare. Michelle O'Neill made what I thought was a particularly telling comment in her contribution, but maybe not in the context that she meant it. Nevertheless, it was valid. She said that you cannot look at the motion in isolation because it is not just about welfare reform; it is part of a political settlement. I say to her that isolation does not stop there. The harsh reality for this place is that we represent 2.4% of the United Kingdom, so the other 98% of people will take a view about what they do. We do not dictate to people. Hopefully, we go together to explain our difficulties and hope that our arguments will see favour with the people who have the resources.

We spend approximately £20 billion in Northern Ireland and raise £10 billion in taxes. If it were the other way round, we could do whatever we liked and wanted with welfare reform, but that is not the case. We have to go and ask people, "Will you please invest in us? Will you please do something?"

There are certain issues that we may not yet have grasped. A few days ago, the 'Annual Survey of Hours and Earnings, 2015' was published. Would you believe that Northern Ireland topped the league in earnings growth? That, of course, comes from a pretty poor past, considering the impact that the crisis has had on us. However, the issue facing those who attack the Conservatives — I am not arguing for the Conservatives; I am only saying that you must understand the environment that we are working in — is that they think that their policies are working. They think that they have taken action on debt and the deficit, the economy is growing, wages are growing, and the economy will be on a sounder footing.

In dealing with welfare reform, the key issue is that a life on benefits should not be a long-term ambition. That is not what we want to see; we want people to have aspirations and the ability to do better and to get a job or skills. When I look at this negotiation in its totality, what I would like to see — I am not sure that I see it yet — is vision. I would like to see that, OK, we are going to deal with welfare because it is essential in the short term; nobody wants to see anybody disadvantaged, and I think that many people in Northern Ireland will benefit from this deal. However, it is not the long-term solution. We have to find a way of growing an economy, and the only way to do that is by having some form of political stability.

I will conclude my comments by saying that the aspirations of the people of Northern Ireland are that we find a way of working together, accepting that it is difficult and that there are many, many issues that we disagree on. Those who agree on a way forward should form an Executive and work together, but the bigger parties in that Executive should treat the smaller parties with respect. You should not just treat them as some sort of inconvenience to be dealt with, by the by. Agendas for the Executive come in late. Frankly, even today, when Mr Allister raised his motion asking why we are rushing this so far and so fast, we should have been given the courtesy of being allowed to see the documents. We should have been brought into the conversation. Your electoral mandate is still respected, and you will still have the say, but, if we really want to make the changes in Northern Ireland that we want to see, it is better that we get more rather than fewer people involved.

You have all very kindly listened to me. I hope that I have not gone on too long. I am sorry if I bored anybody. Mr Attwood is not here; I had a joke for him but —

Mr McNarry: Go on. Tell us it.

Mr B McCrea: Since Mr McNarry has asked, I will. I caught the start of Mr Attwood's speech, but, as some of you will know, I have to go for a daily walk for health reasons. I am proud to say that, having taken an hour's walk around the premises, I came back and, fortunately, he was still on his feet, so I did not miss that much of it. It is great to have such a contribution in a democratic forum.

Ms Sugden: From the outset, I have stated that I do not support the Westminster Welfare Reform and Work Bill. In fact, I do not think that any MLA supports it, because, disappointingly, the Westminster legislation focused on chiding the proportionately few who take advantage of the welfare system rather than supporting those who need it most.

I refer to Mrs Bradley's earlier contribution, when she acknowledged a reluctance to use the word "benefit": I agree. For those who need it, welfare is not beneficial. It is a struggle, a last resort, and it is not as far-reaching as it needs to be. I hope that she does not mind me saying that I also agree with her when she says that no party has a monopoly on protecting the rights of the most vulnerable. Social issues should be at the heart of each MLA's mandate. Social issues are not unionist, nationalist, anything in-between or outside of; social issues are people, and, as representatives of people, we all need to put people first. I say again: any MLA who understands the aim of the Westminster Welfare Reform and Work Bill should not support it as legislation on its own.

The Welfare Reform and Work Bill, however, is not without context. Indeed, this context led me and others to vote in favour of the Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Bill earlier this year. Welfare reform is, in my opinion, ultimately not the decision of the Northern Ireland Assembly; the UK Government maintain that power. It was clear in May that the UK Government were not going to concede any more than what was fought for for Northern Ireland, particularly at the beginning of a five-year term and in light of other issues that they felt took precedence over Northern Ireland. I reiterate what I said then: we need to be realistic about what is available to us. Six months ago, welfare reform as presented to the House by Minister Storey was all that was available to us. I am not comfortable saying that, because, regrettably, it was the best of the worst. Although it was doomed, I voted reluctantly in favour.

On rereading 'A Fresh Start' in the wee hours of the morning, Mr Speaker, I did not think that anything had changed in the six months since the parties to your left condemned Northern Ireland's Welfare Reform Bill. I am deeply disappointed and angry about the last six months, because I fail to see what that time achieved other than to fail the people of Northern Ireland. The UK Government have upheld their position. The agreement yesterday almost reads quite smugly about how they have maintained their line. Even the title suggests that the document is a continuation of the Stormont House Agreement, a second phase of its implementation, if you will.

I have heard much from the parties on this side of the House about why they petitioned the Final Stage of the Welfare Reform Bill in May, but I am lost in coming to any of their conclusions. I suggest that their reasons were not about welfare but were a vain attempt to satisfy a very despondent electorate at that time. Shame on them, because their posturing has served only towards the suffering of the people of Northern Ireland. I do not mean to reiterate what I said earlier this year. However, I will say that serving the most vulnerable goes beyond welfare. The past six months have taken service away from people. I am thankful that we have maintained devolution, but the arguments for devolved power here are weakening. If we are not serving them, what are we doing?

I come back to the legislative consent motion: I will not support it on principle. Frankly, my vote is not required to get it through, although, to be fair, it will finally get welfare reform moving and will subsequently, hopefully, get Northern Ireland moving. However, other than the votes of the DUP and Sinn Féin, no one else is actually required for the motion to go through. That is disappointing, and it weakens the notion of power-sharing that we have fought so hard for. I do not believe that yesterday's agreement goes any way to addressing the failure of our structures here; I actually believe that it affirms it. I will, therefore, take the opportunity — as, I hope, will others outside Sinn Féin and the DUP — to vote against the motion on the principle that the people of Northern Ireland deserve to be represented by all MLAs in the House — all five of the main parties, the smaller parties and the independents — because the people of Northern Ireland gave them that right.

Yesterday's agreement underpins today's legislative consent motion, and that is why I will walk in the "No" Lobby. I note the First Minister and deputy First Minister's foreword in 'A Fresh Start: the Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan':

"At the heart of this Agreement is our common commitment to a better way of doing business together."

"Together". Further, they say:

"the leadership challenge is to build hope and confidence throughout our community".

Our community — the people of Northern Ireland — does not have confidence in us. Let us face it: why should they? Many will not even get past the title of the agreement because they have heard it all before. Before they can click on the link to the Northern Ireland Office website, they hear that some MLAs will not support it because they have not been given the opportunity. Therefore, I feel that the authors of the agreement have destabilised it before it has had a chance to be considered.

5.30 pm

Ironically, I do not disagree with the document; it has so many incredible goals. It could have more, but it is a start.

However, on principle, I will not vote for the legislative consent motion this evening. Moving forward, I will commit to the agreement, if the authors respect me and my mandate. Currently, that respect is not there, so some work needs to be done.

I thought that I knew respect, but, earlier in the week, I let myself down by letting emotion get the better of me. On taking this seat, I vowed that this would never be about me but only about the people I represent and the people of Northern Ireland. As a leader, I am sorry for not maintaining that position, and I do not mind admitting it, because that is the right thing to do. In moving forward, I hope that others in the House will also consider their leadership, being most mindful of the people who, they hope, will follow them.

Mr McCallister: We have been debating welfare reform not only throughout this year but over the past number of years, ever since the coalition Government introduced it. The Minister will not be surprised to hear me say — he has heard me say it before — that I agree with the broad principle of welfare reform, namely that work should pay. We need to look at how we build the aspiration of families. We do not want people to be trapped by welfare dependency, so we need to look at how we break that cycle. I believe passionately that we need to achieve all those things.

The Welfare Reform Bill was defeated on 26 May. If I am correct, you would be allowed to bring the Bill back to the Assembly six months later — on 26 November — so why was that option not explored? I even think that bringing it back, though I am very uncomfortable with accelerated passage, would have been preferable to a legislative consent motion.

Let us look at the context of what we are asked to approve this evening: a Bill, just published, that we have not seen. As Mr Beggs pointed out in an intervention, it is a Bill that could well be amended in a way that is not to our liking or in accordance with our wishes. Of course, we do not know what proposals might come from a panel yet to be fully established. We are being asked to sign what is not quite a blank cheque — it is for £585 million — when we are unsure what we will do or how we will do it. That is a big ask for a legislative Assembly.

It is worth using the phrase "legislative Assembly". Why are we here, if not to legislate? Why are we giving this to Westminster — arguably, a significantly busier legislative body — if not to keep our fingerprints off the Bill and away from the entirety of welfare reform? It seems a bit like the issue of dealing with the past. Legislation could have been brought to the House, but we do not want to touch it and will let Westminster do something. It seems so typical of this place that, when something gets difficult, we come up with the old favourites, such as "Why not appoint a commissioner to look after that?". Recently, there has been talk that we should appoint a chief executive of the health service to keep health out of political control, almost to keep it away from democratic political control. Why not let Westminster deal with the issues, so that we can keep our hands clean?

That is a complete dereliction of our duties as legislators and representatives in a representative democracy. We should not be acting in this manner. It is not the way that we should proceed, because it leaves many questions unanswered — things like the issues that Mr Agnew raised about the bedroom tax. Are we doing any of the bedroom tax? Is Westminster going to legislate, then we will penalise people, then give them the money back, or are we going to continue to use our £585 million to breach welfare benefits?

I said in a previous welfare debate that the fact that we have 6,600 families in Northern Ireland on over £30,000 of welfare benefits, which is equivalent to a £40,000 salary, needs to be addressed. I do not think that is sustainable when hard-working families are going to be hit with tax credits and are not on that level of support. It is a worry as to what we are going to use the £585 million for. As for the bedroom tax, are we going to change our housing stock? If we are never doing the bedroom tax, is that now something that the Minister is going to put on hold? Were any changes ever going to happen? Will families be moved, as Mr Agnew asked?

We have moved from a mitigation system of £564 million over six years to £585 million over four years. What happens at the end of those four years? Will we create a bigger cliff for people on welfare to fall off, if that just stops and we move completely to the Great Britain system? What happens at that point in time? Of course, we do not know at this stage what that money will be used for.

As I have said in previous welfare debates, if we were serious about changing the way that this society operates, we would invest some of that £585 million in early intervention programmes to tackle literacy and numeracy — all of the things that build up a skills base and educate the population and all the stuff that we need to do to break the cycle for people trapped on welfare dependency. That is what we need to be doing, but we actually seem to be moving the other way and cutting early intervention to pay for some of those payments. That seems to be dramatically counter-strategic to what we want to achieve, so why are we doing that in health, education and across the board? Where is this money coming from, and what are the downstream consequences of it? If you want to skill a population, you have to start in the early years to make sure people have the skills.

It is surprising, but Sinn Féin is almost the party of trickle-down economics. We are cutting corporation tax, but that has a long way to trickle down to people trapped on welfare who do not have the skill set to get jobs or the access to affordable childcare. All those issues are linked, and we do not seem to be addressing them in any holistic shape or form. I regret that very much.

I support some of the changes that the Minister achieved on welfare earlier on, and I would have liked to be in a position to support him and vote on the legislation. However, I cannot vote on a legislative consent motion far too much of which is in blank-cheque territory.

I listened to some of the other contributions. Members of Sinn Féin talked about being elected to make a change and said that these institutions had to work. We would have been coming up to the third Christmas in a row of political crisis talks: Haass, Stormont 1 and Stormont 2. It is the third year in a row that we were approaching Christmas on a deal. We had a deal last year on welfare. That was going along very nicely until all the members of Sinn Féin went up to Derry for the ard-fheis. Suddenly, a petition of concern was threatened, and the Minister pulled the Bill. You could argue that that was maybe all very well.

That was in March. There was great hope that Labour was going to win the election and that we would have a different Government — the evil coalition Government would be gone. However, that did not happen. As Minister Foster put it, if only we had some way of testing public opinion — oh aye, such as a general election. And the Tories won that.

I, as have many Members, have said repeatedly to Sinn Féin that the Tories are the elected Government of the United Kingdom. I may not like it, Sinn Féin may not like it and people in the DUP may not like it, but they are the elected Government of the United Kingdom. The Tories won the election, but still, at the end of May, Sinn Féin was going to do all manner of things: take on the Tories and battle with them. They were a wee bit like their heroes in Greece, who were going to take on the EU and the German Chancellor and do all manner of things. They were going to sort things out, tackle austerity and be anti-austerity. It was all good stuff that made great headlines. What has Sinn Féin come back with? A deal that ends two years earlier than was intended originally. Yes, there is a bit more money to it, but we have no idea what we are to do at the end of the four years. Are we creating a bigger cliff for people to fall off? Are we creating something that this Executive or a future one cannot sustain? Is that what we are doing? When our health service next hits crisis after crisis, what will happen?

Of course, I, like any Member here, want to see the institutions work. I want to see good governance and the Government acting and looking like they are a Government and not being at sixes and sevens on every issue, with part of the Government for something and another part of it against. However, when Sinn Féin lectures us about the importance of the institutions working, I point out that, on 26 May, one of the lead parties in Government signed a petition of concern effectively to torpedo their own Government's policy. Once you added the welfare bit and the mitigation measures, it became Northern Ireland Executive policy. Sinn Féin torpedoed its own Administration's policy, yet we are lectured on making the institutions work.

I want to see the institutions work, and that is why I have to say that I am absolutely amazed at an all-Ireland, Irish republican party giving power back. The devolved regional Assembly that is the Northern Ireland Assembly is giving powers back to Westminster to fix our mess because we have not been able to get our act together. We have kicked the can so far down the road that we have run out of road. What message does that send out about the functionality and fitness for government of some parties here? That, to me, seems a surprising climbdown and change of direction. Sinn Féin has moved from a position of wanting more powers for the Assembly. Alex Maskey talked about getting our hands on more fiscal levers. That is an outcome that I would agree with. I would love to see the Assembly have more fiscal levers, but you would seek those only when you had reformed the Assembly and the Executive and the way in which they work. You would do it only when you could prove that you can manage what you have.

5.45 pm

The fact that we now have to set up a fiscal responsibility watchdog or unit and maybe go through a few years' probation to see whether we can get our house in order and our Budget back into line to the approval of Treasury is not exactly setting us up for getting our hands on more of the levers of fiscal power.

I am amazed at people making the argument that they want to take on the Tory Government. When you read the document, it sounds like the Tories did not move that far on many issues: "You can mitigate welfare cuts, but you have to take it out of your block grant. You can devolve corporation tax, but you will take it out of your block grant". Those are choices that the Executive and Assembly have and should make.

I would like to have been in the position to support the Minister today in the changes that he needed to make to welfare. I was and still am very sceptical about offering up such a large sum of money — over £0.5 billion — for mitigation measures when we are not sure what exactly we will do. Are we going to use the money just to breach a welfare cap or to invest in social mobility, aspiration and skills to break the cycle? Is that where we are going with this? I would like to see much more detail on that, rather than giving all that money back to Westminster to decide. It is too much to give back. We should have been shaping this policy.

Mr O'Dowd: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCallister: Certainly.

Mr O'Dowd: There is no suggestion anywhere in the legislative consent motion or the document that we are giving back £585 million to Westminster to do anything with. It will be up to Eileen Evason's group to come back to the Executive and the First Minister and deputy First Minister to set out how best we use that money to mitigate the impact of the welfare cuts being imposed on the Assembly by the Westminster Government.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful for the intervention, Mr Speaker. The second half of the legislative consent motion proposes for the Assembly's approval:

"the draft Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 2015; and the Executive's proposals to enhance payments flowing from the agreement announced on 17 November 2015."

It is in the legislative consent motion. I am not suggesting that you are handing the money back, but the legislative mechanisms that you will use to spend the money are in the legislative consent motion. That is what you are being asked to sign up to. That is why I am so surprised that you and your colleagues are so supportive of this approach. The Minister could have brought his Welfare Reform Bill back on 26 November. He could have gone for accelerated passage or for a normal six-week Committee Stage given the fact that the Bill had been through all the scrutiny, and we would have had time to deal with the issues. We are now giving them to a much busier legislature to deal with, mainly, I have to say, because you do not want your hands anywhere near this. It is regrettable that we do not have the courage as legislators elected by people in Northern Ireland to make the legislative changes to their benefit or, indeed, explain the changes that we have had to make. That is a retrograde step.

As I said, I would like to be in a position to support the Minister on welfare, because I am acutely aware of the impact that this has had on our Budget and, indeed, on Northern Ireland's image around the world. Effectively, we almost threw ourselves off the fiscal cliff. We nearly crashed our system by getting to the point of running it into the ground. A few months ago, questions were put to the Minister about whether he would even have the money to pay certain benefits by this time of the year and whether we would be fit to pay farmers single farm payments at this time of the year. All of those issues were being raised, such as the crisis — the self-made crisis; a crisis made in Stormont — that we imposed on ourselves. That these issues could not be sorted out is something that we should all be deeply ashamed of. Considering that we have been negotiating on welfare issues for three years or more —

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCallister: Yes.

Mr Dickson: I appreciate what the Member has been saying, but, to come back to the subject of the £585 million, there are those — I am not suggesting for a second that you are one of them — who suggest that this is money that the British Government have given to us as an extra. The reality is that this is money in the Northern Ireland block grant to be used for hospitals, roads and education. The decision that Sinn Féin and the DUP have made and others will support to a certain level is that that money will be taken out of the block grant and used to protect the most vulnerable — the recipients of welfare. This is not new money; this is our money being reallocated inside this Budget.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to Mr Dickson for that, and I agree entirely. There is a perverse logic to the idea that you can take money out of hospitals and not affect the vulnerable and the sick. Once you take it out of health and social care, bearing in mind that our health and social care services are completely linked, you can hit very vulnerable people. In fact, I often suggest that, when you attack the health budget the things that tend to be dropped are what you might call the "softer services". That could mean a bigger waiting list for domiciliary care or somebody not getting their physiotherapy within an appropriate timescale. All those things are affected.

Our health service has been driven into crisis, with a huge waiting list. Now, £40 million more has been allocated, but that is the price that we have paid for this level of negotiation and the feeling that we are somehow going into battle with the Tories. The Tories do not seem to have blinked on this. It is up to others to decide who blinked, but I do not think that it was the Tories.

I regret that I will not vote with the Minister on the legislative consent motion this evening, as it is asking too much of me and my colleagues as Members. He has the numbers to get it through anyway, so I am sure that he is not too worried, but, on the principles of welfare, I would be more supportive of his approach and what he negotiated originally and some of the safeguards. However, this approach — the legislative consent motion — represents a complete dereliction of our duties as Members of a legislative Assembly.

Mr Storey: I will make some concluding remarks on the debate this afternoon. I find it bizarre that there are those in the House who claim to be unionists and see it as dangerous or even undesirable to have any working relationship with the sovereign Parliament at Westminster. I find that a strange position. There is no doubt that they will beat their chests and tell people that they are committed unionists. However, when it comes to a relationship and a working arrangement with the House of Commons or when it comes to the legislative arrangements at Westminster, that suddenly becomes undesirable; it suddenly becomes dangerous. I find that strange for those who claim to be unionists.

Mr McCallister: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: No, I will make my way through this. I have listened to a lot in the House today, and there are a few other preliminary comments that I wish to make.

Here is the other problem: there are some in the House to whom it would not matter if we said it was black, because they would say that it was white; if we said it was right, they would say that it was wrong. It would not matter what arrangements we came up with: it is always easy to find fault.

Why do I say that? Because of our experience and because, in the past, as a party, we were very good at finding fault, difficulties, problems and issues.

That leads me to another statement. There comes a time when you have to face certain realities. You have to deal with things as they are, not as you would like them to be, especially when you do not have all the control and ability to do everything that you want to do. We were faced with certain realities, like the impasse that was created by what had happened at the beginning of the year and the outcome of the Westminster election in May. Those created a set of circumstances and a situation that we had to deal with.

We could have said that it is too difficult or challenging. We could have said that we would take the easy option, but we have made a decision to do what we have done. I hear a lot of people talking about the £585 million. Let me remind Members again, as I have done repeatedly in the House, that the spend on welfare in Northern Ireland is in excess of £4.6 billion. Let us remember that that is money that goes to our pensioners. It is money that goes to families who are in need and have particular issues that some Members in the House know nothing about. We sometimes have a very condescending attitude to the way in which we present and deliver our welfare system. Between now and 2020, on the projected spend on welfare, we will have a welfare budget in excess of £6 billion. It is easy to have throwaway lines. It is easy to have a political comment and use that as a cover for saying that you are taking a principled position.

Members made many comments, and I am not going to go through them all tonight. I will deal with one issue now and come back to some of the specifics that Mr Attwood mentioned. I appreciate the work that he and his colleagues have done in recent days. It is not work that was done and shabbily discarded. I appreciate his comments about the efforts that my officials and I have made. That work will continue. Today, we are not lowering the drawbridge on welfare, with my handing over all the power and responsibility to the Department for Work and Pensions, even though the Member still believes that I am in the payroll of that Westminster Department. We have much more work to do in the weeks and months that lie ahead. We will apply ourselves to that in the future, as, I trust, I ensured that we applied ourselves in the past.

I may not cover particular issues, but I will endeavour to come back to those Members in writing in the next number of days.

Mr Lyttle: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: No, I am going to —

Mr Lyttle: Very briefly.

Mr Storey: For someone who has not been in the Chamber —

Mr Lyttle: I have been in the Chamber.

Mr Storey: — for a lot of the debate, I am not going to give way. I want to make progress.

Fearghal McKinney raised a valid point about child poverty targets. Let me deal with that. The Welfare Reform and Work Bill includes the abolition of the duty to report child poverty targets. However, the agreement refers only to the welfare aspects of that Bill, which do not include child poverty provisions. I will give the Member even more information about that, but it sets the context, and I think that it answers his query about child poverty targets.

6.00 pm

He also raised the issue, as did Mr Dickson and other Members, that we are being asked to diminish aspects of devolution and that we are somehow on a road to diminishing the devolved Administration. Let me make it very clear that social security remains a devolved matter and will remain within the competence of the Assembly. The arrangement does not diminish or dilute the legislative competence of the Assembly, nor does the creation of the panel to be chaired by Professor Evason. The period during which Her Majesty's Government will have a parallel power is limited — I think that this answers Mr McNarry's point — to the time it takes to ensure that welfare reform can be achieved in a way that reflects the needs of Northern Ireland, and also ends the imposition of financial penalties. Members, it is time that we realise that we could not go on in the way that we were. There had to be an arrangement and an agreement that addressed those issues.

Mr Beggs referred to the amendments and provisions agreed in previous consideration of the Bill. I reiterate what I said in my opening comments. I reassure Members that the Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 2015 will reflect the amendments and provisions that were agreed by the Assembly at Consideration Stage and Further Consideration Stage of the Welfare Reform Bill. I also reiterate this: what are we about? We are about endeavouring to create a fair, affordable and deliverable welfare system.

Mr Beggs also asked about the allocation of the £60 million for tax credits in each of the four years. The Member will be aware that my Department published information some time ago in relation to the impact of the Chancellor's Budget announcement on tax credit customers in Northern Ireland. That information is available for Members on the Department's website. The information showed the impact that reducing tax credits would have. We have to have a system that, as I have said, is affordable. We have ensured that we establish the independent panel to bring forward recommendations on how best we can spend the allocated £60 million. Many of us have been spoken to by various organisations that have raised serious concerns about tax credits. Again, this information is available to Members. When you look at the breakdown across our constituencies, you see that very few, in fact none, are not impacted. This tries to go some way towards addressing that.

Mr Dickson raised concerns about the Assembly's scrutiny of the regulations. The regulations in relation to the draft Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order will go through the Westminster process, except for any regulations that are necessary to implement the Evason group's recommendations for mitigation. Those regulations will be draft affirmative and, therefore, must be subject to Assembly debate and approval before they can be made. There is no formal role for the Assembly or its Committees in scrutinising the regulations that flow from or follow the Westminster process. The Member will realise that is the case. However, regulations under the remit of the mitigation schemes will be brought to the Assembly.

Mr Dickson: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Yes.

Mr Dickson: I thank the Minister for the information. In a sense, I am not commenting on what he has said to us about a lack of scrutiny by the Committee in regard to the regulations as they pass through Westminster; it is rather more to comment, with total and utter amazement, that the Chair of the Social Development Committee, Sinn Féin Member Mr Alex Maskey, has agreed to a process that allows that to happen, given the intense scrutiny that he and his party colleagues have, in the past, attached to welfare benefits.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question, although I think that it is better answered by the Chair of the Committee as opposed to me. You have posed the question, and I am sure that his colleagues will convey that question to him.

I have a few comments in relation to Mr Attwood. As I said at the beginning, I appreciate the work that he has done. I also endorse his comments regarding Professor Eileen Evason and the sterling work that she has done down through the years. I appreciate the fact that she has agreed to undertake this task. It will be challenging; no one is in any doubt about the difficulties. The professor brings a wealth of experience and understanding of the issues from a legislative point of view, and also from a very practical point of view about how to bring about an agreed position with regard to the amount of money that has been set aside.

Again, I thank him for his insight into many of the issues that he raised. They are practical and deal with the day-to-day modalities of how, when you have a piece of legislation, it comes into existence. One of those issues was about child poverty and the legislative consent motion before the Assembly. Let me give him some assurance on that issue. The legislative consent motion before the Assembly today has nothing to do with child poverty. The Member is correct in that there are provisions within the Welfare Reform and Work Bill that relate to the proposals on child poverty that is currently measured and reported on, as well as proposals going forward. However, the agreement or the consent that is being sought in principle — it deals with the issue that he raised with regard to "in principle" — relates to the social security aspects of the Welfare Reform and Work Bill only. That is the only sensible approach, as the measures in the Bill being considered by Westminster build on the reform measures introduced gradually across the UK since 2012.

Members, let us remind ourselves that this process of welfare reform commenced in 2012, and there have been many challenges and difficulties. Therefore, it is disappointing that, having started that journey in 2012, some Members are still seeking to hold principled positions of opposition to this and still cannot see the merit and the value in trying to find a solution to the problem.

Mr Agnew also —

Mr Attwood: I appreciate the Minister's giving way, and I appreciate his comments.

You have created certainty on the issue of child poverty in the Welfare Reform and Work Bill. Will you now create certainty on clauses 7, 8, 9, 12, 13, 14 and 15 of that Bill? Those clauses touch on the benefit cap; the review of the benefit cap; the freeze of certain social security benefits; changes to the child element of universal credit; the employment and support allowance work-related activity component; the universal credit limited capacity for work element; and the universal credit work-related requirements. Is it the case that all seven of those matters in the current draft Bill are the ones that have been agreed in principle? If not, which ones have been agreed in principle?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member. Again, the Member demonstrates that he takes a keen interest in the issue and has a working knowledge of the matters that he raises. That is why I made the comment at the beginning that there are issues that I want to consider, and I will respond to the Member on those particular issues. The one relating to child poverty is clear on where it sits with regard to the issue, and I assure the Member that I will write to him on the issues that he raised.

I better be very careful about how I say this, and I do not say it tongue in cheek, but I want to put to bed the issue of the bedroom tax. How many times do we have to say that the Executive have agreed that it will not be implemented in Northern Ireland? That is the reason why we have set aside money for it.

As Members are keen to go through all these documents and refer to particular paragraphs and comments, I refer them to 1.4 of section C of the Fresh Start Agreement, which states that, within welfare funding, it has been agreed that the so-called bedroom tax will not apply.

Secondly, the Executive, as Mr Agnew referred to, have set out the way in which the matter will be dealt with. We are setting aside money in the welfare funding pot to pay the Treasury the cost of not applying the bedroom tax. We have made it very clear that it will not be implemented, and that is why we agreed what we did.

There is an issue to which I, as Minister for housing, have to give consideration. That brings us to a debate that is not for today, but it is one that we must have very soon, and it is on the structures and shape of housing provision in Northern Ireland. There are huge issues, and Members from all parties in the House regularly come to me about particular issues in their constituency. We have the social housing reform programme, and there are things that need to be moved on a lot more speedily to address our serious housing issues, but we have said that this element — the bedroom tax — will not be implemented.

Mr Agnew raised the issue of sanctions. I assure him that the Department has not, and will not, set targets for sanctions and benefits. We do not do it now and have no intention of doing it in the future.

I conclude by simply saying to the House that we have a choice tonight: approve what is set before the Assembly as a means of dealing with the impasse and the political realities; or allow the situation to continue to fester and, ultimately, have an agreement that would collapse and lead to the institutions coming to an end. What we have heard from the public in recent days is that, while they may have reservations about many individuals in the House and about the way in which we behave in the House, they still want us to make progress. They want us to do our job and our duty: to deliver for the people of Northern Ireland, with all the difficulties that that brings. Therefore, I ask the Assembly to approve the motion before it.

Some Members: Aye.

Some Members: No.

Mr Speaker: The Ayes have it.

Some Members: No.

Mr Speaker: I require a simple majority.

Some Members: No.

Some Members: Aye.

Mr Speaker: I require a simple majority, and it is quite evident and clear to me that the Ayes have it.

Some Members: No.

Mr Attwood: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Subject to your authority, if even one Member persists in saying no, my understanding is that, in those circumstances, there is an obligation to have a recorded vote.

6.15 pm

Mr Speaker: I dispute that that is the case should one Member say no. I recognise that a number of people said no, and I am prepared to concede that that can be recorded. In case we set a new standard, one no would not be sufficient to record that opposition under any circumstances. However, because there were a number of them, we will divide. We will clear the Lobbies and collect the votes.

Ayes 70; Noes 22.

AYES

Mr Anderson, Mr Bell, Mr Boylan, Ms Boyle, Ms P Bradley, Mr Buchanan, Mrs Cameron, Mr Campbell, Mr Clarke, Mr Craig, Mr Dickson, Mr Douglas, Mr Dunne, Mr Easton, Dr Farry, Ms Fearon, Mr Flanagan, Mr Ford, Mrs Foster, Mr Frew, Mr Girvan, Mr Givan, Mrs Hale, Mr Hamilton, Mr Hazzard, Mr Hilditch, Mr Humphrey, Mr G Kelly, Ms Lo, Mr Lunn, Mr Lynch, Mr Lyons, Mr Lyttle, Mr McAleer, Mr F McCann, Ms J McCann, Mr McCarthy, Mr McCartney, Mr McCausland, Ms McCorley, Mr B McCrea, Mr I McCrea, Mr McElduff, Ms McGahan, Mr M McGuinness, Mr D McIlveen, Miss M McIlveen, Mr McKay, Ms Maeve McLaughlin, Mr McMullan, Mr McQuillan,

Mr Maskey, Mr Middleton, Mr Milne, Lord Morrow, Mr Moutray, Mr Murphy, Ms Ní Chuilín, Mr Ó hOisín, Mr Ó Muilleoir, Mr O'Dowd, Mrs O'Neill, Mrs Pengelly, Mr P Robinson, Mr Ross, Ms Ruane, Mr Sheehan, Mr Storey, Mr Weir, Mr Wells.

Tellers for the Ayes: Mr McQuillan and Ms Ruane.

NOES

Mr Agnew, Mr Allen, Mr Allister, Mr Attwood, Mr Beggs, Mr D Bradley, Mr Cochrane-Watson, Mr Cree, Mrs Dobson, Mr Eastwood, Mr Gardiner, Ms Hanna, Mr Kennedy, Mr McCallister, Mrs McKeivitt, Mr McKinney, Mr A Maginness, Mr Nesbitt, Mrs Overend, Mr Rogers, Ms Sugden, Mr Swann.

Tellers for the Noes: Mr McCallister and Mrs McKeivitt.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly consents to the Northern Ireland (Welfare Reform) Bill 2015 being taken forward by the Westminster Parliament; approves the welfare clauses of the Welfare Reform and Work Bill as initially introduced at Westminster; the draft Welfare Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 2015; and the Executive's proposals to enhance payments flowing from the agreement announced on 17 November 2015.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Monday 23 November 2015

The Assembly met at 12.00 noon (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr Ross: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Last Monday, during the Second Stage of the Human Transplantation Bill, the Member for Upper Bann Mrs Dobson claimed that Ulster Rugby:

"has been assisting and helping to promote the move to a soft opt-out system." — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 109, p249, col 1].

I questioned the accuracy of that statement and asked Mrs Dobson to reflect on it, but she robustly refused to do so. It is my understanding that the chief executive of Ulster Rugby has now written to you, Mr Speaker, to advise that Ulster Rugby does not support her campaign to move to a soft opt-out system and to ask that the record be corrected accordingly. Mr Speaker, how can that best be achieved?

Mr Speaker: The Member has put the matter on the record, and I am entirely satisfied that it has been dealt with appropriately by the Minister. I have indeed received the letter and placed it in the Library. I understand that Mrs Dobson has written or intends to write to every Member to set the record straight. I am therefore satisfied that no further action is required by me.

Ministerial Statement

Culture and Arts Strategy Consultation

Mr Speaker: The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure wishes to make a statement.

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Le do chead, ba mhaith liom ráiteas a dhéanamh os comhair an Tionóil faoi lainseáil comhairliúcháin ar dhul chun cinn na straitéise ealaíon agus cultúir.

With your permission, Mr Speaker, I will make a statement to the Assembly announcing the launch of a consultation to develop a culture and arts strategy. I have chosen to make the statement to launch the consultation because I believe passionately in our arts and culture. I believe that arts and culture deserve to be enjoyed, supported and funded and to be accessible, equally, by all. That is an important and fundamental right, and I believe that its importance warrants a public statement. I hope that the consultation will lead to a new and forward-looking strategy for arts and culture in the North of Ireland from 2016 to 2026.

In January of this year, I established the Ministerial Arts Advisory Forum (MAAF), under the chairmanship of Mr Bob Collins. The forum included representatives from the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure; the Grand Opera House; the MAC, Lyric and Playhouse theatres; Beat Carnival; Community Arts Partnership; Belfast Film Festival, Féile an Phobail; the Arts and Disability Forum; Young at Art; the Arts Council; New Lodge Arts; Audiences NI; the Crescent Arts Centre; and ArtsEkta.

Following a number of meetings, the forum developed a set of proposed aims and themes for a culture and arts strategy. This consultation document develops the input from the ministerial arts advisory forum. I welcome its involvement and contribution to this important process thus far. I want to put on record my appreciation to the members of the ministerial arts advisory forum.

Arts enrich the lives of individuals, communities and wider society. Culture is all around us and belongs to everyone, and arts are an intrinsic part of our culture. In my time as Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, I have made it a priority that the work across my Department is embedded in the principles of promoting equality and tackling poverty and social exclusion. In my view, arts and culture provide an excellent platform to promote those principles and, more importantly, to see how they can translate into making real difference on the ground in hard-to-reach areas and areas of isolation.

Arts and culture can and should be open and accessible to everyone. They should not be viewed as rightful entertainment for some and beyond the reach of others, whether financially or simply by perception or understanding of what arts and culture means. They should be available to all. I want people of all ages, backgrounds and abilities to have the opportunity to participate in and enjoy the arts and cultural experiences of their choice. I acknowledge that there is a balance to be struck between access and quality and a need to ensure that, by widening access and participation in arts and culture, quality is protected. The principle of equality should be fundamental and underscore all those ideals. Very importantly, making arts and culture available to everyone should not be interpreted as a path to diluting the arts. Arts and culture matter to people. Everyone does not make the same cultural or artistic choices.

Access and participation in arts and culture can transcend the internationally renowned performances in our theatres to the weekly rehearsal for a play to be performed at a local community centre. Who knows where or what background our next international star will come from?

In sports, men and women may not make the Olympic teams, but that does not diminish their enjoyment or commitment to their chosen sport. Many thousands who do not participate in sport still achieve great enjoyment and pleasure from participating in events as a spectator. Not all children who play football on a Saturday morning may reach international level, but there is still great enjoyment to be had. Our arts and culture should be accepted and valued in the same manner across all sections of the community.

Carnivals, pantomime, traditional and popular music and pipe band competitions all engage highly successfully with a range of people. The impact of arts on children, people who are ill and those with dementia demonstrate the very personal power of the arts. Those and many more examples resonate with people and within the community.

I am pleased today to reiterate my support for and appreciation of the value of the arts. Today's launch of a consultation on a 10-year strategy, which I believe should be similar to the highly successful Sport Matters strategy, is a sign of my firm commitment to arts and culture. I believe that it is essential that there is a clear, overarching strategy for arts and culture that transcends and cuts across all of government; a strategy that recognises the true benefits of access and participation in arts and culture and makes equality central to its aims; a strategy that is underpinned by appropriate government recognition and support.

I believe that arts and culture should be given a higher priority when it comes to Budget allocations. In my time as a Minister, I successfully argued for in-year funding to support arts and culture and for interventions for marginalised and disadvantaged groups. Arts and culture are an obvious way to build on the principles embedded in Delivering Social Change and Together: Building a United Community. Through strong leadership, innovation and government support, they can help to move us from a community emerging from conflict to a shared community and a more cohesive and peaceful society. Culture and arts are also vital contributors to the economy and to social and economic regeneration. I want to make sure that our arts and culture sector is fit for purpose, promotes and supports equality and social inclusion and meets the needs of a modern, digital society.

Our rural areas are also equally important. Equality of access and participation also means regional and geographical access.

It is not enough that quality arts are centred in towns and cities; it is vital that the outreach extend across the whole of the North.

We already know that arts and culture provide a platform as an economic driver, create job opportunities, support tourism and promote the North of Ireland on the international stage, as well as bring communities together. We have many examples such as Culture Night, Belfast Mela, Fleadh Cheoil na hÉireann, the Walled City Tattoo, City of Culture, the Beckett Festival, and Pride. I could recite many more.

I want arts and culture to be a serious and important career choice for our children, one that is fully recognised through our education, training and employment systems. The creativity and specialism in the creative industries has long supported the wider economy. Those industries are well recognised as key drivers of sustainable economic regeneration and job creation. Ultimately, I want to deliver a strategy that underpins all those benefits and supports us all in moving towards a civically engaged, internationalised, vibrant, progressive and cohesive society. I want to deliver a strategy that provides equality for all. I also want to deliver a strategy that is sustainable and which develops our heritage and our cultural and artistic resources and ensures a lasting legacy for future generations. Therefore, I encourage a wide range of responses to the consultation. Make your views known, particularly if you have something to add to the proposals.

There has been much focus in recent weeks on the arts and culture sector, particularly in light of decisions that I had to take to reprioritise my Department's budget. In that regard, it is worth stating to the House that my Department's opening budget position for 2015-16 was about £10 million — approximately 10% — less than in 2014-15. From that starting position, funding to the arts was undoubtedly going to be impacted. I am pleased to say that, as a result of funding reallocations as part of the November monitoring round, I successfully secured reinstatement of funding for the arts and sports. I was delighted to announce last Thursday that £620,000 has been reinstated to the Arts Council's budget. That funding can now be passed on to the 32 arts organisations that had been impacted by the earlier cuts.

I have listened to many representations made to me over recent days and weeks. I witnessed the passionate protests made in the grounds of the Assembly recently and pledged to do my utmost to secure additional funding so that some or all of the money taken from arts organisations could be reinstated. I made a strong case for its reinstatement, and I am pleased that Minister Foster took account of that in the reallocation of moneys. I thank her again for listening to my arguments.

As I have consistently said, cuts to the block grant by the Tory Government are causing huge difficulties for the Executive and are having a detrimental impact on front-line services. The culture, arts and leisure sector is a highly valuable sector and one that brings a multitude of benefits to those who actively engage and participate in it. I believe that it deserves to be financed publicly to the requisite standard. That is not to say that culture and arts can be given an endless pot of money. However, I firmly believe that there has, for a long time, been a misunderstanding of the valuable services delivered by our arts and culture organisations, particularly how they can promote equality and tackle poverty and social exclusion. I want arts and culture to be recognised as an equal partner when Ministers discuss the allocation of budgets; I want arts and culture to be recognised for the tremendous benefits that they bring to our community, our economy and, more important, to the lives of the people who participate in them.

I look forward to the consultation in the time ahead and to receiving responses. This is a public conversation on how we, as a society, want to support arts and culture. I know that arts and culture are dear to many people here; the recent attention focused on funding to the arts proves that. I ask that all stakeholders, including politicians in the Chamber, are energised to help me to make a resounding case for appropriate and sustainable funding for arts and culture as we move forward. Access to arts and culture is a right for everyone; it is not merely a privilege. We can all agree on that. Arts and culture deliver a range of benefits to people who participate and engage in them, not least in terms of mental health and well-being. Let us make sure that their many benefits are maximised for everyone.

When finalised, the strategy will be the first overarching, cross-departmental strategy for arts and culture in the North of Ireland.

Tá mé tiomanta don cheart bhunúsach gur chóir go mbeadh deiseanna ag gach duine sult a bhaint as na healaíona agus as an chultúr. I am committed to the fundamental right that the opportunities to enjoy the arts and culture should be available to everyone. I hope that that aspiration can be fulfilled by delivering a successful, engaging consultation to inform future direction. Go raibh míle maith agaibh.

Mr McCausland (The Chairperson of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure): I suppose I welcome the publication of the document insofar as we have been waiting for it for some time.

Two themes strike me on reading it, and it is only an initial reading. There is a strong focus, as it says on the cover, on:

The other aspect of the development of the arts, which arts organisations feel strongly about, is the inherent value of the arts themselves in addition to the benefits that they bring generally to society.

It strikes me in looking at the document and comparing it with the original project initiation document from September 2014 that we are well behind in timescale. The document of 16 September 2014 said that the document would be going out to consultation in April 2015, and we are now at the end of November. It said that it would go out for 20 weeks' consultation, and I see that that has now been reduced to 12 weeks, because 20 weeks would have taken us through to the election. Even with the reduction in the consultation time to 12 weeks, if that ends in the middle of February, it will take more than four weeks for a consultation process to be properly considered by the Minister. That would take us through to around St Patrick's Day, which would mean that you are almost getting to that point with purdah and so on where any action or decisions around this are almost impossible, and that is disappointing.

In that context, when did the Minister or her Department receive the document from the two groups involved in the process — the ministerial advisory group and the cross-departmental group — and why has it been so late in coming forward? How does she propose to deal with the fact that a proper examination of the consultation responses will take us through almost to the election?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member, the Chair of the Committee, for his statements and, eventually, his questions.

I received the final draft consultation in early summer. Given the work that we needed to do on the consultation, and then given the period that we were in with the Stormont House Agreement talks, in my opinion today was the best opportunity for me to publish the consultation. A 20-week consultation would not have allowed me to provide any comments or even to try to prepare a way forward, particularly for the new Department for Communities. That is why it was reduced to 12 weeks.

I am pleased that the Member agrees that there is a need for an arts and cultural strategy. I know that through his work and other work, particularly around Ulster-Scots culture and heritage, he will use his influence to talk to that community and communities to ensure feedback to the consultation.

Many artists in the culture and arts sector are probably some of the worst paid. We need to ensure that they are not impoverished as a result of a new strategy. As well as that, we need to ensure that opportunities, particularly in cities and towns, but more importantly in rural communities, are availed of.

It is an opportunity for all the elements included in the statement — it was a lengthy statement — to try to ensure that we have full and robust feedback into the consultation. I believe that I have enough time to ensure that whoever comes behind me finds the new Department in a better place than I found the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure when I came in.

Mr Speaker: Before I call the next Member to speak, I remind Members that I will be unable to extend the same leeway as I extended to the Committee Chair. Please come directly to your question.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Ba mhaithe liom buíochas a ghabháil leis an Aire as an ráiteas sin. Given the importance of traditional music and the fact that Fleadh Cheoil na hÉireann brought some £43 million into Derry and the north-west area, is there an opportunity in the arts and culture strategy for a greater reflection of traditional music?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The short answer is yes. The Arts Council recently had a review of the traditional music sector. I know that the Member is aware of it through his work with Comhaltas. As recently as last week, I was talking to a group of young people who wanted to know what support they could avail themselves of and what opportunities there were for support in the future for kids who are trying to use music — pop or rap — as a way of working through crime prevention initiatives on interfaces. I advised them about the consultation and encouraged them, as I encourage the Member and everyone else, to use the opportunity to make their views known. We need to ensure that this is as inclusive as possible of age, gender, political background and where people live.

Mrs McKeivitt: I thank the Minister for her statement. A few weeks back, at the start of November, the Culture, Arts and Leisure Committee met and engaged with a number of arts groups that were established as part of the Ministerial Arts Advisory Forum, some of which you mentioned. After discussion on how we could go forward with the strategy, they indicated to me that the forum had not actually met. That was only a few weeks ago. Will the Minister outline to the House how many times the forum has met, when it first met and what communication those groups offered as part of the strategy?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I established the ministerial arts advisory forum in January this year. I do not have the details at hand, but I will get a breakdown of when and how often the forum met for the Member As recently as last month, I was speaking to the Arts Council, which raised the expectation of the strategy coming forward. I told the council that it would happen before the end of November. I was not asked for a meeting of the forum before that, but I am certainly happy to give the Member those details and to bring them forward. Other members who did not appear before the Committee have not indicated to me that there is a problem with meetings or their frequency. I will certainly provide the Member with those details.

Mr Cree: I also thank the Minister for her statement; it is helpful. She mentioned the “balance ... between access and quality” a couple of times. Will she explain exactly what she means by balancing the two and how, in that sense, quality is protected?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have heard an argument voiced by some, albeit a minority, who feel that a particular focus on access and the participation of hard-to-reach communities would somehow dilute or dumb down the quality of the arts because of the funding or support available. A small group of people hold that view, but it is not the case at all. I assure people that we need to concentrate on where the specialities lie. Some people, for example, work particularly well with people in a hospital or healthcare setting. In the same vein and manner that the Sport Matters strategy involves other Departments and bodies, the arts and culture strategy will, hopefully, do the same. That should mean that other Departments and bodies have a role to play in distribution to the arts and culture sector.

We need to ensure that quality is not dumbed down. I do not accept that argument, and I never have. If anything, we will ensure greater outcome and output for the people involved and, hopefully, better sustainability for all in the future.

Ms Lo: I thank the Minister for her statement and welcome the consultation. As the Minister is aware, Northern Ireland has the lowest rate of public funding for the arts in the whole of the UK and the Republic of Ireland. What safeguards will there be in the new strategy to ensure that the arts and culture sector is adequately resourced, not just to survive but to grow and thrive?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Funding in other jurisdictions — particularly in the South, but also in Wales, Scotland and England — is proportionate. That figure does not take into consideration the money given to the arts and culture sector by other bodies and Departments, and I think that it needs to do so.

Notwithstanding that, do we need to ensure that there is more money? Absolutely. Do we need to ensure that there is better sustainability? We absolutely do. I believe that other Departments have a role to play in the delivery and sustainability of arts and culture across this island, particularly in the North. There is so much that we can do collectively to get a better outcome for us as a community. This consultation provides us with an opportunity to do just that.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for her statement. Can the Minister assure us that the strategy includes an equality impact assessment to ensure equality of funding for festivals and events, particularly in unionist areas?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I will ensure that an equality impact assessment is done on all aspects of feedback from the consultation. Ensuring that there is particular funding for unionist areas is the complete opposite of an equality impact assessment. However, if the outcome is found —

Mr Humphrey: You would know all about equality.

Ms Ní Chuilín: However, if the outcome shows that there is a disparity in funding, it will be flagged up in the equality impact assessment. The good thing about equality impact assessments is that they are based on evidence and fact, not on rants from Back-Benchers.

Mr Speaker: When Members ask a question, they should have the manners to listen to the answer. If I hear another remark such as the one that you have just made, Mr Humphrey, I will respond immediately. It was completely out of order, and I think that you are well enough aware that that is the case.

Mr McMullan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I welcome the Minister’s statement to announce this consultation. Minister, will you ensure that the strategy is well embedded in the 11 new super-councils?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The short answer is yes. The 11 new super-councils played a very proactive role, as did the old councils, in the roll-out of the Sport Matters strategy through the implementation group. I anticipate that the same energy and focus will be brought to our 10-year arts and culture strategy. I know personally that the role Belfast City Council plays locally in the arts and culture sector is valued. I believe that each council has a lot to offer to the sector.

Mr G Robinson: Why were no organisations based in rural areas included on the ministerial advisory forum?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Some of the organisations work right across the North. I know of some of the work that the groups have done, and done very well. They do it to the best of their ability. I want to ensure that there is a focus on rural communities, as the feedback over the last few years has been that there is not enough happening there. They would like to see more, and I think that that is a valid concern to raise. That is no criticism of the groups involved in this forum. The work that they have done, particularly in rural communities, has been valued. It is important that rural communities are as visible as any others in the feedback.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an ráiteas ar maidin. I thank the Minister for her statement. An dtig leis an Aire cur síos ar an tacaíocht atá tugtha aici do na healaíona ó tháinig sí i gceannas ar a Roinn? Will she outline the support that she has given to the arts since coming into the Department?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Support for the Arts Council is in the region of £75 million. That has also helped towards programmes in places such as the MAC, the Lyric and others. That has been distributed to many arts groups, including some of the bigger of the 32 annually funded groups, for years.

When looking at events, such as the City of Culture, you can see the benefits that we have delivered, particularly in the north-west. That is an example of how funding separate from that provided by the Arts Council can be brought in. That success shows that there is a need for additionality and for a joined-up approach. The arts and culture sector would value additional support over and above what it already receives.

Ms Hanna: I thank the Minister. I am sure that arts groups will welcome the consultation and will respond. The Minister might be aware of a new all-party group here to support the arts and creativity. I hope that she will accept our invitation to come along during the period of consultation so that arts groups who are represented can give feedback directly. Will the Minister explain how she will ensure that the arts will have a clear role, position and space in the next Programme for Government in the absence of a dedicated Department?

Ms Ní Chuilín: First, I accept the invitation to come to the all-party group. I am using this opportunity to get out and about as much as possible and to talk to people right up until the 18 December or 19 December. I have, from today onwards, arranged to meet a lot of groups on their invitation, and I am happy to meet the all-party group on the arts.

I believe that all the functions of the Arts Council will transfer into the new Department of Communities. It will be the same arm's-length body (ALB), but with a differently named Department. That should ensure that not only are people familiar with the same contacts but there is a security in that arrangement. This is an additional layer that has, in my opinion, been needed for many years. It will ensure that arts and culture are valued not only in the new Department of Communities but right across the Executive. I believe that other Departments have a very strong role to play in the rolling out of this new strategy.

Again, I welcome your invitation and those of many others, and if I can, I will take them up.

Mr Humphrey: I welcome the consultation announced by the Minister this afternoon. The statement refers to the principle of equality and states that it should be fundamental. In the interests of equality, inclusivity and social inclusion, why does the arts advisory forum, which the Minister established, not include representatives from the Ulster-Scots community, the Orange community and the marching bands fraternity?

Ms Ní Chuilín: It is simply because we asked the arts sector for representatives who were representative. These people provide services to all members of the community and to all communities, not just the Orange Order or marching bands or anyone else, for that matter.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair)

It is good to see that the Member has an interest in this strategy. I encourage him, through his membership of those organisations, to ensure that not only do they feed into the consultation but those needs that might be fed in for the future are reflective rather than just those of a certain political party.

Mr Lyttle: I welcome the fact that the Minister has brought a public statement to the Assembly on this important issue. I agree wholeheartedly with her that we have world-class artists in Northern Ireland who are enriching the lives of individuals, our community and our economy, and I welcome her support for East Belfast Arts Festival in particular.

I agree with her statement that the strategy must be underpinned by appropriate government support, but my understanding is that funding is as little as 11p or 13p per head of the population in Northern Ireland. What is the target level of funding that she hopes to secure for our arts community's future?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am taking a needs-based approach rather than a funding-led approach at the beginning. I think that that is important. Some people believe that the arts are getting enough; I am not one of them, to be frank. Some people feel that there are other public services that need to be given greater attention and support.

I support that, insofar as our public purse is obviously going to be stretched, given the context that we are operating in, particularly around Tory austerity.

I believe that, once the feedback from the consultation comes through and the needs are identified, the whole exercise of costing those needs for the future will be done. It is regrettable that Members should start off by saying — I am not suggesting that you are, but I have already heard some of this — “Let's raise it to 15p per person”. In my opinion, that is the wrong way to go. That makes it easy for people who do not want to give support to walk away from giving support.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh míle maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaimse buíochas fosta leis an Aire. Bhí an ráiteas iontach cuimsitheach, agus caithfidh mé a rá go bhfuil mé ag teacht léi in achan rud atá ráite aici ann. Ceann de na deacrachtaí a bhíonn ag grúpaí ealaíne ná maoiniú gearrthréimhseach, agus ba mhaith liom a fhiafraí den Aire an gcuideoidh an comhairliúchán seo le heagraíochtaí ealaíne samhail maoinithe inmharthana a chur chun tosaigh? I must say that I find myself in agreement with the majority of the Minister's statement, but one of the difficulties that arts organisations often bring up is the short-term nature of the funding awarded to them. How will the consultation and, indeed, the strategy help ensure that arts groups have a sustainable form of funding rather than short-term funding?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Gabhaim buíochas agus aontaím leis sin go hiomlán. Thank you very much for that. I completely agree with you. One of the things that has been consistently and constantly raised is the short-term approach to funding and security, particularly when groups are trying to plan for big events one or two, or more, years ahead. The opportunity for that to be fed into a consultation is huge, because it will inform the needs across the sector for at least 10 years. I appreciate that needs and themes change, but, if anything, the consultation has the opportunity and possibility of providing better sustainability for the sector, not just from the Arts Council but across Departments and bodies. I believe that the short-term approach and the lack of sustainable funding are things that the arts sector collectively wants to change.

Mr Allister: The statement contains many fine words, such as:

Does the Minister nonetheless perceive any credibility problem, given her reputation as a serial protester in her constituency at manifestations of Orange culture, or are we going to see a fresh start, with her desisting from such activity?

Ms Ní Chuilín: As the Member will know from his legal training, a person’s right to protest is a fundamental right. I support my right to protest, and anyone else’s right to protest, all day long. Unlike the Member and colleagues of his, I support residents in their call for dialogue to change the way forward for contentious parades. I will do that with them and for them all the time, because I think that it is the way to go.

I do not believe that there is anything cultural about playing the ‘Famine Song’ outside St Patrick’s Church. I do not believe that there is anything cultural about people marching around in the actions of a band playing the ‘Famine Song’ outside St Patrick’s Church. I do not think that there is anything cultural about spitting in the face of protesters outside St Patrick’s Church. In fact, people from Cardiff, London and Edinburgh are scratching their head at what part of Britishness that represents, because it does not represent them.

If the Member wishes to ask me a question about the strategy, I will be as helpful to him as I have been on previous occasions on which he has asked questions, but, on this, I really wish that he would wise up.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Minister for her very detailed announcement to the Assembly. It is very important that we take note of what you said, particularly that making arts and culture available to everyone should not be interpreted as a path to diluting the arts. Arts and culture matter to people. In implementing a strategy of this sort, how will the Minister ensure that all sectors of the arts receive a fair and balanced distribution of funding? It is a matter of great concern to some that elements of the arts are favoured over others.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. I am sure that he is speaking to the same arts and cultural groups in our constituency that I have spoken to. They have felt that a lot of the bigger funding awards have gone to the same groups for decades. They are happy that that happens but they are also concerned that smaller groups that do very important work are sometimes overshadowed and overlooked. I want to ensure that, in the feedback to this consultation, there is a plan for the way forward to try to accommodate all the different aspects of culture and arts. That includes some of the bigger theatre companies right through to, for example, groups that do therapeutic work with children at risk.

I believe that there is a place for us all and I welcome the opportunity, when the Member and other Members talk to constituents or groups, for them to use this consultation as a way of having the views of such groups heard. The worst thing would be that people miss this opportunity and do not see some aspect of their work in any future strategy.

Mr B McCrea: I welcome the statement and congratulate the Minister for the way in which she delivered it. I am particularly pleased by her recognition of the arts voice that has come to the fore. I realise that the Minister is busy but did she, by any chance, catch, on BBC 2 last night, ‘Ireland with Simon Reeve’, which covered, in Derry/Londonderry, the Playhouse and various other issues such as art in the Bogside. Does she think that there is any connection there, in explaining to Members present, how important the arts are to Delivering Social Change, Together: Building a United Community, and how we might encourage everybody to help the arts?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his comments and question. I did not see the programme on BBC 2 but will certainly look for it on the iPlayer. I know the work that is done in that and similar communities, particularly where it is still difficult to try to get peace and reconciliation or even dialogue when communities are under pressure. One of the ways in which they have done it very successfully has been through the arts.

A few Sundays ago, I saw a play at Queen’s Film Theatre about the First World War and Easter Rising, where children from both communities came together. It was an amazing piece of theatre, but the message, for me, was even more amazing.

I also agree, if I have not picked you up wrongly, that the arts sector’s voice seems to be heard above the heads of some people in the Chamber. Our communities out there are taking more risks than people in here. It is easy to sit on the Back Benches and mouth off, but it is much harder to go out and do the job; the work done by people who are actually embedding and investing in their communities, sometimes with very little or no support.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That concludes questions on the statement.

Executive Committee Business

Health and Personal Services (Amendment) Bill: First Stage

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I beg to introduce the Health and Personal Social Services (Amendment) Bill [NIA 68/11-16], which is a Bill to make provision about the Northern Ireland Social Care Council and other provision about social care workers.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

12.45 pm

Pension Schemes Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call the Minister for Social Development, Mr Mervyn Storey, to move the Further Consideration Stage of the Pensions Schemes Bill.

Moved. — [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: As no amendments have been tabled, there is no opportunity to discuss the Pension Schemes Bill today. Members will, of course, be able to have a full debate at Final Stage. That concludes the Further Consideration Stage of the Pension Schemes Bill. The Bill stands referred to the Speaker.

Committee Business

Credit Unions and Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies Bill: Extension of Committee Stage

Mr McGlone (The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment): I beg to move

That, in accordance with Standing Order 33(4), the period referred to in Standing Order 33(2) be extended to 29 January 2016, in relation to the Committee Stage of the Credit Unions and Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies Bill [NIA 56/11-16].

A Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle, the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment agreed the motion to extend the Committee Stage of the Bill until 29 January at a time when the Committee was waiting for information from the Department that was needed to complete the Committee Stage of the Bill. I am pleased to inform the House that that information was received and considered by the Committee much earlier than expected. That has enabled the Committee to proceed much faster than originally envisaged. The Committee will consider the report on the Bill at tomorrow's meeting, and that should complete the Committee Stage of the Bill without the need to avail of the extension. The extension is being sought only to cover any unforeseen eventuality at tomorrow's Committee meeting in relation to the report.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That, in accordance with Standing Order 33(4), the period referred to in Standing Order 33(2) be extended to 29 January 2016, in relation to the Committee Stage of the Credit Unions and Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies Bill [NIA 56/11-16].

European Social Fund

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer will have 10 minutes to propose the motion and 10 minutes to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who wish to speak will have five minutes.

Mr Swann (The Chairperson of the Committee for Employment and Learning): I beg to move

That this Assembly acknowledges the important role of the European social fund in delivering essential support and services to the most vulnerable people in Northern Ireland; recognises the challenges faced by the community and voluntary sectors in the administration of the current and previous programmes; and calls on the Department for Employment and Learning to learn from its mistakes and to ensure that it works in partnership with the community and voluntary sector to deliver, efficiently and effectively, the European social fund programme.

I am sure that every Member is well aware of the excellent work carried out by the community and voluntary sector in their constituencies with the assistance of the European social fund (ESF). The fund is provided by the European Commission with the overall strategic aim of helping to reduce economic inactivity and increase workforce skills. Its aim to contribute to social protection and social inclusion by supporting actions to extend employment opportunities to people at a disadvantage in the labour market and to those who are furthest away from the labour market is a worthy aspiration and is greatly needed in Northern Ireland at this minute.

I am sure that all Members have been contacted by the voluntary and community sector regarding the issues facing them, both in the closure of the 2007-2013 programme and in the opening of the 2014-2020 programme. That has often led to some confusion with the public and, sometimes, with the Department, which has led to possible misdirection, whether intentional or unintentional, in answering questions. The two programmes have been running conjunctively — one closed and the other open at the same time — so problems were often switched and confused.

As Chair of the Committee, 10 minutes is quite a restrictive time to move the motion, but I am reassured by the number of Committee members and other Members in the Chamber who have spent a lot of time on the issue and who will get to grips with further and more specific details in the programme. There have been many issues with the ending of the 2007-2013 programme and the commencement of the 2014-2020 programme. At best, those have been described as problematic and, at worst, catastrophic for the work of the groups in the voluntary and community sector and the individuals who are affected. The Committee has engaged with the sector extensively on the issue, and it has worked with the Department and held it to account on numerous occasions.

As far back as 13 June 2012, the Committee received a briefing on the end of the 2007-2013 programme and how it was to be managed. The Committee met organisations from the voluntary and community sector on 17 February 2015. At that meeting, nearly 70 people raised their concerns regarding the application process for the 2014-2020 programme and, in particular, the assessment of financial capability, management accounts and value for money.

The Committee was frustrated that nearly a third of all phase 1 applications were rejected because of departmental guidance that the Department eventually admitted was unclear. In addition, the change from a qualitative assessment to a quantitative assessment meant that some organisations were immediately culled for minor infringements or technicalities. Through that, the Committee believed that the inconsistency of the information that was being provided by the Department and a degree of miscommunication had led to such confusion amongst unsuccessful applicants. The Committee also heard that the requirement for 10% of project costs to be available in cash assets up front discriminated against smaller community groups. A number of organisations fell foul of that.

Such was the interest in the briefing of 18 February that the Public Gallery in the Committee room was full with members from the community and voluntary sector and many others could not be seated there. The TVs in the Great Hall and the coffee lounge had to be turned over to the Employment and Learning Committee proceedings so that everybody could watch what was going on.

At a meeting on 18 March, the Department acknowledged that it had rerun the application process to offer those who were immediately rejected due to unclear guidance a second opportunity to apply. It has been recognised by the voluntary and community sector that that was due to the work that was done by the Employment and Learning Committee and to the Minister listening to the recommendations and concerns that were coming forward.

At its meeting on 1 July 2015, the Minister again briefed the Committee regarding the 2014-2020 programme. The Minister admitted that the responsibility for the faults of the programme lay solely with his Department. He acknowledged that the vouching of the outgoing programme was too slow and that many organisations suffered because of the timescales involved in the process.

The Minister also confirmed that there are challenges with match-funding for the current ESF programme due to the pressures on the voluntary and community sector where other traditional sources of funding have dried up. That was raised on a number of occasions in the Chamber as well, which led to a promise of support for the voluntary and community sector from the Social Development Minister and a combined task force coming from the junior Ministers in OFMDFM. The Committee still awaits the outworkings of that.

The Committee was deeply concerned to hear of the Commission's suspension of funds due to the internal audit failings of the Department. That led to an internal departmental profiling of the European social fund programme, which resulted in funding for the programme coming from the Department and the ESF money being used for other Department projects and processes.

At its meeting on 16 September, the Minister informed the Committee that departmental funds were being used to close off the outgoing ESF programme. A cause of frustration to many voluntary organisations is that they are still being held to the European standards and requirements even though the Department's money is being used to fund the programme.

The Committee met with the Minister again on 23 September 2015 regarding the continued delays in vouching and the struggle that community and voluntary organisations are experiencing due to cash flow. The fact that the Committee has met with the Minister and his departmental officials 14 times in the past two years is a reflection of how importantly the Committee has viewed the issue and, given the impact on communities, rightly so.

In response, the Department seemed overwhelmed by the application process for the ESF and inconsistencies and confusion crept in. We were continually told that we were at a great advantage from the second programme starting so soon. However, some in the voluntary and community sector think that a little bit more time to get the application process right would have been of greater benefit.

The Committee has held the Department to account by forcing it to reopen phase 1 of the programme to allow organisations to resubmit evidence. There were 66 that were successful in doing that.

To the Minister's credit, he apologised to the Committee for the programme delays and the deficiencies in the Department's management procedures for allocation. Significantly, the Minister confirmed that, had it not been for the work of the Committee, more staff would not have been drafted in to deal with the problem, and any attempt to offer support to more organisations would not have been successful.

That is a very brief outline of the work that the Committee for Employment and Learning has undertaken on the European social fund.

I will now take a couple of minutes to speak as the Ulster Unionist member on the Committee and to highlight the concerns that are still out there, which, as I said, will be elaborated and expanded on by other Members.

The first concern facing our voluntary and community sector with the current programme is the slow process of payments and vouching. Two weeks ago, I met an organisation that had £400,000 outstanding for a programme that started in April. For many voluntary and community organisations, that sort of money and cash flow is simply unsustainable and unworkable. I was informed that, last week, some moneys were forthcoming. The Minister intervened a number of weeks ago and offered a 50% upfront payment for applications that had yet to be vouched. That sticking-plaster approach, which many in the community and voluntary sector are concerned about, needs to be rectified, and a proper vouching and verification system needs to get up and running as soon as possible. Many point out that the European regional development fund (ERDF) process, which is an element of the EU structural funds that is administered by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, has a target of 35 days from claim submitted to payment in bank. That should be the Department for Employment and Learning's process and standard for the ESF process.

The second main concern with the new project is tutor qualifications. There is a requirement that all tutors delivering voluntary and community sector courses must go through a course at Ulster University. The course can take up to 150 students at one time and is now fully booked for the next two years. The Department's approach to the qualification smacks of inconsistency, and neither college lecturers nor university professors are required to have that level of qualification. When a voluntary or community organisation employs a tutor who is also employed by a college, the tutor still has to have that qualification. If, however, a voluntary or community organisation employs a tutor via a college, he or she does not. I hope that the Minister will look at that inconsistency and iron it out. Those concerns were raised in the ESF stakeholder forum.

A third concern is the level of course that is now available. For many in the sector, the restriction on level 1 courses is becoming a problem. Applicants are simply taking a level 1 course and not moving to a level 2 or 3, because they have to go —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to bring his remarks to a close.

Mr Swann: — to a college to progress to that level.

I hope that the Minister will address the judicial reviews and update the House as to exactly where we are with them. Thank you very much for your time, and I am sure that other Members will go into detail on some of the issues.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr Swann, for the sake of the record, will you confirm that you moved the motion?

Mr Swann: I moved the motion.

Mr Anderson: As a member of the Employment and Learning Committee, I support the motion. The European social fund is a vital source of help to a wide range of community, voluntary and women's groups. In days of stringent cuts, those groups rely more and more on that sort of funding.

We debated this issue in the Chamber some six months ago on 18 May 2015. At that time, there was growing anger, dismay and a sense of injustice at the Department for Employment and Learning's abysmal handling of ESF applications. In short, it was a bureaucratic and administrative mess. Well-respected voluntary and community groups were left high and dry, and they wanted answers. We urged the Minister to admit that he and his officials had got it badly wrong, but the Minister was reluctant to do that; he seemed to be in denial as he attempted to justify the unjustifiable. The Minister then came to the Committee on 1 July and offered a limited apology for what he said was:

"one very discrete area of poor performance by the Department in relation to the payment of claims".

1.00 pm

I acknowledge that there is a need for good governance and a proper audit of all claims. All things must be done decently and in order. I also acknowledge that officials are working very hard to resolve outstanding issues. However, no matter what sort of spin is put on all of this or what reasons are given for the problems, the Department's handling of the claims has been a disgrace, and lessons must be learned.

Officials came to the Committee on 23 September and said that they wanted to move forward and not repeat the mistakes of recent months. That is indeed encouraging, but what confidence can we have that it will become a reality? What certainty is there that we will move forward without all the hassle endured last time? I welcome the assurances given at the Committee that staff resources have been looked at. This was also mentioned by the Minister in answer to an oral question from my colleague Mr Weir as recently as 9 November, when he said that further staff had been brought:

When I raised staffing with officials at the Committee in September, I was told that the resources required for the new programme had been identified and that the staff in post would be there permanently. I was also told at Committee that there would be an accredited training programme for staff so that they would have the necessary skills. Perhaps the Minister can clarify the position on staffing. Are staff being deployed permanently or just on a temporary basis?

One of the major concerns in the last tranche of applications was that nothing was paid if there was a problem with missing documentation, and little effort, it seems, was made to follow up on outstanding issues with the groups concerned. I am glad that a process of accelerated payments is now in place for the 2014-2020 period, and I understand that 50% of claims submitted will be paid up front. This, I believe, is a major step in the right direction. As the Minister said, this is a low-risk approach, and it will certainly make life easier for all concerned. We need to take some risks. An undue aversion to risk-taking is one of the weaknesses of our Civil Service at times.

Like many others, I have been very critical of the failures in administration, but, if we can correct the mistakes, we can move forward. I appreciate that officials worked hard to ensure that the programme was ready to run at the start of the 2015-16 financial year. This means that there has been no gap between the closure of the old programme and the start of the new one.

One other area of concern in the voluntary and community sector is that those who provide training under the ESF have to undertake a teaching qualification at Ulster University, or equivalent academic qualifications, or be registered to do so by 2016-17. This is all fine in theory, but it is difficult in practice. It places financial and time demands on tutors for both training and delivery, and they may not be able to meet those demands. Also, will the Ulster University have the capacity to cope with this demand? I question the necessity —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to bring his remarks to close.

Mr Anderson: — and feasibility of such high requirements being placed on the voluntary and community sector.

Ms McGahan: A Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle, thank you for the opportunity to speak in today's debate on the important role of the European social fund in delivering essential services to the most vulnerable while recognising the challenges faced by the community and voluntary sector in the administration of the past programme and the current programme. In supporting the motion, I call on the Department for Employment and Learning to learn from its mistakes and ensure that it works in partnership with the sector to deliver the programme efficiently and effectively for all those who rely on it.

Today, I will focus on the European social fund in relation to women's centres and the range of services that they offer. From the outset, I want to pay particular tribute to all those involved in the development and work of women's centres across the North. I want to take this opportunity to place on record my deep regard for the high standard of service delivery provided by First Steps Women's Centre in Dungannon. I have had the pleasure of regularly working closely with the centre.

First Steps Women's Centre is very dependent on the European social fund for the roll-out of its much-needed service provision. To date, under the 2007-2013 programme, First Steps Women's Centre in Dungannon has delivered impressive results for south Tyrone. That is due to the good work of everyone involved in the centre. The figures are a celebration of that good work. Some 290 below NVQ level 1 qualifications were achieved, 293 NVQ level 1 qualifications were achieved and 353 NVQ level 2 qualifications were achieved.

Given the dire worldwide economic downturn, which has not been helped by the British Government-driven austerity, the success of 179 participants from the south Tyrone area gaining employment is not insignificant. The provision of 276 childcare places on-site by the First Steps Women's Centre during the programme has certainly made it possible for many mothers to avail themselves of much-needed opportunities.

We have just come out of a period, during which, just a short while ago, strong representation had to be made to the Minister for Employment and Learning regarding decisions as to whether to allocate much-needed European social fund moneys to community and voluntary organisations and groups. Our women's centres have a strong record of delivering quality training programmes for women and, in turn, boosting confidence and self-esteem and encouraging their return to the labour market.

In many areas, rural and urban, the much good work that has been progressed to tackle social and economic disadvantage, as well as groundbreaking attempts to tackle the social isolation that disadvantaged and marginalised groups face, needs to be continued and further supported. However, a number of problems are currently being encountered with the roll-out of the programme. The cap on aspiration must be lifted for all ESF programmes. At the moment, the level of qualifications that can be offered to ESF participants by the voluntary and community training providers is capped at level 1, which is equivalent to GCSE grade D. That means that, for the most vulnerable and socially excluded participants in the ESF, the floor of qualifications has become the ceiling. Aside from being a harsh cap on the aspirations of ESF participants and the organisations that work with them, the cap is in direct contrast to the aims of ESF to improve employment and employability. Our Minister for Employment and Learning, Mr Farry, must give that matter his attention and have the cap lifted.

Many organisations are owed considerable amounts of money for work already carried out. NICVA's research paper has informed us that some organisations are owed almost £1 million and others are owed in the region of £300,000. We have a situation in which charities are borrowing from banks or using overdrafts to cover the cost of money owed to them by DEL. That is simply unacceptable. The European regional development fund element of the EU structural funds administered by DETI has a target of 35 days from claim submitted to payment in bank. That should be the standard for ESF payments.

In the round, the European social fund is a fund that is rife with success stories.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member must bring her remarks to a close.

Ms McGahan: The fund has allowed vulnerable and hard-to-reach people from all sections of our community to participate in training and learning opportunities to increase their social inclusion and employability. I urge all Members to support the motion.

Mr A Maginness: I rise on behalf of the SDLP to speak on the motion. I am filling in for Mr Pat Ramsey, who, regrettably, cannot attend the debate. They are big shoes to fill, but I will attempt to do that, nonetheless.

I welcome the opportunity to contribute to this important debate on the European social fund. It is clear that there are many pressing issues with the fund and, more precisely, the application process. Community groups have found great difficulty in navigating the process. They have relayed to us that it is an unnecessarily arduous and lengthy application process. I am sure that many of us in our constituency offices are familiar with spending time trying to assist very frustrated community groups to get their projects off the ground.

It is important to say that despite the negative feedback that we all hear about ESF application processes, truly wonderful things are being achieved at grass-roots level thanks to the fund. Those achievements are often underappreciated, occurring as they do amongst those who find themselves furthest away from formal education and indeed the job market. I cannot mention all the groups that are achieving great things thanks to the fund, but one good example is, in fact, in the north-west.

Derry City and Strabane District Council recently commenced an ESF-funded Kickstart to Work project that addresses barriers to education and training; work experience and employment initiatives; and post-employment support for 350 enrollees — quite a substantial number. It is a great project for an area with pronounced problems, such as the north-west. It has a great partnership approach. However, the process has not been without its issues. Those administering Kickstart to Work have complained about the changing goalposts at the Department for Employment and Learning. The project is still awaiting clarification on new processes by the Department. What is proving particularly difficult is having Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) claimants released to participate in the scheme. The question is clear: why would anyone agree to a back-to-work scheme if it affects their benefits detrimentally? It is a fundamental question.

The lack of communication around this and other issues between the Department for Employment and Learning, the European Union, the Social Security Agency, and jobs and benefits offices' staff has no doubt been detrimental to this innovative and much-needed project.

There can be no doubt that the Department for Employment and Learning's staff are under immense pressure at the level of applications to the fund. It means that the administrative burden is very heavy. However, we must not forget the pressure that is placed on local community groups by funding delays. This year, many groups were forced to place staff on notice — and that really is intolerable — in an attempt to juggle various pots of money. In many instances, they had to avoid debtors and suffer the inordinate pressure of being chased for money, all due to a delay in processing the fund payments. It is important to note that this is often due to delayed payments from the previous funding round, not even the latest one. This type of funding delay actually perpetuates further inability to receive funding for many community groups. Thousands of pounds are still owed by the Department to many groups, preventing further applications. Again, I say that this is intolerable. The Department holds the purse strings and therefore the lifeline of community groups across the North. It is for this reason that it must be more efficient.

Delays affect cash flow, effective administration, claimants, the income that is generated and morale.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to conclude his remarks.

Mr A Maginness: I will, indeed. Not surprisingly, delays in funding affect community groups' ability to attract and, more importantly, retain valuable members of staff.

Ms Lo: I rise as the Alliance Party member on the Committee for Employment and Learning. To begin with, I declare an interest as a board member of GEMS NI, which is in receipt of funding from the European social fund. The ESF delivers essential support and services to some of the most disadvantaged people in Northern Ireland. There are numerous success stories of vulnerable and hard-to-reach people being able to access learning and training opportunities. This increases their employability, addresses poverty and promotes social inclusion.

I know that DEL officials have worked hard to ensure that the ESF was ready for the start of the new financial year and to avoid gaps in ESF programmes.

It is also important to point out the pressures that the Department faced while dealing with the closure of the old ESF programme and opening the new one at the same time.

1.15 pm

The ESF is a competitive process and, in many ways, it was inevitable that some applicants would be disappointed, as there were, at one point, eight times more applicants than there was money available. I welcome the Minister's commitment to overfund and secure match funding for organisations at a time when budgets were being squeezed extremely hard. I am aware of the challenges faced by the community and voluntary sectors in the administration of ESF, and I acknowledge that this process has seen a number of problems.

GEMS NI is the lead in one project and a partner in two others. It currently has circa £200,000 in moneys owed but not vouched. It has received an interim payment from the ESF managing authority of 50% of the vouch, which did not include the public match element. It has received no match funding because of the delay in the vouching, as its ESF managing authority needs to advise the match funders to pay their proportion, so it is actually 32·5% of the vouch.

Cash-flow problems continue to be a challenge for a number of organisations. That said, the Minister has acknowledged that there are frustrations with the speed at which this is happening and that, in many cases, the wait has been too long. I also understand that the 10 additional staff who were added to the ESF managing authority had previous vouching experience. Minister Farry acted quickly to address administrative problems and ensure a cash flow to organisations. I have no doubt that the Department for Employment and Learning has learnt from mistakes that were made during this process and will continue to work in partnership with the community and voluntary sector to deliver effective ESF funding. I support the motion.

Mr Easton: The community and voluntary sectors, particularly in the field of education and training, play an invaluable role in Northern Ireland's economy, helping to equip and skill the most hard-to-reach participants. The community and voluntary sector has always been able to reach and work with the most marginalised and bridge the gap for these people, equipping them on their journey towards education and employment in a way that the statutory services have never been able to do. This is most evident in the services that are offered, such as free childcare, smaller class sizes and flexibility in timetables and learning.

The ESF programme has been in existence for a number of years, and the community in Northern Ireland has been able to avail itself of it. It has helped many thousands of men and women into further education, training and employment. The Department's financial remuneration of projects under the 2007-2013 ESF programme has had a horrendous effect on many organisations; none more so than in the women's sector and projects such as the Kilcooley Women's Centre. I am sure that the Minister will join me in praising the good work that the women's centre does to address educational underachievement.

The programme, which ended on 31 March 2015, has left the community and voluntary sector on its knees, with vast sums of money still owed by the Department to groups. These delays by the Department have resulted in organisations such as the Kilcooley Women's Centre not being able to pay tutors or pay for accreditations for their participants, racking up significant levels of overdraft charges and debt. It is unacceptable for the Department to treat the sector like this, not to mention the contempt that many in the sector feel for the Department because of its poor track record of communication over its suspensions and mishandling of community and voluntary sector project claims. These actions will result in many community and voluntary organisations becoming insolvent or bankrupt through no fault of their own. This will also have an impact on the most marginalised participants, who will be unable to access front-line services designed to address educational underachievement, as their point of contact is the community and voluntary organisations.

The 2014-2020 ESF programme application process has also been a shambles from start to finish, from the Department's unclear guidance on what constitutes management accounts to its unclear and inconsistent assessment of applications —

Mr Anderson: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he agree that more could have been done by the Department to communicate with the groups to ensure that the necessary documentation was submitted to help with the easier payment of claims?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Easton: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

I agree with the Member. I think that communication has been very poor, and, if it had been a clear communication right from the start, many of the problems that we are experiencing might have been ironed out well before now.

In preparation for the new round of ESF funding, DEL held Northern Ireland-wide information roadshows, through which it advocated the delivery of higher-level qualifications and progression for participants. However, when the application process opened, the criteria that were stipulated supported up to level 1 only. That is equivalent to grades D to G at GCSE, or, in crude employability terms, a fail mark in the eyes of many employers. That appears to go against the evidence —

Mr Swann: Will the Member give way?

Mr Easton: Yes. Go ahead.

Mr Swann: Will the Member agree that it also excludes the likes of first-aid courses and construction skills register (CSR) cards, which are not recognised at either level 1 or level 2?

Mr Easton: Yes, I concur with the Member.

That appears to go against the evidence that that is the best way of combating educational underachievement among those most removed from the labour market and educational services.

The Department appears to have manipulated figures to show a much rosier picture of the ESF 2014-2020 application process; for example, in the way in which it has grouped the unemployed/economically inactive and community family strands to justify moneys to women, despite issues around need specifically related to women classified as being unemployed/economically inactive. The community family support strand of the 2014-2020 ESF programme includes men, teenagers and other family members, and thus cannot be defined as being female-specific. Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) statistics for the period of the ESF application process show that, of 313,000 economically inactive people aged 16 to 64 in Northern Ireland, 61% are women. Therefore, women are almost twice as likely to be economically inactive as men.

The total allocation of ESF for the next three-year period is £112 million over the three strands of the programme. That equates to a paltry 3·2% awarded to women-specific training. Evidence shows that that is almost 24% less than what is required to address the number of economically inactive women.

I wish to express my concern about how, during a time of financial austerity, the Department is able to award ESF funding contracts that have no competition on price. I am very keen to hear from the Minister in his response about the ESF 2014-2020 application process and how only a benchmark for average cost per participant was used by DEL to determine value for money.

To conclude, I urge the Minister to apologise for the Department's continuing failures. I also urge him finally to put in place firm and decisive plans to rectify the continuing problems so that the reputational damage of the Department in the eyes of the European Commission and the Northern Ireland voluntary and community sector can be repaired.

Mr F McCann: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I support the motion. I thank the researchers and the likes of NICVA and others that sent us information that, along with the experience that we have all gone through in Committee concerning the process, probably informs most of what we are saying today.

The motion speaks of the important role that the European social fund has played in the delivery of essential services and support for the most vulnerable. The European social fund, in delivering essential support and services to vulnerable people in the North, recognises the challenges faced by the voluntary and community sector in the administration of the current and previous programmes. The motion goes on to call on the Department:

“to learn from its mistakes and to ensure that it works in partnership with the community and voluntary sector to deliver, efficiently and effectively, the European social fund programme.”

For many in the community and voluntary sector, the process of applying for what was a new programme and meeting the criteria had many hurdles. Many were disappointed.

In a paper supplied to us by NICVA, it commended the Department for working hard to meet the date for the programme to begin at the start of the new financial year, but also spoke of departmental officials being under severe pressure in trying to close the old ESF programme and open a new one simultaneously. It stated that a key issue raised was that many organisations were owed a considerable amount of money for work that they had already carried out. When NICVA spoke to the many groups applying for ESF funding, they all talked of confusion, with little in the way of information coming from the Department. Groups were told that they had to show that they had the financial capacity to deal with the new system of payments, but many could not do so because they were not allowed to hold substantial amounts of money and many were owed considerable amounts of money by the Department. NICVA said that some organisations were owed almost £1 million, and others in the region of £300,000. Many, including charities, were borrowing from banks or using overdrafts to cover the costs of money owed to them from government.

NICVA argued that the Department for Employment and Learning should have adopted the DETI policy of ensuring its payment of the ERDF element of the structural funds, which has a target of 35 days from the claim being submitted to payment in the bank. The argument is that that should be the standard for the ESF also. It beggars belief that two Departments can handle elements of administering payments of European funding so differently. You would have thought that the Department for Employment and Learning would have cast a net to see whether there was good practice in other Departments. If it had done so, that problem would, hopefully, have been solved.

I am concerned that no one thought of contacting organisations like NICVA or the broad women's sector to ask its advice on the matter. We talk a lot about partnership and working closer together. Had those in the Department asked for advice, assistance or help, they would have no doubt been pointed in the right direction. They would have been informed that the method of payment was on the verge of putting many groups to the wall and that fulfilling the 10% capacity requirement was making life really difficult for groups that were owed money.

It was interesting to read that there are three requirements for the new social fund programme, which, it was said, combine to undermine the capacity of the ESF programme to deliver its stated aims. It was stated that it is important to note that each of the requirements did not come from the EC but from DEL itself. There is a requirement that tutors providing training as part of the ESF have to undertake a teaching qualification at the Ulster University or another equivalent high-level academic qualification or be registered to do so. Again, NICVA stated that, whilst the voluntary and community sector is committed to high-quality training provision, meeting that very specific requirement is difficult because of monetary costs, the time commitment for tutors to attend the training as well as to deliver the programme and the capacity at UU for the course, given the numbers of tutors involved in ESF. The policy also applies to third-party organisations that the voluntary and community sector might bring in to provide certain industry-specific training such as on health and safety. I have spoken to a number of groups —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to conclude his remarks.

Mr F McCann: A number of groups have informed me that the departure from the way it was done in the past has hit many of them, especially in my constituency.

Mr Weir: I support the motion, but I have a degree of mixed feelings about it. What do I mean by that? I very much welcome the motion that has been brought forward by the Committee. I also commend the Committee's proactive approach to the issue and the extent to which it has pushed it. So, I have no problems with that. My degree of mixed feelings comes from the fact that, in an ideal world, we should not have to have this motion in the first place. There has been a catalogue of errors that should have been avoided and, therefore, there should have been no need for this motion.

I am perhaps the first Member to speak in the debate who is not a member of the Employment and Learning Committee. Therefore, I cannot bring the same level of expertise or knowledge from the Committee to this motion as others have. I am speaking very much from personal experience. First, it is important to place on record, as others have, the tremendous work that the community and voluntary sector is doing out there. My own experience has been very directly with the women's sector in particular, and, specifically, with the excellent work of the Kilcooley women's education group.

1.30 pm

Perhaps wearing another hat as Chair of the Education Committee, I will say that, at times, we look at education within a very narrow prism, and we assume that this is only what happens in the school classroom between the ages of four and 18. However, there is a vast society out there that needs that level of help, expertise and support. The women's sector, in particular, and Kilcooley, very specifically, has provided that down the years. Countless women have been able to benefit from that, and that is to be commended.

Good work has been delivered on the ground by the women's centres and other organisations, but that has been fatally undermined by a catalogue of errors in the administration of it. There is no time to go over the full list, but it has been mentioned by others. The assessment process, as the Committee Chair indicated, had to be rerun, and mistakes were made by the Department. Mentioned has been made about the position of Europe, and there had to be reprofiling in the Department to be able to cope with that.

In each case, I am glad that, at least, the Department took some action, but, again, it is symptomatic of a problem. If you are constantly having to do a degree of catch-up and trying to cover the basis of the mistakes that have been made and rectify those problems, really the target should be to try to make sure that those problems do not happen in the first place.

My experience has also been that, even when solutions have been suggested by the Department, at times, some of those solutions have not been fit for purpose. They have suggested things that would make it impossible for some of the organisations that are delivering on the ground and create a situation that could leave them legally vulnerable. What I have seen at times from the Department is a lack of understanding of the constraints on behalf of voluntary and community organisations, a suggestion of things that are not helpful and a lack at times of a degree of blue-sky thinking.

It is also the case that there is a very human side to this. Those of us who have worked with many of the groups affected will see this not just as a form of statistics or even some sort of group of administrative errors, but we see the human dimension of this being delivered on the ground. We see the extent to which organisations have been staring into the mouth of insolvency, and we see the level of stress from those who are delivering the programmes. They are faced with constant worry and, I suspect, many sleepless nights, and members and employees are often stressed because they know that they cannot meet the financial and moral obligations that are in front of them. That is something that I do not believe anybody should be put through.

We are about to be addressed by the Caesar of the Department, Minister Farry. Unlike Mark Antony, I do not come either to bury him nor, indeed, quite clearly, to praise him on this issue. I think that, ultimately, people want to see solutions around the issue of the amount of money that is owed, we want to see solutions around vouching and verification, and, indeed, we want to see a sensible approach taken to qualifications.

In a previous existence 20 years ago, I did nine weeks' lecturing at the University of Ulster. I had no particular teaching qualifications.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to conclude his remarks.

Mr Weir: It seems remarkable that that burden would not be placed on the University of Ulster but would be placed on those groups. We want to see those solutions, and we want to see an acknowledgement of the mistakes that have been made in the past and something concrete that shows that they are not going to perpetuate into the future.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I support the motion. We all accept that the European social fund is a fundamental part of how we as an Executive can increase the social inclusion of our people and try to reduce economic inactivity across our citizens.

At the outset, I commend the leadership shown by members of the Employment and Learning Committee in taking the lead and representing organisations in the community and voluntary sector and helping to make sure that the fund is administered correctly. As the Chair of the Committee said in his opening remarks, the administration of the fund has been somewhere in between problematic and chaotic. I note that the Minister is coming in for considerable condemnation from some of his constituency colleagues in North Down. Maybe there is an election coming up that we have not heard about. The Minister, in fairness to him, has shown a great degree of willingness to get involved in this.

Some other Ministers, if they were in a similar situation, might have preferred to leave it to officials to deal with and might have farmed it out to them to resolve; but, in fairness to the Minister, whilst there remain problems with the situation, he has taken a great personal interest in this and has genuinely tried his best to sort it out. I wish him well as he continues to do that.

The ESF, from my point of view, is another one of these departmental funds that are outsourced. That seems to be the way that everything is going now, particularly in DEL, where a growing number of programmes are not delivered directly by the Department but are put out for competitive tenders for independent organisations, private companies or community and voluntary organisations. We might be told that there is a positive aspect to that in that it enables people who are hard to reach, as they call them, to be reached by the provision of a government service. They tell us that government could not access those people directly, so we bring in external organisations like the community and voluntary sector to reach them. That may be fine and well in some urban areas where there is a strong network of community and voluntary organisations to reach people who are deemed to be hard to reach, but it is certainly not the case in rural communities. Given the way the whole bid process works, where everything is a competitive process, it has to be done at the lowest cost possible and there is an afterthought given to value, it seems that there are no economies of scale for those organisations to deliver them in rural communities. My concern is that the Department is allowing those rural communities to be left behind.

Mr Swann: Will the Member give way?

Mr Flanagan: I will, Robin, yes. Go ahead.

Mr Swann: Does the Member not recall the reassurances that we were given in Committee that the Department would look at the organisations to make sure that there is a geographical spread across Northern Ireland before it awards anything?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Flanagan: I thank the Member for the extra minute because I am still on my first page and three minutes are gone.

I certainly do remember those reassurances, but I am not reassured by them. On the list of the successful bidders, many are based either east of the Bann or in Derry city. Very few are based in rural communities where there is a greater understanding of the needs of rural citizens. That is one of the problems with the competitive bidding process. I think that, if the Department was delivering ESF directly, there would be much more emphasis placed on ensuring equality of provision across the North in urban and rural communities.

The competitive bidding process leads to the successful organisations tending to be based in those areas east of the Bann or, if we are lucky, in Derry city, but they are very rarely based in rural areas. As I have said, their understanding of the challenges facing people in rural communities is reinforced. Some of them do not seem to understand the transportation issues that are facing people. They are already struggling to get employment opportunities to access training, but the issues are further compounded by a complete absence of reliable transportation and having to travel a considerable distance to access the services. On top of that, the private companies or community and voluntary organisations become much more effectively organised in urban areas and a gap grows in the provision of training programmes and in growing skills across different areas. The skills of the community and voluntary organisations in some areas are much greater than in others, and they say that that is because it is more economically profitable for these to be delivered in urban areas as opposed to in rural communities. It is not an excuse that I buy. Not all areas, particularly rural communities, have had equal investment in the community and voluntary sector historically, and that imbalance is worsening, with rural communities such as those in Fermanagh and Tyrone missing out. The inequality gap is growing. I would like the Minister, during his response at the end, to advise on how outsourced programmes like the ESF have that protection in them to make sure that there is provision in every community, because I do not see that when I look through the list. I see some schemes that were successful in rural areas, but the vast majority seem to be headquartered in urban areas. My concern is that the rural communities are merely an afterthought and that the needs of those people are not reflected as highly as they should be.

Other Members have highlighted issues that are particular to this fund, particularly the cap on a grade D at GCSE for training schemes.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to conclude his remarks.

Mr Flanagan: For me, that is short-sighted and restricts the potential of the ESF programme. I think that it should be reconsidered, and I call on the Minister to take that on board.

Ms Sugden: I support the motion, first, as a representative of East Londonderry; secondly, as a strong advocate of the community and voluntary sector; and, thirdly, as a member of the Committee for Employment and Learning.

I wish to declare an interest: I sit on the board of Compass Advocacy Network, an organisation that is in receipt of European social fund money. Although my contribution to the debate will reflect my work as an individual MLA, I wish to pay due regard to my Committee colleagues for enabling the debate to reach the Floor. I also appreciate the Committee's endeavours in ensuring that the Minister and his Department have been held to account on the issue in Northern Ireland: it has seemed like a long year.

Two significant strands of the European social fund are causing concern: the old programme and the new programme — essentially, the whole European social fund. In the spirit of the motion, I will focus on the European social fund moving forward. In order to do that, however, it would be remiss of me not to draw attention to the significant amounts of money that are still outstanding from the old programme. We are told that, in some cases, that is up to £1 million, and, in many other cases, it is hundreds of thousands of pounds. That is appalling, and it has forced charities and other organisations to seek debt to remain afloat so that they have some hope of maintaining services for the people whom they work for in the community. The significant amount of money that is outstanding is unacceptable. Organisations that are owed, including those on the new programme, cannot move forward. Worryingly, they are on the edge of a cliff, and, regrettably, some have been pushed over.

I want the Minister to take responsibility. I want him to give satisfactory answers to the groups that have been torn apart by incompetence in his Department. I appreciate the fact that the Minister has tried to find solutions, but it is not good enough. It is not good enough right now and is not good enough where those groups find themselves because of inefficiencies and mistakes in his Department.

The community and voluntary sector provides services that the public sector cannot and should not provide, particularly, as Mr Flanagan said, in rural areas. They know their communities and have their respect and trust. As an Assembly and Northern Ireland Executive Government, we should certainly support the community and voluntary sector. Indeed, we are told that the new European social fund was changed to enable streamlining, which would make it simpler for the community and voluntary sector. It is not simpler; it is not only a headache but a quite bad migraine. I ask the Minister to look at the new programme.

The goalposts seem to keep changing on the contracts that these groups signed. I question their legality and even encourage community and voluntary groups on the new programme to seek legal advice, because I am not sure that those contracts stand. Some goalposts that have changed — other Members talked about them — are on the teaching qualification. It is not reasonable to expect some of the organisations to be able to provide that teaching qualification, particularly when no spaces are left on the course. Others spoke about the cap on qualifications. We are almost putting a barrier in place for people to reach their potential, because they can reach only the potential that the Department states, which is quite low.

I will focus on presentations to jobs and benefits offices. As I said, I sit on the board of Compass Advocacy Network, which is an organisation for adults with learning disabilities. They have barriers to presenting themselves to jobs and benefits offices, so the ESF, by putting that requirement in place, has created a barrier for them, and that is not really what the —

Mr Swann: Will the Member give way?

Ms Sugden: Yes. Please go ahead.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: If the Member takes the intervention, I do not have the opportunity to give her an additional minute.

Mr Swann: I will be brief. The Member may also be aware that some jobs and benefits offices have not been informed about how to handle ESF queries from organisations.

Ms Sugden: Yes, I am entirely aware. We have put a requirement in place that will not work, even in the last instance.

I am keen to hear what the European Commission has to say about this. I hope that it is paying attention to the debate because I cannot imagine that the fund that it hoped that we would present in the most effective way is being presented as such. I cannot imagine that the Commission is happy with it.

1.45 pm

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Minister has up to 15 minutes to respond to the debate.

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): In responding, I want to acknowledge the important role that the European social fund plays in supporting skills and employability across society. I recognise the sterling efforts made by my officials in ensuring the overall successful delivery of the 2007-2013 ESF programme and the timely commencement of the 2014-2020 one. That is not to say that there have not been problems with implementation in aspects of the delivery of the 2007-2013 programme and the start of the 2014-2020 one. However, my officials and I have been proactive in addressing all of those issues, and, indeed, I directed changes in approach on a number of occasions. Furthermore, for accountability, my officials and I regularly presented ourselves to the Committee, and we continue to engage with a wide range of stakeholders.

The European social fund has been of enormous benefit in supporting our people and economy by giving unemployed and disadvantaged people the training and support that they need to access work. It is a positive reflection on our membership of the European Union and allows us to do things that we might not otherwise be in a position to achieve. By focusing on those most in need of help, ESF assistance is vital in contributing to policies to reduce inequality and build a fairer society. The voluntary and community sector is especially crucial in helping to deliver this provision locally. The sector is often much better placed than government and its statutory bodies to understand, support and offer meaningful progress to disadvantaged sections of society.

The current ESF round of funding amounts to more than £205 million over the six-year period of the programme. That support is manifested in the fact that we have not made cuts to the new ESF programme. In fact, the programme that we unveiled for 2014-2020 is bigger than the outgoing one, with some £112 million worth of projects being supported during its first three years. The Department is adding a further £5.5 million through its role as a match funder. That is also an increase.

It is also important to recognise that the new European social fund for 2014-2020 is up and running and that we managed that without any break in coverage. This was, nevertheless, a challenging task. Although we had our operational programme agreed by the European Commission early, that still left only a narrow window to commence the programme by 1 April 2015. We are well ahead of many other parts of the European Union, and other UK regions, in having our programme up and running. Only now is the Skills Funding Agency in England, for example, commencing a call for applications to the new programme — for an 18-month period only and starting as late as September 2016 — whereas Northern Ireland projects have been offered a full three years of funding from April 2015. That follows a summer in which providers receiving ESF money in England were forced to lay off staff due to the delays in issuing the 2014-2020 contracts.

The European social fund programme is not a financial vehicle specifically designed to sustain the community and voluntary sector. It is designed to help the individual participants on the programme, in line with the programme's thematic objectives. Voluntary and community organisations are undeniably well placed to assist participants, but there was, I believe, an unrealistic expectation among certain providers that funding would continue into the new programme by virtue of the fact that they had been funded under the old one. The unfortunate reality of any competitive tendering process is that no single organisation has an automatic right to funding.

My officials and I are fully alert to the challenges faced by the voluntary and community sector in adjusting to the new programme. Members have raised a number of issues, and we are aware of and have addressed, or are in the process of addressing, those where possible.

A clear difficulty was the tension created between the documentation required to meet the audit demands of the European Commission and the impact of that on the Department's ability to process and pay claims quickly. ESF projects are understandably anxious to have their claims paid as soon as possible, and I accept that a number had concerns about their cash flow due to the delay in the verification process. However, Members should also recognise that there is an onus on the project to provide the correct documentation, just as there is an onus on the Department to complete the vouching visits and release payments. Likewise, there is a need to recognise that vouching is not a simple process that can be completed overnight. Due to the exacting audit standards required, vouching can be highly involved and often time-consuming. However, as the programme evolves and all parties become more familiar with the new processes, it should be possible to issue payments more promptly.

I can also assure Members that, when organisations raise problems about cash flow, we respond. As a result, I have directed my Department to implement an interim measure whereby 50% of the ESF and DEL contribution in unpaid claims is paid when the claim is received and vouched later. Applying this process has alleviated the initial financial pressures that the projects have experienced, whilst work continues apace to ensure that all claims are fully vouched in line with audit requirements.

Another concern raised by a number of parties is the requirement for ESF participants to present themselves to jobs and benefits offices to confirm that they are in receipt of benefit and therefore eligible for participation. This is not a new requirement. Nevertheless, project promoters have flagged up certain practical difficulties for participants, especially those who have disabilities. My officials are working with the Social Security Agency and the employment service to see whether there are any practical solutions that can be put in place to address what is perceived by some as a barrier to participation.

Concern has also been expressed about my Department's requirement for ESF tutors to hold an appropriate teaching qualification. My Department's objective is to ensure that participants receive the best possible training and education available, to ensure quality and consistency throughout education and training and to provide a guaranteed minimum level of quality in our teaching. Any departmental requirements for qualifications apply to tutors, not only in delivering ESF projects but in further education college settings, and to providers of the Training for Success programme.

Another concern is the limit on qualifications to be supported under the ESF programme to level 1. This was informed by a range of interconnected reviews of provision and sought to minimise the potential for duplication. This was particularly important in the context of the current budget constraints. It is important to encourage progression. Supporting provision up to level 1 under the ESF programme means that individuals are enabled and encouraged to progress to level 2 and above through other DEL-funded provision.

Members also raised —

Mr Agnew: I thank the Minister for giving way. I accept that level 2 and 3 courses can be provided at colleges, but does he not accept that such provision will not suit many people? I give the example from when I worked in the Simon Community of a young person coming out of a juvenile justice centre. The colleges do not have the flexibility to take them on then and there, although education may be the thing that keeps them from reoffending.

Dr Farry: This is not an ideal situation. Sadly, it is informed by constraints to our budgets. We are seeking to stretch budgets to cover as many spaces as we can, but it is far from ideal.

I return to the issues connected with the outgoing programme. First of all, we are looking to address proactively the issues relating to the vouching of claims. We have put in place a series of measures as well as accelerated payments for the new programme. We are working to close off the outgoing programme by the end of the year. Of the 95 projects, a total of 57, I think, are now fully paid with no further claims due. We are waiting for only two potential claims to be submitted, one from Royal Mencap and the other from the Training for Women Network (TWN).

This leads me to the point about Kilcooley Women's Centre that was raised by a number of Members. It is important to clarify for the record that my Department does not have any direct relationship with Kilcooley Women's Centre. It is part of the Training for Women Network on the outgoing ESF programme. The issues are thus for TWN, which has yet to produce its final claim. My officials have gone to great lengths to try to facilitate TWN in doing so, sadly to no avail. We await the receipt of documentation, and that is the problem.

Members have commented about the fact that staff were placed on protective notice in some of the programmes. Going on protective notice, as bad as it is, is better than facing redundancy. I find it a little concerning that some people said we should have waited a little longer before starting the new programme.

That would have meant a situation where we did not have continuity of provision and where some organisations would have had to lay staff off in the interim. We have avoided that in Northern Ireland, and that should be acknowledged.

There were also comments about how we somehow moved the goalposts in the process. We have not moved the goalposts in any shape or form. It is important that we stick to what we have said and that we have clear, objective standards to deal with organisations. That is how we protect ourselves against challenge. Frankly, if we were to start changing things midstream, then we would open a Pandora's box of people coming in with all sorts of claims and allegations against the Department. I think we have held the line well in that regard.

When we took a decision to have flexibility in the further submission of management accounts, that was done in the context where we believed that we had an objective standard that would allow it to happen. It was based on our recognition that there was ambiguity in the guidance notes. That was a flaw, and it meant that some groups had a misunderstanding in how they were reading them at that time. I also want to clarify that we have not had a situation whereby the assessment process has been rerun. We simply allowed further time for the submission of management accounts, which is a much more narrow set of events.

Comment has also been made about our relationships with the European Commission, which I believe to be good. While we have had a rocky road through the interruption to our programme, it is important to clarify that an interruption is not the same as a suspension. Those issues with this type of funding are commonplace across the European Union. We have had close neighbours suffer a suspension of their funds, rather than the interruption that we have experienced in Northern Ireland.

Mr Swann: I thank the Minister for giving way. Will he clarify whether he transferred the funds from priority 1 to priority 2 before the suspension happened? Is it simply a matter of semantics?

Dr Farry: First, there is a difference between an interruption and a suspension, so it is nothing to do with semantics. The transfer of priorities was done in order for us to ensure that we were able to continue engaging with all the organisations that benefited through the outgoing ESF programme. Through the approach that was adopted, we were able to ensure continuity of provision. It was very much in the interests of the community and voluntary sector that we took that action. Over the past months, we have sought to proactively address the issues raised by the European Commission, and the interruption was lifted towards the end of September.

Members have asked, and the motion calls, for lessons to be learned. I appreciate that Members, project providers and other stakeholders have been critical of how the programme has been handled, both the old and new ESF programme. I have also had my concerns, which is why I have intervened on a number of occasions when it was appropriate to do so. I recognise that lessons can be learned from these experiences.

What has become clear to me in the course of moving from the old ESF programme to the new one is the need for sufficient staff resourcing and planning. To that end, my Department has brought additional vouching staff on board to further assist the process and ensure that it is completed as soon as possible. I am confident that this short-term measure has gone a significant way to addressing the backlog of claims, and will soon bring the managing authority to a position whereby it can efficiently vouch for each individual claim as and when it arrives. We are also continually redeploying staff to respond to pressures as they change. As the work on final payments for the old programme winds down, we will redeploy staff to the payments under the new programme.

Another lesson learned is the need to make the process of vouching simpler, compared to the incredibly detailed process under the old ESF programme. We have introduced a simplified costs model, whereby costs are verified on the basis of a percentage of staff costs. While the initial introduction of such a change has inevitably led to a number of teething problems, the streamlining of claims, once fully up and running, should provide a more efficient and effective system. We have also introduced a new ESF claims tracking system, affording significantly improved management information for better monitoring of the progress of individual claims.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

We are also conscious of the need for better communication with project providers. As such, we have established a quarterly forum that will give all project providers the opportunity to come together. We have also established an ESF project group to identify and address a number of control weaknesses associated with the old programme, and to ensure those weaknesses do not affect the 2014-2020 programme. Finally, all relevant staff will go through an accredited training programme as part of their continuous professional development to ensure that projects and participants receive the best possible support from the Department.

Oral Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Mr Speaker: It is now time for questions to the First Minister. I am not sure if this is your last, but you are always very welcome. I inform Members that question 14 has been withdrawn.

UN Special Rapporteur: Discussions

1. Ms McGahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline any discussions they have had with the United Nations special rapporteur on the promotion of truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence. (AQO 9128/11-16)

Mr P Robinson (The First Minister): With your permission, Mr Speaker, I will ask junior Minister Mrs Emma Pengelly to answer that question.

Mrs Pengelly (Junior Minister, Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): Officials from our Department met Pablo de Greiff, the UN special rapporteur on truth, justice, reparation and guarantees of non-recurrence on 11 November 2015. The purpose of the visit was to offer an objective assessment of the various initiatives undertaken to deal with the legacies of the Troubles. Discussions focused on the holistic approach being taken to improve services for victims and survivors here. Those focused on the victim support and individual needs programmes and our Department's ongoing collaborative design programme, which we have undertaken in conjunction with the Commission for Victims and Survivors and the Victims and Survivors Service. The programme aims to ensure a level of service provision that better meets the needs of victims and survivors.

The significant progress made by the programme, and the positive feedback received to date, was discussed, along with key strands of work being taken forward under the Stormont House Agreement in relation to advocacy, a pension for those severely physically injured and the establishment of a mental trauma service. The implementation of the Together: Building a United Community strategy was also discussed. Those discussions included the recently published good relations indicators and the application of an outcome-based approach to monitoring and evaluation. Mr de Greiff will now prepare a report on his findings from the visit, which will be presented to the Human Rights Council in September 2016. Our Department will give his advice and recommendations due consideration.

Ms McGahan: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for her response. I want to take this opportunity to wish you all the best in your new role. Considering that the special rapporteur acknowledged in his preliminary recommendations that it is easy to use national security as a blanket term, what steps will be taken to establish mechanisms for dealing with the past that deliver the full disclosure of truth that victims and families deserve?

Mrs Pengelly: As the Member will be aware, the issue of national security was the subject of considerable discussion throughout the recent talks process. In all those issues, there is a matter of compromise to be had. On one hand, families want access to truth and information. In particular, many hundreds of families have contacted me and the Office of the First Minister in relation to their quest for justice. However, on the other side of that, there need to be protections in relation to national security. Just this week it has become clear that at least seven attempted attacks across the UK this year alone have been foiled by our security and intelligence services. Therefore, the techniques deployed need to be protected. All citizens across the United Kingdom need to have the protections afforded by the national security protections at a state level, so a compromise does need to be reached, but it has to go both ways.

Mr Speaker: I call Mr Edwin Poots. Edwin? We will move on. I call Mr Alec Attwood.

Mr Attwood: I wish the First Minister good health and good times whenever he decides to depart from this place.

On Friday afternoon, the new leader of the SDLP, Colum Eastwood, wrote to the British Government and copied the Irish Government, recommending that the revised draft legacy Bill that, no doubt, the British Government have in their possession should be published, not least to inform victims and survivors in a way that they may not have been informed since Stormont House. Given the comments of the First Minister on Friday evening, do the First Minister and junior Minister endorse the recommendation that the leader of the SDLP put to the Secretary of State?

Mrs Pengelly: The Member will be very much aware of the position of the Office of the First Minister on the matter. The First Minister recently made clear during the talks process that the DUP supported the proposition by the British and Irish Governments that the entire legacy section should be made available to victims and survivors, and, in addition, that the very substantive piece of legislation drafted at Westminster on behalf of the parties here should be published.

Mr Cochrane-Watson: I also wish the First Minister every success in the future after he decides to stand down formally.

Does the junior Minister agree that, to ensure that there is no recurrence, not just the state but groups have to be honest about their actions and the consequences of those actions?

Mrs Pengelly: Absolutely. We have made it very clear throughout the process that victims deserve justice and truth. It is very sad that victims have had to wait so long to get that justice and truth. However, throughout the process — in fact, throughout not just this process but the Stormont House negotiations last Christmas and the Haass negotiations — the Office of the First Minister has been absolutely at the forefront of fighting for justice and truth for victims and survivors. Across the House, I think that we support calls for those who have information on any event or act of terrorism in the past to come forward and tell people what information they have and, importantly, tell the PSNI, in order to allow victims and survivors to get the closure and justice that they rightly deserve.

Mr Allister: I join in wishing the First Minister a long and healthy retirement.

The UN rapporteur is very clear, it seems, on the need for the truth. Does the junior Minister think that she and the First Minister are getting the truth from their partner, Sinn Féin, given its continuing denial of even the existence of the IRA and its controlling army council? Does not that situation — if Sinn Féin persists in saying that, as far as the republican movement is concerned, there is nothing to disband — make a nonsense of the suggestion that there is going to be a process to disband paramilitary organisations?

Mrs Pengelly: Again, the First Minister has been very clear that people need to come forward. They need to tell the truth. They need to give that information. Although there is that quest for knowledge by all of us on those matters, the focus of the question and of my comments today is that the need for truth and justice for victims and survivors in particular is absolutely acute. We know that there are people across Northern Ireland who hold information that could give justice and truth to those victims and survivors. Therefore, today, I would like the focus to be on their cause, and I reiterate that anybody who has information should come forward to the PSNI and give that closure to victims and survivors.

Racial Equality Strategy: Update

2. Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the racial equality strategy 2014-2024. (AQO 9129/11-16)

Mr P Robinson: I thank Members for their kind personal comments.

Our 16-week public consultation instigated much discussion and elicited many opinions from right across society. After the analysis of those contributions was completed, the strategy was revised to take account of the consultation responses, and the revised strategy has been considered and commented on by Executive Ministers. Once the strategy has been agreed by the Executive, we hope to publish it in a matter of weeks. The racial equality strategy establishes a framework for action by Departments and others to tackle racial inequalities and to open up opportunity for all, to eradicate racism and hate crime, and, along with the Together: Building a United Community policy, to promote good relations and social cohesion.

Full and effective implementation of the strategy will be achieved only by Departments working together, in partnership with the voluntary and community sector and other elements of civic society.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the First Minister for his response. Despite disagreeing with him fundamentally on many issues, I, too, extend sincere good wishes for his departure from the Assembly when he decides to do so.

In the light of recent serious racist attacks — including petrol bombings, cars being torched, homes being attacked and residents being assaulted in Ballykeel, Ballymena and in my constituency of East Belfast, as well as the desire of the majority in our community to see a united community — is the inordinate delay in delivering a racial equality strategy and a refugee integration strategy not an indictment of OFMDFM? Will he agree that urgent work still has to be done to ensure that our black and minority ethnic members of the community have the same safety, inclusion and opportunity as anyone else in our community?

Mr P Robinson: I think that just leaves out several factors that the Member presumably does not want the House and beyond to be aware of, because, of course, we have a community safety strategy for Northern Ireland that sets out the Executive's commitment to tackle all forms of hate crime. The strategy has associated action plans, including a dedicated hate crime action plan that details the measures that a range of Departments and relevant agencies are taking forward, including officials in OFMDFM, who are represented on the Department of Justice hate crime delivery group, which was established to support the delivery of that strategy.

The Member also seems to think that somehow the delivery of a strategy is, in itself, the answer to these kinds of issues. I hope that the House will join me in absolutely condemning this kind of activity as completely unacceptable. If anybody puts themselves in the place of someone in our community who has come from foreign parts, they will know the degree of isolation that there is and the lack of backup networks that are available to them. I hope that everybody remembers that they should treat others as they would like to be treated themselves. However, let us not get tied down in the process of the strategy. The strategy has been out for public consultation for some considerable time. It has been a very wide consultation and a very considerable response has been received. That has now reached the stage where the revision is before Ministers. As the draft strategy itself talks about being a strategy for 2015 to 2025, I hope that it will be published within a very short period.

Mrs Hale: I thank the First Minister for his earlier answer. If I may, Mr Speaker, like many, I would like to pay tribute to the First Minister on what is likely to be his last Question Time and thank him for his years of selfless service to the people of Northern Ireland, and for his friendship and mentoring to me and my daughters.

Will the First Minister outline the role of the crisis fund in helping minority ethnic individuals to deal with emergency situations?

Mr P Robinson: First, I thank my good friend for her kind comments.

As I indicated in my first response, traditionally, people who come from ethnic minorities have fewer and weaker network supports and, from time to time, that means that they have to rely on the crisis fund for support. The crisis fund is, of course, there to give help to those who are destitute. Last year, I believe that the fund distributed about £36,600 and, this year, has £100,000 available to be used. Some have asked whether the crisis fund will be used for Syrian refugees. The answer is that, while technically it could, I think that the provision of the scheme under which they would be coming is such that they should not be destitute and, therefore, would not need to fall back on that fund.

Mr Dallat: I thank the Minister for his answers and, of course, like everyone else in the House, wish him all the best for the future, particularly in good health.

The Minister will agree with me that those involved in hate crimes are not really bothered about strategies or plans or all the other things that we get involved in, but they might well understand a change in the hate laws that would make it very clear that those who get involved in that kind of criminal activity will spend a long time behind bars, while the wider community, particularly the minority communities, are safe. What is the Minister's view on changing the hate laws?

2.15 pm

Mr P Robinson: I agree with the Member that those involved in such activity would probably have difficulty even reading a strategy. The strategy is for Departments and others to coordinate their efforts to ensure that we, as a community, unite and speak out against such activity. In that context, a strategy is valuable.

In terms of toughening the laws, there is a wide range of areas in our society where there is a requirement for severe deterrents. I would be happy for a review of the lengths of sentences and punishments and sanctions on race-hate and other types of hate crime.

Anti-poverty Strategy

3. Mr Hazzard asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given the outcome of the legal challenge by the Committee on the Administration of Justice against the Northern Ireland Executive, when they will introduce an anti-poverty strategy. (AQO 9130/11-16)

Mr P Robinson: Mr Speaker, with your permission, I will ask junior Minister Mrs Emma Pengelly to answer that question.

Mrs Pengelly: We have accepted the court's judgement on our statutory obligations to provide an anti-poverty strategy, although I was disappointed that the court did not give more weight to the significant range of actions that we have been taking to address poverty, social exclusion and deprivation, particularly the innovative and exciting work on our Delivery Social Change framework and on developing an outcomes focus on addressing poverty and the consequences of poverty.

Through the Executive's Delivering Social Change programme, we have committed over £100 million to reducing poverty and the consequences of living in areas of deprivation. We have spent over £27 million on our Delivering Social Change signature projects, including significant contributions to the projects jointly funded with Atlantic Philanthropies, which in total are worth almost £60 million over this year and the next three years. In all that work, we have focused strategically on improving outcomes across a range of poverty and deprivation measures, including health, education and developing the economy to improve the lives of those in poverty.

I am disappointed that the court took a very narrow view on the definition of what constitutes a strategy, but we are working to address the concerns of the court, and we will bring forward proposals in the coming months, following appropriate consultation and deliberation.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for her answer. What effect will the changes to the Child Poverty Act proposed in the British Government's Welfare Reform and Work Bill have on tackling child poverty in the North? Go raibh maith agat.

Mrs Pengelly: We have had many discussions over the last five years, particularly in the context of Delivering Social Change, on the most appropriate measures. The child poverty legislation kept many of the child poverty measurements. Those measurements are entirely income-based, so they do not measure, for example, poverty in education, opportunity or aspiration; they simply measure how much income a family has.

Neither do they take into account a range of measures from the Executive to keep family household outgoings down. We were always of the view that there were flaws in how the measurements were carried out. The Conservative Government have indicated very clearly that they are looking at those issues, although the detail is not clear at this stage. However, our outcomes-based approach looks much more widely than those income-based measurements in the legislation. I suspect that we will continue to do that. If you look at our indicators on education, health and a whole range of other issues, it is not just those measurements. So, regardless of whether those measurements change or remain largely the same, the Northern Ireland Executive will continue to look at poverty across the spectrum, not just income poverty.

Mr Lyons: I welcome the junior Minister to her new role and wish her well. I also join with others on these Benches in thanking the First Minister for all his years of service, not only to our party but to our country. We wish him well in his retirement. Will the junior Minister give us her view on the proposition referenced by some that spatial deprivation should be the main way of allocating funding on objective need?

Mrs Pengelly: There has been a great deal of misunderstanding in relation to the court judgement. It did not examine whether the Office of the First and deputy First Minister and the Northern Ireland Executive were fulfilling their obligations in relation to objective need; rather, it examined whether the work that we carried out constituted a strategy. The judgement was absolutely clear that it would not go into the detail of objective need and a definition of it, so there has been some confusion. I welcome the opportunity to clarify that.

There is a proposition out there that all our programmes should be rolled out in relation to spatial need; so, depending on whether you live in a particular area or another area, you should get a range of services. However, that is not what objective need means. In fact, the Northern Ireland Executive roll out the vast majority of their programmes to address poverty and deprivation in relation to objective need, but that objective need pertains to either the individual or the family. If you have a health need, your personal, objective, medical needs are taken into account. If you are unemployed, it does not matter whether you live in Comber, Richhill or north Belfast, you objectively get support from the Government for that. The vast majority of the services that we roll out through the Northern Ireland Executive are on objective need, but not necessarily on spatial objective need.

That said, targeting programmes in relation to spatial deprivation is also very important. It is clear from our research that, where a range of social deprivation factors come into play — my colleague from the Department for Social Development will be very aware of this — the outcomes can be particularly bad for young people. There are a range of programmes through the Department for Social Development and OFMDFM that we will continue to roll out in relation to spatial deprivation. But there is a lot of misunderstanding in relation to objective need. There needs to be greater clarification about that. Hopefully, we will take the opportunity to develop the strategy and give clarity on that matter.

Mr Speaker: Thank you for that detailed answer, but I remind you that there is a two-minute rule.

Mr A Maginness: I wish the junior Minister well in her new role, and I look forward to working with her. I wish the First Minister well in his retirement.

There is a purported commitment to an anti-poverty strategy by the Office of the First and deputy First Minister. Given the fact that they have handed welfare back to Westminster and the prospect of the introduction by the British Government directly here of a benefits freeze and an individual benefits cap of about £20,000, does that not sit uneasily with any purported anti-poverty strategy?

Mrs Pengelly: In our work on social change over the last five years, the Office of the First and deputy First Minister has taken a deliberate change in approach. Prior to that, we collated significant strategies; we asked all the Departments about what they were doing in relation to anti-poverty activities. We produced that and monitored progress against it. At the end of that process, I was not particularly convinced that we had achieved anything, so, around four or five years ago, we changed our approach quite fundamentally to look at, for example, delivery frameworks and targeting specific actions to address poor outcomes. We also engaged with a wide range of academics, experts and stakeholders on these matters. It was very clear from that work that income poverty need not lead to bad outcomes. That is very much at the heart of our Delivering Social Change agenda.

The Northern Ireland Executive have been absolutely keen to keep as much money as possible in families' pockets. We refused to introduce water rates, for example, to try to keep costs down for average households. In addition, we looked at a range of initiatives to try to address where poverty was influencing poor outcomes.

Rather than just concentrating on the income of the family, for example, we looked at the education project under Delivering Social Change. We introduced the literacy and numeracy scheme, and 16,000 young people across Northern Ireland benefited from that. It did not affect the income of the family, but it was very clear that, after the first year of its operation, there was a 6.3% increase in the number of non-grammar school pupils achieving five GCSEs at grades A to C. That is a direct outcome of an anti-poverty intervention that is not necessarily income-based.

Mr Cree: I also wish the First Minister and the junior Minister well in the future. Does the Minister agree that the Minister is the Department, and, therefore, the fact that a junior OFMDFM Minister welcomed the court ruling against OFMDFM either proves a poor understanding of the workings of government or is a very frank admission of the dysfunctionality of OFMDFM?

Mrs Pengelly: I can speak only for myself. I have been clear that we have accepted the court's judgement, although I have to say that I was very disappointed in it. The court specifically looked at the definition of a strategy. In OFMDFM, we have the child poverty strategy. We had adopted the architecture and key principles of Lifetime Opportunities, which was the anti-poverty strategy, and rolled out the Delivering Social Change delivery framework. Along with that, we had the six signature projects on which, as I mentioned, we spent £27 million. I honestly believe that those projects have made a very fundamental difference to people's lives. I mentioned the 16,000 young people who have had numeracy and literacy support. Some 3,300 families have been supported through the family support hubs, and 650 families have been supported by the supporting parenting signature project.

I honestly believe that significant work has been done. It is valuable work. I think that this is the right approach. Rather than having a strategy that does not necessarily achieve anything, we have a delivery framework that is delivering changes on the ground and producing results in outcomes. I have indicated that I am disappointed in the court's judgement, but we have accepted it. We will now move to bring all that work together and produce a strategy.

International Promotion of NI

4. Mr McCallister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on their work to promote Northern Ireland internationally. (AQO 9131/11-16)

Mr P Robinson: Mr Speaker, it is not often that the person who is asking a question so early on is not sure whether it will be reached.

The promotion of Northern Ireland internationally is a key strategic aim of the Executive's international relations strategy. We recognise the crucial role that enhancing our international credibility plays in securing the Executive's objectives. Our international priorities are focused on developing working relations in the United States, Europe and the People's Republic of China. The three Executive offices in Washington, Brussels and Beijing continue to play a significant role in this international outreach.

Over the past 10 years, the Washington bureau's nurturing of important relations with senior US Government officials has been integral to Invest Northern Ireland's unprecedented success in attracting US investment into Northern Ireland. The Brussels office continues to influence European policy and legislation on behalf of the Executive. In 2014-15, it hosted seven ministerial visits and some 60 events, with almost 2,500 visitors. To put this in a financial context, the Executive have drawn down £72.7 million of competitive EU funds in the last three years.

Our relationship with China is still in its early stages, but we are already starting to see positive results. We recently welcomed three senior Chinese Government Ministers and four economic delegations to Belfast. A number of Government-to-Government agreements in areas of economic cooperation, education and cultural promotion have been signed. Progress continues to be made in securing market access for our local agricultural products. Over recent months, we have hosted the Australian high commissioner and the ambassadors of Mexico, France and Finland to Northern Ireland. These representational meetings develop important diplomatic relations with other Governments and contribute to our wider international aims.

Mr McCallister: Like colleagues, I wish the First Minister well. He was nothing but courteous in his dealings with me, which I appreciated very much. I wish him and his family well in his retirement.

The First Minister no doubt knows the impact that instability has and the difficulty of promoting Northern Ireland internationally when there is instability. Does he agree that we cannot go through another mandate with an Executive that have such instability and that are at odds with themselves?

2.30 pm

Mr P Robinson: First, I thank the Member for his kind remarks. I agree with his question entirely. Towards the end of last week, I was speaking to a large group of businessmen. While they were full of the issue of the reduction in the level of corporation tax — the date and rate having been set — I told them that by far the most important aspect for business in the agreement that had been reached was the fact that there was to be stability in Northern Ireland. That is key for business decision-making. That is why we are right to call it 'A Fresh Start'. I think that business people know better than most that the environment in which they have to operate is key, so I agree with the Member entirely. I believe that the foundations have been laid in that agreement. There are no issues that should trip up the Executive in taking the positions necessary to have a sustainable Budget and be able to take decisions on behalf of the people whom we represent.

Mr Speaker: That brings us to the end of the period for listed questions. We move now to 15 minutes of topical questions.

Big Lottery Fund

T1. Mr Lynch asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they agree that any attempt by George Osborne to use the Big Lottery Fund to supplement proposed cuts in departmental spending should be resisted. (AQT 3161/11-16)

Mr P Robinson: I do. My alarm bells went off when I heard the speculation that the Chancellor may move in that direction. Those of us who were active in politics at the time of the introduction of lottery funding, and, probably, many who were not, whatever their view might have been of having the National Lottery, recognised that the key ingredient was additionality and that it should not be used by government as a method of taxation to fund various necessary projects. I agree entirely with the Member, and I am pretty sure that the deputy First Minister and I would be agreeable to making known our views, and, I hope, the views of the House, to the Department for Culture, Media and Sport before any announcement is made.

Mr Lynch: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagra. I thank the First Minister for his answer. Does he agree that this could have a hugely negative impact on the community and voluntary sector and damage many projects that are under way?

Mr P Robinson: Unquestionably, it will. Even in the last year, the Big Lottery Fund has, I think, made about 500 awards in Northern Ireland, totalling about £4.5 million. On top of that, it has assisted in granting about 800 organisations in Northern Ireland, ranging from community groups to some of the more strategic partnerships. Most of us will know that there was an intention on the part of the Big Lottery Fund to have a new programme on people in communities at the beginning of next year. If there is a change to the awards that it is permitted to make, it is likely that the people in communities project could be the first victim.

Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan: Financial Package

T2. Mr Givan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the financial package from the United Kingdom Government that was presented in last week's agreement. (AQT 3162/11-16)

Mr Givan: May I associate myself with the warm tributes that have been paid to the First Minister? Peter Robinson's career has spanned three generations of my family. Like him, my grandfather was a founding member. I thank him for the legacy that he has left us: he has left Northern Ireland more secure than ever before within the Union.

Some Members: Hear, hear.

Mr Givan: I thank him, too, personally, for the support and the opportunity that he has given to me. It has been a privilege to serve with him in the Assembly.

Mr P Robinson: I am grateful for the comments. It has been somewhat of a surreal experience. It is almost as if one was dead and listening to the obituary, but I am, I hope, still very much alive, and will remain so for some time to come.

I suppose that the reference to three generations is another way of saying, "Peter, you are very old." [Laughter.] On the issue of the finances of the Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan, we should, first of all, remember that this is our second bite at this cherry because we did get a significant financial package previously. Some people unkindly and wrongly referred to it as being a bit of smoke and mirrors because of the £2 billion spending plan. It was a substantial amount of money and was not all direct funding; it did have that element of borrowing. What some people — those who probably do not have a great deal of financial knowledge — probably did not realise was that, even though it was borrowing, it was immediately making available to us real cash because of the savings in our spending, particularly as a result of the voluntary exit scheme.

This new package amounts to around £560 million. It ranges particularly across those issues that will help the PSNI on security and paramilitary matters. It also has the invest-to-save element for fraud and error. The modest figure that has been put down for our savings in that is £150 million. I have to say that the earlier assessments that we had from DSD and DFP were considerably more than that, but time alone will tell what that turns out to be.

All in all, this makes a substantial additional element of funding available to the Executive. It allowed us, at our last Executive meeting, to clear the paper that the Finance Minister brought to us on the November monitoring round. It is very clear that, without any difficulty, we will be able to make ends meet this year.

Mr Givan: Thank you, First Minister. In the run-up to the agreement, the leader of the Ulster Unionist Party made apocalyptic claims that we were mortgaging our children's future to the tune of some £0.5 billion. In the light of the reality of the financial package around the agreement, would the First Minister like to comment on Mr Nesbitt's economic analysis?

Mr P Robinson: This one is a bit of an open goal to kick at, really. I think that I will resist the temptation.

Some Members: Go on. Go on.

Mr P Robinson: It is sufficient to say that while the leader of the Ulster Unionist Party was absolutely sure that this would be borrowing and that our children and our children's children would have to pay for decades to come, not one penny of this additional funding is borrowing. It is all money that is available to the Executive and which our children will not have to pay for. What our children would have to pay for is the futility of those who cannot see that the future of Northern Ireland rests on our having a shared future, moving forward together, trying to get stability in Northern Ireland and ensuring that we have an era of peace and prosperity for all those who we represent.

Flags, Identity, Culture and Tradition

T3. Ms McCorley asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they agree that the commission on flags, identity, culture and tradition should give meaningful consideration to the inclusion of our cultures and identities in public symbols, similar to that being discussed in New Zealand. (AQT 3163/11-16)

Ms McCorley: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagraí go dtí seo. Agus guím gach rath ar an Chéad-Aire san am atá le teacht. I thank the First Minister for his answers, and I, too, wish him well for the future.

Mr P Robinson: I am grateful for the Member's remarks. Within the agreement and implementation plan, it is agreed that the commission should be set up before March 2016, I think, but that the advertising for it should occur before the end of December. The purpose of that group is to go around Northern Ireland to speak directly to people, open up debate and have a conversation with the people of Northern Ireland about those issues which have dogged society for so long.

I think that we need to have a better understanding of the position that we each have. There are deep-seated differences in Northern Ireland about identity, culture and other matters. The way to break down those differences is to ensure that we have an understanding. I hope that the meetings and engagements that will take place will do so in a positive spirit, where people are indicating how important their positions are rather than trying to live off bringing down somebody else's tradition and background. Let us try to have the best of our two traditions rather than enmity between them.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. The First Minister said that those engagements should be positive. Does he agree that it is also very important that they are inclusive and respectful?

Mr P Robinson: They will be meaningless if they are not inclusive. There is no advantage in going out to get people's views and to cut off any particular interest simply because it does not accord with the view of someone on the panel that is looking at the issue. The engagements must be inclusive and, if we are to truly benefit from them, we need to respect and understand other people's views. What hope would there be if we wanted to have our own positions respected and understood but were not prepared to give that same degree of respect and understanding to others?

Mr Speaker: Question 4 has been withdrawn. I call Mr David McIlveen.

Fresh Start at Stormont

T5. Mr D McIlveen asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, given that, in his many years of service, the First Minister will have become accustomed to naysayers, even when something very good has been on the table, whether the First Minister agrees that last week's agreement really does represent a fresh start at Stormont. (AQT 3165/11-16)

Mr D McIlveen: I, too, want to pay tribute to the First Minister for the four faithful decades of service he has given to this Province of ours. I have no hesitancy in saying that when books are being written about Mr Robinson, many of his critics will be lucky to get a footnote. I want to pay tribute to him in the strongest possible terms and wish him every blessing for his retirement.

Mr P Robinson: I thank my friend for his remarks. There will always be people who have genuine misgivings about agreements that are reached, and there will be those who decide before an agreement is ever reached that they have misgivings about it. Even before the agreement was written, some references were being made about how unacceptable it was. However, it is worth pointing out to those people that, ultimately, the electorate in Northern Ireland will judge whether it wants to have wreckers deciding the future of Northern Ireland or whether it wants to invest its future in the hands of those who genuinely want to make a fist of the most difficult circumstances to move Northern Ireland forward.

I believe that we have done that in the agreement that has been reached. It has not ducked the very critical issues that were causing the Assembly and the Executive to collapse. It has dealt with welfare reform, paramilitarism and budgetary issues and we have found ways to improve the way in which the Assembly and the Executive function. There are issues that are still to be resolved and we have not tried to hide that, but even on those, we made progress. I hope that, in the time to come, we can make still further progress.

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the First Minister for his answer. He touched on the issue of paramilitary activity. Does he agree that the provisions in the Stormont Agreement offer, perhaps, the most comprehensive package of measures ever to deal with paramilitary activity in our Province?

Mr P Robinson: They do, unquestionably, and I do not think that anybody could take away from that fact. What I find most positive about the section on paramilitarism is that we have agreements that everybody in the House can sign up to. It is about standing together against paramilitarism in all its emanations. It is about having principles that we are all agreed on. We have put down a set of principles that are not just for Ministers to take when they go into office — although they will be part of the ministerial code's Pledge of Office — but for every Member of the Assembly to take.

There are key actions. You will have a task force that will take the drive against paramilitary criminality. You will have a strategy being brought forward by a panel for the total disbandment and the end of all of the structures of paramilitary organisations. You will have a monitoring and assessment body that will be able to look at the progress that is being made, and you will have the very considerable resources being made available, which I referred to earlier and which will help it do the task that it has to undertake. That whole range of issues shows that, with the goodwill of all the parties in the House, we can really make progress and, I trust, have the end of paramilitarism in Northern Ireland once and for all.

2.45 pm

Mr Speaker: I call Mrs Jo-Anne Dobson. I am afraid that we only have time for your question, not a supplementary.

Organ Donation: Soft Opt-out System

T6. Mrs Dobson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether the First Minister still supports the campaign to bring a soft opt-out organ donation system to Northern Ireland. (AQT 3166/11-16)

Mr P Robinson: The Member knows my view on wanting to drive up the number of people who are willing to donate organs in our society. The Minister has already answered for the Department in that matter. There is a letter from clinicians, and I am very much aware that there are dangers when politicians try to tell the medical professionals what is best in their area. The outcome that I want to see is more organ donation. I do not run away from the issues in the Bill. There is some concern that the Bill as it is presently worded may not have the outcomes that are being suggested. Whatever it does, I think that it is incumbent on all of us — I am happy to leave my trust in the Health Minister in this respect — to ensure that we get the very best result for those who do need organs and have them available when they are needed. I trust that, whatever mechanism is used to bring that about, it will have that outcome.

Mr Speaker: Thank you very much. Time is up. Best wishes, First Minister. Thank you very much.

Some Members: Hear, hear. [Applause.]

Social Development

Mr Speaker: We move on to questions to the Minister for Social Development. I cannot promise you a round of applause.

I call Mr John McCallister. [Interruption.] I call Mr John McCallister. Let us move on.

Just because we need the extra time, I will give you that amount of grace. Pay attention, please. John McCallister.

Social Housing: Allocation

1. Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the current process for allocating social housing. (AQO 9143/11-16)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): Thank you, John, for eventually getting to question 1. The current housing selection scheme has been in place since 2000. A consultation published in 2011 by the Housing Executive suggested four changes to the scheme. My predecessor took the view that a more fundamental review of the scheme was required, and this has been taken forward by my Department in close discussion with the Housing Executive and the Northern Ireland Federation of Housing Associations. It is clear from this review that there is strong support for many aspects of the current scheme. However, it is also clear that, after 15 years in operation, the scheme may benefit from some changes to make it operationally more effective.

Independent research was commissioned by my Department to consider the operation of the scheme in Northern Ireland, examples of good practice elsewhere and recommendations for change. This research was made available with a number of recommendations that would significantly alter the current scheme. The research was published by my Department for discussion in 2013, and, last year, I published a summary of the responses. I am of the view that changes are needed to the current scheme to ensure that those in the greatest objective need are prioritised and to ensure that the common waiting list operates smoothly and effectively to enable those who are in the greatest housing need to access accommodation.

I am continuing to give my consideration to the proposals for change as they develop and to ensure that any proposals are supported by evidence of the need for, and benefits of, changes to the scheme. My officials are working with the Housing Executive to consider the evidence available. Any proposals will be presented to the Social Development Committee as soon as possible.

Mr McCallister: Thank you, Mr Speaker. Sorry for being momentarily distracted.

I welcome the Minister's reply and the fact that he is looking at the issue. He will know that I have raised with him in private the point about when a family's circumstances change. Should we move to a model more like the one in the rest of the country, whereby housing allocation is reviewed after a set time? I think that, in other parts of the country, it is reviewed after seven years. Should we not look at and give serious consideration to a model that looks at changes in circumstances but does not necessarily seek to remove people from social houses, and consider whether the current model is most appropriate model for housing allocation, given the stresses on it?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his interest in the issue. We, as Members of the House, have to deal with it day and daily in our constituency offices, as people seek to find appropriate accommodation and, in some cases, accommodation.

This question is always asked: will housing need to continue to feature in the allocation process? That is a fundamental question that we need answered. There are no proposals at this time to move away from prioritising housing need. The research found that there is strong and continued support for the prioritisation of applications and the allocation of accommodation primarily on the basis of housing need. Stakeholders agreed that there was, and needed to be, a continual debate on how well the current system captures objective housing need. The work that we have done to date and the recommendations that we are considering are all part of how we can come to an agreed position. I say that for this reason: I am concerned that this will become another very divisive issue. There is nothing more sensitive, and there is nothing that could be more easily used by others for all the wrong reasons to generate opposition and strife around an issue on which there should be general, broad acceptance, which is ensuring that we meet the needs of people in need of priority housing.

Mr Dallat: I thank the Minister for his sincerity in appreciating just how important social housing is. Given that housing associations have been with us now for more than 20 years and are a mixed bag — some of them are good, while some of them have come before the Public Accounts Committee for all the wrong reasons — is the Minister of a mind to consider giving the Housing Executive responsibility for providing some social housing in the future?

Mr Storey: During the journey that I have been on for the past number of months, I have endeavoured to work with all the housing providers that we have. Housing is a very complex issue, and it is not solely down to one organisation. I appreciate the work that has been done, although there are times when we have had our differences with the Housing Executive and the housing associations.

Let us remember, however, that we also need the other providers, be they co-ownership or private sector. I said recently at the Federation of Housing Associations annual conference that I want to work continually and collectively with all the housing providers to give the best outcome. What is the best outcome? It is to continue to provide good-quality homes. Consideration should be given to the Member's point. However, he will also have to appreciate that I am trying to move a number of organisations at different paces and at different times. I have rehearsed the point that the one objective for them collectively is to keep the focus on the delivery of good-quality homes, because that is the one thing that will transform and change our society. We have had many examples in Northern Ireland of when we have delivered good-quality housing for our communities and our people.

Mr Cochrane-Watson: Does the Minister acknowledge that, under the current points system, there is a distinct group, namely our armed forces, who are not getting the necessary priority in housing and, indeed, the support that they deserve when they return to Civvy Street?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. Under the current housing selection scheme, priority is awarded on the basis of objective housing need, as we have said. Points will be awarded where the applicant or a member of the applicant's household is returning to civilian life at the end of their service in the armed forces and no suitable alternative accommodation is available or the applicant could not reasonably be expected to seek such accommodation.

Points will also be awarded where the applicant or a member of the applicant's household is the widow or civil partner of a recently deceased serviceman or servicewoman and is no longer eligible for married or other service quarters and no suitable alternative accommodation is available or the applicant could not reasonably be expected to seek such accommodation.

I have no plans at this stage to increase the number of points awarded to people who have left the armed forces, but the armed forces covenant proposes that members of the armed forces community should have the same access to benefits and social housing as many other citizens and should not be disadvantaged by the requirement for mobility whilst in service. My Department's policies, I trust, accurately reflect that aspiration.

Mr McNarry: The Minister quite rightly pointed out how this issue can be divisive, and one would hope that all efforts would be made to prevent that. Have we reached a position where, in order to increase understanding regarding housing provision, we might need to redefine what he calls "the need" these days?

Mr Storey: That is what I was trying to say in terms of the consultation that was published back in 2011. At that stage, the Housing Executive had suggested four changes to the scheme, and my predecessor brought forward the fundamental review of the scheme. I do not think that any of these things ever stay static. It is easy to come to this House and to refer to reviews and strategies and all of that, but the reality for us all is how we respond to this and how the response is given to our constituents and the Member's constituents who come to him on that particular issue. I assure the Member that we are giving serious consideration as to how we can make improvements where they can be made in a way that benefits and is in the best interests of people seeking quality homes.

Mr Speaker: Before I call Peter Weir, I inform Members that question 8 has been withdrawn within the appropriate protocols.

Queen's Parade, Bangor: Update

2. Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Queen's Parade regeneration scheme in Bangor. (AQO 9144/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. My Department stepped in and is taking forward a major comprehensive development scheme in Bangor town centre. This long-awaited and much-anticipated scheme will transform the town centre, bringing many new jobs, homes, shops and offices, and it will act as a major attraction for visitors. There is widespread support for my Department's actions, and officials regularly meet with statutory bodies, elected members, local business and community representatives to keep them informed about the process.

My officials, in partnership with the council, are on target to appoint a private-sector developer, who will be responsible for constructing the scheme in September 2016. The estimated cost of the scheme is £60 million, and it will be financed by the private sector. In March this year, my Department attained planning approval for a scheme that will provide in excess of 25,000 square metres of floor space. The new development includes residential, retail, commercial and hotel accommodation, restaurants, cafes, a courtyard plaza and public open space on Marine Gardens. The proposals will complement the public realm works, which are nearing completion, and restore the area into an attractive, vibrant, inclusive place for everyone to enjoy, and enhance the reputation of the town as a key tourist and shopping destination in Northern Ireland.

3.00 pm

Mr Weir: I welcome the Minister's response and the work that has been ongoing between his Department and local stakeholders, particularly the local council. What is the anticipated timescale for the start of the project?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member and concur with him on the benefit that this will bring to Bangor, which is a place that we all enjoy visiting. We have many happy memories of being in that seaside town, and I trust that these works will make a huge contribution to that experience for many others. The granting of the planning permission was a key step in the development of this process. I want to pay tribute to the council, not only for its financial contribution but for the work that it has done with my Department. We are working closely with the council and hope to appoint a private-sector development partner in September 2016 to take forward the proposals. It is estimated that ground works will commence about 12 to 18 months after the appointment of the developer.

Mr Cree: Minister, can you confirm to the House whether all the property has been acquired at this stage and whether there will be a development brief, as we used to know it?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. I can inform him that the majority of the property is now in the ownership of my Department. My officials have been negotiating with the three remaining property owners for a number of months to achieve agreement by mutual consent. Negotiations are ongoing. However, it is unlikely that agreement will be reached for all the properties, and the Department has issued intention-to-vest notices to the remaining property owners. My Department also requested a public inquiry into the decision to adopt a development scheme for Queen's Parade and the issue of vesting notices, and that is set for February 2016. A final decision on making and enacting the vesting order will be made following the public inquiry.

Public Realm Improvements: Lagan Valley

3. Mr Givan asked the Minister for Social Development, following the completion of the public realm scheme in Lisburn city centre, to outline any further public realm improvements planned for Lagan Valley. (AQO 9145/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. I attended the launch event for the newly completed Lisburn public realm scheme earlier this month and was impressed with the transformation brought about in the city centre, especially the event space in Market Square. I thank the Member and his colleagues for the hospitality that they showed me when we came to Lisburn city centre bearing good news.

The Lisburn public realm scheme was designed to create a world-class space with unique and interesting features and was introduced to showcase the retail offering in the city and to improve the pedestrian experience by reducing the dominance of the car in the city's streets. The transformed environment will be a great driver for investment, tourism and economic prosperity. The poor-quality environment in a number of streets in the city centre has become even more apparent following the recent public realm improvements, demonstrating that there is need for further intervention. My Department, in conjunction with the council, is exploring this potential in considering a Lisburn linkages project that would see public realm improvement works to the streets that link to the Market Square and Bow Street area. Naturally, the project will be subject to the necessary positive economic appraisal and to the availability of future finance.

Looking beyond Lisburn in the Lagan Valley constituency, I hope shortly to announce the appointment of a consultancy team to deliver a transportation assessment for Dromore town centre. My Department will continue to work with the council and its officers to identify suitable projects that could be taken forward in the main urban towns in the Member's constituency.

Mr Givan: I thank the Minister for that response. He should know that he is always welcome in Lagan Valley, especially when he brings the departmental chequebook, which we hope is opened again in due course. We, too, in Lagan Valley hope that the public realm scheme will act as a stimulus. There are already new shops opening, and we trust that that will continue to be the case.

The Minister will be familiar with the Laganbank quarter development, a project for which the council has developed a master plan.

Is this a scheme that the Department would be able to come on board with and support?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member and concur with his comments. In the way in which these schemes and projects are delivered, it is vital that we have a working relationship with the local council. We have seen delivery in what has been achieved in this scheme.

He referred to the Laganbank Quarter development scheme, a key development project identified in the Lisburn master plan. My Department considers that scheme to be in the public interest in order to achieve the proper planning of the area and as an impetus to the revitalisation of Lisburn city centre as a whole. It was on that basis that the notice of intention to adopt a development scheme in the Laganbank Quarter area was published in the local press during the last two weeks of February 2015. The 28-day objection period that followed attracted one representation. My Department, in conjunction with Lisburn and Castlereagh City Council, intends to appoint a consultancy team to support the bringing forward of a high-quality regeneration scheme on the proposed sites in the Laganbank Quarter area of the city of Lisburn.

Mr Allister: Minister, what lessons were learned from the Lisburn scheme, which was notorious in its delays etc? My reason for asking is that, judging by the volume of complaints that I am now receiving about the scheme in Ballymena, there seems to have been a dearth of lessons learned, in that delays and huge inconvenience seem to be the order of the day.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. Like him, I trust, I try to learn lessons. You always learn from revitalisation schemes and public realm works. There was some connectivity between those involved in one scheme and the other. He made reference to Ballymena in our North Antrim constituency. That is an ongoing situation, and, as he will probably know, that work has ceased for the Christmas period, as was agreed, and will recommence on 6 January, I think.

In these schemes, whether in Lisburn, Ballymena or any other part of Northern Ireland, you can always learn lessons. Maybe that is a lesson that the Member should take to heart.

Affordable Warmth Scheme

4. Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the delivery of the affordable warmth scheme across each council area. (AQO 9146/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for her question. The affordable warmth scheme is a new and innovative approach to tackling fuel poverty in Northern Ireland. The scheme is delivered in partnership with the 11 local councils and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. All 11 councils have shown full commitment to the scheme and, as well as assessing homes for affordable warmth, they have been able to introduce other council services such as home safety checks.

The affordable warmth scheme's focus is on helping those in the most severe fuel poverty by targeting them directly and installing measures to increase energy efficiency in their homes. This approach has been endorsed by leading fuel poverty experts in academia and lobbying organisations. The targeted nature of the scheme means that there is no need to take any additional measures to maximise take-up as local councils have extensive lists of potentially eligible homes to visit.

Almost £9 million in affordable warmth scheme grants has been approved to improve the energy efficiency of homes in the most severe fuel poverty. Those homes are receiving cavity and loft insulation, new and improved heating systems, and even replacement windows if needed.

My Department has recognised that it is taking longer than anticipated to process applications. The Housing Executive is carrying out an urgent review of the process, aimed at streamlining it, whilst maintaining financial and eligibility assurance levels. Some changes have already been made that will speed up the process. My Department will carry out a comprehensive end-of-year review to examine performance to date and scheme qualifying conditions and to process effectiveness and delivery arrangements, including the potential for easier access to installers.

Mrs McKeivitt: I thank the Minister for his response. I understand that the 11 councils are committed to the scheme. Has he any suggestions for the councils that have not taken up the scheme as much as others so that delivery can be improved? It is such a popular scheme, and we should try to get a geographical balance.

Mr Storey: We all have a duty to do that, and I encourage Members to do so in their constituency offices. However, the council should be the first port of call because we have now been able to secure the involvement and inclusion of, and a working relationship with, the 11 councils. When any new scheme is put in place, issues will always be identified. It goes back to an earlier question: can we learn any lessons? We are learning lessons as we go through the new affordable warmth scheme.

Some time ago, I had the opportunity to visit a number of homes, some in very remote areas, that have benefited from the scheme. One issue that was raised is how we address rural areas in particular. I visited some of those particularly rural locations and spoke to people in isolated areas whose homes have benefited from substantial works, including new heating systems and loft insulation. Rather than doing just one element of work to a property, a more holistic approach has been adopted, and that has been beneficial. I encourage Members to urge those with whom they are in contact in councils to make more information on the scheme available to people.

Mr Newton: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. Will he confirm when the review of the affordable warmth scheme will be completed and implemented? What are the expected outcomes of the review?

Mr Storey: That goes back to an earlier answer. When you look at any scheme, you can always learn from past experience. I do not want the review to last very long or to be protracted. I trust that, as we go through the review process, we will soon be able to identify where we can make useful and valuable changes so that, as I said to the Member who asked the previous question, we can enhance the scheme so that people will want to become part of it. We can, therefore, increase the number of people who become eligible and take up the scheme, as was intended in the first place.

Ms Boyle: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. The scheme has been very successful in my constituency. I commend the council for its work with the public on processing applications. Mr Newton asked the question that I intended to ask, but it is important to keep the scheme under review in order to ensure that those who are most in need get the most effective delivery.

Mr Storey: One question that is asked about the review is whether it will include an eligibility threshold. All regular household income, including DLA, is used to calculate a householder's income for the affordable warmth scheme. The personal independence payment (PIP) is not currently payable in Northern Ireland, but it will be soon with the passage of the welfare Bill. Consideration will have to be given to the treatment of PIP when the decision is reached regarding its introduction. However, my Department will review the affordable warmth scheme after one full year of operation, and we are coming close to that now. The review will include consideration of what is treated as income in order to qualify for the scheme, while maintaining a focus on those in the most severe fuel poverty.

We need to keep those people as our focus so that we get tangible outcomes.

3.15 pm

In the past, some of these schemes were looked upon just as a means of getting something, but it is about what the purpose of getting that something is. The purpose, in this instance, is to reduce fuel poverty and to enhance properties that have very poor insulation and, in some cases, no suitable heating arrangements.

As the Member knows, very rural areas, such as those in her constituency, have not benefited as a result of previous schemes. That is why we endeavoured to give this scheme a wider reach and took a thematic approach to the original information that informed it. All those things will be reconsidered as part of the review.

Vulnerable Persons Relocation Scheme

5. Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Social Development for an update of his Department's work on the vulnerable persons relocation scheme for Syrian refugees. (AQO 9147/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question on what is a very important issue. I ask that all Members give me and my Department, as well as the Office of the First and deputy First Minister, every assistance in dealing with the issue.

Work on the vulnerable persons relocation scheme is progressing well. My Department participates in the strategic planning group led by OFMDFM. A senior official from my Department leads an operational planning group made up of key stakeholders from central and local government and organisations in the voluntary sector that have expertise in supporting refugees.

Weekly meetings are taking place to draw up detailed plans for the arrival of the first group of refugees in Northern Ireland. All agencies involved are content that Northern Ireland will be ready for their expected arrival in December.

Mr Lunn: I thank the Minister for his answer. Have there been any discussions with OFMDFM about potential community relations problems? Is it the intention that the refugees should be clustered, if I may use that word, or dispersed across Northern Ireland?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his supplementary. The operational planning group, for which my Department is responsible, and OFMDFM are in ongoing discussions with a number of organisations. I am very aware of the challenges. I have to say that I have been disgusted by some comments that I have seen recently, particularly on social media. We are nearing Christmas, and the message of Christmas, of course, is the coming of the one who is the Prince of Peace with goodwill that we are called to extend to others in circumstances that none of us can comprehend. I had further discussions about the issue this morning and take a very personal interest. I believe that it is incumbent on us as an Executive, and as a community, to make our contribution to this national scheme and to keep as our focus the fact that we are dealing with real people who have real needs.

Mr Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We now move on to 15 minutes of topical questions.

Welfare Reform and Work Bill 2015

T1. Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister for Social Development, further to last Wednesday's legislative consent motion debate, to confirm what provisions in the Welfare Reform and Work Bill 2015 have been agreed in principle between Sinn Féin and the DUP or at least to confirm that he will fulfil the commitment that he made to Mr Attwood during the legislative consent motion (LCM) debate to provide him with the details in writing. (AQT 3171/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for her question. She is absolutely correct: her party colleague Mr Attwood, who I have paid tribute to in this House during that debate and in previous debates, wrote to me, and I can confirm that I will respond to him. Indeed, I have a copy of the response in front of me, and I will forward it to Mr Attwood later today.

The Member rightly raises the question of how we move this situation forward. There are some in this House who would have liked us to have failed, who would have liked us to be in a situation where we did not find a resolution to an issue that was causing real concern at the heart of these institutions. What happened last week with a Fresh Start was that it became a way for that new arrangement to be put in place to deal with this particular problem. As we can see from what is happening today in the House of Commons, progress is being made. I look forward to the successful conclusion of the debate on the Bill in the House of Commons and then reaching a point where work on the implementation can begin.

Mrs McKeivitt: The Minister will respect that some Members of this House are concerned by elements of the deal, particularly around welfare. There will be a benefits freeze, and, over the next four years, inflation will also mean that households on benefits will see reduced moneys. Will that reduce significantly in real terms the amount of top-up award recommended by Eileen Evason?

Mr Storey: None of us would seek to underestimate how difficult this has been and how challenging it will be in the future. I accept that that is, in part, one reason why we have had an impasse over past months. I have given assurances to Members who have concerns, including the Member's colleague and party, on numerous occasions.

I believe that one issue missing from the introduction of welfare reform in England in particular was a coordinated implementation. Coordination in policy implementation was missing, but I still believe that the policy intent is right. We must ensure that welfare does not become something that people are just subjected to for the rest of their lives. We must ensure that they are not imprisoned in a welfare system. Unfortunately, there are those who, due to one set of circumstances or another, are highly unlikely to be able to get off benefits, so we have to ensure that the welfare net is there to protect them. However, it should not become a barrier that prevents people from making further advancement.

As to the roll out of the policy over the next months and years, I am determined, as whoever succeeds me must be, that it will be done in a way that keeps those people for whom the system was made at the heart of all that we seek to do. Will that be a challenge? Yes. Will that create difficulties along the way? Yes. However, as we have proved in the past, if we are presented with those difficulties and challenges, we are more than up to addressing them.

Portrush: Redevelopment Update

T2. Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development, after welcoming the announcement at the end of last week of investment of £1.5 million for Portstewart and telling him that he is welcome to come back to East Londonderry with an attitude like that, for an update from the ministerial subgroup on the redevelopment of the harbour, the relocation of the train station and the identification of a site for a new hotel just around the corner in Portrush. (AQT 3172/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for her question. It seems that I am always welcome when I bring money, and I am not so welcome when the coffers are empty. However, I was delighted to be in Portstewart in the Member's constituency last week to announce a £1.5 million regeneration of the promenade there. I know that there are some Members of this House who probably spend more time on the promenade at Portstewart than in their own constituency and who will particularly welcome the enhancement of Portstewart.

When we go to Portrush, I think there are those who will welcome the fact that the announcement in relation to the Open Championship offers a major opportunity to ensure that there is sustainable development of the tourism product in Portrush and the north coast. It is my intention that a paper will be brought to the Executive very soon that will set out the programme of regeneration works for Portrush. The proposal for its delivery has been issued to my colleagues in the Executive. I want to ensure that Portrush is in the right place at the right time for taking advantage of the Open.

I also say to the Member that it is not just about Portrush. It is about the north coast and about Northern Ireland. Let us remember the huge influx of people there will be and the interest there will be in the most prestigious golf tournament that the world knows.

Ms Sugden: The Minister is always welcome to the prom for a Morelli's at any time. There is speculation around the Dunluce Centre site being a possible location for a hotel. Will the Minister confirm if that is an option he is considering?

Mr Storey: There is a piece of work that has been carried out, which I have just taken possession of, which sets out the potential options. The Member will be aware that there were some concerns by other hoteliers that something might come to Portrush that would in some way disadvantage them. I have now received that scoping exercise, which has been concluded. It states that Portrush would be able to accommodate a new four-star hotel and a boutique hotel. What I want to do now is have conversations with the council, local representatives and other hoteliers in the area, because I am equally conscious that competition is welcome in many cases. However, it has to be done in a way that is sensitive.

I greatly appreciate the contribution that many in the hotel and restaurant industry have made to the revitalisation of Portrush in recent times. I remember, going back not that many years ago, that Portrush was a place where you would not have felt very comfortable on a Saturday night because of the activities that went on late at night; but that image and that situation has changed completely, and Portrush has now become a vibrant local economy — a night economy that is growing. A key component of that will be the consideration of a new hotel as set out in the document.

Mr Speaker: Mr Adrian McQuillan is not in his place. I understand that his office was in touch, but was too late for the proper notification, but at least let me acknowledge that the contact was made.

Royal Exchange Project

T4. Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister for Social Development, following last week's announcement, to pledge that he will be the Minister to get the Royal Exchange project moving, given that he was in public office in 1995 when it first came on the scene, albeit that the Minister was probably at primary school, and, since then, it has not made the progress that was hoped — in fact, it has been an albatross around Belfast's neck. (AQT 3174/11-16)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. The Department did give careful consideration before terminating the Royal Exchange agreement with Leaside Investments Ltd, with our overriding aim to ensure that the north-east quarter of the city, including Royal Exchange, is developed for the maximum economic benefit for everyone. I can give the Member a personal commitment in the House today that I remain committed to transforming that part of the city, which has been in a state of disrepair for many years. I have asked my officials to explore how a statutory development scheme for the area can help establish an appropriate mix of uses. We will continue to work in partnership with stakeholders across the statutory, community, political and business sectors to make sure that we deliver the best scheme possible.

3.30 pm

I also say to the Member that that will include the city council. I have already had discussions with the city council because, as with Royal Exchange and other programmes that the council has — you know that it has set out its own plans for the future — it has to be done in consultation with the Department, the council and public representatives for the area. That is so that we can continue to build on the success that is our capital city and see progress made in a way that deals with areas that need to be addressed, such as Royal Exchange, as the Member rightly identified.

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Mo bhuíochas leis an Aire. Thanks to the Minister for his answer. I particularly welcome the commitment to work in partnership with Belfast City Council, because I have been heartened by its investment plans to regenerate the city centre. Does the Minister also agree that Royal Exchange does not need to be a retail-led development? Retail will be a part of it, but we should also factor in the Ulster University, which is now in the city centre, and, of course, culture and arts.

Mr Storey: Yes, I agree. This is where both the council and the Department need to be innovative in the way that they sometimes look at situations. We get easily criticised for never doing enough, and questions have been asked in the House about other locations, such as why do we not do this in a certain way. We have to come to a sensible conclusion that sometimes we need to identify what is best for that area and how it ties in with all the other elements of what is going on around it. The Member is absolutely right to refer to the university that is now located in that area. The Cathedral Quarter is not far away. Those are among the various elements that make up a very attractive and what has become a vibrant part of the city. This could add to that, and there is no guarantee that we will say that this should be retail only. It has to be a mix in a way that provides for that area.

Advice Sector: Additional Resources

T5. Ms Ruane asked the Minister for Social Development what additional resources he intends to provide to the advice sector for the remainder of this mandate. (AQT 3175/11-16)

Mr Storey: Since coming into office, we have, first of all, endeavoured as best we can to protect the budget that the advice sector has had. I value very much the way in which my Department and I depend on the advice sector to give people advice in an independent way that is apart from government. For example, in relation to mortgage advice, we increased the budget by something like 50% because we felt that, given the particular challenges to families and people struggling with their mortgage, it was vital that early intervention, information and mortgage advice were made available.

In terms of other advice, the Member will be aware, having been a Minister herself, that at this time of the year we all start to look to our budgets for next year. We have the comprehensive spending review, about which we will undoubtedly be given more detail on Wednesday in the House of Commons. I have to take into consideration all of those challenges. I say to the Member that I value the independent advice sector and the work that it does. We have endeavoured to ensure that that is reflected in the money that we give to it.

Mr Speaker: I am sorry; there is not time for a supplementary. That brings us to the end of Question Time. Thank you very much, Minister.

Ms Ruane: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. In the first part of Question Time, when junior Minister Ms Pengelly was answering some questions, she referred to the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister just as "Office of First Minister". I think that this House will be aware that no such office exists; it is a joint office and its full title is OFMDFM. I understand that it was Ms Pengelly's first Question Time. That said, she has worked at some level in that office for a significant time. Will the Speaker make sure that this does not happen again?

Mr Speaker: The Member has the matter now well and truly on the record. What we will do is observe this situation.

I believe and hope that we are moving beyond the point of people being petty. The fact is that, if people know the proper title of the office, it should be adhered to. In the particular circumstances, I do not feel that there is any need for me to take the matter any further.

I ask Members to take their ease while we change the top Table.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

Committee Business

European Social Fund

Debate resumed on motion:

That this Assembly acknowledges the important role of the European social fund in delivering essential support and services to the most vulnerable people in Northern Ireland; recognises the challenges faced by the community and voluntary sectors in the administration of the current and previous programmes; and calls on the Department for Employment and Learning to learn from its mistakes and to ensure that it works in partnership with the community and voluntary sector to deliver, efficiently and effectively, the European social fund programme.
— [Mr Swann (The Chairperson of the Committee for Employment and Learning).]

Mr Buchanan (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Employment and Learning): In winding on the motion, I thank everyone for their contributions.

It is fair to say that no one in the Chamber is in any doubt about the importance and value of the European social fund (ESF) in providing assistance to communities and organisations as they have sought to provide programmes across all our constituencies aimed at increasing the skills levels in the workforce and reducing economic inactivity. However, as the Chairman of the Committee, Mr Swann, mentioned, the ending of the 2007-2013 programme and the commencement of the 2014-2020 programme has caused many difficulties for the community and voluntary sector. Indeed, many groups found themselves in a dire financial position and uncertain of the way forward owing to the Department's delay in payment of invoices and the lack of clarity, the confusion and the inconsistencies around the incoming programme. That is why, in his opening remarks, the Chairman reflected on the issue's importance to the Committee, in that it met with departmental officials and the Minister on 14 separate occasions in the past two years, and, in turn, the Minister acknowledged the influence that the Committee had on his Department in seeking to address some of the concerns.

At this juncture, I want to thank the Minister. I know that he has got a bit of a bashing in the Chamber today, but, whenever things were difficult, the Minister always came to the Committee, gave us an update on the situation at that moment and took the hard questions. We have to acknowledge that and give credit where it is due. However, the Department still has to learn from the mistakes and put in place mechanisms that will deal with the situation so that it does not happen again. The community and voluntary sector delivers excellent work, and we cannot have it struggling for cash and for clarity on the way forward simply because of a fault in the Department.

In reflecting on what the Members who contributed to the debate said, I note that the Chair talked about the slow process of vouching for the current programme and urged the Minister to reflect on that. The Chair also spoke about the requirement for tutors under the programme to receive a qualification from the Ulster University (UU) and expressed some concern about that. He also talked about the two judicial reviews and asked where they were at at the moment. When the Minister responded, I noted that he did not give an answer to that. A number of contributors talked about the 50% of funding up front, but, again, there are questions around that: is it short-term funding or is it for the duration of the programme? I would like clarification from the Minister on that.

My colleague Sydney Anderson highlighted the dependence that the community and voluntary sector has on the funding and how it felt a sense of injustice at the Department's handling of the situation. However, he did acknowledge the additional resources being used by the Department to administer the fund and questioned whether accredited training programmes had been delivered for staff.

The Minister mentioned at the Committee that accredited training programmes would be delivered for staff but, again, we are none the wiser on whether that has happened yet.

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): Will the Member give way?

Mr Buchanan: Yes.

Dr Farry: I apologise for missing some of the issues. The accelerated payments will be temporary, pending the stabilisation of the situation. We will keep that under review; it is not meant to be the permanent situation and the improvements in processes should lead to efficient payments being the norm in the very near future.

With respect to the judicial reviews, given that they are sub judice, I cannot give a detailed answer, but all will emerge in due course.

Mr Buchanan: I thank the Minister for that. He missed the bit about the 50% funding up front and whether that was for the short term or the duration of the programme.

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for giving way. That is what I was trying to say. It will be a temporary measure, pending the stabilisation of the payment structures. We will keep it under review but it is not meant to be the permanent situation.

Mr Buchanan: I thank the Minister for the clarity on that issue.

Ms McGahan spoke of the role of the women's centres and the important work that they carry out, highlighting their reliance on ESF and the impact that their work has on childcare places in rural areas. She also called on the Department to remove the qualifications gap for participants on the ESF programme.

Mr Maginness quite rightly focused on the difficulties in the application process but he also took time to reflect on the excellent work carried out under the ESF programme. He highlighted the Kickstart to Work programme in the north-west, which is delivered by both councils, and the good partnership approach that it demonstrates. He also drew attention to the slow payment of funds from the closing programme. Almost every Member spoke about the difficulty with the slow process of delivering funds to the community groups.

Ms Lo spoke of the success stories and some of the good work that has been done. She also mentioned the pressures on the Department, noting the competitive nature of the programme, and spoke of her personal knowledge of GEMS NI and the difficulties that it has faced. She noted the Department's willingness to change, acknowledged that the process had seen a number of problems, creating cash-flow problems for organisations, and said that the Minister had acknowledged the frustrations. Acknowledging frustrations is one thing but doing something to address them is another. We need to see action to address the situation that groups find themselves in.

Mr Easton spoke of the range of projects funded under the ESF and reiterated the impact that there has been on communities where groups have failed to gain funding. He highlighted that that impacted on jobs and agreed with Mr Anderson that communication from the Department had failed. He called on the Minister to apologise for that and other failures in the process. He also said that those problems had damaged the Department.

Mr McCann highlighted the many hurdles that groups had to get over to receive the funding. He also highlighted the confusion that surrounded the application process and the failure of the Department to learn from good practice elsewhere. That is a very important point. Why did the Department not look to other Departments for good practice and take a cue from them to try to get over the problem?

Mr Weir spoke of his experience of the community and voluntary sector and highlighted the women's sector for its excellent work. He reiterated the many problems in the application process and spoke of the lack of understanding of the sector in the Department. He drew further attention to the impact on groups and individuals of a failed process. Again, the same message is coming through, and I hope that the Minister and the Department are getting the message that there is a failed process that has caused huge problems across the community and voluntary sector.

Mr Flanagan welcomed the Minister's willingness to rectify the problems in the process but drew attention to the problems in rural communities and said that they were adversely affected by the process. He argued that the delivery of the programmes through a competitive tendering process, rather than directly by DEL, had resulted in a widening of the gap in delivery between urban and rural areas.

Ms Sugden spoke of her concerns about the amount of money owed to groups from the programme. She highlighted changes in the contract arrangements for funders and questioned the legality of that. She requested that the Minister look at the new programme and take responsibility for the shortfalls.

3.45 pm

The Minister acknowledged the administration problems in the process. In mitigation, he spoke of the tight timescales for the process; he also spoke about the competitive nature of the programme and said that it exists for the benefit not of the voluntary and community sector but of the individuals whom it works with. I welcome the Minister's continued engagement in the matter, his continued endeavours to minimise the concerns of Members and the Committee, and his intentions to have the outgoing programme closed by the end of this year. That is very welcome indeed.

I am sure that everyone will agree that this has been a successful and positive debate on a very important issue.

Once again, I thank Members for their contributions and the Minister for his response and clarity during the process. I support the motion.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly acknowledges the important role of the European social fund in delivering essential support and services to the most vulnerable people in Northern Ireland; recognises the challenges faced by the community and voluntary sectors in the administration of the current and previous programmes; and calls on the Department for Employment and Learning to learn from its mistakes and to ensure that it works in partnership with the community and voluntary sector to deliver, efficiently and effectively, the European social fund programme.

MLAs: Reduction in Number

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who are called to speak will have five minutes.

Mr Dickson: I beg to move

That this Assembly notes that the Stormont House Agreement contains a deadline to reduce the number of MLAs from 108 to 90 by 2021 and the number of Executive Departments in time for the 2016 Assembly term; believes that there is an opportunity to reform the size of the Assembly and the number of Executive Departments to the same timescale; and calls on the Executive to ensure any legislation will see that the reduction in the number of MLAs takes places in time for the 2016 elections.

The context of this motion has changed little since the emergence of the so-called Fresh Start deal last week; the fundamental thrust of the motion remains the same. Without doubt, there will be many opportunities to discuss the wider 'Fresh Start' document as a whole and the individual components in it, but the motion that I bring forward today discusses the size of the Assembly. The former Stormont House Agreement committed the Assembly to a reduction in the number of MLAs per constituency from six to five by 2021. Of course, that does not preclude it from happening earlier.

Before and after, some political parties, including mine, advocated that it should occur earlier, particularly taking effect for the May 2016 Assembly elections. However, we now have a situation where the reduction in the number of MLAs is to take effect immediately after the 2016 election. While that might mean at the next scheduled election in 2021, it could also apply to any election called earlier — indeed, to one called as early as the end of June 2016 in the context of the inability to form an Executive after the 2016 election. That strikes me as a case of, "Oh Lord, make me holy, but not just yet".

The principle that the Assembly is too large and needs to be reduced in size has been accepted and is won; there is no debate over that argument any longer. However, what is the reason for delaying its implementation? I can only presume that it is party-political self-interest rather than the public good. There are, quite simply, no good reasons for delay. It is notable that the Executive are set to proceed with the reduction of Departments with effect from the start of the new mandate. That, of course, is the right thing to do.

However, this process is a significantly more complicated task than a reduction in the number of MLAs. For example, it will involve primary legislation in the Assembly and, in turn, a transfer of functions order. Behind the scenes, a huge amount of work is being conducted by civil servants on the practical issues of finance, human resources, managing the estate and internal restructuring.

By contrast to reducing the number of Departments, reducing the number of MLAs per constituency from six to five only requires passing a simple piece of legislation. Indeed, the Assembly Members (Reduction of Numbers) Bill is annexed to the 'Fresh Start' document. Applying this reduction to the May 2016 election requires only one small change to one clause. While it is important to recognise that anything other than a reduction from six to five Members would involve more complicated legislation at Westminster, including amendment to the Northern Ireland Act 1998, this option for a particular change from six to five per constituency has been given to the Assembly. There is also no practical difficulty in implementation. Reduction in time for the election in May would not cause any difficulty to the Electoral Office or indeed the Electoral Commission. Quite simply, the request is to elect five rather than six Members per constituency. There is no need for any transitional arrangements or phasing arrangements.

Some Members may point to a forthcoming review of parliamentary constituencies and, by extension, Assembly constituencies during the lifetime of this mandate of the Westminster Parliament. There is a suggestion that the number of Northern Ireland constituencies might fall from 18 to 16. However, the legislation on the reduction of MLAs is future-proofed. It will apply in just the same way if there are 18 or 16 parliamentary constituencies. The only difference would be having 90 MLAs or 80 MLAs.

The rationale for this reduction is clear and strong. Northern Ireland is overgoverned. We have substantially more MLAs per head than both Scotland and Wales and overwhelmingly more than the United Kingdom Parliament. Quite simply, the figures speak for themselves. The people of Scotland have one MSP per 40,300 people. The Welsh have one Assembly Member per 51,000 people. Westminster MPs represent, on average, 98,000 people. By stark comparison, our 108 Assembly Members represent 16,800 constituents each. In addition, we have 460 district councillors in Northern Ireland and 18 MPs. That really does suggest that we are overgoverned. If we were to apply Scotland or Wales's ratios to this Assembly, we would have 44 or 35 MLAs respectively. What is being proposed today is nowhere near that reduction, but it is, in my view and that of the Alliance Party, a step in the right direction.

The experience of both Scotland and Wales shows that somewhat smaller Assemblies do not undermine good governance. They have sufficient Members to provide for effective scrutiny and to people their Committee systems, allowing for proper accountability. Especially in the context of fewer Departments, no one can credibly maintain that we would not have more than enough MLAs to function.

An Assembly of 108 MLAs is also out of context with Northern Ireland's recent past of previous devolved structures. Since the dissolution of the old Stormont House of Commons, we have seen the following bodies with these numbers of Members. Sunningdale set up an Assembly of 78 Members. The Assembly of rolling devolution in the early 1980s contained the same number of seats. The Northern Ireland Forum contained 110, but that was a very different attempt to be inclusive. It seems we have held to this for over 20 years and in the foundations of the agreement that was reached to set up this Assembly.

Six multi-Member constituencies are also an anomaly in terms of the single transferable vote in other jurisdictions. The Republic of Ireland has historically tended to have three-, four- or five-Member constituencies.

More locally, we have seen the trend to move away from large multi-member DEAs, and our recent local government elections saw a large number of five-member DEAs. Even within a divided society such as Northern Ireland, six-Member constituencies are more than is required for strong proportionality outcomes. I have read comments on how smaller parties might perform in five-Member constituencies. Based on the last electoral outcome, it would be little different from where they are today. Frankly, PR looks after small parties.

The Alliance Party is concerned about the implications of dropping to below five Members per constituency, but we do not believe that a move to five-Member constituencies would radically alter outcomes. Indeed, we tabled today's motion as the fifth-largest party in the Assembly. Some might suggest that a reduction would be a bigger risk to us than to any of the four parties that are currently larger than us. However, we are convinced that it is quite simply the right thing to do. Over the next five years, the reduction would also save around £11 million. While that seems relatively modest in the grand scheme of things, every little helps. Like most Members, I could readily produce a list of matters on which we could spend the money.

The wider point is leadership. Many people are already suffering as a consequence of public spending cuts, and we know that many public servants have had their pay and conditions restricted. In that context, I believe that it is critical that the Assembly is seen to show leadership in reducing its own costs. Ultimately, people will simply not understand the political parties that think that it would be a good idea to have this change in place after the next Assembly election but do not think that it is good enough to have it in place in time for the coming Assembly election. The burden of proof lies on those who are arguing for delay, which is why something should happen now.

Mr Weir: In my contribution, I will try to avoid straying into the area of holier than thou, because others in the Chamber may have a certain monopoly on holiness on these issues. While it is perfectly within the rights of any party to select whatever motion they want — I certainly defend their right to do that, irrespective of the subject — I was somewhat bemused to see this motion. Had it not been for complications with the timescale, the debate on the motion could have happened last week or the week before. Why am I bemused? First, the issue was largely settled in the Stormont House Agreement, and, secondly, it was a key subject matter in the current round of talks. It was raised on numerous occasions and was directly on the agenda and raised by the Secretary of State as a topic to which all parties were available. One feels that the right place for a debate and a resolution was in the talks process. It would have been a little bit strange had the issue, which is germane to the talks process, hit the original timetable, been introduced in the middle of the talks process and debated on the Floor.

I take the proposer's moral high ground with a pinch of salt. We are told that the Alliance Party is happy enough with five-Member constituencies. One may come to the conclusion that five Members in the current boundaries may suit the Alliance Party, but it would be a dreadful attack on democracy if we were to move to a four-seater, even though the proposer indicated that three- and four-seaters were commonplace elsewhere. The cynic in me might suggest that the Alliance Party is grandstanding slightly on the issues that it feels might be numerically to its advantage.

I welcome the fact that there has been some consensus about the size of the Assembly and five-Member constituencies. We have advocated that as a party for a long time. We indicated that the contents of the Stormont House Agreement were a compromise between all parties, as was 'A Fresh Start'. At the time of the Stormont House Agreement, we felt that it should be four-Member constituencies. We believed that what existed was going too far, but we accepted the compromise. From that perspective, as I said, we took what was at Stormont House, and we now have legislation that is being proposed via 'A Fresh Start'. Rather than simply tabling a motion, we committed ourselves directly to legislation.

Unlike some of the Members opposite, we are walking the walk, rather than simply talking the talk.

4.00 pm

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Weir: I will give way briefly.

Mr Dickson: I appreciate what the Member is saying and genuinely appreciate his saying that legislation will be brought forward. Therefore, the issue is not the bringing forward of legislation. We are all on common ground on that and, I think, when it comes to the numbers. The question is quite simply this: why not do it now?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Weir: The principal reason is probably twofold. Boundary changes have been mentioned. In the spirit in which we adopted the changes to the departmental structures, there was at one stage — I am sure that the recently departed Mr Farry would acknowledge that perhaps we would not have had the same debate had this happened earlier — a midterm proposal to abolish DEL. The feeling was that we needed to come up with a system to which there was no particular emotional attachment or, indeed, party advantage or attachment. The position now is that we will face a review by the Boundary Commission, which is uncertain about the number of seats that there will be. There is no advantage or disadvantage to any party in the Chamber from facing the Boundary Commission because no one knows whether the outcome will suit any particular party. I suspect that, as tends to be the case in these things, there will be swings and roundabouts: in some areas, it will benefit you; in other areas, it will not.

It strikes us that the appropriate and best time to do that is when we can take what would be two changes — the reduction from six seats to five and the potential change to the number of parliamentary constituencies, which may yet be effected by way of change to the electoral register in England —

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Weir: No: I have given way once and have only a short time.

It is said that the most dangerous thing is to try to leap a chasm in two leaps. We are committed to our position. Our belief is that it makes sense that, if we are going to make changes, we should make them at the same time, and they would, therefore, take effect from the election after next. By then, the Boundary Commission will have put in place its review, and we will all take our chances with it. Above all, irrespective of the arguments about a particular set of numbers, is the fact that in 'A Fresh Start', we made an agreement — I appreciate that it does not bind the Members who tabled the motion — to try to take things forward for all the people of Northern Ireland, as we did with the Stormont House Agreement that involved compromises for everybody, and we did not necessarily get what we wanted. We will be a party of integrity. We will stick to what we have signed up to in 'A Fresh Start'. The motion runs contrary to what is in that agreement.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member must draw his remarks to a close.

Mr Weir: We will, therefore, oppose the motion.

Mr Sheehan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate on a reduction in the number of MLAs; a reduction in the number of Departments; and the timescale in which all that takes place. Before dealing with those issues, it is important to caution Members not to major too heavily on quantitative comparisons between the Assembly and the other devolved institutions on these islands. None of those institutions faces the same difficulties as we do here. None of them was established as a response to 30 years of conflict and the serious fault lines and divisions in society that we have here in the North. That is the context.

Sinn Féin has a relaxed view on the number of Departments. If governance could be enhanced, duplication eradicated, bureaucracy reduced and savings increased by reducing the number of Departments from 12 to nine, it would be difficult to argue against. It is not just the voters who want more streamlined cost-effective government; we also want that. Every Member of the Assembly should welcome any change that brings more efficiency and effectiveness. We also agree that the number of MLAs should be reduced from 108 to 90. That means that there would be five MLAs in each constituency instead of the current six, notwithstanding any Boundary Commission changes.

We depart from the proposers of the motion on when the reduction takes place. The proposers would have it take place before the 2016 Assembly elections. We disagree, and let me explain why. It is important to give context to the current number of MLAs.

One of the criteria that the architects of these institutions were given when they were designing them was that they should be as representative and as inclusive as possible. That is still probably the most important concept for building and sustaining confidence in the institutions. The worry, therefore, is that fewer MLAs would lead to a deficit in representation and inclusiveness.

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Sheehan: Yes.

Mr Dickson: I understand what the Member says with regard to confidence in the institutions, but they have been here for some 20 years. Would you not share with me a great deal of disappointment and frustration that you and others have failed to build that confidence?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Sheehan: I wonder whether the Member includes himself when he says, "and others".

The fears that I have are assuaged to some extent by the reform of public administration, whereby more powers have been given to councils and d'Hondt is run over a four-year period rather than over one year, which happened previously. That is welcome, and it enhances the principle of equality. However, there are still some councils in which the concept of equality has yet to be fully implemented.

In the Assembly, the question is whether a reduction in the number of MLAs would have a negative impact on representation or equality. There is, for example, a danger that some constituencies will be left without a nationalist representative in some cases or a unionist representative in others. I suppose that the Alliance Party might not worry about that, but it might also have an impact on that party. More worryingly, research shows that the number and percentage of female representatives will fall if the overall number of MLAs is reduced for the 2016 election. That would be a retrograde result for the Assembly and for inclusiveness and equality. By postponing the overall reduction until 2021, we will give all parties a chance to prepare for that possibility and to ensure equality of opportunity for women in particular in those parties. Sinn Féin, obviously, takes its responsibilities on the issue very seriously; we try to promote women as much as possible in the party. My colleague Caitríona Ruane will deal with that in her contribution to the debate later. It would be the wrong message entirely for the Assembly to send out if, after the 2016 election, there were to be fewer female representatives than there are now. For that reason, I oppose the motion.

Mr Attwood: A number of contributors have already referred to Stormont House. While there remains a dispute about what was or was not agreed there, one matter that was born in Stormont House and was then settled in the discussions afterwards, was how we would manage the issue of the reduction in the number of MLAs. Given that it was a settled matter — you can hear echoes of that in the contributions made by the DUP and Sinn Féin — it should remain a settled matter rather than be revisited on the far side of this motion.

The Assembly institutions and the Executive and their conduct need reform. That is why, light-touch though some of it may be, in March the Executive agreed to mechanisms to ensure that three Ministers would have more authority around the Executive table. That is why some moderate proposals have been made in respect of how to manage a petition of concern and so on and so forth, including the number of Departments. That is all necessary and healthy. Any institution, be it an elected one or any other organisation, that is going to ensure that it lives up to best practice and serves those whom it seeks to serve needs to keep under constant interrogation and analysis the way in which it conducts its affairs, including its internal operations. That is why we in the SDLP believe that there should be more reform of how the Chamber conducts its affairs.

I will take one moment to give an example. This afternoon, the House of Commons will have a very short number of hours to accelerate through the Welfare Reform Bill that was part and parcel of the legislative consent motion (LCM) last week. That will have an enormous impact on our people, independent of the enormous impact on our people that will arise from London legislating for whatever it is that has or has not been agreed in principle in respect of the Welfare Reform and Work Bill that is currently in Westminster. That is why the SDLP returns to its proposal to have a dedicated welfare reform Committee as part and parcel of the life of these institutions to interrogate how welfare is or is not working in law and practice, not least now, because we have abandoned and surrendered to London our responsibility on those matters up to the end of 2016. The party will write to the authorities in the Chamber and in the Assembly to urge the creation of a welfare reform Committee both as an example of reform and to mitigate what might be coming down the road because of the impact of the LCM. For all those reasons, we welcome the issue of reform, but we think that the motion is overreaching, given that this is a settled matter.

I join Mr Weir and Mr Sheehan in emphasising some of the reasons why, whilst we need to move in the direction of a reduction to five Members per constituency by 2021, this is not the time and place to do so. It seems to me that the proposer gave technical reasons that did not address the points made, especially those made by Mr Sheehan. It is a little-known fact that, when the SDLP had a bigger role in the Assembly through our electoral mandate, it was the SDLP that insisted on the number of Ministers that we will have up until 2016. That was the call made by Seamus Mallon and the SDLP. Why? It was because we wanted to have maximum ownership of and inclusion in the institutions in a situation where exclusion had been part of the culture and practice of some when it came to the conduct of politics and government in Northern Ireland. Therefore, to maintain the principle of inclusion, even though some might have argued that it did not serve the interests of the bigger parties, one of the bigger parties at that stage made that argument, and that argument continues.

Why does that argument continue? It is because last week, as the Alliance Party understands better than anybody, we had a two-party deal that was not respectful of the principle of inclusion. It advertised why we continue to need to have principles of inclusion in the spirit that Mr Sheehan outlined, when it comes to the conduct of politics and government in Northern Ireland. We may have moved a long way from the past. We may be slowly moving, although some would doubt it —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Attwood: — towards an even better future than we have had over the last 20 years, but at the heart of it is inclusion. This is not the time to move in the direction of the Alliance motion, because, in our view, not least because of last week, it sits in conflict with that spirit.

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful for the opportunity to speak on the motion. Like others, I am not sure why Alliance has tabled the motion. Clearly, it has been overtaken by events. In my view, this is a dead parrot. This is not a parrot that is pining for the fjords; this parrot is dead. One of the reasons why it appears to be dead is that, as seemed to be confirmed, even the Stormont House Agreement has been superseded by the Sinn Féin/DUP so-called Fresh Start.

It might be useful for the wider public to have a refresher on the number of Stormont agreements that we have had. Of course, we all started off with the Haass talks, and they were at the Stormont Hotel. We moved from there to Stormont House, and then we had Stormont Castle, and now we are back to Stormont and Fresh Start. It appears to me that perhaps we should have the Stormont Portakabin agreement, because that, at least, will deal with temporary structures.

The post-2016 arrangement on the reduction of MLAs was part of the Stormont House Agreement of Christmas 2014, which the Alliance Party signed up to, unless it knows something more than the rest of us and which we have not yet heard.

4.15 pm

Let me also say that the Ulster Unionist Party supports moves to reduce the costs of the Northern Ireland Assembly and the Executive. We want to see better governance in Northern Ireland, because what has been served up since 2007 could in no way be described as better governance. This is meant to be a legislative Assembly but, only last week, powers were sent back to London so that this place did not have to take any difficult decisions. It is no wonder that the public may, indeed, look at this House with some disdain, because if there are apparently any difficult decisions to be taken, Sinn Féin and the DUP offload them to somebody else. Sinn Féin sends powers back to London without even blushing now. First, it entered Stormont, a devolved Assembly in the United Kingdom — which, of course, I very much welcome — and now it is sending back powers to London.

Of course, in terms of saving money, only weeks ago, Sinn Féin and the DUP voted against reducing the number of special advisers and capping their pay. The more things change, the more they stay the same. That is despite OFMDFM, or the Executive Office as it will be known, losing 16 areas of responsibility. There are obviously quite a few types of protected species in this House.

We want to see savings made across the board, including a reduction in the number of MLAs, but that should be done as part of a complete package of measures, not in the slapdash manner that has so characterised the Northern Ireland Executive.

Mr Dickson: I thank the Member for giving way. I appreciate that it has to be part of a detailed package of measures, and whatever one may think of Fresh Start, it will actually deliver a piece of legislation to the House on which Members will have the opportunity to vote — that is legislation. However, the legislation will promote voting for a reduction in the size of the Assembly in 2021. Will the Member not join me in seeking to have that legislation amended to make it 2016? Perhaps he is the biggest dead parrot in this establishment, having been killed off by his party leader.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Kennedy: Let me reassure the Member: this party is not afraid of any election. We have already heard the reasons clearly outlined for why your party could not support a reduction to four Members per constituency, because that would effectively cull the Alliance Party, but anyway. We will ignore that.

As I said, we want to see a complete package of reform. I have to say that Alliance is advocating change on an agreement that, apparently, it does not support and on which the ink is not yet dry. We can see that the ink is not dry even in the response of the leader of Sinn Féin on Belfast City Council, who seems to be concerned about the early implementation of and commitment to corporation tax. Let us see where this latest agreement takes us.

We also need to see what protections will be in place for some of the smaller parties, such as those represented by single MLAs. Of course, at the same time, we cannot ignore the hypocrisy of the Alliance Party because, remember, it takes two Ministries despite having only enough electoral support for one. We will wait to see whether the Alliance Party wants to do anything about that. I have heard senior members of the Alliance Party say that it has two Ministries because of its electoral support; that is not correct. It has been granted, effectively, a second Ministry primarily by Sinn Féin and the DUP, which corrupts what the Alliance Party agreed in the Belfast Agreement.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member bring his remarks to a close?

Mr Kennedy: So, for all those reasons, the Ulster Unionist Party will oppose the motion today.

Ms Ruane: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Cuirim fáilte roimh an díospóireacht seo. Cuirim fáilte roimh chomhaontú na seachtaine seo caite. Tá sé thar am go mbeidh muid ag déanamh dul chun cinn leis an obair a chaitheadh muid a dhéanamh.

I welcome the debate. Unlike some others in the Chamber, I welcome the agreement that we had last week. All our constituents want to see us moving forward and getting on with the work.

I thank the Alliance Party for tabling the motion. It has received some criticism about the timing. I do not share that criticism, because it brought forward the motion before an agreement was reached. Therefore, to be fair to my colleagues in the Alliance Party, I suppose that they could call it helping set the agenda.

My colleague Pat Sheehan spoke about what was agreed on reducing the number of Departments and on reducing the number of MLAs from six to five. I share the view expressed by him and others, including Alex Attwood, in their comments on the context that we are coming out of here; that is, the context of conflict, lack of representation, and the Civil Service and direct rule Ministers running the North of Ireland. I and my party believe that it was very important to have the broadest possible representation.

In my constituency, which is seen as a majority nationalist constituency, we have two Sinn Féin Members, two SDLP Members, one UUP Member and one DUP Member. If we had changed the rules, that would not be the case. I think that it is in all my constituents' —

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Ms Ruane: I will.

Mr Dickson: I hear what she says about the make-up of her constituency. If we change the number of Members, that is called democracy.

Ms Ruane: Absolutely. There are many different ways of having democracy. Mr Dickson cited Westminster as if it were democratic. If you look at the critique of the first-past-the-post system, it is fundamentally undemocratic.

Therefore, it is not useful to use it as an argument against us here.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank the Member for giving way. I am sure that she knows her constituency better than I do, and I do not want her to embarrass herself, but there has not been an Ulster Unionist MLA in her constituency for some time.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Ms Ruane: Gabh mo leithscéal. We have somebody representing the unionist community — John McCallister — whom I have tremendous respect for in our constituency and who does tremendous work. He began as an Ulster Unionist, and now he is still representing people from the unionist community, despite the fact that Mr Nesbitt might have difficulties with that.

We have an RPA for local councils, policing, health and education. I welcome that. We are at least beginning to change the undemocratic deficit that we had before.

People spoke about gender. Members right across the political spectrum — I see members of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee here — will know about the low number of women that we have in the Assembly. It is absolutely disgraceful. If we do not do something about that in all parties, we are ensuring that we are not representing our constituencies adequately.

Mr Lyttle: Will the Member give way?

Ms Ruane: I have already taken two interventions, Chris, and one was from your party, so if you do not mind.

What I would like to see is a much more representative House, with many more women in it. In bringing about the changes that we are bringing about, I am aware that reports have shown that there are potential dangers to women. The challenge that I am throwing out here to every single one of us is that we need to say to our parties that they need to put women into winnable seats. Otherwise, we will come back here in 2021 worse than we are now, and where we are now is nothing short of disgraceful. That is why we have an Assembly and Executive Review Committee report, and a very good report it is. However, Sinn Féin is the only party that supports quotas. If we are really to change things, I argue that we need quotas. That is why I am going to argue here that I do not think that 2016 is the time to make the changes, because I do not want to see unrepresentativeness. It will only create even more difficulties down the line.

The other point that I will make is that I have represented my party as part of various delegations and have met delegations that come here from conflict areas. As someone who has worked in deep conflict areas throughout the world, such as Nicaragua, El Salvador and South Africa, during very difficult times, I know that there are people in those areas who would love to see the process that we have.

I argue that we should not take for granted where we are now. Look at our world today. Look at the difficulties that we are encountering. It is important that we put resources into ensuring that we are democratic and representative. For that reason I argue that we should wait for another few years. I welcome the agreement. Let us put it in place now, but let us also make sure that each one of us is proactive in ensuring that we have more women on the ticket.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Beidh mé ag labhairt in aghaidh an rúin. Like my two party colleagues, I am unable to support the motion. Our only issue with the motion is the timeline proposed, which is the election of 2016. When Mr Dickson was introducing it, he said, “Oh Lord, make me holy, but not just yet”. In that spirit, I think that it is, “Lord, don’t make me holy, but we’re maybe a week too late”.

We have already seen the settled will coming out of the talks that 2021 is a realistic proposition to change the number of MLAs. That will bring a degree of certainty. From some of the comments today, it is obvious that, whether or not we reduce the number of MLAs, the 2016 election campaign has certainly kicked off. People are up and ready and fighting that election in the Chamber this afternoon. Throughout the discussions at the AERC, we were never opposed in principle to the idea of reducing the number of MLAs. We always argued that it should come at an appropriate time in the history of the Assembly.

There is absolutely no doubt — Stewart Dickson talked about it — that there is an admirable cost-saving aspect to this, and we should always be mindful of that in the current climate. However, for us there is always — Pat Sheehan, in particular, outlined this — the issue of representation and, indeed, under-representation. We have to protect ourselves against that given our recent and, indeed, distant history of under-representation and misrepresentation. Despite the claim of democratic structures and “Let the people decide” etc, under-representation was always a feature. I do not think that anybody would disagree with that nod of the head. There was a degree of misrepresentation. Indeed, Alex Attwood brought a context to that when he spoke.

All you have to do is look at the 2011 election results and see who took the sixth seat. You can never rerun an election by reconfiguring the figures for five Members, but it is a broad enough sheet to have a look at. You can see who was elected sixth and what that would mean in terms of representation. We have now come to an agreement, but we should be very serious about that representation. Pat Sheehan talked about how the RPA had brought in a layer of representation that was never present before. That was hard argued-for and hard won and then delivered by the Assembly. I cannot predict the outcome of the 2016 or 2021 election, but it is fair to say that people who have been good voices in the Assembly will perhaps be missing as a result.

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCartney: Go ahead, yes.

Mr Dickson: It is a question of simple practicalities. Does the Member agree with me that, even if we pass the legislation that is contained in ‘A Fresh Start’, which requires the election of five Members per constituency from 2021, if these institutions meet a brick wall the day after the 2016 election and we cannot form an Executive, a further election will be held and that will be to five-Member constituencies?

Mr McCartney: I suppose that, now that you have brought that to people’s attention, there may be mitigation. Let us be optimistic and assume that all the parties here will want to represent the people out there, there will be a Programme for Government and we will proceed.

Mr Weir: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCartney: Yes.

Mr Weir: Does the Member agree with me that, if directly after the election in May 2016 we have to have another Assembly within a month, we will have a lot more to worry about than whether there are five seats or six seats?

4.30 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr McCartney: That is a point well made.

I want to make the following point quickly, as I am conscious of time. One of the striking things about the sixth seat — Caitríona Ruane has already said it — is that women will suffer adversely. I have literally only 20 seconds to make that point, and we should not take that step without having some sort of sense. I have an extra minute. My apologies. Thanks, Claire Hanna. I looked up there and she gave me a puzzled look. Thank you very much. It is important that we feel that it is the appropriate time to do what we are doing. We have now signalled that we have five years, but in those five years we have to look at the idea that voices will be missing and, in particular, at the under-representation of women.

The recent inquiry by the Assembly and Executive Review Committee pointed out steps that could be taken. There is no doubt that there is reluctance by some parties in relation to quotas, and I am not making a party political point. Other institutions and democracies thrive when they introduce quotas. Sometimes, people here can have a narrow view of what democracy means. They look for a simple, single example of democracy and think that anything that goes against it is an attack on democratic structures.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr McCartney: Other thriving democracies have introduced quotas. We must ensure that we do not face 2021 accused of being under-representative.

Mr Agnew: The first question that we each should ask ourselves is what makes good governance. My party’s position has consistently been that we can reduce the number of MLAs but it must go alongside a reduction in the number of Departments. I know that has been agreed in principle, but we have yet to see it realised. That is to ensure that we have enough MLAs to do the job. We already have Members sitting on two or three Committees; if we reduced the number of MLAs without concurrently reducing the number of Departments, that would undermine our ability as MLAs to carry out the important function of challenging Departments through the Committees. I support a reduction in the number of MLAs, although I am not so exercised by whether it will be in 2016 or 2021. I have no problem supporting the motion.

The other thing I would say is that we need a diversity of voices. I want to make it clear that I am not intending to be vying for the sixth seat in the next election; I hope to —

Mr Dickson: You would get elected if we moved to five seats.

Mr Agnew: There you go: the Alliance Party has assured me that I will be elected under five seats, regardless. I certainly do not want to discount myself from the next election, regardless how many seats there are per constituency.

If the previous election had been run under five seats per constituency, as Mr McCartney mentioned, we could have had a five-party Government and no Back-Benchers outside the governing parties. That is something that we should be concerned about. There is a balance to be struck. Good government should be efficient and cost-effective; equally, it should be diverse in its voices and representations.

This corner of the House has been referred to as various things, including “the naughty corner”. Perhaps we are the naughty corner because we are forever challenging the teachers, which is quite a good thing. Look at the record of me and Mr Allister in asking Assembly questions: Mr Allister has asked 272, and I have asked 207 — more than the whole of the Alliance Party. That is not an end in itself, but it is challenging and questioning Ministers. In a party of government, you may have less incentive to ask questions when the information may be more readily available. If you look at the private Members’ Bills that have come forward from Mr McCallister, Mr Allister and me, again we perform a valuable function in the Assembly.

For those reasons, the Green Party has argued that, if we reduce the number of MLAs, there should not just be a reduction in the number of Departments, but it should be accompanied by a change in the electoral system to have a top-up system, as they do in Scotland and Germany, to ensure that we keep the diversity of voices.

There would be a threshold to be met before any party would get representation in the Assembly. In Germany, for example, that is 5% of the vote. That could be the type of thing that we would look at. We should ensure that we do not end up reducing the diversity of voices and the benefits that are brought, particularly given our system, by having voices from outside Government.

The issue of the representation of women has been raised, and, just to correct Ms Ruane, her party is not the only one that supports quotas. The Green Party is in favour of quotas and implements them in its own party selections for elections, and there will be a minimum of one-third female Green Party candidates for the next Assembly election. It is something that we believe in, practice and would like to see implemented in Assembly elections.

We are very much in support of reform. I suspect that, in practice, the May 2016 elections come too soon for implementation of the type of reforms that we would like to see, but, in principle, we have no objection to it. We have consistently argued that good, efficient government can take place, but a number of things need to happen concurrently.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Agnew: Those are the change in the number of Departments, a reduction in the number of MLAs and the change in the electoral system.

Mr Lyttle: I welcome the opportunity to wind up the debate. It has been constructive. A wider range of issues has been raised than was, perhaps, expected; but it is important to state clearly at core what we are debating. It is the proposal to reduce the number of MLAs from 108 to 90, from six MLAs to five for each of 18 constituencies. It is indeed a fairly modest reduction, by all accounts.

On coming to the Assembly today, I was greeted by a member of the public whom I debate these issues with. The opinion given to me was, “Sure, you have no chance of getting that through the Assembly today, Chris, do you? Turkeys voting for Christmas.” Today presents an opportunity for us to surprise the ever-increasing frustration and disillusionment that is ever growing at this Assembly. We have an opportunity to agree on a modest, straightforward proposal, and I hope that there might still be time for people to reconsider their positions on that, but I fear that we may have to return to this issue.

Mr Nesbitt: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. I just want clarification of “turkeys voting for Christmas”. Is it “turkeys voting for Christmas” if we reduce the number by 2016, but not if we are voting post-2016?

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Member for his intervention. I will touch on the timing in due course, but I really do not understand. If the principle is agreed, and it is as straightforward an issue as it appears to most of the members of the public who want to see a reduction in costs and more effective government, why can we not show leadership on this issue and move forward now?

The Stormont House Agreement commits to the reduction; it says that it should happen by 2021. However, that does not preclude it from happening earlier. Indeed, the Alliance Party believes that there is no significant impediment to that taking place for the 2016 election.

Mr Sheehan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyttle: I give way briefly.

Mr Sheehan: If this was introduced for the 2016 election, how would the Member ensure that there was not an under-representation of women?

Mr Lyttle: I was going to address that issue as well, but I will come to it. I am proud that I have been surrounded by formidable, capable, courageous female elected representatives in my party. A wide range of issues prevents women from coming forward into elected representation. I am not sure that an overgoverned Assembly is necessarily one of them. Sinn Féin will maybe agree with me on this. Most regrettably, and I do not know why, many female elected representatives have been targeted, mistreated and spoken to in a most inappropriate way at times, and indeed, they have been physically attacked. On some occasions, they have resorted to removing themselves from elected office.

Ms Ruane: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyttle: I will in a second. There are probably much more important reasons than the size of the Assembly as to why we do not have more female representatives.

Ms Ruane: Does the Member believe that quotas are the way forward, given the lack of representation of women?

Mr Lyttle: I believe that we need serious proactive activity to encourage the many capable women across our society — indeed, those from all under-represented sectors — to become elected representatives. I remain to be convinced that we need specific quotas or how we would deliver such quotas, but maybe that is a debate for another occasion.

People also referred to the task of legislating. Work is ongoing to reduce the number of Departments from 12 to nine, with effect from 2016. It would be a significantly less complicated task to reduce the number of MLAs, so I see no reason why that cannot be taken forward.

The rationale is clear and strong: Northern Ireland is over-governed. We have substantially more MLAs per head than Scotland and Wales. It has been said that we have a unique context as a deeply divided society. Perhaps OFMDFM needs to do more work on building a united community. That would be one way of ensuring that we tackle the issue. Even allowing for that context, Scotland has one MSP per 40,000 people, Wales has one AM per 50,000, but Northern Ireland has one MLA per 16,000 to 17,000, which is a drastically different ratio and is over-governance by any stretch.

I will try to respond to some of the issues that have been raised. I have dealt with under-representation to a certain extent. Mr Danny Kennedy attempted to bring some humour to the debate, although I must make it clear that I doubt very much that the need to reduce costs and for more efficient and effective governance in Northern Ireland is a laughing matter to the public or, indeed, a dead issue to hard-working taxpayers, many of whom, before he abdicated office, could not even get their grass cut or their streets lit as a result of his approach to government. We need to move beyond that approach to governance in Northern Ireland.

Stevie Agnew raised a number of important issues. He suggested that the reduction take place in line with the reduction in Departments, ensuring that our multiparty coalition has effective opposition. He also mentioned alternative ways of protecting diversity in the Assembly, such as through our electoral system, all of which, I think, merits consideration.

This reduction could save around £11 million over five years. The childcare budget for 2011-15 was around £12 million. Those may seem like modest savings, but the resources could go a very long way for a lot of hard-working families. The Alliance Party is clear that this would be for the common good and in the interests of effective power-sharing government and well-resourced, efficient public services for everyone in our community. We commend the motion to the House.

Question put.

Question put a second time.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I hear Ayes from only one corner and Noes from all sides of the House. I think the Noes have it. I think the Noes have it. I think the Noes have it. The Noes have it, the Noes have it.

Mr Dickson: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. I ask that you review your decision, given the decision made by the Speaker last week on a Division.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): If the Member had listened carefully, he would have heard that I said:

"I think the Noes have it. I think the Noes have it."

Until the Member spoke, no one had challenged that, and I had not made a final decision. I think that the Noes have it. I think that the Noes have it. The Noes have it.

Question accordingly negatived.

Adjourned at 4.49 pm.

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr Dickson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Yesterday afternoon there was a debate at which I proposed a motion on behalf of my party. Considerable dissent was expressed when the vote on the motion was put to the Chamber, but, equally, considerable support was voiced by my party Members. I do not think this is the first occasion when concern has been raised about whether an appropriate Division should be called. I am concerned that a Division was not called yesterday on that debate. May I ask you to review the process of calling a Division by your Deputy Speakers? Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: In fact, I am aware of the situation. Indeed, I was faced with a similar dilemma last week. I have actually asked the officials to work with me in providing updated guidance, which I think would help the House, as well as the Speakers. At times, it can be quite obvious to the Speaker where the balance of a vote may fall, but I think it is also equally important — there is a right, which I want to protect — to ensure that opposition is recorded in an appropriate way. Sometimes it is a judgement call, and sometimes there is confusion about where the threshold is, so I think we should update the guidance and put us all on the same pitch.

Executive Committee Business

Pension Schemes Bill: Final Stage

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): I beg to move

That the Pension Schemes Bill [NIA 54/11-16] do now pass.

As I am sure Members are aware, we are in the midst of a period of almost unprecedented change in the field of pensions. The phased introduction of automatic enrolment into workplace pensions is well under way to ensure that most employees have access to a simple, low-cost pension scheme that will provide an additional source of income in retirement. More recently, the Pensions Act (Northern Ireland) 2015 introduced a new state pension system for all those who reach state pension age from 6 April 2016. The aim is to ensure that we have a pension system that is fit for the 21st century as we face up to the challenges posed by ever-increasing life expectancy.

The Pension Schemes Bill forms part of this ongoing process. It introduces a new legislative framework for private pensions and defines three new categories of pension schemes based on the different types of promise offered to members during the accumulation phase about their pension savings when they come to access them.

The categories are a defined benefits scheme, in which members have a full pensions promise about the rate of the retirement income that they will receive for life from a fixed normal pension age; a shared risk scheme, which is also known as defined ambition, whereby there is a promise about some of the retirement benefits, whether income or lump sum; and a defined contributions scheme, whereby there is no promise about the benefit outcome. For the first time, legislation will set out clear statutory definitions of various scheme types.

The Bill seeks to reinvigorate the pensions industry by allowing for greater innovation in pension scheme design. The new shared risk definition creates a middle ground between the more polarised defined contribution and defined benefit definitions. Shared risk schemes should provide employees with greater certainty about the final value of their pension than they would have under a defined contribution scheme but with less cost volatility for employers than a defined benefit scheme. Enabling legislation that allows for longevity, investment and inflation risks associated with pension provision to be shared between employers and employees rather than borne by one party should result in improved pension outcomes for many.

The Bill also defines the concept of collective benefits and makes provision for regulation-making powers for them. Those powers cover matters such as the setting of targets for benefits, valuation, reporting requirements, transfer values, winding up and governance. Collective benefits are provided on the basis of allowing the scheme's assets to be used in a way that pools risks across the membership. Gains or losses arising as a result of the scheme's investments are shared among all members. The intention is that schemes offering collective benefits will be required to set targets in relation to the rate or amount of those benefits. The target level of benefit should provide members with a reasonable estimate of what they can expect to receive from the scheme.

An actuary will be required to certify that the initial target is set at an appropriate level and that the probability of the target being met falls within a specified range. That will help to ensure that schemes providing collective benefits operate in as transparent a manner as possible.

The Bill makes amendments to current legislation as a consequence of the new scheme definitions and the collective benefits provisions. In particular, the amendments will ensure that current legislative requirements relating to governance and administration apply in the appropriate way to the new scheme categories.

The Bill also contains powers to make regulations — for example, for indexation and the revaluation of benefits and in setting out conditions to be met for a pensions promise to be obtained from a third party and imposing a duty on managers to act in the best interests of members when making specified decisions on collective benefits or shared risk schemes. It also enables the Department to issue statutory guidance on the disclosure of information about schemes and includes a provision dealing with pension sharing and normal benefit age.

In conclusion, the key objective is to ensure the financial stability of future pensioners by ensuring that they can save into good private pensions during their working lives. I think that we all agree that that is highly desirable. The Bill will also create space for market innovation while ensuring that there is proportionate regulation for different scheme types.

I trust that Members are content with the broad thrust of the Bill. I know that pensions legislation can be somewhat complex and detailed.

Therefore, I want, in particular, to thank the Chair and members of the Social Development Committee for their help and the positive manner in which they considered this important Bill. I also want to place on record my appreciation to my own staff, who work relentlessly in this area; their expertise and dedication is an invaluable assistance to me in trying to manoeuvre what is a very challenging and technical issue. I am sure that they, like me, will be looking forward to the Chancellor's autumn statement tomorrow, which, no doubt, may have some further changes to the system that will give them further work in the future.

Mr A Maginness: I do not intend to rehearse what the Minister and others have said. I will keep my comments as brief as possible.

The SDLP supports the Bill. Although it has gone through with accelerated passage, the Assembly and the Committee for Social Development have had the opportunity to scrutinise the Bill and, indeed, to scrutinise the Minister on this important issue. As mentioned by the Minister during the Second Stage debate, increasing life expectancy should be celebrated — we all celebrate that, collectively and personally — although it brings with it its own issues and challenges, including the issue of pensions. Therefore, the issue of pensions is becoming more and more important for more and more people. Pension reform has been ongoing, and I believe that there will be further changes over the coming years, in the public sector and the private sector — perhaps even as soon as tomorrow, as the Minister said.

I will quickly mention some of the main aspects of the Bill. The main thrust of the Bill is to provide people with more flexibility and choice, and that should be seen as a good thing. Of course, we all welcome that. As the Minister said, and I take his words very seriously, there should be proportionate regulation. I welcome that, and I hope that that will be the outcome of the Bill and that the regulation will be proportionate.

Part 1 relates to the categories of pension schemes and contains provisions for a new framework in relation to categories of pension schemes. It aims to establish three mutually exclusive definitions for scheme types defined as a pension promise. Those can be defined benefit schemes, shared risk schemes or defined contribution schemes. Part 2 defines the concept of collective benefits and makes provision for regulation-making powers in relation to them. Part 3 mainly deals with amendments to existing legislation, mostly as a consequence of the change to scheme definitions.

The SDLP had some concerns about the Bill, which we mentioned during the Second Stage debate. Those included ensuring that we adequately safeguard the members' interests, ensuring that there is sound independent financial advice and ensuring a proper regulatory framework. We welcome the Minister's previous comments on the issues that I have just outlined. I also welcome the fact that the Minister has maintained parity by bringing the Bill through the Assembly by way of accelerated passage. The SDLP supports the Bill.

In conclusion, the Bill seeks to introduce new flexibilities to the way in which savers can access their defined contribution pots, with the stated aim of giving people more choice about how they fund their retirement. We believe that to be a right and proper opportunity for people to deal with money that they have invested for themselves, and they should be given more autonomy on that. With that, I conclude and reiterate that we support the Bill.

10.45 am

Mr Speaker: I call the Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development. My apologies, Fra, for the slight confusion at the top Table.

Mr F McCann (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): Go raibh míle maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for bringing the Bill to the House for its Final Stage.

While the issue of pensions is a devolved matter, as Members know, the Bill was granted accelerated passage.

However, in supporting accelerated passage, the Committee noted that, in the case of this Bill, which relates to private pensions, there is a single regulatory regime that operates here and in Britain. The successful passage of the Bill will ensure that the Pensions Regulator, the Pensions Ombudsman and the Pension Protection Fund continue to facilitate compliance and enforcement in the pensions industry here.

Many, if not all, of the private pension schemes that operate here are based in Britain, and the Committee was cognisant of the potential limitations in effecting change to the Bill. The Committee, therefore, took the view that it was necessary to ensure that people here with private pensions could avail themselves of the changes as soon as possible and seek advice as early as possible in order to plan for their retirement.

The Committee appreciates the importance of the Bill to ensuring that any new products that the pensions industry develops are also available here and are subject to appropriate regulation. The new regime will require regulations to be in place before April 2016 to ensure that adequate safeguards and protections are in place.

The Bill will facilitate the development of new types of pension provision that can provide greater certainty about what people can expect from their occupational pension. The Bill will also allow greater risk sharing: the risk may be shared among members so that schemes providing collective benefits may provide more stable outcomes than the individual defined contribution schemes currently available. That should allow greater protection for pensions from fluctuations in markets.

It is fair to say that we all know that pension provision is something that we should plan for. Actuaries inform us that we are living longer, that pension funds are under strain and that people have to start saving earlier, hence the raft of pension legislation over the last few years. It is also probably fair to say that pensions are something of a mystery to most people. In order to make the right decision about pension plans, people must get meaningful and understandable advice. It may be an attractive proposition, for example, to be able to access one's pension pot from the age of 55, which the Bill, along with the Taxation of Pensions Act 2014, facilitates, but that must be done only after considering the appropriate guidance and taking proper advice. It is, therefore, welcome that people can avail themselves of the free guidance from Pension Wise throughout the network of 19 citizens advice bureaux here. However, it is possible that some people will not realise that there is a difference between guidance and advice, and that advice, particularly in a financial context, means regulated financial advice, whereas guidance refers to more general information about terms or investment products.

Free guidance is merely the starting point. People need to have the right advice that is tailored to their particular circumstances. They need to understand that their decisions and actions have consequences. It will, therefore, be important to monitor the outworkings of the Bill, although it may take a number of years to understand fully whether it has produced greater stability in pension outcomes for the consumer.

The Committee for Social Development supports the Pension Schemes Bill.

Mr Beggs: I, too, support the Bill. The pension process, like that of welfare, is extremely complex, and we need to take great care with any suggested changes.

It is clear from the Bill that we had very limited opportunity to change things. Indeed, during the evidence that we were given, it became apparent that the schemes available in Northern Ireland are GB based and that any proposal to amend the guidance on them might eliminate the choice currently available to Northern Ireland consumers. It is vital that there is a wide choice and a degree of healthy competition, so I am pleased that the Committee and, to date, the Assembly, have supported maintaining parity on this important issue.

It is a sensible piece of legislation; it is modernising to reflect changes. As others said, it will give greater flexibility, which perhaps reflects more how individuals may move on and not necessarily be with one employer their entire working career. It creates increased flexibility with pension schemes and yet provides protections. As others said, there is a single regulatory regime for pension schemes throughout the United Kingdom, with a single ombudsman, and it makes sense to continue in that fashion. I support the Bill.

Mr Storey: I reiterate my appreciation of, and thanks to, those who contributed. I say to them, particularly the members of the Social Development Committee, that it is appreciated. I thank the Deputy Chair for his support. While accelerated passage meant that there was no formal Committee process, the Committee carried out a thorough scrutiny of the issues. I say a word of thanks for that.

I will pick up on a few of the points raised. The Deputy Chair, Mr McCann, raised the issue of the difference between advice and guidance. His point was well made. It is vital that people have as much information as possible to enable them to make sound decisions. One of the concerns raised during the process was about opening up the door to those who want to be mischievous and to those who have become known as scammers. It is an unfortunate fact of modern life that there will be people who will seek to scam others.

As part of the pensions flexibilities announced in the 2014 Budget, the Government proposed that all consumers with defined-contribution pensions should be entitled to access free, impartial guidance at retirement about their options when assessing their pension savings. That was launched under the branding Pension Wise by the Financial Conduct Authority, and the Deputy Chair made reference to it. It published standards for guidance and the delivery of Pension Wise. The Pension Wise website includes guidance on how to avoid a pension scam. The NI Direct website signposts people to the Pension Wise website and further advice on pension scams. The Financial Conduct Authority recently launched its ScamSmart campaign. Those are all to be welcomed, along with other independent advice that is available.

I now turn to the comments of Mr Maginness. I appreciate the work and effort that he and his colleagues make on these issues. He touched on a point that I mentioned earlier: proportionate regulation. I assure the Member that our aim is to provide appropriate regulation that will safeguard members' rights but which will not be so burdensome as to discourage employers from running schemes. I concur with him about the necessity of having good-quality advice and guidance. That is vital. Much as been achieved over the period of the Bill in giving assurance and confidence not only to Members but to those who, ultimately, are the beneficiaries of a good pension scheme.

The Member raised the point about life expectancy. We all want to live for as long as we possibly can, although that, of course, is ultimately in the hands of someone else. We want to ensure that everything is being done in pension provision to reflect the change in our society. Pensions are always a movable feast because of the many challenges that are brought to bear.

On Members' comments again, I appreciate the work of Mr Beggs on these issues and his help in scrutinising what is an important piece of legislation, not least because some of us are getting nearer to that date. Maybe we should all have started by declaring an interest, but I will do it on our behalf. As I look around, I see that there are some who are further away from pension age, but I say that for those to whom it applies. I also want to say a word of appreciation and thanks to my staff. Thanks to the House for its help. This has been a successful piece of legislation that we have been able to do ourselves. We have been able to do it in a way that is a good reflection on how we can deal with an issue of such importance.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Pension Schemes Bill [NIA 54/11-16] do now pass.

Committee Business

Housing (Amendment) Bill: Extension of Committee Stage

Mr F McCann (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): I beg to move

That, in accordance with Standing Order 33(4), the period referred to in Standing Order 33(2) be extended to 15 January 2016, in relation to the Committee Stage of the Housing (Amendment) Bill [NIA 58/11-16].

Go raibh míle maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. The Committee Stage of the Housing (Amendment) Bill began on 10 November 2015 and is due to conclude on 11 January 2016. A Cheann Comhairle, I stated at the Second Stage that, during the recent period of uncertainty, the Committee was prudent and prioritised the Department's legislative programme within its work programme. With the assistance of the Department and, in particular, our stakeholders, we embarked on a call for evidence in advance of Committee Stage to ensure that there would be sufficient time for the Bill to proceed through the entire legislative process. For that reason, a Cheann Comhairle, the Committee aims to complete its consideration of the Bill before Christmas recess. It agreed, however, that it would be prudent to bring a motion to the Assembly to extend the Committee Stage of the Bill by four days to Friday 15 January 2016. This would allow an additional meeting after recess for the Committee to deal with unforeseen circumstances.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That, in accordance with Standing Order 33(4), the period referred to in Standing Order 33(2) be extended to 15 January 2016, in relation to the Committee Stage of the Housing (Amendment) Bill [NIA 58/11-16].

Private Members' Business

Licensing Bill: First Stage

Mrs Cochrane: I beg to introduce the Licensing Bill [NIA 69/11-16], which is a Bill to make provision for the granting of licences to authorise the sale of intoxicating liquor at outdoor stadia.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Trident Nuclear Weapons Programme

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for this debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes to propose and 10 minutes to wind. All other Members who wish to speak will have five minutes.

Mr Murphy: I beg to move

That this Assembly notes with concern the analysis by the Chair of the Foreign Affairs Committee in Westminster that suggests that the cost to replace the Trident nuclear weapons programme has risen to £167 billion; believes that it is indefensible for the British Government to commit billions of pounds of public money to nuclear weapons, particularly when individuals and families, locally and across Britain, are experiencing the consequences of austerity measures; and calls on the British Government to cancel their plans for the renewal of Trident.

This is not intended to be a debate about British defence policy. It is simply a debate about the spending plans of the British Government over the next number of years and the very obvious folly in those spending plans. There are other areas of British spending plans and taxation that you could rise to criticise, but there is a very particular and obvious folly in relation to the huge amount of money intended to be spent on a Trident nuclear system. The spending of that amount of money will directly affect every man, woman and child in this jurisdiction in a negative way. Part of the contribution to that spend is taxpayers' money from this jurisdiction. So it is something that is of interest to the Assembly. As I said, our focus is on the spending plans. Of course, the British Government are entitled to have their own defence policy and follow their own defence strategies, as supported or proposed in the British House of Commons. However, such spending plans have a direct impact across Britain and, indeed, here in Ireland where people will be affected by the subsequent lack of money available to Departments and the systems of public spending here.

11.00 am

Any of us who had the dubious pleasure of being at Stormont House, at the regular round-table sessions, will know that we are living with the mantra of no more money available to the British Government, the British Government's priority of reducing the deficit, and there being no more spending money, so every section and Department will have to face —

Mr Humphrey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Murphy: I will finish this point, and then I will give way. We were told that every section would have to face what were termed "eye-watering cuts", when, clearly, there is a significant amount of money for spending on this project, and others — albeit, today, we are focused on this project — that do not stand up to scrutiny and do not benefit ordinary people.

Mr Humphrey: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. Does the Member agree that, in an ideal world, Governments would not spend any money on defence and, indeed, that every Government would be neutral? Given the week that is in it, every Government have the duty to defend their people; that is their first duty and responsibility. It would be anything other than wise for Her Majesty's Government not to invest in armaments to protect the people on this island and on the mainland, and, indeed, to protect us from world terrorism. Does the Member agree?

Mr Murphy: As I said, I had not intended this to be a debate about British defence policy. There is a huge debate about the merits of this aspect of British defence policy, not just on these Benches but across society in Britain. I note that significant spending was outlined yesterday by the British Prime Minister in relation to other defence policy spend. Certainly, this issue is contested by quite a few people, including people in the military in Britain, who question the wisdom of spending on this area of defence.

I believe that this issue is being debated today in Westminster, and Members here might well think that that is the place for it to be debated. I do not doubt that MPs from here will contribute, but, of course, my party colleagues honour the mandate that they have been given by the electorate and do not attend such debates in Westminster.

Today is an opportunity for the devolved institutions to have their say. Scotland already has had the debate and expressed a very clear view; the Scottish Parliament has expressed a very clear view on it. I have no doubt that Wales will have its say as well. I commend our Finance Minister for joining the Finance Ministers from Scotland and Wales in going to the Treasury and the leadership in the British Government with a united voice on their approach to public-sector spending and the damage that it is doing to the people whom they represent as Ministers for Finance in the devolved institutions. The Assembly, the Scottish Parliament and the Welsh Assembly speaking with one voice on an issue like this strengthens the hand of those whom we ask to speak to the British Government about the impact of their austerity policies and spending plans on the people whom we represent.

Tomorrow, there will be an announcement in Westminster from the Chancellor of the Exchequer. I do not doubt that the Finance Minister will wait with a certain dread as to what that announcement will mean, as will all of us. Will George Osborne revisit the tax credit issues that he promised to take over £4 billion from; or will he try to find the money in cuts elsewhere and have even deeper and harsher cuts on departmental spending? Or will there be additional cuts to welfare, perhaps? That is something that we will face tomorrow.

Aside from that, the British Government are committed to spending at least £100 billion. That is the view of the Westminster all-party Trident commission. That was at 2012 prices. We have since had an assessment from the Chairperson of the Foreign Affairs Committee, which suggests that the figure may well be £167 billion. This is at a time when the British Government are lecturing us about their need for austerity measures and their desire to tackle the deficit as their number one priority; the cuts that we have had to welfare; the potential cuts to tax credits; the cuts to departmental spend of £1.5 billion over the last number of years and the potential cuts of £1.4 billion going ahead. The question is how they justify that level of cuts not just here but to some Departments in Britain, which face 30% cuts to the public services that they are able to provide. The justification for that is a project that senior military people have been quoted as saying is strategically completely useless. That spend, if it were allocated across Britain, for instance across work and pensions, education and transport — three areas that are under very significant pressure — the ensuing Barnett consequential that we would get would be £5 billion. Surely that could be put to better use to support people, create employment opportunities and educate young people to take their place in the workforce and contribute to a growing economy.

I do not accept the mantra that we are faced with, week on week, about there being no more money. I do not think that anyone here really accepted it. Even presenters on radio and TV programmes now accept that there is more money within the British system. The question is about the political choices that are being made on where that money is spent. Whether or not people have a desire to see strong defences as part of the British Government system, there are certainly very significant question marks over this particular project.

There is a growing sense that there is an opportunity among the devolved institutions and a commonality of views between them, as we had here in the Stormont House talks and in the recent talks to implement the Stormont House plans. People agreed that our budgets were suffering as a consequence of British Government policy and that we needed more money for health, education and growing the economy in the particular difficult circumstances that we face here. All that was agreed by all the parties. We might have had other differences, but we certainly agreed on that and asked and tasked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to go directly to the British Prime Minister and put the issues to him about the particular difficulties that the British Government's public spending approach is causing for our institution.

There is an opportunity for common ground between this institution and those of Scotland and Wales on these issues. There is certainly agreement in Scotland with the position that we are articulating here on the Trident project. There is an opportunity for the Assembly to speak with one voice and to actually contribute to strengthening the hand of the Ministers who we send across to Britain with Ministers from other devolved institutions to have these debates and discussions with Treasury and other senior figures in the British Government. This is about trying to ensure that public spending is targeted at those who need it most and makes a contribution to society. Clearly, in the case of this project, it does neither. I urge Members to support the motion. Go raibh míle maith agat.

Mr Frew: Jesus said:

"You will hear of wars and rumours of wars, but see to it that you are not alarmed. Such things must happen, but the end is still to come."

Plato said:

"Only the dead have seen the end of war".

I believe them. It is one of the great truths of our age and the one before it that the Cold War, for all of us, felt like a phoney war because it was fought at a level of spooks, spies and special forces. I believe that the reason for that was the nuclear capabilities of both sides. That sharpened and focused the minds of world leaders. It sharpened and focused the minds of populations. They would have been against the escalation of what we know now as the Cold War. That is an undeniable truth that we should take cognisance of as we debate a nuclear deterrent. It is OK for Sinn Féin to say, "Well, we do not want to talk about defence; we want to talk about welfare." You cannot not talk about defence when you are talking about a nuclear deterrent.

That is what it has been for so many years. You cannot put a price on a deterrent that has stopped war and stopped people suffering throughout the ages.

Mr Hazzard: Will the Member give way?

Mr Frew: No. I have much to get through; I have so much to say and so little time. I apologise, because I usually would give way. I will see what I am like for time.

It is also a great shame on any nation that it would spend billions on missiles but neglect the soldiers, sailors, air crews and all the staff associated with that defence and not spend money on those personnel. It is vital that our servicemen and women, who go to fight wars on our behalf, receive the proper training, equipment and kit on their feet, on their backs and around their necks to do the job that we send them to do and which they have ably done over the last number of years and, in fact, centuries.

It is a truth that in the Falklands War — this is just one anecdote — when the British forces took, trench by trench and position by position, Argentinian conscripts, they even had to take the boots off the Argentinian dead because their feet were struggling to keep up with the war effort and the Argentinians' boots were better than those that our own service personnel wore. That is a great shame, and it is something that we should all be mindful of in this day and age when we talk about defence spending. It is shameful that the UK has not spent enough on defence over the last number of years.

I see the people who have tabled the motion and I want to ask them — and I will give way — what concern did Sinn Féin have for people's welfare when it defended the actions of the IRA when it exploded bombs — yes, bombs — in the trade and commerce centres of Ballymena and Coleraine? What concern did Sinn Féin have for people's welfare when it looked over Enniskillen's dead? I will give way on that matter.

Mr Speaker: I will just intervene and remind Members of the motion that we are discussing. I am afraid that those latter remarks departed from the discussion. If the Member is picking up on a different point I do not mind, but I do not want to go any further down that particular road.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I will return to the motion, and I thank the Member for giving way. The Member made the point that Trident has averted war. Has he not been watching TV throughout his life? Has he not seen countries pillaged by wars and hundreds of millions of people killed during wars? Trident has not prevented war. In fact, one of the top US nuclear officials, Robert McNamara, said that this Earth had been very lucky not to have experienced a nuclear catastrophe.

Mr Frew: Of course, the Member is talking about a different type of war, which is the terrorist campaign. He is certainly an expert on that. I am glad that the closest that Sinn Féin will ever come to having a say in the defence of our great country is when it is passing information over to its handlers.

Mr Speaker: You do have an extra minute.

Mr Frew: No, I am fine.

Mr Speaker: I would not want to constrain your contribution.

Ms Hanna: The SDLP supports the motion and will oppose Trident here and particularly at Westminster, where that opposition will actually be recorded. There is some irony that in the same week that we are repatriating welfare powers, we are seeking to devolve the UK's military defence policy to this House.

I learned from our information pack that, at present, a Trident sub remains on patrol at all times and has up to 40 warheads, each with an explosive power of up to 100 kilotons — eight times the power of the atomic bomb dropped on Hiroshima in 1945, which killed an estimated 240,000 people. These figures are almost too large for us to grasp, but it is quite clear that they fall far outside Thomas Aquinas's theory of a just war in any scenario.

Somebody outlined to me recently the concept of the Overton window, which is that there are a certain range of policies that the public will accept as reasonable. For reasons beyond my grasp, scrapping Trident has not been in that. It has been discussed in quite a theoretical fashion, but I think that, as the detail is discussed and the numbers and the funding commitment become more of a reality, that will change. I believe that, in the last vote at Westminster, about 360 MPs voted to keep Trident. They are probably the same few hundred MPs who voted for things like the Iraq War, the consequences of which we see playing out in Syria and further afield, so I am not inclined to take foreign policy advice from those MPs. I am also not inclined to take it from Jeremy Corbyn, but the fact that a potential UK Prime Minister who is not keen to blow the world to bits by having his finger on the nuclear button is seen as such a dreadful thing is a very sad reflection on our politics.

11.15 am

Members outlined the cost of Trident renewal, and I will not go over those sums except to say that they are eye-watering, not least in the context of the austerity that is being applied to almost every other aspect of the UK's Budget. I have noticed that recent discussions on Trident seem to focus on the protection of the 10,000 jobs involved and the skills, as if Trident is some massive Keynesian policy. It goes without saying that, if it is about the jobs, the £167 billion that is under discussion could be far better spent on skills and investment, infrastructure, telecommunications, energy efficiency and any number of things that are not just a big military status symbol for Britain.

I would love to stand here and give you a pacifist argument against Trident, but you do not have to be a pacifist to be against spending on nuclear in such a substantial way. In fact, all the experts are saying that Trident drains money away from the UK's traditional defence and military capacity. I am not saying that we do not need to spend on defence. Clearly, we do, but let us look at the global threats to the UK in the last 10 or 15 years. Did the US's substantial nuclear capacity deter Osama bin Laden in 9/11? Did Trident deter the 7/7 bombers? Did France's substantial nuclear capacity deter the horrific attacks in Paris last week? They did not.

The fact is that none of the headbangers whom we need to protect ourselves from are deterred in the slightest from this sort of spending. We know from our own experience that those who think that their ideology is so important that they can shoot, maim and bomb clearly have very little regard for civilian lives. The very people whom the UK and people around the world need to be protected from will not be deterred by this in any way. As we can see from Brussels in the last couple of days, when there is a clear, articulated threat, defence is now intelligence-led and followed up by boots on the street.

On nuclear proliferation, the UK has —

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Ms Hanna: Yes, I will.

Mr Allister: Is the Member saying that this world would be a safer place if we were to leave nuclear weapons to the likes of North Korea, and the rest of us were to give up the nuclear deterrent? Does she really think that that would make this world a safer place?

Mr Speaker: The Member will have an extra minute.

Ms Hanna: The Member is clearly referring to the fact that, since 1968, the UK has signed a range of non-proliferation treaties, but the nuclear deterrent is a relic of Cold War politics and does not reflect the actual threat to people in the UK and civilians and citizens around the world. I am not saying that we do not have any defence spend — clearly, we do. All the experts say that you are, in fact, draining money away from things that are needed. Max Hastings, a British military affairs specialist, said that Trident is:

Crispin Blunt MP, the Tory Chair of the Foreign Affairs Committee, commented:

“How much is too much? ... I believe that this level of spending ... is excessive as it will mean forgoing an effective conventional capability in order to maintain one weapons system that is unlikely ever to be used.”

He referred to the fact that, by 2050, it is likely that most nations will have sonar capacity, which will be able to detect Trident.

Major General Patrick Cordingley, the former commander of the Desert Rats, points out that, due to the funding pressures in the navy, it lacks 600 specialists. Those are exactly the sorts of people who would be required to maintain the Trident fleet, and he suggests that the proposed spend should instead probably be weighed up against ships and tanks. I have not heard a coherent plan for what it would achieve, but I suspect that the people who are arguing so passionately for the renewal of Trident are probably the same people who are arguing to bomb Syria. If that were to take place, it would take place with 30-year-old planes, because the RAF has not invested in the weapons that it believes that it needs.

I do not agree that it necessarily does, but those are its arguments and not mine.

Mr Speaker: The Member’s time is up.

Ms Hanna: Trident, we are told, is an insurance policy in an uncertain world. I think that, at a cost of £167 billion, we need to be a little bit more certain. We could use that to —

Mr Speaker: Thank you. I call Mr Mike Nesbitt

Ms Hanna: — tackle poverty and drain the reservoirs before fundamentalism takes hold.

Mr Nesbitt: Last week, the party of the proposers of the motion took its role as a legislator so very seriously that it voted to transfer responsibility for a devolved matter to the House of Commons, where its Members do not take their seats and, therefore, do not even vote. I know that it would be an oxymoron to accuse republicans of abdicating, but that is what they did: they abdicated power to Her Majesty’s Government. Now, to complete the exercise of turning the world on its head, they want to debate a matter that is not, never has been and never will be devolved: defence.

If I heard correctly, there was no mention of timescales and no acknowledgement of the fact that the first Trident would not be due until 2028 — about a decade after austerity is due to end. So, the motion fails spectacularly to understand the timescales. There was also no mention of the likely annual spend in this austerity mandate. It is likely to be a very small percentage of the costs that the proposers suggest will attach to Trident renewal — costs that I do not accept as accurate. So, there is the first problem.

The motion also fundamentally misrepresents the costs of our security as part of our overall expenditure. It does not identify the reality of growing international uncertainty from nation states rather than from “headbangers”, as the previous Member who spoke referred to them. We have the resurgence of Russia, with its interference in the Ukraine, Georgia and other regions, the development of nuclear weapons by Iran, the continued uncertainty over the security of nuclear weapons in Pakistan, the proliferation of nuclear technology from North Korea and the remnants of the A Q Khan network. We argue that the retention and modernisation of our strategic nuclear deterrent is not only desirable but is, in fact, essential.

The costs for the replacement of the current Trident nuclear programme have been estimated, at 2014 prices, at around £20 billion. Through-life costs for the operation of the four ships is estimated to be around £100 billion by the Royal United Services Institute. So, with a lifespan of 35 years, that is around £2.85 billion per annum, which equates to 9% of the defence budget or 0.45% of UK Government annual spend. Even with the alarmist figures mentioned in the motion, as a percentage of UK overall spending, it is still less than 0.8% of annual expenditure. Rather than the figures mentioned in the motion, the fact that only 0.45% of our annual spend goes towards our ultimate insurance policy should be seen, I suggest, as very good value for money. I doubt whether that is much out of sync with what an MLA pays for annual insurance of one form or another. The cost of not maintaining our national security is, frankly, incalculable. Again, we welcome the Government commitment to spend 2% of gross domestic product on our defence.

Our country is one of only five permanent members of the United Nations Security Council and will remain so. We have the fifth largest economy in the world, and we will continue to be one of the top 10 global economies this century. We are a founding member of NATO, and we have a proud and distinguished reputation for standing up for and supporting the international system. Our nation is and will remain a major global power because it effectively defends itself from and deters aggression. We are able to be a force for good precisely because we invest in systems such as Trident and its successor. Our nation has maintained an independent sea-based nuclear deterrent since 1968, and the Assembly should thank the men and women of our armed forces, the scientists, the naval architects and shipbuilders who have supported our security on these islands. In particular, we should thank the significant number of Northern Ireland and Republic of Ireland personnel who serve and have served in the Royal Navy.

We believe, along with the majority of our forward-thinking and informed citizens, that we must support investment in our future and security. While we sincerely hope that the world will be a much more peaceful place over the lifetime of this Trident replacement programme, we as a party do not believe that we can take the unjustifiable risk of unilateral disarmament. Rather than being "indefensible", the renewal of our strategic insurance policy, at a premium of 0-45% of national expenditure, is the only rational choice —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Nesbitt: — in an increasingly unstable and unsettled world. Those who disagree should take the debate to the only Chamber that matters in this case: the House of Commons. We oppose the motion.

Mr Dickson: I support the motion. I also seek to reference a proposed Alliance amendment, which was not selected but which I believe would have provided for a more rounded and perhaps more realistic motion by calling for adequate investment in our conventional defence forces. Refocusing on our conventional forces is where I believe we should be heading in this debate.

I am sure no one wants to live in a world where nuclear weapons exist, but unfortunately they do. We certainly live in interesting times. For that reason, I am not calling for the unilateral disarmament of the United Kingdom, lest anyone should think that. Nonetheless, spending of up to the likes of £167 billion on renewing or maintaining the current level of the Trident deterrent seems to me to be a rather foolhardy endeavour, whether in times of austerity or beyond, especially when you consider that its use is equally a pointless gesture that taxpayers are unlikely to see.

Furthermore, we must consider that the Trident system is perhaps one that has long outlived its relevance. It was born from the 1950 and 1960's defence review following the disasters of Suez and the ominous threats of a thermonuclear-armed Soviet Union. I am old enough to remember my parents' and, indeed, my grandparents' views of the Second World War and the use of nuclear weapons on Japan, as well as a determination of many that they would never be used again. Fortunately, the Cold War never turned hot because, if it had, I doubt that we would be standing here today. As we know, nuclear weapons have been used only once in anger, some 70 years ago in Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the legacy of which had an impact on Japan and the world and something that we all have to think about today.

We are told of the benefits to the UK of holding on to a renewed Trident. However, it is impossible to assess the claims that the Government will never disclose the situation in which nuclear weapons would ultimately be used. The current talk of fully renewing Trident also ignores the aspirations of the non-proliferation treaty, which seeks to further the goal of achieving nuclear disarmament.

Despite what others may think, the United Kingdom is no longer a world superpower and has not been since the 1950s. Its place in the world is not defined by its possession of nuclear weapons but is based on its conventional capability and relationship with other countries in the world. Currently, the United Kingdom has no aircraft carriers in service, severely undermining our ability to respond to the world's events. Fortunately, soon, Her Majesty's ship, the Queen Elizabeth, will be launched, as well as Her Majesty's ship, the Prince of Wales. However, in typical UK Government fashion, we do not have aircraft to fly off them. I happily saw that yesterday the Chancellor sought to finally resolve that anomaly, but that will take more time.

Nonetheless, despite our defence and cooperation treaty with France, French jets will not be able to use our carriers because of a Government attempt to do it on the cheap. Further to that, the numbers in our conventional standing army are dwindling to levels that have not been seen since the Boer Wars. Granted, the United Kingdom no longer has a vast empire, but we are crossing a milestone that could leave us unable to defend our country and our interests in the future, whether it is defence or, for me more importantly and more proudly, what the United Kingdom does when it comes to the use of our armed services in humanitarian aid in disasters and other theatres around the world.

Trident, for me, is an albatross around the neck of our security forces, as others said, tying down the Royal Navy's expertise and resources. Meanwhile the rest of our conventional services that we use every day are done on the cheap. That was proved by further announcements yesterday.

Further to that, aid and diplomacy are the preventative measures that the United Kingdom must strengthen and fund to stifle conflict and to encourage dialogue and economic and social development in the world's troubled regions.

11.30 am

As a nation, we need to move away from our nuclear status. I do not believe that it makes the UK superior to other nations, as some may think, but I do understand that, since the future is uncertain, it makes sense to retain a nuclear deterrent into the future until the United Kingdom Government make a decision about Trident. Ultimately, the resources saved can be reinvested in public services, in our infrastructure and in properly strengthening our economy as well as our conventional forces.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Dickson: A full renewal of Trident would be a costly vanity project for the United Kingdom. Instead, a less costly option —

Mr Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Dickson: — would be to consider our conventional forces.

Mr Dunne: I, too, welcome the opportunity to speak to the motion today. It is a very important matter for everyone in the United Kingdom.

The core issue of having a nuclear deterrent programme in place is to deter an attack on the UK, its vital interests and its allies. Nuclear weapons would only ever be used in extreme circumstances of self-defence. Having a nuclear programme in place deters the re-emergence of a major direct nuclear threat and the use of weapons of mass destruction by a rogue state. It also acts as a deterrent to state-sponsored acts of nuclear terrorism and as insurance against emerging threats to the UK's vital interests.

Sadly, we were all reminded of the devastation that terrorism can cause as recently as just over a week ago with the events in Paris. We in Northern Ireland continue to live with the price of the terrorist campaign that this country endured for over 30 years. That reinforces the need to be prepared in all possible ways to ensure that terrorism of any form cannot threaten the relative peace and stability that we all enjoy across the United Kingdom today. Having a Trident system in place that is fully operationally and independent of the US or any other state is crucial to our national security, and, indeed, it acts as an insurance policy in what is a dangerous, uncertain and ever-changing world. I welcome the strategic defence and security review announced yesterday in the House of Commons by the Prime Minister. He outlined how the UK will be equipped to tackle terrorism and how £178 billion is to be set aside for military equipment over the next 10 years. We must make sure that we are prepared to tackle the ever-changing threats in the most effective and efficient way possible.

There remains some variance in estimated costs associated with the replacement of the Trident nuclear weapons programme, with a number of different figures being put forward. However, we must not put a price on our national security. Many jobs are linked directly and indirectly to the Trident programme, and they must be protected and secured as we move forward, with jobs to peak at 6,000 during the build phase from 2016 to the late 2020s through the £40 billion replacement scheme. The defence industry sustains thousands of jobs across the United Kingdom, including jobs in Northern Ireland. Firms such as Thales, which leads on defence research and development, and Caterpillar, among others, are major local employers that are involved in the defence supply chain. Indeed, the Prime Minister, as recently as yesterday, responded in the Chamber to a question from my colleague Sammy Wilson MP about how local firms, as well as sustaining and promoting jobs, can engage through the Defence Growth Partnership and ensure that we continue to play a pivotal role in the sector. The DUP has consistently pressed for the Government to spend 2% of GDP on the defence budget. It is without doubt money well spent. I urge the House to vote against the motion and ensure that our United Kingdom is safe and secure for many years to come. The way to maintain peace is to prepare for war.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I will speak in favour of the motion.

To go back to what the motion states, I want to say that this is about government spend. It is not so much about defence. We must remember and put in context the fact that we are living in the sharpest period of austerity in living memory. Only those alive in the late 1920s and the 1930s will be able to connect with or will have seen similar levels of austerity, especially in Britain. No area of government spend has been spared. Health, education, housing and welfare have been targeted. The one area that has not been targeted is, of course, Trident. It is the exception. Trident has been spared the austerity, and one has to ask why.

The previous contributor talked about the need to tackle the gross, barbaric terrorism that is spreading throughout much of the Middle East. I wholeheartedly accept that point, but he failed to explain how in the name of God Trident will bring peace to the Middle East. Absolutely not. The only time that any such system was used, it brought nothing but death and terror to 200,000 people in the Japanese cities of Nagasaki and Hiroshima.

We must remember that this is about government spend. This is about austerity and political choices. If we take education in Britain, fees have trebled, the education maintenance allowance has been scrapped, teachers have been sacked and courses have been scrapped. The British Government are now proposing to sell off the student loan book to private companies, and that will see student debt spiral out of control for decades. Ironically, scrapping Trident and restoring education spend to that of the days at the height of the Cold War would bring education back to a free and world-class level.

The economy was half the size during the Cold War, yet the national security threat was probably double. However, that was at a time that education was free and safe from austerity. In that era, Britain signed up to the non-proliferation treaty. Why sign up to the non-proliferation treaty and then demand that we restore nuclear weapons? The economy is twice as big nowadays. This is about political choices.

The NHS is under severe threat from underspend and privatisation. It is the perfect neo-liberal storm, with the Tories in the driving seat. Health spend in Britain is the lowest of the G8 countries, yet military spend is the fourth largest in the world. Somebody try to tally that.

We keep hearing about an insurance policy. The best insurance policy is to give someone a good education, a good home and a good hospital nearby. Which scenario makes us safer: hospitals or missiles, doctors or nuclear warheads? Ask the people of Hiroshima and Nagasaki what they would prefer.

Our A&Es are under threat. Our nursing homes are closing. What could we not do with the money that would come to us as a result of it being spent better on public services? I heard today repeatedly that this is an insurance policy somehow. Absolute nonsense. The risk trebles when we look at the restoration of nuclear services. As I say, build people a home. In fact, the money used for Trident would build more than a million homes.

Mr Lunn: The Member is concentrating on the cost, and that is fair enough, but there is an awful disparity between the figures in the motion, the figures that were on the news yesterday and, for instance, Mr Nesbitt's figure of 0.45% of our gross spend. Which is the right figure? What does the £167 billion represent and over what timescale?

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Hazzard: I thank the Member for that. That figure came from the all-party group that looked at Trident. We also have to bear in mind that the Ministry of Defence typically works off a 40% overspend on its projects. A figure of £167 billion is being quoted. The leader of the Ulster Unionist Party pointed out that this is going to take decades. I suggest that £167 billion is a conservative estimate when we consider the amount that will be spent.

The crux of the argument is that this is about political choices. The leader of the Ulster Unionist Party shakes his head, but this is a political choice. The argument was made that this has to do with national security, as if somehow, if someone were to launch a nuclear strike on a British city, launching a nuclear strike back would save the people in the British city. That is an absolute fallacy.

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Mr Weir: Will the Member give way?

Mr Hazzard: No, I am running out of time and want to get finished. As I said, the best insurance policy that we can have is to build people a home — in fact, a million homes — provide suitable health facilities nearby and give them a world-class education.

Just to remind people out there who maybe do not know what Trident is, it is four nuclear subs, one of which is constantly circulating around the seas, with 40 nuclear warheads that are eight times more powerful than those used in the destruction of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Some 200,000 people were killed in '45. That gives a total death capacity of 300 million. That number of people could be wiped out as a result of this policy.

Why is there a need for this? Replacing those submarines and warheads is a huge vanity project. Tony Blair said it: this is about status and sitting at the top table. I do not often agree with much of what Tony Blair says, especially when it comes to defence and foreign policy, but he is right. This is a vanity project, and it is about status and sitting at the top table. It does nothing for the ordinary people who live in Britain or, indeed, the North of Ireland.

What could we not do with the £5 billion? How many A&E departments could we not restore? How many schools could we not build? How many of those people on welfare who need our help and who turn to food banks and suffer from fuel poverty could we not help? How many older people, who have to choose between heating their home or eating, could we save? How many of those people, some of whom might perish during the winter, could we save?

This is a vanity project and nothing short of it.

Mr Lyons: Like others, I welcome the opportunity to take part in the debate. Obviously, Trident will be a decision for the Government at Westminster and for Parliament, and rightly so. However, I think that it is still good that we have an opportunity to talk about and discuss it. Ultimately, it will be a decision for Parliament, and I say to the Members of Sinn Féin that, if they want to talk about this issue, they can talk about it here, but if they want to be part of the decision-making process, they should take their seats at Westminster and do the job there.

I do not intend to repeat some of the arguments that have been made; I think that they have been well set out. However, there are just a few points that I want to make on the motion. The first one is this: the motion clearly does not understand the word “replacement”. This follows from the comment that Mr Lunn made. It does not cost £167 billion to replace Trident. The costs of replacement were set out very clearly yesterday by the Prime Minister. The costs of replacement are £30 billion. I know that that is still an awful lot of money, but what we are talking about here is not £167 billion that will be coming out of the Budget this year — that will happen over a long period. In fact, the Secretary of State for Defence said last year that that would be spent over the course of 50 years. This is not an immediate cost to us, but, yes, it is a cost that is spread out over time.

The Member opposite raises all the things that he would like the money to be spent on instead of Trident. Of course, we want more money for public services and various different projects and things within the public services, but this is about defence. Other Members raised points very well about —

Mr Weir: I thank the Member for giving way. It also maybe shows a little bit of economic illiteracy on the part of those who proposed the motion. We are talking about £30 billion, which is essentially capital spend over a 50-year period, yet this seems to be just simply directly applied in some sort of mishmash of capital and resource schemes as though you can simply apply capital money in the same way to resource issues. They are all very worthy causes, but they are not just a direct read-across, as the Members opposite seem to believe.

Mr Lyons: I thank Mr Weir for his point. He makes it very well. All too often, whenever we discuss finance, we think, “Here is a pot of money; we want to spend it here instead”, as though it can all be moved about so easily. If there were savings to be made from Trident, I think they should be put into the things that Mr Dickson and Mr Frew spoke about, ensuring that our defence is capable of serving us in the way that we need to be served.

Mr Dickson: I thank the Member for giving way. I recognise what he says about the deployment of some resources at least into conventional weapons. Does he share the view of his party colleague Mr Donaldson that Trident should be relocated to Northern Ireland if the Scottish Government decide that they do not wish to have it on their shores any longer?

Mr Lyons: I hope that it stays in Scotland, where it is at the minute. But if it were to come here, I would welcome the jobs that would bring, very much so, as well as the different investment that would be here. Northern Ireland is part of the United Kingdom and it will remain that way.

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyons: I am being very generous but I will give way.

11.45 am

Mr Frew: The Member makes the point that he wants a nuclear deterrent, but not in his backyard. What nonsense is that?

Mr Lyons: I say to Mr Dickson that I would welcome the jobs and investment. It seems clear from recent polls compared with the result of the referendum that this part of the United Kingdom will remain part of the United Kingdom for much longer than Scotland.

Mr Hazzard raised all the things that we could spend the money on. We need to look at the long term. We cannot just look at the short-term situation and say, "We are in a bit of financial difficulty here, so we will scrap a part of our defence that we have had for 50 years and that we will need over the years ahead. Let's get rid of Trident to help out with our short-term problems." That is not the right way to go.

Mr Hazzard: Will the Member give way?

Mr Lyons: No, I have given way far too much. The Member will realise that I have been very generous.

We need to look at this issue and where we are in the world. There are still threats from rogue states and people who want to gather around themselves nuclear weapons. We should be prepared and have a proper defence for ourselves. That is the situation that we find ourselves in currently, but we do not know what will happen over the next 10 or 50 years, which we are making decisions on today. Indeed, the Prime Minister said yesterday that Islamic State was trying to get chemical and nuclear weapons capability.

I will make one final point. This is not about us having the ability to fire those weapons at will. We have the weapons as a deterrent; that is what we want them to be. We want them to be a deterrent against other people who would use the threat of nuclear weapons against us so that we can say, "We have this capability as well."

Mr Attwood: I will try to take forward some of the arguments made by Mr Dickson and Claire Hanna. Both referred to the need for interventions that revolve around aid and diplomacy to tackle poverty and the reservoirs from which extremism prospers. For us, unlike the last Member to speak, this motion is about defence, is about spend and is also about other matters, because you cannot deal with the issues of defence and spend on other matters in isolation from each other. To demonstrate that point, as we speak, 2.5 billion people around the world lack access to proper sanitation, one billion children are deprived of one or more services essential to survival and development, and 148 million under-fives in developing regions are underweight for their age. Yet we still want to spend £170 billion on a nuclear deterrent. Around the world, 101 million children are not in primary school and 22 million are not routinely protected by inoculation, and still we want to spend £170 billion on a nuclear deterrent.

The point is that our support for this motion is not just about opposition to the replacement of Trident. It is also about a paradigm shift in the conduct of the London Government and Governments elsewhere to respond to the scale and character of those figures and to recognise that addressing them addresses the issues of international security and stability. That is why we believe that this motion is not just about defence and spend; it is about a paradigm shift to a world order and world ethics that are informed by and respond to the scale of all of that.

I agree with Mr Hazzard that, even if it were a matter of mere cost, we need to be very vigilant.

There are reports in the media, which have not been contradicted, of a battle of wills between the Ministry of Defence and the Chancellor of the Exchequer as to who will carry out procurement when it comes to the replacement for Trident. Apparently, the Chancellor of the Exchequer is arguing that he wants to build his empire and control the spend in order to ensure that the MoD experience, when costs escalated way beyond the initial budget, is not reproduced. On the simple issue of cost, I advise Members to be very vigilant that it will be £170 billion, because even the Chancellor of the Exchequer is advertising the fact that, in addition to building his political empire, which is now rampant across the British Government, he wants to control this spend because he knows the risks.

The third point, which has been touched on by a number of Members, is that I can understand that, on the far side of the Second World War, the intuition of the political establishment in London was to go for nuclear weapons. It might well have seen itself as the last nation standing in the face of the tyranny of Hitler. It was concerned that it could end up being the last nation standing in the face of tyranny from other parts of the globe. However, that intuition, which was understandable in one way, has now become the prevailing orthodoxy in London, and, to some degree, nuclear weapons have become a surrogate for a lost empire. They are a symbol of power and authority in a situation in which defence needs are of a different character from those that are ill-served by a replacement for Trident.

Mr Cochrane-Watson: There is no issue more important than that of national security, yet I feel that today's motion is a travesty, for several reasons. Of course there is a debate to be had about the UK's independent nuclear deterrent and the replacement of Trident — it is a massively important and serious issue — but this is not the place to have the debate or pass motions. I remind the Members who tabled the motion that we are part of the United Kingdom: the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland. National defence is a reserved matter, and Westminster will take this decision. It really is the height of hypocrisy to bring this take-note debating society motion to the Floor of the Assembly. It is a non-devolved issue, yet last week, Sinn Féin and the DUP could not wait to repatriate social security issues. Now, they want to legislate for Trident. Let us make up our minds.

Mr Hazzard: Will the Member give way?

Mr Cochrane-Watson: The Member will give way.

Mr Hazzard: The Member may be keen to know that we, the Welsh and the Scottish devolved Parliaments are all having this debate. We are all showing the democratic will of the people of these regions who are opposed to Trident.

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Cochrane-Watson: I remind those who tabled the motion that, at Westminster, the debate has taken place, and votes have been taken on whether we should replace Trident with a new nuclear deterrent. Votes were taken on 14 May 2007, 20 January 2015 and, lately, on 4 June 2015. How did Sinn Féin vote? How did Sinn Féin debate the motion in Westminster? We all know the answer: silence. There was silence representing their constituencies at Westminster.

I assume that the Members who tabled the motion now wish to follow the line of the SNP and comrade Jeremy Corbyn in wanting unilateral nuclear disarmament. Yet the Scottish nationalists want to remain a vital part of NATO, whose main principle is that of nuclear deterrent. There is a logical and defensible argument that should be heard, but this is not the place for that. That scenario has already been outlined by eminent military leaders such as Field Marshal Lord Bramall, General the Lord Ramsbotham and General Sir Hugh Beach. There is an argument against Trident, but they all want to make it to protect our army, our navy and our Royal Air Force.

I welcome the message of reinvestment that came from Westminster yesterday. That is vital, and the Ulster Unionist Party believes that we must rebuild our conventional armed forces and continue to commit 2% of our gross domestic product to enhancing the NATO alliance. I have not heard that argument being put forward by the proposers of the motion. The reason for that is simple: they do not care about and have no concern for the defence of the United Kingdom. As for decommissioning Trident, I suggest a tip to the proposers of the motion. Why not decommission the arms of the Provisional IRA? Why not deactivate the army council? That was supposed to happen 10 years ago, and it has been proven not to have taken place. That might be a more practical step to world peace and harmony than proposing motions such as this that cannot be implemented in any way and that are outside the remit of the Assembly.

I reject the motion. I call on everyone, no matter what they think of the ethics of nuclear weapons or of the retention of an independent nuclear deterrent for the UK, to vote this silly, time-wasting motion down.

Mr Allister: It is a commentary in itself that, in this new era of a fresh start, the only business that the House can find to debate today is something we can do absolutely nothing about, either now or, happily, at any time in the future. Quite properly, it is an issue for the sovereign Parliament of the United Kingdom. The irony has not gone unnoticed by many that the proposer of the motion had the opportunity for I do not know how many years — it was 10 years and more — to articulate the case that he brought to the House in a place where it would actually count. Of course, he opted not to do so.

This debate is a fictional nonsense. It is being held in this House to cover up the fact that those who abstain from real debate where the matter really matters want to create the aura and impression that they are concerned about the matter and are doing something about it. They want to pass, as someone described it, something akin to a school debating society motion. It has no more weight or credibility than that.

It is a serious issue about the defence of our nation. It is not just that the United Kingdom has independent nuclear deterrents. It holds those deterrents as part of the NATO defence of the western world. Our contribution to NATO — a very significant part of it — is our nuclear contribution. We do not hold those things in isolation. We hold them because NATO is the bulwark that has preserved peace in western Europe and the western world since the Second World War. We hold them as a deterrent with a proven record of doing that.

I was thinking of Ukraine. When it was part of the USSR, it had nuclear weapons. When it became independent, it declared itself nuclear-free. In fact, it returned its nuclear weapons to the Russian Federation.

It did so in return for a solemn pledge that its territorial integrity would be respected. What happened to Ukraine?

It was invaded, partially annexed and is now partitioned by the very power that took unto itself Ukraine's nuclear weapons. Ukraine, being outside of NATO, was powerless.

12.00 noon

That is a small object lesson in the deterrent effect of holding nuclear weapons. Nuclear weapons are not nice weapons but they are essential in a world where there are rogue states like North Korea and the Russian Federation with malevolent intent towards others. They have been a bulwark in maintaining the peace of western Europe. Therefore, it is absolute folly for some in the House to don their unilateralist cap, seek to join the comrade who leads the Labour Party and line up and parade themselves as those opposed to these evil weapons, with no regard to the fact that they are safe today because of those evil weapons. It is those evil weapons that keep the United Kingdom and western Europe safe. All of us, I am sure, hope that they will never have to be used, but it is by having them that we maintain the peace. Therefore, I think that the motion deserves only the rejection that I hope it will receive.

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Is pribhléid é críoch a chur leis an díospóireacht seo ar an cheist tromchúiseach seo. It is a privilege to wind on this very temperate debate today on the issue of Trident, expenditure and our influence over decisions on expenditure that affect our people. It is my belief that the suggestion that spending billions of pounds on Trident is the best use of public funds is an example of perverse priorities. Those priorities are not the priorities that we see on the streets, roads and byways of the North of Ireland. Those priorities may make sense in London but they certainly do not make sense here.

When money is particularly scarce — we have just gone through a period of negotiation when the catch cry at every turn was that there is no money available and that austerity will reign — I have to agree with Alex Salmond, who said that Trident is as useless as it is wasteful in terms of public finances. I know that my colleague Mr Weir has left, but the rub is that our block grant will be used to finance that folly as well. That is capital and resource spending over many, many years.

My contention is that, rather than just rail against the expenditure on nuclear weapons, which, in my view — I do not like using the word “moral” in a Chamber of legislators — is immoral, we should set out our priorities and drive those home to the London Government, as long as they have the fiscal levers and the economic power, to insist that they set other priorities and that our expenditure goes on other areas that make a real difference and improvement to people's lives.

Mr Lyons: Will the Member give way?

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Of course.

Mr Lyons: Thank you very much. The Member has just said that it will come out of our block grant, so I would like to ask him how much money will come out of our block grant each year over the next 30 years.

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Thank you, Mr Lyons. If we use Mr Nesbitt's figures — I am happy to use his modest figures, because last night they went up another £5 billion, with £10 billion contingency — which add up to £41 billion, we make up 2% to 3% of that. If you use Mr Nesbitt's figure of £2.8 billion, between £50 million and £75 million per annum would come out of our finances unless there was a Barnett consequential.

Mr Frew started by quoting the Bible, which is often a cause for concern, unless he is going to quote, "Love thy neighbour as thyself." We may want to take our political direction from many areas, but let us not take it from any call to war, regardless of how we may wish to defend all our people.

Claire Hanna referred to this eye-watering expenditure, and eye-watering it is, no matter which figures you use, whether it is £167 billion or £41 billion. It is eye-watering, as Ms Hanna said. The funding commitment will become clear and will peak between 2019 and 2030. Of course, 2019 is during the mandate of the next Government.

Mr Nesbitt has left us, and I owe him an intervention but he will not get it today. He argued, again, that Trident is a priority. I do not see that and I do not think it stacks up. Mr Nesbitt mentioned the countries that we should fear are Russia, Iran, Pakistan and North Korea. Russia is an ally in Syria; Iran is involved in a rapprochement with the USA; Pakistan is an ally of Britain; and North Korea is probably one of the few countries with a higher military and defence spend than the British.

I very much take on board the points made by Mr Attwood and Mr Dickson that this is about a broader question than just public finances. It is about how we see the world, where we see our place and that of our neighbours in it, and whether we should focus our expenditure on nuclear deterrents and weapons. In those terms, Mr Attwood's reference to a "paradigm shift" is essential, as we move forward. I think that people in this part of the world have already made that paradigm shift and have spending priorities other than nuclear weapons.

Chris Hazzard said that the debate is as much about economic choices as it is about Trident. Of course, I endorse that.

Our friend Mr Lyons intervened but declined to say whether Carnlough or Ballycastle will be the location for Trident, which he would like to see come here. I think, though, that one thing that he would accept — and this goes to Mr Cochrane-Watson as well — is that, when they say that the debate in the devolved Administrations will have no effect on the discussion around Trident, the Scots may entirely upend the entire Trident project by voting for independence, voting against Trident, or voting to expel it. So, I think that our voice is important and matters.

On that paradigm shift, and having heard Members quoting the Bible in a Chamber where we may occasionally have heard the words, "No Pope here", an alternative view on how we should set our priorities for the time ahead came from Pope Francis in July this year, when he called for a new economic order, focused on the poor, declaring:

"Let us not be afraid to say it: we want change, real change, structural change".

He decried a system that:

"has imposed the mentality of profit at any price, with no concern for social exclusion or the destruction of nature".

That has to inform how we move forward in serving the people of the North of Ireland.

To conclude, I think that the debate actually does indicate the fresh start that Mr Cochrane-Watson talked about, because it has been a lot more temperate and polite than one might have expected.

Moving into the future, I hope that we manage to convince the British Government — as we did on welfare, tax credits and extra money for services here — that our priority is to improve the quality of life of those we serve. In that regard, I believe that part of the fresh start will be all parties in the Chamber, but certainly on these two sides, uniting around the need to defend our people and front-line services.

Earlier this week, I was in Forestside shopping centre and met a young man whom I will call Conall to save his blushes. He had left school after finishing his A levels and was working in a cafe but seeking a career. He was making up his mind about whether to return to university or try to get full-time employment. I think that our job is to make sure that we create work for young people like Conall. Our priorities have to be in serving all the people of this jurisdiction, rather than endorsing or standing idly by and silent while money is wasted on ventures such as Trident.

Mr Allister also mentioned a fresh start. I think that, in the time ahead, we will see other motions brought to the Chamber that will allow us to unite around a fresh start and unite around priorities that will be the best for all our people. We may not make common cause today on Trident, but I believe that we will make common cause in the time ahead around jobs, growth and investment.

Oral Answers to Questions

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Questions 2, 3 and 4 have been withdrawn.

Agriculture and Rural Development

DARD HQ: Ballykelly

1. Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the proposed second entrance for the new departmental headquarters at Ballykelly. (AQO 9158/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. The initial configuration and design of the proposed access to the new DARD HQ was submitted in April 2015 as part of the planning application. In response to concerns from local residents, the configuration and position of the road has been amended and resubmitted. The detailed design drawings for the new configuration are being developed for submission to Transport NI by the end of this month.

The new access road will cross private land, and DFP's Land and Property Services (LPS) has been commissioned to negotiate with the landowner on behalf of my Department. Our plan is to appoint a contractor at the end of January 2016, and we expect the negotiations for the required access to be completed in advance of that.

Consultations with the Environment Agency as part of the planning process have ensured that the new access has been designed sensitively, taking into account the listed structures that are close to the site, such as the church and graveyard, in order to maintain the character of the area.

Mr G Robinson: I thank the Minister for her response. Will the Minister give the House an update on the relocation process and the rebuild situation of DARD headquarters?

Mrs O'Neill: Plans are under way, and I am very pleased with the progress. We are keen to deliver on the timescale that we have set out, and we are working closely with staff to plan the transition. As the Member knows, we are doing that through a transitional phase to allow people time to adjust and make a comprehensive transition to the new site.

Everything is going according to schedule, and I am very pleased with the work that is ongoing. It is full steam ahead. Other locations have been delivered on as part of the wider relocation programme: the Fisheries office opened in south Down, work started on the Rivers Agency headquarters at the Loughry site in Cookstown, and I intend to officially open the Forest Service headquarters in Fermanagh over the next number of weeks. All the ongoing work is very positive, and we are hopeful that we will deliver on the timescale that I have set out.

Mr Dallat: I thank the Minister for her answer. I am sure that she would agree with me that, while a second entrance to the former army camp is of critical importance, far more important is what will happen on the remainder of the 900-acre site and whether there is the infrastructure to attract inward investment and, in the words of locals, attract hundreds, if not thousands, of new jobs. That is really what east Derry wants.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call Mrs Sandra Overend.

Mrs Overend: Will the Minister provide an update on what action —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: My apologies. Sorry, I call the Minister.

Mrs O'Neill: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I concur with everything that has been said about the potential of the site and the potential wider benefits for Ballykelly and the entire north-west. The fact that DARD has moved onto the site and has become the anchor tenant creates the potential for other investors to want to move to the site. Obviously, there has been significant interest shown to OFMDFM, which owns the rest of the site.

There are tremendous benefits to be had for the entire north-west, particularly in employment opportunities, construction opportunities and all the other things that go along with developing the entire site.

Mrs Overend: I thought that the Principal Deputy Speaker was giving the Minister the new challenge of grouping the supplementary questions together. Will the Minister provide an update on what action her Department has taken to decontaminate the land at Ballykelly, especially to remove the lead? Overall, how much will it cost to clean the site up and remove the likelihood of flooding?

Mrs O'Neill: All those things were factored into the original costs, which were set out in, and were part of, the original plan. We looked at the existing onsite buildings, which were relatively new compared with the other buildings that might have contamination issues. That is an issue that OFMDFM is taking forward through the central advisory unit of LPS through DFP. That is their work.

We are interested in one specific part of the site, and I am confident that we have taken all the actions necessary to address any potential contamination issues. That has all been built into the programme timescale. The Member referred to flooding on the site. We are very aware of the flooding that happens at the bottom end of the site and the significant cost associated with taking that water away and ensuring that flooding on the site is stopped. Those are all considerations for any future investment and for anybody coming on to that site, but, certainly, for my Department's part and for the future of the headquarters going there, we are content that we have taken account of all the potential challenges.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call Mr Cathal Ó hOisín. I remind the Member that this is constituency-focused.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an fhreagra sin. The Minister has outlined the obvious benefits of the relocation of the DARD headquarters. As the anchor tenant on the Ballykelly and Shackleton site, will she outline what other benefits may accrue to the Ballykelly and wider east Derry and north-west area?

Mrs O'Neill: I thank the Member for his contributions. I absolutely agree about the wider benefits. As I have always said, the relocation of the headquarters will obviously help to stimulate the local economy in a number of ways, particularly in relation to increased spending power in the local area and the provision of high-quality, high-value public-sector jobs moving to the site. Obviously, in advance of all that there is all the ongoing construction works, such as the clearing of the site. We will need ongoing servicing of the building. The benefits to the north-west as a whole speak for themselves. Very much at the core of the entire relocation project and all the relocations that we have been successful in delivering to date has been sharing the wealth right across the economy and making sure that we have a fairer distribution of public-sector jobs. That is only right and proper. I am glad that my Department is leading the way in terms of delivering for that.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr Beggs is not in his place.

Horse Racing Fund

6. Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the horse racing fund. (AQO 9163/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department administers the horse racing fund to support the two local racecourses. In 2015, charges on bookmakers have brought in just under £369,000 to the fund. Following representations from the local racecourses and from bookmakers, I commissioned my officials to review the horse racing fund charges, and a public consultation was launched on 2 July 2015. We have now received consultation responses, and officials are currently considering them. I will make a decision on the way forward in due course.

Mr Hilditch: I thank the Minister for the information supplied. The work of those who manage the facilities at Down Royal and Downpatrick is to be acknowledged and congratulated. Does the Minister value that as part of the rural economy? Can she help to progress and support those venues as a matter of urgency?

Mrs O'Neill: Yes. I absolutely value what they do in terms of the employment created and all the other benefits. With the consultation, we are trying to make sure that the horse racing levy is sufficient to allow us to continue to invest and attract additional support for the horse racing industry. The reason behind the consultation is to try to see where we can improve things, if we can. I was pleased to see the number of people who responded to the consultation. It shows a significant industry interest in the subject. I look forward to being able to make a decision on the way forward as soon as possible, given that the consultation has just closed.

Mr Byrne: Will the Minister state whether she is considering giving any grant aid to those racecourses? They provide a very important service to Northern Ireland, particularly to the horse breeders.

Mrs O'Neill: No, I am not currently giving consideration to that. I am currently looking at where I can help the industry. If I am minded to look towards raising the levy, there will be an advantage for the racecourses because they will have additional funding to reinvest. That is the priority area for me at the moment. I have spoken with Horse Sport Ireland and horse industry representatives in relation to support for the industry. I am certainly willing to do all I can to support the industry.

Woodland Cover

7. Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the action her Department has taken to increase woodland cover. (AQO 9164/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Recently, I launched three new forestry grant schemes and allocated up to £17.4 million to support private woodland expansion and the sustainable management of existing woodland under the rural development programme for 2014-2020. The schemes are the forest expansion scheme, the forest protection scheme and the woodland investment grant. The funding is sufficient to create 1,800 hectares of new woodland and sustain approximately 4,000 hectares of woodland created under previous programmes. It will make a small but positive contribution towards my aim of achieving 12% woodland cover by the middle of this century.

Our woodlands are a vital community resource. There is a clear consensus about the need to increase woodland area to counter the impact of climate change and to provide a habitat for wildlife and places for people to relax and unwind from stress and to take part in physical exercise.

The forestry grant schemes which I have just launched will help deliver these needs. I urge farmers and landowners not to miss out on this funding opportunity, which could help to diversify their farming activity, and to remember that applications for planting this winter under the forestry expansion scheme must be submitted to Forest Service by 3.00 pm on Monday 4 January.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a freagra. I thank the Minister for her answer. Can she give us any indication of whether these grants will be available to hill farmers, in particular, given the role that trees and woodland in high areas can play in soaking up water and rainfall and stopping it going down into valleys and causing knock-on flooding in other areas?

Mrs O'Neill: Current EU rules allow land that is eligible for the basic payment scheme and that is planted with trees under the forest expansion scheme to remain eligible for the basic payment scheme during the 20-year period of commitment. That is a potentially significant benefit for farmers who are thinking about diversification into forestry. That is farmers right across the board, whether they are hill farmers or not. The scheme is there for all to avail themselves of. There is potentially quite significant investment, both for the environment and for individuals to look towards diversification, if that is what they want their future direction of travel to be.

Mr Cree: Minister, as you know, in the 2007-2011 Programme for Government there was an ambitious plan, which was achievable but which, in fact, your predecessor never got near to achieving. In the current year, there is no target at all. Do you believe that there should be an afforestation programme in the next Programme for Government? If so, can you give some indication of the size that it should be?

Mrs O'Neill: No, I do not have that view at this moment in time. Obviously, we have a very strong forestry programme, which aims to meet the long-term aim of 12% woodland cover by 2050. We are working our way through that, and we will also have a review of it midway through to see if we are, in fact, living up to being able to deliver on those targets. We will obviously consult on the Programme for Government. I am open to all ideas on what should be our key asks in the new Programme for Government, and I look forward to your support in delivering some of those.

Mr Rogers: Thanks, Minister, for your answers thus far. Minister, is there any particular grant to encourage willow production? I am thinking particularly of wood pellets as an alternative heat source.

Mrs O'Neill: There is not a forestry grant scheme for that type of production. However, that is something that could be looked at under the rural business investment scheme, the new rural development programme and the local action group (LAG) funding. I encourage anybody who has an idea on that to consult their local LAG on the opportunities for that area of work. We hope to have that scheme opened up at the start of next year, as soon as we sign off on the new rural strategies with the LAGs, which I hope to do by the end of December. There is potential scope for that type of business under the new rural development programme.

Agricultural Community: Standard of Living

8. Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of how the EU has delivered the promise of article 39 of the Lisbon treaty to ensure a fair standard of living for the agricultural community, in particular by increasing the individual earnings of persons engaged in agriculture. (AQO 9165/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The variability of farm incomes is a problem all over the world. The complex factors affecting farm incomes are many and varied. Bumper harvests reduce prices, while poor weather reduces yields and can result in higher prices. Economic recession, wars or political unrest can all curb demand for food, particularly more expensive food items. Exchange rate movements can affect the competitiveness of food exporters over a short period. In other industries, manufacturers can more precisely match supply with demand, and hence income variability is much less of a problem.

Agriculture is a special case, and that is why the EU supports farming to the extent that it does. How successful is EU support for farmers? As we all know, the agriculture sector is struggling, and I want the EU to do more to help. However, taking a longer-term view, the EU has been good for the farming community in the North. In the last 15 years, the underlying trend in real income is upwards. Of course, there is variation around that trend, with 2014 being an example of negative variation. As I have already outlined, volatility in farm incomes is inescapable because it is due to factors beyond our control.

In 2014, our farmers received around £295 million under the CAP. Farmers in the North would have been much worse off without this EU funding, which, of course, would disappear in a Brexit situation. Outside the EU, funding for agriculture would fall, unless the Treasury provided additional funds. We all know that the British Government have long wanted to reduce the funding going to farmers. This would be to the detriment of all our farmers.

Mr Allister: Leaving aside the propaganda, is the fact not that current falling incomes are a devastating testimony to the abject failure of the EU to live up to its own promise in its own treaty — the Lisbon Treaty — to increase the income of those depending on agriculture? It has lamentably failed and its recent attitude to the milk crisis showed that it could not care less. Is that not so?

2.15 pm

Mrs O'Neill: As I said in my original answer, there is room for reform. I said that I do not agree with the position that Europe has taken in response to the dairy crisis. I have made that statement to the House on a number of occasions; I have made that very clear. I am continuing to lobby the Commission on what more it can do in relation to intervention prices. I do not think that the approach that it took was the correct one. However, the fact remains that the CAP ensures that almost £300 million a year goes into the pockets of farmers. If we were to find ourselves in a scenario where we were no longer part of a CAP, where would that money come from? Who is going to assist farmers to be able to continue to produce food?

Mr Allister: Our own Government.

Mrs O'Neill: Agriculture is different. I tell you what, I would not want to be dependent on the Tories being able to replace the CAP. I would not want to be dependent on the Tories replacing almost £300 million a year of subsidies to farmers, because they are opposed to subsidies; that is not their ideology. You can have your opinion on Brexit, but I strongly do not share your view. Whilst the CAP creates plenty of challenges, red tape and regulations — all things that we have to work our way through — the benefit to farmers is almost £300 million a year. Almost £500 million was provided for the rural development programme. That is money that was invested in rural communities and rural businesses. All those things make a difference to the lives of rural dwellers and farmers. Whilst there are plenty of challenges with the EU, I think that the benefits for the farmers speak for themselves.

Mr Poots: How is the Minister and her Department helping to increase the earnings of individuals who are involved in agriculture through reducing red tape, on her side, and in providing practical support to farmers in a time of food price crises?

Mrs O'Neill: The Member knows that we are continually looking at how we can improve things and trying to reduce red tape. I think that we will have another opportunity to improve things further with the change in the make-up of the Departments. I think that we will have an opportunity to look at our inspection regime in particular. We can point to a number of examples of where things have been improved.

The Member also asked about practical support. My advisers are on the ground. College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) advisers are working with farmers, particularly in relation to benchmarking. We are currently recruiting for business development groups. Again, that will be advisers working with farmers on how best they can meet the needs of their business into the future. So, there is plenty of practical work going on within CAFRE and across our three campuses in terms of the education opportunity. It is great to see that so many farmers are availing themselves of that and wanting to learn more. They want to benchmark; they want to look at knowledge transfer; they want to look at how they can improve efficiency.

The new rural development programme is going to be a vital tool in supporting the industry into the future. As we work our way through the development of the farm business improvement scheme, there are certainly going to be benefits around looking at production efficiencies for all farmers across all sectors. I have worked very hard to secure that. We have the largest rural development programme that the North of Ireland has ever seen. The sooner we can get these programmes opened up at the start of the year, the better it will be for the industry in its entirety.

Mr McCarthy: The Minister will be aware of the recent case where a local vegetable grower received 8p for a turnip, while, at the same time, the same turnips were being sold in the supermarket for 80p. Does the Minister agree that that is a shocking state of affairs? What is the Minister doing to ensure that suppliers get a fair and reasonable return for their produce?

Mrs O'Neill: I totally agree with the Member. It is a disgrace; it is shocking. The Member will know that, since I have taken up office, I have been committed to bringing forward a strategy for the industry as a whole going forward, the Going for Growth strategy. Central to that strategy in going forward is a recognition that there is one supply chain. In order to have one supply chain, there needs to be respect right along it. Farmers need to be paid a fair price for what they produce. Obviously, nobody could be accused of using the example that you have highlighted merely to startle. Somebody getting that kind of price for what they are producing is absolutely disgusting and it should not be acceptable.

Recently, I convened a supply chain forum, which is an attempt to bring primary producers, processors and retailers together to look at how we can move forward together, how we can create more respect within the supply chain and how we can communicate that better.

We are involved in that work alongside challenging the major retailers, as I am always happy to do, on what they are paying for what they buy from local farmers.

Mr Swann: Going back to the thrust of the main story, the European Milk Board has actually just called for Commissioner Hogan to stand down because of his failure to redress the ongoing milk crisis. I know that the Minister and her party have been critical of Commissioner Hogan in the past. Will she join in that call for him to resign?

Mrs O'Neill: As I have said consistently, I do not agree with the approach that Europe has taken. I do not agree with the approach that the commissioner has taken. I have been critical of him and to him in person. I have been critical to him when I have written to him. I will challenge him continually on the role that he is playing to support the industry. Yes; I think that if the dairy industry continues with the low prices and the glut that it has, there will come a time when his position of burying his head in the sand and saying that there is no crisis will no longer be sustainable. I will continue to challenge the commissioner while he is in position on what he is doing to deliver for the dairy sector. I have not been shy about it in the past, and I will certainly not be shy about it in the future.

Mr Irwin: Given that £4 billion a year of exports were going to Russia, the ban has left farmers in a dilemma. Does the Minister believe that Europe could have done much more to help the situation given that this was totally outside farmers' control?

Mrs O'Neill: Yes, because when we point to the situation in the dairy industry in particular, we know that one of the contributory factors is the fact that Russia stopped buying. Whilst we were not sending many dairy products into that market, we were sending cheeses, so that created a problem for the industry and has helped to sustain the low price. Yes, I believe that Europe could have done more. That is the point that I am making. I will continue to challenge Europe and Commissioner Hogan around what he is doing, because I believe that the approach that they took in Europe, whilst I accept that there is some funding and money going into farmers' bank accounts as we speak — it has been paid out from last week, so they will have received it last week and this week — and that is, in a sense, as a one-off, slightly helpful, I do not think that it is the longer-term approach that we need. I believe that we need to see a review of intervention prices that would allow the market to correct itself.

Brexit: Agricultural Implications

9. Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the work her Department has undertaken on the implications for agriculture and rural development locally of an exit from the European Union. (AQO 9166/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Given the importance of this issue, I have asked my Department to begin assessing the impact of a possible British exit from the EU on agriculture and rural life in the North. Clearly, an exit from the EU would mean that direct payments to farmers and rural development funding from the EU would stop. However, the many uncertainties surrounding a potential exit makes a quantitative assessment of impacts very difficult.

There are significant uncertainties around the type of trade arrangements with the EU and the rest of the world that could be negotiated following a withdrawal of EU membership. Of particular significance is whether there would be tariff-free access to EU markets for agricultural products and vice versa. If direct payments from the EU stopped, it would not be feasible for the Executive to fund these payments at current levels from the block grant unless additional money were forthcoming from the British Treasury.

It has been clear that the British Government have long wanted to reduce the level of support going to farmers and rural development under the CAP. They do not regard this type of support as value for money. I believe that the Treasury would be unsympathetic to calls for some of the money that is saved from withdrawing from the EU to be used to maintain direct support to farmers and rural communities at current levels.

A significant reduction in direct support would leave many of our farmers in real long-term financial difficulty. A faster rate of structural change in the industry would be inevitable. Small farms would be likely to suffer the most. It is very likely that a reduction of funding for farmers and rural communities would have knock-on effects for the wider environment.

Mr McElduff: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Does the Minister agree that, when left to their own devices, the British Government at this time poorly represent — fail to represent — farmers and fishermen here?

Mrs O'Neill: One thing that we have been successful in, particularly with regard to the dairy crisis, is that we were able to get DEFRA onto our page with regard to the needs of the local industry, although it took a long time. We worked very hard to secure that. We made sure that we have a very strong voice in Europe, raising awareness of the significant and unique circumstances of the local dairy industry. That is why it is so important that we have decisions made by locally elected Ministers who understand the local situation, whether it is in farming, manufacturing or any other sector. It is so important that we have locally elected Ministers who can take decisions that are in the best interests. I certainly always take my case directly to Europe because I think that it is important to do that. Do they always listen? Absolutely not, but it certainly does not stop us going out and making as much noise as we possibly can when fighting our corner for local industry.

Mr I McCrea: The Minister has stated that she believes that we are better off in Europe than out of it. Given the fact that approximately £8.2 billion is paid into Europe by the British Government, what is she doing — if the will of the people is to pull out of Europe — to ensure that the agriculture industry in Northern Ireland gets the maximum benefit for farmers out of that £8.2 billion?

Mrs O'Neill: I think that you are jumping a lock of skips. We have to look at the reality, which is that the Tories' policy will never be one of subsidising farmers; they will never want to replace like with like. I would never be confident — I do not think that anybody could be — that the Tories would replace that money if there was a Brexit and they pulled out of the EU. It is highly unlikely, given Tory ideology, that they would ever replace £300 million for farmers. There was up to £500 million in the previous programme for the ongoing rural development work, which was about business investment and working with communities on community services and basic services. I would not be confident that the Tories would want to replace that. However long they remain in power, none of us can be sure of that. We are best placed to look towards fighting the challenges and to look for reform, but the interests of our farmers are better served within the EU.

Farming: Business Development Groups

10. Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how her Department will ensure maximum enrolment and representation of all farming sectors in the recently launched business development groups. (AQO 9167/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The business development groups programme was launched in early November, and applications will be accepted up to 4.00 pm on Monday 14 December 2015. CAFRE has the lead role in developing, delivering and promoting this scheme, which is funded under the rural development programme.

To encourage uptake of the programme and maximise enrolments, CAFRE engaged with industry stakeholders prior to the launch and continues to do so during the application period. CAFRE is using a variety of media to promote the programme to all sectors of the industry, including press releases, information leaflets, radio interviews and the DARD and CAFRE websites. Information has been provided about the benefits of taking part, eligibility to apply, the funding available and the application process.

It is anticipated that CAFRE will allocate up to 1,500 farmers into groups in the 2015-16 year. A further 1,500 farmers will be allocated to the business development groups in subsequent tranches. To ensure that the programme has a positive impact across all sectors of the industry, sectoral limits will be applied to applications. In the event of oversubscription to one or more sectors, we will have to apply some criteria. The aim is to ensure that business development groups provide support for progressive farm businesses across all sectors of the industry in proportions that are representative of the size and sectoral constitution of the industry as a whole.

Mr McMullan: I thank the Minister for her answer. What funding is available for farmers who are keen to participate in these groups?

Mrs O'Neill: The benefits of the groups are the benefits to the farmers themselves. Working together with their peers, the business development groups will bring many benefits to farmers that will help them to develop their businesses, learn about new technology and improve farm profitability. They will be supported by a CAFRE development adviser and they will have the option to gain a level 3 qualification. Farmers who attend all eight training events will qualify for a payment of up to £490 a year. This payment is planned for the first two years of the programme and then it will be reviewed. An allowance of up to £600 per training event hosted will also be payable to farmers throughout the lifetime of the scheme. So, there is an opportunity for them to take part in the ongoing training and development work, while being assisted financially to be able, perhaps, to have someone help on the farm while they are at the courses. It also encourages them to host training events and share with other farmers their best practice and the good work that they do.

Dairy Production

11. Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline her plans to assist farmers to move to lower-cost dairy production. (AQO 9168/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department plans to assist dairy farmers to move towards lower-cost production methods through the ongoing delivery of education and training programmes at the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise. CAFRE will also continue to demonstrate knowledge and technology transfer projects, which aim to improve business efficiency for dairy farm businesses.

From April 2015 to 16 November 2015, CAFRE delivered 57 training events aimed at improving production performance to 1,166 dairy farmers, and it is currently demonstrating five technology projects to the dairy industry. My Department will continue to work with AFBI to ensure that knowledge and technology transfer projects reflect the outcomes of research into low-cost dairy production systems.

My CAFRE advisers are assisting farmers by offering workshops entitled 'Feed and Finance' to look at the cost of milk production. In addition, my staff are assisting farmers to complete business plans and cash flows.

Participating in CAFRE's business development groups will also provide dairy farmers with the opportunity to work collaboratively, improve technical efficiency, improve business management skills and learn about new technologies and innovative ways of working. I encourage all farmers, including dairy farmers, to apply to business development groups before the closing date of 14 December.

2.30 pm

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We now move to topical questions.

Pig Farmers: DARD Support

T1. Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what her Department is doing to support local pig farmers. (AQT 3181/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I met pig producers just yesterday in relation to some of the challenges, which include, as the Member will be aware, the price differential that they receive. That is an ongoing challenge for local farmers. The other area that we discussed and which is ongoing is, obviously, opening up new markets and new potential export opportunities for pig product. That is particularly focused on China, but there are obviously other opportunities that we are looking towards.

Mr Moutray: I thank the Minister for her answer. Given the recent figures published by the National Pig Association that indicate that, typically, only 30% of the gammons consumed in the United Kingdom at Christmas are of British origin, do you feel that your Department could do more to help to exploit this area?

Mrs O'Neill: My Department is certainly doing all that we can to open up new export opportunities, and, as I said, China is a key market. However, we are also looking towards Australia, America and the Philippines. There are quite a number of other areas that we are targeting, and that is in conjunction with the industry. We are also looking towards a new marketing body, on which I have recently worked with the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to establish. Obviously, that will create opportunities for all sectors, not just the pig sector. It is about trying to get us the ability to market our product and to get into more opportunities, whether across England, Scotland or Wales or Europe or even further afield. I think that all the work that we are doing with the Agri-Food Strategy Board will lead to benefits in the medium and longer term for all sectors, including the pig sector.

TB Eradication: Update

T2. Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on her strategy to tackle the TB issue. (AQT 3182/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Member will know that, particularly in relation to TB, we established an industry partnership that was to take forward a body of work. It has recently published its interim report and will produce a further report in the early part of next year, which, I believe, will look towards a sea change on attitudes right across the industry and farmers on how we can tackle TB. We have our TB eradication plan, which is worth £4 million from the EU. That is ongoing, and I think that we are all working very hard from every possible angle to drive down levels of TB. That will enable us to look towards more export opportunities if we get to the stage where we can eradicate the disease.

Mr Buchanan: I thank the Minister for her answer, but I think that it is not much comfort for the farming community, especially those who have farms that have been closed for many months and are suffering great financial constraints. We are still wrestling with this issue and nothing positive has come to the fore to deal with the matter. Does the Minister agree that it is a serious failing under her watch and that of her predecessor that, to date, after many years, little has been done to tackle this particular issue?

Mrs O'Neill: This is a favourite question of the Member at Question Time. My answer remains the same in that TB is a complicated disease. There is no simple solution or quick fix. If there were, we would just use best practice from any other country and apply it here. Unfortunately, that is not the case. There is not any good practice or any good example to look to. We have our test and vaccinate or remove (TVR) programme. We have had our TB eradication programme approved by the EU, which is a programme worth £4 million. We have the TB strategic partnership group, which is ongoing and has produced quite a number of recommendations. I do not think that we can come at it from any more angles than that. It is a very complicated disease and we want to be able to eradicate it. We have been very successful in relation to brucellosis and, hopefully, we will get there as well with TB.

Land Mobility Service: Young Farmers

T3. Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she supports the Land Mobility Service initiative between Macra Na Feirme and the Young Farmers Clubs of Ulster, which tries to match retiring farmers with young people who are trying to get into the industry. (AQT 3183/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I have worked in the past with the Young Farmers and Macra Na Feirme around the Know Your Neighbour campaign, and I am very open to looking towards any of the campaigns that they bring forward. It is certainly my experience from areas where they have worked in partnership that they have been very successful, so I am very open to looking at supporting them again if they come forward with a proposal. To date, they have not actually come forward with anything specific. Obviously, we have an ongoing programme of work with young farmers, which I am very pleased with. I enjoy speaking to them regularly and talking about the programmes that they have been involved with.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to the Minister for her reply. She will know that one of the big blockages in succession planning on farms is the conacre system, which causes problems with land mobility as well as succession planning. How does she see her Department addressing that issue? How would she drive forward any change in culture or in the way that system works?

Mrs O'Neill: Again, the Member will be aware, hopefully, that we have a succession planning programme in the rural development programme. It involves working with farm families on how to plan for the future, how their farm business will look in the future, and how to deal with any changes when they happen. Certainly, farm family planning will be another key part of the new rural development programme. Whether it be the conacre situation or any of the other factors that contribute to when, how or why changes happen on family farms, we will certainly play our role.

Alongside that, we have recently announced the young farmers' payment, which is just over €81 per hectare. That is a good incentive for a young person to be the head of holding and take over the family farm. The fact that all those young people have taken part in a level 2 qualification in agriculture and are looking at further education opportunities bodes very well for the future of farming.

Rural Development Programme: Sporting Organisations

T4. Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to acknowledge the concerns and perceptions of many in rural and farming communities that funding from the last rural development programme was heavily slanted towards sporting organisations, including large amounts to already cash-rich groups; and, given the farming crisis, to give an assurance that farmers will be prioritised in the 2014-2020 programme. (AQT 3184/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: No, I do not agree with you. I think that the previous rural development programme, which is coming to an end — and we are about to open up our new programme — has been extremely successful in rural communities and in funding projects. I always say that the beauty of the rural development programme is that it is not about somebody sitting in the Department telling you what you need: it is about home-grown ideas; it comes from the community and is grassroots-up. So, I hope that the Member is not suggesting for one minute that some of the projects — that I know she visits and thinks are very valuable — are not valuable after all. When you go out on the ground and take a look at how the rural development programme has assisted communities to deliver for themselves, quite often working in partnership with other funders, you see that, in my opinion, it has been money well spent.

I have continued to do everything I can to address the farming crisis and, in particular, the dairy crisis. I am happy to champion the local industry's needs, and I have done so over the last year, or year and a half, particularly for the dairy sector. What I have delivered for the rural community and farmers is the largest ever rural development programme that the North has ever seen. That is my commitment to agriculture and rural communities: to make sure that we have the vehicle to be able to deliver for rural communities and farmers. I am keen to open all the schemes as quickly as I possibly can. Some have already opened, and the rest will open in the new year. It is not helpful, and it is disingenuous, to play farming communities against rural communities, because they are all same.

Mrs Dobson: I am disappointed by the Minister's response. As important as sport is, we have heard loud and clear in this Building about the real need that exists amongst our farming families. Will the Minister agree to meet farmers and rural representatives to ensure that the focus in the programme reflects the real needs of our farming community? Is she confident that the make-up of the local action groups will enable them to address that need?

Mrs O'Neill: Yes, I am very comfortable with the make-up of the local action groups. I am also very comfortable with all the applications that have been processed and received funding. You referred to sporting organisations and cash-rich groups. I remind you that your councillors and party colleagues also sit on the LAGs that distribute the funding. Applications are received from community groups and organisations, no matter where they come from, and the LAGs, which include local community representatives and councillors from different political parties, make a decision based on the criteria. I hope that the Member is not referring to there being anything untoward in the delivery by LAGs because that is not the case. All applications are assessed based on the criteria.

To continue to play farming off against rural communities is not helpful, because farmers live in rural communities. Farmers are entitled to basic services, and they have the same challenges about access to transport, to broadband and to education for their families. I do not think that we need to play one against the other. Farmers are rural people who live in rural communities, and rural communities and people are entitled to the same support and attention from my Department. I am certainly not apologetic about that.

Regional Reserve Refusals: Young Farmers

T5. Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, having asked her a number of times before, whether she has confirmed with her officials the refusals that young farmer applicants to the regional reserve have been experiencing owing to the qualifications of their accountant. (AQT 3185/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Yes, I have. We have been working our way through the issue. About 80 young farmers found themselves in that scenario. We are encouraging them all to respond to the Department, and they will be told how to deal with the issue.

Mr Swann: I thank the Minister for that answer. That is the same response that she gave to a question for written answer. Will she explain why a departmental official told a constituent of mine last week that the reason why he had been turned down was that his accountant did not have the proper qualification, but he would not put that in writing because he had been told not to do so? It still seems that the Minister's officials are applying that rule, although they are not prepared to tell constituents that that is why they are doing it.

Mrs O'Neill: Instead of raising the issue at Question Time, it would have been more advisable for you to have called to my office to talk about any official who is not doing something that is proper practice. I have clearly said to you that I believe that there is a way to resolve the issue. In those 80 cases that I referred to, if an accountant did not have the recognised qualification — that is, was not part of a registered accountancy body — there was a challenge to be addressed, but I believe that we have found a way to address it. If you wish to discuss a particular case, call up to my office after Question Time.

Rivers: Responsibility Confusion

T6. Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, given that she has responsibility for rivers, as does, in certain circumstances, Northern Ireland Water, whether she recognises the considerable confusion in the public's mind and the fact that there is an opportunity between NI Water and the Rivers Agency to dispute a great deal of rivers matters across Northern Ireland. (AQT 3186/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: A lot of cross-departmental work is ongoing on quite a number of projects. There is often confusion, which is why it is helpful that the Executive established the flooding incident line, which means that, if you are experiencing flooding, you have one point of contact. With the new departmental structure, there will be opportunities to address that challenge once and for all, in that all those issues will be dealt with by one Department.

Mr Dickson: I welcome your recognition that there is confusion. Despite there being a flooding incident line, confusion continues to reign. The recent flooding incident at Greenisland railway station in east Antrim, for example, is a classic case of both Departments trying to palm one off onto the other. At this point in time today, neither the Rivers Agency nor NI Water is prepared to take responsibility for a very dangerous situation because it forces pedestrians onto the roadway.

Mrs O'Neill: I am not aware of the ins and outs or the details of the case that you refer to, but, if you want, you can drop an email or talk to the private office about trying to establish the facts. I can answer only for the work of the Rivers Agency, not for the work of DRD or NI Water, but I am very happy to explore whether there are any shortcomings in my Department's role.

Foot-in-mouth Disease

T8. Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, given that she will be well aware of foot-and-mouth disease within the agricultural sector, whether she is also aware of the recent outbreak of foot-in-mouth disease suffered by her colleague Mr Flanagan who, in one moment, does not think ISIS are terrorists and, in the next moment, thinks that they are; is he suffering from foot-in-mouth disease. (AQT 3188/11-16)

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member knows that that is not an appropriate question to the Department of Agriculture. Bronwyn McGahan is not in her place.

Fishing: December Quotas

T10. Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what prospects there are of her going to Brussels and bringing us back some good news about the December quotas for the fishing industry, albeit that she has been on her feet for three quarters of an hour and only once has the word "fishing" been mentioned. (AQT 3190/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Member knows that I can answer only the questions that are put before me, but I am very happy to talk about fishing. I recently met the industry in relation to preparations for the Fisheries Council in Brussels over the next number of weeks, where we will have an opportunity to go out and argue our quota situation. It will be an uphill challenge, but we have been used to that for the past five or six years. In conjunction with our local industry, I have identified its priority asks, and I will go out with the industry to fight our corner to get the best possible result that we can. We will use our scientists and all the evidence that we have to argue for additional quota.

2.45 pm

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Time is up.

Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I must inform the House that questions 6, 7, 12 and 13 have been withdrawn.

Arts Council: Budget Cuts

1. Ms Lo asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what measurable criteria were used to determine the redeployment of the funding that was cut from the Arts Council's budget. (AQO 9172/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): I thank the Member for her question. She will now be aware that I have been able to reinstate the Arts Council's budget because of a successful bid for additional funds in the November monitoring round. That will enable the Arts Council to reinstate £620,000 that was to be lost through cuts that it planned to make to 32 arts organisations. For the same reason, I have also been able to reverse cuts to Sport NI, and that will also allow some support and flexibility and will help to preserve its grant.

While I am pleased with that — I am sure that the Member is too — we should, however, bear in mind the wider context. The cuts imposed by the Westminster Government have reduced the Executive's budget significantly. For me, DCAL started with almost 10% less than I had last year. The budget redeployment exercise was required to address a number of pressures that had arisen in my Department, and I firmly place that at the feet of the Westminster Government.

Ms Lo: I thank the Minister for her response and welcome the reinstatement of money to the arts sector. Féile has been given £550,000 from DCAL through a cultural programme funding stream over the last two years, but it seems that there was not a lot of transparency on how the money was distributed. What was the application process? Was there an application panel? Was there any evaluation of the output and a proper postcode breakdown of the beneficiaries to establish that, as she claimed, the money is definitely reaching those in disadvantaged areas?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I take exception to the Member accusing me of a lack of transparency. That is regrettable. It is also regrettable that the Member has chosen to single out Féile an Phobail when other organisations in the provision of arts and culture receive tens of millions of pounds more. The process was that Féile an Phobail lobbied the Tourist Board, Belfast City Council, my Department, and the World Police and Fire Games in 2013 to be cultural partners. With a bigger pot of money, Féile has year-on-year since then brought in more cultural partners with less money. It is open and transparent about what they all do, including in the Member's constituency. To try to clear some of the confusion, it would be good if the Member met Féile and some of the other partners in that partnership to talk about their work. They do indeed reach the most deprived, disadvantaged and marginalised in this community.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Minister for her answer so far. I welcome the funding to the arts sector. The money that was withdrawn from the Arts Council of Northern Ireland did not come from Tory cuts; it came from Sinn Féin cuts in that £900,000 was transferred to the Minister's pet project, Líofo. What is the Minister doing to reinstate the £100,000 that was taken away from marching bands? She promised to bring that back in a monitoring round.

Ms Ní Chuilín: It is regrettable that the Member still chooses to be offensive towards the Irish language, but I have come to expect nothing else from him and some of his party colleagues. It is ridiculous that the Member is also in denial about Tory cuts, even in his constituency, which is one of the most deprived. He is in denial about the impact of Tory cuts on people who are really deprived. It would be more in keeping if the Member asked a question that would benefit his constituents. I agree that it is his prerogative to ask whatever question he likes, and it is my prerogative to answer the question in whatever fashion I like.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire. Can the Minister outline what support the arts has received since she took the DCAL portfolio?

Ms Ní Chuilín: In the region of £75 million has been given to the arts. I have supported major capital projects. As I mentioned at the launch of the consultation on the new arts and cultural strategy yesterday, I have given capital moneys to the Lyric and the MAC, as well as funding very good and specialised work for the WheelWorks ArtCart, which goes out and about in a van and delivers arts and digital artistic services to communities. In even Mr Humphrey's constituency, £400,000 was given for the Beat Carnival premises in the lower Shankill.

Mr Humphrey: That is in West Belfast.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Well, it is west when it suits and north when it does not. [Laughter.] Talk about being confused. I am glad that the Member clarified that the Shankill is now in West Belfast. OK, thank you for that.

In Cathal Ó hOisín's constituency, the Member will be aware of the money that we invested in the City of Culture and its legacy programme.

Boxing Clubs: DCAL Support

2. Mr Craig asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department supports established boxing clubs. (AQO 9173/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. DCAL and Sport NI have been able to provide practical and financial support to established boxing clubs across the North, including clubs outside Belfast. That has been achieved through Sport NI's boxing investment programme, which will see lottery funding of over £3.2 million invested across the sport. In addition, under the City of Culture legacy programme, my Department is investing a further £1 million for boxing in Derry.

The aims of the boxing investment programme are to help the sport to address the needs of boxing clubs around club development and sustainability and the provision of suitable facilities and boxing equipment. A club development manager has worked with a large number of clubs to enable them to meet governance standards. Ninety-four clubs have received a range of boxing equipment valued at £170,000, and £2.5 million has been allocated to take forward capital works on the premises of 40 boxing clubs, 20 of which are outside Belfast.

Mr Craig: I thank the Minister for her answer. It is good to see that Londonderry is getting £30 million. With regard to small boxing clubs — there are a couple of them in my constituency — ongoing running costs are always an issue. Would the Minister support proposals, hopefully coming forward from the Finance Minister, to make them rates-free? The running costs of a lot of the clubs are where the problems lie for them.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. Just to clarify, it was £1 million given to Derry, not £30 million. I am sure that a lot of people in Derry were getting excited, so I am sorry to quash that rumour.

It is important that small sporting clubs receive support, and it is regrettable that the Member's party could not support the Bill of that nature. However, it is important that areas that do a lot of outreach work with children and young people, keeping them safe and healthy, get support from government. I admire the work that a lot of sporting clubs do, particularly boxing clubs. I believe that the sport is trying to attract more women and children of all abilities. It is right and proper that, in turn, government gives support to the clubs.

Mr McMullan: Go raibh maith agat. How can DCAL help the boxing clubs that will not receive boxing investment programme funding at this stage?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his supplementary question. I recognise that the lottery funding, albeit over £3 million, will not be enough to address the need out there. I have visited many boxing clubs across the North. Some of the conditions in the clubs are not fit for purpose despite the excellent work that they do, so the £3.2 million from Sport NI's lottery fund is not enough.

That said, Sport NI is working with a number of organisations, with my Department and other Departments, including DSD, for example, and with some district councils. We are trying to work with the clubs to ensure that there are opportunities. Some clubs need small amounts of money; others much more. There is potential for the clubs that need small amounts to lose out when Departments, councils and other bodies come together. That is the difference between some clubs having a viable project and others that are simply stuck between one Department giving funding and another unable to give match funding.

Mrs McKeivitt: I thank the Minister for her answers thus far. In the middle of November — I think that it was around 12 November — the Ulster Elite Championships were held in Newry, and I got an opportunity to see the boxing. Probably for the first time, I saw a couple of women boxers, other than seeing Katie Taylor box for Ireland on TV. Will the Minister outline to the House what Sport NI and her Department will do to ensure that boxing clubs are female-friendly zones and offer opportunities for females to develop their boxing skills?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I agree with the Member that it is good to see children of all backgrounds and genders involved in sport, particularly boxing, which has been predominantly male for decades. It is now very open and is trying to be as inclusive as possible. Through the Sport Matters strategy, we encourage the inclusion of women in a few sports — boxing is one of them — but we need to do much more. I believe that the Ulster Boxing Council and some, but not all, of the county boards have gone out of their way to include more women. I also believe that proper facilities will help to encourage young women in the sport. Most importantly, attitudes have changed: Katie Taylor and others have been great role models and will help to bring more women into the sport as well.

Mr McGimpsey: In view of the Minister's answers this afternoon, how much of the millions available through her boxing strategy has Sandy Row Boxing Club, acknowledged as one of the best established clubs in Belfast, received?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member has asked me that question a lot, and he will get the same answer. This money and investment is for clubs affiliated to the Irish Amateur Boxing Association (IABA) and in receipt of a letter of offer. I understand that Sandy Row Boxing Club will receive money from Belfast City Council and other bodies, but it understands full well the rules of the funding and application process. Rather than sectarianising and politicising the issue, the Member should encourage the club to get that much-needed investment.

Mr Allister: Why does the Minister continue to punish clubs that, for very good reason, refuse to reaffiliate to an IABA in which they have suffered sectarian abuse?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I do not punish anyone. The rules are very clear, and people clearly understand them. It would be more fitting for politicians like you and Mr McGimpsey to support the clubs. It is the clubs that work with the children all the time. Rather than piggybacking on those clubs, you should help them to get the much-needed funding.

Mr Allister: You are not helping them.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am absolutely open to helping those clubs. I have asked to go out and see them, and I have written to them. I have been to clubs across the North, including ones in predominantly working-class loyalist areas. However, I believe that the actions of some unionist politicians on the issue have been nothing short of pathetic.

Euro 2016: Fans' Embassies

3. Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what discussions have been held with the Irish Football Association and Northern Ireland football supporters' representatives on support for the establishment of football fans' embassies to provide information, assistance and support for Northern Ireland fans at the 2016 European Championships in France. (AQO 9174/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. I can advise that my Department has had no discussions to date on this matter. The establishment of fans' embassies is something that the Irish Football Association, in association with the Northern Ireland supporters' representatives, might consider necessary at suitable venues in France for the 2016 European Championship. I would support the establishment of fans' embassies to provide travel advice, local information and assistance for fans. Any measures that can be taken to help to ensure that fans have a safe and enjoyable experience at the championships are worthy of consideration.

Mr Cochrane-Watson: I am disappointed by your response, Minister. In view of the terrible events in Paris 10 days ago, DCAL should step up to the mark financially and operationally to give true assistance to the many thousands of British football tourists who will visit France.

3.00 pm

I also hope that you can maybe outline today how DCAL plans to celebrate the success of our national football team on reaching these championships. The silence from you to date has been quite deafening.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I know that the Member is new to the House, but it is customary for the Minister to wait for the Member to finish his question before answering.

Given that this is primarily a matter for the Irish Football Association, I have been very open in trying to assist where possible. I have provided the Irish Football Association with money in addition to capital moneys.

Sport NI is helping the Irish Football Association and the Northern Ireland team, as well as many other teams competing in championships. If the Member has a suggestion or thinks that I should do something specific, I am more than happy to receive representation from him or from anyone else for that matter.

Mr Campbell: I appreciate that it is some time until the championships next summer and that diaries are not yet filling up. Is it the Minister's intention, diaries permitting, to be in attendance in France at the football championships and to maybe change the habit of a lifetime and actually support Northern Ireland?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I think the Member's question is disappointing but certainly not surprising. He has been consistently negative. I will not be the Minister in 2016, but I am certainly happy to support the team. I am happy to support all the teams on this island. I think it would be much better if the Member stopped politicising this issue. I have been to Northern Ireland games on several occasions and have given my support. I did not see the Member there.

Mr McKinney: I too am concerned, following the recent atrocities in Paris, that enough should be done on working with the IFA to ensure that fans get the proper advice on travelling. Rather than getting to the stadium in France, would the Minister consider inviting both teams here for a special event to acknowledge their qualifying for the tournament?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Every year there is an annual event that DCAL sponsors, and all the teams are invited to that, including the big national teams, as well as some of the small clubs that have achieved success. The Member will not be surprised that I get hundreds of requests to host receptions here. Early in March next year not only will the Northern Ireland team be invited but all the teams in Ireland, because most of them are part of national governing bodies.

On the first point that he made about the events of the thirteenth of this month in Paris, I know that UEFA has been contacted by many national teams about arrangements for the championships next year. When I get an update, I am happy to share it with all Members, because I appreciate that they are concerned.

Mr Lyttle: The success and achievements of the Northern Irish football team have inspired and united this community, I am glad to say, and I thank the Minister for acknowledging that and for agreeing that fans' embassies should be an important source of advice for fans in France. Is the Minister willing to meet with a delegation from the IFA and the Amalgamation of Official Northern Ireland Supporters Clubs to review how she might help the success of the fans' embassies?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his supplementary question and, indeed, for his comments. I meet the IFA on a regular basis, and I am certainly happy to meet with the Member and a delegation from the supporters' clubs, along with the IFA. I am happy to bring in Sport NI and anyone else to ensure that this is the start of a process and, more importantly, to ensure that everything that we can do as a collective is done.

Fish Disposal

4. Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQO 8993/11-16, what her Department does with the dead fish collected following a pollution incident that results in a fish kill. (AQO 9175/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. My Department's fisheries protection officers assist the Northern Ireland Environment Agency with the investigation of pollution incidents involving fish kills by collecting, counting and recording the species and sizes of fish that have been killed. This data may be used as evidence in prosecution cases should the offender be identified, and, as a consequence, all or some of the dead fish may be retained as physical evidence. In some instances, a sample of a number of dead fish may be sent to the veterinary sciences division of Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI) in an attempt to identify the cause. Where there is suspicion that fish disease may be a factor, DARD's fish health division is notified as the competent authority for aquatic animal health, and a sample of fish may be submitted for testing on the instruction of DARD.

Mr Clarke: I thank the Minister for that answer. I am sure that she will be as surprised as I was that samples are taken from those fish, or tests are done, only in some cases. Can the Minister give us an assurance that, given the number of incidents, particularly in the Sixmilewater and the Three Mile Water in my constituency, or indeed anywhere in Northern Ireland, the work that her Department does is instrumental in trying to find the source? One way would obviously be to test all the fish to actually see what killed them and whether we can identify those polluters and bring them before the courts.

Ms Ní Chuilín: In cases of fish kills, particularly in the Member's constituency in recent times, my understanding is that all samples have been taken, particularly when there are recurrent fish kills in an area. I will certainly query this, but my understanding is that samples are taken from different parts of a river when there has been a fish kill to ensure that, if there is one cause, that cause can be identified. Maybe the answer did not reflect what is done, but I will certainly get the information for the Member because I know through representations from him through meetings and correspondence that this is an issue that he and my colleagues in that area, particularly the angling clubs, are very keen to get to the bottom of.

Mr Rogers: Thanks, Minister, for your answer. Does your Department comply with all EU regulations in the protection of fish?

Ms Ní Chuilín: To the best of my knowledge, the answer is as short as yes.

Mr Lynch: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Does the Minister's Department have any formal agreement with other agencies and Departments for dealing with polluting incidents?

Ms Ní Chuilín: As outlined, we have a formal agreement with the Environment Agency, which is the lead agency with responsibility for investigation of water pollution. The Department has also agreed a memorandum of understanding (MOU) with the Environment Agency on the responses to pollution incidents where fish are killed. We are looking at a framework with the agency to outline cooperation and implementation of our respective statutory duties. Under the Fisheries Act 1966, DCAL has powers to prosecute those causing pollution in fishing waters, but in most cases that is taken forward by the Environment Agency. The MOU and the framework that are being taken forward will try to ensure that as much as can be done when incidences such as this occur will be done.

Limavady Library: Opening Hours

5. Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, given that the review of library opening hours consultation stated that no libraries in areas of high social deprivation should have their opening hours reduced by more than 10%, whether she will review the decision to reduce the opening hours of Limavady library. (AQO 9176/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. The decision to reduce the opening hours of Limavady library was taken in accordance with Libraries NI's new opening hours policy, which comes into effect this month. It is regrettable that library opening hours have been reduced across the North. However, the new policy will help to ensure that all libraries, including Limavady, will remain open and will not need to close. While I appreciate that social deprivation affects many areas across the North, including Limavady, Libraries NI made clear in its review of opening hours consultation that libraries serving areas experiencing substantial levels of deprivation would be guaranteed protection from a greater than 10% reduction in their opening hours. Deprivation is determined using the published NI multiple deprivation measure 2010. On the basis of that measure, the opening hours policy has prioritised libraries serving three or more super-output areas.

Mr G Robinson: The Limavady area has three areas of high social deprivation and a large rural hinterland. Surely that should warrant a reconsideration of Limavady library's opening hours.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI has information that it does not serve three or more super output areas. In comparison with Dungiven, Limavady's library is open for 40 hours whereas Dungiven library is open for 25 hours. In that situation, I think that the consideration of the library in the Member's constituency by Libraries NI was completely appropriate.

Ms McGahan: Go raibh maith agat. How many and which libraries currently meet the Libraries NI criteria of serving areas of substantial social deprivation?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her supplementary question. She will be aware of most of the constituencies that fall within the top 10% most deprived areas. There are 12 libraries. Those are the libraries in Ardoyne, Chichester, Colin Glen, Creggan in Derry, the Falls Road in west Belfast, the Hollywood Arches, the Shankill, Shantallow in Derry, Suffolk, the Waterside, Whiterock and Woodstock.

Mr Dallat: The Minister will, of course, be aware that libraries in Ireland have a very rich tradition. Following the famine, they were instrumental in giving people an opportunity to learn to read and write. She will also be aware that, today, a quarter of a million people in Northern Ireland cannot read or write. Given that there are additional resources, will the Minister review her approach to libraries and give them the sustainability that they need to address the needs of our people, whether they are having problems with literacy and numeracy or are simply reading for enjoyment?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his supplementary question. He will also know that, of all the DCAL arm's-length bodies (ALBs), I have given the most protection to Libraries NI. I know that it is disappointing when library opening hours are reduced, but I have done my best to ensure that no library has closed as a result of the block grant being cut.

In the Member's constituency, there has been a groundswell of support for local libraries and membership of those libraries has increased. I think that that will help with the viability and sustainability of libraries. As the Member and other Members will know, libraries are more than just about borrowing books. As he has outlined, they offer support with literacy and numeracy. They also offer support with mental health, support to children and families with homework and much more besides. I am glad that we at least enjoy cross-party support for our libraries.

Mrs Overend: I would just like to tease this out. Will the Minister advise how she will deploy further libraries moneys that were granted in last week's monitoring round?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Money was given back to libraries, particularly to help them with stock because that is part of their acute service and need, and that has been brought back. I appeal for cross-party support for our libraries. They provide a valuable service and, once they have gone, particularly in rural communities, it will be very difficult to bring them back.

DCAL Budget Position

8. Mr Cree asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on her current budget position. (AQO 9179/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. As a result of Tory Party cuts, my Department began this year with 10% less in its resource budget. In addition, the capital allocation for the stadia programme was reduced to nil. In managing the resource budget cut, I offered libraries some protection, as I have just outlined, because of the central role they play in local communities, both urban and rural. That inevitably meant greater pressures elsewhere of over 11% in the budgets of DCAL and the ALBs.

I insisted that all business areas minimised the effects of those cuts on services, reducing overheads in the first instance. That was helped by the establishment of the voluntary exit scheme, which around 60 people from within my Department and the ALBs will take up this year. It is, of course, impossible to shield the wider community from Tory cuts and, indeed, cuts to front-line services. DCAL has been affected and impacted, and that has been manifested in reduced opening times at museums and libraries, as well as bigger reductions to arts and sports.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call Leslie Cree for a supplementary question and I ask the Member to be quick.

Mr Cree: Thank you. I certainly will. I thank the Minister for that.

Minister, you will remember that you recently advised the Committee that £610,000 would be included in your bids for the June monitoring round for depreciation. The Finance Minister told us here last week that £24.4 million, which was ring-fenced, or resource DEL, could not be reallocated because it was for depreciation and impairments. Did you get that £610,000? If not, why not?

3.15 pm

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Finance Minister, in fairness to her, did try to reverse some of the impacts on my budget. Unfortunately, not all of the bids that I made could be met in this monitoring round, but we are working with officials in DFP to try to have those met in future monitoring rounds.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We move to topical questions. Mr David McNarry is not in his place.

Outburst Queer Arts Festival 2015

T2. Mr Givan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to ask the Arts Council to review future funding for the Outburst Queer Arts Festival, following the screening of 'The Gospel According to Jesus Queen of Heaven', in light of the criticism from the mainstream Christian denominations and a protest that was held by the Catholic constituency when the play was shown and bearing in mind her responsibility to promote good relations and the fact that religious belief is a section 75 group. (AQT 3192/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I will not be writing to the Arts Council to ask it to review its decision. I do not believe in any form of censorship. I do think it is regrettable that people have been offended, but it is not my job to intervene in the Arts Council to have it reverse its decision.

Mr Givan: In light of the decision to have the Lord's prayer banned because it is deemed to be offensive to people who are not Christians, can the Minister not recognise why Christians in this part of Northern Ireland believe that they are subject to unwarranted attack for their genuinely and sincerely held beliefs? Is it necessary for the LGBT community, in promoting its own identity, to be offensive to people of faith?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I do not believe that anyone should be offensive to anyone of faith, but I also believe that people of faith do not have a veto over other people's rights and beliefs. I do not support the Member's position regarding persecution of Christians in this country. I believe that responsibility comes with religious and civil liberties. I would not support anyone criticising or abusing anyone's belief, regardless of whether that is political or religious. I could not support that at all.

Sport NI: Application Feedback

T3. Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how a club that was unsuccessful in its application for funding from Sport NI can get feedback and whether there is an established process for such feedback. (AQT 3193/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have received that request on many occasions recently, because some clubs that were not successful in some of the rounds of capital funding from Sport NI have asked that question. The short answer is yes, there are processes. Some clubs want very detailed feedback, and they are entitled to that. I suggest that if that is the case with the Member, or even if people just want some feedback to help with future applications, then, in the first instance, clubs should contact Sport NI. If they want it done person to person, they should state that. I know that some clubs are happy to have feedback over the phone and others demand a much more rigorous process; but there is a process in Sport NI nonetheless.

Ms McGahan: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for her response and look forward to any clarification she can bring to ensure that unsuccessful groups get feedback from Sport NI, as it is important that they can correct and amend their work in going forward.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I totally agree with the Member, particularly for some of the smaller clubs or those that do not have as much financial flexibility to buy in consultants. It is important for those clubs, many of which are managed on a voluntary basis, to get as much detailed feedback as possible, particularly when they are going forward, because I am sure that the needs and rationale for putting in the applications have not changed. So, it is important that they get as much feedback as possible.

Public Appointments: Gender Balance and Representation

T4. Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline what she has done to ensure gender balance and representation for disability groups on boards, given that she shares her concern about the lack of women in public bodies through the public appointments process, which will be discussed this Thursday and Friday at the North/South Inter-parliamentary Association. (AQT 3194/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I share the Member's concern and have done so for some time. When I went into the Department in 2011, less than 30% of those in the public appointments process were women. It has gone up to 36%, which, in my opinion, is still not good enough. I have met previous Commissioners for Public Appointments and asked them how to make the process more open and attractive, particularly to women and to people with disabilities. I continue to seek advice from the Commissioner for Public Appointments and others. If the Member or anyone else has any additional information, suggestions or advice as to how I can take that forward, I am open to hearing from them.

Ms Ruane: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an fhreagra sin. I thank the Minister for her answer and welcome the increase but note that we still need to do more. The Minister will be pleased to hear that the new Commissioner for Public Appointments will speak at the North/South Inter-parliamentary Association meeting. She is travelling to Dublin. We will be working with her, but will the Minister continue her efforts to ensure that we continue representation?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I absolutely will continue my efforts. Part of those efforts in the past, which I did not mention initially, was to change the way in which the application process happens and to encourage people to seek advice before they put in an application. I am working with the Commissioner for Public Appointments and other bodies to make that easy. I look forward to a report from that meeting and to receiving any advice that I can take to ensure that there is more openness and transparency and better representation on our public bodies.

Junior and Amateur Football: Capital Support

T5. Mr Poots asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline her proposals for capital support for junior and amateur football. (AQT 3195/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member may be aware of the application process that Sport NI has started for capital funding from lottery funds. I will shortly announce a consultation process on subregional funding. Some of the bigger clubs that are in junior leagues and have junior clubs attached to them will be keen to participate in that. The IFA has also received money from DCAL not only to ensure the inclusion of junior football, for which it has also received money from Sport NI, but to ensure that young girls are included.

Mr Poots: You have been saying that for some time, Minister, so we would like to see it move forward. Given that my constituency has a series of football clubs at junior level, will the Minister give an assurance that they will have the opportunity to apply for facilities such as changing rooms, stands, pitch improvements and so on?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I cannot give the Member that assurance because, as he will know — maybe he is not aware that it was agreed at the Executive — the second phase of soccer money at subregional level is for bigger soccer clubs. The Member should direct junior clubs to Sport NI, which is the perfect place for those clubs to apply for funding. If he feels that they are not getting enough information from Sport NI or the local council, I am happy to hear the details.

C S Lewis Festival 2015

T7. Mr Douglas asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether she agrees that events such as those that were held very successfully in east Belfast last week as part of the C S Lewis Festival are the sorts of initiatives that we should be supporting at local level, in that they involve children, young people and a lot of elderly people. (AQT 3197/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I absolutely agree. The festival, along with EastSide Arts, has grown from strength to strength, particularly in recent years. The Member has been very supportive and, in fairness to him, very fair and genuine in his approach to ensure that east Belfast receives support. One of the best stories that it has — apart from Van Morrison, whom I am sure the Member will mention — is the whole C S Lewis narrative and its association with that part of the city. I have supported it and will continue to do so.

Mr Douglas: The Minister today attended the unveiling of the C S Lewis and Seamus Heaney portraits. Does she agree that that is the sort of positive image that we need to project from Stormont? Does she have any ideas about expanding that to bring in the likes of the late George Best, the tenth anniversary of whose untimely death is tomorrow?

Ms Ní Chuilín: As the Member will know, I am open to suggestions that provide a space and a legacy for citizens right across the North. I picked up on the Member's point that those are the first two portraits here of non-parliamentarians, and I think that that sends out a good message. It is also good because Seamus Heaney and C S Lewis's books and the story around them have provided inspiration for others engaged in the arts who are coming behind them. The more people who come to the Building — there are many, and that is good — and see ordinary people who have done extraordinary things for us acknowledged in these halls, the better.

Culture and Arts Strategy: Consultation Delay

T8. Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure why there was such a delay in the publication of her consultation on the strategy for culture and arts. (AQT 3198/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I make no apology for the fact that I brought it forward yesterday; I think that it is good thing. I want to make sure that the consultation is done right. I wanted to make sure that the document, in conjunction with the great work done by the ministerial advisory forum on arts, along with DCAL and the Arts Council, was given the attention that it needed. I believe that the way in which the consultation was brought forward yesterday — by the way, it closes on 12 February — will give many people an opportunity. I encourage the Member, indeed, all Members across the House to get people from his constituency to feed into the consultation for the future.

Mr Buchanan: I hear what the Minister says, but does she not accept that, with the closing date of 12 February and some six to eight weeks to consider the responses, there is the potential for it to run out of time? There will be no strategy in place, and that will be another failing by the Minister and her Department.

Ms Ní Chuilín: If the Member feels that I have failed in my Department, it is the first time that I have heard it, although I accept that he is reading from a question that was put into his hand, probably, by his colleagues. He is probably not aware of what I do in my Department; I do not receive a lot of correspondence from him. Nonetheless, I do not accept the Member's assertion. The consultation is an opportunity for people in his constituency, if he is interested in feeding into a robust and strong arts and cultural strategy for 10 years.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period of questions to the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure. As the next period of questions does not begin until 3.30 pm, I suggest that the House takes its ease until then.

3.30 pm

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Northern Ireland Youth Assembly

1. Mr Lyttle asked the Assembly Commission for an update on the Northern Ireland Youth Assembly. (AQO 9187/11-16)

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Member for his question. Initially, a budget of £100,000 was allocated to develop a Youth Assembly in 2014-15. However, because of financial constraints, the project was put on hold and consideration was given to other ways of engaging with young people.

The Education Service continues to work with schools and the youth sector to increase young people's understanding of the work of the Assembly and encourage their engagement with that work. Significantly, the Education Service has been working with Assembly Committees to consult young people about a range of legislation and inquiries, such as shared and integrated education, the Together: Building a United Community strategy, the Road Traffic Bills and proposals for a new law on bullying in schools.

The Education Service is further engaging young people in the work of the Assembly through its Connections project, which aims to promote dialogue between decision-makers and young people. Financed by the European funding stream, Erasmus+, the project is running between February 2015 and January 2016 and involves 36 participants aged between 16 and 18. The group will have the opportunity to deliver primary research findings to Assembly Committees in early 2016. Plans are under way to apply for further funding for similar projects involving other legislatures.

The Education Service's series of Let's Talk events around Northern Ireland brings together young people and their MLAs. In 2014-15, five such events were held, each of which involved about 100 young people from different schools and neighbouring constituencies.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Member for her update and welcome the much positive work the Commission has been doing to ensure youth participation and inclusion in the Assembly process, particularly the inaugural Youth Congress that is scheduled to take place in this Assembly Chamber tomorrow. Does the Member accept that the priority for children and young people remains the Northern Ireland Youth Assembly? Would the Commission be willing to re-engage with the youth sector — the Northern Ireland Youth Forum, for example — to re-examine and refresh costings and proposals in relation to the Northern Ireland Youth Assembly?

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Member for his supplementary question. I wholeheartedly agree, as does the Commission, that we need to be engaging our young people with the Assembly and how we operate within it as much as possible. I am glad he mentioned the inaugural sitting of the Northern Ireland Youth Congress tomorrow, at which I, like other Members, will be present. We should be doing everything within our power to keep that engagement with our young people.

Parliament Buildings: Visitors

2. Mr Lyons asked the Assembly Commission how many people have visited Parliament Buildings in each of the last five years. (AQO 9188/11-16)

Ms Ruane: Gabhaim buíochas leis an gComhalta as an cheist. I thank the Member for his question. Ó Eanáir 2011 go mí Dheireadh Fómhair 2015, thug 346,156 duine cuairt ar Fhoirgnimh na Parlaiminte. From January 2011 to October 2015, the total number of people on record as having visited Parliament Buildings is 346,156.

That number represents the total number of visitors attending a diverse range of events, functions, guided tours and schools' education programmes. The Assembly does not, however, keep a record of the number of public visitors who attend plenary sessions or Committee meetings or who use the public dining facilities during recesses. The Assembly Commission will be able to provide the Member with the yearly totals for the numbers of visitors in writing, broken down into functions, functions with tours, tours with hospitality and education programmes. Indeed, if they are interested, we can provide that information to all Members.

Mr Lyons: I thank the Commission member for her answer. Perhaps, she will also be able to give me the totals for each year. I am sure that other Members will want to join me in commending the work that the Education Service does with young people. Most weeks since I have come to this place, I seem to be in answering questions from young people. To have the opportunity to do that is very welcome. Will the Commission join me in commending the work of the Education Service and consider what other ways we can engage with young people who come here?

Ms Ruane: I absolutely agree with you on the work of the Education Service. I can give you a breakdown of visitor numbers and education groups now. In 2011, there were 71,556 visitors. In 2012, there were 81,710. In 2013, there were 73,645. In 2014, there were 70,830. In 2015, which obviously has not completed yet, there have been 48,415 visitors.

For the education programmes, we had 576 groups in 2011, with 18,185 visitors. In 2012, there were 587 groups. In 2013, there were 520 groups. In 2014, there were 476 groups. In 2015 so far, there have been 393 groups. You can see the significant number of groups that have visited.

The work that the Education Service does is second to none. It provides young people from a very early age and schools right across the North with an opportunity to engage with politicians from all the different political parties. That is invaluable.

Mr Lynch: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Given the recent event that was organised for the Israeli Government, students, press and various parties here, will a similar event now be organised by the Commission for the Palestinian Government to give outreach to people who are unrepresented?

Ms Ruane: Go raibh maith agat as an cheist sin. I thank the Member for his question.

Recently, an event was organised with 60 students from Belfast Metropolitan College and Ulster University studying communications, journalism and politics. Representatives from the Israeli embassy in London were present, as were representatives of local political parties and local media organisations. Bhíothas i dteagmháil leis an Mhisean Pailistíneach i Londain leis an dara céim den imeacht seo a reachtáil sa bhformáid chéanna. I am pleased to say that contact has been made with the Palestinian Mission in London to arrange the second leg of that event in the same format.

Mr Cochrane-Watson: Given the high volume of visitors to Parliament Buildings, will the Commission outline what advances have been made on the car parking situation in the past 12 months? What is proposed to ease that situation, particularly on Mondays and Tuesdays, when many people are parking down the mile in all forms of weather?

Ms Ruane: We have made some extra spaces available here at the Building. I will ask officials to forward the Member full details on the number of car parking spaces, including the extra ones, here and in some of the outlying car parks.

Mr Rogers: I think that everybody in the House agrees that the Assembly Education Service does invaluable work. How have budget cuts affected it? How is it affecting the Assembly's outreach services in particular?

Ms Ruane: I thank the Member for his question. We have just brought forward a new outreach and engagement strategy, the meetings on which I chaired. We are doing everything that we can to increase the number of visitors and schools coming here. All the Commission members, from every single political party, did everything in their power to protect the outreach and education budget. We will continue to try to do that.

Parliament Buildings: Tour Content

3. Mr McCausland asked the Assembly Commission what reference is made during regular guided tours of Parliament Buildings to the memorials to former Members murdered by illegal paramilitary organisations. (AQO 9189/11-16)

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Member for his question. In the official tour script provided by the Northern Ireland Assembly tour guides, reference is made to a range of architectural features, including the statue and tomb of Lord Craigavon. Currently, no reference is made during regular public or private guided tours to the memorials to former Members murdered by paramilitary organisations. However, during public and private tours, visitors are encouraged by guides to ask questions, and they may, on occasion, ask about the wall memorials in the Senate and Assembly Chamber Rotundas.

Mr McCausland: In Northern Ireland, lives were taken in the course of the democratic process and people were murdered by illegal paramilitary organisations. It is part of the story of this place and part of our history. Would it not be possible to include in the tour a reference to those who died in that way?

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Member for his supplementary. The official tour script provided by the Northern Ireland Assembly tour guides was approved by the Assembly Commission in 2001. I suggest to the Member that he speak to his Commission member about other issues that he might have.

Mr Cree: I am disappointed to hear that memorials are not explained unless someone asks. As we move into a pivotal year for centenaries, not least of Northern Ireland's sacrifice at the battle of the Somme, will the Commission seek to integrate the war memorial inside the main doors as part of the tour in future?

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Member for his question. Again, you need to speak to your Assembly Commission member, as that would have to be dealt with and decided on by the Commission. I understand his sentiments entirely, and I can say that I probably would support that.

Parliament Buildings: Defibrillators

4. Mr G Robinson asked the Assembly Commission how many defibrillators there are in Parliament Buildings. (AQO 9190/11-16)

Mr Gardiner: I thank Mr Robinson for his question. There are five defibrillators in Parliament Buildings located in the following areas: the front reception, the control room, the Blue Flax, the Long Gallery and the fourth floor, south corridor. Information on the location of defibrillators is provided on AsslSt.

Mr G Robinson: Thanks for the answer. Can you outline the number of people trained to use defibrillators and how often their skills are updated?

Mr Gardiner: The Assembly Commission is committed to ensuring that there is a positive health and safety culture throughout the organisation, and there are 18 staff trained in the use of defibrillators.

Mrs Dobson: I commend the Member on his comprehensive answers so far. Given their importance, are there any plans to train additional staff in the use of defibrillators?

Mr Gardiner: I thank Mrs Dobson for her question. There are no plans to train any additional secretariat staff in the use of defibrillators, as the number of fully trained operatives is considered sufficient for the number of defibrillators in the Building.

Mrs McKeivitt: I thank the Member for his answers thus far. Given the importance of defibrillators and the statistics on their use, has the Commission any plans to introduce training for Members of the Assembly in their use, as nobody knows the day and hour that one of us could use that life-saving skill?

Mr Gardiner: I thank the Member for her question. To date, there has been no request to use defibrillators in Parliament Buildings. They are, however, tested weekly to ensure that they are fully operational.

Act of Remembrance 2015

5. Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission what role it had in and what knowledge it had of the format and content of the Assembly remembrance event in Parliament Buildings on 11 November 2015. (AQO 9191/11-16)

Mrs Cochrane: I thank the Member for his question. The Assembly Commission had no role in or knowledge of the format of the act of remembrance held in the Great Hall on 11 November. As in other parliamentary institutions, the Speaker, in his representational role, determines the arrangements for keynote events that the Speaker hosts on behalf of the Assembly. As was the case under previous Speakers, the Assembly Commission is not involved in either these or in other events that the Speaker organises through his office. I am aware that the Speaker issued a very considered letter to all Members, and I refer the Member to it.

Mr Allister: If the Speaker cannot be trusted to retain the national anthem as an integral part of the remembrance service, as evidenced by his disgraceful but, happily, failed attempt to obliterate the national anthem on 11 November, is it not time that the Assembly Commission considered taking over this event or exercising the necessary control to ensure that such attempts to obliterate the national anthem will not occur again?

3.45 pm

Mrs Cochrane: I thank the Member for his supplementary question. It would not be appropriate for the Commission to seek to take on an event that has previously been organised by the Speaker without the Speaker's request that it do so. The Member may or may not be aware that the Royal British Legion has not said that the national anthem needs to be an integral part of such an event. I understand, though, that the Speaker engaged with the Royal British Legion and, as a result, ensured that the Armistice Day event was held on 11 November and that it was in the Great Hall in order to allow more people to attend than in previous years. I think that it will be for the next Speaker, in the next Assembly, to take the arrangements forward, but Members should take up the offer of the current Speaker to engage on the issue to ensure that future events are as open and inclusive as possible.

Mrs Overend: Does the commissioner appreciate that the Speaker's decision to remove the national anthem had, ultimately, the opposite effect of his supposed effort to make it less delicate?

Mrs Cochrane: I thank the Member for her question. I think that it is true that the Commission's focus, through its engagement strategy, is to encourage people into the Building and to participate in events. There are no definitive records, but we believe that this year's remembrance event had a record attendance. The Commission very much welcomes that outcome and the inclusive approach that the Speaker has outlined.

Mr Dallat: As a mere Deputy Speaker in this august body, may I ask Mrs Cochrane if she agrees that it is always rewarding when you manage to get all political parties involved and leave an event open so that all members of staff can attend?

Mrs Cochrane: Yes, I agree with the Deputy Speaker.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Member for her answers. Can the Member explain why the service was changed from a service to an act of remembrance, contrary to what happens across the rest of the United Kingdom?

Mrs Cochrane: I thank the Member for his question. As I said, the Commission was not involved in the arrangements, so all that I can go by is the Speaker's letter, which made it very clear that he was not continuing with the previous event or service, as you might refer to it, which had stemmed from when the Civil Service was the main occupant of the Building. The Speaker indicated that he was instead building on the format of the event that he had led in the Great Hall in 2014 when he was Principal Deputy Speaker. Like that event, this year's event had no music.

Gender Action Plan: Update

6. Mrs Cameron asked the Assembly Commission for an update on the gender action plan. (AQO 9192/11-16)

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Member for her question. A draft gender action plan for secretariat staff has been developed by the gender action plan working group, which comprises senior staff from across the Assembly. The draft action plan sets out a range of actions and measures to promote gender equality in the Assembly secretariat. It is a cross-directorate plan that covers the entire organisation for the two-year period 2016-18. The action plan also supports the Assembly in complying with its section 75 duties.

The Assembly Commission considered the draft plan at its meeting on 4 November 2015 and has approved it for staff consultation. The action plan was issued for consultation on 12 November 2015. The consultation will close on Friday 8 January 2016. A copy of the draft action plan has been sent to the Equality Commission for comment. The draft action plan is available on the Assembly intranet.

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Member for that answer. Will the findings of the AERC's review of women in politics and the Northern Ireland Assembly link into the secretariat gender action plan?

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Member for her supplementary. The secretariat gender action plan working group has considered the findings and research of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee's review of women in politics and the Northern Ireland Assembly to identify any overlapping issues, specifically where such issues may affect secretariat staff. The gender action implementation group will continue to follow progress on the AERC review, and the action plan contains a specific action to bring AERC recommendations to the women in politics working group and advise the gender action plan implementation group of any potential impact on secretariat staff.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr Basil McCrea is not in his place.

Outsourced Services

8. Mr Hilditch asked the Assembly Commission what plans it has to outsource services. (AQO 9194/11-16)

Mrs Cochrane: I thank the Member for his question. At the meeting of 24 June 2015, the Assembly Commission noted the commitment in the Stormont House Agreement to seek to extend the use of Northern Ireland Civil Service shared services across the wider public sector.

Naturally, the Assembly Commission is not part of the Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS), nor was it a party to the Stormont House Agreement, but it agreed that it would consider whether any of its present business activities could be better delivered through a shared services approach.

Over the summer months, a series of meetings took place with shared services providers in the Civil Service, most notably in the fields of IT, human resources and finance. Assembly secretariat officials will bring fully worked business cases on options for the future delivery of services to the Commission through the current in-house arrangements or through an NICS shared services approach.

The Commission has no plans at present for the further outsourcing of services to the private sector.

Mr Hilditch: I thank Mrs Cochrane for her detailed answer. Can she tell me what is currently outsourced?

Mrs Cochrane: I thank the Member for his supplementary. The Commission uses private sector providers for catering and support services, broadcasting, some aspects of building maintenance and printing. The Commission also receives a wide range of services from the public sector, including policing, Central Procurement Directorate services, waste management services, stationery and office supplies, welfare and occupational health services and certain software supplies services.

Parliament Buildings: Good Cause Lighting

9. Mr McCarthy asked the Assembly Commission what progress has been made in allocating dates for the lighting up of Parliament Buildings in support of good causes. (AQO 9195/11-16)

Mr Gardiner: I thank the Member for his question. At the meeting on 11 November 2014, the Assembly Commission agreed the policy for the external lighting of Parliament Buildings in order to manage the lighting of the Building on designated occasions whilst preserving the dignity of Parliament Buildings.

In line with the policy, the Commission scheduled up to four days during the calendar year for events of its choice. The four days chosen by the Assembly Commission for 2015 were Monday 9 March, International Women's Day, when the Building was purple; on Tuesday 17 March, St Patrick's Day, it was green; on Sunday 12 July, it was orange; and, on Wednesday 11 November, Remembrance Day, it was red. In line with the policy, the Assembly Commission also allows its charity of the year up to five days during its 12-month term, as well as granting up to a further eight days for other events during the calendar year.

Mr McCarthy: I am very grateful to the Member for his response. Can he outline the process by which the Assembly decides between the various applications and how it communicates those decisions to groups?

Mr Gardiner: In line with the policy, only events organised at Parliament Buildings or DFP-approved events within the Stormont Estate have access to the lighting system. Only charitable community or non-profit organisations that are based in or have a significant connection to Northern Ireland and are celebrating a significant anniversary, such as their first, fifth, tenth, twenty-fifth or fiftieth, may, on occasions, be permitted to have Parliament Buildings illuminated in a special colour.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Commission member for his answer. Further to the communication of the dates on which the Building is lit up, other Members may have been approached, as I was, about it being lit up in the colours of the French tricolour after the appalling massacre in Paris recently. It is important that the message gets out to the public that there was no response because the system currently does not allow for the Building to be lit up in three colours. Will the new system allow that to happen?

Mr Gardiner: That will be a matter for the Commission to look at. Hopefully, it will meet with your requirements.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Will the Member assure the House that all requests are considered equally, including events such as Pride?

Mr Gardiner: The answer is quick and short; yes.

Parliament Buildings: Flag Security Breach

10. Mr Dunne asked the Assembly Commission for an update on the investigation into the security breach in June 2015 that resulted in the unauthorised flying of a flag on Parliament Buildings. (AQO 9196/11-16)

Ms Ruane: Go raibh maith agat. Gabhaim buíochas leis an gComhalta as an cheist. I thank the Member for his question. I ndiaidh ardú na mbratacha ar 3ú Meitheamh 2015, chríochnaigh Seirbhís Póilíneachta Thuaisceart Éireann a n-imscrúdú thart faoi 15ú de mhí Meán Fómhair 2015. Ach, ainneoin fiosrúcháin a dhéanamh, ní dhearnadh duine ar bith freagrach as. Following the unauthorised flying of the Irish national flag on 3 June 2015, the PSNI concluded its investigation in or around 15 September 2015. However, despite enquiries, no persons have been made responsible. Dúirt siad freisin nach féidir leo an t-ábhar seo a thabhairt níos faide ag an am seo. The PSNI has indicated that it can take the matter no further at this time.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Member for her answer. Considering that the breach occurred in May this year, as I understand it, does the Member agree that it is important that we get to find out how such a breach occurred and that measures are put in place to stop a recurrence? I am sure that she will agree that it is important that we keep the proper flag flying here.

Ms Ruane: I can certainly agree with the Member that we should keep the proper flags flying. [Laughter.] As a member of the Assembly Commission and a representative of a significant number of MLAs, I certainly would like to see my national flag flying — the national flag that our party adheres to. Having said that, I think that, in the interests of moving forward, as an Assembly we should have either equality or neutrality. The Member will be aware that there are currently issues around flags and that there is no consensus in relation to the matter. The best way forward is that we reflect everyone's traditions or nobody's traditions.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Chomhalta as na freagraí sin. I thank the Member for those answers. Does the Assembly Commission believe that Irish citizens should be treated with equality? The Member has just said that; will she confirm it? Would the flying of the Irish national flag better reflect the Assembly and society?

Ms Ruane: I thank the Member. Gabhaim buíochas leis an gComhalta as an cheist sin agus aontaím léithi. Speaking as a member of the Assembly Commission, I should say that it has failed to reach consensus on flags. As a member of the Assembly Commission, I would like to see that all our traditions and nationalities are respected. As an Irish republican, I would like to see my flag represented, or we should have a neutral position. It is unfair to have one tradition reflected and others not. An equality impact assessment is currently being carried out, and I hope that, in future, we will be able to ensure that all traditions are reflected. It is a question of equality or neutrality.

Communicating in a Political World

11. Mr McKay asked the Assembly Commission whether the communicating in a political world event on 10 November 2015 was carried out as part of its agreed external relations strategy. (AQO 9197/11-16)

13. Mr McElduff asked the Assembly Commission who organised the communicating in a political world event in Parliament Buildings on 10 November 2015. (AQO 9199/11-16)

Ms Ruane: Le do chead, a Phríomh-Leas Cheann Comhairle, ba mhaith liom ceisteanna 11 agus 13 a fhreagairt le chéile. With your permission, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I would like to answer questions 11 and 13 together.

D'eagraigh feidhmeannaigh ón Stiúrthóireacht Eolais agus For-rochtana an t-imeacht cumarsáid i nDomhan polaitiúil' ar 12ú de mhí na Samhna 2015. Officials from the information and outreach directorate organised the communicating in a political world event on 10 November 2015.

As I said in an earlier answer, the event was attended by 60 students from Belfast Metropolitan College and Ulster University. The speakers at the event included the spokesperson of the embassy of Israel in London, representatives of the various political parties and representatives of local media organisations. The Member will be aware from my previous answer that contact has been made with the Palestinian Mission in London to arrange the second leg of this event in the same format.

4.00 pm

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Time is up. I ask Members to take their ease while we change the top Table.

Mr Beggs: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I apologise for my absence during Question Time. Questions proceeded faster than I had anticipated.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I am sure that the Speaker will note that.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

Motion made:

That the Assembly do now adjourn. —
[Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat).]

Adjournment

Care of Older People: Mid Ulster

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The proposer of the topic will have 15 minutes, and all other Members who speak will have approximately eight minutes.

Mrs Overend: I am grateful for the opportunity to bring this Adjournment debate to the House, especially on this important issue: care of older people in Mid Ulster. Indeed, I want to thank colleagues for their grace in allowing me to move the debate to today following the passing of my grandmother a fortnight ago. While the topic was not raised with my grandmother in mind, the care that she received both at home from her family members and from a great team of domiciliary carers, who called at her home regularly, certainly informed me of many issues and concerns on this matter.

Our older people are some of the most vulnerable people, both in Mid Ulster and throughout Northern Ireland. Some are cared for in residential homes, some by carers and some by family members. We have all been made aware of the problems faced by older people, especially through the stories of those who have come into our constituency offices. The patients for whom Westlands care home in Cookstown is their home, like so many others in so many other statutory care homes across Northern Ireland, know all too well about the impending closures and what that will mean for them. I presented a petition to one of the Minister's predecessors in July 2013, signed by almost 5,000 people from Mid Ulster who called on him not to close Westlands care home. The following consultation on care home provision in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust has closed for responses, but I wonder if those responses will make any difference to the outcome for residents who call places like Westlands home.

I was disappointed that the Minister refused to meet me on this issue. It would have been an opportunity to discuss the concerns of people in the area and the reality on the ground. We know that he was consulting to make Westlands care home into a community hub, despite much protest against that. I wonder whether that idea is going ahead following this consultation. If so, what exactly will that entail? How will that continue to help the older people in Mid Ulster? Those are questions that remain unanswered.

The problems are not confined to residential care homes under the control of the Minister. No, care homes in the private sector are also crying out for help due to a lack of nursing staff being trained, which is causing them great difficulties. Indeed, in the news this afternoon, we heard of seven care homes closing across Northern Ireland.

As the managing director of one private care home in Mid Ulster who contacted me said:

"There are critical shortfalls [in nursing staff] and unless this is made a priority by the Assembly in terms of future planning and funding, it will undoubtedly result in a much greater crisis."

One would imagine that, with the crisis threatening to develop further, the Minister would seek to address the problem by working with Executive colleagues to find a solution. When I asked the Minister in a question for written answer to detail discussions that he had with the Employment Minister regarding the number of nursing places at universities and colleges, he stated:

"Responsibility for the commissioning of student nursing places in Northern Ireland is entirely a matter for my Department therefore no discussions have taken place with the Minister for Employment and Learning."

The Health Minister, therefore, admits sole responsibility for the lack of numbers and student nurses coming through.

The problem is also being felt in the domiciliary care sector, where there is a severe lack of care staff to fulfil the needs of older people throughout Mid Ulster. The Commissioner for Older People for Northern Ireland recently published a report on 'Domiciliary Care in Northern Ireland'. In the report, she noted:

"there are high levels of inconsistency in the planning and delivery of services across Northern Ireland."

She also noted that receiving good quality domiciliary care in Northern Ireland has become a "postcode lottery".

I have been contacted by many people whose families are being stretched to the absolute limit in their care for elderly and vulnerable family members. The Minister and his predecessors have continued with the policy of closing care homes across Northern Ireland, stating that older people staying in their own homes will ensure that they can retain their independence of living and receive care in a familiar and comfortable environment. I can certainly feel for that idea. In the report, the commissioner describes it as the "lynchpin of Transforming Your Care", noting:

"it is imperative that adequate support and resources are allocated and protected to plan, design, commission and provide high quality care in the home for older people."

However, as the Minister closes care homes in Mid Ulster, and as more and more people will now need specialist care in their own homes, he has failed to ensure that proper domiciliary care provision has been put in place.

One case that I have been dealing with through my constituency office concerns a lady who has been fighting to secure a care package for her uncle, who suffers from Alzheimer's and who requires multiple care visits per day. She has been fighting for that care package for over a year — that is 12 months in which she and her family have been stretched to their limits because the trust and the Department have been unable to find a suitable care package for her uncle. This state of affairs is simply not good enough.

Where carers and care packages are put in place, the carers are being stretched thin on the ground. However, that is hardly surprising when there are not enough care staff employed to cover the needs of older people in need in Mid Ulster. I have had discussions with district nurses and carers who have concerns over the levels of mileage paid for the journeys to and from patients and the difficulties faced by those who travel from one edge of the constituency to the other. The rural nature of Mid Ulster only exacerbates the problems felt by those carers and puts more pressure on the industry.

In the report, the Commissioner for Older People pointed out:

"The work they do is physically and emotionally demanding ... If high quality care is to be available at home for older people who need it, work must begin to address workforce issues to pay, support and enable people to provide this care."

I know from personal experience that these carers provide an excellent and necessary service to many people in Mid Ulster, and they must be given the resources and support to carry out their important work. The Minister is closing care homes under his control, leaving many older people with an uncertain future. He is not training enough nurses to staff private care homes and to provide domiciliary care packages, leaving older people without the care that they will need, now and in the future.

It certainly seems that the Health Minister's policies are not effective and he is failing older people in Mid Ulster and across Northern Ireland. Those are the people who need care and stability the most. I feel that it is not good enough. I appreciate the Minister's presence here this afternoon and I am keen to hear how he plans to rectify those problems and ensure that the older people of Mid Ulster are given the care that they so desperately need.

Mr I McCrea: First, I welcome the opportunity to speak in this debate. I thank Mrs Overend for returning to the debate after the sudden passing of her grandmother. At the wake, I expressed my deepest sympathy to you and your family circle, and I do so again. I know that it was a shock. You spoke of the care that your grandmother got at home. Many older people and their families feel the benefit of getting that care and being able to spend those last moments at home with their loved ones. Many people would prefer that, rather than being in a home. I know that that was appreciated and, having spoken to some of your family members, I know the importance that they felt of having your grandmother at home.

When we look at the wider care of elderly people in the Mid Ulster constituency, it is important to put on record that excellent work is done by many staff who work in residential care or nursing homes across the constituency and across Northern Ireland in caring for our older people. Having spoken to many families who have loved ones and having worked alongside them to ensure that they got into the right care home, I know that they greatly appreciate the work and help that their loved ones received.

I suppose that a lot of this debate will be around the Westlands residential home. I join Mrs Overend in speaking positively about the excellent job that those staff do in looking after the residents. It is disappointing that the debate has got to the point where we are lambasting a DUP Health Minister for decisions and policies with no reference whatsoever to the fact that it was a DUP Minister, Edwin Poots, who stopped the decision to close the Westlands home as well as the other homes across Northern Ireland, and it was a DUP Minister, Simon Hamilton, who ensured that that decision did not continue.

I apologise for using my mobile phone, Mr Deputy Speaker, but it is just for the sake of today's BBC news. It is not often that I give the BBC a plug. I welcome today's announcement by the Health Minister that a number of statutory care homes that may have been facing closure have been given a reprieve due to the problems faced by a private care home firm. The Minister has, once again, stepped in and given further assurance to those care homes that have been under threat that he is stopping that, reviewing it and ensuring that no one is put in any difficult circumstances.

Having spoken to the Minister about previous decisions and since he made this one today, I know that it is not the case, as others would try to say, that this is just putting off a decision. There is a genuine desire to ensure that no one is put out of their home. As Mrs Overend rightly said, for Westlands, many of those who are left feel that it is their home. I commend the Minister for that recent decision. When he responds, maybe he will put some meat on the bones regarding his decision. I welcome the steps that DUP Ministers have taken. I believe that that sends out a positive message to the residents and staff in Westlands and, I hope, cements that for — I cannot say how long — the short to medium term if not into the long term.

4.15 pm

I believe that the Minister is genuine when he says that no current resident of Westlands will be asked to leave. That was a very positive announcement in the past and is a very positive decision that the Minister has now taken. Different things always come down the road at us, but in respect of the decision by —

Mrs Overend: Will the Member give way on that issue?

Mr I McCrea: I will give way.

Mrs Overend: I welcome the Member saying that the Minister is giving a reprieve to some of those care homes, and I look forward to the detail on that. However, does the Member agree that the Minister should lift the non-admissions policy for the statutory care homes that are still here?

Mr I McCrea: I was just about to come to that. The Minister and previous Ministers will know that I do not always agree with every decision that is taken. I welcome this decision and believe that it gives us an opportunity. On the back of the unfortunate circumstances for the private care home, the Minister has now announced that he is reviewing the decision that he might have taken. I do not know where he is on that point, but he now has an opportunity to look at admissions, whether full admissions or from a respite perspective. I have no difficulty joining the Member in encouraging, if not asking, the Minister to look again at that policy, specifically for the Westlands home.

I look forward to hearing what other contributors have to say, but I hope that the Minister can put some more meat on the bones, certainly for what it means for Mid Ulster and for Westlands.

Mr Milne: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank Mrs Overend for securing the Adjournment debate. I also extend my sincere condolences to you and your family on the recent death of your grandmother.

We live with an ageing population. That is great news for all of us, but it also presents a number of challenges for older people and society as a whole if we are to make the process of growing older as positive and inclusive as possible. According to the 2011 census, almost 18,500 people in Mid Ulster were over the age of 65, and that figure is, thankfully, predicted to rise.

The key barriers for older people are well documented and include poverty, loneliness, fear of crime, ageism, poor health and access to services. Those factors are no different for older people in Mid Ulster, but the largely rural demographic of the constituency can intensify many of those issues. Older people in rural areas can feel very isolated. Limited access to public transport can prevent those who want or need to do so from accessing recreational, medical or other essential services, and severe weather conditions can leave them feeling extremely vulnerable. The impact of social isolation and loneliness on an individual's mental and physical well-being cannot be overestimated, and lack of contact can make it more difficult to identify and assist those in need.

I want to use this opportunity to commend our Minister Michelle O'Neill and her Department for the ongoing work in the tackling rural poverty and social inclusion (TRPSI) framework. That is implementing a package of measures to help to address a range of issues for vulnerable rural groups, including older people, right across the North. Successful initiatives that have benefited our older population in Mid Ulster include the connecting elderly rural isolated (CERI) programme, which aims to address social isolation and support independent living, the assisted rural travel scheme, and the maximising access in rural areas (MARA) project, which seeks to maximise benefit uptake and access to services.

There is plenty still to be done, but the recent review showed that a significant impact has been made. I acknowledge the contributions of the Rural Community Network and the Cookstown and Western Shores Area Network to that review.

Not all difficulties faced by older people in Mid Ulster are related to rural locations and can be addressed by this programme. Over the last number of years, the ability to access full entitlement to care packages has diminished, with options such as direct payments being offered on a more regular basis.

The focus on care in the community and increased demand on the service has led to shorter time slots, domiciliary care workers under increased pressure and many families feeling unsupported by the trust when an elderly relative leaves hospital. That needs to be addressed as a matter of urgency, and I met the health trust again recently to raise that issue. The option of nursing care leads to the worry of losing the family home, which is another issue that needs wider discussion.

The proposal to close residential homes has impacted on Mid Ulster and caused a lot of anxiety and worry for residents and families. The campaign to save Westlands care home continues, and I offer the residents and union organisers my full support.

On a personal note, I had several meetings with the Housing Executive to highlight the need for increased provision of sheltered housing for those who wish to avail themselves of that option. I have campaigned for a companionship service for carers of dementia patients using public transport.

I want to use this opportunity to acknowledge the many groups working to address these concerns and enhance the experience of our older population.

Mr I McCrea: I am sure that the Member is, like others, aware that an event was held last week by Fold Housing Association in respect of the 58 homes that it is developing in Cookstown. Will the Member join me in welcoming that, given his point in respect of that type of accommodation? Will he join me in welcoming those much-needed homes? Hopefully, we will be able to accommodate some of our elderly population in them. Will he join me in welcoming that?

Mr Milne: I thank the Member for his intervention, and I do welcome that. Anything that assists our elderly population there has to be welcome.

I acknowledge the community and voluntary sector, which runs a number of successful projects in local areas. I recently met Agewell, based in Magherafelt, which provides an invaluable “good morning” service that reassures people that they will be contacted daily, as well as providing a home maintenance and advice service, and I am aware of other local groups, such as Opportunities for Older People and the Mid Ulster Senior Network, to name a few that also do excellent work in this sector.

As an Assembly, we need to continue to break down barriers, listen to the needs and expectations of people advancing in years, and provide the necessary support to the community and voluntary sector, which provides a large portion of the on-the-ground service delivery. Again, I thank the Member for bringing this Adjournment debate.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Thanks very much, Mr Deputy Speaker. I thank Mrs Overend for bringing the motion, and I extend my personal and sincere sympathy to her and her extended family on the passing of her grandmother. Grandparents in particular can be a close and integral part of any family, so I am very sorry about that, Sandra.

I welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate, although it is a difficult subject to speak on. It is a debate that is not only worrying but disheartening at times. Today, I hope I can give voice to not only the elderly people of Mid Ulster but their families.

In Mid Ulster, as was said, we have felt the ongoing reduction of our health services and further closure of several residential care homes. Some of that has been abated. I have to say that the previous Minister did stand by his word and did that. However, there are pressures on local health provision, and that has created uncertainty amongst older people and their families. However, I pay particular tribute to the carers who look after them, often in very difficult and trying circumstances.

Just today, we heard the news that seven residential care homes are being closed by Four Seasons, right across the North. Indeed, Mr Deputy Speaker, one of them is in your constituency. I realise that the Minister has delayed the consultation on residential care home provision, but I ask him to give clear, unequivocal assurances that places will be found ASAP for people in those homes and that they and their families are not left high and dry. That would really put pressures on people.

Yes, we have the outlook of cutbacks on domiciliary care packages, but I have to say that I have encountered an increasing problem that does not involve cutbacks. In many cases that I have encountered where difficulties arise, resources and finance are there, but the carers — usually for private care — cannot be found. They cannot find people or employees, and that is becoming an intractable problem. People who are ready for discharge from hospital and taking up a hospital bed cannot return home because carers are not there to provide the care package to support them in their own home. That is becoming an intractable problem. You have only to do the maths. I am sure that the Minister, with both his financial accounting hat on and the facts that he has at his fingertips, will be able to outline how much a hospital bed and a care package costs health and social services per day. It is a no-brainer. The sooner we get people out of hospitals, the cheaper it is and the more applicable it is to others who deserve care in hospital.

We have significant reservations about the continual closure of residential care homes across the North when we do not have sufficient funding for home care services. A key aspect of Transforming Your Care was aimed at seeing our home care services properly funded and resourced. Funding and provision for that manpower and womanpower in home care settings is very important if we are to transform your care at all.

In September, the people of Cookstown stood alongside the staff of Westlands Residential Home to demonstrate against the closure of that institution. Westlands, which many MLAs have already said, has faced tremendous adversity over the years, yet staff and residents have remained firm in their support of the home and the people cared for in it.

At Stormont, a similar protest occurred, with about 200 care-home residents, relatives and trades unionists protesting on the steps outside Parliament Buildings. I, like others, stood alongside them and heard stories of how valuable residential care remains; how it factors into the lives of so many people; how the staff show support and dedication; and how they help to rebuild and support the lives of residents and their families.

When it comes to health concerns, my constituency office primarily deals with fears about the provision, or lack of provision, of home care packages, as I have outlined. Home care for the people of Cookstown, Magherafelt, south Derry, east Tyrone and, indeed, all the rural areas surrounding, remains definitely the preferred option. Care packages allow older people to live as independently as possible, for as long as possible, in the setting that they prefer: their own home. Put simply, home-care domiciliary packages allow for the provision of healthcare to the housebound and disabled; it takes away, or helps to alleviate, some of the strain and stress of travelling for many people. The SDLP believes that older people deserve a high-quality, well-funded service from care workers who are properly trained, committed and rewarded for the complex care that they provide to patients at home.

I recognise that the Health Minister must make difficult decisions in an uncertain economic climate, but, in the light of figures that suggest that there will be a 69% growth in the population aged over 75, it is only natural to be concerned about any major change to the delivery of domiciliary care in Mid Ulster or, indeed, across the North.

Northern Ireland's ageing population requires new approaches that accommodate older people and do not invalidate them as citizens. Financial responsibility is crucial, but to focus entirely on strict financial controls and cuts is to lose sight of the reality of patient and community needs.

4.30 pm

I go back to my point: the longer someone who is fit for discharge is in a hospital bed, the greater the backlog of people who require those hospital beds and the smaller the chance of that person being looked after properly, and adequately cared for, in their home environment as a citizen. We need to bolster care in the community to reduce pressures, and strategies for the wider health service must be based fundamentally on patient needs and not exclusively on the financial bottom line. People in Mid Ulster and, arguably, all of Northern Ireland need clarity. If the Health Department remains committed to the ideals of Transforming Your Care, we must see continued support for domiciliary care packages. If, however, the ideals of the health service have shifted, local residential care must be supported.

The people of Mid Ulster — indeed, the people of the North — do not deserve half measures. I support the motion and, again, thank Mrs Overend for introducing it.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I begin by joining others in passing on my condolences to Mrs Overend and her family on the recent loss of her grandmother.

I thank her for proposing the Adjournment debate. I have listened to the range of views expressed by Members — the hardy few who are in the Chamber at this time — and I will do my best to respond to most of the issues raised. I would also like to take the opportunity to outline and highlight some of the work being undertaken by my Department, the Health and Social Care Board and the trusts to provide care for older people across Northern Ireland.

The continuing growth in demand for services for our older people should not be and is not underestimated by my Department, and I believe that we are taking steps through Transforming Your Care and other initiatives to provide and improve those services. The growth in demand was also one of the main reasons why I recently outlined the need to significantly reform our health and social care system

It is widely recognised that Northern Ireland, like many other countries, has an ageing population, something that is very good. Projections from the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) indicate that the population aged 65 and over will increase by 26% — 71,000 people — by 2022. While, of course, it is a significant achievement that people live longer than ever before, it is essential that government in Northern Ireland faces up to the challenges presented by an ageing population.

The process of reform to meet the challenges confronting the provision of health and social care in Northern Ireland did not start with Transforming Your Care. However, TYC identified in a single comprehensive document the serious pressures facing the health and social care system going forward. The review set out a very strong case for change, recognising that no change was simply not an option, and made proposals on where service changes would have most impact on those challenges.

TYC made the case that preventative approaches can deliver better outcomes and set proposals on supporting older people, including home as the hub of care for older people, with more services being provided at home and in the community; a major reduction in statutory residential accommodation for older people as a result of a focus on promoting healthy ageing, individual resilience and independence; and a diverse choice of provision to meet the needs of older people, with appropriate regulation and safeguards to ensure quality and protect the vulnerable.

Despite the financial pressures that have slowed the transition to the model of care envisaged in TYC, steady progress has been made in transforming health and social care service delivery. Projects directly addressing the need for services designed to meet the needs of older people include the adoption of a regional approach to the delivery of reablement services that help people to remain independent at home for longer; reviewing domiciliary care provision, linked to the work on reablement, with the aim of providing a consistent service across Northern Ireland; and the promotion of self-directed support, which empowers service users and carers to exercise more control over their social care services by giving service users as much control as they want over their personal budget, the amount of money identified and allocated by the health and social care trust to meet their assessed needs. That enables service users to make informed choices about how and when services are provided.

We have also established 17 integrated care partnerships (ICPs), which all have agreed action plans in place as well as funding for a range of service change initiatives. The initial focus of ICPs is on frail older people and those, regardless of age, with certain long-term conditions such as stroke, diabetes and respiratory conditions. Alongside the review of care pathways, they are engaged in risk stratification work to identify patients in the priority areas — stroke, diabetes, respiratory conditions and frail elderly — who are at significant risk of poor outcomes because of their condition. That work will enable GPs to identify patients who are at risk and therefore require proactive case management to help them to manage their condition effectively and to avoid unnecessary acute admissions.

I am aware that Members have in the past and this evening raised concerns about the proposed closure of statutory residential care homes in their constituencies, including the proposed closure of the Westlands nursing home in Cookstown. Trusts have been engaging in consultations, with three already complete and two still outstanding. When concluded, those proposals are to be forwarded to the board for consideration before they come to me for a final decision. To date, none of them has made it as far as the Department. In spite of what Mrs Overend said, I have not closed any homes.

I have been increasingly concerned about a range of pressures facing the independent sector and particular problems facing one of the largest independent providers of residential care in Northern Ireland. I have been keeping developments under constant review, and, as a consequence of those growing concerns and further negative developments today regarding plans by Four Seasons Health Care to close seven homes across Northern Ireland, I am asking the Health and Social Care Board to halt and review the proposed closures of statutory residential care homes. Given that many of the proposals are predicated on spare local capacity in the independent sector, it is only right and proper to pause, reflect and give careful consideration to issues arising in the independent sector.

Mr McGlone raised issues around the 250 or so people who would be affected, never mind the 300 or more staff who would be affected. However, he raised particular concern about what would happen to the residents in the seven homes that are proposed for closure. The board is working closely with my colleagues in the Department, the RQIA and the health and social care trusts. They are working together and will continue to work closely with Four Seasons to ensure that there is regional and local coordination in managing the process of moving people away from the homes that are earmarked for closure.

I also want to put it on the record that the continued well-being of residents will be the priority in dealing with any future transition to alternative care arrangements. The intention is to ensure that any relocation will be managed with minimal disruption to them, that they are able to remain as close to the original location as possible and that there will be no additional financial implications created by the move. All the organisations that I mentioned, including the owner of the homes involved, are committed to ensuring that there is clear, regular communication with residents and their representatives to address any concerns that may arise. I assure the Member and the House that, as Minister, I will, as far as I can in respect of a decision made by a private company, ensure that that is done as well as is possible.

Recently, the outgoing Commissioner for Older People highlighted her concerns about the domiciliary care sector at the Health Committee and in her report 'Domiciliary Care in Northern Ireland'. First, I assure Members that my Department is committed to providing a high-quality domiciliary care service to support our older people to remain in their homes. Although I was disappointed by the way in which the report was published, it is, as we have discussed today, clearly a crucial area. The Department recognises that the domiciliary care sector faces significant challenges, as so many sectors do. To address those issues, the Health and Social Care Board has published its report entitled 'A Managed Change: An Agenda for Creating a Sustainable Basis for Domiciliary Care in Northern Ireland'. It is intended that the review will shape the future of domiciliary care provision, taking into account the financial and other challenges facing the sector. My officials, in conjunction with colleagues in the board, are reviewing both reports, and I look forward to receiving their recommendations on the way forward.

My Department is aware that the independent sector providers are experiencing recruitment and retention difficulties as their need for registered nurses increases to meet the needs of a growing complexity of care in the sector. The Department recently completed a nursing and midwifery workforce review that included the independent, voluntary and private sectors, and officials are considering its implementation. It highlights evidence of a global shortage of nurses at present and emphasises the need to retain newly qualified nurses to work in Northern Ireland. One of the recommendations of the workforce review is that all employers review their recruitment processes and work to make their organisations employers of choice to encourage the retention and recruitment of nurses.

A number of initiatives outlined in the workforce review are being considered to support the independent sector. A career pathway for nursing and midwifery in Northern Ireland has been developed and is intended to encourage nurses to see Northern Ireland as a place of opportunity. It has a section devoted to the independent sector.

In conclusion, I thank everyone for their contribution. I hope that Members can see from what I have said that, as Minister, I am aware of the concerns not just of those who are present today but of our older people and the people who care for them, whether they are family or friends or professional health and social care staff. I am also aware of the pressures, financial and other, on our statutory bodies and the independent sector, which provide important, valuable and professional services to our older people. Finally, I put on record my appreciation to everyone who provides support and assistance to our older community, as, without their dedication, a lot of our older people would be worse off.

Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4): Suspension

Mr Speaker: Thank you, Members. Sorry about the slight delay. We just had some amendments to make to the pack.

Mr Dickson: I beg to move

That Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4) be suspended for 30 November 2015.

Mr Speaker: Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the motion requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4) be suspended for 30 November 2015.

Committee Membership

Mr Speaker: As with similar motions, this will be treated as a business motion and there will be no debate.

Resolved:

That Mr Danny Kennedy replace Mr Neil Somerville as a member of the Committee for Justice. — [Mr Swann.]

Mr Speaker: The next item on the Order Paper is another motion regarding Committee membership. As with similar motions, it will be treated as a business motion and there will be no debate.

Resolved:

That Ms Claire Hanna replace Mr Colum Eastwood as a member of the Committee for the Environment. — [Mrs McKeivitt.]

Ministerial Statement

Subregional Stadia Programme for Soccer

Ms Ni Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. It would be remiss of me not to start by congratulating Tyson Fury on becoming a world boxing champion. Comhghairdeas.

I am very pleased to announce the launch of the consultation on the subregional stadia programme for soccer. This Executive-agreed programme aims to meet the strategic needs of football. On 10 March 2011, the Executive endorsed an investment of circa £36 million to develop subregional football across the North of Ireland. It was agreed that this would be taken forward as a priority area of spend in the next CSR period. The Executive endorsement was based on input received from the sector in 2011 on potential actions needed to meet the strategic needs of football.

The consultation document has been developed to reflect priorities outlined in a draft paper prepared by the IFA in 2011. Today's launch takes into account those priorities, as well as subsequent needs that have emerged in soccer since then, by providing an opportunity over the next 12 weeks for everyone's input before the programme is finalised. To align the subregional programme for soccer consultation with priorities agreed by the Executive in 2011, the programme has been divided into five distinct strands.

Strand 1 is safe stadia. The purpose of this strand is to provide funding for safe stadia capable of hosting high-level competition matches with a capacity of circa 6,000 to 8,000 persons. Redevelopment of the Oval, in partnership with Glentoran Football Club, is proposed. A budget of circa £10 million will be made available for this strand.

Strand 2 relates to significant subregional stadia. The purpose of this strand is to provide subregional stadia that can sit at the hub of key communities. They would offer quality football and community facilities that bring revenues for the club tenants, making football in these areas more sustainable. This strand will be open only to venues designated under the Safety of Sports Grounds Order 2006. A challenge fund principle will apply to the allocation of funding. A budget of circa £17 million will be made available for this strand, with a maximum award of £3 million available per venue.

Strand 3 concerns IFA Championship clubs. The purpose of this strand is to provide funding to improve safety provision at soccer venues. Strand 3 will be open to all venues not designated under the Safety at Sports Grounds Order. A challenge fund principle will apply to the allocation of funding. A budget of circa £3 million will be made available for this strand, with a maximum award of £500,000 available per venue.

Stand 4 is the provision of a national training centre. The purpose of this strand is to provide funding towards the creation of a purpose-built flagship national training centre to support current talent and nurture future generations. A budget of circa £3 million will be made available for this strand.

Strand 5 is intermediate and junior football. The purpose of this strand is to provide funding, via targeted programmes in partnerships with local councils, schools and colleges, to deliver key sporting centres in local communities at an intermediate and junior level. A budget of circa £3 million will be made available for this strand.

The consultation document proposes that all applicant organisations must meet core criteria. Those include demonstrating ownership of the venue through freehold ownership or leasehold that provides a minimum of 10 or 21 years' security of tenure, depending on the scope of works or value of the award. Applicants must demonstrate that they are properly constituted by means of a constitution or memorandum and articles of association that provide for equality of opportunity, not-for-profit status, child protection and management input from users. Applicants must be viable and solvent. In the absence of operational viability, only applicants that can meet the security of tenure requirements will be deemed eligible. The venue must be located in the North of Ireland, and the project must, in the main, benefit the inhabitants of the North of Ireland. Applicant organisations must also meet specific eligibility criteria, depending on which strand of funding they apply for. Those relate to size and capacity, designation under safety at sports grounds legislation, partnership working arrangements and affiliation. So the applicant must be an IFA-affiliated club or non-IFA-affiliated club with grounds located in the North of Ireland that hosts NIFL, IFA, UEFA or League of Ireland fixtures.

In addition, for a project to be considered eligible, applicants must clearly demonstrate: the project is a capital one, which, for the purposes of this programme, is defined as expenditure associated with the purchase, improvement, construction or creation of an asset and includes any costs directly incurred in that process; the project is fit for purpose, well designed and of high quality; the project is viable in the capital funding package required; the project is for the benefit of the soccer fraternity in the North of Ireland; the project will improve facility provision at soccer venues as per the IFA's 2011 draft facilities document; the applicant organisation has not committed itself by purchase, contract or other binding agreement before receiving an offer of award and permission to proceed from DCAL; and the project builds on existing resources and is in addition to existing or planned investment by statutory bodies or the owner of the facility. In addition, the project cannot be a replacement or upgrade to a project that has been funded through public-sector investment and is still within the economic lifespan of the asset, which is 21 years for buildings and 10 years for pitches.

I am opening a consultation on the proposed strands and levels of funding for the programme and on the needs that have emerged since 2011 that are not included in the IFA's 2011 proposals. All applicants to the programme should be aware that there will be a requirement for partnership funding. The programme will be assessed under challenge fund principles, with award recommendations based on available funding, eligibility and projects attaining a high assessment score.

The consultation documentation is available from today on the DCAL website. The consultation will run for twelve weeks from today, 30 November 2015, until 22 February 2016. In line with appropriate guidance, I sought comments from other Departments prior to the public consultation being launched. My officials will host four consultation events across the North of Ireland during that period, where stakeholders will have the opportunity to engage with departmental representatives in relation to the subregional stadia programme for soccer.

The consultation document will be made available in the form of an online survey, with additional formats available on request. The 12-week consultation will be widely publicised and open to everyone who wishes to respond. Opinions will be sought specifically from groups with a direct interest in the subregional programme for soccer as well as those on DCAL's list of consultees. DCAL's key stakeholders, including MLAs, councils and other interested parties, will be notified directly via email.

It is my aim to make the consultation on the subregional programme for soccer meaningful and inclusive so that all parties that are likely to be affected by, or have an interest in, the strategies have the opportunity to engage in developing the programme.

This is an excellent opportunity for those involved in soccer to develop their facilities as a means of improving the sustainability and viability of soccer at the subregional level. I am delighted that the programme will also contribute to promoting equality and tackling poverty and social exclusion.

I thank the House for this opportunity to update Members on these actions. I will keep the House informed of progress on the subregional stadia programme for soccer. Go raibh míle maith agat.

12.15 pm

Mr McCausland (The Chairperson of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure): The commitment of £36 million for subregional stadium development for football in Northern Ireland will be welcomed. There has been a recognition that the investment in football that has already been made has improved people's experience of going to matches and has drawn larger numbers to the grounds for games. The original intention, as stated in response to a question for written answer from my colleague Gordon Dunne back in the summer, was that there would be a 20-week consultation that would begin in early August and run through to December. We are virtually at the start of December and the consultation process has been reduced from 20 weeks to 12 weeks, similar to that for the arts and culture strategy. Will the Minister explain why there has been a delay and how — if the consultation is to run from 30 November to 22 February, and you then give a further four weeks for consideration of any submissions that there are to that — it would be possible to come to any decision that can go through the Executive before the end of the mandate?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Chair for his questions. As the Member will know — and it is the same response as the one I gave him last week in relation to the strategy for culture and arts — there was not an Executive meeting during the summer. Given that this is a key Programme for Government commitment, I felt that it was completely appropriate to consult Executive colleagues, which I have done. The consultation will run for 12 weeks. There will be a quick turnaround in looking at the responses to prepare an application process, but this was always meant to go through in the next CSR period. Basically, I am making sure that everything is good to go for whoever comes after me and ensuring that everything that can be done has been done, that the consultation will be meaningful and inclusive and that the application process reflects the consultation period. It will be designed around the feedback and the consultation process. The next Minister will then just have to open the application process and make the award soon thereafter.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat. Cuirim fáilte roimh ráiteas an Aire. An dtig liom a fhiafraí den Aire faoin phróiseas iarratais? An dtig léi cur síos ar chuidiú do chlubbanna ar mheas a dhéanamh ar na hiarratais, agus cad é mar a dhéanfar na cinntí? Will the Minister outline the assistance that will be given to clubs in the application process? How will applications be assessed, and how will decisions be made?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. I am sure that she picked up some of what I outlined to the Chair. As soon as the consultation process has closed, the feedback will be brought into the Department. Actually, with feedback that we get along the way, we will try to start a draft application process. However, it will be finalised only when the consultation process has closed. The application forms and process will be tailored to suit that, and it will be open soon after. It will be for the new Department for Communities to give assistance to clubs, but we will have laid down a template of what we feel is necessary. I anticipate a lot of feedback as a result of this consultation. I believe that the feedback will be inclusive, coming particularly from the soccer family, and help to design and form any new application process.

Mrs McKeivitt: Minister, I welcome your statement. I am relieved that the consultation exercise is finally under way, given that it is four-and-a-half years since the programme was endorsed. The statement does not include a time frame for the application process and the project selection process, yet I note that all projects must be completed by March 2018. Given that the consultation will end on 22 February, as the Minister has stated, and the Department will then need time to consider its response to the consultation responses, can the Minister advise whether the programme will be progressed any further prior to the end of the mandate? Does she think that any of the soccer clubs have missed an opportunity because of the delay in this announcement?

Ms Ní Chuilín: First of all, the subregional soccer programme was never due to start until the next mandate, so, while it was announced in March 2011, the conditionality was that it would be for the next CSR. Given the fact that we had an additional year added on to the mandate, I have started a lot of the preliminary works. The consultation will close on 22 February. Within a few weeks, the application process will be designed and, hopefully, open for people. In the time between the old mandate ending and the new mandate beginning, the Department will be able to work with clubs to help them with the application process, and it will be for the new Minister of Communities to make a decision, but the decisions will be made by the Department.

Mr Cree: I thank the Minister for her statement. Minister, you mentioned the effective dates. This strategy was first developed at the end of the last mandate. Since then, we have had the IFA's facilities strategy document of August 2012, which was, obviously, quite different from the 2011 situation. In your report, you talked about other factors that have emerged since 2011. Will you clarify the situation with regard to the Glentoran club and the IFA's new facilities strategy of 2012?

Ms Ní Chuilín: There are at least five questions there, but I will answer the Member as best I can. The IFA's facility management strategy was part of the Executive's decision and endorsement of 10 March 2011. That is why I have made it clear that needs have emerged since then. I know that the IFA has redrafted its needs since 2011. It will appreciate that other needs have emerged from clubs since then. We also now have the emergence of the 11 super-councils, which, hopefully, will have a role to play in this. That is a need that was not anticipated on 10 March 2011. I think, and I am sure the IFA will agree, that we have been as considerate as we possibly can be, beyond the Executive's agreement that was made in March 2011. We want to try to include as many opportunities for people to apply for this as possible. The decision on Glentoran was part of the 10 March 2011 decision. That is something that has been there for at least four years, if not more. Certainly, I know that the Member will welcome this consultation and encourage clubs in his constituency to feed into the consultation, if they feel they can.

Mr Lyttle: I declare an interest as a member of an amateur football club in Northern Ireland. I wholeheartedly welcome the football stadia funding programme for senior and junior football in Northern Ireland. I particularly welcome the commitment to Glentoran Football Club. It is a real hub for sporting and community development, not only in east Belfast but for national youth training, particularly in intermediate and junior football. Does the Minister recognise that intermediate and junior football in particular are in real need of support due to the individual and community outcomes they achieve for groups in areas of particular high social need? Will she commit to ensuring that as many football clubs as possible are fully aware of the opportunities that this fund will create?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. I certainly agree with most, if not all, of his sentiments, particularly with regard to intermediate and junior football. Within that, I assume he is including boys and girls, because there is a real problem with the representation of women, particularly in the three big sports. In fairness to them, they have gone to great lengths to ensure that there is better inclusion. The bigger clubs will see themselves in different strands of this, but all must have and demonstrate inclusiveness; they must demonstrate that they are reaching people who have not been reached in the past, not just for the purposes of the application but for the future. That will be strongly tested. Clubs in areas like east Belfast, and many others across the North that are sitting within indices of high deprivation, will have to demonstrate their inclusivity for investment like this and potential investment. They will need to ensure that they are going to provide opportunities for children and young people, and for older people, to become involved in sport and physical activity.

I will do my best to ensure that as many people as possible are not only aware of the consultation but have their say. I am encouraged that Members like you will do likewise.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for her statement, which is somewhat overdue.

With regard to strand 3, will the Minister indicate how she reckons that £3 million will be sufficient for championship clubs? I understand that up to 30 clubs could be looking for potential funding to a maximum of £500,000. How will that be sufficient in trying to address the long-standing funding issue? Clubs like Bangor Football Club have waited a long time for this announcement, yet there will be disappointment that possibly only six clubs will get something from the pot. Surely £3 million is insufficient in trying to address the IFA championship club problem.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I assume that the Member is not still playing for Bangor, because he would have had to declare an interest. As I said, this was the 2011 IFA facilities strategy. As I also clearly said, it is also looking at emerging needs that have occurred since then. It is up to the clubs. A lot of them will feel that the strand is not appropriate. In fact, I anticipate that £36 million is not enough to cover the needs. However, it is a substantial amount of money. If people have thoughts about the strands that are outlined as draft in the consultation, they need to put forward proposals that they think would better suit the soccer family. That is as open and transparent as you will get in any consultation.

Mr McMullan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for her statement. Who is responsible for the subregional programme: DCAL or the IFA?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department is primarily responsible for the consultation programme, although we work in a very strong partnership with the IFA. I am launching the consultation, taking responsibility for the process and designing the application process, which will leave the next Minister in a position to make decisions on who is successful as a result of the consultation.

Mr Hilditch: I declare an interest as a member of the IFA council. Wearing a number of hats, I welcome the statement and the substantial investment that is being announced today. There is, however, a bit of an anomaly whereby some championship clubs are designated grounds, and, vice versa, some clubs are playing in the premiership and are not designated grounds, which falls between the two. Potentially, Larne Football Club is an example of a championship club that is designated, and Warrenpoint Town Football Club is a premiership club that is not designated. Who will make that call? There is a grey area in the middle.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I was aware that that would be an issue before the consultation was launched, because, between the designation of grounds, and even for smaller clubs and the primacy rule, that issue has come up consistently. I have said to people — I take the opportunity to repeat it today — that, if they feel that this gap or confusion will disadvantage a group, geographical area or community, that needs to be said in the consultation. I believe not only that it should be said but that it should be pointed out exactly how people will be disadvantaged. I am not expecting people to write the consultation for me, but I do expect to hear the opinions of soccer clubs and the challenges that they have experienced over the years. I believe that, within the soccer family, the consultation will be an opportunity for them to put down how they think that future needs can be met through this opportunity.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Cuirim fáilte roimh an ráiteas fosta. I welcome the statement. I should declare an interest as a member of the GAA and an avid rugby fan. Are there any plans for a similar subregional programme for GAA and rugby facilities in the future?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member is on the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure, and he has certainly engaged with the three main sports. He would have heard that, along with the subregional programme for soccer, the IFA, the Ulster Council of the GAA and Ulster Rugby — the three sporting bodies — have asked for additional resources for subregional opportunities in the next mandate.

12.30 pm

Those discussions have started and, while we are launching the consultation on the subregional programme for soccer, as I have already said there is, most likely, not enough money to meet the needs of all. Those conversations between the three big sporting bodies and my Department have started, and I want the Member to know that I am encouraged by what I have heard thus far. It would seem that the direction of travel for the three big sports is not only looking at single facilities but at facilities that they can physically share and which will allow them to share skills and expertise. They are looking in particular at the inclusion of children and young people from deprived areas, those with disabilities, and women and girls in their sports.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Minister for her statement. Northern Ireland is obviously a small country, and the development of elite players is essential. The Minister will know that the Northern Ireland senior team has qualified for the Euros next year, but the under-19s have also qualified for the elite section. Therefore, the establishment of a national training centre is a huge decision and an important development. Will the Minister assure the House that money will be divided across Northern Ireland on an equal basis, to ensure the development of facilities across Northern Ireland? Where should the national training centre be sited, and can she update the House on that issue?

Ms Ní Chuilín: It is far too premature for that. I launched the consultation this morning and you are already asking me to commit to a certain area; it is a bit silly. Putting that aside, I believe that there is an opportunity here. Some people feel that there is no need for a national training centre because Windsor Park has been developed, and others believe that there is a need for it and, if there is, it should be a, b, c or d. I am looking forward to everybody's opinion, not only on where facilities should be developed but on how much should be spent on them and all the rest.

The soccer community has been waiting for this consultation for a long time, and it knows and understands that it was something that would happen in the next mandate. I believe that, depending on the needs of certain clubs, we will certainly see the demand in the responses that come back, aligned to the comments and queries that have been raised around some of the draft strands thus far. This was 2011; the IFA has amended its facilities strategy since then, and it also appreciates that different needs have emerged. I anticipate that those will be reflected in the responses to the consultation.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Ba mhaith liom fáilte a chur roimh an ráiteas agus gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an ráiteas seo. I welcome both the statement and the fact that the Minister is here to present it, particularly in relation to the eligibility criteria. I note and welcome the fact that it is also going to allow for non-affiliated clubs, particularly those that play in the Football Association of Ireland (FAI) league, which would include Derry City, in my home town. Is the Minister of the view that Derry City, perhaps, is well placed to make a bid for this, given that the club plays in the Football Association of Ireland's league, and that the siting of the national training centre there in the future would be more than appropriate?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am certainly not going to cite where any training centre should be located. The Member is right; part of the criteria for support through the subregional programme can be for NIFL, IFA, UEFA or Football Association of Ireland league fixtures, which includes the Brandywell. I look forward to and anticipate, from the Member's constituency but particularly for that geographical area, a lot of feedback into the consultation. If everybody who approached me any time I went up to that part of the town feeds back into this, I anticipate that the majority will come from Derry city, north Belfast, east Belfast and the rest.

Mr Lyons: I thank the Minister for her statement, which is very welcome. Will she provide some clarity for us? She mentioned that all applicants to the programme should be aware that there will be a requirement for partnership funding. At what level will that be? After the consultation closes on 22 February, how soon will the funding become available? Can the same club apply to different strands?

Ms Ní Chuilín: First, the partnership funding depends on which strand they apply for. If they decide that some of these strands do not meet their needs, they should, as part of the consultation process, say so. They should say what their needs are and where they think additional strands need to be included.

As I have mentioned a few times, the consultation closes on 22 February, and it will take us a few weeks to gather up all of the responses to help us to design an application process. Once that process has been designed, there will be an open call, and I anticipate that it will last several weeks, which will take us into the next mandate. Maybe the Member has some suggestions or is working with clubs that feel that they meet one criterion but not another, and their partner meets one criterion but not another. It is down to individual clubs to make their case for partnership funding. I have left it open enough so that, although this is the 2011 draft facilities strategy from the IFA, it has been very consistent in saying that the needs that have emerged since then should be reflected in the consultation.

Mr Allister: The Minister has been very dogmatic when it comes to the sport of boxing that, to benefit from funding, you must be affiliated to a specific and sole governing body, yet, when it comes to football, there is no requirement for affiliation to the IFA. Why is there that distinction and bias? Is it so that the Brandywell can qualify?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member is credited with being extremely intelligent, and he is also given credit for having the ability to scrutinise things, so I assume that he has done that and just does not like the answers that he is getting. Boxing needs to be affiliated to a governing body on receipt of a letter of offer. If there is not a governing body that the Member feels recognises his cause, he should support the boxers — end of story. If he has not read the statement, I can highlight the following for him and put it in his pigeonhole. It says:

"the applicant must be an IFA affiliated club or non IFA affiliated club with grounds located in the north of Ireland and who host either: NIFL, IFA, UEFA or Football League of Ireland fixtures."

I have read that into the record. I can highlight the statement, and I can highlight the Hansard report, and he can do what he likes after that. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. I am not going to have that barracking. Questions are asked and answered, and Members should listen to both.

Mr B McCrea: I understand that this announcement comes from a decision by the Executive on 10 March 2011. That is some time ago, and a lot has changed since, not least our financial position. Has the Minister had cause to bring this issue back to the Executive to ask them whether they are sure that, in light of other priorities, we really ought to be investing £36 million in this venture?

Ms Ní Chuilín: As the Member will be aware, the Programme for Government commitment on developing the three stadia as well as the subregional programme still stands. Prior to this consultation being launched today, I copied my Executive colleagues into correspondence to let them know that that is the case. I have had no feedback from anyone to suggest that this is not value for money.

I am aware that the Member has raised concerns, particularly about the private sector construction and all the rest. These stadia, these grounds and this investment will provide local employment, which is really needed, as well as sustainability for those communities, during and post construction. The Executive are very clear and very specific about that. We should try to avail ourselves of any investment, particularly capital investment, where there are opportunities to provide social benefits and social clauses during and post construction. I believe that that is the case.

The decision was made in 2011, and things have changed since. In fairness to the IFA, it has tried to adapt its draft facilities strategy in line with emerging needs. The question that you are asking me is one for the Executive, and I believe that I have given you an answer as best I possibly can.

Mr G Robinson: Would teams such as Limavady United and Coleraine Football Club be eligible to apply for some of the funding to upgrade their grounds?

Ms Ní Chuilín: As I said to other Members, the consultation is open. If Limavady or Coleraine believe that they should be able to apply for the funding when it becomes available, they need to say that in the consultation. They also need to make any points or comments in the consultation to strengthen not just the case for geographical clubs — and there are many — but to future-proof the development of soccer in all areas across the North. I encourage the Member to ensure that those clubs not only take part in the consultation but demonstrate how they will meet the needs of young boys and young girls and people with abilities and non-abilities in any future proposal or application because it is really important that we get feedback.

Mr Speaker: That concludes questions on the statement.

Executive Committee Business

Departments Bill: First Stage

Ms J McCann (Junior Minister, Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): I beg to introduce the Departments Bill [NIA 70/11-16], which is a Bill to rename the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, the Department of Finance and Personnel, the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, the Department for Regional Development and the Department for Social Development; to dissolve the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure, the Department of the Environment and the Department for Employment and Learning; and for connected purposes.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Addressing Bullying in Schools Bill: First Stage

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): I beg to introduce the Addressing Bullying in Schools Bill [NIA 71/11-16], which is a Bill to address bullying in grant-aided schools.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill: First Stage

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I beg to introduce the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill ) [NIA 72/11-16], which is a Bill to regulate the sale of nicotine products and tobacco, to amend the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1972 and the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 2008 in relation to the provision of health care; and for connected purposes.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Food Hygiene Rating Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Speaker: I call the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Mr Simon Hamilton, to move the Further Consideration Stage of the Food Hygiene Rating Bill.

Moved. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety).]

Mr Speaker: One amendment has been tabled. Members will have received a copy of the Marshalled List of Amendments, which provides details of the amendment and the groupings list. The amendment delineates the instructions for communication, which are technical in nature. I remind Members intending to speak that they should address their comments only to the amendment. If that is clear, we shall proceed.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I beg to move the following amendment: In page 11, line 33, at end insert

“(3) A notification under section 2, 3 or 4 may, without prejudice to any method of service authorised under section 24 of the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954, be sent by ordinary post; and accordingly, unless the contrary is proved, a notification sent by ordinary post is to be treated as received on the day on which it would have been delivered in the ordinary course of post (with references in this Act to when a notification, or something with it, is received being read in light of this subsection).”— [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety).]

The proposed amendment is a purely technical one that relates to clause 17. Through engagement with district council officers, who will be responsible for implementing and enforcing the provisions of the Bill, an issue was identified with regard to clause 3(4), which has the potential to cause district councils operational difficulties in the effective and efficient operation of the scheme.

The issue relates to a food business operator receiving a notification of a rating under clause 2, which is deemed to have taken place when the conditions in section 24(1) of the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954 are fulfilled. However, it has been established that it would be open for a food business operator to argue that the reference in clause 3(4) to when the notification is received more naturally suggests actual receipt and, therefore, raises a contrary intention sufficient to disapply section 24(1) of the Interpretation Act (Northern Ireland) 1954.

12.45 pm

It has also been noted that section 24 of the Interpretation Act would require the notification of a rating to be sent by registered post, which would not be a practical or cost-effective method for district councils to adopt. The issue has been addressed by proposing this amendment to clause 17, which is entitled ‘Interpretation’ and provides clarification on notification. I trust that Members will appreciate the need for the amendment and will understand that, from an operational perspective, it makes good sense. I ask them to give their support to the amendment.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. As the Minister outlined, an issue was identified with clause 3(4), which had the potential to cause district councils some operational difficulties in operating the food hygiene rating scheme. The Minister wrote to the Committee on 7 September advising members of the issue and of his intention to address it through an amendment at Further Consideration Stage. The Committee considered the proposed amendment at its meeting on 16 September. Given that, as the Minister outlined, it was a technical amendment that had no effect on the policy and would ultimately result in the more effective and efficient running of the scheme, the Committee agreed to note the proposed amendment.

Mrs Dobson: The Ulster Unionist Party supports the amendment tabled by the Minister. It is timely that the Bill is progressing to the next stage only days after the Deputy Minister for Health in Wales described the system there as a “big success”. That is perhaps another example of the Welsh leading the way on public health amongst the regions. I will leave that for Members’ consideration.

In the two years since the Welsh legislation came into place, the share of food outlets getting the top, five-star rating has risen from 45% to just over 60%. The ratio of firms rated satisfactory or better rose from 87% to over 94%, and the number of outlets with a zero rating halved from 134 to 61, which is around one in 500. Overall, it has succeeded in driving up standards in restaurants and takeaways, and I have every hope that our Bill will do the same. It will give greater confidence to consumers and drive up food hygiene standards at outlets across Northern Ireland at the same time. This is one of those Bills that, along with minor changes such as today’s amendment, will be able to deliver obvious benefits to consumers.

Mr McCarthy: As a member of the Health Committee, I rise to support the amendment before us today. I welcome the Food Hygiene Rating Bill as a means whereby our population can have confidence when visiting all our food providers, cafes, restaurants and eateries of every description. Northern Ireland is renowned for the provision of excellent food, and I have no doubt that that will continue with the introduction of this Bill.

Our Committee visited premises that supply food to the public, and I was very impressed with all the visits, none more so than the visit to our very own Blue Flax restaurant. I congratulate the manager and his staff for the excellent manner in which they carry out their work.

The district councils’ environmental health officers carry out a very important and essential role, and the amendment and the Bill are very welcome. On behalf of the Alliance Party, I support the Bill.

Mr Hamilton: I thank the Members who contributed very briefly to the debate. In particular, I thank the Committee and the Chair for accepting the amendment and for the support that has been shown. As I indicated previously, the reason for the amendment is to provide clarification on notification under the provisions of the Bill, which will facilitate district councils in effectively and efficiently implementing the food hygiene rating scheme. I ask Members to support the amendment.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr Speaker: That concludes the Further Consideration Stage of the Food Hygiene Rating Bill. The Bill stands referred to the Speaker.

We will take our ease for a moment because I think that we are expecting at least one Member. You will not get it much easier than that, Minister.

Committee Business

Public Services Ombudsperson Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Speaker: I call the Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to move the Further Consideration Stage of the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill.

Moved.—[Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister).]

Mr Speaker: Members will have a copy of the Marshalled List of amendments detailing the order for consideration. The amendments have been grouped for debate in the provisional grouping of amendments selected list. There are three groups of amendments, and we will debate the amendments in each group in turn. The first debate will be on the amendments relating to changing the title of “Ombudsperson” to “Ombudsman”.

The next debate will be on the amendments in group 2, which deal with procedures, including commencement, reporting and privilege, and technical changes required to the Bill. The third debate will be on amendment Nos 31, 51, 75, 89, 91 and 305, which deal with the powers and ambit of the ombudsperson.

Members intending to speak should address all the amendments in each group on which they wish to comment. Once the debate on each group is completed, any further amendments in the group will be moved formally as we go through the Bill, and the Question on each will be put without further debate.

If all of that is clear, we shall proceed.

Clause 1 (The Northern Ireland Public Services Ombudsperson)

Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill): I beg to move amendment No. 1: In page 1, line 5, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 2: In page 1, line 6, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.— [Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill).]

No 319: In schedule 8, page 47, line 11, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.—
[Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill).]

No 320: In schedule 8, page 47, line 13, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.—
[Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill).]

No 321: In schedule 8, page 47, line 20, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.—
[Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill).]

No 322: In schedule 8, page 47, line 23, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.—
[Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill).]

No 323: In schedule 8, page 47, line 27, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.—
[Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill).]

No 325: In schedule 8, page 47, line 31, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.—

Lord Morrow: Although we have 275 amendments to debate in group 1, I do not intend to detain the House too long on this matter. The amendments all relate to a change in the title of the new office from “ombudsperson” to “ombudsman”. The Ad Hoc Committee considered the use of the term “ombudsperson” in the Bill and noted that it was the intention of the Committee for OFMDFM that the name should be unambiguously gender-neutral. The Ad Hoc Committee received evidence from the International Ombudsman Institute, the International Ombudsman Association, and the Welsh and Irish Ombudsmen that the term “ombudsman” was already gender-neutral. The word is of Scandinavian origin, and its original meaning in Swedish is “representative”. We received a research paper on the etymology of the term. We were advised that “ombudsman” was a trusted and recognised brand and that to change the title could cause confusion among the public.

The Committee for OFMDFM was content with our suggestion that the title of the office should be “ombudsman”. Therefore, at Consideration Stage, the Ad Hoc Committee brought forward amendments to the first instance of the term in the Bill — that is, in clause 1 — and to the short and long titles. At the time, I said that, depending on the outcome of that stage, it was the Committee’s intention to table amendments at Further Consideration Stage to the other affected clauses. The Assembly clearly indicated at Consideration Stage that it was content to have the title “ombudsman”, so the Ad Hoc Committee tabled the remaining necessary 275 amendments. I commend them to the House.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Chomhairle. I thank the Member for tabling the amendments and speaking to them. I will try to be brief on this matter, because there are a significant number of amendments, but they are designed to deal with the one issue, which is the name change.

Our view is quite simply that we would prefer the title to remain “ombudsperson”. We understand the origin of the word “ombudsman” and the question relating to the gender issue and it being a gender-neutral word. By the same token, we believe that there has been an ongoing cultural change in the last number of years whereby people tend to move away from using the word “man”, which most people here obviously accept has a gender definition. On that basis, we would prefer that the name remained “ombudsperson”. We think that that is becoming much more prevalent in common parlance and the understanding of people throughout civic society. On that basis, we prefer to keep it that way and continue moving in that direction. Not only is it specifically related to this particular Bill, it is part of an ongoing, changing cultural public narrative around the use of gender definitions when people are addressed in the civic world. On that basis, a Cheann Chomhairle, and we seek your guidance on this, we will oppose the amendments, but we have no desire to bring the House to Divisions on this matter. If we can go from what might be described as a “no”, to a “low no”, to a “no no”, we are quite happy to do that. We seek your guidance on that matter.

Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): On behalf of the Committee, I begin by again thanking Lord Morrow and his Ad Hoc Committee for the work that it has put in on the Northern Ireland Public Services Ombudsperson Bill (NIPSO). I would also like to indicate that the Committee for OFMDFM supports the Ad Hoc Committee’s further name-change amendments. As Lord Morrow pointed out, research was commissioned into the etymology of the term “ombudsman”, and it became clear that the history of the word suggests that it is not gender-specific, which may be counter-intuitive, taking on board the recent comments of Mr Maskey. In the end, the Committee for OFMDFM was satisfied that the term “ombudsman” is not gender-specific, and there was cross-party support for the amendments proposed by the Ad Hoc Committee, notwithstanding, once again, the contribution that we have just heard from Mr Maskey on behalf of Sinn Féin.

The Committee for OFMDFM’s amendment No 87 makes a change from “Ombudsperson” to “Ombudsman”, which the Ad Hoc Committee’s amendment No 86 also deals with. So, I would be grateful if that particular Ad Hoc Committee amendment — amendment No 86 — to clause 33 were not moved, because the Committee for OFMDFM’s amendment No 87 will make the change to clause 33 as desired by the Ad Hoc Committee.

Lord Morrow: I think that we have reached a new meaning of the word “no”. It goes from “no” to “low no” to “no no”. So I think that we have moved on in the Assembly today.

In summing up, I wish simply to point out that the term “ombudsman” is already gender-neutral and is recognised as such right around the world. The Ad Hoc Committee agreed to bring forward changes; the OFMDFM Committee was content for it to do so; and, at Consideration Stage, the Assembly agreed in principle to such change, making a number of specific amendments. It therefore follows that the Assembly should make the remaining amendments that flow from that decision.

In relation to the matter that Mr Nesbitt has raised, we will deal with it when we get to that particular amendment.

Mr Speaker: I will now put the Question on amendment No 1, to leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”. The Marshalled List contains a large number of these amendments, and I remind Members that they have already disposed of a few of these amendments at Consideration Stage. I will put the Question, and, if it is clear to me what the majority of the House wants, I will make a call on that basis. If Members wish to record their position, then, obviously, they can challenge my judgement at that point.

Let us move on.

Amendment No 1 agreed to.

Mr Speaker: Amendments Nos 2 to 11 have already been debated. With the leave of the Assembly, I will group these amendments for the Question.

Amendment No 2 made:

In page 1, line 6, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.— [Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsman Bill).]

Amendment No 3 made:

Clause 2 (Independence)

Amendment No 4 made:

In page 1, line 10, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.— [Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsman Bill).]

Amendment No 5 made:

In page 2, line 2, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.— [Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsman Bill).]

Amendment No 6 made:

In page 2, line 5, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.— [Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsman Bill).]

Amendment No 7 made:

In page 2, line 7, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.— [Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsman Bill).]

Clause 3 (Appointment)

Amendment No 8 made:

In page 2, line 11, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.— [Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsman Bill).]

Amendment No 9 made:

In page 2, line 14, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.— [Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsman Bill).]

Amendment No 10 made:

In page 2, line 19, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.— [Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsman Bill).]

Clause 4 (Abolition of existing offices)

Amendment No 11 made:

In page 2, line 28, leave out “Ombudsperson” and insert “Ombudsman”.— [Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsman Bill).]

Mr Speaker: We now come to the second group of amendments for debate. With amendment No 12, it will be convenient to debate the other amendments in this group. These deal with procedural and technical amendments. Members should note that amendment No 12 is a paving amendment to amendment No 283.

Amendment No 289 is consequential to amendment No 288. Amendment No 295 is consequential to amendment No 294. I call the Chairperson of the OFMDFM Committee, Mr Nesbitt, to move amendment No 12 and to address the other amendments in the group.

1.00 pm

Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): I beg to move amendment No 12:

In page 2, line 28, after “transitional” insert “and savings”— [Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister).]

Mr Nesbitt: The Committee has brought amendment No 12 in conjunction with amendment No 283, which ensures that the definition of “public appointment” in the Commissioner for Public Appointments (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 will not be affected by the repeal of the Commissioner for Complaints (Northern Ireland) Order 1996. The Commissioner for Public Appointments Order refers to the schedule to the Commissioner for Complaints Order. The effect is to save the schedule for the purposes of the public appointments legislation. As a result, it will be appropriate that the title to schedule 2 indicates that it includes savings provisions. Amendment No 12 changes the reference to the title of schedule 2, which appears in clause 4, to refer to “savings”.

The Assembly agreed OFMDFM Committee amendments at Consideration Stage to remove references to “clinical judgement” in the context of health and social care so that the Bill would simply refer to “professional judgement”, which will encompass “clinical judgement”. Amendments Nos 21, 171 and 173 will therefore deal with three surviving references to “clinical”, which can now be removed.

Amendment No 28 gives effect to a change recommended by the Examiner of Statutory Rules. It provides that the order-making power in clause 12 to amend schedule 3, which is the list of authorities within the NIPSO’s remit, will lie, as is normal, with the Department and not with the Minister, or, in this case, with the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, rather than with the two Ministers acting jointly.

Amendment No 43 makes a similar change to clause 19 in respect of the order-making powers to update schedule 4. Amendment No 44 to clause 19 requires that OFMDFM consult the NIPSO and any other person OFMDFM thinks appropriate before making such an order. Amendment No 52 makes a similar change to clause 22, which deals with schedule 5 — the schedule of excluded matters.

Amendment No 29 deals with clause 12(3), which places some limitations on the types of bodies that can be added to schedule 3 by OFMDFM order. One of the types of bodies that could be added was a Northern Ireland Department. This was needed when schedule 3 listed individual Departments by name. However, it now refers to them generically as “a Northern Ireland department”. So, whatever name changes may ensue, any Northern Ireland Department will automatically be in the schedule of listed authorities, and clause 12(3)(a) is therefore no longer needed.

Amendments Nos 35 and 36 touch on clause 16 and update wording in light of changes to health legislation. Thus, references to “general medical services” and “personal medical services” will become “primary medical services”. Amendment No 286 removes an out-of-date reference to health legislation in schedule 5 — the schedule of excluded matters.

Amendments Nos 38 and 40 touch on clause 18. Amendment No 38 removes the “the” in front of University of Ulster, and amendment No 40 makes it clear that students enrolled in courses provided by the universities are covered.

Amendment No 87 is to clause 33, which deals with obstruction and contempt of the NIPSO or any member of the NIPSO’s staff. This amendment extends clause 33 to encompass any other person authorised by the NIPSO under paragraph 14(2) of schedule 1 and therefore not just the NIPSO’s staff.

Amendment No 106 amends clause 38 to make explicit that the obligation for a listed authority to comply with a model of complaints-handling procedure — a model CHP — applies where the NIPSO has specified a listed authority to which a model CHP is relevant and has notified that authority accordingly.

Amendment No 139, tabled by Mr Lunn and Mr Maginness, has been considered by the OFMDFM Committee, which cannot support it. The amendment would remove entirely the power in clause 46 of the Bill for the NIPSO to lay before the Assembly a special report when injustice has been sustained by a person aggrieved and that injustice has not been, nor will be, remedied. The power for an ombudsman to make a special report to the legislature in such circumstances is common to all the UK ombudsmen. It would seem very strange, to say the least, if the Assembly were to establish an ombudsman with very effective powers of investigation yet, when the ombudsman finds that a person has suffered injustice that has not and will not be remedied, the ombudsman will be stripped of the power to lay a special report before the Assembly. Surely, the Assembly must be informed.

Particular concerns were raised by the British Medical Association and others during the Ad Hoc Committee’s scrutiny of the Bill about the effect that the power might have on GPs and others. The OFMDFM Committee sought advice on those concerns, and we are confident that the power can be used appropriately by the NIPSO and in a way that is compatible with the convention rights of the listed authorities that may be affected. The OFMDFM Committee has also considered special reports that were issued by the Parliamentary and Health Service Ombudsman in England, which named a GP and a dentist. Some of the reports issued by the Scottish Public Services Ombudsman have, similarly, named individuals, and the world is still turning on its axis. Therefore, the OFMDFM Committee cannot support the amendment.

Amendment No 151 deals with clause 48 of the Bill, which affords protection from actions for defamation to facilitate the investigation of and reporting on complaints made by a person aggrieved. The amendment will ensure that the absolute privilege that is provided to the person aggrieved is limited to statements that are made in the course of communication with the ombudsman.

Amendment Nos 156 and 157 clarify that the information in question in clause 49(1)(b) and clause 49(1)(c) is information that is obtained by the ombudsman.

Amendment Nos 182, 183 and 184 touch on clause 64 of the Bill, which deals with commencement. The main purpose is to ensure that those provisions of the Bill that were to commence one month after Royal Assent will now commence on the day after Royal Assent and that all the necessary preparatory steps can be taken in the run-up to commencement of the substantive complaints and investigations provisions on 1 April 2016.

Amendments Nos 185, 186, 314, 316, 318 and 324 amend provisions where the Bill refers to grant-aided schools in line with the changes that were made at Consideration Stage; in other words, to refer to “the board of governors of” grant-aided schools.

Amendment Nos 208 and 237 remove references to the Northern Ireland Judicial Appointments Ombudsman being appointed, as there is no appointment as such. Rather, the person who is appointed as the NIPSO will automatically become the NIJAQ.

Members may recall that references to “appointed day” were changed at Consideration Stage to “transfer day”. However, one reference to “appointed day” survived and amendment No 262 deals with that omission.

Amendment Nos 278 and 279 make technical changes to paragraphs 9 and 10 of schedule 2.

Amendment No 280 will substitute paragraph 10(2) of schedule 2 to make transitional provision to avoid a person aggrieved being disadvantaged as a result of the change from a 12-month time limit for bringing a complaint to a six-month time limit.

Amendment Nos 284 and 285 remove some unnecessary references to committees in the list of authorities in schedule 3.

Amendment Nos 288 and 289 make technical changes to schedule 5.

Amendment Nos 294, 295 and 296 deal with schedule 6 to the Bill and amend provisions of schedule 3A to the Justice

(Northern Ireland) Act 2002, which deal with reporting by the Judicial Appointments Ombudsman or NIJAO.

The Bill provides that the NIJAO is to lay an annual report before the Assembly. The effect of the amendments is to simplify the existing provision by the removal of the power to direct the NIJAO to deal with a matter in his or her annual report.

Amendment No 298 amends schedule 7 to the Bill, which deals with amendments to Part 9 of the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 2014. That provides for the investigation of complaints of breaches of the local government code of conduct. The power of the NIPSO under clause 31 to obtain information, documents and so on is borrowed by the Local Government Act for investigations under the local government code of conduct, with some qualifications, as set out in schedule 7. However, clause 31(5) refers to provisions in clause 32, and clause 32 does not apply to code of conduct investigations. The amendment makes it clear that clause 31(5) applies as if the references to clause 32 had no effect.

Amendment Nos 326 and 327 are to schedule 9 to the Bill, which deals with repeals. Amendment No 326 updates the repeals to the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2002 in light of changes in respect of the Judicial Appointments Ombudsman. Finally, amendment No 327 removes a repeal provision that is no longer necessary.

Lord Morrow: The Committee did not have sight of the amendments in this group prior to the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny and has, therefore, not taken a view on them. The Committee did, however, consider an issue that relates to amendment No 139 in the names of Mr Lunn and Mr Maginness, so I will briefly set out the Committee's position.

Amendment No 139 would have the effect of removing the ombudsman's power to lay a special report before the Assembly when an injustice has been sustained by a person aggrieved, and the injustice has not or will not be remedied or adequately remedied. The Committee considered that power and noted evidence that welcomed the provisions in what is now clause 46 as a means of strengthening the office of the ombudsman. Such evidence was received from the International Ombudsman Institute, the Law Society of Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission. However, the Committee also noted the concerns of the Medical Defence Union and the British Medical Association that such a power could be construed as coercive and have significant reputational impact — for example, for a general practitioner.

The Committee gave careful consideration to those concerns. It noted that the Ombudsman (Northern Ireland) Order 1996 already provides that the ombudsman may lay a special report before the Assembly when an injustice has been sustained by a person as a result of maladministration, and that injustice has not been or will not be remedied.

The Committee also noted that the ombudsman, as a public authority, will be required by section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 to act in a manner that is compatible with rights under the European Convention on Human Rights, including article 6 on the right to a fair hearing and article 8 on the right to a private and family life, and to ensure that it discharges its functions in a manner that is procedurally fair. However, despite that, the Committee expressed concerns that that power could be construed as coercive and that such a report had the potential to have a detrimental impact on a medical practitioner. The Committee, therefore, recommended that the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, as sponsor of the Bill, should satisfy itself that there are proper safeguards and procedural fairness before any such power is exercised. However, having made that recommendation, the Committee was content with what is now clause 46.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I have just a few words on this group of amendments. The Chairperson has dealt with amendment Nos 21, 171 and 173. For the record, as a party grouping, we were satisfied that taking out the word "clinical" was dealt with in previous discussions, but it has been replaced by "professional", so it is a consequential change necessitated by previous discussions. We are satisfied that the ability of the ombudsman to do his or her job in the context of any professional issues that are raised is dealt with adequately in the Bill. As has been pointed out, our view is that amendment No 139 is completely superfluous to requirements, as it is dealt with elsewhere.

1.15 pm

Mr A Maginness: I will deal specifically with amendment No 139, which Members who spoke previously have focused on. First, under article 19 of the Commissioner for Complaints (Northern Ireland) Order 1996, there is a provision in relation to reports to the Assembly. The Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee referred to that. It states:

"The Commissioner shall annually lay before the Assembly a general report on the performance of his functions under this Order and may from time to time lay such other reports before the Assembly as he thinks fit."

That may or may not include a special report. However, I do not believe that that particular article makes provision for a special report. We all accept that the annual report is the ordinary annual report that any public body would make to the Assembly. However, a special report to the Assembly is, I suppose, in common parlance, a name or shame type of report. In other words, a body or an individual, which is my concern here, may be named or shamed in that report. I believe that to be a very sensitive function, if it is to be carried out at all, for any ombudsman, and something that we have to look at closely in the round and scrutinise. We cannot just give blanket permission to an ombudsman to make a special report that could — as the Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee very fairly pointed out — have an adverse reputational impact. In other words, the person who is reported could well suffer quite significant reputational or professional damage. That is particularly so if a person is living in a small community such as a village or a small town. The Assembly must consider that very carefully today, because we must realise what power we are giving the ombudsman.

I know that the provision that we are looking at today, "Reports to the Assembly", is framed differently. Clause 46(2) states:

"If, after conducting an investigation (other than one under section 8)"

— I have no problem with the one under section 8 —

“it appears to the Ombudsman that ... an injustice has been sustained by a person aggrieved, and ... the injustice has not been, or will not be, remedied or adequately remedied”, the ombudsman may lay a special report before the Assembly.

I want to look at that particular subclause because, given the power that the Ombudsman's Office has, I am not convinced that there could be such an injustice that will not be adequately remedied. From reading the Bill, I understand that if a complaint is made against an individual — I refer particularly to medical practitioners — and a settlement is proposed by the ombudsman, who also makes certain recommendations, the person complained against does not have to accept those recommendations. However, in normal circumstances, the person complained about does accept the recommendations and a settlement is entered into — normally an apology, and maybe a sum of money.

In circumstances where the person complained against rejects that and says, “No. I am not going to do that, because I do not think that I have been found to be reprehensible”, the complainant can go to the County Court. If I am wrong about that, let someone tell me. Previously, individual medical practitioners could not be brought to the County Court, but I believe that, under this Bill, they can be. If that is the case, where is the lack of remedy in relation to somebody whose complaint has been upheld? Why can that person not go to the County Court and get the necessary remedy? My point is that clause 46(2)(b) states:

“the injustice has not been, or will not be, remedied or adequately remedied”.

I cannot understand the sense of that paragraph.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank Mr Maginness for giving way. I want to deal with the logic of the argument. The whole idea of having an ombudsman or ombudsman is to avoid legal routes and stay out of the County Court, the High Court, the courts and the criminal justice system. It is an alternative procedure for settling disputes.

As Mr Maginness rightly says, this is a very sensitive function to be exercised by the NIPSO. He argues that blanket permission should not be given to the NIPSO to publish special reports. He is correct. In fact, and he quoted the relevant passage, there is no such thing as blanket permission. Rather, the NIPSO can lay a special report only if two criteria are met: first, he must be satisfied that an injustice has been sustained by the aggrieved person; and, secondly, he must be convinced that the injustice has not been, and will not be, adequately remedied by the person responsible for the individual being aggrieved. Only under those circumstances can he lay a special report.

Mr Maginness is quite right to highlight the reputational damage that could accrue to the individual GP, dentist or whomever is the subject of the special report. However, I ask Mr Maginness to recognise that it cuts both ways. If the NIPSO starts to lay special reports that end up causing reputational damage to his office, this body will not be slow, nor will the County Courts, to highlight the fact that the NIPSO is doing so without due care and consideration. That would cause massive reputational damage to the NIPSO.

Mr A Maginness: Yes, and I take the latter point that you made. With regard to the current ombudsman, there is no suggestion that there would be anything other than a proper and thorough report that was fairly and properly carried out. I pay tribute to the current holder of the office because he has carried out a very good job that we should all applaud. However, we are making law. We are not giving a character reference for any individual or body. We have to make law that meets the concerns of everybody, and we have to strike a balance. As I understand it, article 19 allows for a report to the Assembly under the 1996 Order. This, however, is a new element: it reflects article 19, but it is a new element and means a special report. I will come to that in a minute.

I want to go back to the point that you made about injustice. Yes, injustice is the first leg of this aspect; the second leg is that that injustice has not been adequately remedied. I go back to the original point that a person can go to court and receive the proper relief that that person deserves in the court, whether it be money, an apology or whatever the terms that are concerned. That is an important feature. It is a unique feature of the ombudsman's office here in Northern Ireland; that power does not exist elsewhere. That power is there for a specific reason. If a settlement does not come into being, if it is not accepted by the person complained about, the complainant can go to the County Court and get a remedy. Whenever the person goes to the County Court, you do not have to rehearse all the evidence that has been derived in the case. The evidence of the ombudsman is sufficient to establish the claim in the County Court. You are effectively talking about a monetary element that the court can determine so that it is just and right in all circumstances.

The point that I make is that the power that we have here as far as the County Court is concerned is unique and is also very easy to access. The County Court is not like the High Court; you just go to the County Court, and the hearing takes place. It is a fairly straightforward process. On the point that I made about article 19, it seems to me that, under clause 46, this is in fact a new power. I do not understand why this new power is being introduced.

Mr Speaker: Thank you. I call — sorry.

Mr Nesbitt: I think that the Member has given way rather than completed his —

Mr A Maginness: Yes, I have given way.

Mr Nesbitt: I have a couple of follow-up points. First, we are trying to put a NIPSO in place as an alternative to the law courts. If a GP, or whoever, is subject to a special report, the aggrieved person can go to the County Court, but it is at their own expense and risk. We are trying to avoid that; we are trying to offer an alternative process through the NIPSO. When the Committee considered the proposed amendment from Mr Lunn and Mr Maginness, we were conscious that the NIPSO will have to operate with due consideration for convention rights. There will have to be a sturdy and robust consideration of whether it is proper for the NIPSO to bring forward a special report. There are safeguards before publication. There is then the consideration of the reputational risk that the NIPSO is bringing upon themselves should they go down this extraordinary route.

My final point is that recourse to the County Court is held by the current Commissioner for Complaints rather than by the ombudsman. With the Bill, we were trying to bring together the two offices to offer something much more modern and easily understood by the public. The Committee also took a policy decision that, where there is a difference in the powers of the ombudsman and the Commissioner for Complaints, we would always level up in favour of the consumer, the voter, the electorate or the citizen.

Mr A Maginness: I accept the point that you are making. The Bill is an attempt to do that. All that I am saying is that I think that, in this instance, we are going too far in relation to special reports. As far as the person going to the County Court is concerned, they go, as far as I can see, at no risk whatsoever in legal terms. It may have a cost risk, but I cannot see how any order of costs would be given against the person because their case will be successful in any event. So I do not really regard that as issue.

Let us go to the point that Mr Nesbitt made in his submission as Chair of the OFMDFM Committee.

Articles 6 and 8 of the European Convention are involved in this. Article 6, the right to a fair trial, is engaged. It is not a trial in the sense that you go to court and are in front of a judge and jury, and so forth; it is a trial in the sense that your actions are being arbitrated upon. Therefore, it is very important, when we give these sorts of powers, that we look at them very carefully and seek to protect article 6 rights, as well as article 8 rights, the right to a private life, a family and so forth. All those things need to be protected. It is insufficient for us, as an Assembly, to say, "Well, we'll leave it up to somebody else to do this". That is, effectively, what we are doing. There is nothing in the Bill, in relation to this provision, that provides adequate safeguards. If there were adequate safeguards in the Bill, there might be no need to remove this, but that is an additional point.

1.30 pm

To be fair to the current ombudsman and his office, they have said that the special reports could be anonymised and that that would protect the identity of the individual involved. We live in a very, very small and close-knit society, and it does not take very much for an individual to be clearly identified, even if the name or names of some individuals are not disclosed. So, despite anonymisation, there is still a problem. I accept the bona fides of the current ombudsman when he says that he assumes that his office would continue to view this in the same manner. I have no doubt about that; but he cannot vouch for somebody else who will be his successor.

As Lord Morrow pointed out, this is, in effect, coercive, or could be coercive, but not in all circumstances; the potential is there. We have to protect against that. I simply say to the Assembly that there are not sufficient safeguards here to protect the individual, and we risk the creation of an adverse impact on somebody's professional or reputational standing. I do not think that that is good enough for us as an Assembly. We should be good legislators; we should scrutinise things carefully, and we should be protective. I am very jealous and protective of the rights of complainants. Their rights should be protected.

However, I do not see how this provision advances the rights of any complainant when they have an alternative and sufficient remedy — a remedy that does not exist in any other jurisdiction within these islands. That is why I and Mr Lunn, who also served on the Ad Hoc Committee, have brought this amendment. We know that we are up against it; nonetheless, we think that the merits of the amendment are on our side. We hope that the Assembly will reasonably and rationally consider what we say, because we believe that the amendment is important in protecting individual practitioners. We are not protecting the big trusts and big public organisations. They are not protected, but the individual should be protected. Thank you.

Mr Lunn: I will try not to repeat everything that Mr Maginness said, but it would probably make for another good speech. I must say that I agree with Lord Morrow that the Ad Hoc Committee, certainly initially, did have a certain amount of sympathy for this particular proposed amendment. As a Committee, I am not so sure that we agreed not to run with an amendment. We kind of agreed that the primary Committee on this would be the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and the deputy First Minister, and we tacitly accepted what its attitude would be. My problem with it and the reason why I pushed it at the Ad Hoc Committee and since is, frankly, this: what is the point of clause 46(2)? Mr Maginness mentioned naming and shaming. That is descriptive language, but it is perhaps not far off the mark here.

In a way, clause 46 relates to another amendment that we will probably come to in the next group. If I may, I will just refer obliquely to it. It is amendment No 75 on representation at the ombudsman's hearing. You could have a situation — we are really speaking about the medical profession — where a doctor is brought before the ombudsman because of a complaint. At the moment, it is at the ombudsman's discretion whether he is allowed to have legal representation or not. That is a discussion for another day. It may well be that you will have an ombudsman's hearing involving a complaint against a general practitioner, doctor or dentist where there has not been legal representation. As Mr Maginness, rightly, says, there are legal remedies if the injustice is not or will not be remedied or adequately remedied in the opinion of the ombudsman. The complainant has the option, as he would have had in the first place, to go to the County Court and seek redress, bearing in mind that the ombudsman's decision is a recommendation, not a ruling or an award.

I am more concerned about the situation around whom I call "the defendant" in these situations — the doctor who is complained against — and his rights. I probably keep on saying "he", but I mean he or she. I do not think that Mr Maginness mentioned it, but the redress that that doctor would have is that they can seek judicial review of the ombudsman's decision. On either side of the discussion, legal redress is already available. There is actually a judicial review pending on quite a serious case. I think that it is JR 55 if anybody wants to keep track of it. It is not coming up until March 2016. It involves a considerable sum of money and the potential for considerable reputational damage, but the person who has been complained against feels strongly enough to take it to judicial review.

I agree with some of the things that Mr Nesbitt said. The idea here is not to drive people into court but to keep people out of court. That is fair enough; it is what the ombudsman's procedure is for. The ombudsman has the ability and power to make a recommendation for an amount, which I believe is unlimited at the moment. His procedure may not be a court in the legal sense of the word, but it has the status of a court, and it certainly has the ability to do as much damage. It could potentially damage the reputation of a defendant as severely as a court. I do not mean that in a disrespectful way to the present ombudsman, who I think has done a terrific job in his tenure.

Clause 46, first of all, states that:

"The Ombudsperson must lay before the Assembly annually a general report".

Nobody is arguing with that. We do not have a problem with investigations under section 8, which, for the uninitiated, are investigations that the ombudsman has brought on his own initiative. Nobody has referred to subsection (4) of clause 46, which states that:

"The Ombudsperson may lay before the Assembly such other reports on the exercise of the Ombudsperson's functions as the Ombudsperson thinks fit."

That is pretty wide.

I go back to subsection (2), which is the one that we would like to see removed. The effect of it would be that, if the ombudsman thinks that redress is not being provided or is not likely to be provided, he can do a special report to the Assembly and whether it is anonymised, redacted or otherwise it does not make a lot of difference. Mr Maginness is right; in the small country we live in, it is difficult to conceal identities. The effect would be that the report, I believe, in the case of a medical situation, would come to the Health Committee. What on earth is the Health Committee supposed to do with such a report? I will give way to anybody who wants to tell me. All the Committee can do is note the report; it cannot enforce it. It can comment on it, but you would like to think that, in the case of potential reputational damage, it might not wish to comment on the report. The fact is that the action of the ombudsman passing a special report, only on a very special occasion, greatly adds to the weight and effect of the action of having done it. The report goes to the Health Committee, and what is it supposed to do?

The only thing that such an action has the potential to do is to put pressure on the person who was complained against to settle, even though they do not feel that the ombudsman's decision was correct. I am thinking more of the ombudsman, but you could have a situation where a defendant has decided to go to judicial review and, at the same time, perhaps, the ombudsman is preparing a special report. I do not think that there is any need for this. I take note of the fact that other jurisdictions seem to see it differently, but frankly, Mr Speaker, it would not be the first time that we had gone against the practice of other jurisdictions; in fact, we make quite a habit of it here. It is not so important from that point of view.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank Mr Lunn for giving way. I just want to make a couple of points, beginning with his last assertion. He has acknowledged that, if we were to remove the subsection, we would be out of step with ombudsmen in adjacent jurisdictions. Is he aware of any pressure coming in any of those jurisdictions to remove the ability of the other ombudsmen to make special reports? The OFMDFM Committee is not aware of any such pressure.

Perhaps Mr Lunn can tell us whether there would be an enhanced or diminished degree of reputational damage if the aggrieved person were to go to the County Court and prevail over the GP, dentist or whomever they have a grievance against, as opposed to that person being named in a special report to the House. It seems to me that, if you go to a County Court and you lose, the reputational damage will be absolutely massive together with, potentially, some punitive costs.

Finally, Mr Lunn referred to JR 55, which the Committee has considered on a number of occasions. We do not know the outcome as yet, but we know that it is being judged against a different law, so there will be no implications from JR 55 if the NIPSO Bill becomes law.

Mr Lunn: I thank Mr Nesbitt for that. As far as the comparison with somebody going to the County Court is concerned, let us put it the other way round. If somebody wants to make a complaint against a doctor, they can do it through the County Court. They do not need to go through the ombudsman. If they go to the ombudsman and the complainant feels aggrieved that the recommended redress has not been provided, obviously they can go to the County Court. Anybody who goes to the County Court in this country would be well aware that they have no protection from publicity or reputational damage. That would be a decision for the doctor, GP, dentist or whomever to make. They would have to make the decision whether the ombudsman was involved or not.

I do not see the point of this step — this link in the chain — where the ombudsman can effectively put pressure on a defendant to settle rather than run the risk of going to the County Court. It does not seem necessary. You are leaning forward, Mr Maginness.

1.45 pm

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Member for giving way. Mr Nesbitt raised a point about other jurisdictions that have the power to make a special report, but those jurisdictions do not have the power that currently resides with the ombudsman in our legislation. If the person or body complained about does not settle, the complainant can go to the County Court. No other jurisdiction has that power, and that is a very good reason to make us an exception.

Mr Lunn: I thank Mr Maginness for that: it probably illustrates why he is a barrister and I am not. The point is well made. I will go back to it, but I will not keep talking for the sake of it. I would rather listen to people justify why the clause has to be included than have us try to justify why it should be excluded. The weight of argument and the weight of legal reasoning are on our side. The weight of opinion on the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister and perhaps, eventually, the Ad Hoc Committee is that the subsection is in some way harmless, but I would like to think that we have demonstrated that it has the potential to be far from harmless. I keep going back to the point that there is no need for it. Somebody justify to me why it needs to be in there, rather than the other way around.

I was going to stop, but I will give way to you.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank Mr Lunn. I will have one more go at this: the rationale behind having a Public Services Ombudsman is that we are providing an alternative to the courts. You have conceded that the person who is complained about has no protection from adverse publicity if they end up in the County Court. We are trying to offer an alternative to that, and we feel that there is a value in the person complained about, where the ombudsman says that they are responsible for an injustice and have not remedied and will not remedy that injustice, having the prospect of knowing that they could be named in a special report.

Mr Lunn: In 95 cases out of 100, the clause will not have to be invoked, and they are not all medical situations. I would like to think that it will never have to be used. However, there are bound to be situations in which a defending doctor feels aggrieved about the outcome of an ombudsman's investigation and perhaps about the size of the award or the amount of redress, which, as somebody already said, could extend from a handshake and an apology to a five-figure sum of money changing hands.

As I started off by saying, in the legislation as it is framed, there might not have been an opportunity for legal representation. I do not want to talk about another clause when Members should be talking about this one, but, that having been said, the ombudsman currently has the discretion to allow for legal representation. Halfway through his own process, he might decide that that is necessary, by which time the defendant might have done himself some disservice with the outcome, which he might not have done had he had legal advice. The two things are linked, if you do not mind me linking them publicly.

I cannot think of much else to say. I really believe that this is an unnecessary clause in otherwise good legislation. I have no quarrel with any other amendment that I am aware of, except perhaps amendment No 75, which we will come to. I hope that the House will think about clause 46, and, if anyone else is going to speak to it, I would like to hear their justification for including it.

Mr Lyttle (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): The Chair of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister has set out clearly the Committee amendments. They are largely technical in nature and will improve definitions and processes that will be created by the Bill. He also set out clearly the Committee's position with regard to amendment No 139. I therefore commend the Committee for OFMDFM's positions on the amendments to the Assembly.

Mr Speaker: Thank you. That was short and sweet.

Amendment No 12 agreed to.

Mr Speaker: Amendment Nos 13 to 20 have already been debated. By leave of the Assembly, I will group the amendments for the Question.

Clause 5 (Power to investigate complaints made by a person aggrieved)

Oral Answers to Questions

Education

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Questions 2, 4 and 6 have been withdrawn.

Educational Underachievement

1. Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Education to outline the measures he has taken, and plans to take, to address educational underachievement in working-class communities. (AQO 9202/11-16)

Mr O’Dowd (The Minister of Education): I am determined to take action to break the link between social disadvantage and educational underachievement wherever it exists. I have the correct policies in place, and those are being implemented with renewed vigour. I have provided additional resources to schools serving those most at risk of underachieving. Funded programmes have been implemented to improve literacy and numeracy outcomes. I have also provided funding to support programmes aimed at improving school/community links. The Education Works programme highlights the vital role that parents can play in helping their child to do well at school and improve their life chances.

I am encouraged when I see communities where formal education has not traditionally been prized now recognising that education is the path to success in the future. Other programmes impacting positively on addressing educational inequalities and underachievement include the revised SEN and inclusion framework; the full implementation of the entitlement framework; Sure Start; the early years fund; and the Achieving Belfast and Achieving Derry-Bright Futures programmes. However, while some schools persist in the use of academic selection, we will be unable to eradicate social division. The political proponents of social and academic selection must start accepting responsibility for all its outcomes, especially for working-class children. The challenge of tackling inequalities, be they educational, health or economic, is one that we all face, and success will depend on all stakeholders working together to achieve greater equality in society.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Minister for his answer. I also thank the Minister for the interest he has taken in education in the greater Shankill and north Belfast area.

The Minister will be aware of the children and young people’s zone in greater Shankill. He will also be aware of the recent report by the Equality Commission that presented inequalities in education based on data from 2011-12. Recently, my colleagues and I met Alan Logan and Emlyn Wright from the two Model Schools. Will the Minister join with me in congratulating the principals of those schools, and of Hazelwood College in north Belfast, on the leadership that they are giving? Is the Minister prepared to give greater resources for the retention of the extended schools programme, which is so hugely needed in constituencies like North Belfast, inner East Belfast, South Belfast and West Belfast?

Mr O'Dowd: I have no difficulty in acknowledging the hard work of the principals in the schools that you mentioned. It is clear when you see connections between schools and communities that the educational well-being of children in the area improves. There are many good examples of that. I have significantly increased funding to schools in areas of social deprivation over the past year. It will take a while for that money to be managed in a way that shows the positive outcomes for children that we want to see; I am not expecting an immediate return on it. That will take a number of years, and schools, the Department and the Education Authority are working together to plan towards that.

I have done my best in difficult budgetary times to protect the extended schools budget. We face another difficult budget scenario for 2016-17 and beyond, but, as long as I am in post, I can assure you that I will do my utmost to protect the extended schools budget.

Mr Hazzard: I thank the Minister for his answers thus far. I welcome the original questioner's acceptance of the effect of targeting social need in areas such as the Shankill, but remind the questioner that he voted against changes to the common funding system and that it is important to show leadership. So I ask the Minister: how is it now important to show leadership, especially when it comes to academic selection, in areas such as the Shankill?

Mr O'Dowd: As I said, if you support academic selection, you have to support all outcomes of academic selection. The evidence shows clearly that academic selection has a detrimental impact on young people from socially deprived areas. I do not know what the positive outcomes are, but people tell me that there are positive outcomes. If you support those, you also have to acknowledge that the negative outcomes from academic selection also exist. There is a large evidence base to show the detrimental impact that it has.

The Shankill was mentioned by the original questioner. In fairness, the community sector and community organisations in the Shankill have taken ownership of education in the area. I was at a report launch the other night in west Belfast where the community and schools have been working together. The very impressive results coming out of post-primary schools there are all down to cooperation, working in partnership, identifying each other's strengths and weaknesses and being prepared to work together. Leadership is vital in the school and classroom, as well as in the community and in the political forum, to ensuring the best outcomes for young people.

Mr Rogers: I thank the Minister for his answers thus far. What professional opportunities are there for our teachers to upskill in literacy and numeracy and be made aware of the good practice that is out there? My concern is that many of the good projects, for example, Achieving Belfast and Achieving Derry, are not disseminated well enough.

Mr O'Dowd: Numeracy and literacy are core skills in teaching and in our education system. I acknowledge the need for continuing professional development in our teaching workforce, but it should be across a wide range of areas. Core skills should be updated, but they should be there from the very start. Under the Delivering Social Change programme, we brought newly qualified teachers into schools as an additional resource, and they were used directly as a numeracy and literacy support or to allow a more experienced or qualified teacher to deal with numeracy and literacy. We learned lessons from that, and, through the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI), those experiences are being shared to ensure that best practice is delivered across schools.

As resources become more and more stringent, we will have to reach the point of using our main resource as the key lever to eradicate educational underachievement and numeracy and literacy problems, rather than seeking out schemes or additional funds. We will have to start using our core funding more strategically and effectively to ensure that we get a return on it.

Mr Lyttle: Does the Minister agree that education, health, community and business sector partnerships are key to improving educational outcomes? Can he give to the EastSide learning partnerships and learning framework the same positive support as he has given to the Full Service community network in north and west Belfast?

Mr O'Dowd: EastSide is another positive development not only in community infrastructure but in educational output. I have attended a number of events and have met the group. I am impressed by its work and involvement in education in the community. A lot of good work is going on out there. It is worth noting that, from 2007, the percentage of young people leaving school with five good GCSEs has risen by almost 10%, so the policies, the commitment and the work are beginning to pay off for our young people. The percentage of young people on free school meals leaving schools with five or more good GCSEs has risen by almost 8% in the same time frame. We have a lot of work to do there, but the graph is moving in the right direction, and there are many different aspects to why that is the case.

Markethill High School, Armagh

3. Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Education for an update on plans for a new build for Markethill High School, Armagh. (AQO 9204/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: A new build for Markethill High School was considered for my June 2014 capital investment announcement. Unfortunately, the proposed project did not pass one of a number of gateway checks, on the basis that the school's enrolment was below the sustainable schools threshold. Should there be a further announcement for either the major capital or school enhancement programmes, the school will have the opportunity to reapply for consideration at that time.

Mr Irwin: I thank the Minister for his response. He said that the enrolment was not high enough. Markethill High School is at its absolute maximum in relation to the number of pupils that it accepts. Does the Minister accept that Markethill High School has consistently delivered some of the best results anywhere in Northern Ireland?

Mr O'Dowd: Markethill and the Armagh city area require an area planning solution to ensure that we know exactly the make-up of the school estate from this point forward. That will allow me as Minister, or my successors, to invest in the Armagh and Markethill area. At the moment, we do not have an area plan for the secondary/post-primary sector, and I encourage everyone involved to come to a conclusion on the discussions around that.

Yes, I do congratulate the school on its excellent exam results.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. What projects are in the major capital programme in the Newry and Armagh area?

Mr O'Dowd: I thank the Member for his question. There are several programmes of spend in the Newry and Armagh area. The following schools are benefiting from the school enhancement programme: St Patrick's Grammar School Armagh, which is on site; Our Lady's Grammar School, Newry; Rathore School, Newry; and Armstrong Primary School, Armagh — the tender has been awarded. Two of the major projects are on site; one is at feasibility stage, and one is at business case stage. Also benefiting are St Joseph's Convent Primary School, Newry; St Clare's Abbey Primary School; St Colman's Abbey Primary School, Newry; St Joseph and St James Primary School, Poyntzpass; and St Joseph's High School, Crossmaglen. There is an estimated value of £44 million of capital investment in the Newry and Armagh constituency, on site now or in the foreseeable future.

Mr Kennedy: I thank the Minister for his earlier, albeit somewhat disappointing, answers. I declare an interest in that my wife is employed at Markethill High School. Does the Minister accept that his news to the Assembly today will be greeted with great disappointment, given that Markethill High School is a very well-regarded and high-achieving school in the mid-Armagh area? Can he look at the criteria again? The school estate at Markethill is no longer in a fit and proper condition to educate the pupils who are already there.

Mr O'Dowd: I thank the Member for his question. I understand that my statement today will come as a disappointment to Markethill High School, although not, I think, as a surprise, because they were aware of the situation.

There are many schools in our schools estate that require significant investment or a complete rebuild. The way that we have been moving forward over the last number of years is through the area-planning process to ensure that when we invest significant public funds in the schools estate we can be confident that a school is situated in the right area — I am not suggesting that Markethill High School is not, but I am giving a broad answer, rather than one specifically about Markethill or Armagh city — and that we know the numbers that the school will be catering for into the future. That has to be based on an area-planning solution.

As the Member, and other Members of the constituency, is aware, there has been an ongoing stop-start discussion on the future of education in that region. I encourage political representatives from all political parties to use their influence to ensure that those discussions come to a conclusion and that the needs of all the young people in that area are met. It will allow this Minister, and future Ministers, to invest in the area.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht an fhreagra a thug sé dúinn ar an cheist áirithe seo. Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I thank the Minister for his answer. He referred to area-based planning in relation to Markethill High School, but does the Minister agree that area-based planning in the south Armagh area has been completed and that there is good cooperation between St Paul's High School, Newtownhamilton High School and St Joseph's High School, Crossmaglen? Can he also give an indication of the progress on bringing forward a new build for St Joseph's, Crossmaglen?

Mr O'Dowd: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Chomhalta as a cheist. I thank the Member for his question. I have already announced a new build for St Joseph's High School in Crossmaglen. You pointed out why I could make such an announcement: area planning has progressed in the south Armagh area, and there has been engagement between the various schools. As we know what size of schools estate we need, we can invest in it. My announcement on St Joseph's stands. Preparatory work for the new build is moving forward.

Levels of Progression: Industrial Action

5. Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Education to outline the progress made to resolve an industrial action over levels of progression in schools. (AQO 9206/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Over the last number of weeks, I have met the NITC — the Teaching Council — representatives on three occasions. I am encouraged to report a shared acknowledgement that teacher judgement is the best means of determining and reporting on a child's progress, and a growing acceptance that the application of standards through moderation is intended to assist teachers to use the levels of progression in the classroom with confidence. I have listened to the views and concerns of the NITC, and they have listened to mine. More importantly, I have demonstrated that I am prepared to act to address them.

2.15 pm

With that in mind, and given our common ground, it is my view that there can now be no possible justification for the continued industrial action in that area. Therefore, on 22 October I wrote to the Teaching Council, which represents all the unions, to set out the significant steps I am prepared to take on the end of key stage assessment arrangements from 2015-16, recognising that the assessment arrangements must evolve as they embed. In return, I requested that the NITC agree to bring the current industrial action in relation assessment to an end, which will allow us to move forward together.

I am encouraged to note that the National Association of Schoolmasters Union of Women Teachers (NASUWT) has now suspended its industrial action in relation to statutory assessment. I understand that the Irish National Teachers' Organisation (INTO) and the Ulster Teachers' Union (UTU) have written to schools that were successful in the first call for applications for the shared education signature project to advise that they can now comply with the assessment process. I encourage those teaching unions that are still on industrial action to give the matter their urgent attention.

Mr McMullan: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for his answers. Will he outline which unions, if any, have responded to his proposals?

Mr O'Dowd: The unions that have responded in a positive manner are the NASUWT, the INTO and the UTU. The Association of Teachers and Lecturers (ATL) has advised me that it will continue with its industrial action, and the National Association of Head Teachers (NAHT) was not involved in that specific industrial action.

We have made progress. If other unions follow the examples of these unions thus far, it will give us space to continue discussions. It will also allow the assessments to begin. As I have said repeatedly in my discussions with the unions, we need to allow the process to begin. The process will evolve over a period of time to ensure that we achieve the best education possible for our young people and have the correct way of recording and using data for that purpose. That is what we all want.

Mr Weir: Given that, at the heart of it, there seems to be a lack of confidence in levels of progression as a means of assessment; when the Minister talks about an evolving situation, is one of the bits of evolution that has to occur an examination of alternative means of assessment as we move forward?

Mr O'Dowd: I am not keen to examine alternative means of assessment when we have not used the current assessment processes that are in place. I have been able to deal with the vast majority of genuine concerns that have been raised by the unions about levels of progression.

As I said to Mr McMullan, for the process to evolve it has to begin. I welcome the fact that a number of unions are suspending their industrial action. We will let it begin, discussions between my Department and the unions will continue, and we will achieve an assessment process that meets the needs, first and foremost, of our young people, and of our education system, our teachers, our Department of Education and all other bodies.

I was in Wales and Scotland recently and had the opportunity to discuss various forms of assessment with the Welsh and Scottish Ministers. They vary. In Scotland, they use a test and may move to a singular test. Wales uses an assessment process as well. There are different examples as to how it can be achieved. I welcome the suspension of industrial action by some of the unions. To give confidence to the system, let us get the process moving forward and ensure that we end up with an assessment that we are all satisfied with.

Mrs Overend: I thank the Minister for a response on the matter. I could not hear all the answer, with the speakers in this part of the Chamber, but I wonder could he —

Mr O'Dowd: The rowdy corner.

Mrs Overend: It is more to do with the sound system than my colleagues. Will the Minister clarify whether there is a change to what schools will have to do as part of the statutory process going forward?

Mr O'Dowd: Yes. I have had discussions with the unions and have listened to their concerns. Moderation was a concern.

I outlined to schools that moderation will now take place within the school and among a cluster of schools in that area to ensure that each school's marking regime is fair, adequate and understood by the schools around it. The level that the school uses for each element of work will actually be worked out, first, within the school and, then, among the schools surrounding it.

What is the data used for? There were concerns among the unions that the data would be used as a blunt tool to target schools as underachieving. I have reassured the schools that that will not be the case. I have asked for data to be returned to my Department in a way that will not allow me to identify individual schools but will allow me to identify trends across our education sector to be used to ensure that our policies are correct and are achieving the traction that we all want to achieve. Those are just two areas.

There are concerns about the workload around the portfolio. I have engaged with the unions around that. I believe that the measures we have put in place will ease the pressures on the teachers' workload as well.

There are many different views on what type of assessment you should use. Some would argue that you should use a simple test, and there are systems that use a test. In Scotland, the different authorities may use slightly different tests, and there may be a proposal to bring forward a single test, but the concerns raised there are my concerns around the test: you teach to the test. What I am trying to achieve is an assessment that is based on the professional judgement of the teacher on work from the curriculum that the child will do in the class.

Teachers were concerned that maybe they would score it right but the school down the road would not. I think that, if we bring schools together in clusters and they discuss and debate what a level 2, level 3 or level 4 looks like, there will be confidence among schools that it is being scored correctly. As I have constantly said and have said during this Question Time, we need to have the assessment in place for it to evolve into what we want it to achieve. Now that the unions have suspended their industrial action —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I remind the Minister of the two-minute rule.

Mr O'Dowd: OK.

Mr Dallat: I thank the Minister for his answer. Will he agree with me — perhaps in simple English, using words of no more than two syllables — that the levels of progression were used as an accountability measure, which eroded any possible use they might have had as an assessment or learning tool?

Mr O'Dowd: What is wrong with a Department of Education or Education Authority having an accountability mechanism? How do we ensure that our young people receive the educational opportunities they should receive? I make no apologies whatever for seeking accountability tools. I have sat in front of the unions and told them that I make no apologies for seeking accountability tools. It is how those accountability tools are used that is a cause of concern to the unions. The unions, in fairness to them, are not shying away from accountability either. It is about how and for what purpose accountability is used. They were concerned that levels of progression would be a blunt tool to identify schools as underachieving and, therefore, all the power and force of the Department of Education would fall down upon them. I have assured the unions that that is not the purpose of them. I have put changes in place that will ensure that that is not the purpose of them. The purpose of levels of progression is to ensure that our young people's education is up to the standard that it should be — measured by teachers.

Careers Advisory Forum

7. Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Education to outline the progress made in establishing a careers advisory forum. (AQO 9208/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The inaugural meeting of the careers advisory forum took place on the 12 November 2015, and feedback from the day has been very positive. Minister Farry and I established the forum in response to a recommendation from the independent review of the careers system. The forum's role is to advise both Departments on current and future careers provision and facilitate engagement between employers, educators and other key stakeholders at both a system level and a local level. Membership is made up of representatives from business and education and other stakeholders, such as parents. It is chaired by Judith Gillespie, and I am grateful to Judith for taking on that challenging and important task.

Ms McGahan: I thank the Minister for his response. Can I ask him for a potential time frame for the implementation of the recommendations pertaining to DE from the report? Go raibh maith agat.

Mr O'Dowd: The Employment and Learning Minister and I are working our way through the recommendations. I am due to meet the Employment and Learning Minister shortly for further clarification of the recommendations etc, so those discussions continue. I cannot put a time frame on it, but I assure you that we are working with the Employment and Learning Minister around that report.

Mr Campbell: Can the Minister reassure the House and the public that sufficient steps will be taken at the careers advisory forum to ensure that the suitability and appropriateness of positions in the public and private sectors will be borne in mind when schools look at the projects?

Mr O'Dowd: I want to reassure the Member of that. If he has any specific issues that have caused him concern, he is more than welcome to engage with me after Question Time. To date, however, I have had no reason to believe that anything other than complete professionalism is taking place at the forum, which will be professional in its work and delivery.

Mr Swann: I thank the Minister for bringing this forward as a recommendation from the Employment and Learning Committee's inquiry into careers. Has he considered our recommendation to make careers a statutory obligation and the potential of putting that in, maybe, in years 10, 12 and 13?

Mr O'Dowd: As I have said previously, I am reviewing all the recommendations from the DEL careers strategy and will respond to them in due course.

November Monitoring Round

8. Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Education to outline how his Department will benefit from the recent November monitoring round announcement. (AQO 9209/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Across the education sector, we continue to deal with a very challenging budget situation. The additional £15 million in-year allocation will be spent equally on school maintenance, special education and funding the drawdown of schools surpluses. School maintenance is an area of the budget that continues to be under pressure due to an ageing schools estate. The additional allocation will be used to address outstanding health and safety maintenance issues. Special education is also a growing cost pressure in the education sector. Therefore, additional funding will assist special education needs for pupils in both mainstream and special schools. In June 2011, the Executive agreed the schools surplus scheme, which allows schools to either draw down or increase their surplus. That is funded from a central pot controlled by the Executive. The £5 million allocation to fund schools surplus drawdowns enables schools that wish to reduce their surplus during 2015-16 to fund in-year expenditure. I am committed to protecting and, where possible, enhancing front-line services in education. I therefore welcome the additional £15 million, which will go some way to easing the financial pressures in education.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answer. He referred to the "central pot" of school surpluses. Will he detail how much is in that central pot?

Mr O'Dowd: Currently, £36.7 million in surpluses built up by schools over a number of years is held in that central pot. It can and should be drawn down to assist schools in delivering the educational provision that their young people require. It is quite a significant amount that has largely stayed in and around the same over the past number of years, even though we have gone through a very difficult budgetary period. I encourage schools to keep their surplus to a minimum and to use it to assist their young people's educational needs. Obviously, I do not want a run on the bank. I do not want a £36 million download at this stage. However, over the next years, surpluses will certainly require further and more detailed attention.

School New Builds: East Londonderry

9. Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education to outline the submissions made by primary schools in East Londonderry for new school builds since 2012. (AQO 9210/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Since 2012, five primary schools have been submitted for consideration in major capital announcements: Ballykelly Primary School; Listress Primary School, which is part of the amalgamation of Mullabuoy Primary School and Craigbrack Primary School; Mill Strand Integrated School, Portrush; Roe Valley Integrated Primary School; and St Patrick's Primary School, Portrush. Of those, two schools have been announced to be advanced in planning for a new build: Listress Primary School, announced in January 2013, and Roe Valley Integrated Primary School, announced in June 2014.

Mr Campbell: It is early days since the working tax credit money amounting to some £240 million over four years landed on the Executive's desk, but has the Minister had an opportunity to turn his mind to any application for sums from that source to further some of those capital build programmes?

Mr O'Dowd: The Member will be aware that the money set aside for tax credits is revenue. I seek capital, although I looked at the Chancellor's announcement and noted that capital was increasing for the Executive. I will put on a major lobby for an increase in the Department of Education's capital fund for the next year.

It took a dip this year.

I will also be seeking revenue for education from whatever source I can achieve it. The Executive will be discussing what we do with the £250 million or £260 million that was set aside for working tax credits. I will involve myself in those discussions, and I can assure you that I will always have an eye on getting more money for education.

2.30 pm

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We now move to topical questions.

Education for Children with Autism

T1. Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Education whether, since the introduction of the Autism Act (Northern Ireland) 2011, he is satisfied that his Department has lived up to the expectations of parents and guardians of children with autism that they can get the education most suited to their needs when they need it. (AQT 3201/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Yes, I am. We have policies in place that, by and large, deliver for the needs of our young people with autism and their family.

The Member will be aware that we are bringing the Special Educational Needs and Disability (SEND) Bill to the House for its Consideration Stage tomorrow, which I hope will lead to an improvement in the delivery of education services across the entire range of young people with special educational needs. The Member will also be aware that the £5 million that we received as part of the November monitoring round will go a long way to easing some of the pressures in that area.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Minister for his response and very much welcome the extra funding going into the sector. Importantly, is he aware that, when parents and guardians seek education for their youngsters, the provision is frequently not available, and it is certainly not available when it should be? Delays are, and have been, the big bugbear for parents of children with autism.

Mr O'Dowd: I do not necessarily agree that it is "frequently not available". We have many fine special educational needs schools that service the needs of our young people, including those with autism. We have many autism classes much autism provision in our mainstream schools as well.

Where there have been delays and where the system has let families and young people down, I accept that that is totally unacceptable. We have to continue to improve our delivery of services to the most vulnerable in our society. I hope that the SEND Bill goes a long way towards doing that.

I have ring-fenced special educational needs funding over the past number of Budgets, and it is my intention to do so again. As I said, I will always seek further funding for special educational needs.

Secondary Enrolments: North Belfast and Greater Shankill

T2. Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Education to look at varying the intake numbers for the Girls' Model, the Boys' Model and Hazelwood Integrated College, which were oversubscribed this year, with the Girls' Model oversubscribed by almost 30 young ladies, to allow more local young people to attend local secondary schools, given that the population in the primary schools in north Belfast and the greater Shankill is growing and that this will continue to be a problem. (AQT 3202/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: There are a number of ways of dealing with that, the first of which is through the numbers allocated to schools each year. We write out to each school every year, asking it whether it requires or is seeking a change to its entry numbers — an increase or a decrease — and, if so, the rationale for that. Secondly, it can be dealt with through a development proposal being brought forward to manage area-planning needs, but that is a matter for the Education Authority.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Minister for his response and welcome it. I make one point to him: it is very difficult for principals. As I said during listed questions, we have met the local principals to do planning when they do not have the places available to facilitate the young people who are being drawn from across Belfast because of the lack of state secondary schools.

Mr O'Dowd: I am not placing the entire responsibility on the principals. The schools are run by boards of governors, and there is a role for the boards of governors in the programme. When I talk about area planning, I am talking about it from an Education Authority level. Those are controlled schools, for which the Education Authority is responsible. The schools should be planning for the future needs of young people in their area. If there is a shortfall in the numbers projected, I expect the Education Authority to bring forward plans to rectify that.

School Enrolment Numbers

T3. Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Education how his Department gathers data on school places, given that he will be familiar with the recent PAC report on school places and how they are calculated. (AQT 3203/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: As a former Chairperson of the Public Accounts Committee, I know that it is more than my job is worth to comment on a report before the Department and the Department of Finance and Personnel have had a chance to formally respond.

Mr Clarke: As a former Chairman, you may be aware that this report indicates that the figures are inflated and that it does not allow for modern teaching methods. The figure that your Department uses in relation to the number of empty places is actually a false figure. What is your Department going to do to rectify that and print an accurate figure for whatever the schools estate has?

Mr O'Dowd: I do not want to go into the specifics of the PAC report but, whatever figure you use, we have too many empty school places. However, we do not use the universal figure when we are judging the schools estate in any area. For instance, if a development proposal comes forward to me to close a school, we will have accurate, up-to-date figures for each of the schools in that locality. We will know exactly what empty or full places there are in those schools. If a proposal comes forward to me to open a school, I will know what the accurate up-to-date data is in each area. Whatever the universal figure may or may not be — we will respond to the PAC on that in due course — the way that we develop our schools estate is with up-to-date data and information. Therefore, I believe that we can accurately reflect the position in any area when making decisions around area planning.

Education Budget: PPP Schemes

T4. Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education whether he shares the recently expressed concerns about the cost to the Education budget of PPP schemes and to state whether there has been any renegotiation of those contracts. (AQT 3204/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The original PPP schemes were actually the subject of a PAC report during my time there. Yes, lessons have been learned from those original pathfinder PPPs. I have not been involved — to the best of my knowledge, the Executive have not involved themselves — in any PPP schemes during this mandate. If we are to move into that territory, we will have to take best practice from elsewhere around these islands and perhaps across Europe to ensure that the public sector, rather than simply the private sector, is a beneficiary. We have not had an opportunity to renegotiate contracts. They are legal contracts. I could spend a significant amount of time hiring legal and other expertise to renegotiate something, or I can move forward in trying to deliver the services with the limited resources that I have.

Mr Rogers: I thank the Minister for his answer. Officials at a recent Education Committee meeting said that over 50% of their costs are utility costs. Will you outline what they mean by utility costs?

Mr O'Dowd: It depends on each contract for each school. I assume that they are referring to service level agreements with the schools around keeping the schools in pristine condition. I have been around a number of PPP projects that are several years old in very busy schools, and I have to say that they are pristine; they are like they were the day they were built. I have a major maintenance backlog. When I walk around a PPP project and see how well they are kept, I know that I am not going to have to spend any maintenance on those, so there is a cost offload in maintenance against utility costs etc. I am more than happy to supply the Member with a full breakdown of what that terminology covers.

Controlled Sector Support Body

T5. Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education to outline the work expected of the controlled sector support body. (AQT 3205/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: It is set out in an Executive agreement that the controlled sector support body is there to support controlled schools in the delivery of education and to give them a coordinated voice and approach in areas of concern and opportunity.

Mr Campbell: Would the Minister, then, be content if the support body were to ensure, for the present and the future, that parity of funding in capital and revenue is uppermost in its mind and, hopefully, concentrate the mind of this Minister and future Ministers on that aspect as well?

Mr O'Dowd: The body's work programme in ensuring parity where I am concerned will be very short because my record speaks for itself. I have published criteria for new school builds. I have made announcements around new school builds based on those criteria. While many cases of legislation take place in education, I have never been challenged in the courts over any decision that I have made around a capital build. That speaks for itself; my processes are open and transparent and, while people might not always like the decisions, they realise that people are getting a fair deal.

Primary Schools: Islandmagee

T6. Mr Lyons asked the Minister of Education, given that he knows that Islandmagee needs a new primary school and the fact that, in 2014, he said that a development proposal for the amalgamation of Kilcoan and Mullaghduh primary schools had been approved in 2004 and remained in place, with responsibility for implementing the proposal to bring the schools together resting with NEELB, which has happened, albeit that Kilcoan and Mullaghduh will be amalgamated from September 2016 but on different sites, to give an update on the funding for a new build for a new Islandmagee primary school. (AQT 3206/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I am looking through my notes because I think that there is a question for oral answer on that matter that I did not get to. I am more than happy to give the Member a written update on the building programme. I announced it previously, but there was a change of mindset in the then education and library board, which meant that the programme was delayed. There have been many twists and turns in the road for those schools. Once I have definitive decisions in front of me, we can move on towards ensuring that the school receives a new build.

Mr Lyons: I thank the Minister for his answer. This issue has been going on for the best part of a decade. Further to his answer, will he commit to meeting me, other elected representatives and members of the board of governors to discuss why the new build for Islandmagee should be a priority for his Department?

Mr O'Dowd: I am happy to do so.

New Builds: Lurgan

T7. Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education, given that he will be aware of the considerable challenge of the amalgamation of St Michael's, St Mary's and St Paul's in Lurgan, for an update on the two-site interim development bid that has been submitted in advance of a new school being built on the site of St Ronan's. (AQT 3207/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I am also aware of the huge opportunities that have arisen as a result of the amalgamation of those three schools. It is heart-warming to see young people in the Catholic sector in Lurgan attending one school in the one school uniform, which is a major step forward for education in the area. Any proposal that is brought forward to me on a two-site solution ahead of a full build, which I have announced — there will be a new build for that school — will be looked at against any other pressures at that time.

Mrs D Kelly: In the interim, will the Minister write to me formally to let me know when a decision may be reached or when he may consider the development proposal, which, I understand, is with the Department, as an interim measure before a new school is built on the site of St Ronan's, which, let us face it, was announced by your predecessor in 2010?

Mr O'Dowd: I think that you will find that I announced the new build.

Mrs D Kelly: No, actually —

Mr O'Dowd: I think that you will find that it was me who announced the new build. The development proposal for the schools to amalgamate was also approved only two years ago. So an announcement has been made, and progress is being made towards a new build, which perhaps will be one of the biggest schools in our portfolio. It will provide education for future generations in the Lurgan area. I am more than happy to write to the Member to update her on the current position.

Polycentric Inspection Report: West Belfast

T8. Mr Maskey asked the Minister of Education what lessons can be learned for other areas following the publication of the ERASMUS polycentric report on educational achievement in west Belfast. (AQT 3208/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Any community that is interested in raising educational outcomes for its young people should study that report and listen to the testimony of teachers, pupils and community activists in that area to see how their working together, breaking down the barriers of concern about sharing best practice between schools and so on, and ensuring that they are working with a community has been to the benefit of young people in west Belfast.

Mr Maskey: I thank the Minister for that. Will he continue to give leadership in working with all the other relevant educational authorities and agencies to try to make sure that we roll out such successful programmes in the future, as he has been doing for some time?

Mr O'Dowd: One of my themes throughout my time as Minister has been to say that, despite having excellent teachers and school leaders, they cannot do this on their own. If we are to raise educational outcomes for young people, particularly in areas of social deprivation, there has to be community involvement. The old African saying that goes something along the lines of:

"It takes a village to raise a child" is very apt in these circumstances.

2.45 pm

The ERASMUS study showed that schools work together and self-evaluate. I think that one of the main findings was that schools were self-evaluating their own work and sharing their best practice with neighbouring schools, coming together through area learning communities at nursery, primary and post-primary level and ensuring that everyone felt comfortable and involved. Working with the community sector has ensured that the qualifications of young people coming out of west Belfast have been on the up every year over the last five or six years. When you look at all the socioeconomic indicators in west Belfast, they tell you that young people there are disadvantaged, and most likely to be disadvantaged in their educational outcomes. What has actually happened there is that the community and education sectors have refused to set the destinies for those young people and have set out a pathway and a work programme that have given them excellent opportunities in life.

Employment and Learning

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I must inform the House that questions 3, 10 and 14 have been withdrawn.

Ulster University: Magee Courses

1. Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how his Department will assist the Ulster University Magee campus to ensure courses are protected. (AQO 9217/11-16)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): While my Department provides funding and sets the strategic direction for the higher education sector, universities are autonomous and wholly responsible for decisions on course offerings and where the courses are delivered. The institutions are at liberty to deploy their funding across their various campuses, where applicable, and on the different courses that they offer. In deciding which courses to close or scale back, the Ulster University took a number of factors into consideration, including the priorities of my Department, such as protecting narrow STEM provision; student demand; attrition rates; student satisfaction; employment statistics; and research performance. The university has also consolidated teaching provision into its campuses to facilitate the necessary reduction of staff numbers without impacting on the quality of teaching, which remains paramount.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Minister for his answer. Later this week, I will meet the vice-chancellor Paddy Nixon to discuss these matters. Does the Minister agree that, whilst we all want to see the university at Magee expanded, it is vital that the courses that are on offer are focused on the needs and demands of the area, specifically computing and health and social care?

Dr Farry: I wish the Member success with his meeting with the vice-chancellor. I am sure that it will be very productive. In respect of his supplementary question, the Member should take some degree of comfort that, while we are going through some very difficult times, the university has sought to consolidate particular types of courses at particular campuses rather than spreading them out. In that way, it is trying to stretch itself that little bit further to protect the range of courses that is on offer and also the number of places that can be facilitated. Indeed, it has consolidated engineering and computing into the Magee campus, which hopefully will reinforce its relevance in particular to the opportunities to expand the economy in the north-west.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for that update. Specifically, can he give an update on the current business case for the Magee expansion and indeed where he thinks the expansion issue will sit in the restructuring of Departments?

Dr Farry: First of all, with regard to the business case, we have asked for further clarification on a number of points. That request was made by my officials at the beginning of July. We have yet to receive the revised business case. I encourage those who are finalising it to get it to us as quickly as possible, given, not least, that decisions on budgets are looming. Ultimately, the issue of the expansion lies with higher education. As the Member will appreciate, higher education is set to be part of the new Department of the Economy from May 2016 onwards.

Mr Swann: The Minister referred to the relocation of courses to Magee. Can he say what is actually happening to psychology courses?

Dr Farry: My understanding is that psychology is being redirected to Coleraine. The process of consolidation at Magee is being reflected in similar decisions that are being taken with respect to the other campuses. As I have outlined already, a strategic approach is being taken that is about trying to maximise the ability to retain as many courses as possible and also to protect as many places as possible. That is a way of maximising the efficiency of the university as far as it can, operating across four different campuses.

Big Conversation: Update

2. Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the Big Conversation. (AQO 9218/11-16)

4. Ms Ruane asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when he will announce the findings of the Big Conversation. (AQO 9220/11-16)

Dr Farry: With your permission, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, I wish to group questions 2 and 4, and I request an additional minute for the answer.

I launched the Big Conversation on 15 September as an innovative and experimental approach to engaging with people on the sustainability and the future of our higher education system. It concluded on 23 October. The process was designed to be iterative, comprising two main stages themed on a week-by-week basis. The first stage, 'Did you Know?', ran for the first three weeks and focused on raising public awareness of the purpose and importance of our existing higher education system. This was followed by a second stage, 'Have your Say', which launched on 6 October and invited people to put forward their views on some of the most critical issues facing our higher education system.

During the first stage, people were invited to test their knowledge of our existing higher education system through online 'Did you Know?'-style surveys. The second stage was more akin to a traditional consultation. Equipped with the knowledge gained in stage one, people were invited to have their say on a range of issues through a consultation questionnaire. Questions focused on the adequacy and sustainability of our existing higher education funding and delivery systems and whether there might be alternatives that could work better for Northern Ireland.

During the process, my officials and I sought to stimulate debate and engage with people in a wide range of ways. We had formal meetings with stakeholders, and we held workshops, focus groups and a Twitter question and answer session in the penultimate week to answer people's questions directly. Various other stakeholders, including our universities and colleges, promoted the process through their own channels. In the final week, my officials organised a panel discussion to examine some of the different higher education funding and delivery systems maintained in other parts of the world. That event was very well attended and received, and we were fortunate to secure some excellent panellists. Now that the Big Conversation has concluded, building on the evidence presented, I am finalising a paper to present to my Executive colleagues, outlining the ways in which higher education could be sustained in the future.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Mo bhuíochas leis an Aire as ucht a fhreagra.

Thanks very much, Minister, for your response. In what way will secondary-school students, who will be most affected by this, have an input into this consultation process?

Dr Farry: The consultation has closed, and I have outlined to the Member the different ways in which people could make their views known. That included online opportunities as well as the opportunity to submit formal responses. I also stress to the Member that, to an extent, he is correct when he talks about secondary-school children being most affected by this, but there are many other stakeholders who will be affected by this situation, including businesses in Northern Ireland and wider society. Our future economic potential will also be affected. What is at stake in what is happening to higher education is extreme, and it is important that, over the coming weeks, the Executive can find a solution that will be sustainable in the long term.

Ms Ruane: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answer. Does he accept that proposals to increase tuition fees would have a negative impact on his Department's commitment to widening access to people from disadvantaged areas? We have just heard from the Minister of Education about the increase in the number of young people in west Belfast getting better qualifications. Does the Minister accept that his proposals to increase tuition fees could disadvantage pupils from deprived areas?

Dr Farry: First, let me be very clear: I have not proposed an increase in tuition fees. I have simply outlined the fact that our current system is unsustainable. My first priority is to ensure that we have a sustainable system for our future economy and society, and to give young people opportunities. Until we can find a solution on which there is political consensus, all options remain on the table. At this stage, I am not advocating an increase in tuition fees.

On a purely stand-alone basis, I concur with the Member when she says that a rise in tuition fees would have an impact on widening access and deter some from accessing higher education. However, it is only right and proper that we make clear that the cuts that the Executive imposed on my Department, which I, sadly, had to pass on to universities, have already had an impact on people's ability to access higher education. We have a situation in which we have fewer places on offer from this year, which means that some people will be forced to go to Great Britain or elsewhere in the world, often having to pay higher tuition fees than would be on offer in Northern Ireland. In some cases, people have had no opportunity to go to university at all and have lost out on a life-transforming opportunity. We are seeing very real costs already in this respect, and those from the more marginalised and vulnerable sections of our society will be impacted most by the loss of places. While we are hearing potential figures of cuts to Departments coming up, it is important to recognise that, if we see a similar situation arising for our universities for this forthcoming academic year, we will see a further reduction in places, which will have another detrimental impact on people's opportunities and our widening-access targets.

Mrs Overend: Does the Minister intend to make his recommendations on the funding of further and higher education this side of the election, or was the Big Conversation a big delaying tactic to avoid potentially unpopular decisions?

Mr Kennedy: Hear, hear.

Dr Farry: I hear a former Minister who did exactly that in parking a decision to the far side of an election saying "hear, hear". Clearly, we know where the form lies in that regard. I think that my Department was chosen last because the political hot potato of tuition fees was left unresolved until after the Assembly election. What happens is very much in the hands of the Executive and the Assembly, but let me be very clear that I am determined to get this issue resolved. We cannot afford to park this issue; our universities are bleeding already. We have issues that, if unresolved, will undermine our credibility as an investment location. We are about to have a question on a lower level of corporation tax. Already, our investment narrative is in jeopardy because we do not have a clear outcome on the sustainability of our higher education system.

I am doing sterling work to resolve these issues. We will have a paper before the Executive within weeks, so there is an opportunity for all parties to take a responsible decision on the best way forward. There are clear choices that we can make. Tuition fees remain an option open to the Executive, but they also have the option of doing something more in line with what happens in Scotland, where more money is redirected from the block grant into supporting universities, so that is another option that is available. Of course, this is happening in the context where money is being taken out of our budgets to have a more generous welfare system. That may or not be the right thing for us to do, but that is what is about to happen. We have a host of other populist decisions being taken on other public services and other types of commitments. It is in that context that we have to see what will be doable. It is up to the Executive over the coming weeks to try to take a decision on what will happen in the here and now.

Ms Lo: The Minister mentioned the Executive's decision to lower corporation tax in 2018. Given that decision, what scale of investment is required now for our young people in anticipation of more inward investment coming online?

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for her question. To put this in context, it may be useful to see three or four different elements in this. First, we have the cut to higher education that was passed on for the 2015-16 financial year, amounting to £16.1 million. We have a pre-existing structural deficit in our university funding that amounts to about £39 million. That is based on a comparison between the money that we are investing per student in Northern Ireland relative to the rest of the UK. Thirdly, we have to look to what potential expansion we need to see for higher education to meet the needs of investing companies in response to lower corporation tax.

As we have already heard, there are ambitions to expand the Ulster University at Magee. While we are still awaiting the business case, it is likely that we will be talking about a figure in the region of £30 million per annum if we are to see the expansion in line with the One Plan targets. Very quickly you can see that we are talking about a figure in excess of £80 million a year being required to have a sustainable higher education system in Northern Ireland that meets the needs of our economy, both today and, more importantly, where we hope to be tomorrow.

Ulster University: Redundancy Funding

5. Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the redundancy process at the Ulster University. (AQO 9221/11-16)

Dr Farry: While my Department provides funding and sets the strategic direction for the higher education sector, universities are autonomous and responsible for their own staffing levels. However, I have had ongoing discussions with the Ulster University in relation to the possible implications of the budget reductions and have been briefed on the redundancy process by the vice chancellor on a regular basis.

The university has already indicated the scale of the job losses over the current academic year and over future years. The size of the cuts is a clear indication of the severity of the budget reductions faced by my Department, the university and the higher education sector.

Ulster University has reported to my officials that the deadline for expressions of interest in the voluntary severance scheme closed on 30 October, and they are now liaising with the deans of the affected faculties before beginning the process of staff engagement.

3.00 pm

Mr Dallat: Does it not break the Minister's heart that he has been responsible for reducing funding to the universities at a time when the whole world is telling us that the only way that we can create jobs for people who are travelling to the four corners of the world to find work, because the work is not at home, and the very thing that would be the driver to create the jobs has been starved of the oxygen of life in Coleraine and Derry in particular?

Dr Farry: Let me be very clear: the decisions regarding my departmental budget were taken at Executive level, and I was deeply concerned about a whole range of issues around the budget.

I ask the Member to reflect on his party's approach to how we are addressing our Budget issues, because his party, like others, is very clear that it is not prepared to consider any additional revenue raising for Northern Ireland. Parties are very clear that they are not prepared to consider tackling the cost of a divided society; we could not even begin to address divisions in our teacher training system earlier this year.

We are not adopting a strategic approach to Budget setting. Parties are making more and more demands about what they want to spend money on. We are seeing a situation where money is going to be taken out of our block grant for welfare. We are seeing people making commitments ahead of even a full assessment of all the different needs; that we must protect health at all costs, rather than engaging in any health programme. Then people wonder why we have a situation where we are having cuts to our skills budgets and why we are seeing cuts being passed on to universities.

If people are genuinely concerned about this issue, it is important that they have a fundamental reassessment of how they are resourcing all that we need to do to fund our public services, including our universities, as well as how we fund the transformation of our economy. I encourage the Member and those in all parties to think very seriously about these issues over the coming weeks.

Skills: NI Workforce

6. Mr Anderson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline how he will ensure Northern Ireland has a well-skilled workforce capable of attracting inward investment when the rate of corporation tax is reduced in 2018. (AQO 9222/11-16)

Dr Farry: It is essential that we are well placed to derive the full benefits of a 12.5% corporation tax rate, which could significantly increase the number of jobs locally that would otherwise be produced. However, a lower rate will not transform the economy in isolation of investment in, and a coherent focus around, the key economic drivers of skills and employability as the bedrock of economic success. It is crucial that we maintain and increase our investment in skills if we are to derive the benefits of a lower rate.

Research commissioned by my Department highlights, in particular, the importance of strong skills in science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM), management and leadership, literacy, numeracy and employability skills and the importance of acting quickly to meet the skills and needs of employers in a lower corporation tax environment.

These are issues that my Department is already working to address, and they are central to the overarching skills strategy. However, although the Department is already on the right path, there will be a need for further investment to address the quantum of skills required. My Department has developed a draft action plan to direct our skills interventions in preparation for, and in response to, a lower rate. This covers existing policies and programmes such as the following: investment in STEM skills; the implementation of the new apprenticeship strategy and, in particular, the supply of skills at level 3 and above; developing new pathways, such as higher level apprenticeships or working in partnership with Invest NI to promote foreign direct investment; the further development of careers provision and the work to upskill the existing workforce. Together with information from the recently published skills barometer, this will provide a strong basis to articulate and address future skill needs and help to ensure that we realise the potential for a lower rate. However, in order to ensure that we maximise this economic opportunity, it is essential that an appropriate level of investment in skills is restored, that the structural deficit of underfunding in higher education is addressed and that we invest in additional measures to ensure we meet the forecast skills demand.

The financial analysis undertaken indicates that the total additional cost may be in the region of an average of £111 million per annum over the next 15 years or a total of £1.67 billion through to 2030.

Mr Anderson: I thank the Minister for that response. How do you plan to help existing businesses to prepare for the corporation tax reduction in 2018, especially in areas such as staff training, and I know that you have already mentioned apprenticeships? Can you give an indication of how your Department will work with DETI in preparation for 2018?

Dr Farry: On the latter point, we are due to have some discussions tomorrow as part of the Executive's subcommittee on the economy. That will, hopefully, begin to crystallise some of these discussions, and I know that discussions are happening at official level already in that regard. It will be a case of upscaling some of the existing interventions, for example, what we are doing around the apprenticeship strategy, and we have spoken at length about the importance of the funding of universities.

Another area that is worth highlighting is the importance of management and leadership skills. As we bring more and more high-value investments into Northern Ireland, a greater premium will be placed on management and leadership. Sadly, we have had some severe cutbacks to existing provision over the past couple of years. That will need to be reversed. We are also conducting a review of management and leadership at present. Hopefully, that will be concluded before the end of this mandate.

Mr Rogers: Minister, will you concede that, particularly at the beginning of the lower rate of corporation tax in 2018, there might be a fall in tax intake? Do you believe that that would have a detrimental effect on the funds available for your employability schemes and training schemes at a time when you need greater funds for those?

Dr Farry: It is almost certain that there will be a fall in the resources available to the Executive. Anyone who has looked at the figures on this will know that we will be looking at a figure that will progressively rise to one in the region of perhaps £250 million to £300 million per annum. Over time, more and more revenue will be generated in Northern Ireland as we see a much greater level of economic activity being sparked by lower corporation tax. We have a dilemma in that it is very clear that we have to invest more in what we are doing around skills if a lower corporation tax rate is to be successful. If we do not invest in skills, that simply will not be the case. That same logic applies to further investments in infrastructure and some reforms to the planning system, but the real dilemma that the Executive will have is that the increase in funding needs to happen now. That will happen at a time when we are seeing cuts to the block grant and money being taken out of our block grant for additional flexibilities around welfare, and we also have to make up the deficit from lost revenue from a lower level of corporation tax.

Enabling Success: Update

7. Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on Enabling Success. (AQO 9223/11-16)

Dr Farry: Enabling Success, the Executive's new strategy aimed at reducing the level of economic inactivity in Northern Ireland, was published on 20 April 2015. The implementation of the strategy over the proposed 15-year period is based on 11 key projects that are to be managed and resourced on a cross-departmental basis. However, due to the ongoing pressure on budgets and the subsequent absorption of those pressures through departmental baselines, the Enabling Success strategy remains largely unresourced and its implementation severely hindered. In my Department, there has been a reduction to departmental baseline funding of 8.4%, totalling £63.3 million, in 2015-16.

A research mapping exercise of economic inactivity service provision in Northern Ireland aimed at the strategy's key target groups has been completed. In addition, the Department for Social Development leads on a pilot project in the new Derry City and Strabane District Council area. That pilot project received funding via the Executive's change fund for 2015-16, and it is based on early and more intensive engagement with new claimants of employment and support allowance.

The remaining cross-departmental projects have yet to commence due to the lack of financial and other resource allocations. Updated indicative project costs have been provided for the ongoing discussions between the Executive parties. Should the Executive secure additional finance to enable the full or part implementation of the strategy, a new implementation plan and timetable will be agreed between the relevant Departments.

Mrs Dobson: I thank the Minister for his update. As we know, it has long been established that there are areas of Northern Ireland with unacceptably high levels of economic inactivity. As you say, you launched the strategy with a statement in April. As has recently been reported, it is largely unresourced, and many of the projects have not commenced due to lack of resources. Minister, are you content to be associated with monumental failure and lack of prioritisation from the Executive?

Dr Farry: This is a collective failure across the piece because the Executive have not been in a position to direct resources in that regard.

The Member's party was present when those decisions were taken. Since her party left the Executive and went into so-called opposition mode, we have not seen an alternative narrative that would lead to resources being available for us to invest in the strategy.

There are two potential sources of funding looming on the landscape, neither of which is definite by any stretch of the imagination, but they are worth exploring. First, the Executive now have the money that was originally set aside to mitigate the effect of the loss of tax credits, and about which decisions have still to be made. Anything we do to invest in our economic inactivity strategy is about removing people from welfare by encouraging them into work in a supportive manner. That is consistent with the wider welfare reform process, which is about tackling the causes rather than simply dealing with the symptoms of people stuck in a spiral of welfare and lack of opportunity.

The second also lies in the Fresh Start deal, where reference is made to new measures to address error and fraud in benefits in Northern Ireland. Through an annually managed expenditure/DEL switch, the Northern Ireland Executive have the potential to receive 50% of the savings that accrue to the Treasury through successful efforts in that regard. That deal makes reference to addressing some elements of work and health well-being as being one possible route through which those resources could be deployed.

Those are discussions that we have to continue with at Executive level, but those are two potential avenues through which resources could be made available to commence work on that strategy.

Mr McKinney: Given the Minister's answers, I am assuming that the new mental health strategy is also being negatively impacted, as the Enabling Success strategy also aimed to encourage positive mental health through work.

Dr Farry: As I said, at this stage we have only one potential pilot programme operating through DSD. The rest of the strategy is parked, pending the allocation of resources.

I would like to think that resources will be made available. This is an important area and a major structural problem in our economy in Northern Ireland. It is imperative that we press on and seek to address this. This is a much more beneficial way to address the situation where people unfortunately find themselves on welfare. Many who are on welfare want to engage with the world of work but are coming across barriers that are preventing them from doing that. We want to see how we can tackle and remove those barriers.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr Edwin Poots is not in his place. Mr Ian McCrea is not in his place. I call Mr Robin Swann.

Trainer Certification

11. Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he has considered any change to the certification required for trainers involved in delivering courses supported by the European social fund. (AQO 9227/11-16)

Dr Farry: The Department's key priority in developing any element under the 2014-2020 European social fund (ESF) programme is to ensure that the participants receive the best possible training and education available to them. Any departmental requirements of qualifications for teaching or tutoring staff apply to tutors in further education college settings and providers of the Training for Success programme, as well as educators in the ESF projects.

In each of those contexts, the primary rationale is to ensure quality and consistency throughout education and training across Northern Ireland, and to provide a guaranteed minimum level of quality in our teaching. We cannot, and should not, lose sight of the fact that the participants on ESF projects, and therefore the quality of training they receive, should remain our primary focus.

My officials are continuing to consider a paper submitted on this issue by the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action and will respond in due course, but it is important that the rationale for the introduction of that requirement is clearly understood.

Mr Swann: I thank the Minister for his answer. Can the Minister then inform those organisations that are waiting how to get a tutor in CSR and first aid cards, and an organisation that is recognised by OCR, when that teaching qualification does not reflect that?

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for his question and those comments. We made clear to our officials that we want them to work through those practical issues that are being raised by organisations. I am aware of the concerns that have been expressed around, for example, capacity issues and how other qualifications are being recognised. We are looking to see how we can work through those issues in a constructive way to reach a resolution. I stress to the Member and the Assembly the importance of ensuring that we have quality. I am sure that everyone shares that objective. Right across our education and training system, we want to make sure that those providing the training are operating to the very highest standards. I accept that there can be different ways in which that can be assessed and accredited.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for list of questions. We move to topical questions.

Further and Higher Education: Fresh Start Advantages

T1. Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he can point to any advantages for those who access further and higher education in either the Fresh Start Agreement or the November monitoring round, given that he will be aware of the intensive talks leading up to that agreement, which had mixed outcomes. (AQT 3211/11-16)

Dr Farry: On the surface, no, but I was not expecting any huge commitments in those regards. This was meant to be a political deal, and insofar as that was the bar, it was a deal in some respects between some parties, covering some but not necessarily all areas. Like the Member, I would have liked a stronger general commitment to how we can better invest in and plan our economy. I would have liked the agreement to set in train a process by which we could have a better planning process that draws on international experience and allows us to benchmark our progress in Northern Ireland. The omission of that was, perhaps, a lost opportunity. However, I was not expecting any particular lines on or commitments to further or higher education, although those would, in due course, have been picked up through the more general process of the promotion of economic prosperity and opportunity.

Mr McKinney: Does the Minister agree that, for corporation tax to work properly and benefit all in society here, we need a highly skilled economy with high productivity and high wages, and that his recent cuts to university places is entirely counter-strategic to the introduction of corporation tax here and to that ambition?

Dr Farry: I entirely concur with the sentiments that the Member has expressed, and, indeed, that has been a major focal point of Question Time to date. I simply echo the point that I made: it is important that, as we look ahead to making our own Budget decisions over the coming weeks and months, we very much have in mind some of the things that have been done in the past and the requirements of the future. It is important that we start now to invest more in skills. Simply waiting until 2018 to do so will not be effective. We now have a two-year window, and it is important that we send a very clear message that Northern Ireland is open for business from day one of people looking to make investments on the basis of the lower corporation tax rate.

Funding Bids

T2. Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to confirm whether his Department has applied for any of the £240 million from tax credits to alleviate some of the cuts it is facing. (AQT 3212/11-16)

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for his question. At this stage, we have not been invited to make bids by the Executive as a whole or by the Minister of Finance and Personnel. Decisions on how that money will be reallocated are still to be taken by the Executive. I stress that there are many ways in which we can help those who are most vulnerable and marginalised. Mitigation of the Tory welfare policies being pursued in Great Britain is one such way, but we have to take a balanced approach. Further investment in public health, early years education, as well as investment in my areas of responsibility — employment schemes, training schemes, opportunities in further and higher education — are all very important in giving people the opportunity to move off dependency on welfare and progress in life. It is important that there is balance in the approach that we take.

Mr G Robinson: This may be a bit hypothetical, but, if the Minister's bid was successful, would that money go back into universities whose funding has already been cut?

Dr Farry: I congratulate the Member on his bravery and on trying to entice me along those lines. There are a lot of ifs in that chain of logic. Things can be done differently to help those on welfare, and we have had discussions on economic inactivity. If a decision were taken to redirect those resources, that type of intervention — something to help those who are unemployed and, in particular, the young and long-term unemployed — would be most relevant, in that people could see the transparency of money moving from one intervention to another.

Comments were made about upskilling and higher education. These have to be the subject of freestanding Executive commitments because they are core requirements for us in delivering a successful economy. I do not think that it is a case of simply moving money from tax credits into higher education, as tempting as that is. Higher education must stand on its own two feet and be seen as part of the core responsibility of the Executive for upskilling and having a successful transformed economy.

Maintenance Grants: Retention

T3. Mr Lynch asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he is minded to retain maintenance grants. (AQT 3213/11-16)

Dr Farry: At this stage, there are no plans to change the situation with maintenance grants and, even if there were, there would be a lead-in time to bring secondary legislation through the Assembly. I think that it is important that maintenance grants stay in place. They are important to help widen access. Scotland, which I visited last week, has moved to funding maintenance more through loans than grants. There are ongoing debates about how well they are doing in widening participation. Obviously, the UK Government have proposed the removal of maintenance grants in England. Exactly what that works out as in negative Barnett consequentials for Northern Ireland remains to be seen, but the decision on whether to keep maintenance grants in Northern Ireland will be taken by the Executive collectively. My working assumption is that people will want to continue the status quo because that is more in keeping with the particular circumstances in which we find ourselves in Northern Ireland.

Mr Lynch: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an fhreagra sin. I acknowledge what the Minister has said about the importance of maintenance grants. Would he say that they are vital in supporting students from less well-off areas in further and higher education?

Dr Farry: Yes, that is very much the logic as to why they are there and for the commitment to them. Resources have been tight over the past number of years as part of the wider tuition fees settlement, and we have not had the same opportunity to invest in maintenance because the resources have simply not been there. However, maintenance grants are an important tool in their own right for ensuring that we attract people from a range of backgrounds into higher education. It is crucial for the future of our economy that the ability to pay is not seen as a barrier to participation in higher education. Access to higher education should be based on merit and on people's ability to learn and to gain from the experience.

Nurses

T4. Mr Douglas asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether his Department has any plans to train people for nursing jobs in Northern Ireland, given that, at a meeting this morning with staff and management from the Four Seasons care homes to discuss the closures, one problem that they identified was a lack of trained nurses in Northern Ireland. (AQT 3214/11-16)

Dr Farry: It is important that we draw a distinction between the types of roles that are available in residential homes. As the Member will appreciate, nursing and the training of nurses are matters for the Department of Health. It sets the numbers and provides the finances. I have no doubt that the Member's colleague will be aware of that. There are, of course, other roles in health and social care where my Department can play a role. The Member will be aware, for example, of the new youth training system that we launched in June this year. I expect that health and social care will be a major strand in the future needs of our economy. The new work-based learning approach that we are putting in place will hopefully be very attractive to a lot of young people, especially those leaving school at 16 who want to find new opportunities.

Mr Douglas: I thank the Minister for his answer. I am aware that the Open University has contacted your Department about potential courses. Will the Minister consider widening access to nursing courses by removing means-testing for financial support for students undertaking modules K101 and K109?

Dr Farry: Again, those are largely matters for the Minister of Health to take forward. However, there is a common approach across the Executive to ensuring that we have wide access to higher education.

Nursing is obviously a key sector in our economy. The Member will be aware that, for example, we published a skills barometer on 12 November and that health and social care, particularly nursing, was identified as a key pressure point in our economy. We have a clear need, so it is important that we put in place policies that do not deter people from going into those areas, and, in doing so, we facilitate people and encourage them into those areas.

City Deals

T5. Mr Attwood asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he agrees that one of the multiple missed opportunities in the Fresh Start Agreement, not least that two party leaders engaged directly with the Prime Minister, was the failure to make any progress whatsoever in respect of city deals — a regional city deal for Northern Ireland or, indeed, a university city deal for Northern Ireland — given that the Chancellor has said very clearly that there is no issue of principle with that model being employed here. (AQT 3215/11-16)

Dr Farry: It is only the last aspect of that question that directly falls under my responsibilities as Minister for Employment and Learning. We had a debate in the Assembly a few weeks ago about the concept of city deals, and people are open to exploring those. It is important that we fully appreciate exactly how they will work, whether additional resources will be provided or whether we will repack resources that are already in our gift.

We have seen progress in university development in Belfast, and I appreciate that there is also a hunger for university expansion in the north-west. The funding for Belfast is already in place, but there is uncertainty as to how we will facilitate any expansion in Derry if that is what the business case indicates as the appropriate way forward. If we have innovative ways as to how that can happen, I am very happy to consider them.

Mr Attwood: Given that last comment in particular, the fact that there is to be a Budget for 2016-17 and that Programme for Government preparations are already under way, will you as Minister commit in the next financial year and thereafter to take forward a proposal for a university city deal in the Programme for Government, certainly for Derry if not for other cities in Northern Ireland, so that the door that seems to have been closed in the Fresh Start Agreement will be reopened?

Dr Farry: I need to be conscious about my lifespan as a Minister and what I will do. I can comment only on what I can do in my capacity as Minister through to May of next year. It is likely that we will consider a one-year Budget in the first instance rather than necessarily going for a full five-year Budget. In that way, full account will be taken of the elections and incoming Ministers thereafter in future Programmes for Government.

The Member can take some assurance from the fact that those types of innovative interventions need to be examined by the Executive as a whole. If we do not fully explore all the opportunities that are before us, we will potentially miss opportunities. His comments will be well heard. I expect that those opportunities will be fully scoped out, whether by me or others, now or in the future.

Irish Language Degree Course

T6. Ms McCorley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether the decision to end the full-time Irish language degree course was wise, given the huge success of the Irish language, its growth, the Gaeltacht Quarter and the hugely successful Irish-medium education sector, with so many children in the city being educated through Irish. (AQT 3216/11-16)

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagraí go dtí seo.

Dr Farry: Let me be clear: it is not my place to say whether it was wise or unwise. It was the university's decision to make. As the Member is fully aware, the context that it found itself in was not one of my making; it was certainly not one of its making, and very difficult choices had to be made.

It is also important to bear in mind that we have not actually seen a reduction in the full-time opportunities for Irish. What has happened is that the provision has been consolidated in Derry, and we have seen the removal of the full-time provision from Belfast. In the future, that situation may be restored, but I never fail to be amazed at the concern expressed about courses being moved into the north-west, given that Sinn Féin in particular has been very keen to see Magee developed more and more as part of our higher education landscape.

Question for Urgent Oral Answer

Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Care Home Closures

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr Chris Lyttle has given notice of a question for urgent oral answer to the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. I remind Members that, if they wish to ask a supplementary, they should rise continually in their place. The Member who tabled the question will be called automatically to ask a supplementary.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the action he is taking to assist the residents and staff affected by the proposed closures of local Four Seasons care homes.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): First, I should say that Four Seasons Health Care has taken a business decision to close those homes. That decision was taken independently of the Department and the Health and Social Care Board, and we had no input to the analysis conducted by Four Seasons that led to the decision.

I fully appreciate that the closure of seven nursing homes by Four Seasons Health Care will impact on many residents and their families, and will cause great anxiety and uncertainty for those directly affected by the closures. My Department is working closely with colleagues in the Health and Social Care Board, the health and social care trusts, the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) and Four Seasons Health Care in developing plans to manage the transition to alternative care arrangements. The aim is to ensure that any relocation will be managed, with minimal disruption to residents, and that they are able to remain as close to their original location as possible. The continued well-being of residents will be the priority in dealing with the transition to alternative care arrangements.

My Department has established a joint working group with the Health and Social Care Board, the RQIA and the trusts to monitor developments and oversee the resettlement of the residents affected by the closures. Within the trusts, multidisciplinary teams have been established to work through the detail of all the moves to identify new placements and to manage the terms of all the moves. You will appreciate that that is a complex and difficult task, and team members will therefore be drawn from across the trusts. Staffing is a matter for Four Seasons Health Care as their employer.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Minister for his update, but given that we have had warnings of crisis in the care sector for some considerable time and people have cited declining trust aid, rising staffing costs and a shortage of nurses as main reasons to point towards a lack of adequate long-term planning and sourcing for care, should we conclude that the Minister has been caught asleep at the wheel on this issue? Most importantly, having met staff and residents at care homes whose primary concern is the impact that closures will have on the residents' health and well-being, I ask what options the Minister can actively pursue to avoid a need for residents to leave their homes, to prevent the detachment from staff on whom they rely and, at the very least, to limit the damage that that dislocation is going to cause for vulnerable people in our community, many of whom are dementia care patients?

Mr Hamilton: Given the fact that it is an incredibly serious issue that affects 254 residents and their families, and, indeed, over 300 staff, it is disappointing that the Member, in his opening comments, chose to make a baseless political attack on me. It is absolutely disgraceful that, on such an important issue, the Member seeks to do that without any justification whatsoever.

I am aware that there is a range of issues facing the sector. The Member mentioned some of them around staffing issues and a shortage of nurses, which is something that that sector, all sectors in health and social care, and, indeed, all parts of the United Kingdom and far beyond, are facing. I am aware that there are concerns expressed by the sector about the impact, for example, of a national living wage, which has not been implemented yet and therefore had no direct bearing on this set of circumstances.

I was and am aware of the issues pertaining to this particular provider. That is why pointing the finger of blame in my direction, as the Member has sought to do, is completely baseless. A recent media report highlighted the fact that Four Seasons is a particularly indebted company, which, according to a recent report in 'The Guardian', is paying more than £50 million a year in interest on debts of £500 million. Paying over 10% on your debts is an incredibly high rate for any firm and makes it very difficult for a company of any size to deal with, even the biggest care provider in the UK. Particular issues with the company's finances and debt led it to take this decision.

My job is to work with Four Seasons as best I can and ensure that the whole health and social care family, as I outlined, works with the company to minimise the disruption that will be faced by the 254 residents and get them appropriate new accommodation as close to their current location as possible. I will make sure that the trusts, the board and the regulator all work together and closely with Four Seasons to make sure that what is a very difficult period of uncertainty and anxiety for those residents is not made any more difficult.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I remind the Minister about the two-minute rule.

Mr McKinney: I am glad that the Minister has reflected on the financial nature of the company at the centre of all of this, because that only underscores that the Minister knew and knows intimately of the pressures on this company and, therefore, of the threat to the 254 residents and 300 staff. Will the Minister now reflect again on the perilous nature of the situation that those staff and patients face as a result of the continued mechanism, if you like, of private sector provision? Will he now begin to underscore that it is the public sector that can intervene most profitably for patients in this case?

Mr Hamilton: Let us not conflate the issues. The homes looked at more recently by various trusts were, of course, residential care homes. These homes are more on the nursing care side, where a very different level of care is provided to meet the needs of residents. Last week, I took a decision to halt and review consultations on the potential closure of some statutory residential care homes. It was only right to do so in a period of obvious volatility in the market, when the biggest provider in the independent sector in Northern Ireland is in the difficulties that it is. I think that it was only right that I paused, reflected on and carefully considered the whole range of circumstances.

The Member's point about the care provided in the public sector is right, in that the public sector provides a very high standard of care, whether nursing or residential. However, that does not mean that the standard of care provided in the private sector is any less high quality. Unfortunately, debates such as this can sometimes be seen as knocking the private or independent sector. The Member is shaking his head, and I appreciate that he does not perhaps mean or seek to imply that, but we should acknowledge that our independent sector plays a vital role in providing care, whether residential or nursing, for many older people across Northern Ireland. It will continue to do so into the future. Many great people work in that sector to ensure that our older people get the quality and standard of care that they require.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: I thank the Minister for the answer to the question. Specifically, does he agree now that this is perceived as a failure in planning for our ageing population by him, his predecessors or those with departmental responsibilities? Will he clarify whether the halt in the review process will allow readmissions to some statutory care homes?

Mr Hamilton: I do not accept the premise of the first point about a failure by me or my predecessors. The issues with the particular provider that is closing the seven homes developed over the recent while. Although we have been aware of difficulties that it was facing, we were not aware until very latterly that, specifically, it was to close the seven homes indicated last Tuesday. I do not accept that there was much that I could have done, as Health Minister in a devolved region, to bail out a company paying over 10% on its debts and in such a difficult financial position.

There was probably very little that I could have done to arrest that.

In respect of reopening admissions, some of the consultations undertaken by the trusts on statutory residential care homes recommended that some of those homes be kept and reopened for admissions. I want to see that proceed, but I am open to the idea of reopening admissions in particular areas if that is the appropriate thing to do. It is not something that I can say authoritatively is the best thing to do in every case, but it is certainly something that I would like the board and the trusts to reflect on in the current circumstances with the volatility that there is in the market. If it is the right thing to do, I hope that they will do it.

Mr Easton: Is the Minister aware of any outside providers showing an interest in taking over the homes?

Mr Hamilton: While some might wish to use this example of a firm that has had well-publicised difficulties to have a go at the independent sector and say that it is not the best way to provide care for our elderly people, I understand from media reports in the immediate aftermath of the announcement by Four Seasons to close the seven homes that other firms have indicated a desire to look at them, take them over and run them as a viable business. That has certainly been in the public domain. I have also met other independent providers who are not in the Northern Ireland market but are expressing an interest in being in it. Whilst there has been an issue with one provider and its viability, there are others expressing an interest in the seven homes and in coming into the Northern Ireland market. Whilst we are very concerned about what is happening with Four Seasons and are keeping a watching brief on it, there are others in the independent sector who see opportunities in Northern Ireland.

Mrs Dobson: I thank the Minister for his answers. Being parochial, I must say that the closure of Donaghcloney Care Home in my constituency will affect 65 families — 24 residents and 41 staff — in the mouth of Christmas. What impact have the wage-rate bands for carers in the private sector and, as we said earlier, the difficulty in obtaining a sustainable supply of nurses had in the closure of the homes? Will you update the House on the discussions that you have had with Four Seasons, which, I gather, took place this morning, on these issues, which, if not addressed directly, could result in further disappointing announcements?

Mr Hamilton: I have not yet met Four Seasons. The Department has been aware of issues with Four Seasons for some time and will continue to discuss them with the company on an ongoing basis, particularly the impact of closing the seven homes. The Member is right to highlight the impact that it has on very vulnerable individuals and the concern that that will cause their families; she is also right that it is a particularly difficult time of the year. That is why I want to see my Department working very closely with others in the health and social care family and directly with Four Seasons to ensure that the disruption that there will be is minimised and that people can be accommodated in suitable accommodation as close to their current location as possible.

In answer to the questions about the impact of wages and a shortage of nurses on this decision, I think that it has been minimal. The reality of the situation with this provider is as I have outlined, with well-publicised media reports on its indebtedness and the impact that that is having on its profitability, which gives us some cause for concern.

I do not for a second denigrate or seek to diminish the issues that the Member raises about the availability of nurses or about wages and the impact that a national living wage may have on this and other sectors in health and social care, but the direct impact on this issue has been minimal. What has driven the firm to announce these closures and other closures across the UK is the fact that it is a heavily indebted private company that is having to take these decisions to ensure its longer-term survival.

3.45 pm

Mr Dickson: Thank you for your answers so far, Minister. Given your undertaking to the House this afternoon to work with relatives to ensure that residents are provided with the best possible care in alternative accommodation, can you assure the House that you will not oversee residents from these homes going into establishments that have been highly criticised by the RQIA, like Cherry Tree House in Carrickfergus? Will you undertake, as your predecessor failed to do, to meet me and get appropriate outcomes for the people who feel very let down by Cherry Tree House nursing home?

Mr Hamilton: I know that the Member has an interest in that home. He has corresponded with me about it, and, I think, he met a previous Health Minister — I cannot remember which one it was — about it. Obviously, we want to see standards of care in all our residential homes and nursing homes, whether in the statutory or independent sectors, at the highest possible level. I want to see the 254 residents affected by the seven closures in the most appropriate accommodation for them, which is obviously accommodation of a high standard. I will look to my officials, as they work with Four Seasons, to ensure that the residents get the most appropriate accommodation and that that accommodation is as close to where they are currently located as possible. I do not think that anybody would want to see them in accommodation or homes that are not suitable for them or are not good homes providing good standards of care.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Rightly, there is a high level of interest in the matter. I ask Members, when they are called, to keep their question short so that we can get the maximum number of questions answered by the Minister.

Mr Buchanan: How much does the health service provide for the care of individuals in these homes on a weekly basis?

Mr Hamilton: A tariff is worked out on annual basis with the Health and Social Care Board and the sector. It differs between residential care and nursing care: £470 per week is provided for those in residential care and £593 per week is provided for those in nursing care. While there are perhaps some differences in other UK regions and some local authorities paying a little bit more, my understanding is that the rates compare pretty favourably with those provided across the United Kingdom.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call Mr Cathal Boylan.

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. The Minister has said that he will endeavour to minimise the disruption to residents, staff and families, but I wonder how that is possible in places like Garvagh, where the nearest available nursing home spaces might be as much as 30 or 40 miles away.

Mr Hamilton: Mr Boylan has changed somewhat in the last number of days. He may have become a ventriloquist, using somebody else and throwing his voice. I am sure that that is the question that Mr Boylan would have asked anyway.

I appreciate there will be difficulties in doing this. It is not an easy undertaking to move 254 residents in pretty short order. It highlights the difficulties that have arisen because of a decision taken by Four Seasons to do this for its own commercial reasons. All that I can say is that I will ensure that everything that can be done to minimise that disruption is done. It is in nobody's interest to have residents, who are vulnerable people, being caused confusion and anxiety by the fact that they have to move. Nobody wants to see them traumatised any further. We want to minimise the disruption and ensure that they are moved to appropriate accommodation as close to their current location as possible. I appreciate that that will be tricky in some cases, but the Member, the House and, more importantly, the residents have my categorical assurance that we will do our very best.

Mrs Cameron: How does the Minister make assessments on the potential volatility of the independent sector market?

Mr Hamilton: There are obviously concerns created by the particular circumstances of Four Seasons that raise issues around the current volatility in the sector. That is why it was important that I decided last week to halt and review the consultations in respect of statutory residential care homes.

I think that it is important that we go further than that and get a better picture. Given what has happened with Four Seasons, given what representatives of the sector have said in the media, without any substantiation, I might add, but worth listening to nonetheless, and given the issues that are looming around wages, a national living wage, and, indeed, the provision of appropriate nursing staff, it is only right and proper that we reflect on the current market position within residential and nursing care. As a result of that, I have asked officials to bring forward a detailed report on the care market in Northern Ireland, with an emphasis on the economic outlook and the longer-term sustainability of the current arrangements. That will be used to improve our understanding of the current challenges, and it will be used as a platform for developing our policy and operational responses moving forward. It is incredibly important that we undertake that work.

Given the issues with Four Seasons and the concerns that have been expressed elsewhere in the independent sector, it is only right that we get a view and an analysis of where the sector currently is.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. The Minister is aware of the situation in Armagh. The Hamilton care home in Armagh has 31 patients and provides 54 jobs. Will Minister give assurances that those people will be relocated, with proper care facilities, and that jobs will be retained? After all, Armagh has been renowned for the great skill sets in healthcare that have been provided down through the years, and it has seen nothing but closure and the relocation of jobs over the last number of years. I would like the Minister to give an assurance to those people and patients that he will care for them and cover the Hamilton care home.

Mr Hamilton: Unfortunately, I cannot give the assurance on jobs that the Member is looking for, because they are not my jobs to save or rescue in the way that he is asking me to do. These are people who are employed by Four Seasons. I look to Four Seasons to act as a compassionate employer in such circumstances and to do its best to relocate the staff to jobs elsewhere in the group. I think that it has made some indications that that is the intention. Staff are, primarily, the responsibility of the employer, but I think that we all would want to see them treated with dignity and respect. Equally, we want to see residents treated with dignity and respect and, as I said in response to other Members, moved, with minimal disruption, to appropriate accommodation close to where they currently live. I know that that will be challenging, but that is certainly the aim, and it is certainly what I will be ensuring that officials from my Department, and others within health and social care, ensure happens.

Mr Rogers: I thank the Minister for his answers thus far. There are many residents and staff in Oakridge, in south Down. You made an important distinction between residential care and nursing care, and the complex needs of nursing care. What extra support will be available for residential homes if they are to accommodate some of the people who will be moved from a Four Seasons home?

Mr Hamilton: The Member is right; there is an important distinction. It is important that we follow that distinction through in terms of the question that he has asked about moving people with complex nursing needs into a residential care home. That would not be appropriate, particularly for those who have very, very complex needs. They would not get the standard of care that we all want to see them get. So, we need to be careful and mindful of the fact that the statutory residential care homes are not a solution for those who have complex nursing care needs. However, that does not mean that there may not be opportunities elsewhere in the state sector, or, indeed, the independent sector, to look after those who have complex nursing needs. That is why I think it is important to emphasise that we want to see these residents get the appropriate care that they need — in most cases, that will be nursing care — and to try to get that as close to their current location as possible. That is certainly what we will be working to, but it is not going to be a matter of moving people who have complex nursing care needs into residential care homes. That would not be right for them, and it would not be something that we could stand over with regard to quality.

Mr Kennedy: I thank the Minister for his previous answers. What discussions can he indicate have taken place between the local health trust, the Southern Trust, and those who are in charge of Hamilton Court Care Home in Armagh, in my constituency, about priority being given to ensure the safe relocation of residents to other centres of care in the Armagh area, with full consultation with relatives, and that the Hamilton Court staff who are affected will be provided with realistic job opportunities either by Four Seasons or other healthcare providers in the Armagh area?

Mr Hamilton: Working backwards; we will be looking primarily to Four Seasons to provide other employment opportunities for its staff. That may well be, as the Member says, elsewhere within that organisation or indeed there may be a possibility, given the staff shortages that there are in different homes in different parts of Northern Ireland, for people to move into other jobs with other providers. I cannot give him a categorical list of what communications the Southern Trust has had. I will write to the Member about that. The Southern Trust, like the other trusts, is involved in the joint working group that I outlined in my original answer and indeed the multidisciplinary teams that will be set up, so there will be involvement by the Southern Trust, particularly given the impact on the Member's constituency with the home in Armagh. Again, we are looking to the trust to work closely with the board, the regulator, the Department and indeed Four Seasons to minimise the disruption that will inevitably take place.

Mr Allister: Can the Minister please clarify whether he is reviewing the weekly tariff that is paid to the independent sector? If not, and if further closures follow, could he remind the House what, in comparison, it costs to keep somebody with nursing needs within the National Health Service? Could he give us that figure?

Mr Hamilton: I have not got that figure to hand, but I will provide it to the Member and copy it to other Members. I am aware that the independent sector, principally Four Seasons itself, as one would expect, has been making all sorts of suggestions about the suitability of the tariff. We have looked at and compared the tariff to other local authorities elsewhere in the United Kingdom, and it compares favourably. I am not saying that it is the highest or that others do not pay more in some cases, but what we pay compares favourably to what is paid by local authorities across the water. Independent sector care providers may make some suggestions about the level of the tariff and the impact that that is having. I do not think that we should take what they are saying at face value. That is why I have asked for a piece of work to be done to review the state of the whole sector in Northern Ireland with the impact of the range of challenges that they are facing, whether that is around the national living wage, the availability of nurses or indeed the payments that are made to them by government. What I am doing is getting that overall snapshot and picture of where the sector is and how stable or otherwise the market currently is, not a review of the tariff itself.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. Can he outline whether residents or their families will be impacted detrimentally in their weekly contributions?

Mr Hamilton: Obviously a tariff is paid and many residents and their families pay top-ups over and above that for a higher or different standard of care. One of the things that I said last week — and just to try to take away some of the concerns that may well be there from this week — is that I gave an assurance that residents will not be financially disadvantaged by any move that they might make. That is because it will be difficult enough for residents and their families to deal with the situation that has unfolded in the last week without having that added pressure and burden of worrying about the fact that they are moving from one accommodation to another and there might be slightly more to pay. It is important that we dealt with that last week. That is why I gave that assurance. If the trust finds a resident a new placement, it will not cost them any more than their current placement. However, personal choice is always a key element of decisions about where people want to go. Residents remain free to make their own arrangements about their new placement, though this may have financial implications for them. If they move to similar accommodation, we will certainly ensure that they are not out of pocket any more than they already are.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the last Member, Mr Swann, to keep his question brief.

Mr Swann: I thank the Minister for that last answer. I attended a meeting in Garvagh Care Home. I was invited by one of its north Antrim residents and their family. My question is specifically on the Minister's last answer that families will not be disadvantaged financially.

If a resident were to move from one Four Seasons home to another, could Four Seasons add a premium and, in doing so, get paid more for the resident being in the second home than it did from the resident being in the first?

4.00 pm

Mr Hamilton: It depends. I know that the Member has taken an interest in the issue because he tabled a question for written answer to me about it.

Our job is to work with others, including Four Seasons, to get appropriate accommodation for residents. We will seek to find similar accommodation in the vicinity so that people can move with a minimum amount of disruption. As I mentioned in my response to Mr Middleton, it may be the case that, out of personal choice, some residents want to go somewhere that perhaps has a different or higher standard of care and, as such, attracts an additional payment. That is a matter for residents and their families to decide on. The assurance that I am giving is that, where they are moving to similar suitable accommodation, people will not be out of pocket as a result.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before we return to the debate on the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill, I ask Members to take their ease, while we change the top Table.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

Mr Lunn: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Last Tuesday, I was supposed to ask a question of the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, but I was not in my place. I want to apologise to Mr Newton, the Principal Deputy Speaker, who was in the Chair; the Minister; and the House.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): That will be noted.

Committee Business

Public Services Ombudsperson Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Debate resumed.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): We now return to the debate on the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill. We have come to the third group of amendments for debate. With amendment No 31, it will be convenient to debate amendment Nos 51, 75, 89, 91 and 305, which deal with powers and ambit.

Clause 13 (Meaning of action taken by a listed authority)

Mr Beggs: I beg to move amendment No 31: In page 6, line 2, at end insert "(d) any person appointed by a Northern Ireland Minister to a position in the Northern Ireland Civil Service as a special adviser if the listed authority is a Northern Ireland department."

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 51: In clause 22, page 9, line 11, leave out "Assembly Commission" and insert

"Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister".— [Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister).]

No 75: In clause 30, page 11, line 29, leave out from " , and" to end of line 31 and insert

"(8) The Ombudsman shall, on receipt of a request from any person, ensure that that person shall be represented in the investigation by counsel, solicitor or otherwise."— [Mr A Maginness.]

No 89: In clause 34, page 13, line 25, leave out paragraph (b).— [Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister).]

No 91: In clause 34, page 13, line 27, leave out subsection (2).— [Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister).]

No 305: In schedule 7, page 45, line 40, at end insert

"(b) paragraph 16 (advisers) applies in relation to the functions of the Commissioner under this Part as it applies in relation to the functions of the Ombudsman under the 2015 Act."— [Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister).]

Mr Beggs: I open the debate on the third group of amendments by highlighting my concerns, particularly with clause 13. I will concentrate my comments on amendment No 31, which was tabled in my name.

Why do I have concerns about the current wording in the Bill, and why do I think that an amendment is required? First, I will highlight how inappropriate actions by special advisers are not adequately covered by the legislation and regulations at present. There is concern that inappropriate actions have occurred but that there has been no role to date for the ombudsman, under the 2013 code of conduct for special advisers — or, for that matter, any role for the Civil Service — to instigate final disciplinary investigations.

Secondly, and relevant to the legislation, I will highlight my concerns about the current wording of clause 13 and explain how my amendment will strengthen the accountability of special advisers by including them under the possible scrutiny remit of the ombudsman when complaints are not addressed satisfactorily.

Paragraph 4 of the code of conduct for special advisers indicates that special advisers are civil servants who are appointed under article 3 of the Civil Service Commissioners (Northern Ireland) Order 1999, as amended. There are some exemptions, for instance on the general requirement on recruitment, and there is allowance to have a degree of a political role.

Paragraph 5 of the code of conduct for special advisers states:

"Special Advisers should conduct themselves with integrity and honesty. They should not deceive or knowingly mislead the Assembly or the public. They should not misuse their official position or information acquired in the course of their official duties to further their private interests or the private interests of others."

Paragraph 6 indicates that:

"They should act in a way which upholds the political impartiality of civil servants. They should avoid anything which might reasonably lead to the criticism that people paid from public funds are being used for party political purposes."

As a member of the Social Development Committee, which I joined on 9 February this year, I became involved in the latter parts of what came to be known as the Red Sky affair, particularly the Committee's phase 3 report, which was published on 16 April 2015, following the BBC 'Spotlight' inquiry. Amongst the summary of that report, you will find relevance to clause 13 of this legislation.

The Committee heard extensive evidence in relation to the actions of Minister McCausland's special adviser and the role of the Department for Social Development in claims about political lobbying in favour of Red Sky. In the summary, there is an indication that:

"The Committee was also concerned at Minister McCausland's refusal to inform it of any of the details of the outcome of a fact-finding exercise that was conducted in response to allegations made against the Special Adviser, Stephen Brimstone, in the Spotlight Programme until a year after the exercise had concluded. While the Committee was notified on 25 September 2013 that the exercise, which had commenced on 20 August 2013, had been completed, the Committee was only informed of Minister McCausland's decision not to initiate any further action in September 2014 despite several letters to the Department over this period seeking clarification."

"When Minister Storey released a redacted version of the report in a response to a notice compelling its release under Section 44(7) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, the Committee noted that the report recommended a formal disciplinary investigation into the behaviour of Mr Brimstone."

Indeed, that was one of the recommendations of that exploratory investigation.

The report makes fascinating reading in the comments attributed to Stephen Brimstone by, I think, Jenny Palmer including:

"We need you to do that"

Then:

"The party comes first",

And:

"there is no point in you being on the board ... unless you are prepared to do what the party needs you to do."

The Department's report was heavily redacted and, indeed, of the 13 paragraphs of conclusion, only paragraph 12 was not redacted. Of the four paragraphs of recommendations, two and a half were redacted. What remained was fascinating. There was a formal recommendation:

"In view of the above conclusions and evidence presented in this short report, it is recommended that a formal disciplinary investigation into the behaviour of SB be commenced."

At present, we have a system that uncovered wrongdoing and, at the end of it, one would have expected action to clarify exactly what happened and whether or not formal disciplinary action would have been required.

I will now examine the evidence given to the Committee and refer to the special advisers' code of conduct which states that there should be integrity and honesty and that special advisers should not knowingly mislead the Assembly. My Committee colleagues concluded that Mr Brimstone was not a very convincing witness. The number of times that the answer to a question was "I do not recall" was remarkable. For that reason, I highlight the fact that the current system of scrutinising special advisers should be included under the powers of the ombudsman, and we have an opportunity today to do that.

The Committee found that, surprisingly, the decision following the recommendation for a formal disciplinary inquiry fell not to the Civil Service but to the Minister. What would happen if a special adviser, on the encouragement of his or her Minister, acted outside the code of conduct? Does anyone think that such a Minister would agree to initiate an investigatory disciplinary action against their special adviser? There is clearly a weakness in the system. My concern is that the Bill may not be specific enough and may enable that to continue. My understanding is that in Westminster, Cardiff, Edinburgh and the Dáil in Dublin, if such a thing were to happen, public and media pressure would require that the issue be dealt with appropriately. Why not do that in Belfast? It has not happened in Belfast. I do not know whether it is down to our special arrangements about appointments. It is unhealthy that there is a lack of clarity on whether the code of conduct has been followed or, as many suspect, breached.

For that reason, I wish to examine clause 13 in detail. Clause 13 is headed: "Meaning of action taken by a listed authority". Clause 12 lists those authorities, and it refers to schedule 3. Departments are a listed authority, so, at first glance, one could think, "Happy days — everything is sorted. There is clear scrutiny and accountability that the ombudsman could investigate". However, in clause 13 — "Meaning of action taken by a listed authority" — I have a concern about subsection (1)(b):

"a member, officer or member of staff of the authority acting in the discharge of functions of the authority".

My reading is that, when an individual acts in the discharge of functions under that authority, he becomes accountable to the ombudsman in the current legislation. The problem, however, with the case that I have highlighted is that many believe that the individual was acting far beyond the code of conduct of a special adviser. We should endeavour to ensure that such a thing does not happen again and that we do not face a situation in which a Minister could shield a special adviser who may not have acted appropriately under the code of conduct.

4.15 pm

I turn to the specifics of amendment No 31, which is in my name. The clause currently reads:

"Action is taken by a listed authority if it is taken by—".

The amendment would insert:

"any person appointed by a Northern Ireland Minister to a position in the Northern Ireland Civil Service as a special adviser if the listed authority is a Northern Ireland department".

There are no avoidance clauses that might restrict the investigation if an individual has acted outside the normal Civil Service guidance. There might be a case in the future where this happens again and a Minister does not permit a recommendation that has come up from the Civil Service — actually, from the Department of Finance and Personnel — which scrutinised the individual against the code of conduct that the Assembly agreed in 2013. If there is a recommendation that there should be formal disciplinary action, this would be a mechanism whereby an ombudsman could step in should a Minister decide to shield an individual for whatever reason. There would be openness and accountability, and such action could not occur again in the future.

I have indicated to Members that there has been a problem in the past. I have also indicated that the current wording may well have a very significant gap. I ask you to support amendment No 31.

Lord Morrow (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Committee on the Public Services Ombudsperson Bill):

The Committee did not have sight of the amendments in the group prior to its formal clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill and therefore has not taken a view on them. However, the Committee gave careful consideration to an issue that is addressed by amendment No 75, which is in the names of Mr Lunn and Mr Maginness. That being the case, I shall briefly set out what the Committee's position was.

The Law Society of Northern Ireland, Colleges NI, the Bar Council, the Medical Protection Society and the British Medical Association all raised concerns that clause 30 would create a fundamental imbalance in favour of the ombudsperson. They said that its provisions appeared incompatible with the basic right to legal representation and that this raised serious issues about proportionality and the right to a fair hearing under article 6 of the European Convention on Human Rights. In addition, the stakeholders expressed concerns about other clauses and the basic right against self-incrimination and the right of legal professional privilege. The Committee considered those issues at length and sought its own legal advice. However, having considered that advice and discussed it at some length, the Committee was satisfied that, in respect of clause 30, the discretion provided to the ombudsman was capable of being exercised in accordance with the principles of fairness and did not give rise to a breach of convention rights. Accordingly, the Committee was satisfied with clause 30, but, in reporting that, we agreed to highlight the fact that Mr Maginness, Mr Eastwood and Mr Lunn had expressed concerns about the issue.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I will make a couple of brief points, if I might. I will be against amendment No 31. When Mr Beggs cites the example from the Social Development Committee, he actually, in a way, defeats his own argument. Looking at the totality of that and how it worked out, if you had amended the NIPSO Bill in this way, it still would not have had any effect because of the nature of the evidence given. You will recall that people gave evidence under affirmation and so on, so an amendment such as this would not have taken effect.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr Maskey: Yes.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member accept that, with the amendment, if inappropriate action is taken, the ombudsman can step in? You say that this would not help: do you not find it rather strange that, in that case, instead of facing formal disciplinary action, the special adviser was promoted?

Mr Maskey: I do not want to go into any of that, and I do not want to rehearse the Committee's inquiry. It was a lengthy inquiry. I simply make the point that, if amendment No 31 had been in effect at the time, it would not have had any impact at all on the working of that Committee inquiry. The Member will know that there was a lengthy inquiry. People were brought in and gave their evidence. People were brought in on more than one occasion to give evidence. There was conflicting evidence. People gave evidence under oath or affirmation. That is the way it happened. The Committee had all and ample power to investigate what happened there and reach its ultimate conclusions.

I just make the point that I am not supporting the amendment, because it will not have any impact. Probably more importantly, the legislation refers specifically to people who will discharge or exercise functions of the Department: SpAds, by their very nature, cannot, should not and must not discharge the functions of a Department. I accept entirely that issues were brought to light, particularly DSD-related issues. By the same token, those deficits — I accept that there are deficits — are better dealt with elsewhere, not least in the code of conduct.

The other amendment relates to the complaints-handling procedure —

Mr Beggs: I thank the Member for giving way. The Member says that the issue should be dealt with under the code of conduct: the code of conduct worked. The matter was investigated by the Department of Finance and Personnel, and issues of a potentially disciplinary nature were highlighted. The Department then duly recommended a formal disciplinary investigation of a senior member of the Northern Ireland Civil Service who happened to be a special adviser, but guess what? Approval from the Minister was required, and, when that was not forthcoming, nothing happened. My point is that the current code of conduct system is not working.

Mr Maskey: You may want to continue rehearsing the inquiry. That is one example that you have experienced, and that is all very well. Some of us would share that view. I simply make the point that the deficit that you identify is not best dealt with in the Bill, which is specific legislation dealing with a particular function. SpAds are not supposed to discharge any function of a Department. Therefore, you have to find another way to make sure that that is being rigidly upheld. That would not be best dealt with here. The experience that we have had so far underpins that view. On that basis, we do not support amendment No 31.

I do not for one second dismiss some of your concerns; I am simply saying that they are best dealt with elsewhere. I share your view that those deficits need to be dealt with and have not yet been dealt with. If the code of conduct worked as effectively as you suggest, you might have had a different outcome. It is best to deal with those deficits of accountability elsewhere, not in the Bill.

There are a number of other technical amendments. The complaints-handling procedure is legislation that we have, if you like, embraced from elsewhere. On that basis, we are prepared to support the rest of the amendments.

Mr A Maginness: The thrust of my comments relates to the amendment to clause 30, which deals with potential representation for those subject to investigation. Hitherto, under the Commissioner for Complaints (Northern Ireland) Order 1996, legal and other representation was available in certain circumstances under article 12(7):

"If at any time during the course of an investigation it appears to the Commissioner that there may be grounds for making any report or recommendation that may adversely affect any body or person, the Commissioner shall give to that body or person, if it or he so desires —

(a) the opportunity of being examined by its or his own solicitor or counsel; and

(b) the opportunity of testing by cross-examination, by its or his own solicitor or counsel or otherwise, any evidence which may affect it or him."

It is plain that the right of legal or other representation, such as by a trades union or by a professional organisation, is given under article 12 of the 1996 Order.

Clause 30(7) allows representation to take place at the discretion of the ombudsman. If the Bill goes through in its present form, with subsection 7, any representation will be at the discretion of the ombudsman. That is a departure from the current position where, on request to the ombudsman, a person against whom a complaint has been laid can ask, in certain circumstances, for representation. That, I believe, is right and proper. A person should have the opportunity to have legal or professional representation if they want it. I do not understand why there is a departure from the 1996 Order. It does not seem to me that there has been any abuse of that representation hitherto; if there has been, it has certainly not been highlighted.

There needs to be a real and serious explanation for this departure. That is the reason why Mr Lunn and I brought forward this amendment: it allows a person who requests representation, in certain circumstances, to be granted it. It seems to me that this is supported, and the Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee mentioned this in his remarks to the Chamber, by the Bar Council and also by the Law Society, as I understand. It is also supported by organisations such as the BMA.

It may seem of little consequence to most Members whether representation is discretionary or otherwise. However, anybody under investigation and subject to a potentially adverse impact on his or her professional life and, indeed, livelihood, should be afforded legal representation where they want it, at their own expense, of course. One does not demand that the state, or anybody else, cover such expenditure.

It engages article 6 rights under the European Convention: the right to a fair trial. It is right and proper that the Assembly is cognisant of that. I also note, of course, that the present ombudsman has given very useful and helpful comments in relation to all this legislation and, in particular, the issue arising out of discretionary representation. The ombudsman says that he will carefully reflect on that representation and will exercise his function and discretion reasonably, as one would expect. We cannot, however, when making law in this House, simply rely on the goodwill or experience of the ombudsman to reassure ourselves that article 6 rights and the general right to representation are being properly afforded to individuals in difficult circumstances. It is right and proper that this amendment has been brought to rectify the situation by ensuring that representation will be there on request, rather than at the discretion of the ombudsman. I believe that there are strong arguments for the change. Indeed, the merits of the case being put forward are irresistible. The House should not support what is currently in clause 30(7)(b), but should prefer the amendment. I will leave it there.

4.30 pm

Mr Lunn: I am happy to support what Mr Maginness has said. I wonder in what circumstances currently the ombudsman would refuse a reasonable request for legal representation or representation by somebody else — a trade union representative or even an MLA. There would have to be a really valid reason for refusing representation, but I am not at all clear what that might be, bearing in mind that this process, which starts with an ombudsman's hearing, terminates in a judgement and a recommended award, which are then challengeable by either party through a County Court action or judicial review.

The British Medical Association, in particular, said that it would like its members to be represented properly from the outset of proceedings, rather than have to bring in legal representation at some future stage.

The ombudsman has unlimited powers to make a recommendation for financial redress. It is quite a serious thing. The process, if not a court process, effectively has the status of one, and the potential effect on a defendant's reputation is severe.

It is quite simple. It is currently at the discretion of the ombudsman to allow legal representation if he thinks fit. All we want to do is change that to a situation where he cannot refuse, if the defendant or the complainant think that they need it. That seems entirely reasonable to me. I understand that the wording goes right back to a 1969 Order, which was read out to me over lunchtime. It is pretty much the same thing.

Frankly, I do not understand the objection made by the Committee for OFMDFM. The matter was thoroughly discussed at the Ad Hoc Committee, and while only three of us, I think, indicated our dissent, I got the feeling that the Committee, as a whole, was probably in favour of an amendment along these lines.

I hope that, even at this late stage, the House can see the sense of the amendment and will be swayed by Mr Maginness's and my argument for allowing something that is relatively simple and, to me, is a requirement of natural justice. It gives us an assurance that every once in a while a case going before the ombudsman will not fall foul of the system because the person should have had legal representation. Unfortunately, as things stand at present, once a thing starts it is too late to do anything about it. I do not know if it is at the discretion of the ombudsman to decide halfway through his process, "No, hold on. You need legal representation." That would be entirely unsatisfactory because the person under pressure may have done their case some damage before the ombudsman took that decision.

It is all unnecessary. If somebody wants legal representation, or representation by a trade union, an MLA or whatever, I see no reason why they should not have it. It will not add to the costs of the ombudsman's process.

Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister):

I thank Mr Lunn for giving way. I just want to clarify: does he share the same concerns that he has articulated with regard to that clause as he does with the historical institutional abuse inquiry and the powers that have been conferred to Sir Anthony Hart as its chair with regard to whether victims who appear before the inquiry can have their own legal representation?

Mr Lunn: I had not thought to compare those two situations, but, off the top of my head, I would say yes. People who appear before the historical abuse inquiry should certainly have the option, at their own request, for legal representation if they so desire.

That is really all I have to say about it. I hope that good sense will prevail and that the House will carry the amendment.

Mr Allister: I want to speak in support of Mr Beggs's amendment, amendment No 31. It plugs an obvious gap in respect of a complainant.

I think that some people may have misunderstood the import of the amendment. It will give a remedy to someone like Jenny Palmer, who felt that she had been bullied and oppressed by a special adviser. That special adviser was protected internally from any discipline by his Minister, who superseded and overrode a recommendation to that effect. The individual who was affected, Mrs Palmer, was effectively left without remedy. The amendment would give her the potential of a remedy by making a complaint to the ombudsman about the bullying and oppressive behaviour to which she was subjected by a fully paid civil servant under the guise of being a special adviser.

When Mr Brimstone did what he did to Mrs Palmer, he was being paid out of the public purse as a civil servant. Therefore, his actions should be subject to such restraint as the ombudsman can bring. Thus, it seems to me that the amendment is a sensible extension to that protection. It would make it abundantly clear that civil servants are not above the law of the ombudsman but are caught by it, and, therefore, someone like Mrs Palmer could have complained about the oppressive and bullying behaviour to which she was subjected.

I do not think that that is anything that anyone should dissent from, apart from those with a vested interest. Of course, that is, sadly, the same vested interest that closed down the opportunity to deal with the issue in the Special Adviser's Bill a couple of months ago. That would have made sure that there could not be a superseding of disciplinary proceedings and that special advisers would be subject to the same discipline as civil servants. I suspect that those with the same vested interest that closed that down will close this down. On that, they are again wrong and only expose their vested interest. I support the amendment.

Mr Nesbitt: The Committee for OFMDFM has had an opportunity to consider amendment No 31, and it was not content to support it. Committee members noted the restrictions that have been placed on a special adviser by section 7 of the Civil Service (Special Advisers) Act (Northern Ireland) 2013 and the code of conduct. A special adviser does not have power to:

“authorise the expenditure of public funds ... exercise any power in relation to the management of any part of the Northern Ireland Civil Service, or ... otherwise exercise any power conferred by or under any statutory provision, or any power under the prerogative”.

If there were any action of a special adviser that could give rise to a complaint to the NIPSO, the Committee remained to be convinced that it would not be caught within one of the categories that are provided for under subsections (a) to (d) in clause 13 of the proposed NIPSO legislation.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Nesbitt: Yes.

Mr Allister: The Chairman refers to the protection of the code of conduct, but the whole point at the heart of this is that, yes, there were findings, it appears, by DFP of breach of the code of conduct by Mr Brimstone, but his Minister was able to supersede and override that and protect him from any consequences, leaving the individual affected by the oppressive bullying without a remedy. Surely, the Committee cannot take refuge in saying that the code of conduct is adequate if the track record is of the code of conduct being sidelined.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank the Member for his intervention. I do not disagree with him that there is a loophole, but I disagree with him about the correct vehicle for closing the loophole. I emphasise once again that the Committee has considered amendment No 31 and was not content to support it.

Amendment No 51 is a proposal from the Committee. It provides that the power in clause 22 to amend the schedule of excluded matters, which the Bill currently assigns to the Assembly Commission, would lie with the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. The Committee considered that, as the power touches on policy, it was better to leave the initiative for change with OFMDFM, as it is in the current 1996 Orders. The Committee's amendment — amendment No 52, which was debated earlier — would, if made, provide that OFMDFM must consult the NIPSO and anyone else OFMDFM considers appropriate before exercising the power. In addition, the order must be laid in draft and approved by the Assembly before it is made.

Amendment No 75 makes provision for legal representation in an investigation by the NIPSO. The Committee had an opportunity to consider the amendment and agreed that it could not support it. It would appear to require that the NIPSO pay for the legal representation of any person who requests it in the context of an investigation. It is difficult to see how else the NIPSO could —

Mr A Maginness: Will the Member give way?

Mr Nesbitt: I will give way in one moment, because I want to make this point for Mr Maginness to address. It is difficult to see how else the NIPSO could satisfy the wording of the amendment, which is:

“ensure that that person shall be represented”.

Mr A Maginness: It is taken for granted that, if anybody has requested representation and been granted it, the cost of that representation is borne by the person who has requested it. There has never been any discussion about the NIPSO paying for representation for anybody whom it may grant representation to, even under the present draft Bill, because it is naturally assumed that, if you are making such representations and you are granted that, you pay for it yourself. I cannot see how one can in any way infer that from the simple meaning of the amendment that has been tabled.

Mr Nesbitt: The Member uses phraseology that gives me cause for concern: he says “assume”. The Member is much better qualified in law than I am, but assumptions can be challenged. To my mind, he has not assured me that you can ensure that that person shall be represented, as is the wording of amendment No 75:

“The Ombudsman shall, on receipt of a request from any person, ensure that that person shall be represented in the investigation by counsel, solicitor or otherwise.”

How can you ensure if there is a question of costs? How can we be assured — how can we assume — that that person can afford the costs?

I again make the point, looking at the legal representation that is provided in the historical institutional abuse inquiry, that we have a different regime. I am not sure whether Mr Lunn or indeed Mr Maginness questioned the provisions for legal representation for victims appearing before Sir Anthony Hart. I will give way if the Member wishes to —

4.45 pm

Mr Lunn: Will you give way to me?

Mr Nesbitt: I will give way to you both — Mr Lunn first.

Mr Lunn: I thank the Chair for giving way. If this is the only reason why the OFMDFM Committee objects to the amendment, it really does not withstand scrutiny, with due respect to the Chair. The original wording states:

“the Ombudsman may ... determine whether any person may be represented”.

The word that he is taking exception to in the amendment is “ensure”. I really wonder what the difference is. There is no question here — Mr Maginness is right — of the ombudsman’s office being asked to pay for legal representation. If that had been the intention, we would have said so. It does not mention legal aid, assistance or anything else. There is absolutely nothing in that amendment that gives rise to the assumption that payment by the ombudsman’s office or some sort of legal aid would be required. It is just not there.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank the Member for the attempted clarification, but it does not cut it for me. “The ombudsman may determine” means that he makes a choice — he determines. Is it A, or is it B? Is it “Yes, you can have representation” or is it “No, you cannot”? Your verb, however, is that he must “ensure”. It puts a duty on him and leaves him no choice of determination either way. That, for me, is the fundamental difference. I give way to Mr Maginness.

Mr A Maginness: I just reiterate the point that the amendment does not imply in any way that the cost or the burden of such representation should be borne by the NIPSO. It is clear from the wording that you cannot infer that. It would certainly be very strange in the circumstances of somebody requesting representation saying, “And, by the way, you will pay for this as well”. It is just not something that can be imported into that amendment. It is clear from the points that have been made in the debate that that was never the intention.

Mr Maskey: I thank Mr Nesbitt for further giving way. I know that you sought clarification from the Members who propose the amendment, and that is fine. I think that they have explained what they meant, but that certainly would not have been the reading of the amendment as the Committee had to consider it. As Chair of the Committee, will the Member confirm that the entire — in fact, unanimous — view of the Committee of the policy intent here, from day one, was to make sure that we had a process and a system that would maximise protection for citizens but not in a way that is just completely litigation-driven? We worked on the premise that one lawyer begets another, and that brings it into an entirely different scenario that the Committee had unanimously always sought to avoid. Where we can, we must avoid moving towards that process.

Mr Nesbitt: I am happy to give the assurance that Mr Maskey asks for. I have said previously in the debate that the idea is that the NIPSO is an alternative process for resolution, beyond the courts. However, within that process, I also give the assurance that, where possible, we prefer to go forward without legal input, although we accept that there will be circumstances and environments in which legal representation is needed.

I cannot move off the fact that I think that our use of “determine” gives some leeway to NIPSO, whereas the proposed amendment, in demanding that he “ensure” that a person be represented, removes that leeway. I again refer you to Sir Anthony Hart, who has some discretion in awarding legal representation in the historical institutional abuse inquiry.

By way of further explanation, I refer to article 12(7) of the Commissioner for Complaints (Northern Ireland) Order 1996. It provides that only where:

“it appears to the Commissioner that there may be grounds for making any report or recommendation that may adversely affect any body or person” is the commissioner required to give that body or person “the opportunity” of being examined, at their own expense, by their counsel or solicitor and by cross-examination.

The requirement to ensure is not qualified by reference to the person in question being someone who may be adversely affected by a report or recommendation that the NIPSO is contemplating, as is required by the Commissioner for Complaints (Northern Ireland) Order 1996. It seems likely that that approach would have significant cost as well as logistical implications. That takes us to Mr Maskey’s point, because if one party to a complaint lawyers-up, other parties will inevitably feel obliged to do likewise.

As it stands, clause 30 provides that it is for the NIPSO to determine whether any person may be represented in the investigation by counsel, solicitor or otherwise. Having taken advice, the Committee is satisfied that that discretion can be exercised fairly and appropriately and in a way that is compatible with the convention rights of those affected. Accordingly, the Committee for OFMDFM cannot support that amendment.

Amendments Nos 89 and 91 are proposed by the Committee for OFMDFM to simplify the definition of “complaints handling procedure” in clause 34.

Amendment No 235 proposes a change to schedule 7 to the Bill, dealing with investigations under the Local Government (Northern Ireland) Act 2014 of alleged breaches of the local government code of conduct.

The NIPSO has a power in schedule 1(16) to obtain advice, where necessary, from suitably qualified persons to assist in the discharge of the NIPSO’s functions. That amendment, which the Committee was invited to consider by the Office of Legislative Counsel, would provide the same power where an investigation is being carried out under the Local Government Act. The Department was content with that approach.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Member for giving way. In relation to the point that you raised about representation, was there any evidence given to the Committee to suggest that there was any element of abuse of representation during the course of the investigations by the ombudsman, that it had produced a situation where the investigations were over-legalised, if I can use that term, or that there were some problems arising out of the legal representation being granted to any person or body?

I am unaware of such evidence being presented to the Ad Hoc Committee and, in the written representations made by the ombudsman, that point was not made. The ombudsman was saying, “This is an inquisitorial process. It’s much better without lawyers.” Effectively, that is what he was saying, and I agree with him. However, in certain circumstances, lawyers should be involved if people want them. I ask the Chair of the Committee for OFMDFM to confirm whether there was such evidence to suggest that that particular power should be remedied.

Mr Nesbitt: Again, I thank the Member for his enquiry. To the best of my recollection, there was no evidence of abuse through the input of legal representation; absolutely not. Was it over-legalised? Again, the evidence did not particularly suggest that that was the case. The bottom line on this, as the Member said, is that this is an inquisitorial process. As I have said before, we are trying to find an alternative to the use of the courts. The Member asks questions to promote his view. However, conversely, do we have any evidence that requests for representation had been refused? We are saying that the ombudsman will determine whether any person may be represented in the investigation by counsel, solicitor or otherwise.

The default position is that we want to try to resolve this without recourse to the law, particularly by avoiding going to court. We are offering an alternative process that will give a resolution. We are bringing together two offices: the Office of the Ombudsman and the Commissioner for Complaints. When the powers between those two bodies are different, we are levelling up in trying to favour the citizen, who is the consumer of public services. As a preference, we want this to be done without legal input, but when legal input is requested, we leave it to the ombudsman to make a determination on whether that is the right course of action. We do not, however, want to tie his or her hands and bind him or her to a regime whereby he or she must ensure that legal representation is available once again. I do not see how you can fulfil that commitment without potential costs being incurred. If you say, "I will ensure that you can have legal representation", and the reply is, "Well, Mr NIPSO, I cannot afford it", the logic is that the burden falls to the taxpayer.

Mr Beggs: It seems to me that there has been an acceptance that the current code of conduct for special advisers has been abused in the past. However, some indicated that they do not think that this is the best vehicle via which to try to plug that gap. It is certainly the view of Alex Maskey, who spoke on my amendment, that it is not the appropriate vehicle. What has not been acknowledged is that an earlier attempt to resolve this issue in specific legislation was blocked by the DUP through a petition of concern. There is a lack of clarity on what the appropriate vehicle is. There is some merit in using the ombudsman for this function and for the ombudsman to intervene, not in every case but when complaints have not been dealt with to the satisfaction of a complainant. It is important that we recognise that there is possibly a role for the ombudsman in this area. He has, of course, a degree of independence, therefore his outcomes should be respected.

I would also argue that, if the ombudsman had this power, it would have a series of knock-on effects. It may not work retrospectively, but I am trying to improve things for the future. If, in the future, a Minister knew that, if he did not act appropriately, the matter could be referred to the ombudsman and, ultimately, that inappropriate action in allowing a detailed disciplinary investigation would be exposed, I believe that Ministers would act appropriately rather than potentially expose themselves. If special advisers knew that, if they do not behave appropriately, they could be exposed through referral to the ombudsman, they would act more appropriately in the public interest. I believe that this is an appropriate vehicle. I also believe that it could drive up standards in how Ministers and civil servants behave. Even in cases in which the ombudsman may not need to intervene at all, he could bring about improvement in behaviour and a better honouring of the code of conduct that our senior civil servants who are special advisers are meant to follow.

5.00 pm

I remain of the view that the amendment has merit, and I ask Members to consider it rather than simply push it aside and say, "This isn't the right vehicle". I pose to Members these questions: what is wrong with it and what alternative vehicle is available?

Go raibh maith agat, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. While there is not time for me to go into all the items listed in the motion, I will take a short time to remind you of the role of the Public Accounts Committee (PAC) and the scope of the Committee’s work. The Committee is a Standing Committee of the Assembly, set up under the NI Act 1998 to consider accounts and reports on accounts laid before the Assembly. The accounts of all Departments and, indeed, those of most public-sector bodies are prepared and laid by the Comptroller and Auditor General (C&AG), who is head of the Audit Office here. The C&AG may also make value-for-money reports and reports on efficiencies and effectiveness.

The Audit Office's role is to examine closely public expenditure from a position of independence of government. I must commend the Audit Office for the excellent support that it has provided to the PAC, not just this year but throughout this mandate.

It has assisted the Committee in its pursuit of protecting the public purse and getting to the bottom of how public money has been spent. I am personally very grateful for the efforts that the C&AG and his team have put into supporting the Committee.

During this mandate, the PAC has worked tirelessly to reinforce the standards required of people in public life, to prevent fraud, and to encourage whistle-blowers. It has also worked on improving processes, such as the checks and controls for managing public money, promoting good governance, ensuring accountability, and striving for greater value for money for the taxpayer.

The past few years have presented new economic and social challenges. Never has ensuring good value for money been more important than it is today, with ever increasing cuts in public expenditure. It is surely in everyone's interest to want to minimise the impact of the cuts on the lives of people, particularly those who are dependent on public services and public expenditure. Maximising the effectiveness of public spending ensures improvements in productivity that ultimately protect front-line services. The PAC has the advantage of being able to look across Departments and, in so doing, identify trends and challenges that are relevant in all or many Departments and agencies.

To improve value for money performance by Departments and agencies, it is important to look at performance over time as well as at a particular point in time. Our reports have striven to do that, to reinforce lessons learnt, and to minimise the danger of making the same mistakes time and again.

The details of the motion give some indication of the wide range of work undertaken by the Public Accounts Committee in contributing to a better and more efficient delivery of our public services. PAC reports have dealt with important issues, such as tackling tenancy and other types of fraud. They also maximise opportunities to realise efficiency savings, such as those identified in our 'Report on Primary Care Prescribing'; our call for greater transparency in government borrowing and PFI commitments; and for making improvements to contract and performance management, as was the case in the Belfast Metropolitan College project. We have also stressed the importance of whistle-blowers, the use of whom could have avoided substantial losses to the public purse in the Bytel case.

The most vulnerable in our society, in particular, need to be protected, and that was an issue that we dealt with in our 'Report on Managing and Protecting Funds Held in Court'. That report looked at the Court Funds Office, which provides a banking and investment service for many of the most vulnerable in our society who are incapable of looking after their own affairs. The office was in need of a radical overhaul. My colleague Mr Beggs will go into the specifics of our findings and recommendations later. However, by honing in on instances where public funds are being spent unwisely, the PAC has made recommendations for improvements.

It is not just about making recommendations; it is about monitoring the implementation of those recommendations. The PAC expects its recommendations to be fully considered and implemented, which it monitors through a memorandum of reply (MOR). I welcome the work undertaken this year on agreeing a protocol on the memorandum of reply between the Committee and DFP. PAC regards the MOR as an integral part of the public accountability cycle and monitors Departments' progress on the implementation of its recommendations. In that regard, I acknowledge the important role that DFP plays in working with Departments on the production of MORs to ensure that Departments respond to each PAC recommendation as fully and as positively as possible. This has resulted in great improvements in the quality of MORs over recent years, which is to be commended.

6.00 pm

The PAC aims to be constructive in pointing out that lessons need to be learned to improve performance. Whilst our inquiries tend to be specific to a particular Department or body and the issues pertaining to it, there are lessons to be learned throughout government. PAC reports this year highlighted a number of lessons that can be applied across the public sector. We have striven to be constructive in our recommendations and offer guidance about what needs to change to avoid a repeat of certain events. We also seek out and publish good practice. Finding exemplars of excellent value for money is a more effective tool for securing change. Much can be learned from the successes as well as the failures.

I wish to talk specifically about our report on the future impact of borrowing and private finance commitments in the Belfast Metropolitan College's Titanic Quarter PPP project. The Committee examined the use of a private finance initiative (PFI) in the development of Belfast Metropolitan College's Titanic Quarter project, which was the largest and most expensive further education public-private funding project ever undertaken here. As part of its inquiry, the Committee also considered the wider issues around the transparency and efficiency of PFI projects and the impact of borrowing commitments.

On the wider issue of the impact of borrowing on private finance commitments, the Committee heard how the Executive have increased their spending power and supplemented the funding of capital investment by using PFI contracts and accessing borrowing under the reinvestment and reform initiative. Both funding streams give rise to long-term and inescapable financial commitments. The current cost of meeting those commitments is approximately £375 million each year, and servicing them is the first call on the Executive's Budget.

Current operational PFI contracts have committed the Executive to over £7 billion in future years, with their annual cost standing at £250 million. The Executive expect to have access to borrowings of £2.7 billion from the national loans fund. In 2013-14, the cost of repaying those borrowings was £103 million. That will rise to over £140 million within the next three years. The significant cost of borrowing will further increase depending on a decision to continue to access borrowings beyond 2016.

Despite the size and impact of these commitments on budgets, there has been no central collection or reporting of that directly to the Assembly or its Committees.

There is scope for improving the information provided to the Assembly on borrowings and the use of PFI. This issue of transparency and accountability was raised by the Committee over five years ago. It is therefore disappointing that we are back here again. The public has a right to know how and where its money is being spent. That lack of transparency on long-term commitments with the Assembly and its Committees is not acceptable, and we are pleased that our recommendations for greater transparency have been accepted and are being progressed by OFMDFM. If that information remains behind a smokescreen, it only undermines the ability of the statutory Committees to hold Departments to account.

The Committee is of the view that there is scope to generate additional efficiencies from current operational PFI contracts. The public sector needs to act as a more intelligent customer in procuring and managing projects after contract. Improved contract-management practices, such as benchmarking and market testing, will provide better evidence of whether projects are delivering value for money.

In evidence to the Committee, we heard how such reviews into water PFI contracts had resulted in £11 million of savings being delivered. This clearly demonstrates the potential benefits of such reviews, especially as there are 32 operational PFI projects in the North. However, we heard how there was no strategic programme for reviewing PFI contracts and maximising the opportunities to realise value-for-money savings. The Committee considers that this could be done better if it were driven centrally.

In recognition that the expertise is thinly spread across the system, we recommended that OFMDFM, in conjunction with the Strategic Investment Board, developed such a programme to drive long-term efficiencies from operational PFI projects and maximise value-for-money savings. We are pleased that this recommendation was accepted.

I turn to Belfast Metropolitan College's Titanic Quarter PPP project. First, I would like to place on record that the Committee acknowledges that this project has achieved many satisfactory outcomes. For example, the campus has won awards for the building's design and high environmental standards, and it has delivered a high level of staff, student and employer satisfaction. However, the Committee had very serious concerns about the project management, governance, decision-making and procurement process of the college and the Department's oversight in this respect.

The audit trail supporting the identification of accommodation requirements for the new campus was weak. The case for going down the PFI route was marginal at best. The project completion was put in jeopardy as a result of difficulties in relation to the consultancy contract, the costs of which were allowed to overrun considerably from £300,000 to £1.5 million. The preferred bidder was given its preferred bidder status prematurely, despite the extent of the unresolved issues with its proposals. This and its privileged development position on the Titanic Quarter site enabled it to dictate the pace and outcome of negotiations with the college, which extended from a planned 12 months to 33 months. The value for money of the deal eroded significantly during this period. Despite deciding to go down the PFI route due to funding issues, the Department for Employment and Learning ended up paying £20 million of the £44 million capital cost up front. In addition, while the sale of the properties was meant to help fund the project, DEL was left to pick up a shortfall of £14 million in expected receipts.

The Committee concluded that when all the costs, including the significant shortfall in receipts from the sale of the surplus properties, were taken into account, this was a costly project that did not represent good value for money. The Committee was extremely disappointed at these very serious shortcomings in the way that the project was managed and that the lessons to be learned were not new. These are recurring themes in the management of capital projects that, despite having been raised before, still arose. The Committee made several further recommendations to help protect the public sector's interest and ensure value for money going forward. We are pleased to note that these have been accepted.

I will now pass on to other Committee members who will talk about our other reports in more detail.

Mr Girvan: Speaking as a member of the PAC, I wish to focus on the Northern Ireland Courts And Tribunals Service report, which covered the financial year ending 31 March. During that inquiry, it was quite evident that the recovery of fines was not very successful. At that date, £19 million of that year's fines had yet to be recovered and was outstanding. It was unlikely that £6.5 million of that would ever be recovered. There were a number of reasons for that. One reason was that, during the process, it was identified that 6,682 warrants — I think that that is the right number — had gone missing and not been served. As a consequence, there had been a loss of £1.1 million to the Northern Ireland Court Service. It was identified that that was gross negligence. That was confirmed by the Chief Constable in his evidence to the Committee. He could offer us no explanation as to how or why that had happened. In dealing with the process, it also identified that the cash-handling process left itself open to major fraud. As a consequence, a PSNI officer was found guilty of the theft of fines amounting to £52,789. That identified a major shortcoming in how penalties and fines were being paid.

The process identified that we are in the 21st century but that we are dealing with an archaic system that has no recognition of the fact that you can pay by any means other than cash. Moneys were being put into an envelope and handed in through a door. It had to be paid in cash; receipts were not always being issued. All sorts of problems were identified in relation to the payment of fines that were not being paid through the courts office, but being collected by police officers. It was recommended that that process be moved forward into the 21st century and that people should be able to make payments by other means, such as Switch —

Mr Clarke: Will the Member give way?

Mr Girvan: I will surely, yes.

Mr Clarke: I think it would be wrong to characterise every member of the Police Service of Northern Ireland who handled them as being the same. Only one incident of this kind was found, albeit that shows that there was an opportunity for that to happen. I would like to put on record that only one was ever found guilty of that crime.

Mr Girvan: I thank the Member for his intervention —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Girvan: — but it alluded to a part that caused concerns in that we had already identified the lack of controls within the process, which could have left the process open to abuse. Only one was identified; I appreciate that you cannot tar everyone with the same brush. The process did not represent value for money. The courts had to pay the Police Service £3 million a year to collect that money, and about £1.4 million was paid from the Prison Service for dealing with it. Some people were actually put in prison for non-payment of TV licences, but some of the costs of putting them into prison and taking them through that process were far more than would have been incurred in relation to the associated fines.

I felt that there was a great benefit from the report. It identified a number of areas, and, in doing so, there was a recognition of all of the points that were brought forward by the Committee as recommendations. They were accepted by the courts, and some of them have been implemented. The report stated that there are many other ways of looking at these things. It also stated that it was necessary to modernise and move forward. Furthermore, it stated that the system for collections that is in operation should be looked at with a view to outsourcing it to a better and more effective process of recovery, and ensuring that that would work. The report identified all of those areas over which there was a lot of concern.

The Court Service seemed to be set in its ways in relation to its difficulties in processing and in ensuring that there was an effective and efficient mechanism to follow up the recovery of fines in a timely manner. Likewise, the Court Service needs to ensure that warrants go out in a timely manner, are not piled up until there is a lot to go out and, then, have to be chased round. A process more in line with following up directly and not wasting officers' time was recommended. There was a recognition that officers have more important things to do —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Will the Member draw his remarks to a conclusion?

Mr Girvan: — than run around and gather fines. It was recommended that they use other mechanisms.

Mrs D Kelly: I rise merely to underscore the importance of having the Public Accounts Committee. There are a number of reports tabled before us today, which Members have referred to.

Like them, I am sure, I have concerns about how recommendations are followed up, how they are reported on and whether or not that is done frequently enough. I will be interested to hear the views of Members and the Minister in assuring the House that the Public Accounts Committee's important work of scrutiny and ensuring transparency and the service that it provides are cherished by all parties and that it is given the resources that it requires and the authority that it needs to assure not only the Committee itself but, more importantly, the public that there is a mechanism in the House that, outside all other Committees, will look at the work of Departments, value for money and the very issues that other Members have raised with regard to following through on action plans and on the monitoring and evaluation of recommendations. There were concerns that there had been a squeeze on funding, as has been the case right across Departments, but it should not be a like-for-like- squeeze. There should be a common-sense approach not only to the work of the Assembly but, very importantly, the work of this most important of scrutiny Committees in assuring the public that they can have confidence in the ability of Members to hold those responsible to account.

6.15 pm

It is fairly safe to say that very few charges have been brought against people as a consequence of the abject failures of good governance or, indeed, the criminality revealed in some of the reports. Reports need to be presented to the House in a more timely fashion, and the Committee needs some real-time ability to seek answers and recommendations on glaring omissions or acts of negligence by Departments and/or individuals. If there are any areas of best practice elsewhere that the House might adopt, perhaps the Chair might look at them further, alongside the Minister. As I have said, I believe that the work of the Public Accounts Committee is widely acclaimed. It is a Committee that others look to for reassurance that there is a level of accountability within the structures of the Assembly for the public and others and that there is a sense of fair play in the delivery and procurement of services.

I would like reassurance from the Minister on the budget going forward in relation to the Committee, and I ask for timeliness in the presentation of reports and the monitoring of the recommendations that flow from them.

Mr Beggs: First, I reiterate the words of the Chairperson in thanking the Northern Ireland Audit Office staff and, indeed, our Assembly Committee staff for their help and support during my period on the Committee. There is good partnership working, and everyone benefits from that. I will focus on the managing and protecting of funds held in court. I hope that, later, as a former member of the Health Committee, I will have time to touch briefly on primary care prescribing.

The Court Funds Office provides a banking and investment service for some of the most vulnerable people in society including minors and adults who are incapable of looking after their own affairs. It manages their money at the behest of the courts. At the time of our report, it was responsible for managing some £290 million on behalf of 14,000 clients. What we and, indeed, the Audit Office report found was that this has been a Cinderella service, stuck in the past and not providing value for money. Perhaps, given the lack of scrutiny and focus that would have been on it prior to devolution, that is not surprising. The Committee found that the Court Funds Office had a lack of financial expertise and was almost totally reliant on the professional advice of a stockbroker to make recommendations regarding the investment of client funds. That is the function of a professional expert in this area, but it is also good to have a degree of independent scrutiny of actions that have been taken. I see from the Department of Finance and Personnel's 9 July 2015 memorandum that not only was a non-executive director with extensive management experience in the banking sector appointed in 2011 but a second such independent adviser was appointed in January 2015. That is to be welcomed.

I move on to other aspects of the service. One issue that was not covered was that too much funding had been allocated to low interest-paying savings accounts. That would be fairly obvious to anyone considering whether it was a good investment. Clearly, there was a need to modernise the structure and the ability to wisely invest those funds. I welcome the recommendation that we made and, indeed, to a degree, the subsequent efforts by the Department of Justice to modernise its legislation. That will, in turn, enable it to provide a better service. Things are starting to improve, and that has to be welcomed.

I will touch briefly on the report on primary care prescribing. There are very significant costs in prescribing medicines in Northern Ireland, as there are in other parts of the United Kingdom. The Audit Office report highlighted that significant savings could be made by following good practice. From my experience on the Health Committee, I would argue that there has been overprescribing in some areas. Indeed, the Audit Office report shows that there was huge variation between GP practices with the lowest prescribing rates and those with the highest, with the highest prescribers costing more than twice as much as the lowest. Clearly, there is work to be done there. I note that the relevant memorandum, dated 1 May 2015, indicates that contract negotiations on that aspect are going on to see how there can perhaps be better management and performance measurement. There is an indication that this could relate to the pharmacy issue. That is an important area in which there could be significant savings without penalty to the public. Improvements can occur —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to conclude his remarks.

Mr Beggs: — to ensure that appropriate generic drugs are allocated rather than some of the branded drugs. That could be easy pickings. I ask that we continue to push along that way.

Mr Clarke: The Comptroller and Auditor General and his team should be congratulated for the work that they do. Committee members were given a remit for what we were supposed to say today on different areas, but it will be difficult for me, given that the previous contributor has covered most of my points. I will read my script out anyhow.

Primary care prescribing costs around £460 million a year. That is approximately 10% of health and social care expenditure. This, I am sure Members will agree, is a significant part of the healthcare budget, and we need to ensure that we get the best value for money, especially with the immense squeeze on all Executive budgets. It is clear that prescribing costs in Northern Ireland are not in line with the rest of the UK. The Audit Office estimated that, if the prescribing costs per head of population in Northern Ireland in 2013 had been in line with those in Wales, overall prescribing costs in Northern Ireland could have been reduced by £73 million.

The Committee noted that the Department was reluctant to accept the validity of the cost comparison either locally between GP practices or with other regions. While acknowledging that there may be differences, the Committee questioned whether the regional service delivery differences outlined by the Department fully explain the extent of the cost differential. The Committee recognised that, working with the Health and Social Care Board, GPs had achieved savings in prescribing costs since 2010 but that there was significant scope for further improvement. A key element in the savings has been achieved through prescribing lower-cost generic versions of drugs. The Committee welcomes campaigns such as Go Generic in reassuring people of the effectiveness of generic drugs rather than branded drugs and is pleased to see that the Department is taking steps to inform and educate patients on the rationale for prescribing decisions.

However, in an examination of GP prescribing patterns, in three out of the 15 therapeutic areas, the Committee learned that GPs here tended to prescribe more expensive generic versions of drugs compared with their UK counterparts. More cost-effective prescribing in these areas alone could have saved the health service £8.3 million in 2012 and £6.5 million in 2013. Additionally, reducing local prescribing levels of the most frequently dispensed drug in Northern Ireland, pregabalin, to those elsewhere in the UK would have released over £8.5 million in 2012 and £9.7 million in 2013. The Committee was concerned that prescribing costs per head of population here are not in line with other parts of the UK. Given that we are the only region that incurred higher costs per head of population in 2013 than in 2007, the Committee concluded that we have been much slower in achieving savings. This money could have been better used elsewhere in the health service at a time of budgetary pressure.

Given the Department's own acknowledgement that there may be scope to save tens of millions of pounds, the Committee was disappointed that steps have not been taken to quantify the savings that could be generated by the most cost-effective prescribing. The Committee recommended that the HSC Board take a more proactive approach to examining prescribing patterns in each of the 12 therapeutic areas to establish the potential for generating savings. The Committee is pleased that the HSC Board is proactively benchmarking prescribing in other parts of the UK to see the potential for generating future savings and that HSC is developing a three-year strategy that will incorporate a focus on these efficiencies.

In conclusion, the Committee's report had nine recommendations, and these have all been accepted by the Department. These included the Committee's wanting GP remuneration to be linked to prescribing performance. This would require renegotiation of a UK-wide contract, and the Department, in its recent memorandum of reply update, has stated that it will, through the annual negotiation process, discuss performance arrangements, including the introduction of specific performance arrangements for prescribing. The Committee also concluded that benchmarks on prescribing performance should be established to compare GP prescribing performance, and benchmarking data should be published periodically, sharing this data in order to improve efficiency.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call Mr Conor Murphy.

I call Mr Jim Wells.

Mr Wells: I have never seen Mr Murphy speechless in my life before.

I served on the PAC several years ago, and I thought that, as a result of the diligence of people like Mr Dallat and Mr Seamus Close, who were Rottweilers on the Committee and relentlessly exposing all sorts of public scandal on expenditure, by the time that I got back onto PAC, its work would be done. I thought that no further obvious gaffs and mistakes would be being made in Departments and that we would not be spending money very unwisely. Little did I know that, when I returned to the Committee, things would be worse than when I left.

A week does not seem to go by that I sit on the Committee and my jaw does not drop to the floor as we yet again see the most elementary mistakes being made by senior government officials and arm's-length bodies doing things that an ordinary housewife or ordinary accountant would never dream of doing. We see it time after time, and, if Members think that this latest set of reports from the PAC is interesting, wait until you see the next set. We have had an insight, and I can assure you that, when it comes to the Northern Ireland Events Company report, every mistake that could have been made was made by many people. So here we are, in a very brief debate, reviewing extremely important issues. One thing that is absolutely guaranteed is that the PAC will never run out of issues to investigate.

I will highlight housing tenancy fraud, whereby social housing is occupied by someone who is not entitled to it. As Members from throughout Northern Ireland, we all know about the intense demand for social housing. I have only to think of Newcastle in my constituency, where there is a huge demand for social housing and a finite supply that is not meeting the need. It is, therefore, totally unacceptable that, whilst genuine families and individuals who are desperately looking for social housing are left out in the cold, there are others who are occupying houses that they should not be entitled to.

6.30 pm

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for giving way. It is a concern that I share in my constituency. Does the Member agree that we need to start to hold to account those who have squandered and participated in fraudulent activities, resulting in millions or hundreds of thousands of pounds of wasted public money? Should we not prioritise and start at the top and work our way to the bottom and hold people to account?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Wells: Thank you. The Northern Ireland Events Company was mentioned. Well, wait until we get to the report next year on the funding for social housing, and we will see some of the calamitous wastes of money that have occurred in various parts of Belfast and even in south Down. We will see money being squandered that could have been used to build much-needed social housing for people who are genuinely in need. However, as I said, we will have to keep our powder dry until next year for that one, when Mrs Kelly will certainly have an opportunity to lambaste those who have squandered so much money.

The money involved is quite significant. Each 100 houses fraudulently occupied, if detected, will save £800,000 in the costs of housing homeless families. Therefore, we are talking about roughly £8,000 per dwelling that is occupied by the wrong person or by someone who should not be there. Until recently, unfortunately, the Housing Executive and the housing associations have only looked at abandoned properties, but, in 2012-13, they recovered no fewer than 302 abandoned properties in Northern Ireland. If that is what is going on in only one sector of social housing fraud, what is really going on out there in the real world? The shocking discovery made by the Committee is that, at the time of this report, there had not been one single prosecution for housing tenancy fraud in Northern Ireland. That is an extraordinary situation, given the extent of the problem. I understand that, since the Committee started its inquiry, there has been progress made in a prosecution — and about time, too. It is only when people open their local newspapers and see that society takes this issue extremely seriously that they will stop using social housing as a plaything.

The Committee also, in my opinion, made a very sensible recommendation. It said that there should be more cooperation between housing associations, the Housing Executive and statutory undertakers, such as utility companies, to cross-examine the information held by those bodies and identify who is living where and who should not be living where. Again, it strikes me as absolutely obvious that they should check to see who is paying the electric bill, the phone bill, the rates etc to establish who is actually in the property. Time and time again, as a constituency representative, I get this issue reported to me, and I pass the information on to the executive or whatever. Sometimes action is taken, and sometimes it is not. That indicates to me that, until the PAC took the issue up, it was not being treated seriously.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wells: I certainly will.

Mr Beggs: Is the Member aware of the Housing (Amendment) Bill that is currently going through? It might lend itself to such amendments. Will he make a point of looking at it and, perhaps, support me in widening the information's availability?

Mr Wells: We welcome that, but the Housing Executive, from memory, was formed in 1974, and, here we are, over 40 years later, and we are only getting to grips with this issue. How many millions of pounds of taxpayers' money have been wasted —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to conclude his remarks.

Mr Wells: — as a result of a lack of action on this issue over the last four decades?

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Like other Members, I have a pre-prepared speech, but I will touch on some of the comments that Mr Wells made about the tenancy fraud issue. It is an issue that the Committee for Social Development is currently looking at through the Housing (Amendment) Bill that Mr Beggs has touched on, but the Department for Social Development seems to be very reluctant to amend that Bill to deal with the sharing of information from electricity supply companies with social housing providers. The officials tell the Committee that there has been a separate piece of work under way for over a year, yet those officials are not able to give the Committee any evidence of what they have done so far. It seems to be stuck in the Department for Social Development, but I know that the Committee for Social Development is considering amending the Housing (Amendment) Bill to include the sharing of information with regard to the use of electricity by electricity supply companies with social housing providers.

I want to address most of my remarks to the report published this year by the Public Accounts Committee on the cross-border broadband initiative, the Bytel project. It provided high-speed broadband connectivity across Ireland and was delivered by a Belfast-based company, Bytel Networks Limited. The project was funded by the Special EU Programmes Body (SEUPB) but jointly sponsored by the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and the Department of Communications, Energy and Natural Resources. DETI had lead responsibility for project oversight and management. Bytel had costs of €4.3 million, but the project was by no means the largest project that the Committee has explored in terms of expenditure. That does not mean that the failings were any less significant or serious. Bytel delivered very poor value for money, and the Committee had grave concerns about the validity of the grant claims submitted and paid in respect of the project.

The Committee found that the project should never have been approved for public funding in the first place. Despite many clear warning signs about its viability from an early stage, it somehow managed to slip through the net. It was clear to the Committee, with the benefit of hindsight, that both Departments, particularly DETI, were preoccupied with the desire to utilise the EU funding that was available for the project rather than ensuring that it was properly managed and would deliver value for money. In that regard, the Public Accounts Committee in the North worked well with the Public Accounts Committee in the Oireachtas to ensure that a joint approach was taken, with two inquires at the same time. We held joint meetings to make sure that there was a coordinated approach and that information was shared well between Committees.

The Bytel project was heavily dependent on a contribution by a key partner, but, just weeks after the project was approved, that partner withdrew. DETI did not properly test that partner's contribution prior to awarding funding. Had it done so, it would have found that it had made no firm commitment to support the project. Bytel then made fundamental changes to the way its project was to be delivered, and, as a result, the costs of delivering it reduced dramatically. DETI did not reappraise the project at that stage, and that resulted in substantially more grant being paid to the project than was required. The failure to reappraise the project when it changed significantly was a fundamental shortcoming that contributed significantly to the problems that followed.

The Committee found that the standard of DETI's scrutiny and checking of grant claims from Bytel was appalling: for example, €1.3 million was paid for equipment that was ineligible for funding, worth only around €30,000 and never used in the project. The final grant claim for €2.2 million was paid in full despite the fact that there was no supporting evidence. The Committee concluded that the claim had no validity whatsoever. It is no surprise, given the Department's lax performance, that almost €4.2 million of the €4.3 million grant paid for the project was subsequently deemed ineligible for assistance.

We found that the Department's handling of serious allegations from whistle-blowers about the project was totally inadequate. It is beyond belief that initial allegations made in 2006 were investigated by the same officials who had authorised the payment of grant claims. The Department's senior management accepted unwarranted assurances from those officials that there were no matters of concern in the project. The Department also failed to investigate an internal Bytel email that contained allegations about improper activity.

Further allegations from whistle-blowers were received by the Department in 2008. The Department's investigation of those allegations was unduly protracted. A full investigation commenced only in 2011, initiated by other stakeholders who had become concerned about the problems with the project. The Committee was astonished that DETI withheld vital information about the project from key stakeholders, including SEUPB and the Department in the South, for far too long. Overall, DETI's response to the whistle-blower allegations was not of an acceptable standard, and that was a matter of great concern to the Committee.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to conclude his remarks.

Mr Flanagan: I will, yes.

The fact that so much of the money was deemed ineligible for funding but has not been recovered was a further point of consternation for the Committee.

Mr Allister: I want to begin by commending the PAC for its work and for the various reports. The one that I wish to address myself to is the one that the last Member who spoke referred to: the broadband Bytel project. I find it quite astounding that a project entitled to only €0.3 million support in fact got €4.3 million support on the basis of wiping the Department's eye or the Department turning a blind eye — it is not entirely clear to me which. There was supposed to be support of one third for a project supposed to cost €12 million. In fact, when the forensic assessment was ultimately done, all that it was entitled to was €300,000, even though it had pocketed €4.3 million under the INTERREG programme.

How could such a thing happen? Yes, it initially happened under the bad old days of direct rule when we were told that Ministers did not care, they let Departments run amok, and civil servants could do what they liked. But then there was a great fresh start, supposedly, in May 2007, and assiduous, focused, determined local Ministers took over, and all the bad old days would be over.

What do we discover about this case? Matters continue, whistle-blowers come along, and there is no proper investigation. We discover that it was not until 2011 that the Department even thought it appropriate to tell the SEUPB that there was a problem. We discover that in 2008-09, on a second whistle-blower, there was to be an investigation under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act (PACE), with interviews under caution. It did not happen. It was decided, "No, no, we needn't bother with that."

Who decided that? Where was the ministerial control? Maybe we are fortunate tonight that the Minister in the House in her new portfolio was, for a large part of that period, the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, from 2008 until I cannot remember when, but certainly through a lot of that time. So what were the officials under the Minister's control doing? Where was the ministerial control? Who decided that there would not be a PACE investigation? Why has there still not been a PACE investigation? Who came up with the nonsense that this was collective responsibility in order to absolve individuals of their involvement in the project?

The Committee has raised many legitimate questions but has not had answers. I look forward perhaps to the receipt, through this debate, of some answers tonight.

This was not just the squander of €4 million. Because there was inactivity and a fear to address and deal with the situation, the opportunity to spend European money on a deserving project was lost. So even that opportunity was blown in pursuit of doing nothing, in pursuit, apparently, of covering the tracks of the Department. How could the Department, as the joint implementing agent, oversee such squander and then, apparently, ensure that no one found out about it by not even telling the SEUPB until five years later? There is much explaining to be done, and I look forward to the explanations.

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel):

Thank you very much, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. As you and the House will know, this is my first experience of a Public Accounts Committee debate as Minister of Finance. One wishes that some Members had read the papers before they came into the House. Clearly, they cannot read some of the dates in some of the reports. However, that is a matter for them.

Before I move to the main business of the debate, I would like to acknowledge the work undertaken by the Public Accounts Committee and the Northern Ireland Audit Office since last year's debate. Much work has been done, and there is a lot to discuss.

I would like to make some general comments from a finance perspective that will set the scene for the coming few years. Members are already all too aware that the months and years ahead will be crucial for Northern Ireland. Our public sector is undergoing a period of unprecedented change on a number of fronts.

There has already been significant change achieved through local government reform. During 2016, the number of Northern Ireland Departments will reduce from 12 to nine. However, I believe that the new local government landscape, and the new departmental structures coming into force next year, will improve how government interacts with key stakeholders and will help deliver better and more efficient government for the people of Northern Ireland.

On top of this changing landscape, continuing budgetary pressures have led to significant staff reductions across the public sector, and this is set to continue. Within that context, there remains an ongoing need to achieve efficiencies in service delivery, and last week's national spending review indicated that the Northern Ireland block will remain very constrained over the next five-year period, particularly on the resource side. Departments will therefore have to deliver these efficiencies within reduced baselines, and I hope that bodies such as the Audit Office and, indeed, the Assembly will play their part in delivering efficiency improvements.

In service delivery, I believe that reform is an essential factor in shaping how services are delivered for Northern Ireland in the future. It needs to be driven, not only by the budgetary position but by the need to transform how we develop, design and engage on the delivery of all public-sector services. There are several ongoing projects and initiatives aimed at delivering public-sector reforms. They include the Northern Ireland public sector innovation lab, launched just last year, and the digital transformation programme. My departmental officials are fully engaged in both programmes.

As well as tackling the immediate operational challenges, reform must address the Executive's longer-term aims and identify and develop innovative and cost-effective ways to achieve these. Recognising this, we have agreed to a strategic review of public-sector reform in Northern Ireland. The review, which is being led by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) is due to report by the end of this year, and that report is going to really help us shape the future of the reform programme and inform the new Programme for Government for the 2016-2021 period. The focus will produce an outcomes-based approach that will help to ensure that the investments we make produce positive results in the areas we aim to address. So, it is not so much about looking at the process but looking more at the output.

Organisational change is therefore going to be part of our daily life in the public sector in the future, and it is something that Members in the House will have to get used to. During periods of significant changes, there will be new challenges and risks that will arise. We need to acknowledge and recognise that, in managing change and the risks that emanate from that, we may not always get everything right. However, change has to be made, and it has to be taken forward responsibly. While we should be held accountable for all that we do, that does not mean that we should become risk-intolerant or risk-averse. For me, that would be the very worst thing that could happen.

I hope that the Committee will agree with me that, in times ahead, we need to embrace new ways of doing things and apply innovation and creativity where possible. However, as I have just said, that will not be without risk. I think that the Public Accounts Committee has a key role in ensuring that Departments, agencies and other public-sector bodies are able to embrace the change without the fear of Audit Office or PAC criticism being foremost in their minds, or indeed overshadowing them — or worse still, inhibiting the changes and reforms that are very necessary.

In that context, I think that some of the recent work undertaken by the Department in conjunction with the Public Accounts Committee and the Audit Office since last year's debate will assist in this. It will also help to improve overall working relationships and strengthen the public audit process. I want to take a few minutes to update Members on the nature and outcome of some of that work.

First, there is the clearance of Audit Office reports. The production of Audit Office reports is the first, and undoubtedly key, stage in the overall public audit process. After all, the scrutiny of officials by the Public Accounts Committee starts with the Audit Office value-for-money report. We all recognise and agree the importance of timely, accurate and agreed Audit Office reports as the basis for the Committee's evidence sessions. At times, that has been a challenging process for all concerned. Since the last debate, my officials have engaged constructively with the Audit Office and have agreed protocols and guidance for the agreement and clearance of Audit Office value-for-money reports. It is considered that the protocols, which were issued in April, will provide for a more streamlined and timely clearance process for the Departments and the Audit Office in relation to the production of evidence-based, value-for-money reports. The overall aim, of course, is to produce a better product for consideration by the Committee.

To promote those protocols, the Audit Office and the Treasury Officer of Accounts held meetings with departmental accounting officers to discuss the key points and implementation of the new guidance. I understand that this was seen as a positive development by those involved. My officials will monitor the effectiveness of the new protocols with Departments over the next year. In the meantime, and in line with the new protocols, I expect that Departments will work constructively with the Audit Office in the production of value-for-money reports.

That will be important for the timely publication of Audit Office reports. On occasions, reports have been published very close to the dates scheduled for evidence sessions by the Committee. This has become more common over the last year or so, with some reports having been published just over a week in advance of PAC hearings. I believe that this places undue pressure on all concerned. It certainly places a lot of pressure on Departments, which, at the same time as going through the Audit Office clearance process, have to prepare for an appearance before the Public Accounts Committee on a report that can change right up to the very end. I have no doubt that it also has an adverse impact on Committee preparations for evidence sessions. Perhaps we can all give some thought to reducing occurrence of this in future if it continues to be a problem.

I would also like to mention a further set of protocols agreed between my Department and the Committee for the handling of memoranda of reply. This work finished earlier this year and, again, was the product of very constructive engagement with the Committee, and I thank the Committee for its input. The protocols, as the Committee will be aware, included new guidance for the preparation of memoranda of reply. This was aimed at ensuring that MORs provide clear, direct and succinct responses to the Committee's recommendations. My officials have worked hard with Departments to ensure implementation of the new guidance and believe that the overall quality of responses contained in the MORs has improved. I hope that this is a point on which the Committee would agree.

A final piece of guidance issued by my Department in September was in connection with the public audit process and commenting in the media. At the outset, I would like to say that I fully agree with my predecessor's view that, on occasions, the publicity surrounding reports was unbalanced and appeared to sensationalise certain aspects of reports for maximum media effect rather than provide a fair and balanced view — a bit like Mr Allister's contribution today. My predecessor, Simon Hamilton, asked departmental officials to revisit the guidance in this area to address the imbalance and to clarify for Departments the circumstances in which Ministers may wish to make comment to the media to ensure that a balanced view is portrayed.

I am aware that the Committee had some concerns about that guidance and that the previous Treasury Officer of Accounts attended the Committee in September to discuss them. However, I am fully satisfied that the revised guidance continues to recognise and respect the role and standing of the Public Accounts Committee and remains broadly in line with the formal position adopted by Her Majesty's Treasury.

Turning to the general audit process — and linked to my earlier comments on the fear of audit or PAC criticism becoming a key, sometimes overriding, concern — it remains important that we do not lose sight of the fact that many of the issues raised in value-for-money and PAC reports, while providing valuable lessons that can apply right across the public sector, tend to be specific to an organisation or project. In many cases they are not representative of the high standards of governance and accountability that operate across the wider public sector. Indeed, the Comptroller and Auditor General's recent report — a report that aims to provide assurance to this House on the use of public funds — states that there has been improvement since last year in the number of accounts receiving qualifications and that the standards of financial accounting in Northern Ireland remain high. This is something that we should remember when considering cases where the expected standards have not been applied. Such cases, important though they are, should be considered within the context of the wider Northern Ireland public sector.

That said, we should not be complacent about such issues or about the wider risks associated with change.

Indeed, as the Comptroller stated a couple of weeks ago when publishing a good practice guide, it is a widely accepted principle that during periods of significant change the risk of fraud escalates. I know that fraud has been a key theme that has featured in a number of Audit Office and PAC reports in recent years. It is timely, therefore, that, with regard to fraud investigation capacity within the Northern Ireland public sector, I am able to confirm that a group internal audit and fraud investigation service for Northern Ireland Departments has been established with effect from 1 April this year. The new service sits within my Department and has been established following a commitment given to the PAC in response to its report on Northern Ireland Water's response to a suspected fraud and DRD's review of a whistle-blower complaint. The group service is now available to NICS Departments, agencies and arm's-length bodies to utilise where fraud investigations are required to be undertaken. Since April, the group service has taken on over 20 investigations on behalf of Departments and other bodies.

With the establishment of the group fraud investigation service, fraud investigation procedures have been developed and are being refined. My Department will use those operational procedures to issue further guidance to the wider public sector in the near future. The guidance will also incorporate the valuable lessons that have been learned from various investigations considered by the Committee. Additionally, the recently published Audit Office guide, which I referred to earlier, draws on existing good practice on how to manage the risk of fraud during periods of organisational change. The guide, which is entitled 'Managing Fraud Risk in a Changing Environment', has been issued by my Department for other Departments to consider.

I also want to mention two other good practice guides published by the Audit Office over the course of the last year: 'Whistleblowing in the Public Sector', which was issued in conjunction with other UK audit authorities; and 'Conflicts of Interest'. Those are both important issues that have been raised by the Committee on numerous occasions.

My officials have circulated the Audit Office guide on whistle-blowing to all accounting officers. That was done alongside the provision of some other additional points of good practice that arose from hearings held by the Committee. It is considered that that package of guidance will help to support earlier guidance we provided that focused on developing and promoting organisational whistle-blowing arrangements.

We fully recognise that conflicts of interest must be identified and effectively managed by public bodies. That needs to be done to ensure that public confidence in the delivery of public services is maintained and, indeed, that the integrity of staff and board members is safeguarded. As we well know, integrity is one of the seven key principles of public life. While I welcome the Audit Office guide on conflicts of interest, my Department has recognised the need for further guidance in the area. As such, officials will be developing specific guidance on conflicts of interest, which will draw on various sources already available, including our own 'On Board' guide, the lessons learned through the Public Accounts Committee and the Audit Office's good practice guide.

Overall, to summarise the last year, much positive work has been done that will assist Departments, the Audit Office and the Public Accounts Committee in the performance of all their respective audit duties. We are, however, moving into challenging times — we should reflect on that — which will see unprecedented change. No one could but argue that we must continue to encourage and support best practice in financial management and in relation to the proper conduct of public business, but, in seeking to make the improvements in the efficiency and quality of services provided to the public, we must provide balance to ensure that the system does not become paralysed by the fear of potential failure or adverse PAC or, indeed, Audit Office criticism.

I will move on to some of the issues that were raised by Members. The Chair concentrated her remarks on Belfast Metropolitan College's Titanic Quarter PPP project. My Department is content to work with OFMDFM and the Strategic Investment Board on improving the way in which PFI savings are examined. Anything that aids transparency in what, I acknowledge, is a very complex area is to be welcomed.

7.00 pm

Long-term affordability of borrowing is something that DFP has been monitoring for a number of years now. My predecessor provided a draft borrowing strategy to the Executive outlining the longer-term affordability of borrowing and how it might be managed. Those are issues that are routinely discussed by the Executive in the context of its Budget process, and they will no doubt be discussed in the very near future around that issue again.

Mr Girvan referred to the Committee's report on the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service trust statement for the year ending 31 March 2013. The Department of Justice informed me that it is making good progress and that three of the six PAC recommendations have been fully implemented, including identifying an individual's ability to pay, improved governance arrangements and control structures, and regularly reconciling warrants issued to the Police Service of Northern Ireland. So, work is proceeding in relation to those issues as well.

In relation to Mrs Kelly's point about the follow-up on commitments made by various Departments, it is, of course, a matter for accounting officers to ensure that the PAC commitments are implemented. DFP has established a database that records commitments, and Departments update progress against those. So, we have a live database, if you like, that looks at those. Internally, they are monitored by departmental audit committees and internal audit annually. The Audit Office carries out an impact assessment against commitments. So, I want to assure Mrs Kelly and the House that, once commitments are made, they are monitored. They are not just ignored and forgotten about. They are taken very seriously by Departments.

Mr Beggs went on to talk about managing and protecting funds held in court. Again, with regard to strengthening governance arrangements for the Court Funds Office, revised terms of reference for the judicial liaison group are under consideration by the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service and action is being taken to identify a consumer representative to attend meetings of that group. So, matters are under way there to deal with those commitments as well.

In respect of primary care prescribing, that matter was raised by Mr Beggs and Mr Clarke. DHSSPS has informed me that the Health and Social Care Board is taking forward the development of a three-year medicines management strategy. Workshops to inform that are being held and will provide the material to develop that strategy.

Mr Wells referred to tackling social housing tenancy fraud in Northern Ireland. DSD has assured me that it realises that this is a very serious issue and has taken a number of steps to deal with it. Using the Audit Office formula, in the year 2013-14, DSD has made £2 million of saving in respect of the fraud issues.

Finally, Mr Flanagan and Mr Allister referred to the Bytel project, which, of course, was before my time as Minister. Some people in the Chamber cannot accept that that is the case, but I am sure that he will if he reads it again.

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mrs Foster: No, I will not give way. Those issues —

Mr Allister: Just tell us why the PACE investigation was shelved.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Minister has agreed not to give way to the Member.

Mr Allister: I wonder why.

Mrs Foster: He says that he wonders why. Perhaps he could read the report.

Mr Allister: Tell us why the PACE investigation was shelved.

Mrs Foster: Perhaps he could read the report.

I consider that, in the year ahead, we have created the right risk balance, which is a key challenge for Ministers, Departments, the Audit Office and the PAC. I want to thank virtually everybody for taking part in the debate.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to conclude her remarks.

Mr Dallat: May I just point out that I am the longest serving member of the Committee, having probably been on it for 14 or 15 years or more, and we have never had any kind of inter-party rows. I think that is where the Public Accounts Committee stands head and shoulders above what might happen in some other Committees. I commend all of the members of the current Public Accounts Committee and previous ones for their service and how they endeavour to do that.

In fact, the only broadsides that I have heard were just now from Mr Allister on the Bytel project.

The Chairperson of the Committee, Michaela Boyle, opened the debate by emphasising the independence of the Public Accounts Committee. She also pointed out that we do not lambaste and criticise every Department on every occasion, but have, in fact, singled out exemplar material. Indeed, on one occasion, we went to a primary school in Coleraine where we felt the best examples of addressing literacy, numeracy and absenteeism were to be found. That was Millburn Primary school. I know that other neighbouring schools in socially deprived areas of that town have also done outstanding work, and we recognised that. There are many other examples of the Public Accounts Committee recognising good practice, so it is not all negative.

Obviously, Belfast Metropolitan College was mentioned, and rightly so. We do that because we expect lessons to be learned. We expect a strategic review to take place and mistakes of the past to be avoided. That point was made very well by Jim Wells, who reminded me that he had been on the Committee previously and rejoined it. He was quite upset to find that the bad practice of the bad old days was still being repeated, and that is one of our major concerns.

Paul Girvan was concerned about the way in which the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service collects fines. I am sure that the public would be absolutely horrified to learn that people have been taken to court, fined, and the fines are either not collected or, if they are, never get back to where they belonged. I have no doubt that fundamental changes in that have taken place. It often intrigued me that the Courts Service insisted on cash when every Department is advising people not to keep cash. So there you have it.

Dolores Kelly mentioned the monitoring and evaluation of reports, which was, rightly, picked up on by the Minister. We welcome the undertakings that have been given.

Roy Beggs spoke on the issue of protecting funds held for vulnerable people by the courts. It may be interesting to hear that that particular aspect of government was last revised in 1935, so there is really every justification for the Public Accounts Committee to be interested in that. Again, the Minister acknowledged that vast improvements have taken place, which, of course, is exactly what the Public Accounts Committee is about.

Trevor Clarke referred to the cost of prescriptions, generic drugs and so on. He is absolutely right; there are, potentially, millions of pounds to be saved there.

Jim Wells could not resist referring to previous Committee members as Rottweilers. I do not think that I got that term; Seamus Close did. However, one of the reports that came before us recently was on the Northern Ireland Events Company, which was an absolute scandal. We have been criticised for publishing reports too quickly, but that issue is about seven years old and, at this stage, I am not sure what may happen.

Mr Flanagan, who has left us at this point, spoke on Bytel. That was a cross-border project and, if something positive can be got out of that, it is the fact that the Public Accounts Committees in Dublin and here in Belfast worked together extremely well to produce an agreed report. That, I think, is to the credit of the members of both Committees, North and South.

The Minister said that there was a fear of reports, and I am sorry about that. She claimed that reports are sometimes not representative of the high standards of service. I hope that I have consoled the Minister by accepting the fact that there are excellent examples of good service. At all times, the Public Accounts Committee will identify those and comment on them. However, the cases involving Bytel, the Events Company and others are not examples of best practice. Never was that more relevant than today, with all the effects of austerity cuts and ordinary people's difficulties in making ends meet.

I hope that, in the wider community, there is a recognition that the Public Accounts Committee has an enormous role to play in the Assembly, whoever is serving on it. Like everything else, it will have to change. Reference was made to the structure of the Public Accounts Committee. There may be a desire to make it more representative to give the opposition, if such a thing exists, a more important role in scrutinising the Government's work. I look forward to that from a distance.

Members raised the point that, very often, when bad practice is discovered — I am thinking in particular of the Fire Authority for Northern Ireland, which is now the Fire and Rescue Service Board — nobody is ever made amenable. There have been various PSNI reports into aspects of government work, and nothing ever happens. That will need to be addressed.

It may be that, in the glory days, when public money was in great abundance, you just dismissed these things and wrote them off, with an accounting officer being moved to another Department or even elevated to a House higher than this one. Today, every penny needs to be accounted for, and people who sign off on projects of any kind need to be made amenable. There is no excuse for them not being so, and no one on the Public Accounts Committee, irrespective of their political party, would disagree.

The PAC will continue to make strident and robust recommendations, particularly when controls have broken down and there is a lack of adherence to standards and ethics. The Committee will pursue the implementation of the recommendations until it is satisfied that suitable measures have been taken to ensure that lessons have been well and truly learned. Dolores Kelly referred to that, and we have an understanding from the Minister that a follow-up will be a critical part of that.

This is not the first time that we have found that poor management has cost the taxpayer vast sums of money. Members referred to several projects in which that was the case, and it is only fair and reasonable that the Public Accounts Committee's work, in harmony with the Audit Office, was entirely justified. The independence of the Audit Office and the Public Accounts Committee is critical for the future. A previous Minister suggested that the Department of Finance and Personnel might subsume the Audit Office. That would be an absolute tragedy, because its independence is vital in ensuring that scrutiny is truly independent.

I listened very carefully to the Minister. Her contribution was positive. She will find that the Public Accounts Committee works closely with the Departments. It is fair to point out that we will retain our independence in every respect.

We recognise that you have to have a working relationship with your colleagues in all Departments.

7.15 pm

I thank Mr Jack Layberry, the former Treasury Officer of Accounts. In particular, I highlight his work with the Committee in drafting a memorandum of understanding protocol during his time in post, which has now been agreed between the Committee and the Minister. The Minister has acknowledged that, so we are at one in that regard. I also welcome Alison Caldwell, who has taken up this post. I look forward to working with her in her new role over the next few months.

The Committee has seen a number of changes in its membership over the past 12 months. I thank departing Members for their contribution and commitment to the work undertaken by the Committee. I also welcome new Members and look forward to working with them as we move towards the end of this mandate. Since the last take-note debate, the PAC has published a total of six inquiries with memorandums of reply. These published reports have included a wide range of issues, including complex investigations whose subject matter has gone back a number of years and taken some time to complete. Indeed, some of them consumed an awful lot of time.

More than ever, the PAC's role is vital in ensuring that public money is used in the most efficient way possible so as to ensure that the greatest value is achieved for every pound that is spent from the public purse. We continue, with the help of the Audit Office in its reports, to focus our powers on the Departments and other public bodies that we believe have tapped into the public purse unwisely, and seek to bring them to account. We, as a Committee, understand the value of a lessons-learnt approach and aim to be constructive in our findings and reports. Rather than merely pointing the finger and saying that we do not want to see x, y or z happening again, we make recommendations that offer guidance in order to avoid a repeat occurrence in the future. The Public Accounts Committee has never criticised any Department for following through on what it planned to do, even when that did not have the result that it might have wanted. It is simply when Departments or arm's-length bodies do not follow their own plan that the criticism arises.

The Committee expects these recommendations to be accepted and implemented as quickly as possible. The memorandums of reply and subsequent 12-monthly updates give the Committee the opportunity to continue to keep track of the implementation of these recommendations and to ensure that they are followed through in their entirety. As indicated, the work of the PAC is supported greatly by the Northern Ireland Audit Office. I thank the Comptroller and Auditor General and his staff for their help and assistance throughout the year.

Speaking in a personal capacity and, as I referred to earlier, as the longest-serving member of the Committee, I want to recognise those Committee members who have done so much to give the Public Accounts Committee a standing in the Assembly that each and every one of the 108 Members should be extremely proud of. I assure all the Members present, and those who are not, that the Public Accounts Committee is one of our best tools for convincing the public at large that money is fully accounted for under a regional Government. I want to see that demonstrated with clarity as we move on.

UN Climate Change Conference 2015

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer of the motion will have 10 minutes in which to propose and 10 minutes in which to make a winding-up speech. One amendment has been selected and is published on the Marshalled List. The proposer will have 10 minutes to propose the amendment and five minutes in which to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who are called to speak will have five minutes.

Ms Lo (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment): I beg to move

That this Assembly notes that the 2015 United Nations Climate Change Conference is taking place in Paris from 30 November to 11 December; considers that this is an opportunity to agree an ambitious global plan to tackle the threat of climate change; welcomes the Minister of the Environment's attendance at this conference to represent Northern Ireland; further notes that the projected reduction of greenhouse gas emissions of 33·3% by 2025, based on 1990 levels, falls just short of the Programme for Government target of 35%; and calls on the Minister of the Environment to work with his Executive colleagues to increase existing efforts and consider innovative approaches to help reduce emissions and move to a low carbon economy.

On behalf of the Committee of the Environment, I am delighted to move the motion. I welcome the opportunity to open the debate on this important issue.

Today marks the start of the 2015 United Nations Climate Change Conference in Paris, which will run until 11 December. The aim of the conference is to agree an ambitious global plan to tackle the threat of climate change. Over the next weeks, around 190 nations, represented by world leaders, environment Ministers and government officials, will be in attendance. Our Minister of the Environment plans to attend as part of the UK delegation.

Climate change is a complex problem. Many people are very passionate about tackling climate change. That was evident in the many rallies held around the world yesterday, including in Belfast. At the very heart of the response to climate change lies the need to reduce emissions. Governments agree that emissions need to be reduced so that global temperature increases are limited to below 2°C.

In Northern Ireland, the Programme for Government set a target of reducing gas emissions by 35%, based on 1990 levels. Some progress has been made, and, currently, Northern Ireland has reduced its greenhouse gas emissions by 16%. The last published projections estimate that, by 2025, Northern Ireland will fall short of its target and reduce greenhouse gas emissions by only 33·3%. While that is not a huge shortfall, in itself, we still have a long way to go until 2025. Policies, which might impact on a reduction of emissions, can change. The next projection, based on the 2013 greenhouse gas inventory, will be available in December. It will be interesting to see the revised figures when they are published.

The Committee recognises the efforts that are being made to respond to the impacts of climate change here. The 'Northern Ireland Climate Change Adaptation Programme' is an important document in tackling climate change. It is required by the UK Climate Change Act 2008 and contains strategic objectives, proposals and policies by which each Department will meet those objectives up to 2019. It identifies flooding, water, the natural environment, agriculture and forestry as primary areas for action. However, another important aspect in the battle against climate change is mitigation — taking action to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. Statistics show that the largest sources of emissions in Northern Ireland are agriculture, transport, energy supply and residential sectors.

It is evident, therefore, that a joined-up government approach is required to further our efforts to reduce greenhouse-gas emissions and to move to a low-carbon society.

Throughout the mandate, the Committee has been briefed on the impact of climate change. In 2012, it was briefed by the Met Office. We were presented with its observations of changes to the atmosphere and oceans since 1856, and its views on what has contributed to those changes. The Met Office also outlined its projections for changes to Northern Ireland's climate over the twenty-first century, predicting hotter, drier summers and warmer, wetter winters.

Lord Deben, Chairman of the Committee on Climate Change, briefed the Committee in December 2013. That Committee was set up to advise the UK Government and the devolved Administrations on emissions targets. The main areas discussed were the measures being implemented by industry to combat change, the scientific evidence supporting climate change, and the work of the Committee on Climate Change.

The Committee also received updates on the work of the cross-departmental working group on climate change. The updates reflect on the work that has been achieved to date, including residential energy efficiency and fuel poverty schemes; ambitious household waste recycling targets; and the increasing use of low-carbon fuels, such as renewables and gas. However, more work is required. That is why the Committee is calling on the Minister, along with his Executive colleagues, to increase existing efforts and to consider innovative approaches to help to reduce emissions and move to a low-carbon economy.

As previously mentioned, the residential sector has been identified as one of the largest sources of emissions. Throughout the mandate, the Committee has explored alternative approaches to managing waste, which, it recognises, contributes to greenhouse-gas emissions. The Committee has been briefed on the environmental and economic benefits of a circular economy. Last year, the Committee also visited the VITO research facility in Belgium and the Metabolon project in Germany, where Members saw at first hand how waste was refined and reused rather than simply recycled. Those are examples of approaches that could be considered further to reduce waste that ends at landfill and, consequently, to reduce emissions.

Reducing emissions and adapting to the impacts of climate change provide the opportunity to drive innovation, support growth, develop effective and resilient infrastructure, and minimise the disruption caused by flooding, water scarcity and other climate-change risks. The Minister's attendance at the conference is a positive and important step, as it will ensure that the views of Northern Ireland on climate change are expressed at the conference. I hope that the views put forward in this evening's debate will help to inform the Minister's input to the conference. The Committee looks forward to receiving an update from the Minister's officials on the outcome of the conference and to hearing more from the Minister regarding his discussion paper on proposals for Northern Ireland climate change legislation later in the debate.

Due to the timing of the decision to select amendments, the Committee did not have an opportunity to discuss Mr Agnew's amendment; however, I am sure that Members will reflect on it in their contributions. That concludes my remarks as Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment. I would like to say a few words in my remaining time on behalf of the Alliance Party.

Climate change is here; there is no denying it. Overwhelming scientific evidence shows that global warming is man-made. In the past year, the Met Office has seen a 1°C increase in global temperature. Given that a 2°C increase is the maximum that we can tolerate without disastrous consequences, that is worrying.

7.30 pm

Western industrial countries are the biggest polluters, yet it is the poorest countries that will face the greatest harm. It is not just humans who are at risk; this is upsetting the entire ecosystem of the planet. We see the effects in the form of extreme weather and the loss of biodiversity as species lose their habitats. I was at the very well-attended climate change rally in Belfast yesterday, where we heard many people expressing their concerns. Among them, a farmer spoke of soil erosion; because of climate change, he is gradually losing his land.

I want to see a Climate Change Act in line with the rest of the UK, with legally binding targets to reduce greenhouse gas emissions. I welcome the Minister's intention to bring forward a discussion paper on the introduction of a Northern Ireland climate change Bill. We must not allow our greed to stop us from keeping the planet healthy so that future generations may enjoy what we have taken for granted. We must act now.

Mr Agnew: I beg to move the following amendment:

*Leave out all after "colleagues;" and insert
"to introduce a Climate Bill for Northern Ireland that includes legally binding, long-term and interim targets on the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions."*

I rise to compel the House to support the introduction of a climate change Bill. As the Committee Chairperson mentioned, world leaders will gather in Paris over the next two weeks to discuss climate change and seek agreement on international efforts to keep temperature rises below two degrees Celsius globally, the commonly-agreed point at which climate change becomes dangerous climate change. I am delighted that our Environment Minister will be there, and it is important that Northern Ireland plays its part. We have to take our responsibility seriously as, in international terms, a wealthy nation.

I remind the House that in February 2014 we agreed that we needed to pass a climate Bill. I ask the House not to row back on that call to the Executive to bring forward legislation specific to Northern Ireland. While we are committed under the UK Climate Change Act 2008 we have no specific Northern Ireland targets that are legally binding. The question I have to ask the Minister — and I do not aim it at him personally, but as the representative of the Executive in the debate — is this: what has been done since that debate and what action has been taken? This will be discussed over the forthcoming weeks; it is an urgent situation.

Climate change has been discussed for decades now, but with each passing year the situation becomes more grave. As Lord Stern pointed out in 2006:

"the costs will increase the longer appropriate action is delayed, to the point where the costs of inaction are potentially catastrophic".

He made the point then, and it persists today, that the sooner we act, the less costly it will be, both in human and financial terms. Each year that the Assembly delays in taking action and in bringing forward a climate Bill, we increase the inevitable costs that we will face as a result of climate change.

Mr Lyons: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: Now that we no longer have the former Member for East Antrim, I thought that I might get through this speech without an interjection. I hope that the Member is not going to be another climate denier from East Antrim, but I am willing to give way.

Mr Lyons: I thank the Member for giving way. Sammy Wilson may be in another place now but I know that his views on this have not changed. I welcome the debate and it is good to see the Member here. Who knows; he might be going to Paris himself. I would not be surprised if I found him dressed up as a polar bear standing on a plastic iceberg protesting with a lot of other people.

I will return to what the Member has just said. Does he agree that there can be an awful lot of scaremongering at the same time, which does not do any benefit to any side of this argument?

I refer him to a news article from 2007 that said that arctic summers would be ice-free by 2013. Do you not think that that kind of scaremongering does not do anything good for the debate?

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for his intervention, and, all along, I have recommended that all Members take on board scientific evidence and the views of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change, which presents peer-reviewed science. Whilst individuals may make claims, there is that collective consensus, which has been around 1990 and, indeed, since 1896, when the first causal link was made between carbon and climate. There is that consensus, rather than some of the individual claims that may not bear out to be true. All of the claims that we would see more extreme weather, greater drought and greater flooding have been proven to be true.

When we discussed this motion previously, it was on the back of serious flooding in Northern Ireland and a call to action to mitigate the flooding that we experienced. This month, we have had storm Abigail, storm Barney and storm Clodagh. It is undoubted that freak weather events, as they were once called, are increasingly becoming commonplace, and we are seeing the effects here in Northern Ireland. It is not just flooding that will impact on us. Increasing global food prices can result from changing climate, as farming in many parts of the world may no longer be sustainable. We will see environmental refugees having to move from land that was once fit for growing food crops and is no longer so due to increased drought or, indeed, flooding. We are starting to see some of the commentary on some of our global conflicts focus on the fact that reducing resources is starting to fuel some of those global conflicts. Again, climate change is leading to greater instability in the world.

This is often presented as an environmental issue, and, of course, it is, but, as I always say, the planet will survive. Life as we know it for humans and animals may not, but the planet itself will survive anything that we can do to it. The social justice element of this issue should not be lost in the House. It is unfortunate that those who have probably done least to cause climate change are those who will be affected most by its consequences. A briefing paper from Oxfam says:

It is often not environmental groups such as Friends of the Earth, the RSPB or Northern Ireland Environment Link that are making the loudest calls for action on climate change but our aid agencies, our Churches and or missionaries who are going out to Africa and developing nations elsewhere and are seeing the impacts of climate change on poverty, not in the future but today.

It is no longer something that we talk about that might happen. It is something that is happening, and, in Paris, our leaders will be seeking not to prevent climate change, because it is too late for that, but to mitigate its worst impacts and keep temperature rises below 2°C.

I have mentioned the social element and the environmental element, but there is, of course, an economic element. I come back to Lord Stern's report. He was very clear that the benefits of strong, early action on climate change outweigh the costs. We need legislation so that we can have some certainty on our policy direction. Approximately 35,000 jobs in Northern Ireland are in the low-carbon and environmental services sector, and we have seen recently, with the debacle around renewable energy subsidies, that 10,000 jobs could be at risk in that sector due to our inability to agree a way forward on subsidising renewable energy. I know that people will point to the costs, but I will come to evidence. The IMF has estimated that, globally, subsidies for fossil fuels are at $5.3 trillion, despite the evidence that they are one of the number one causes of climate change. If we look at Northern Ireland alone, we see that the new gas power plant at Ballylumford put 1% on bills. We have a target of 100% Housing Executive homes on gas. At the same time, other nations are committing to a fossil-free future. We are still subsidising fossil fuels and, at the same time, withdrawing subsidies for renewables. We are going in the opposite direction of many other countries.

So, we have the evidence. We need to move on from the somewhat facile debate about whether climate change is happening or whether it is caused by human activity. We need to act quickly, and we need to act now. We need a Northern Ireland climate Act.

Mr Irwin: As a recently appointed member of the Environment Committee and as someone who has a lifelong background in agriculture, this is an area of interest to me, especially given the fact that, according to data, agricultural activity accounts for some 29% of emissions of greenhouse gases in Northern Ireland. At times, action to reduce greenhouse gases has been an amusing debate in agriculture circles. Everyone is familiar with the fragrant smells of the farm wafting over our countryside.

As a dairy farmer, I know that there is a particular focus on the output of methane from cows in milk production, and statistics reveal dairy production to be a key contributor to greenhouse gases. There is a saying that what goes in must come out. That is more than applicable in this instance. However, it is what happens inside the cow that is the main focus of our scientists at the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI). Indeed, I was somewhat amused to view photos of cows with backpacks attached to measure their methane output. That shows the in-depth approach taken in a bid to come up with ways to reduce the methane output from bovine sources.

What scientists are struggling with in regard to livestock is the fact that, in essence, they are trying to intervene in a natural process — the digestive system. That system has worked as nature intended since time began. The focus of the scientists has been the make-up of the feed used in production and how that contributes to methane levels released. The difficulties with the various tests that have been conducted point to the cost of the various food additives or replacement elements that have been utilised in tests that seek to reduce gas content in the feed. Reports have stated that whilst additives have reduced recordable methane levels from the cow's mouth, the cost of the additives are a prohibitive factor. There is also the added cost of the carbon footprint in the production and transportation of those feed additives were they to become commonly used. So, we have a catch-22 situation in that regard.

The fact that we are discussing greenhouse gases and carbon footprints in agriculture signals a level of thought and importance that has been given to all aspects of production, be that food or any other manufacturing process. As far as agriculture is concerned, the fact that cows have been the subject of methane studies and the fact that agrifood production has been steadily moving away from small individual operators producing a small amount of product to a much larger industrialised operation has moved agriculture into a major contributor to greenhouse gas emissions.

In closing, one major concern that I have about targets set is the potential for added strain and cost on the farmer. With farmers already complying with extremely stringent legislation on animal traceability, by-product control, nitrates and a plethora of other directives, I fear that there may be further demands placed on our agrifood industry to go further with potentially costly measures to further reduce greenhouse gas emissions.

Getting back to my original point about what goes in must come out, I plead for a level of common sense, especially with regard to agrifood production, and not to increase the burden on our farming industry unrealistically.

Farmers are not afraid to play their part. Indeed, they already play a vital role across the globe in conserving and maintaining millions of acres of land. The motion points to an innovative approach to reducing emissions, and it is important that such approaches are indeed innovative and, critically, must be available and workable in the real world.

7.45 pm

Just a couple of years ago, we had some very bad weather, and I read a report that it was due to global warming. Indeed, another paper article said that it was the worst weather for over 100 years. So much for global warming. We were told that we had the worst weather due to global warming and, on the other hand, it was the worst weather for 100 years.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Ba mhaith liom labhairt i bhfabhar an rúin agus ar son an leasaithe. I rise to speak in favour of the motion and the amendment. I welcome the motion from the Chair of the Committee and from the Committee. I also welcome the attendance of the Minister to respond to the debate and the fact that he and the Taoiseach are heading to Paris. In fact, the Taoiseach is at the convention in Paris today and has already committed to introducing legislation on this matter when he comes back.

This week will see the twenty-first meeting of the conference of parties under the United Nations framework on climate change, or COP21 as it is more commonly known, when 195 nations will gather in Paris to further their commitment to limiting the future effects of climate change. They will bring with them their own ambitions, targets and plans to help limit the growth of emissions, and rightly so. Climate change is one the greatest challenges facing modern society. We have witnessed unpredictable weather catastrophes, from freak floods to record-breaking heatwaves. We have witnessed a rise in our sea levels and have watched as the area covered by the Arctic sea ice has become smaller and the ice thinner. With global average temperatures on land and sea rising, you could argue that, as a collective unit across the globe, we have been slow in coming to an agreement.

Closer to home, in May this year, the cross-departmental working group on climate change submitted its fourth annual progress report to the Executive on the performance of each Department in implementing the agreed greenhouse gas emissions reduction action plan. The action plan supports the achievement of the Programme for Government target to continue to work towards a reduction in greenhouse gas emissions of at least 35% on the 1990 levels by 2025. Many would say that that goal is not ambitious enough, but, at the very least, we must achieve it and, if at all possible, exceed it. However, current projections tell us that we are likely to achieve only a 33.3% reduction by 2025, which means that our interventions to date have not been enough and that we must do better.

I want to refer a few things back to the Minister. In 2013, the previous Minister initiated a consultation to seek views on the need for a climate change Bill and on potential elements including statutory targets to reduce greenhouse gases, the creation of a new independent climate change committee and the introduction of new statutory duties for public authorities to promote and report on actions to reduce emissions and adaptation measures. Maybe you would like to respond on where we are with that.

I have only a minute and a half left, and I want to pick up on some points that we could maybe look at in addressing some of the issues. The main contributors, as some Members have mentioned, have been transport, agriculture and carbon dioxide emissions. There are many interventions that we can carry out. It is about housekeeping practices and looking after your own homes in relation to some of the things we can actually do. In waste management, we could eliminate food waste from going into landfill and incineration sites across the North. Then there is the kerbside waste collection, which involves plastics, bottles and cardboard. Minister, maybe you would like to respond to that. It is strange that we have a system here in the North of two or three collection types right across the councils. A small start would be to get all the councils to go some way to carry out the same practices, instead of a kerbside collection in one council area and a blue bin system in another area, with contaminated waste going into them. Those are simple things that we could try.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Boylan: We need to incentivise people in relation to transport and encourage the public sector, including councils, to purchase and use electric vehicles.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member's time is up.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Chairperson of the Environment Committee for bringing this motion to the House. Obviously, it is a timely motion. One that will be helpful to the whole House, the Executive, which will be represented in Paris by the Minister, and in dealing with climate change as it relates to our situation locally.

There were rallies yesterday throughout the world to highlight this issue, including one in Belfast. Canon Michael Parker of St Anne's Cathedral, Belfast, said that there was a:

"moral obligation to care for the world and all of its people".

That reflects very much the view of other churchmen, for example Pope Francis, who has put the environment at the very top of the agenda in dealing with not simply an environmental issue but, as Mr Agnew said, an issue of social justice. This is not just a scientific issue. This is an issue of social justice as well as a political issue because, if our climate deteriorates and our world overheats, as it were, the consequences for the poorer people in the world will be disproportionately devastating. Of course, we in the West will suffer as well, as we are suffering at the moment because of the effects of industrialisation since the middle of the 19th century. We have got to address this issue and do it locally.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr A Maginness: Yes, I will.

Mr B McCrea: I know the point that he is making about those most vulnerable, but climate change is catastrophic. I do not think that people have got their head around the fact that it is not just Pakistan that it is going to affect; it is us as well. We really do have to do something and do something urgently.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr A Maginness: The Member reinforces the point that I was perhaps inadequately trying to make. Certainly, our whole world will be affected. We are custodians of the earth. We do not own the earth. We have to hand that earth over to other generations, so we must look after what we have been given.

I commend the Minister for going to Paris. Some may say, "What's the point of a Minister from here going to Paris? Sure, he'll have no effect." It is important for us to send out a strong message that we are interested and concerned, that we are part of the UK and part of Ireland, we are part of Europe and part of the world, and we want to make our contribution. It is very important that the Minister does that.

He has a strong and very clear belief that there should be climate change legislation. Unfortunately, we do not have the political consensus in this Chamber, the Executive and society at large to bring forward climate change legislation. However, we have to do it. We cannot squander time in speculating whether there are ill consequences as a result of climate change. Climate change is here. It is a scientific fact, proven in the international community. We have to wake up to the realities of that and take action.

I support the Minister in his laudatory aim of bringing climate change legislation to the Executive and to the Chamber. I hope that that can make a difference — it must make a difference. The consultation process must continue, but we must also see an emergence of political consensus. That will not happen in this mandate, but it can be realised in the next one. It is not a pipe dream; it is right and proper. We must cooperate with colleagues in the rest of the UK and Ireland because it affects our geography. It affects our two islands so intimately and is so important that we have common measures to deal with all the problems that we are faced with and will be faced with in the near future.

I look forward to further political developments on these issues. It is important that we support the Minister and other colleagues. We must build a very firm consensus. I believe that the Environment Committee has done good work and will continue to do so, showing leadership to the political community here.

Mrs Overend: I am grateful for the opportunity to speak on the motion. The Ulster Unionist Party recognises the need to address the threat of climate change. It goes without saying that this generation should have a moral obligation to pass the earth to the next generation in as good a condition or better as when we received it.

We very much hope that the aspiration of the Paris talks to deliver the first ever truly global deal to tackle climate change is realised. However, we recognise that creating consensus on the issue is extremely difficult, as was evident from the previous United Nations Climate Change Conference in Copenhagen in 2009. Some 20,000 people are due to attend the Paris conference. Among them will be 140 global leaders, including Barack Obama, Vladimir Putin and David Cameron. It is to be encouraged that the Environment Minister will also be in attendance to represent Northern Ireland.

The challenge of tackling climate change is no less formidable now than it was five years ago. The Ulster

Unionist Party is fully committed to reducing our emission levels in line with the United Kingdom's commitments to reduce greenhouse gas emissions by 80% from 1990 levels by 2050 and to reduce our carbon footprint consistently.

During Danny Kennedy's tenure as Regional Development Minister, he did his utmost to reduce emissions by making public transport more attractive. Indeed, the Belfast rapid transport system, which Mr Kennedy worked on for a long time, is introducing vehicles that utilise some of the latest hybrid technology, with lower noise vibration and, indeed, pollutants. He was rightly acknowledged for leading the cycling revolution and taking steps to create a Northern Ireland where people have the freedom and confidence to travel by bicycle. However, it appears that, collectively, the Northern Ireland Executive are not doing all that they should to bring down emissions. The Executive are on course to miss the Government targets to reduce emissions by 35% from 1990 levels by 2025. I hope that this does not become another example of the Executive being unable to deliver.

From recent figures, we can see that, rather than the Executive taking real steps forward in reducing emissions, they are going backwards, with emissions increasing from 2011 to 2012 and remaining static in 2013. That is simply not good enough. I acknowledge Steven Agnew's amendment, which seeks to establish a Northern Ireland-specific climate Bill, but there is clearly a lack of agreement among the parties on the issue.

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Mrs Overend: If you do not mind, I will continue. The levels of public consultation required in discussions with relevant stakeholders would take up a significant amount of time, so much so that it would be unachievable to establish such a Bill within the mandate. While it may not be an ideal scenario, Northern Ireland, as well as the other devolved Administrations, are covered by the UK Climate Change Act 2008, which established the world's first legally binding climate change targets. In the absence of specific Northern Ireland legislation, it is our party's view that all public bodies, including local government, should put in place carbon reduction strategies with accompanying targets to measure progress.

8.00 pm

It is clear that there is much more work to be done to lower emissions. That will involve innovative solutions. We should maximise the potential of our renewable sources by supporting advances in solar, biomass and hydro technologies, provided we do so in a way that is sensitive to local communities. The Ulster Unionist Party will continue to support steps to increase energy efficiency and, in line with UK targets, to substantially reduce greenhouse gas emissions in pursuit of a strong and sustainable environment for Northern Ireland.

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Mrs Overend: I have just finished. Sorry.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call Mr Paul Frew.

Mr Frew: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. I was about to ask the Member for Mid Ulster whether the Ulster Unionist Party supports a climate Bill for Northern Ireland, but I never got the chance. I will give way if she wishes to answer the question, but if not we will move on.

There is no doubt that the United Nations climate change conference is very important. It makes ambitious global plans to tackle the threat of climate change, and I welcome the Minister's attendance, not only to represent Northern Ireland but as part of the UK delegation. It is very useful, and it will stand him and the Assembly in good stead. There will be more than 190 countries in Paris to try and agree something that they have never been able to agree before. I will welcome any real progress, because countries can do more. Some of the greatest emitters in the world can do a lot more than they have done, especially over the last 25 years.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Frew: Yes, I will.

Mr B McCrea: The Member issued a challenge to the Ulster Unionist Party, but I invite him to clarify his position. What I have heard so far is a lack of consensus. Does the Democratic Unionist Party accept that climate change is a problem, and will it take any actions necessary to address the problem?

Mr Frew: I thank the Member for his contribution. I can be very clear: we see this as a problem, and we see that things have to be done, but we cannot support a climate Bill for Northern Ireland. I will get to that later.

Most of the countries at the summit have never agreed, and probably will not agree, legally binding clauses or legislation. The US never ratified the Kyoto treaty from 1997. It is one of the top five emitters in the globe, and it will not ratify Kyoto.

Mr Lyons: I thank the Member for giving way. Just for his information, the United States and Canada have both said already that they will not commit to any legally binding targets.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Frew: I thank the Member for that contribution.

India and Saudi Arabia — for different reasons, of course — are only two of the countries trying to water down the rules to keep on using fossil fuels. Of course, Canada has withdrawn completely from the Kyoto protocol. China will even resist any transparency that the UK might try and place in an agreement, even a voluntary agreement. We are therefore faced with a difficult position. However, it is a global problem. While I can certainly support the motion and the intentions behind it, I cannot support the amendment, because one thing that we cannot do in Northern Ireland is tie the hands of our farming community and of our business community, which exports and uses transport, and of this region of the UK generally. The UK passed the Climate Change Act 2008, and we are part of that. Look at Northern Ireland's record on this.

The International Energy Agency, a think tank, estimates that 13·5% of the world's primary energy supply was produced from renewable sources in 2013.

That sounds like a pretty decent slice, but almost three quarters of that was from the burning of wood, dung and charcoal in the poorest countries. Wind turbines, solar farms, tidal barriers and geothermal power stations made up just 1·3% between them, and that is globally. Little Northern Ireland produces 20% of its energy through wind. Northern Ireland is punching well above its weight when it comes to the fight against climate change. I plead with the Minister and the House to continue that good work and keep enticing and encouraging our businesses, councils and Departments to do more.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he not agree that all of that has been put under threat with the withdrawal of subsidies for wind energy?

Mr Frew: No, it is not. How could it be under threat when we are already at 20%? How can you put under threat the 20% that we already generate? If we generate more, that would be great, but not at the cost of crippling our businesses or hurting our agricultural base. These are the people who will help propel Northern Ireland into a better place. Why would we tie their hands behind their back when China will not do what it is told on voluntary arrangements? In fact, China will balk against transparency, especially when India produces more cars and burns more fossil fuel. Why would you tie the hands of Northern Ireland's businesses? I plead with the Minister to encourage, cajole and incentivise but not to tie the hands —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member bring his remarks to a close?

Mr Frew: — of our businesses behind their back. You will hurt our families even more. We already have rules —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member's time is up.

Mr Frew: — with regards to the Climate Change Act in the UK.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Cuirim fáilte roimh an díospóireacht seo. I welcome the debate and place on record my support for the amendment. We had tabled a similar amendment, but it was not selected as Mr Agnew's appears to be more comprehensive. The overall sentiment of seeking an ambitious climate change Bill was the same, so I am more than happy to support Mr Agnew's amendment.

I also want to take the opportunity to send my support and gratitude to all those who were involved in activism over the weekend to highlight the talks that are going on in Paris. Those people, more than the global leaders who will invariably take all the media attention over the week, deserve our thanks for raising the issue and making sure that it was the headline story on the news all day yesterday and for much of today. Climate change is the most important issue for this and future generations.

I heard one of the people interviewed on 'The RTÉ Nine o'clock News' last night quote a very simple phrase. The gentleman said:

"We are the first generation to feel the effects of climate change and the last that will be able to do anything about it".

It is very important for us to remember that.

For once, we have significant scientific evidence telling us what will happen if the temperature continues to increase, but we still have time to act. We do not have much time, but it is important that we take as many opportunities as we can to reduce any further increase in the temperature of the planet.

The first thing that we need to do is to move to reduce carbon emissions and introduce Government policies that reflect that requirement. Some Members of the House and some members of the community are open proponents of fracking, which is one of the biggest threats to tackling the serious issue of climate change. If we are serious about keeping the temperature of the planet lower, we need to stop going after fossil fuels, particularly those extracted by non-conventional and dangerous methods. We need to move away from fossil fuels; we do not need to look for more of them.

We also need to invest in energy efficiency. For the last five years, the Assembly and the Executive have missed the opportunity to invest tens of millions of pounds in retrofitting homes and businesses through the failure to implement the green new deal.

Mr B McCrea: Thank you for giving way. In exhorting people to invest, does the Member think that the Northern Ireland Executive should invest in the grid infrastructure so that we can bring more wind power online? What is his position on the interconnector with the South of Ireland?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Flanagan: I thank the Member for his intervention. The Executive should not just invest in the grid; it is my view that the grid should be nationalised, because it effectively operates as a subsidised monopoly. Why should that happen? Why should private companies be allowed to profit from something that is run in the public interest? Instead of just investing in it, I would like to see it nationalised and run in the public interest.

With regard to the North/South interconnector, the Member is well aware of Sinn Féin's policy on it: we want to see it undergrounded, particularly through the A5/N2 project, as it makes sense to me that it should be done as part of that scheme. I do support infrastructural investment, but energy efficiency is one of the greatest tools that we have for reducing consumption, which is just as important as reducing overall usage of carbon emissions. It could be done very simply by investing in energy efficiency. Not only would that reduce emissions, it would also create thousands of local construction jobs and reduce the fuel bills of families here.

Moving away from local activism and towards a more global scheme, people like Pope Francis have shown great leadership on that issue at a global level. In my own constituency, Father Joseph McVeigh, with the support of Bishop Liam MacDaid, has established the Clogher Justice Peace and Integrity of Creation group, which counts campaigning and action to prevent climate change as one of its top priorities.

Mr Girvan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Flanagan: I will, Paul; go ahead.

Mr Girvan: For a point of clarification, does the Member have any idea what the cross-section of the cable for that underground interconnector would be?

Mr Flanagan: I do, and I am happy to speak to you afterwards, Paul, but I have a minute and a half in a debate about climate change here, and I do not think that I should talk about the North/South interconnector.

That group has tackling climate change as one of its key priorities and now has the support of people from other denominations, including the Reverend Kenny Hall, who supports the work of the group and what it tries to achieve. The Church and our religious leaders have recognised the seriousness of the issue; so too have many scientists. It is now time that we as a political class grasp the seriousness of the issue and work to ensure that we address it.

I support the call for the Minister to bring forward a Bill. We hear a lot about how he has to get Executive support, but many Members have tabled questions to him and, in one previous answer, he indicated that he does not have support from Executive parties but that he would bring proposals to the Executive once he had concluded his considerations. I am keen to see what proposals he brought forward and whether his considerations were concluded.

A former Environment Minister who is constantly talked about when we talk about climate change, Mr Sammy Wilson, recently appeared on 'Inside Politics' on the BBC with Mr Agnew and, amazingly, described saving the world as a vanity project. I have never heard such nonsense. His views are clearly antiquated, and, fortunately, he represents a minority.

I do not think that some people have grasped the environmental and societal impacts of climate change —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Flanagan: — and the fact that it will be felt much greater in areas of the world where poverty is much higher and where levels of prosperity and affluence are not as high as here. We have a responsibility to other citizens in the globe, not just to those who live here.

Ms Hanna: I thank the Member for bringing the debate and clarifying our minds on it. I think that we are agreed that climate change is the biggest challenge facing this generation and the world today. It is not just about environmental issues; it is about poverty and global security. It is certainly welcome that the Minister is attending the summit next month. I know that since he first took up office he has worked to build the consensus that we need here for a climate Bill.

COP21 does have the ability to change how we deal with climate change. There are 160 countries coming together, representing 90% of emissions around the world and 90% of the world economy. The fact that they have already put proposals on the table is a change from business as usual. I remain optimistic, but the kind of transition that we need to a lower-carbon economy will take coordinated effort and binding targets. We certainly cannot expect developing countries to jump first.

The SDLP sees climate change as a global justice issue. It is a very current issue; it is not hypothetical. As others said, those who are least responsible are already on the front line of drought, flood and other extreme weather events that are making food security a massive issue and making food chains less predictable or secure. Extreme weather hits our screen around things like a cyclone in the Philippines and hurricane Sandy. The Member has left, but I do differentiate between weather and climate, as they are very different things and should be treated in different ways. Those shocks are reducing agricultural yields, causing food price shocks and massively growing the hunger gap that many of the world's poorest people already experience.

8.15 pm

The Member on the Benches opposite mentioned climate change as scaremongering: it is not. We are ignoring the reality in front of us. I was with Concern in Bangladesh in 2010, and up to a fifth of that country is already, at times, underwater. Hundreds of thousands of climate refugees have nowhere else to go and are living a forced nomadic lifestyle to try and stay ahead of flooding and landbank erosion. Drought and hunger are exacerbating conflict in places such as the Horn of Africa. If we look at the conflict-driven Syrian refugee crisis, we can see that this is an interconnected world. We cannot close our eyes to these issues any more, and that is another reason why this is our problem. I think those —

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Ms Hanna: I will.

Mr B McCrea: The Member has been talking about nations. I draw her attention to the plight of Pakistan, where one of the most densely populated areas in the world is under huge threat. Many countries are saying that a reduction of 2°C is too much and that we should be aiming at 1.5°C. Even if we were to get 2°C, it is by no means certain that that would fix the problem.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Ms Hanna: Fortunately, I think that the targets that have already been put on the table would probably produce 3°C, which is considerably higher than the 2°C we need. Even those who are not motivated to alleviate human suffering — and I am sure that everybody in the Chamber is — global security concerns mean that getting a deal in Paris has to be an absolute no-brainer.

So, these talks need to address simultaneously mitigation, reducing carbon emissions and the global temperature rise and helping people who are least able, and most vulnerable to climate shocks, to adapt. I worked in international development for 10 years before coming into the Assembly. The innovation, creativity and will are there, at low level and national level, for people to develop their economies in a more sustainable way. However, if you add up all the interventions on the table for adaptation, they come to something like $3 per smallholding farmer in the world. That is not enough. There needs to be substantial financial support for that.

Every month and year of delay in tackling climate change is making it harder. As others have said, it really threatens to reduce all the progress that has been made. Around the world, people are wary that politicians do not have the vision and long-term thinking beyond their next election to make the really major infrastructure and mindset shifts on this. We have got to stop seeing decarbonisation —

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Ms Hanna: I will not, because I am just going to finish up. We have got to stop seeing decarbonisation as a punishment and a threat. We have to start looking at the benefits it can bring to our lifestyles and economy. Hopefully, we in the Assembly, who are probably least known for our vision and long-term thinking, can confound that view and come up with something binding here.

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Ms Hanna: I will finish — if you want to, go on ahead, yes.

Mr Frew: I thank the Member for giving way. She has that extra minute. I hear what she is saying, appreciate all her arguments, and I am on the same page with a lot of them. However, can she tell the House how a climate Bill for Northern Ireland could make any inroads that we cannot make under the UK Climate Change Act 2008. The deal really has to be done in Paris, with the emitters that are doing most damage — the big five, 10 and 25. Northern Ireland generates 4% of the UK's emissions.

Ms Hanna: I have only 20 seconds, but I think that that discussion is being held. We need to have binding targets here. I will finish by quoting my favourite placard from the many I saw yesterday. It simply stated:

"Blah, blah, blah, fix this now".

We have to. We can have that conversation, and I am sure that the Minister will happily have it with you.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I call Jim Allister, and the Member will have four minutes of the remaining debate.

Mr Allister: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. This debate could do with a bit of climate change itself. We are missing Mr Sammy Wilson to raise the temperature a bit, but there we are.

I have no issue with the fact that there is climate change. I have no issue with the fact that, as its custodians, we should seek not to damage the planet and pass it on in as good shape as we possibly can. However, I have a major issue with the cause of climate change. I do not swallow all this climate alarmism that it is all man-made. I believe the truth to be that climate change is cyclical. In the 16th and 17th centuries, there were winter ice-skating fairs on the River Thames. Before that, in the 11th century, we had the medieval warming period, when they grew grapes in Britain. Who are we going to blame for that? Was it due to the emissions that were belching out from the Industrial Revolution? I do not think so. In the 1st century, we are told, there were grapes grown in Britain at the time of the Romans. So, I hear talk about climate change deniers, but what about the history deniers who deny the fact that, cyclically, the climate has changed over the centuries and is doing the same again?

Mr Flanagan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: No, I am sorry, I have not been given any extra time, so I will not.

Yet, puny man thinks that we will somehow, with our tiny little teaspoon, stop the inevitable cycle of climate change. It is vanity to have a motion like this, talking about the mighty things that we are going to do. Yes, you should not add to it, but the truth is that most of it is beyond your control. That is something that the climate change alarmists fail to face up to. That should be the starting point.

Then, we should recognise that some of the things that this motion would have us do, and what its supporters would like to see come out of Paris, would inflict immense damage on some of the poorest countries in the world, which are dependent on fossil fuels to try to pick themselves off the floor — the Indias and the Chinas. Who are we in the West to say to them, “You shall not have the opportunity that we had to build an industrial society by using the fossil fuels that you have. It’s all right for us, but it’s not all right for you. You just live in your poverty.”? That is the grandiose message of some of this motion.

Then, of course, we think, “Ah well, we will have all sorts of wonderful targets, and we’ll feel so much the better for it.” Never mind the fact that, in setting those targets, we inflict upon our population unnecessary and huge energy costs. We go for the most expensive form of energy possible, namely wind energy, subsidise it to the hilt, expect the consumer to pay and then we say we are serving the interests of the community.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Allister: We need a reality check, and this motion is taking us in the opposite direction.

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): I thank the Chairperson of the Environment Committee and the Committee itself for proposing this very timely debate on climate change, which corresponds with the opening day of the Conference of the Parties in Paris. I also thank Stephen Agnew for tabling his amendment to the motion, and I am grateful to all Members for their contributions to this very important debate.

As most Members pointed out in their contributions, the mounting evidence on the speed and impact of climate change is indisputable. The Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change reports published last year set out the overwhelming scientific evidence that current climate change impacts are set to increase and will do so dramatically unless urgent action is taken to reduce global greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Durkan: I might come to you later, Basil.

The reports highlighted that climate change is set to inflict severe, widespread and irreversible impacts on people and the natural world unless carbon emissions are cut sharply and rapidly. The truth is that climate change presents the biggest worldwide challenge of our time. It presents the greatest risk to our health, environment and economies, and it will affect us all no matter where we live.

However, the gravest injustice is that climate change hits hardest the developing world, those who have done the least to cause it. I firmly believe that we have a moral responsibility to protect the poorest and most vulnerable groups and regions from the dangers of climate change, and it is critical that we take action now.

International efforts are necessary to ensure protection of humankind and our planet and to limit the increase in global average temperature to below 2°C, increases above which would lead to significant and dangerous climate impacts throughout the world.

At COP21, I will work closely with the UK Government, devolved Administrations and the Irish Government in supporting efforts to reach an ambitious and robust international agreement. In preparation for the conference, countries have publicly outlined what post-2020 climate actions they intend to take under a new international agreement. Those contributions will largely determine whether the world achieves an ambitious agreement in Paris that puts us on a path towards a low-carbon, climate-resilient future.

In March this year, the 28 member states of the EU submitted their intended nationally determined contributions giving a commitment to an EU-binding target of at least a 40% domestic reduction in greenhouse gas emissions by 2030 compared with 1990. I fully endorse the EU’s climate change ambition set out in that approach and the meaningful contribution that it makes to a balanced global agreement in Paris. The COP in Paris and the proposed international agreement on contributions is the biggest of its kind to take place, gathering together the countries that are responsible for 86% of global emissions. This is about four times the amount of global emissions covered by the Kyoto protocol, the world’s first carbon-cutting treaty.

In Paris, I will be part of the UK delegation and therefore involved in discussions around the Secretary of State’s negotiation position. I will engage with other Environment Ministers and attend events that focus on how Governments at the devolved and regional level can take action to invest in sustainable economies that deliver the benefit of reduced emissions, job creation and security. It is also my intention to engage with representatives from charities such as Christian Aid, Trócaire and the Mary Robinson Foundation, some of whose good work has been mentioned today. My aim is to encourage and provide support for a comprehensive global agreement on climate change action that ensures that we fulfil our moral responsibility to protect the poorest and most vulnerable people and regions from the dangers of climate change.

I also firmly support objectives for any agreement at Paris that will secure additional funding from 2020 onwards. This funding is essential in order to help developing countries with their plans to mitigate and adapt to climate change. The international agreement must be supported by a comprehensive monitoring and reporting regime and enshrined in a legally binding agreement to ensure that countries abide by their commitments. If we achieve a successful outcome on the issue in Paris, we will offer those in poverty the opportunity to build for a sustainable future and mitigate the worst impacts of climate change.

At home, we must also play our part and make our contribution to reducing greenhouse gas emissions. As outlined in the Committee’s motion, the current projected reduction of greenhouse gas emissions for the North is 33·3% by 2025, based on 1990 levels, and falls just short of the PFG target of 35%. Mr Agnew, rightly in my opinion, asked what had been done since the debate last year that — unexpectedly, I suppose — gave me a mandate to pursue climate change legislation through the Executive. Mr Flanagan asked something similar. While I was given a mandate, what was demonstrated that day and again today is that there is no consensus on the issue. I have been working to build consensus and to build momentum for climate change legislation. While some parties and Departments are still reluctant, it is them and not us who are the King Canutes here. They are standing against a growing tide of scientific and public opinion.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Durkan: I will try to get you in later. I have a lot to get through. I am not trying to freeze you out.

I will continue to work across all Departments to examine and report on emissions reduction performance both within Departments and through partnership working across Departments and with other stakeholders. I will also continue to encourage, identify and promote current and new actions to reduce emissions and to monitor their effectiveness. The motion calls on me, with Executive colleagues, to step up efforts and consider innovative approaches to help reduce emissions and move to a low-carbon economy. To date, we have developed mitigation and adaptation plans and annual reporting mechanisms to the Executive. There is no doubt that we are making progress.

8.30 pm

Our energy sector has significantly reduced its emissions from electricity generation, while our renewables sector has expanded its contribution to our energy demand. Our agriculture sector has been working hard to reduce carbon inputs in its production, thus helping its promotion in global markets. Mr Irwin expressed concerns about potential costs for the agriculture sector: it is important that we look at the work that has been done in other jurisdictions, particularly the South, which has a similar reliance on agriculture for its economy. Through work on carbon-intensity indicators, there has been no negative impact on productivity. While their Origin Green policy drives it forward, our orange and green politics hold us back. Mr Boylan referred to the transport sector. It has seen the development of an e-car infrastructure. The infrastructure is there, and people are slowly but surely switching on to the merits of electric vehicles.

In my Department, I have agreed voluntary prosperity agreements with several companies, through which the NIEA and an organisation or business can explore innovative approaches to reducing environmental impacts in ways that create prosperity and well-being. Those who have signed up to the agreements are already seeing the benefits to the planet and, importantly, to their pockets.

The message is also being brought to future generations. I am proud to say that Northern Ireland is the first place in the world to achieve 100% Eco-School status. We are creating little eco-warriors in every school across the North.

We have reduced the amount of waste going to landfill, increased recycling and supported innovative projects that match my desire to work towards zero waste and a circular economy. Mr Boylan referred to disparities across councils when it came to recycling policies. That is something that I am acutely aware of. I have made no secret of my preference to move towards a single waste authority and the implementation of uniformity across councils. The simpler we make recycling, the easier it will be for people to do and the more successful it will be. The Member also referred to an increase in the incidence of severe weather, as did others, although I have not seen many of the heatwaves that Cathal referred to.

While current projections indicate that we are close to the target of a 35% reduction in greenhouse gas emissions by 2025, its achievement remains challenging. There remains considerable uncertainty due to the range of variables, policies and issues that have the potential to lead to a slowdown in the rate of reduction or even to an increase in emissions. That could be anything from a cold winter, the rate of economic growth or a change in government policy. One such example is the recent DETI proposal on the closure of the Northern Ireland renewables obligations (NIRO) for onshore wind development. It is estimated that the closure could result in energy from renewable resources making up only 30% of the required demand by 2020 and not the 40% indicated in the strategic energy framework. That could have a significant adverse effect on the future projected performance against the PFG target for greenhouse gas emission reduction.

It is incumbent on government to show leadership and to act as a driver for action. That is why I am fully committed to ensuring that the North plays its full part in minimising emissions. I have strenuously supported having our own climate change legislation, which would provide clarity and the long-term certainty that business and industry need. It would create the environment to drive and encourage innovation, to plan effectively in the technology needed and to generate employment as we make the transition to a low-carbon economy and a more sustainable and just society. In doing so, we could deliver my vision of a better environment and a stronger economy. Most importantly, we must deliver for our people, from how we deliver our services as a Government to the support that we provide to business. They must see the benefits of attracting business and industry in the jobs that they deliver and in how, together, through efficiency, planning and innovation, we can deliver a better environment for all.

I want to pick up on some of the points that were raised, while I have a wee minute.

Paul Frew wondered whether agreement was possible at Paris. I seem to remember his party saying that agreement would not be possible at Stormont House unless certain conditions were met. They were not met, but there was agreement. Without seeing a climate change Bill for Northern Ireland, he has said that the DUP will not support a climate change Bill for Northern Ireland. It seems as though the DUP is doing a Meatloaf song: "We would do anything to stop climate change, but we won't do that."

Phil Flanagan made a very pertinent point on the wasted opportunity that was the green new deal. He referred, as did Alban Maginness, to the leadership that was shown by the Churches. Recently, I met Church leaders from across the island. He would be interested to learn about the deliberations that I have had in progressing legislation. I think that he would also be very interested to learn which Ministers resistance is coming from.

I see Northern Ireland climate change legislation as part of a strategy in achieving my aim. That is why I have issued a discussion document to stakeholders that outlines my thoughts on climate change legislation and seeks their support for the introduction of a climate change Bill in the next Assembly term. My discussion document seeks the views of stakeholders on a range of proposals that I would like to see included in a future Northern Ireland climate change Bill. These include ensuring that we contribute to the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions by the setting of a long-term target; providing powers to set interim targets that would assist in evaluating progress being made to the long-term target while ensuring that we remain competitive in a global economic market; and providing powers to establish an independent climate change advisory body.

In parallel with this exercise, at my request, the Committee on Climate Change is working on an update on its 2011 report 'The Appropriateness of a Northern Ireland Climate Change Act'. That update is expected to be published next month. I believe that the outcome of my discussion document on proposals for taking forward our own climate change legislation and the update from the Committee on Climate Change on the appropriateness of a Northern Ireland climate change Act, along with the outcome of the climate change conference in Paris, will ensure that we are well placed to make a climate change Bill central to the work programme of the new Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs. I will also endeavour — I look forward to support — to ensure that the passage of this vital legislation is central to the next Programme for Government.

Mr Agnew: What if it is all a hoax and we make the world a better place for nothing? What if we insulate our housing stock and prevent the atrocity that is more people dying in Northern Ireland due to winter-related deaths than in Finland, where temperatures are much colder? What if we switch from pollutant fossil fuels and reduce the 500 deaths a year in Northern Ireland due to air pollution? What if we cut congestion? What if we did all those things and climate change is, as Mr Allister would suggest, something that we could not affect?

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: I will give way very quickly.

Mr Frew: What if Northern Ireland had the second most expensive energy costs in Europe? What if we lost thousands of jobs because of that fact? What if you put thousands of people into poverty overnight because they lose their job?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Agnew: What if we did not have a DUP energy Minister?

The Member made arguments about tying people's hands, the threat of legislation and the danger of going down that road. He suggested that we were already on the right trajectory. I am sorry to the Member, but if his view of the right trajectory is scrapping the green new deal to insulate people's homes and tackle fuel poverty, and switching instead to a subsidy for the gas industry and withdrawing subsidies from renewables, which are not a threat to farmers — in fact, the Ulster Farmers' Union is legally challenging that — it is not a view that I share. Instead of subsidising clean, green, renewable energy, we provide £32 million for gas to the west and subsidise a gas power station at Ballylumford that puts 1% on every energy bill, including the large energy users that the Member is a great defender of. We are subsidising that at the same time as withdrawing subsidies for renewables. We still have a target of 100% of Housing Executive homes being heated by gas while the rest of the world is coming to the conclusion that we need a future that is fossil-free.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: The Member did not get an opportunity to speak, so I will give way.

Mr B McCrea: Thank you; I will be brief. I ask the Member in his summation to address the two counterarguments in the debate. The first was from Paul Frew, who said that there is climate change but that Northern Ireland is too small to do anything about it and that the issue is for China and India. The second argument — climate change probably happens but is cyclical, and we cannot do anything about it — was put forward by Mr Allister in the face of overwhelming scientific evidence that it is man-made.

Mr Agnew: Mr Allister's point that climate change is somehow cyclical, that that has not been taken account of by the greatest scientists around the globe and that this would be news to 97% of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change is up there with the people who told me, when we had the volcano eruptions, that volcanoes were causing climate change. The IPCC is well aware of volcanoes and cyclical climate change; the evidence is about human-caused climate change. That is what we are talking about and is what we need to tackle.

Mr Lyons: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: I cannot give way any further because of time constraints.

Mr Allister made a point that world poverty would somehow be increased because we are going to prevent poorer nations from developing. I will give him the benefit of the doubt and put it down to ignorance rather than deception, because the very central point of the Paris talks is about contraction and convergence: we meet those poorer countries halfway, reduce our emissions and allow them to increase theirs so that we have equity across the globe to tackle poverty and ensure that the developing world, which has suffered as a result of our lifestyle, does not continue to do so and that we have fair distribution.

On the point that we, as a small country or region, cannot or should not act, I say that we must act. Indeed, we must give certainty to investors who want to invest in renewable and low-carbon technologies that this is the trajectory and that this region and this Government are committed to taking action on climate change. In response to Mr Wilson: I am so vain; I do think that climate change is about me. I think that it is about you and about all of us, and we need to act now.

Mrs Cameron (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment): I welcome the opportunity to conclude the debate on the Environment Committee's behalf. I thank everyone for contributing to the debate this evening. There is no doubt that the subject of climate change generates passion, emotion and debate, which has been demonstrated by many of you.

Before I make my winding-up speech, I reiterate the need for the Executive to work together to develop further innovative approaches. This evening, many of you reflected on the need for a climate change Bill, and the House will shortly decide whether it wishes to accept Mr Agnew's amendment calling for such a Bill. Outside of that, however, there are many innovative approaches that the Executive can adopt to reduce our greenhouse gas emissions further.

As the Chair outlined in her opening remarks, the largest source of emissions in Northern Ireland comes from agriculture, transport, energy supply and the residential sector. No Department can work in isolation to tackle this issue.

A cross-departmental working group on climate change is certainly a start, but, given the uncertainty over whether Northern Ireland will achieve its 35% reduction of emissions by 2025, we should refocus our efforts and work together to become innovators and leaders in developing approaches to achieve this target. The Committee saw one such example of innovation a few weeks ago during a visit to a recycling centre which is part of a social enterprise. It offers an innovative approach to reuse recycled materials, which generates both environmental and economic benefits. It certainly provided members with food for thought.

8.45 pm

I will now refer to Members' contributions. Anna Lo, speaking on behalf of the Alliance Party, talked about a 1% increase in global temperature according to the Met Office. She talked about the poorest countries facing the greatest harm, the upset to the entire ecosystem and the loss of biodiversity and habitat. She referred to her discussion with — sorry, I cannot make out the rest of that. She wants to see a climate change Act.

Mr Steven Agnew, who proposed the amendment, was delighted that the Minister would be at the conference. As he said, we have to take on our responsibilities and to do that seriously. He said that we have no specific legally binding targets in Northern Ireland. He said that this is an urgent situation that becomes more urgent with each year. He said that the sooner we act, the less costly it will be in human and financial terms. In response to an intervention, he said that he would accept the evidence and views of international scientists. When this motion was discussed previously, it was on the back of incidents of flooding, and increasing global food prices may make farming in some parts of the world unsustainable. Climate change leads to greater instability in the world, he said, and it is unfortunate that those who have done least to cause climate change will be the most affected by it. He said that what we are seeking to do in Paris is not to stop climate change but to deal with its worst effects. He also said that 10,000 jobs could be at risk in the renewable energy sector and that we are still subsidising fossil fuels.

William Irwin spoke next, and, from an agricultural background, he said that agricultural activity accounts for 29% of emissions produced in Northern Ireland. He said that scientists are taking an in-depth approach to reduce methane emissions from cattle by changing the make-up of feed. He said that the fact that we are discussing greenhouse gases in agriculture shows the attention that is given to all aspects of production. He talked about the farmer already having to deal with restrictions and the farmer playing a vital part in protecting the land. He called for a level of common sense and not to overly burden farmers, and said that solutions and approaches should be workable in the real world. He concluded by saying that we had had the worst weather in 100 years and asked whether that was global warming.

The next Member to speak was Cathal Boylan, and he spoke in favour of the motion and the amendment. He said that climate change is one of the greatest challenges facing modern society. He said that we must attempt to meet or exceed the Programme for Government targets for emissions. He talked about transport and agriculture being the main contributors and of how we can prevent food waste from going to landfill. He said that we need to look at all councils introducing a kerbside collection system.

Alban Maginness spoke next, and he welcomed the motion. He said that there is a moral obligation to care for the world and all of its people. He spoke about Pope Francis and the fact that he had put this to the top of the agenda, and that it is not just an environmental issue but a social issue. He said that we need to address the issue globally and that we must look after the earth. He commended the Minister for going to Paris to send out a strong message that we are part of the world and that we want to make our contribution. He commended the Minister for bringing forward climate change legislation and said that we must cooperate with colleagues in the UK and Ireland. He spoke of its effect on us all.

Next we had Sandra Overend, and she spoke about creating consensus and how difficult that is. She also said that when Danny Kennedy was the Regional Development Minister he did his utmost to reduce emissions. Sandra spoke about the Executive being on course to miss targets for emissions and said that there is clearly a lack of agreement on climate change. She said that Northern Ireland is covered by the UK Climate Change Act and that there is much more work to be done.

Paul Frew spoke next and asked whether the Ulster Unionist Party supports a climate change Bill. He welcomed the Minister's attendance at the conference as part of a UK delegation. He said that he would welcome real progress at the conference, as countries have responsibilities. He said that he sees climate change as a problem but cannot support a climate change Bill. He spoke about the USA never ratifying the Kyoto agreement and about China resisting any transparency in agreements. He said that he could support the motion but not the amendment. His concern was that we do not tie the hands of farmers and businesses when the UK already has a Climate Change Act, and we are already part of that.

Phil Flanagan spoke on behalf of Sinn Féin and said that it had a similar amendment, which was not accepted. He spoke about climate change being a most important issue for this generation and for those who will follow. He said that there was significant evidence that we still have time to act, and he talked about the need to reduce emissions. He spoke of concerns about fracking and fossil fuels and said that the Assembly had missed the opportunity to invest in the green new deal. He supported structural investment and said that, on a global level, Pope Francis had shown leadership, and that Churches and religious orders had recognised the seriousness of climate change. He welcomed the intention to introduce a Bill.

Speaking next, Claire Hanna said that climate change is the biggest issue facing the world and that we can change how we deal with it. She spoke about the transition to a lower carbon economy taking time and said that we cannot expect the poorest countries to move first. She also said that up to one fifth of Bangladesh already suffers flooding due to climate change and that this is an interconnected world. She said that the targets currently on the table would produce a 3% reduction, which is higher than we need. She talked about the need to help the most vulnerable to adapt and said that every delay in tackling climate change makes it more difficult.

Next, we had Jim Allister, who said that he had no issue with the fact that there is climate change and that we should put the world in the best shape possible. He believes that climate change is cyclical and natural and that most of it is beyond your control. He said that the actions called for would inflict the most damage on the poorest countries and prevent them building a modern economy using their fossil fuels.

The Minister was next, and he thanked the Committee for the motion and Steven Agnew for his amendment. He said that there was overwhelming evidence that climate change is increasing and that it hits the developing world hardest. He said that it is critical that we take action now and that we engage with other Environment Ministers and charities to encourage comprehensive global agreement.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member draw her remarks to a close?

Mrs Cameron: I will not get through all the contributions. In conclusion, I would like to wish the Minister well at this week's conference in Paris. The Committee looks forward to hearing the outcome from his officials in the new year.

Resolved:

That this Assembly notes that the 2015 United Nations Climate Change Conference is taking place in Paris from 30 November to 11 December; considers that this is an opportunity to agree an ambitious global plan to tackle the threat of climate change; welcomes the Minister of the Environment's attendance at this conference to represent Northern Ireland; further notes that the projected reduction of greenhouse gas emissions of 33.3% by 2025, based on 1990 levels, falls just short of the Programme for Government target of 35%; and calls on the Minister of the Environment to work with his Executive colleagues to introduce a Climate Bill for Northern Ireland that includes legally binding, long-term and interim targets on the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions.

Mr B McCrea: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. I want to draw to your attention that, once again, I was the only Member who had his name down to speak who was not —

Mr Weir: No, that is not right. There were at least three.

Mr B McCrea: Sorry, my misunderstanding, Mr Deputy Speaker.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order. Mr McCrea, you have the Floor. Please continue.

Mr B McCrea: Thank you. I do not wish to be inaccurate. I thought that I was to speak after Mr Allister and was therefore next on the list.

It was an important debate, which, as chair of the all-party group, I have had a lot of input into. I really would have liked to have had the opportunity to make a proper contribution. I am grateful that many Members afforded me the courtesy of letting me intervene, but, given the importance of the debate, a few minutes extra from the Business Committee might have been appropriate. I ask you to bear that in mind, Mr Deputy Speaker. I am not making any complaint. I am just drawing that to your attention.

Mr Weir: Further to that point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker, without making any challenge to the Chair, will you confirm that there were Members who were not called to speak in the debate who were higher on the list than some who were called?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): A number of Members who wished to participate were not called. Acting as the Deputy Speaker, I have the duty to try to give regard to party strengths and the variety of views — the balance of opinion. That is a job that I endeavour to do to the best of my ability.

When everyone does not get to speak, I can assure you that, like this moment in time, I am aware that a number of Members are not satisfied, I understand that it was a motion for which the Business Committee allowed one and a half hours. If someone wishes to change that, it is in the hands of your representatives on the Business Committee. Acting in my role of Deputy Speaker, I am required to follow the guidance that is set down and to endeavour to provide a range of Members to speak to reflect the balance of party strengths and opinion on a particular issue. Your views are on the record and I am sure that the Speaker will be made aware of them. I hope that your representatives on the Business Committee will also be aware of them.

Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Progress of the Cross-Departmental Autism Strategy (2013-2020) and Action Plan (2013-2016) as at 30 September 2015

Published on 13 November 2015.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The purpose of this statement is to advise the Assembly that I have placed in the Assembly Library, a Progress Report on the implementation of the cross-departmental Autism Strategy (2013-2020) and Action Plan (2013-2016).

As members will be aware, the Strategy and Action Plan were developed to help improve services and support for people with autism, their families and carers, throughout their lives. This Progress Report provides a summary on the status of each of the actions contained in the Strategy Action Plan, together with a brief narrative highlighting key areas of progress over the last year and a look ahead to challenges in the coming year.

As we are around 18 months from when the Strategy and Action Plan were launched, I wanted to share with you the progress and ongoing work that is taking place to develop and extend post-diagnostic autism services, not just through my Department and the HSC, but through all Government Departments and their Arms Length Bodies and Agencies.

It is also important to acknowledge the work of the community and voluntary sector in this area - which continues to provide advice, support, training, social activities, short breaks and housing to individuals with autism, their parents/carers and siblings. They also provide services, support, friendship and advice to families and individuals through small local groups, and many of the larger third sector organisations have been commissioned by the statutory sector to deliver specific services, guidance or staff training.

Many of the key themes of the Strategy are progressing well, with better support available to access services for people with autism, their families and carers. This has been achieved by providing autism training for front line staff, education professionals, youth workers and parents of children with autism. There is also better awareness of support services available to families, through a number of ongoing initiatives, including improved Parents and Carers Education Programmes, signposting by way of the Family Support NI website and through HSC Trusts, as part of their triaging process, providing families with information about how to access support services whilst waiting on autism specific assessment.

I would like to inform members of just a few of the innovative actions that have been progressed by joint working arrangements involving a number of government Departments and their agencies, such as the Northern Trust's 'One-Stop' Adult Autism Advisory Service in Ballymena which was the first of its kind in Northern Ireland, available to people aged 16 and over with a diagnosis of autism, to help provide advice and support on key aspects of their daily lives including health, education and social security benefits.

A similar 'First Stop Shop', located in Belfast Central Library, was also launched by the Belfast HSC Trust in co-operation with DEL and DSD, and this operates as a drop-in facility for clients, to answer employment-related queries and to provide careers or benefits advice.

The Northern HSC Trust now also provides an Autism Paediatric Intervention Initial Advice Clinic, via a telephone call appointment offered to those referred for specialist treatment. Initial autism specific advice is provided to help parents/carers to manage the difficulties they are facing.

As part of its Assured Skills project, the Department for Employment and Learning has engaged with Specialisterne (a social enterprise that works to enable jobs within the IT Sector for people with autism) to pilot four places for participants with autism. Specialisterne not only recruited the four participants and identified job placement opportunities, but delivered training to the Assured Skills team; the two training providers (South Eastern Regional College and Belfast Met), and to staff within the placement companies.

The Department for Regional Development launched the Access Travel Wallet in April 2014. It is designed to assist people with a disability and/or communication difficulties, such as people with autism, to travel independently. It is also intended to help public transport staff have a better understanding of the travel requirements of such passengers.

Although there has been significant progress in many areas, it is undoubtedly the case that the considerable increase in referrals has created a major challenge for the Health and Social Care Sector and particularly their ASD teams. Over the past six years, referrals of children and young people for assessment have increased from around 1,500 to 2,936 per annum. As there are a limited number of clinicians with the appropriate skills working in this area, this has inevitably resulted in longer waiting times for the first assessment and ultimate diagnosis.

I fully understand that an increase in waiting times is stressful and upsetting for families however, based on current service capacity autism services are unable to keep pace with demand. The Health and Social Care Board are reviewing the process of diagnosis with the aim of identifying more efficient methods of assessment and maximising clinical time, but still delivering a high quality diagnosis.

Given the scale of challenges I face in the current financial climate, it is simply not possible to guarantee the early intervention as outlined in the Autism Strategy, without additional funding to further develop autism specific assessment services. As I have reiterated before, such pressures are a fact of life. Therefore, to break out of this cycle we have to intensify our efforts to reform our thinking, processes and services, while at the same time, continuing to deliver the services people need.

It is with that aim the HSC Board is also working with all HSC Trusts to develop a new standard operating model which will focus on developing early intervention teams and seek to integrate and align autism services with other child development and young people's mental health services. It is anticipated that, in the medium to longer term, this will help in the development of new ways of working with a view to improving access to a timely assessment and diagnosis and provision of support services.

A copy of the Progress Report will also be published on my Department's website.

Regeneration Bill

Published at 11.30 am on 26 November 2015.

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): I wish to make a Statement to the Assembly in respect of the Regeneration Bill.

The Reform of Local Government commenced on 1 April 2015 with the creation of 11 new councils and the transfer of a range of functions and powers from central government to local government on that date. The aim of the transfer of key functions such as planning, urban regeneration, local economic development and local tourism from central to local government is to allow councils to take the lead in reshaping their areas and communities in the context of their new powers of community planning.

In November 2014, the Executive agreed that the transfer of powers and responsibilities from the Department for Social Development should be deferred until 1 April 2016. The legislative vehicle through which this was to be achieved is the Regeneration Bill which I introduced to the Assembly on 8 December 2014. While some good progress has been made on taking the Bill forward, a number of fundamental policy issues were raised by the Social Development Committee, and by other interested stakeholders through the presentation of both oral and written evidence, during the Committee's scrutiny of the Bill. I am of the view that it is important that the Bill has broad support, and I have been working towards that end. Unfortunately there remain unresolved issues, which have slowed down the legislative process making the timetable for putting this legislation into place extremely challenging.

It is also important to consider the impact any further delay and uncertainty around the Bill would have on the detailed planning by my Department and the receiving councils for the transfer of staff, budgets and assets from April 2016. We have now got to the stage where I need to be able to provide clarity to key interests on the way forward.

I am also conscious that plans for the restructuring of Departments are well underway and this will result in the creation of the new Department for Communities (DfC). This new Department will have responsibility for a much wider range of responsibilities including regeneration, social security, housing, employment services, culture, arts and leisure. In that context I have also been considering whether it would still be appropriate to be proposing, for example, to transfer work on physical regeneration projects to councils when similar type work is being transferred to DfC from other Departments.

Taking all these factors into account, I have concluded that now is not the right time to go ahead with the transfer of these key DSD functions to councils. In my view it would be a better option to proceed with the restructuring of Departments, assimilate the various regeneration type functions in the Department for Communities and then we would be in a better position to determine if and when some of these responsibilities would be best delivered at a local level. I believe that this approach would also offer a valuable opportunity to start again and look at the underpinning policy afresh to take account of the concerns and questions raised in relation to the transfer of these powers and responsibilities to councils. I have therefore decided not to proceed with the Regeneration Bill as currently drafted. I have written to all key interests informing them of my decision.

This decision means that my Department will continue to have responsibility for the delivery of these key services to the community, retaining its statutory powers, control of the overall budget and ownership of the associated physical assets and it will continue to deliver the relevant programmes until such time as the Executive decides otherwise.

I can assure you that I am still fully committed to the principles of the Reform of Local Government and believe that local councils are best placed to deliver local solutions.

I hope that the good work which has been done to date on this programme and the excellent arrangements and relationships that have been built up between the councils and the Department will continue as we work together on delivering these key services for the citizens of Northern Ireland.

Environmental Better Regulation Bill [NIA 55/11-15]

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mrs Pam Cameron (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr Cathal Boylan
Mr William Irwin
Mr Barry McElduff
Mr Gary Middleton
Mr Ian Milne
Lord Morrow
Mrs Sandra Overend

Witnesses:

Mr Dave Foster
Mr Robert Gray                      Department of the Environment

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): I welcome Robert Gray. Robert, are you on your own today?

Mr Robert Gray (Department of the Environment): No, Dave will be here in a minute.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Dave Foster will be coming shortly.

Members, this session will be covered by Hansard. I remind you that, last week, the Committee decided that it was content with many of the clauses as drafted. It was also content with the proposed new clause 3A as drafted and with the amendment to clause 8 as drafted. The Committee considered a draft version of the amendment to clause 3. However, the final version differs slightly, so it will be considered again today.

The Department has also provided the wording that will be added to the explanatory notes for clauses 5, 8 and 13, as requested by the Committee. It has also provided draft amendments to clause 12 and schedule 1, as requested by the Committee, and additional information on paragraphs in schedule 1 that relate to penalties and fines. The information on the additional amendments is in members' tabled papers. We will look at each of those in turn.

Clause 3 deals with regulations relating to protecting and improving the environment: consultation. The Committee previously agreed the draft amendment to clause 3, which would leave out "as it thinks fit" and replace it with "considers appropriate". The Committee was content with that. However, the final amendment will replace:

"as it thinks fit, including such"

with " , including". Therefore, the amended clause would read:

"(b) such other persons, including such persons appearing to it to be representative of the interests of district councils".

Are members content with the proposed amendment by the Department?

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Are members content with clause 3 as amended, or do you wish to ask the Department to amend the clause further?

The Committee Clerk: Members, we previously considered an amendment that the Department initially thought it would table to replace "as it thinks fit" with "considers appropriate", but that was only a draft amendment. The final version that it now proposes to table will not use the words "considers appropriate" but will just replace:

"as it thinks fit, including such"

with " , including". That means that the clause 3(1)(b) will read:

"such other persons, including such persons appearing to it to be representative of the interests of district councils, industry, agriculture, fisheries or small businesses, as it considers appropriate."

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Do members have any comments or queries?

Lord Morrow: I am sorry; I think that I missed that meeting. I was hoping to get to it, but something turned up at the very last moment.

The amendment proposes to leave out "as it thinks fit". That is a very wide phrase, and it is, therefore, replacing it with those other words. Are we saying that we are being specific? I am coming in cold to this, so I am looking for some guidance.

The Committee Clerk: The Committee had asked for the Department to remove "as it thinks fits", as it did not like that phrase. When we went out to a call for evidence, there was a suggestion that it should include "relevant persons". The Department responded to advise that it would be its preference not to use "relevant persons", and it initially came up with a proposal to add "considers appropriate" instead of the phrase “as it thinks fits”, which is the phrase that the Committee did not like. The final version of the amendment will now just be “, including”. It will remove “as it thinks fit”.

Mrs Overend: Deputy Chair, “as it considers appropriate” is already there at the end of that subsection.

The Committee Clerk: It was already there. The initial proposal was to put it in twice. The final amendment will just be “, including” instead of “considers appropriate”, because that is already the final wording in that subsection.

Mrs Overend: It seems like a bit of duplication.

Lord Morrow: I agree that it is not acceptable to use the words “as it thinks fit”. The amended subsection would state:

“such other persons, including such persons appearing to it to be representative”.

That is another bit of jumping off into the dark and saying that those folk or that group appear to be representative. As long as they have the perception, that is all right. Is that the case, Mr Foster? I am maybe thinking out loud.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Do the officials wish to comment on that? Mr Dave Foster (Department of the Environment): Using the words “appearing ... to be representative” illustrates the fact that we do not have 100% knowledge of who is representative, so we can only make a judgement as to who is representative. In reality, we publish consultations on our website and that is our attempt to ensure that the most representative batch of people are able to access it.

Lord Morrow: I think that I understand what you are saying and why you are saying it, but we are still saying this after the consultation. This is now the drafting stage. Maybe this is common language, in drafting a piece of legislation. Is it, Mr Gray?

Mr Gray: I think that it is common language. The Department will attempt to consult with as many people as it is aware of who are:

“representative of the interests of district councils, industry, agriculture ...”.

If we try to limit that in some way, it might be more constraining. The Department wants to be allembicing in its consultation exercise, and that wording allows us to do that. The Department is under a statutory requirement to consult. It is a statutory duty imposed on the Department to consult with all the representatives who appear to it to be representative of all those sectors.

Lord Morrow: Mr Gray, why would it not just read, “including such persons who are representative of the interests of district councils, including” etc?

Mr Gray: I do not know that, in practice, that would make any difference. I am just trying to think that through. Would that make any difference in actual practice?

Lord Morrow: Yes, that is a fair question. There is something vague about the word “appearing”, but if it is in the drafting lingo, let us settle on it. I think that you are saying that it would be common language.

Mr Gray: This provision has been drafted by the Office of the Legislative Counsel, which is familiar with consultation provisions in legislation.

Lord Morrow: That is a fair point. We will live with it.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Will members confirm that they are content with the amendment proposed by the Department?

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): You do not wish to ask the Department to further amend clause 3?

Lord Morrow: No, I do not. It appears we do not. [Laughter.]

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Let us move to clause 5, “Interpretation”. The Committee agreed to ask the Department to provide more detailed information in the explanatory notes to explain what is meant by:

“offence to the senses of human beings”

and ecosystems. The Department has provided the suggested wording at page 27 of the tabled papers. Dave or Robert, do you want to give a brief explanation while members are checking their papers?

Mr Gray: I have to admit that I struggled with this one, and I consulted the legal draftsman and so on about it. We agreed that primarily what we are talking about here is pollution caused by excessive noise or unpleasant odours. It is pollution in the sense of environmental harm and harm to human beings. The best examples that we came up with were excessive noise or unpleasant odours or stench. The word “offence” is quite a strong one. An example was cited in one of the previous sessions about an ugly-looking building and whether that could be used in this situation. On consulting with the legal people and looking at the regulations that are due to come forward under the Bill, it is the case that the use of the word “offence” in relation to the senses of human beings deals with issues concerning noise and odours. It is that type of thing. It is offence to those senses.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): I am struggling to hear you up here. My hearing is not great. You may want to raise the level a bit. Are members satisfied, or do you have any further queries?

Mr Gray: That is a common provision. That term already exists throughout existing environmental law. It is nothing new. It is already in various areas of environmental law.

Lord Morrow: If this is the way that it is done and if it ain't broke, we will not fix it.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Members, as a Committee, are we content with the Department's explanation for the explanatory and financial memorandum (EFM)?

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): The Committee agreed at last week's meeting that it was content with clause 5, as drafted, and now members have seen the wording for the EFM. Are you still content, or do you wish to ask the Department to amend that clause? Are you content?

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): We will move on to clause 8, "Rewriting powers of entry". The Committee agreed to ask the Department to provide additional information in the explanatory notes to explain the technical amendment proposed by the Department. The Department has provided the suggested wording at page 28 of the tabled papers.

Members, are you content with the proposed wording in the EFM? The Committee agreed clause 8, as amended, at the last meeting. Now that members have seen the wording for the EFM, are they still content or do they wish to ask the Department to further amend that clause?

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): We move on to clause 12, "Code of practice in relation to powers of entry". The Committee asked the Department to amend the clause to allow further Assembly scrutiny of the code of practice. The Department has provided details of the proposed amendments at page 26 of the tabled papers. Could Dave or Robert comment on the proposed amendment?

Mr Gray: Again, this is a common provision in existing environmental law and in codes of practice. I mentioned, last time, that Assembly controls are imposed in some legislation and that they are not in other legislation. In view of the Committee's concerns about the lack of Assembly control, the Department was content to put those provisions in. It means that, in effect, the code of practice, whenever it is drafted, has to be laid before the Assembly in draft. So, it is subject to that Assembly control. It is subject to a resolution, and, if the Assembly prays against it, the Department would have to revisit the whole code and bring it forward again in a different form. It gives the Assembly ultimate control over the release of that document.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Can you confirm that subsection (5) will be expanded to cover the new subsections (3A), (3B) and (3C)?

Mr Gray: Yes. There will need to be a consequential renumbering. Obviously, when you put three new subsections in that clause, the other subsections will have to be renumbered. That will be reflected in the version of the Bill that is published after it is amended.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): OK. That is grand. Members, are you content with the proposed departmental amendments, numbers 4 and 5? Are you content with clause 12, as amended, or do you wish to ask the Department to further amend that clause? Are you content?

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): We move on to clause 13, "Interpretation". The Committee agreed to ask the Department to provide additional information in the explanatory notes to further define "premises". The Department has provided the suggested wording at page 29 of the tabled papers.

Members, are you content with the proposed wording in the EFM? The Committee agreed clause 13 at the last meeting. Now that members have seen the wording for the EFM, are they still content or do they wish to ask the Department to further amend that clause? Are you content?

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Schedule 1 is on matters for, or in connection with, which regulations may be made under section 2. The Committee asked the Department to consider an amendment to remove the words, "Further defining environmental activities" in paragraph 1; and to provide further detail on schedule 1 in relation to the following: in paragraph 13(10), clarification of the reason why a maximum fine is defined in the Bill but a minimum fine is not; and in paragraph 13 (11), further clarification regarding what this will mean in practice.

The Department has provided details of the proposed amendment at page 26 of the tabled papers. At page 30 of the tabled papers, the Department has provided clarification of the reason why a maximum fine is defined in schedule 1(13)(10) but not a minimum fine. Do you have any comments on the issues that were raised?

Lord Morrow: Are the gentlemen telling us anything additional, or is this as good as it gets?

Mr Gray: We have tried our best to elaborate on that, following your comments last week. Again, this is in keeping with legislation throughout the environmental and other areas where, whenever we are dealing with offences, a maximum amount is referred to. This provision allows the Department to bring forward regulations that will specify an amount that must not exceed £50,000. There is no reference to a minimum amount, and the reasoning behind that, as I understand it, is to allow the courts discretion to deal with perhaps an exceptional case. Again, it is in common with the way that such offences provisions are drafted in legislation. Again, all the finer detail surrounding all of this will be a matter for the regulations to be made under the Act. It is about the courts exercising their discretion depending on the individual circumstances of a particular case. If the Department were to set in the Bill a minimum fine — say, for the sake of argument, £1,000 — that could have unwelcome or unintended consequences in relation to, say, an exceptional case where a court may decide that that really is not appropriate in that particular case. It is difficult to comment in any more detail because every case will be different.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): To go over this: you have agreed to remove the words, "Further defining environmental activities" in schedule 1(1)(1). However, you are planning to retain sub-paragraphs (2) and (3). Does this not also give the Department powers to further define environmental activities?

Mr Gray: Yes. I would maybe like to get some more legal advice on that. The environmental permitting regulations to be made under Part 2 and schedule 1 cover a really wide range of issues, as I have said several times before. I do not want the Department to be left short with the powers that it has, so I would not like to commit to removing that. I would like to consider it and get some further legal advice on that point.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): You are quite late in the day to bring this to the Committee's attention.

Mr Gray: No, we have removed the power that the Committee asked us to remove. The Committee asked us to remove paragraph 1(1).

Mr D Foster: We did not discuss sub-paragraphs (2) and (3) in any detail at the last session, I do not think.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Sorry?

Mr D Foster: We did not discuss sub-paragraphs (2) and (3) in any detail at the last session. I think that the conversation was focused on sub-paragraph (1), which we have sought to remove.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): How quickly can we get the response regarding the legal advice?

Mr Gray: Before your next meeting.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): OK.

Members, are we content then with the explanations given by the officials on paragraphs 13(10) and 13(11)?

The Committee Clerk: In relation to the minimum fines.

Lord Morrow: Chair, I have heard what Mr Gray has said here. I think that he is saying that it is not often, if ever — I know that those are not his words — that you put in a minimum sentence; you always go for a maximum sentence, which cannot be in excess of whatever it is. There is not, in any legislation, a provision stating that there must be a minimum sentence. Is that not what you are saying?

Mr Gray: In relation to drink-driving offences, I am aware, because I was doing some research on this, that, if someone is breathalysed and is shown to have a certain level, that will automatically attract a minimum fine. There is no room for manoeuvre there, presumably. I am not an expert in that area, but that is the only example that I could find.

Lord Morrow: I think that the argument that you articulated was that it would restrict the courts, but the courts are always restricted to a certain degree in some way. I do not see it fettering any court or judge in making a decision. Anyway, I am not prepared to labour it any further, Chair. I have made those points in the past, and, obviously, I am not winning the argument. I know when I am beaten.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): OK. I take it that we are content with the explanation, then?

Lord Morrow: I think so, yes. I surrender.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Robert and Dave, will you tell us more about the new amendment on national security that you are planning to bring forward?

Mr D Foster: OK, certainly.

As members are aware, a large part of the Bill — Part 1, in particular — deals with the powers for us to bring about regulations regarding permitting. That will bring together a number of existing permitting regimes: waste management licensing, pollution prevention and control etc. In parallel with the work on the Bill, we have been doing policy development work for the first set of regulations that we have referred to on a number of occasions when we have been before the Committee on the new permitting regime. It has become apparent during that work that, in order to mirror provisions in our existing permitting regimes on some issues of national security, the power that we had previously in the existing regimes for the Secretary of State to direct regulators on issues of national security is not in the Bill. So, subject to the views of the Secretary of State, we propose to table an amendment to deal with that.

By way of example, the regulations as currently drafted for the existing regimes allow direction from the Secretary of State for reasons of national security, and that might be in relation to public registers. The Secretary of State might issue a direction to the regulator to exclude certain information from the public register of applications for permits. That might be an example of when such a direction might be needed. Generally, it is not in relation to environmental information being excluded from registers, it is, perhaps, to do with requirements around the labelling of particular locations on site plans which security advisers might judge to be important for vulnerable facilities.

I appreciate that this comes somewhat late in the day for the Bill, but it has arisen from the work on the first set of secondary legislation and the requirement to ensure that the current powers in existing regimes could be mirrored in the new set of regulations for indicative permits.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Do you have a timescale for the national security amendment?

Mr D Foster: We are working on it urgently. We are looking to bring something forward at Committee Stage.

Mr Gray: We will be looking to bring forward an amendment in time for the next meeting of the Committee, but the actual wording of the amendment will probably be subject to the Secretary of State's approval.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): Members, are there any questions on this?

Mrs Overend: Can you give us an example of when this sort of power would be used, just for clarification or to help the understanding of someone who is not an expert in the field?

Mr D Foster: I am not a security expert either, so it is somewhat difficult. When applicants submit an application form for a permit, all sorts of information comes with it, and there is also ancillary information. Quite often, there will be a requirement for a detailed site plan of the facility. Where it is a large facility, say a large industrial facility, a site plan is often already in existence. So, for what is seen as being a vulnerable facility, there might be a direction to not put that detailed site plan on the public register. Instead, there may be a more high-level plan showing the main elements of the site, but perhaps not in as much precise detail. That is the kind of broad example that has been used previously, although rarely, to my knowledge.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): There are no further questions on that. Thank you very much, gentlemen. I do not think that we have any further questions. Do you have a question, Cathal?

Mr Boylan: No, it is my first day back, Chair.

The Deputy Chairperson (Mrs Cameron): It has been too much.

To summarise, then, the officials will bring forward advice on schedule 1, paragraphs 1(2) and 1(3) for the next meeting. We will therefore wish to defer our formal clause-by-clause scrutiny until next week when we will receive that information. We will move on to that when all outstanding issues have been resolved. The Department may have a new amendment for next week's meeting, but, given the late stage of our scrutiny, we may wish just to note it.

Thank you very much.

Health and Social Care (Control of Data Processing) Bill [NIA 52/11-15]

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Ms Maeve McLaughlin (Chairperson)
Mr Alex Easton (Deputy Chairperson)
Mrs Pam Cameron
Mr Kieran McCarthy
Ms Rosaleen McCorley
Mr Michael McGimpsey
Mr Daithí McKay
Mr Gary Middleton

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): I remind members that we completed our informal clause-by-clause deliberations on the Bill on 4 November. I refer members to the Committee Clerk's paper in their meeting pack, which sets out the final position on the deliberations. Hard copies of the proposed amendments in annex B and C of that paper have been placed on the table for your convenience. Departmental correspondence on proposed amendments can be found in members' packs.

So that we are clear, I remind members that this is the formal clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill. It is therefore a vital and essential part of our duties, and it is obviously needed for the preparation of the Committee report. It is the final opportunity for the Committee to propose amendments to the Bill. At this juncture, I invite members, if they wish to do so, to propose any amendments at today's meeting that have not already been circulated to the Committee.

I take that silence as a no.

I advise members that I will formally put the Question on each clause. The Committee will be required to vote that we are content with the proposed amendments and content with the clause as drafted; that we are content with the clause as drafted, subject to departmental and/or Committee amendments; or that we are not content and wish to oppose the clause. I will proceed through the clauses and put the Questions formally. I inform members that, where there are amendments, I will put the Question on the amendment first so that people are clear. I ask members to keep their copy of the Bill and of the amendments in front of them for reference as we go through the clauses.

Clause 1 (Control of information of a relevant person)

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): As members will remember, we asked that a written ministerial assurance be forthcoming on clause 1(15), stating that regulations under the legislation would not make provision for authorising the selling of information processed. That assurance has been received and can be found in your meeting pack.

I inform members that both the Department and the Committee have proposed amendments to clause 1. In clause 1(1), the Department is proposing an amendment that would impose a mandatory duty on the Department to make regulations. It would replace the words "medical or social care purposes" with "health or social care purposes" and allow for the sharing of information in the public interest only if it is connected to a health and social care purpose.

In clause 1(3), the Department is proposing an amendment that would provide that information will be processed only if authorisation is granted by the Committee. In clause 1(11), the Department is proposing an amendment that would remove the terms "social well-being" and "any other similar circumstances". In clause 1(14), the Department is proposing an amendment that would remove the word "services". Is the Committee content with the proposed amendments?

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): In clause 1(2), the Committee is proposing an amendment that would place an opt-out provision in the Bill. Is the Committee content with the proposed amendment?

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Clause 2 (Establishment of committee to authorise processing of confidential information)

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): The Department is proposing an amendment to 2(1) that would provide that it must, by regulations, establish a committee, thus making the establishment mandatory. The Committee indicated that it was generally content with the clause and the proposed amendment. Is the Committee content with the proposed departmental amendment?

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 3 (Code of Practice)

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): The Committee indicated that it was generally content with the clause and the proposed amendments. The Department is proposing amendments to clause

3(4) and (5), which would replace “have regard” with “have due regard”. Is the Committee content with the proposed amendments?

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): The Committee is proposing an amendment to insert after clause 3(5) a provision that a code of practice may be taken into account by a court or tribunal in any case in which it appears to the court or tribunal to be relevant. Is the Committee content with the proposed amendment?

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Clause 4 (Regulations)

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): No amendments have been proposed to clause 4. I remind members that the Committee indicated that it was generally content with the clause.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 5 (Interpretation)

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): No amendments have been proposed to clause 4. Again, we indicated that we were generally content with the clause.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 6 (Short title and commencement)

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): Again, no amendments have been proposed to clause 4, and we indicated that we were generally content with the clause.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Long Title

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): No amendments have been proposed to the long title.

Question, That the Committee is content with the long title, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Ms Maeve McLaughlin): The Committee will consider and agree its report on the Committee Stage of the Bill at next week's meeting.

Water and Sewerage Services Bill [NIA 51/11-15]

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Trevor Clarke (Chairperson)
Mr Seán Lynch (Deputy Chairperson)
Mr John Dallat
Mr Declan McAleer
Mr Stephen Moutray
Mr Cathal Ó hOisín

The Chairperson (Mr Clarke): The Committee will carry out its formal clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill and agree each clause and schedule and the long title. I can advise members that there is a tabled response from the Examiner of Statutory Rules on the Bill. It represents legal advice to the Committee and, in line with the Committee's agreed practices, the advice will be collected following the conclusion of this agenda item.

The Department has agreed to the Examiner's amendments to clause 3. The Department has also agreed, on the whole, to the amendment suggested by the Committee in respect of including Northern Ireland district councils as statutory consultees. The Department has suggested that the words

"Northern Ireland" are not necessary and would not have been included if it had been drafting the amendment. Just note, members, that the Assembly Bill Office has agreed to that.

The Bill is in your pack on pages 29-41, and the explanatory and financial memorandum is on pages

42-46. I will seek members' agreement on each clause and schedule in turn, and members should indicate their agreement or otherwise. There are 9 clauses and 2 schedules. Finally, I will put the Question on the long title. The options available to the Committee on each clause and schedule are to agree that Committee is content with the clause, as drafted or as amended; agree that the Committee is not content with the clause; or agree that the Committee is not content with the clause and will table an opposition to the clause stand part prior to Consideration Stage. Do Members have any questions before we proceed? OK.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 1, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 2, put and agreed to.

Clause 3 (Power to remove or relax duty to install water meters when making domestic connections)

The Chairperson (Mr Clarke): The amendments to the clause by the Department are as tabled:

"Page 2, line 11, at the beginning insert 'suspend (whether indefinitely or for a specified period or'

The amendments are being proposed on the basis of the tabled advice from the Examiner of Statutory Rules.

One further amendment has been tabled in respect of clause 3 as a result of oral evidence received from the Northern Ireland Local Government Association. The intention of this is to include local government as a statutory consultee where the Department intends to make regulations amending the Water and Sewerage Services (Northern Ireland) Order 2006 in respect of the removal or relaxation of the duty to install water meters when making domestic connections. The Bill Office had originally suggested inserting "Northern Ireland District Councils". However, the Department is advising that the term "Northern Ireland" is not required, as it is a Northern Ireland Bill. The Bill Office has subsequently advised that it is content with the Department's drafting:

'( ) district councils;".

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 4, put and agreed to.

Clause 5 (Refusal of surface water connection)

The Chairperson (Mr Clarke): There is one amendment proposed to the clause:

'(5C) the reference in subsection (5B) to suitable alternatives includes, in particular—

(a) the use of landscaping, natural features or any other kind of arrangement, or

(b) the design or construction of any other feature (whether or not amounting to a —structurell within the meaning of Article 2(3A)), for the purpose of reducing the volume of water from the premises or sewer that enters public sewers or watercourses, or the rate at which it does so.”

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 6, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 7, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 8, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 1, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 2, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with the long title, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Mr Clarke): That concludes the clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill. Thank you, members, for that.

Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill [NIA 50/11-15]

Members present for all or part of the proceedings:

Mr Daithí McKay (Chairperson)
Ms Michaela Boyle
Mr Leslie Cree
Mr Gordon Lyons
Mr Ian McCrea
Mr Máirtín Ó Muilleoir
Mr Jim Wells

Witnesses:

Ms Stephanie Mallon	Bill Office
Mr Michael Foster	Department of Finance and Personnel

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): The Bill Clerk is here to recap on the draft amendments that the Committee has commissioned. DFP official Michael Foster is available to speak on each of the amendments that the Department intends to table at Consideration Stage.

Stephanie, do you want to kick us off?

Ms Stephanie Mallon (Bill Office): Yes. To recap on last week, I presented two amendments to the Committee for consideration. The first was a review of the function contained in the Bill to measure its success and implementation. I briefed members at the time to say that this was the kind of review of the efficacy of an Act that you would see in others: for example, the Planning Act (NI) 2011, the Carrier Bags Act (NI) 2014 and the Commissioner for Older People Act (NI) 2011 etc. All of those Acts contain this kind of function.

The second of the two amendments aims to address the Committee's concerns around first-tier complaints. Those were the complaints that were reported and addressed at the point of service delivery. At that time, the Committee expressed satisfaction with the amendment that I had drafted, but that was pending the Department's coming forward with an alternative for consideration. I believe that that has happened today and that Mr Foster will want to address that.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Members, for your information, the Committee's proposed amendments are at page 28 of tabled papers, and the DFP amendments are at page 31.

Michael, do you want to give us some comments on this?

Mr Michael Foster (Department of Finance and Personnel): Do you want me to deal with the first-tier complaints issue first, Chair?

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Yes.

Mr M Foster: OK. I refer the Committee to amendments 1, 5, 6, 7, 12 and 13. Those amendments are the Department's way of dealing with the issue of first-tier complaints. Some of them are consequential amendments, and there are really three substantive ones to consider. I know that this has been an issue of central importance for the Committee during the passage of this Bill, and we have obviously considered this carefully. Our proposed amendments are, we think, a neater and more comprehensive way of achieving the Committee's aim here in relation to gathering information on first-tier complaints. I will just briefly set out how the Department formed that analysis, Chair.

I will start by working backwards and looking at amendment 13 in the first instance, because it would effectively place a duty on the Legal Services Oversight Commissioner (LSOC) to report on the number of complaints received each year. The Committee's amendment proposed to deal with this by simply providing that:

"The Commissioner shall prepare and publish a report annually on the number of all complaints made in that year."

Our initial concern about that was that, on its own, the particular provision would not sit consistently with the general reporting provisions that are set out in schedule 1, paragraph 14, when reflecting on the general powers of the LSOC at clause 2. If you took either the Department's proposed amendment or the Committee's proposed amendment, our concern was that it could be argued that the LSOC already had the power to report on such matters. However, I know that the Committee has raised the point, through the Clerk, that the commissioner would not necessarily have to include such information in his or her report. Therefore, it is my understanding that the Committee would like to see the duty specifically addressed in the Bill.

I think it unlikely that an LSOC charged with the power to require professional bodies to provide information relating to complaints would not report on it during a year, but we have worked with the Office of the Legislative Counsel (OLC) on this point and come up with a form of words in an amendment that I hope will satisfy members. We feel that it will sit more consistently with the clauses in the Bill. Amendment 13 is designed to cater for the same. I place emphasis on the first few words here, where, importantly, it says:

“Without prejudice to the generality of sub-paragraph (1), a report sent to the Department under that sub-paragraph must contain information on the number of complaints made in relation to the members of each professional body during the year to which the report relates.”

That dovetails in with the existing duty on the commissioner to report on all of his or her duties but also caters for the Committee’s specific aim to have the commissioner report specifically on the number of complaints received each year.

I will read backwards from that to the Department’s amendments 12 and 13. We are not 100% sure whether we will need to move amendment 12. We are considering whether we need to need to qualify the generality of paragraph 14 in another way. Amendment 13 on its own will probably sit OK, but we will consider that as we come to Consideration Stage. If you read back, you see that the key for the Committee is that a commissioner will report on the total number of complaints received each year at the first tier. Amendment 13 provides that duty, and we feel that the way that we have drafted it will do it in a neater way. Reading back to clause 2, our amendment 1 will insert a new provision into the powers of the commissioner that will:

“require a professional body to provide the Commissioner with such information in relation to the number of complaints made against the members of that body as the Commissioner may specify.”

That is a slightly different slant to the amendment that the Committee has commissioned from the Bill Office, which simply states that the commissioner may:

“require a professional body to provide information on the number of all complaints made about its members annually.”

The Department is of the view that —

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): This is the amendment to clause 2, Michael, is it?

Mr M Foster: Yes, it is.

The Department is of the view that its amendment provides more scope for the LSOC to obtain meaningful information from the professional bodies, including but not limited to simple statistics on complaints. The Department’s amendment, to give an example, might allow the commissioner to require the professional bodies to categorise complaints at the first tier in a similar manner to the way that the Lay Observer currently presents information relating to complaints about the Law Society. The total number of complaints would still be captured, but the LSOC could ask for more than just that. I think that that satisfies entirely the Committee’s aim and also provides a little bit more scope for the commissioner to explore those particular issues and get more information relating to those complaints.

In our view, on a stand-alone basis, this may not be enough to make it fully effective. The LSOC has a duty to report, and the professional members will be required to provide information, but what about the solicitors themselves? It is not really an issue in relation to the Bar because clause 11 already provides the basis for the Bar Council to gather information on the total number of complaints against its members. However, solicitors have their own in-house complaints-handling procedures, and we feel that it is important, set with the powers of the commissioner to get the information, that the Law Society also has the power to gather this information from its members and specifically from the inhouse complaints-handling system that is run by it.

We consider it prudent, in conjunction with the powers of the commissioner, to give the Law Society the power to get that information from its members, and amendment 5 and then amendments 6 and 7, which are consequential, are designed to achieve that aim. Amendment 5 states:

“The Law Society must make regulations requiring every solicitor to provide the Law Society with such information about the number of relevant complaints made in relation to that solicitor as may be specified”.

That effectively mirrors the powers of the commissioner and will allow the Law Society to provide the commissioner with all that he or she wants. I refer the Committee to the fact that “relevant complaints” includes everything at first tier and relates to the professional service provided by solicitors.

That is a brief run-through of the Department’s analysis. The Committee’s amendments are the same in spirit and achieve the same end result, but the Department’s amendments, in our view, give it that bit of a neater sense in the Bill and also achieve a more rounded end result and provide more information, which we think will inform the process in the way that the Committee wants.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): I welcome the fact that the Department has met the Committee halfway on the amendments. The aims that we set out through our amendments are met by much of what you propose. That is a step forward, because a number of officials whom we have had before us with regard to Bills would not give a single inch. This is quite welcome and quite progressive.

The question I have is about the review of the Act. The Committee said in its proposed first amendment:

“The Department must not later than 3 years after the commencement of this Act appoint an independent person to review and publish a report”.

What is the Department’s view on that?

Mr M Foster: We have obviously looked very carefully at the first-tier complaints. I had some initial concerns about how we would approach that, but I was happy to work with the Committee on that point. The statutory review causes the Department more difficulties.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Even though it is just one review; it is not a recurrent feature.

Mr M Foster: I will set out my thinking on it again. From looking at it in a broad way, the Department has sought and achieved considerable buy-in from the professional bodies on the reform. Both have publicly recorded their desire to see the system work in an effective way. From the outset, my concern is that having a statutory review that has to be published no later than three years after the Act comes into operation could send out a mixed message to the professional bodies. Some might argue that it could be a sword of Damocles.

I worry that we are effectively saying, "Here is a Bill, but in three years' time it is going to be reviewed. It had better be working well or there could be problems." I can understand why the Committee would like to see that, but my concern is that, at the practical level, it may not be possible at a stage of no longer than three years to gauge how the system is working effectively, because we do not really have an accurate understanding of how long it is going to take to bed in. There is going to be a period of overlap between the old system and the new system by their nature.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Leslie says five years, then.

Mr Cree: Done.

Mr M Foster: I will explain the rest of my analysis, and then the Committee can form judgements.

Set with that overall concern, the Department does not want to be sending out a message that this is destined to not work. All of the evidence suggests that there is a very good chance that it will work very well. Even taking that argument in the round, the Department already has — I have outlined this to the Committee on a number of occasions — the capacity to the review the system by way of the provisions in clause 4.

Members have raised the point that the Legal Services Oversight Commissioner would carry out that review and have queried whether he or she would be a truly independent voice and provide a neutral review. My analysis of that is that the commissioner is most likely to be best placed to determine how well or otherwise the act is working. He or she will have the closest interface with the professional bodies, will understand and appreciate how they are handling complaints and will be in possession of all the relevant information in relation to the complaints, including the plans, the targets and the themes and issues arising under the new system. It is unlikely that an LSOC would provide an incomplete report on such matters on the basis, for example, of any issues of self-interest. Any report compiled by him would be subject to independent scrutiny by not only the Department and the Minister but the Assembly — all reports by the LSOC have to be laid before the Assembly — and, of course, the Committee. That is a sufficient check on the effectiveness or otherwise of the Act.

I also mentioned making a review time-bound in legislation. The Department and, probably more importantly, the LSOC will probably have a much clearer handle on when the time is right for a review of the legislation. It might bed in quite quickly, in which case the normal post-legislative review by the Department may take place and be repeated after a longer period. It might take longer to bed in, in which case the review may be a holding review, to be followed up later with a more comprehensive piece of work; or, as we hope, reports from the early evidence of this from the commissioner could point to a new system that operates effectively and efficiently and in a way that is beneficial to consumers, which, obviously, is what the aim of this is. In that case, I would ask whether there would be a tangible benefit in having the natural expense associated with a statutory independent review when we might have the flexibility, under clause 4 and the Department's general responsibility, to examine the process when we feel the time is right to do so. Clause 4 is in there to provide that flexibility over whether, how and when any review is undertaken, so an additional statutory review of the Act no longer than three years after it comes into operation will not automatically have the desired effect that the Committee is seeking. Our position is to resist an amendment of that nature, given the fact that we already have the broad powers in the Bill.

Mr Wells: I always get very suspicious. Even when we get a commitment to review, it does not happen. We get phrases like, "Time has moved on" or "There isn't the money to do it". What would be the damage in having a statutory review? Apart from the fact that you do not want it, you do not like it and you do not want to be bothered with it, what damage would having it do?

Mr M Foster: I would not say that I do not want it or that I could not be bothered with it —

Mr Wells: Not you personally — the Department.

Mr M Foster: I do not think that the Department is of that view, either. In fact, the Minister indicated at, I think, Second Stage that the system is there for the professional bodies to run and operate in the way in which it is intended. If the evidence down the line shows that it is not working that way, the Department has other powers at its disposal to progress something different.

Mr Wells: What is wrong with having an imperative to do it, then?

Mr M Foster: My point is that we have that power there already.

Mr Wells: If you do not want to bother to do it, you will not do it. There is nothing to force you to. Members can throw in questions left, right and centre, and you will say, "Well, it's not appropriate" or whatever. I have backed legislation in the House on the basis of a review, and the reviews never happened; they were just forgotten about. There was a change of Minister and a change of parties, and you were just told to go away. It is protesting too much.

A review forces you, as a Department, to make absolutely certain that it is working well and that the review will come out with glowing colours. I can argue with you about the timing of the review and whether it should be after three, five, seven years or whatever, but the principle is a good one to concentrate the minds of the Department. As you know, there are concerns about the legislation, and it would allay many people's concerns if they knew that at least there was going to be another chance to have an input. A review means that outside bodies can say how they feel the legislation is operating. I would not die in a ditch over it, but I am always very suspicious when Departments shy away from having their own standard of legislation being scrutinised.

Mr M Foster: I take those points on board. Clause 4, as I have repeated, is there to allow that review to take place. My concern is that, if we have an additional statutory review placed in it, it takes it away from the person whom the Department probably considers to be best placed.

Part of the rationale behind clause 4 was that we would have an automatic resource for a suitably experienced and competent person in the LSOC to review any matter relating to the regulation or organisation of the professional bodies. That power is not simply restricted to a review of the Act, although it has the scope to allow that to happen. It is also there for other matters. Say, for example, other issues relating to the regulation of the profession were raised in two, three or four years' time. Instead of having to set up, as the Department had to do about 10 years ago, an independent review group led by Professor Sir George Bain to examine the issues, there is a ready resource there. That resource is a commissioner who is, effectively, paid for by the legal profession, not the Department. We have a cost-neutral review system already in place.

I am happy to recommend to the Minister that she, again, goes on record and indicates at some of the later Stages of the Bill that she will commit to asking the commissioner to review the scheme under the powers in clause 4 within a period of time, whether that is three years —

Mr Wells: But the Minister may not be there for very much longer if the press is to be believed.

Mr M Foster: Well, I could not possibly comment on that. [Laughter.]

Mr Wells: Any commitment that the present Minister makes will be forgotten in the mists of time as she perhaps moves on to higher things and somebody else comes along.

Mr M Foster: I would imagine that a new Minister would probably be singing off a reasonably similar hymn sheet to the existing Minister on these issues. I have a concern that we are sending out the wrong message at the start, but we also have the facility there. I am happy to go back to the Minister and ask her —

Mr Wells: You had better be quick — very quick.

Mr M Foster: Our analysis at the moment is that it is not an amendment that we could support.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Stephanie, do you want to come in on the Committee amendments?

Ms Mallon: Only to say that, with regard to the Committee amendment for review of the Act, last week, we discussed that the time limit we had was to appoint an independent person as opposed to conducting the review within the three-year limit because we recognised what the Department had said, that three years may not be long enough and five years might be too long. It would obviously be the person who is conducting the review who would decide on the timing from there.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): OK, members. Are there any other questions?

Mr Wells: I was too easy on you last week, so that is why I went hard on you this week.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Michael, do you wish to speak on the other amendments?

Mr M Foster: I am happy to run through them briefly. Amendment 2 relates to the privilege that is afforded to publications that are made by the commissioner. The original draft indicated that all publications should be absolutely privileged. The Committee heard evidence from the Law Society and the commission that the privilege should be qualified in the same way as it has been in the Scottish legislation. The Department has accepted that point and the amendment gives effect to it.

I will deal with amendments 3 and 8 together, if I may. Again, evidence from some parties during this process queried clause 17(4)(a) and (5)(a), their equivalents for solicitors at clause 36 and how those provisions sat together. It was recommended to the Department by the Committee that removal of the words "without consideration of its merits" at clauses 17(4) and 36(4) would remove any doubts relating to the interpretation of those provisions. The Department has agreed to that. Amendments 3 and 8 do exactly what the Committee has requested.

Amendments 10 and 11 are relatively technical in nature and address a specific point made by the Examiner of Statutory Rules in his report to the Committee on the delegated-powers memorandum. He indicated that a revised version of clause 51 should be considered by the Department. We have agreed with his points. The two amendments taken together give effect to those recommendations.

Finally, I turn to amendments 4 and 9. They relate to the issue of an apology in the Bill. Members will recall that the Bill provides scope for the relevant complaints committee to direct a respondent to issue an apology. The Law Society, in particular, was exercised about the potential ramifications of giving an apology and considered that the scheme would be more effective if practitioners could present an apology without fear of further consequences. It initially directed the Department to section 2 of the Compensation Act 2006, but the Department felt that that provision needed to be considered in the context of that Act. It then highlighted the proposed legislation in Scotland, which is the Apologies (Scotland) Bill, and asked that consideration be given to similar provision.

The Department has brought forward an amendment. I would just note to Members that it is still in draft form and the precise form of words is still under deliberation. We are conscious that we do not want to impact on other statutory regimes and therefore we are treating the amendment with a degree of diligence. We have worked through it. We are fairly sure that the form of words that you have in front of you at the moment will be the final form of words. However, we just want to make sure. We will come back to the Committee if there is any issue, but we hope that that will be the final draft and that that will be confirmed through the Clerk in due course.

That concludes the run-through of the Department's amendments. I am happy to take final questions.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Do members have any questions? No.

In relation to clause 2 and the proposal to add provision for the LSOC to gather information on first-tier complaints, do members wish to propose the draft amendment prepared by the Bill Office — amendment 2 on page 28 — or the alternative amendment from DFP, which is amendment 1 at appendix 2 on page 31?

Mr I McCrea: I am content with the Department's proposed amendment.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Are members agreed?

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): In relation to clause 8 and the issue around absolute privilege that the Committee identified, are members content to propose the draft amendment prepared by DFP? That is amendment 2 on page 31.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): In relation to clause 17(4) (a) and the apparent conflict with clause 17(5)(a) that the Committee identified, are members content to propose the draft amendment prepared by DFP? That is amendment 3 at page 31.

In relation to clause 19(2) and the issue around apologies that the Committee identified, are members content to propose the draft amendment prepared by DFP, which might be subject to slight changes, as Michael has outlined? That is amendment 4 at page 31.

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): In relation to clause 29 and the proposal to gather information on first-tier complaints, are members content to propose the draft amendments prepared by DFP, which are amendments 5, 6 and 7 at page 31?

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): In relation to clause 36(4) (a) and the apparent conflict with clause 36(5)(a) that the Committee identified, are members content to propose the draft amendment prepared by DFP, which is amendment 8?

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): In relation to clause 38(2) and the issue around apologies that the Committee identified, are members content to propose the draft amendment prepared by DFP, which might be subject to slight changes? That is amendment 9.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): In relation to the proposed inclusion of an independent review mechanism at clause 50, the Committee agreed, in principle, last week, that it was content with the draft amendment prepared by the Bill Office. That is amendment 1 at appendix 1 on page 28. That requires that DFP appoints an independent person to review the implementation of the provisions in the Bill within a specified time frame of three years after commencement and that a report on the review is published. It also provides for the terms of the review to be set out in regulations. Are members content to propose that amendment?

Mr Cree: Is it three years, Chair?

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Yes.

Mr Cree: I am happy with that.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Are members content?

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Are members content to propose the draft amendments to clause 51, prepared by the Department, which will address the issue identified from the Examiner of Statutory Rules' scrutiny of the delegated powers in the Bill? They are amendments 10 and 11 on page 32.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Are members content to propose the draft amendments prepared by the Department in relation to schedule 1 and the proposal to gather information on first-tier complaints? They are amendments 12 and 13 on page 32.

Mr M Foster: Chair, apologies; I should have mentioned that there is a very small typo in amendment 12, which I alerted the Clerk to. The word "department" should be capitalised. It is very minor.

Mr Cree: We are on a very low point there.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): The Committee now needs to consider the Bill formally on a clause-by-clause basis and agree its position on each clause and on the schedules to the Bill. Members may find it helpful to recap on the provisions of each clause and the issues that have arisen from the Committee Stage scrutiny before the Committee agrees its position on each clause.

Clause 1 (The Legal Services Oversight Commissioner for Northern Ireland)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 1 sets out the establishment of the LSOC. The Law Society and the Bar Council raised issues in respect of the clause to which DFP responded. Those responses are contained in the table of issues. The Committee also commissioned research on related issues.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 2 (General powers of the Commissioner)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 2 sets out the general powers of the commissioner relating to oversight of the complaints-handling processes of solicitors and barristers. The Committee, the Law Society and the Bar Council raised issues in respect of this clause to which DFP responded. The Department has provided clarification and assurance on a number of points, including a commitment to improve the narrative of the explanatory and financial memorandum (EFM). In light of the evidence from various stakeholders, including the Law Centre, the Scottish Legal Complaints Commission and Dr Hosier, the Committee agreed to propose amendments to ensure that information is collected on a number of complaints at the "first tier". The Department has accepted this proposal, which will require amendment to clause 2 and elsewhere in the Bill. The proposed amendment has been agreed with the Department.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 3 (Duty of certain bodies to consult Commissioner)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 3 requires the various organs of the Bar and the Law Society to consult the commissioner before making certain rules or regulations. The Bar Council raised an issue in respect of the clause to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 4 (Duty of Commissioner to review certain matters)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 4 requires the commissioner to review and report on any matter relating to the regulation or organisation of the Law Society or the Bar that may be directed for consideration by DFP. The Law Society and the Bar Council raised an issue in respect of the clause to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 5 (The levy)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 5 sets out the requirement for a levy to be applied to the relevant professional bodies in order to fund the office of the LSOC. The Committee, the Law Society and the Bar Council raised issues in respect of the clause to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 6 (The levy: supplementary provisions)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 6 sets out conditions relating to the levy, which will be supplemented by regulations relating to the rate and when the levy is payable. The Committee raised an issue in respect of the clause to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 7 (Payments by Department)

Clause 7 gives a power to the Department to pay to the commissioner such sums as it may determine, as appropriate, and gives the Department the power to determine those circumstances and the manner in which payment is made. No issues were raised in relation to the clause.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 8 (Privilege for certain publications)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 8 provides that any publication of the commissioner is considered to be absolutely privileged for the purposes of the law of defamation. The Committee raised an issue in respect of the clause, to which DFP responded, confirming that it would bring forward an amendment to take into account the Committee's view. The Committee is content with the wording of the amendment prepared by the Department.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 9 (Lay observer)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 9 abolishes the office of Lay Observer for NI and repeals article 42 of the Solicitors (NI) Order 1976. It transfers the existing powers of the Lay Observer to the LSOC. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 10 (Interpretation of Part 1)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 10 defines certain terms used in Part 1 of the Bill. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 11 (Complaints procedures for barristers)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 11 relates to the regulatory arrangements for the handling of complaints against barristers. The Committee and the Bar Council raised issues to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 12 (Bar Complaints Committee)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 12 provides that the benchers of the Inn of Court must establish and maintain a Bar Complaints Committee to deal with any complaint made in relation to the professional services provided by a barrister. The Committee raised issues to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 13 (Jurisdiction of the Bar Complaints Committee)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 13 broadly defines what types of person are eligible to bring complaints to the Bar Complaints Committee and who may be the subject of a complaint. The Committee raised issues to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 14 (Excluded complaints)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 14 provides that a complaint does not fall within the jurisdiction of the Bar Complaints Committee unless the complainant has first used the respondent's in-house complaints procedure. The Committee raised issues to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 15 (Complainants)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 15 sets out further conditions relating to the eligibility of a complainant to have a complaint handled by the Bar Complaints Committee. The Committee raised issues to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 16 (Orders under section 15)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 16 empowers the Department to make an order, on the recommendation of either the Bar Complaints Committee or the LSOC, the effect of which is for new categories of complainants to be included in or excluded from the scope of the Bar Complaints Committee. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 17 (Procedure for complaints)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 17 provides for the detailed framework for the Bar Complaints Committee scheme to be determined by rules to be made by the committee. It allows the committee the flexibility to adapt its procedures if required. The Committee and Dr Hosier raised the issue of an apparent conflict between the provisions in clause 17(4)(a) and clause 17(5)(a). The Department responded, confirming that it would bring forward an amendment along the lines outlined by the Committee. The Committee has agreed the draft amendment with the Department. The Committee raised other queries on which the Department provided clarification.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 18 (Notification requirements)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 18 provides for the notification requirements to the Bar Complaints Committee where a complaint is excluded, dismissed, referred to another body, settled, withdrawn or abandoned and where the committee has determined a complaint. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 19 (Determination of complaints)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 19 makes provision for the Bar Complaints Committee powers in making a determination. The Committee, the Law Society and the Bar Council raised issues in respect of the clause to which DFP responded. In particular, an issue was identified regarding the need to facilitate bodies in making apologies. After confirming a willingness to consider an amendment, DFP provided a draft for consideration today that may be subject to slight changes. The Committee has agreed that it is content with the undertaking given by the Department to table the amendment to address the issue, and DFP can provide the final draft amendment for Committee consideration before Consideration Stage.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 20 (Alteration of compensation limit)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 20 makes provision in respect of the Department amending the figures of £5,000 in clause 19. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 21 (Appeals)

Clause 21 compels the Department to make regulations providing for appeals to the High Court against specified determinations of the Bar Complaints Committee. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 22 (Information and documents)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 22 empowers the Bar Complaints Committee to require parties to a complaint to produce information and/or documents. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 23 (Reporting failures to provide information or produce documents)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 23 provides for circumstances when a barrister has failed to cooperate with the Bar Complaints Committee as required by clause 22. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 24 (Enforcement of requirements to provide information or produce documents)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 24 provides for circumstances when a party other than a barrister has failed to cooperate with the Bar Complaints Committee as required by clause 22. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 25 (Reports of investigations)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 25 provides that the Bar Complaints Committee may publish a report about the investigation, consideration and determination of any case if it considers it appropriate. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 26 (Protection from defamation claims)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 26 makes provision placing Bar Complaints Committee proceedings and publications on a par with court proceedings for the purposes of the law of defamation. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 27 (Consultation requirements for Bar Complaints Committee rules)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 27 sets out the consultation requirements on the Bar Complaints Committee in relation to any rules it proposes to make. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 28 (Interpretation of Part 2)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 28 defines certain terms used in Part 2 of the Bill. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 29 (Complaints procedures for solicitors)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 29 relates to the regulatory arrangements for the handling of complaints against solicitors. The proposed amendments have been agreed with the Department.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Clause 30 (Solicitors Complaints Committee)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 30 provides that the Law Society must establish and maintain a Solicitors Complaints Committee to deal with any complaint made in relation to the professional services provided by a solicitor. The Committee and the Law Society raised issues to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 31 (Jurisdiction of the Solicitors Complaints Committee)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 31 broadly defines what types of person are eligible to bring complaints to the Solicitors Complaints Committee and who may be the subject of a complaint. In relation to a solicitor, the respondent may also be, where appropriate, his or her firm. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 32 (Excluded complaints)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 32 makes provision for complaints that fall within the jurisdiction of the Solicitors Complaints Committee. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 33 (Complainants)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 33 sets out further conditions as to the eligibility of a complainant to have a complaint handled by the Solicitors Complaints Committee. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 34 (Orders under section 33)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 34 empowers the Department to make an order for new categories of complainants to be included in or excluded from the scope of the Solicitors Complaints Committee. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 35 (Continuity of complaints)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 35 makes provision to ensure that a complaint does not fail simply because of change in membership of the partnership or body against which the complaint is made. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 36 (Procedure for complaints)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 36 provides for the detailed framework for the Solicitors Complaints Committee scheme to be determined by rules to be made by the committee. It allows the committee the flexibility to adapt its procedures if required. The Committee and Dr Hosier raised the issue of an apparent conflict between the provisions in clause 36(4)(a) and clause 36(5)(a), which is similar to the issue raised at clause 17. DFP responded, confirming that it would bring forward an amendment. The Committee has agreed the draft amendment with the Department.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 37 (Notification requirements)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 37 provides for the notification requirements on the Solicitors Complaints Committee where a complaint is excluded, dismissed, referred to another body, settled, withdrawn or abandoned and where the committee has determined a complaint. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 38 (Determination of complaints)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 38 makes provision for the Solicitors Complaints Committee powers in making a determination. The Committee and the Law Society raised an issue in respect of the clause regarding the need to facilitate bodies in making apologies. The same issue was identified at clause 19. After confirming a willingness to consider an amendment, DFP provided a draft for consideration today — amendment 9 — that may be subject to slight changes. The Committee has agreed that it is content with the undertaking given by the Department to table this amendment to address the issue, and DFP can provide the final draft amendment for Committee consideration before Consideration Stage.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 39 (Alteration of compensation limits)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 39 makes provision in respect of the Department amending the figures of £5,000 in clause 38. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 40 (Appeals)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 40 compels the Department to make regulations providing for appeals to the High Court against specified determinations of the Solicitors Complaints Committee. Such regulations must be agreed by the Lord Chief Justice and must be laid before and approved by resolution of the Assembly. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 41 (Information and documents)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 41 empowers the Solicitors Complaints Committee to require parties to a complaint to produce information and/or documents. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 42 (Reporting failures to provide information or produce documents)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 42 provides for circumstances where a solicitor has failed to cooperate with the Solicitors Complaints Committee as required by clause 41. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 43 (Enforcement of requirements to provide information or produce documents)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 43 provides for circumstances when a party other than a solicitor has failed to cooperate with the Solicitors Complaints Committee as required by clause 41. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 44 (Reports of investigation)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 44 provides that the Solicitors Complaints Committee may publish a report about the investigation, consideration and determination of any case if it considers it appropriate. No issues were raised.

Clause 45 (Protection from defamation claims)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 45 makes provision placing Solicitors Complaints Committee proceedings and publications on a par with court proceedings for the purposes of the law of defamation. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 46 (Consultation requirements for Solicitors Complaints Committee rules)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 46 sets out the consultation requirements on the Solicitors Complaints Committee in relation to any rules it proposes to make. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 47 (The Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 47 varies the membership of the Solicitors Disciplinary Tribunal. It is currently constituted with a professional chair and a professional majority. This provision changes the membership to a professional chair and a lay majority. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 48 (Recognised bodies)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 48 provides that a number of references to recognised bodies in the chapter relating to complaints procedures of solicitors are references to bodies corporate under article 26A of the Solicitors (NI) Order 1976. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 49 (Interpretation of Part 3)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 49 defines certain terms used in Part 3 of the Bill. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 50 (Interpretation)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 50 defines certain terms used throughout the Bill. The Committee raised a number of queries to which the Department responded. Also, in light of the evidence from Dr Hosier, the Committee commissioned the Bill Office to prepare a draft amendment to provide for an independent review of the implementation of the legislation, and that was detailed as proposed amendment 1 at appendix 1. The Committee has decided to pursue that amendment, which will be tabled by the Committee at Consideration Stage.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 51 (Further provision)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 51 provides for DFP to make transitional and savings provisions in connection with the coming into force of the Bill and sets out the order-making power of the Department and related Assembly control. The Committee raised an issue in respect of the clause to which DFP responded. Arising from the Examiner of Statutory Rules' scrutiny of the delegated powers in the Bill, the Department has indicated that it is content to table amendments to clause 51 to take account of the Examiner's points. The Committee has agreed the draft amendments that have been provided.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Clause 52 (Minor and consequential amendments)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 52 introduces schedule 4, which contains amendments to other legislation in consequence of the provisions of the Bill. The Committee raised an issue to which the Department responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 53 (Repeals)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 53 introduces schedule 5, which contains repeals of other legislation in consequence of the provisions of the Bill. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 54 (Commencement)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 54 outlines the commencement provisions relating to the Bill. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 55 (Short title)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Clause 55 provides the short title for the legislation. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, put and agreed to.

Schedule 1 (The Legal Services Oversight Commissioner for Northern Ireland)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Schedule 1 provides for the status, general powers, tenure of office and general staffing and procedural arrangements of the commissioner. The proposed amendments have been agreed with the Department.

Question, That the Committee is content with the schedule, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

Schedule 2 (The Bar Complaints Committee)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Schedule 2 sets out the membership, terms of office, remuneration arrangements and procedural arrangements of the Bar Complaints Committee. The Bar Council raised an issue in respect of the schedule to which DFP responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 2, put and agreed to.

Schedule 3 (The Solicitors Complaints Committee)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Schedule 3 sets out the membership, terms of office, remuneration arrangements and procedural arrangements of the Solicitors Complaints Committee. The Committee and the Law Society raised issues in respect of the schedule to which DFP responded.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 3, put and agreed to.

Schedule 4 (Minor and consequential amendments)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Schedule 4 contains amendments to other statutory provisions that are consequential upon the Bill. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 4, put and agreed to.

Schedule 5 (Repeals)

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): Schedule 5 contains repeals of various statutory provisions. No issues were raised.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 5, put and agreed to.

Long Title

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): The long title of the Bill is:

“A Bill to make provision for the establishment of the office of the Legal Services Oversight

Commissioner ... to make provision as regards complaints against members of the legal profession ... and for connected purposes.”

Question, That the Committee is content with the long title, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Mr McKay): As to the next steps, the initial draft of the Committee's report on the Bill to the Assembly will be considered at next week's meeting, with a view to agreeing the final draft report on 9 December, before the Committee Stage expires on 18 December. Members may wish to consider whether they have any recommendations or requests for assurance that they wish to see included in the report.

Consideration Stage is a matter for the Minister to bring forward in line with the requirements set out in Standing Orders. The Department has indicated that that will be scheduled for mid-January 2016.

Any agreed Committee amendments will be required to be tabled in advance of Consideration Stage.

I thank Stephanie and Michael for their assistance.

Written Answers to Questions

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, over the last twelve months, to detail the meetings her Department has had with the Livestock and Meat Commission for Northern Ireland regarding penalties imposed on livestock being brought to slaughter; and what subsequent action her Department will take to limit these penalties on producers. (AQW 49834/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Whilst my Department has not had any specific meetings with the Livestock and Meat Commission over the last twelve months regarding penalties imposed on livestock brought to slaughter, there are regular engagements with LMC on these issues and this was discussed recently at the Supply Chain Forum, at which the LMC was present.

Since early 2014, I have been actively engaged on an ongoing basis with a range of stakeholders across the agri-food supply chain, including farmers, processors, retailers and sectoral representative bodies to reach a resolution on penalties associated with out of specification livestock and, in particular, mixed origin meat. From the outset, I pressed NIMEA to work together with the other elements of the supply chain to determine a way forward on penalties for out of specification cattle and my department has facilitated marts in displaying residency information on cattle being sold through their businesses, where they choose to do so.

I also met with LMC in summer 2014 and was encouraged that they took the lead in developing a protocol for improved communication in the industry on specifications. It is important that the key elements of the supply chain maintain dialogue on these and any other issues causing concern to the livestock industry and for each element to play its part in resolving these.

To assist with this, I tasked the Agri-Food Strategy Board with establishing a Supply Chain Forum, where producers, processors and retailers across all sectors can come together to discuss issues affecting the industry, such as specifications. The Forum met for the first time on 14 October and my aim is that it will build trust and encourage communication between all elements of the supply chain to overcome any difficulties producers are facing.

Furthermore, on the issue of country of origin labelling, I have impressed on both Defra and the EU Commission, the need for flexibility for meat from the north to be labelled in line with our traditional marketing and trade practices. I am pleased that Defra Secretary of State, Liz Truss has offered her support in finding a solution. Commissioner Hogan is also confident that a suitable arrangement can be found within the EU rules for voluntary labelling. I have also been engaging with Minister Coveney on this issue. During the summer he indicated that he would liaise with the EU Commissioner about what labelling would be deemed acceptable. I have recently written to Minister Coveney seeking an update on his discussions.

I will continue to do what I can to support the competitiveness and profitability of our local livestock farmers and to encourage improved and transparent communications throughout the livestock supply chain.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether Ash Dieback is present in the wider environment; and what steps her Department is taking to address the issue. (AQW 49910/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Ash Dieback has recently been detected in hedgerow ash at 3 locations in proximity to infected recently planted sites in the north of Ireland. Further surveys in 2016 will determine more fully the extent of any spread of Ash Dieback to established ash in the wider environment locally.

Since the first finding of the disease in autumn 2012, Forest Service Plant Health Inspection Branch has been proactive in managing the disease risk through implementing the All Ireland Chalara Control Strategy and to date have removed over 96,000 affected recently planted ash trees.

Scientists in AFBI are undertaking local research in order to understand the nature of the disease, and have engaged with European experts to gain a better understanding of the disease situation on the island of Ireland.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 49681/11-16, in relation to the premature inclusion of project income from wind turbines in budgetary forecasts, to explain the rationale of the monetary figure aligned to the Department's Wind Farm Development Project in 2014/15.

(AQW 50027/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: In the 2010 Comprehensive Spending Review (CSR) the Department included a budget figure of £1million for receipts anticipated in 2014/15 arising from its wind farm development plans. At that stage of the wind farm development work it was recognised that securing early revenue from wind turbines on Forest Service land by 2014/15 was possible but also challenging, due to the complexity of development work involved and obtaining the necessary approvals. As the development work progressed over the course of the CSR period it became clear that having turbines operational on Forest Service land within the timescale was not achievable. On this basis the Department adjusted its plans via the budget monitoring process to meet the £1million receipts from alternative commercial transactions, including granting access to wind farm developers across forest land and additional value timber sales.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the resources her Department has provided for FarmSafe Awareness training, in each of the last four years.

(AQW 50063/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: DARD has provided FarmSafe Awareness sessions which were delivered by an external delivery agent as part of the Farm Family Options Collective Training Scheme under Axis 1 of the Rural Development Programme 2007 – 2013.

Seven external delivery agent staff were engaged in the administration of the FarmSafe Awareness sessions however these staff were not exclusively working on FarmSafe Awareness but were also engaged in the administration of other elements of the Rural Development Programme.

In addition to the external delivery agent staff, there were some 37 Environmental Trainers and 51 Focus Farmers trained to deliver the FarmSafe Awareness sessions. A total of £357,618 was expended on the administration and delivery of FarmSafe Awareness with a total of 292 sessions delivered across the country and 5,383 farm family members attending the sessions.

The table below details the number of courses delivered, the number of farm family members attending and associated expenditure over each of the last 4 financial years.

	2011-12	2012-13	2013-14	2014-15
Number of courses delivered	0	20	166	106
Number of people attending	0	238	3297	1848
Expenditure charged to the RDP programme	0	35,168.30	154,659.50	167,790.26

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action her Department is taking to combat rural crime in the Upper Bann.

(AQW 50064/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Responsibility for tackling rural crime lies primarily with the PSNI, however DARD's Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch assists and advises the PSNI on a regular basis concerning agricultural crime.

DARD continues to work with the PSNI, the Department of Justice and representatives of the farming community on a number of joint initiatives including Farm Watch, the Freeze-branding initiative and the Crimestoppers Campaign.

Veterinary Service represents DARD on the steering group of a dedicated Rural Crime Unit which was set up by the PSNI. The Unit, jointly funded by the Department of Justice and NFU Mutual, is focusing on a range of issues from the identification of trends and patterns to the delivery of targeted initiatives. This multi-agency approach has led to the recovery of stolen animals and successful prosecutions in the north and the south. Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch assists particularly with the detection, tracing, recovery and identification of stolen livestock and has been using sophisticated DNA profiling techniques to verify the ownership of recovered animals.

The PSNI's quarterly updates on agricultural and rural crime show that the number of offences relating to agricultural activity has decreased significantly in recent years. Specific information about the Upper Bann area is available in these updates which are published by the NISRA.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the effectiveness of FarmSafe Awareness training.

(AQW 50076/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Farm Safe Awareness events were practical two hour awareness sessions delivered by farmers for farmers. They offered practical demonstrations covering the everyday hazards faced by farmers and farming families. Topics covered included: working at height, slurry handling/risks, handling livestock and working with machinery.

Events were delivered locally by a network of dedicated trainers using a combination of Focus Farms and community venues ensuring accessibility, good geographic coverage and accommodating seasonal (weather) conditions.

The objectives were to raise awareness, improve farmers' attitudes, perceptions and personal safety practices, and to ultimately encourage actions that would make farms safer.

I am very encouraged by the work carried out. A recent survey confirms that 99% of respondents indicated they were likely to take workshop information home and do something with it and that the awareness sessions provided motivation for change. Additionally 91% of respondents indicated that attending FarmSafe Awareness had heightened their awareness of farm safety. This is very encouraging and shows that FarmSafe Awareness was a good initiative.

Farm Safety must be a partnership between farmers and authorities with willingness on all sides to facilitate change and make farming safer. Whilst government can provide the frameworks and funding, it falls to farmers to take action and reduce risk of accidents on their farms. Something I think that the Farm Safe Awareness achieved.

I am keen to ensure that the good work of Farm Safe Awareness continues and farm safety will be a key feature of the new Rural Development Programme 2014-2020. Farm safety awareness will be delivered under the new Farm Family Key Skills measure. Farm safety will also be a key topic for the Business Discussion Groups and will also form part of the assessment for entry to the Business Investment Scheme.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for a breakdown of any investment, including capital her Department has made in West Belfast since May 2011.

(AQW 50083/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development has invested a total of £2,131,322 in the Belfast West Constituency from the May 2011 to 31 March 2015. This is broken down in the table below.

	2011/12* £'000	2012/13 £'000	2013/14 £'000	2014/15 £'000	Total £'000

* The 2011/12 period has been reduced to reflect May 2011 to March 2012, in line with this request. All other years are complete financial years.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in relation to the recognition of active farmer status, whether the requirement that individuals must present accounts up to 1 October 2015 prepared by an independent qualified accountant is a European Commission or departmental requirement.

(AQW 50091/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The date of 'up to 1 October 2015' is a departmental requirement.

One of the conditions for the allocation of entitlements under the Basic Payment Scheme is that applicants must be able to demonstrate that they have the decision making power, benefits and financial risks in relation to the agricultural activity on the land which they are claiming under the scheme. This is known as the 'active farmer' requirement.

My Department is currently assessing farm businesses who are considered to be provisionally 'non-active' and have found that further evidence needs to be provided from some of those businesses to enable it to make a determination.

Accounts presented up to 1 October 2015 would clearly demonstrate when, in 2015, the agricultural activity took place.

If applicants do not provide farm accounts they will not have breached any legal requirement, but it is likely to mean that they will not be able to demonstrate to the satisfaction of my Department that they meet the active farmer requirements, the consequence being that the application would be rejected and no payment entitlements or associated payments would be issued to that farm business.

It is in the applicant's own interest to provide the information as soon as possible. Applicants can request more time to provide the farm accounts but the Department will not be able to make a decision on whether entitlements will be allocated to the business until they do so.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 34925/11-15, to list the dates, since 13 November 2013, on which departmental officials met with their counterparts from the Republic of Ireland to advance a ban on wild animals in circuses.

(AQW 50156/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I previously advised the Assembly on 11 March 2015, during my answer to your Assembly Question on this issue, that I remain open to the possibility of a ban on the use of wild animals in travelling circuses. However, legislation can only be introduced if there is a need to do so and, if a ban is to be introduced under animal welfare legislation, welfare issues must be identified and supported by evidence. I would need to be assured of the merit of such legislation and that such a ban is justified. To date no such evidence or reassurance that a ban is merited has emerged, therefore my officials have not met with their counterparts in the south of Ireland to advance a ban on wild animals in circuses here.

My officials continue to work with officials from the Department of Agriculture, Food and the Marine (DAFM) in the south with a view to adopting a code of practice on an all-island basis. The purpose of a code of practice would be to ensure that operators are clear about their responsibilities to ensure that the welfare of animals is protected.

My officials met with their DAFM counterparts under the auspices of the North South Animal Welfare and Transport Working Group on 5 September 2013, 19 March 2014, 24 July 2014, 29 September 2014 and 10 July 2015. The issue of circuses is a standing agenda item at these meetings. My officials also have ongoing contact with their DAFM counterparts on this issue in addition to the formal meetings.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 34925/11-15, how many people are in the departmental team or working group put in place to advance a ban on wild animals in circuses.

(AQW 50157/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department does not have a team or working group in place to advance a ban on wild animals in circuses here. However officials from my Department's Central Policy Group and Veterinary Service represent my Department on the North South Animal Welfare and Transport Working Group. The issue of circuses is a standing item on the agenda of the meetings of this working group. These officials also have ongoing contact with their Department of Agriculture, Food and the Marine counterparts on this issue in addition to the formal meetings.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the work her Department has carried out on the impact on farmers' subsidies of the UK leaving the European Union.

(AQO 8975/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: This is an important issue and I have asked my Department to begin considering the impact of a potential British exit from the EU on Agriculture and Rural life in the north.

Clearly, an exit from the EU would mean direct payments from the EU would stop.

However in assessing the overall impact there are a great many uncertainties surrounding a potential exit not least the timing of the withdrawal.

There are key uncertainties around the type of trade arrangements with the EU and the rest of the world that could be negotiated following a withdrawal of EU Membership. Of particular significance is whether there would be tariff free access to EU markets for agricultural products and vice versa.

If direct payments from the EU stopped it would not be feasible for the Executive to fund these payments at current levels from the block grant unless additional money was forthcoming from the Treasury.

I do not need to tell you that the British Government has long wanted to reduce the level of support going to farmers. They do not regard direct payments to farmers as value for money. I believe the Treasury would be unsympathetic to calls for some of the money saved from withdrawing as a member of the EU to be used to maintain direct support to farmers at current levels.

I believe that a significant reduction in direct support would leave many of our farmers in real long term financial difficulty. A faster rate of structural change in the industry would be inevitable. Small farms would be likely to suffer the most. There would be knock on effects for rural communities and the environment.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many jobs were created by the Rural Development Programme 2007-2013.

(AQO 8976/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The LEADER element for the 2007-2013 Rural Development Programme launched in 2009. Shortly afterwards we were hit with the economic downturn that led to extremely difficult conditions to be trying to implement LEADER. However I am delighted to confirm today that despite these difficulties LEADER has now created just over 1,000 rural jobs.

This is a great achievement in a very challenging period and I want to thank the Local Action Groups for all their efforts that have resulted in this achievement. This has created local rural jobs at a time when they were badly needed and have helped rural communities when they needed it most.

It is because of this that I have made job creation one of the key objectives of the economic theme of the LEADER element of the programme going forward. We have a challenging target of 700 jobs, but I think with the involvement of the Local Action Groups and the knowledge they can bring to the table, I am confident that we will exceed this target.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many staff in her Department will leave through the Voluntary Exit Scheme in 2015.

(AQO 8977/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department is required to achieve savings of 15.1% or £29.9m this year. As over 50% of the DARD budget relates to staff costs, a reduction of 300 full-time equivalent (FTE) staff is required to address significant budget pressures in the context of the agreed 2015/16 Budget.

At this stage, a total of 291 staff will leave under the first three tranches of the Scheme. This represents 232 full time equivalent staff. To date there is a broad spread of acceptances across grades and business areas.

In terms of a further breakdown, 105 staff left the Department in the first Tranche at the end of September and a further 81 staff will exit under Tranche 2 at the end of November. Offers under Tranche 3 had to be accepted by last Friday and a further 105 staff have accepted and will leave on 31 January 2016.

My Department is continuing to work towards the target of 300 and subsequent exits will take place in March 2016.

Whilst the scale of the staff reductions will have an impact on services, the Department is conducting a number of reviews to its customer contact, advisory and inspection services delivery models and corporate services, also looking at how best use can be made of digital technology. These reviews will determine how the current services can continue to be effectively delivered with a reduced workforce and will also allow us to better join up policy and delivery, streamline our corporate services and transact more business online.

Departmental priorities will be taken forward along with front line services and when the reviews are complete, the Department will consult with its stakeholders as to the most appropriate model for service delivery and ensure existing resources are maximised accordingly.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the local development of the Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs' Flood Re insurance scheme.

(AQO 8978/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The development of new proposals in relation to flood insurance is a reserved matter, led by the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (DEFRA). To ensure the Scheme is appropriate to the level of flood risk here officials from Rivers Agency have been liaising with the Association of British Insurers, DEFRA and officials from Departments in England, Scotland and Wales throughout the whole process of setting up the 'Flood Re' Scheme.

Rory Stewart, Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Environment and Rural Affairs has confirmed that the Flood Re organisation is now in place, and the necessary regulations establishing how the scheme will be administered and funded having been laid before Parliament.

Rivers Agency has been involved in discussions with DEFRA to develop the necessary policy and data transfer arrangements to ensure, this scheme is workable here. Land and Property Services, which is part of DFP, have also played a role providing property value data which will be used to limit the flood insurance element of premiums for those least able to pay.

It is anticipated that the scheme will be publicly available early in 2016.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what actions were identified following the recent meeting of the Supply Chain Forum.

(AQO 8979/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I had the great pleasure of participating in the first meeting of the Supply Chain Forum on 14 October 2015, at the new Food Innovation Centre at Loughry Campus.

The meeting was well attended with approximately 100 delegates from right across the agri-food chain, representing a broad range of sectors. I chaired the opening debate at the Forum to give all stakeholders the opportunity to raise issues at the outset which could be taken forward by the Forum. The discussions were open, honest, and most importantly, positive about the direction that the industry must take.

There was a clear commitment to improving communication along the supply chain and a desire to explore work streams which might better place the industry at a competitive advantage and provide further resilience against the volatility to which the agri-food industry is subject. Themes discussed at the break-out sessions included contracts, sustainability and opportunities for enhanced north/south collaboration. I would expect to see some of these ideas further developed at future meetings.

I believe that, as positive as the first event was, the true merit of the Supply Chain Forum will be in how any agreed actions are progressed. I know that plans are already underway for the next meeting of the Forum which I look forward to. I intend to remain closely involved in the Forum.

Mr Somerville asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline any discussion she has had with the Minister of Justice and the PSNI in relation to rural crime in Fermanagh and South Tyrone.

(AQO 8980/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I am very aware of the real concern that crime causes amongst the farming community, including the number of thefts from farms.

Responsibility for tackling rural crime lies primarily with the Department of Justice. I met with the Chief Constable and the Minister of Justice on a number of occasions to discuss rural crime issues including farm-related rural crime. I made them aware of my concerns, explained the worry this was causing in rural areas and highlighted the need for action.

My Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch works closely with the PSNI in Fermanagh, South Tyrone and across the north to counter animal-related theft and fraud. Together they have carried out a number of successful operations resulting in several successful prosecutions. Veterinary Service assists particularly with the detection, tracing, recovery and identification of stolen livestock and has been using sophisticated DNA profiling techniques to verify the ownership of recovered animals.

Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch and the PSNI also share intelligence and jointly investigate incidents with the Department in the south and with An Garda Síochána.

A DARD representative now sits on the PSNI Rural Crime Unit Steering Group and DARD helps to train police officers in livestock identification and movement documentation.

DARD also works with the Department of Justice, the PSNI and representatives of the farming community on a number of joint initiatives aimed at reducing rural crime and raising awareness of action that can be taken to help prevent rural crime, including Farm Watch, the Freeze-branding initiative and the Crimestoppers Campaign.

Rural crime causes great stress amongst the farming community. I encourage anyone who has information which might help us combat this threat to rural businesses to report suspicions to my Department or the PSNI.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the support her Department is providing to farmers in financial difficulty as a result of the crisis in the agriculture industry.

(AQO 8981/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I have been working for over a year with industry and political representatives at home, in Dublin, Britain and Europe to press the case for immediate support for our local industry. As you know I have secured £5.1million for local dairy farmers as part of the EU Targeted Aid Package. Included in this payment is an additional £1.1m top-up in recognition of the unique and specific difficult circumstances faced by dairy farmers here.

I am also committed to making Direct Payments to as many farmers as possible in December 2015.

At a practical level, I have been meeting with the banks and feed companies and encouraged them to be as proactive, sympathetic and flexible as possible. My advisers have also been providing on-farm workshops, technical articles and awareness events.

At recent meetings with DEFRA, Scottish and Welsh Ministers and with Commissioner Hogan I have discussed a range of other measures that could help strengthen the industry's foundations and help it manage global volatility in the medium to longer term. These include supporting fairness in the supply chain, promoting public procurement, opening new markets, and establishing futures markets.

I have tasked the Agri-Food Strategy Board with creating a Supply Chain Forum and participated in the Forum's first meeting on 14 October. My goal for the forum is to encourage the industry to work together in addressing the significant challenges across all farm sectors.

I and my officials are also working hard to stimulate export growth and open up new markets with a measure of success.

Finally, support for knowledge transfer, innovation, cooperation and capital investment will be available under the Rural Development Programme, including the proposed Farm Business Improvement Scheme (FBIS). The first phase of the FBIS, knowledge transfer through Business Development Groups will be formally launched in November.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the resources allocated to ensure that low cost grass production systems are available to farmers.

(AQO 8982/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I am very committed to ensuring that all livestock farmers across the north are fully aware of the benefits of low cost grass production systems.

The College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) delivers a comprehensive programme of education, industry training and demonstration of technologies leading to adoption of grass and silage production systems.

The farming systems demonstrated by the College farm to students and the industry have a major grass or grass-clover focus. This includes making use of DARD recommended variety lists, demonstrating reseeding techniques and land management improvement through draining, sub soiling and aeration. These are all focused on increasing the production and utilisation of quality grass.

From 1 April 2014 to the current date, CAFRE has delivered 35 training events, aimed at improving performance from grass, to 1150 dairy farmers and 54 training events to 1300 beef and sheep farmers. In addition to this there are currently 5 knowledge and technology transfer projects being demonstrated to farm businesses which have a focus on grass production and grassland management.

In addition AFBI has a long track record of developing low cost grass production systems. It is well recognised that grass as a feed for livestock is the cheapest nutritional source available to dairy, beef and sheep enterprises and my Department, through the commissioning of research, has always sought to ensure grass-based production has been a focus of research.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how small businesses in the former Limavady & Coleraine Borough Council areas will benefit from the roll out of the new Rural Business Investment scheme.
(AQO 8983/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Local Action Groups are currently drafting their Local Rural Development Strategies. It is up to each LAG to assess the need in their area under 4 different schemes, the Rural Business Investment Scheme being one of them. Once they have assessed need they must then clearly prioritise the allocation of funding that they have to address that need.

As job creation is one of the key objectives of the economic theme of the LEADER element of the programme going forward, I would expect that each LAG would see this as one of their primary objectives.

The scheme itself will provide capital grant to help micro and small businesses create jobs in all rural areas across the north. The request for grant by an applicant is a 2 stage process. Firstly applicants must attend a funding workshop where they will be given advice on eligibility and pre application documentation that they need to have before applying for funding, such as a business plan. Once workshops are complete in a LAG area the LAG will advertise that it is open to receive online applications.

This two stage process should increase the number of successful applications and reduce the amount of time wasted processing unrealistic ones. Our aim is to process all applications to a funding decision within 90 days of receipt.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when the various strands of the Sub Regional Football Fund will be released; and to detail the amount allocated to each strand.
(AQW 49596/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): I aim to commence a 12 week public consultation exercise on the proposals for the sub regional programme for soccer at the end of November 2015.

In order to ensure that the funding programme addresses the strategic needs of football, it is envisaged that the Sub Regional Programme will be divided into a number of distinctive strands. Partnership funding is also being proposed.

However, until the outcome of the forthcoming public consultation exercise, it is not possible to confirm the specific amount that will be allocated to each strand.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the organisations which received funding through the Cultural Programme; and the amount of funding each organisation received, in (i) 2013-14; and (ii) 2014-15.
(AQW 49986/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Cultural Programme funding allocated in each year was as follows:

2013/14
Feile An Phobail	£254,000
McCracken Cultural Society	£115,000
Belfast Film Festival	£110,000

2014/15
Feile An Phobail	£200,000
Arts Ekta	£35,000
Spectrum	£35,000
Belfast Film Festival	£35,000
Duncairn Arts Centre	£35,000
Ardoyne Community Association	£10,000

In addition, Eastside Arts received funding in these years from a separate funding stream to enable them to develop their plans and strategy and are now one of the Cultural Partners in 2015/16.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) when the Cultural Programme was advertised; (ii) how it was advertised; (iii) the closing date for applications; and (iv) the criteria for assessing applications, in (i) 2013-14; and (ii) 2014-15.

(AQW 49987/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Culture Programme was first run in 2013 to coincide with the World Police and Fire Games and included offerings from the Department's Arms Length Bodies, PRONI and also incorporated cultural events from the three established Belfast festivals. The Culture Programme Partners also made similar presentations to DETI, NITB and Belfast City Council.

Cultural programme funding in 2013/14 and 2014/15 was allocated and subsequently approved following receipt of business cases for the expenditure which was clearly aligned to Departmental priorities.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the total amount of money allocated through the Cultural Programme in (i) 2013-14; and (ii) 2014-15.

(AQW 49989/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The total amount allocated to the Cultural Programmes in 2013/14 and 2014/15 is broken down as follows:

2013/14
Feile An Phobail	£254,000
McCracken Cultural Society	£115,000
Belfast Film Festival	£110,000

2014/15
Feile An Phobail	£200,000
Arts Ekta	£35,000
Spectrum	£35,000
Belfast Film Festival	£35,000
Duncairn Arts Centre	£35,000
Ardoyne Community Association	£10,000

In addition, Eastside Arts received funding in these years from a separate funding stream to enable them to develop their plans and strategy and are now one of the Cultural Partners in 2015/16.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 49531/11-16 and in relation to the concerns raised by a sports promoter in 2006 -2008, whether the finding by her Department in October 2008 of insufficient evidence to substantiate allegations still stands in light of the NI Audit Office report.

(AQW 49994/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: No further evidence in respect of these allegations was presented in the NI Audit Office report.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure why staff of, or contractors for, Waterways Ireland were recently engaged in cutting trees and shrubbery on property at 160 Vow Road, Ballymoney, without either notice to, or consent from, the owner occupier.

(AQW 50011/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Waterways Ireland engaged a contractor to remove fallen trees, trim back trees and scrub which were overhanging the navigation channel at Movanager canal. As part of this work Waterways Ireland cut trees and shrubbery which were overhanging the navigation channel and emanating from 160 Vow Road, Ballymoney in accordance with its powers set out in Part III Article 41 (1) of The Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 - Power of Department to carry out works and provide facilities in relation to the waterways. In the case of the works at or about Movanager canal these have been undertaken from floating plant operating from the waterway.

The powers set out in Part III of The Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 (except Articles 47 and 53 to 56) and Schedules 4 and 5 of that Order are transferred to Waterways Ireland by Schedule 3 (2) of The North/South Co-operation (Implementation Bodies) (Northern Ireland) Order 1999.

There is no legislative requirement for Waterways Ireland to give notice to or seek consent from neighbouring property owners/occupiers where Waterways Ireland is carrying out its statutory powers on its own property.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what powers of Waterways Ireland has to enter unannounced and without permission carry out works on private property.

(AQW 50012/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: With regards to entering private property to carry out works, Waterways Ireland is bound by Part III, Articles 51 and 52 of The Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 - Powers of entry and inspection.

The powers set out in Part III of The Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 (except Articles 47 and 53 to 56) and Schedules 4 and 5 of that Order are transferred to Waterways Ireland by Schedule 3 (2) of The North/South Co-operation (Implementation Bodies) (Northern Ireland) Order 1999.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what assessment or evaluation has been undertaken on the funding of new minibuses to sports, voluntary and community organisations under the Tackling Poverty initiative.

(AQW 50013/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Post Project Evaluations (PPEs) for the provision of minibuses to sports, voluntary and community organisations in the Greater Belfast area will be submitted to the Department in line with the specific conditions of the Letters of Offer; this will be by December 2015.

PPEs for the minibuses provided to organisations in the North West have already been submitted to the Department. PPEs are reviewed within the Department to ensure that objectives and targets were met and value for money was achieved.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what is the timescale for any assessment of the provision of funding for minibuses for sports or community groups under the Tackling Poverty initiative.

(AQW 50014/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Post Project Evaluations (PPEs) for the provision of minibuses to sports, voluntary and community organisations in the Greater Belfast area will be submitted to the Department in line with the specific conditions of the Letters of Offer; this will be by December 2015.

PPEs for the minibuses provided to organisations in the North West have already been submitted to the Department. PPEs are reviewed within the Department to ensure that objectives and targets were met and value for money was achieved.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what level of funding is available under the Tackling Poverty initiative to sports or community groups seeking to purchase a minibus.

(AQW 50015/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: All of the activity supported by my Department is focussed on the Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion (PETPSE) agenda, aimed at improving the lives of those most in need. This includes the activity undertaken directly by the Department and that of our Arm's Length Bodies.

There is no specific grant scheme administered by my Department in relation to PETPSE as this agenda underpins all departmental activity and is the central driving force to DCAL's core functions.

In 2014/15 under the PETPSE agenda, the Department funded a pilot Community Minibus Scheme. The aim of the scheme was to provide transport to a range of community-based organisations that have been excluded from undertaking certain activities due to the unavailability or expense of transport.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 49458/11-16, when the outcome of the formal investigation is expected to be completed; and when she will be in a position to comment further.

(AQW 50028/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The investigation into this fish kill was commissioned by Inland Fisheries Ireland (IFI).

My officials are currently in discussions with IFI and the authors on the release of report to the public.

It is expected that the report will be released to the public upon completion of these discussions.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how the value of the Euro has affected the budget of Waterways Ireland in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50029/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am informed by Waterways Ireland that its annual sterling requirement (to fund operations in the north and its Headquarters unit in Enniskillen) is around £5m per year.

The Body's annual budget is agreed in Euro and, since sterling has strengthened against the euro in recent years, this has created budget pressures for the Body – as compared to 2013 - of 290k euro in 2014 and of 875k euro (forecast) in 2015. Waterways Ireland's annual current budget is in the region of 23,750k euro.

While I acknowledge that managing these pressures is difficult, the budget position faced by Waterways Ireland is no worse than that facing my Department and most of its other arm's length bodies.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amounts in (i) financial terms; and (ii) percentage terms of the budget in Waterways Ireland that is set aside for pension payments for former staff; and whether this is comparable with other bodies.

(AQW 50030/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The table overleaf has been provided by Waterways Ireland and sets out the amount of pension payments set aside for former staff in financial terms and as a percentage against the Body's total annual budget.

The figures are provided in Euros, the working currency of Waterways Ireland and are shown by calendar year which is the financial year for the body.

The pension liabilities are paid from the resource budget as agreed with the Business Plans. The total resource budget was subject to efficiency savings until 2015. For 2016, the Finance Departments have agreed that new pension liabilities should be exempt from efficiency savings. From 2017, all pension liabilities will be exempt from efficiency savings.

Pensions Payments

	2013	2014	2015 (projected)
Total Payments (EURO)	1,392,875	1,616,470	2,206,145
DAHG Payments (EURO)	1,297,064	1,488,277	1,863,054
DCAL Payments (EURO)	95,811	128,193	343,091
Annual Budget (EURO) - including capital	29,473,063	28,039,203	27,115,160
Pension as % of Annual Budget	4.73%	5.77%	8.14%

Waterways Ireland is not in a position to determine if this is comparable to other bodies, but comparisons would, in any case, be difficult since payments reflect lengths of service and other factors which may not be similar across other organisations.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list the papers published by Bushmills salmon research station; and where can these papers be accessed.

(AQW 50080/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL and AFBI officials based at the Bushmills Salmon Station produce various Fisheries statistics which are in the public domain (Annex A). In addition to this, the Fisheries Digest, compiled by NISRA, contains much information on the work carried out at Bushmills and is accessible to the public through the DCAL website.

Data on salmon stocks collected by Bushmills Salmon Station is used for the international management of salmon by NASCO (North Atlantic Salmon Conservation Organisation). Reports are published annually through the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea (ICES) Website. <http://www.ices.dk/community/groups/Pages/WGNAS.aspx>

Salmon Datasets from the Bush and other rivers in the DCAL area are published online. http://www.dcalni.gov.uk/fisheries\_digest\_2015\_\_2013\_data\_.pdf

Previous copies of the Salmon and Inland Fisheries Annual Report have been deposited in the Assembly Library.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 49204/11-16, what is the proposed timescale for the refurbishment and replacement programme of library buildings.

(AQW 50082/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI has informed me that the refurbishment and replacement programme for library buildings listed in my answer to AQW 49204/11-16 forms part of a forward work plan for the organisation's Assets section over the next 5 years, ie 2015-2020. Precise timescales for individual libraries listed are yet to be confirmed. These remain conditional on a range of variables including the availability of capital funding, the negotiation of successful outcomes with partnering organisations and the preparation and approval of business cases.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 49531/11-16, with the exception of the concerns raised in August 2004 and those of late 2006, how each of these matters were resolved.

(AQW 50093/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In line with the company's complaints policy, the Department referred each of these matters to the Chair of the NIEC Board for resolution. It is not aware of how they were resolved. The Member will be very aware that these events occurred before my time as Minister and subsequently transferred to DETI.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what support her Department could provide to a walking and cycling trek between Gortnagarn and Gortin, Omagh.

(AQO 8991/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The work to establish a walking, cycling and mountain biking trail at Gortin Forest Park is the result of a collaborative effort between the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, Omagh Council and Outdoor Recreation NI.

My Department through Sport NI has provided around eight hundred and thirty thousand pounds to Outdoor Recreation NI over the past three years and has approved a business case for the period through to the year 2020 for a further six hundred thousand pounds. This funding supports the aims of the Our Great Outdoors Action Plan that aims to increase access to the great outdoors for recreational, sporting and health enhancing activities.

I am aware of the recent 'Join us up' initiative by the local community in the Gortnagarn and Gortin area and am supportive of the plans to explore the development of an off- road route that would join the two communities to the Gortin Glens Forest Park. I can advise that neither my Department, or Sport NI, has been approached regarding support for this proposed development between Gortnagarn and Gortin.

It is clear that a multi-purpose route between Gortnagarn and Gortin for walking, horse riding and cycling would support a key priority in the Outdoor Recreation Action Plan by extending provision of access to the great outdoors and enhance the experience for many more users. It would also help sustain local businesses in a rural area by increasing visitor numbers at both locations and enabling the local community to benefit from tourism revenue.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline her Department's responsibility when pollution in a river is reported.

(AQO 8993/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The lead agency for the investigation of pollution incidents is NI Environment Agency and my Department's Inland Fisheries Group's relationship with the agency is set out in a Memorandum of Understanding between the two parties.

Where a pollution incident results in a fish kill, NIEA takes the lead on the investigation and DCAL Fisheries Protection Officers support this investigation by collecting, counting and identifying the dead fish and the area affected. Should the matter result in court proceedings the Fisheries Protection Officers may be required to give evidence at court.

Inland Fisheries group staff can provide the courts with expert evidence on the impact of a pollution incident on fish stocks. My officials have also developed a framework for estimating the cost of habitat enhancement and re-stocking to reinstate a fishery affected by pollution incidents. This can be presented as evidence to inform the award of compensation by the courts, should a polluter be made amenable. My officials will then seek to work with the angling club or fishery owners on how this money can be used to benefit fish stocks in the river.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on Sport NI's Sports Facilities Fund.

(AQO 8994/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Sport NI Lottery Sports Facility Fund will see an investment of seventeen point five million pounds in sports facilities across the north of Ireland. The aim is to increase participation in sport at club and community level, whilst also providing facilities for high performance sports people.

It will be delivered through three separate strands:

- The Single Facility strand, which has an estimated budget of two million pounds;
- The Multi Facility strand, which has an estimated budget of six point seven five million pounds; and
- The Performance Facility strand, which has an estimated budget of eight point seven five million pounds.

The Single Facility strand opened to applicants on 1st June 2015 and closed on 15th July 2015. Award levels within this strand are between ten thousand pounds and one hundred thousand pounds. Local sports clubs and other organisations could apply to develop their sporting facilities or purchase sporting equipment. One hundred and fifty-three applications were received.

Following an assessment of the applications and supporting Sports Development Plans, Sport NI has prioritised twenty one applications to move to the next stage in the process, which is the development of a business case for each project. Sport NI will now work with successful applicants to take forward their projects and are offering feedback and advice to those applicants who were not successful at this stage.

The most recent timescale for the Multi Facility strand to open for applications is now January 2016. Award levels within this strand will be between one hundred thousand pounds and one million pounds. Local sports clubs and other organisations can apply to develop new multi-sport facilities, or open up access to existing multi-sport facilities where four or more sports facilities are located at one site.

I would encourage clubs and organisations considering applying to the Multi Facility strand to register their interest with Sport NI, if they have not already done so.

For the third strand, the Performance Strand, Sport NI is currently working with District Councils, Sports Governing Bodies and other key partners to identify how the allocated funding can be best used to integrate facility needs of communities and high performance athletes within the same multi-sport environment. This work is continuing and a date for release has yet to be agreed.

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the benefits to local communities of Northern Ireland qualifying for the European Championships 2016. [R]
(AQO 8995/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Qualifying for the 2016 European Championships is a great achievement for Michael O'Neill, the players, his staff and everyone associated with the team.

Already we have seen communities from across the north of Ireland come together to show their support for the football team and enjoy the atmosphere around the matches. I hope that this will continue during the finals and I have asked my officials to explore how they can support the Irish Football Association and local authorities should they consider developing fan zones around the Championship games.

The team's success has the potential to inspire our local communities to become more active, try new sports and even join a local sports club. This can ultimately lead to healthier lifestyles and mental wellbeing for everyone. In support of this, my Department and Sport NI will continue to work with partners such as the IFA and local councils to offer sport and leisure opportunities across our communities.

There will also be practical benefits to local communities through the development of the Olympia Leisure Centre beside the Windsor Park Stadium. The Department has played its part through its investment in the new Olympia Leisure Centre.

Construction is progressing well and when complete, the new state of the art facilities will be a tremendous boost for the social and economic wellbeing of those from the local community and indeed much further afield. It will provide sustained viable leisure provision in the local area, improving access and promoting social inclusion.

In addition, my Department through Sport NI continues to invest in football at a grassroots level. This investment aims to open up opportunities for local sports communities to follow in the steps of those sporting heroes, like the international football teams.

We have seen how success at major sporting occasions can have a positive effect on everyone and how it helps to inspire the next generation to take part and to be the best that they can be.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline her Department's priorities for the next twelve months.
(AQO 8996/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: For the remainder of this term of the Assembly I will continue to implement my Department's business plan in line with the Executive's Programme for Government.

I will continue to drive forward my key objective of ensuring that culture, arts and leisure activities promote equality, and tackle poverty and social exclusion. This will include prioritising funding to ensure that where possible it is directed towards those who are most in need.

During this period I will also bring forward an Arts and Culture Strategy to emphasise the importance of arts and culture in creating a cohesive society, in contributing to positive health and well being, in promoting tourism, in helping the economy and acting as an inspirational driver for the creative industries and artistic excellence.

In addition I will also continue to progress a number of key areas including taking forward the redevelopment of Casement Park and also the Sub Regional Stadium Programme.

Following on from the public consultation I also plan to progress Acht na Gaeilge – an Irish Language Act – in order to support the Irish Language and all those who speak it across the north.

Another priority for my Department is to continue to contribute to building a united community. This will be achieved principally through the delivery of a cross community youth sports programme which will seek to build good relations through the transformative power of sport and creative activity.

Finally my officials will continue to work with their colleagues on the NICS Departmental restructuring programme. This work will ensure that the clear benefits that can be realised from cultural activities will be embedded in the heart of the restructured Departments.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the comments by the Chair of the Arts Council that the cuts to the arts sector are unexpected and unprecedented.

(AQO 8997/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am aware of the comments made by the Chair of the Arts Council and I have met with him to discuss his concerns.

I have pointed out to him that austerity is not my choice and that I am dealing with a very difficult budget, resulting directly from unprecedented British government cuts and this has impacted on all service areas across DCAL and its arm's-length bodies.

I am aware that arts groups and those who avail of their services are facing difficulties. However, I have had to take very tough decisions to ensure that funding is available to priority areas such as health and safety and ensuring that vulnerable and disadvantaged people have the opportunity to access arts and culture. I will not apologise for this.

In terms of funding priorities for the next twelve months and, in the context of the reduced resources that are available to me, I remain committed to prioritising access to arts and culture for people from the most vulnerable sections of our society, people who may not otherwise have access to arts and culture to ensure they have equality of opportunity in experiencing the benefits that access to arts and culture can bring.

I will also prioritise the launch of a public consultation which will assist in shaping a ten year arts and culture strategy to ensure recognition is given at the highest level to the value that arts and culture have in enriching the lives of individuals, communities and wider society.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, in light of the recently announced cuts to the arts sector, whether any directive has been issued to Arts Council NI regarding funding priorities for the next twelve months.

(AQO 8998/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am aware of the comments made by the Chair of the Arts Council and I have met with him to discuss his concerns.

Department of Education

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the number of pupils currently attending Clifton Special School, Bangor; and (ii) the number of places the school can accommodate.

(AQW 49895/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): In 2014/15, 146 pupils were enrolled in Clifton Special School as a single or a dual registered pupil where Clifton is their main school. Information on approved enrolments of special schools is not held by the Department.

Source: NI school census

Notes:

- 1 Figures relate to the 2014/15 academic year. While the 2015/16 school census took place on the 9th October this year, provisional figures will not be available until December 2015 and will not be finalised figures until February 2016.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail any primary schools that have (i) opened; and (ii) been granted permission to open since 2010, with less than 105 pupils.

(AQW 49901/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Schools that have opened and been granted permission to open since 2010 with fewer than 105 pupils are detailed in the table below.

(i) Schools that have opened

Year opened	School	Enrolment on year opened	Enrolments in 2014/15
2010	Gaelscoil an tSeanchaí	20	77
2011	Gaelscoil Léim an Mhadaidh	18	53
2011	Gaelscoil Aodha Rua	12	67
2012	Gaelscoil Neachtain	63	77
2012	Ardstraw Jubilee Primary School	74	89
2012	Gaelscoil Eoghain	13	41
2012	Gaelscoil na mBeann	20	40

(ii) Schools that have been granted permission to open

Gaelscoil Aodha Rua, Gaelscoil Neachtain, Ardstraw Jubilee Primary School, Gaelscoil Eoghain and Gaelscoil na mBeann were all granted permission to open since 2010.

Source: NI school census

Notes:

- Most recent figures relate to the 2014/15 academic year. While the 2015/16 school census took place on the 9th October this year, provisional figures will not be available until December 2015 and will not be finalised figures until February 2016.
- Figures include year 1 - 7 classes only.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education when the review of the Youth Council for Northern Ireland will be published.
(AQW 49978/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The consultation on proposals for the future of the Youth Council (YCNi) closed on 3 July 2015. Responses are currently being considered and I will announce my decision in due course.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education what opportunities for continual professional development exist for the non-formal education workforce.

(AQW 49979/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education does not employ support staff who work in the education sector. The Education Authority (EA) employs the vast majority of the education sector support staff.

The EA has advised that professional development opportunities are provided for staff in various settings. The nature and type of professional development opportunity will be determined by the specific professional requirements of staff such as Education Welfare Officers, Educational Psychologists, Drivers etc.

In particular, training is provided where there is a statutory requirement in areas such as health and safety, child protection, food safety etc.

In-house training is also developed for a number of areas to meet service needs.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) amount of money awarded via the Extended Schools Fund in Foyle, in 2015-16; (ii) amount of money awarded to each individual cluster group; (iii) the target issue date of funding per cluster group; and (iv) the actual issue date of funding per cluster group.

(AQW 49999/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: A total of £1,284,646 of funding was awarded to schools located in the Foyle constituency via the Extended Schools (ES) programme in 2015-16.

The amount of ES funding made available in respect of each individual cluster group within Foyle is set out in the table below.

Name of ES Cluster Group within Foyle constituency	ES funding 2015/16
Outer North 1	£63,322
Outer North 2	£41,284
Outer West	£47,950
Triax 1	£48,671
Triax 2	£41,572
Waterside 1	£63,300*
Waterside 2	£34,472
Total	£340,571

* Does not include £1,304 contributed to the Waterside 1 cluster by Listress PS as this school is not located within the Foyle constituency.

There is no set target date for the issue of funding to ES cluster groups. The EA have advised that arrangements were made to release funding to schools at the earliest opportunity following final confirmation of allocation details from DE.

The EA have confirmed that notification of funding was issued to all cluster groups in the Foyle constituency on 30 September 2015.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Education (i) to detail the current financial surplus or deficit position; and (ii) for a breakdown of any additional money received through the funding formula for deprivation or other special categories for each (a) Council for Catholic Maintained; and (b) Irish-medium primary school in West Belfast.

(AQW 50047/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd:

(i) The latest Financial Year for which the cumulative surplus/deficit position is available is 2014/15. The table below provides data for the requested schools:

- (ii) Due to the volume of data requested for Part (ii) of the question, this information will be deposited in the NI Assembly Library. The data to be deposited relates to the allocations made via the funding formula for the current Financial Year (2015/16). Data shows the social deprivation funding alongside additional need pupil (Newcomer, Traveller and Looked-After children) funding, along with the total delegated budget in 2015/16.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) GCSE; and (ii) A-level results for each post-primary school in West Belfast in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50051/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: To provide this information would effectively result in the publication of a league table which it is not my intention to do. The reality is that no single measurement can constitute a fair or accurate evaluation of a school. Each should be considered in the context of other information about a school and its pupils. What I can do is refer you to the Schools Plus directory on the DE website where you can find relevant performance statistics about individual schools in the west Belfast area.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education for a breakdown of the number of (i) full; and (ii) part time nursery school places in North Down, in each of the last five academic years.

(AQW 50095/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The requested information is shown in the table below. The number of places available has remained constant over the past five academic years.

School Name	Full-time places (2011-2015)	Part-time places (2011-2015)
Donaghadee Primary School	0	52
Millisle Primary School	26	0
Bloomfield Primary School	0	52
Kilcooley Primary School	26	0
Rathmore Primary School	0	52

Kilmaine Primary School	0	52
Ballymagee Primary School*	0	26
St Malachy's Primary School	0	52
Bangor Central Nursery School	26	52
Hollywood Nursery School	0	52
Trinity Nursery School	52	0

* Ballymagee Primary School nursery opened in September 2014 therefore figures only appropriate from this point onwards.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils attending Catholic Maintained primary schools.

(AQW 50103/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: In 2014/15 there were 79,786 pupils attending Catholic Maintained primary schools.

Source: NI school census

Notes:

- 1 Figures relate to the 2014/15 academic year. While the 2015/16 school census took place on the 9th October this year, provisional figures will not be available until December 2015 and will not be finalised figures until February 2016.
- 2 Figures for primary includes nursery, reception and year 1 - 7 classes.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils attending Controlled primary schools.

(AQW 50141/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: In 2014/15 there were 84,220 pupils attending Controlled primary schools, of which 3,821 attend Controlled Integrated primary schools.

Source: NI school census

Notes:

- 3 Figures relate to the 2014/15 academic year. While the 2015/16 school census took place on the 9th October this year, provisional figures will not be available until December 2015 and will not be finalised figures until February 2016.
- 4 Figures for primary includes nursery, reception and year 1 - 7 classes.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils attending Integrated primary schools.

(AQW 50142/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: In 2014/15 there were 9,962 pupils attending integrated primary schools. This includes 3,821 pupils attending Controlled Integrated primary schools and 6,141 pupils attending Grant Maintained Integrated primary schools.

Source: NI school census

Notes:

- 5 Figures relate to the 2014/15 academic year. While the 2015/16 school census took place on the 9th October this year, provisional figures will not be available until December 2015 and will not be finalised figures until February 2016.
- 6 Figures for primary includes nursery, reception and year 1 - 7 classes.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of Controlled grammar schools.

(AQW 50143/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: In 2015/16, there are 17 Controlled Grammar schools.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Education (a) for a breakdown of the number of funded pre-school education places in Carrickfergus in the last three years, including the number of pre-school children residing in Carrickfergus that were not in receipt of pre-school places or travelled outside the postcode area for pre-school provision; and (b) for each pre-school provider in Carrickfergus, to detail the number of (i) pre-school education places provided for the immediate pre-school year; (ii) funded pre-school education places supporting those not in their immediate pre-school year; and (iii) for which funding was offered but vacancies existed.

(AQW 50155/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd:

- (a) The Education Authority has advised that the number of funded pre-school education places available in Carrickfergus in the last three years is as follows:

Settings	2013	2014	2015
Acorn Integrated Primary School	26	26	26
Alphabet Playgroup	25	25	25
Banana Bunch Playgroup	26	26	26

Settings	2013	2014	2015
Greengables Pre-School	24	24	24
Humpty Dumpty Pre-School	25	25	25
Kilroot Playgroup	24	24	24
Mt St Nicholas Playgroup	24	24	24
Oakfield Primary School	52	52	52
Rainbow Playgroup	24	24	24
Silverstream Primary School	26	26	26
Sunnylands Nursery School	104	104	104
Victoria Primary School	52	52	52
Whitehead Primary School	52	52	52
Woodburn Pre-School Playgroup	25	25	25

The process for admission to pre-school is preference based. For admissions in September 2015, 14 children with an address in Carrickfergus or Greenisland applied for and were placed in their first preference settings outside the area. The corresponding figure for 2014 admissions was 16 children. In 2013 a total of 20 children with an address in Carrickfergus or Greenisland were placed in settings of their choice outside the area. The EA cannot confirm if these were first preference settings.

At the end of the pre-school admissions processes for September 2013, 2014 and 2015, all applicants with an address in Carrickfergus or Greenisland who remained with the process had received the offer of a funded place.

- (b) (i) The number of funded pre-school places is detailed in the table above.
- (ii) Thirteen underage children were admitted to statutory nursery settings in Carrickfergus for the 2015/16 academic year: 7 in Sunnylands Nursery School and 6 in Whitehead Primary School. During the admissions process underage children are admitted only when all applications from children in their immediate pre-school year have been facilitated.
- (iii) At the end of the 2015/16 admissions process, there were no places remaining in statutory pre-school settings in the area. Potential places remained available in the non-statutory settings listed below. Funding is not provided for unfilled places in private/voluntary pre-school settings:
- Alphabet Playgroup
  - Banana Bunch Playgroup
  - Kilroot Playgroup
  - Mt St Nicholas Playgroup
  - Rainbow Playgroup
  - Woodburn Pre-School Playgroup

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Education what actions his Department is taking to ensure the provision of urgently required accommodation at Kilronan School, Magherafelt.

(AQW 50161/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: As Kilronan SS is a controlled school, responsibility for accommodation issues falls to the Education Authority (EA). The EA has already written to the school advising that it is acutely aware of the accommodation difficulties and it is taking steps to address both the short term and projected longer term accommodation needs, subject to the required funding becoming available.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Education for an update on area planning for Carrickfergus College.

(AQW 50209/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: As the managing authority for controlled schools, it is the Education Authority's (EA) role to bring forward and publish Development Proposals (DP) relating to controlled schools in the Carrickfergus area including Carrickfergus College.

To date no DP has been published for Carrickfergus College. I have been advised that the EA will be consulting on options for controlled Post Primary provision in Carrickfergus during 2015/16.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 50023/11-16, to detail (i) the specific criteria for eligibility to the Extended Schools Programme; and (ii) how the criteria have been selected.

(AQW 50223/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The specific eligibility criteria for schools to qualify for the Extended Schools (ES) programme have recently been provided in my response to AQW 50023/11-16.

The additional resources provided through the ES programme are targeted at those schools operating in the most socially deprived areas. The eligibility criteria have therefore been developed to identify schools with greatest need using recognised measures of deprivation.

Free School Meal Entitlement (FSME) has a long established link to social deprivation and also to lower levels of educational achievement. Alongside FSME, the Multiple Deprivation Measure (NIMDM 2010) is based on distinct domains of deprivation that can be recognised and measured separately.

Schools are therefore identified for ES funding purposes, using both the measures of deprivation outlined above, through assessing the profile of the school as submitted in the annual School Census return.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education to outline how his Department is working with schools, Translink and parents to address bullying on school buses.

(AQO 9007/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Bullying is unacceptable no matter where it happens. It can extend far beyond the school gates; and bullying on school buses, when levels of direct supervision are lower, can be a significant problem.

Responsibility to respond to individual incidents lies with the school; acting in accordance with its discipline, good behaviour and anti-bullying policies. The day-to-day operation of those policies is exclusively a matter for the school and not one in which the Department would seek to intervene.

To ensure a consistent approach is followed by all schools; I will be clarifying, as part of my 'Addressing Bullying in Schools Bill' that schools responsibilities extend beyond those incidents which occur on school premises, during normal school hours; and they must take action when bullying occurs while pupils are travelling to or from the school, during term-time. Schools will be required to record such incidents, and the steps they have taken to address them.

Translink is actively involved in efforts to tackle bullying on buses. It works with schools to raise awareness, has provided guidance to drivers on responding to incidents and liaises with schools and Education Authority (EA) Transport Officers when any problems arise.

The EA have also developed a "Safe School Transport" leaflet for parents which includes advice on how bullying at these times should be addressed.

When incidents do occur, parents should initially contact the school to report the matter and raise their concerns. Where bullying is persistent, most Translink and EA operated buses can be fitted with CCTV cameras to monitor the situation and provide evidence, allowing the school to take appropriate action.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education in the absence of a signature project, what measures does he intend to introduce to help raise educational attainment rates for young Protestant boys.

(AQO 9011/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I am determined to address the inequality in our education system and I have in place policies to raise standards and tackle educational underachievement wherever it exists.

Tackling inequalities in education is an issue that cannot be solved quickly and while we have made some progress in recent years, this is a multi-faceted, societal issue and one that education authorities and schools cannot tackle on their own.

The evidence suggests that social background is the strongest factor impacting on attainment here, and whilst the performance of our most deprived pupils has continued to improve over the last few years, and at a faster rate than their more affluent peers, the gap between them is still too wide.

It is clear that schools need additional resources to help these pupils achieve their potential and I have redistributed school funding to target those schools with high numbers of pupils from socially disadvantaged backgrounds.

I also continue to target substantial resources at disadvantaged communities, including Sure Start, extended schools, full service programmes, Achieving Belfast and Achieving Derry Bright Futures programmes, and projects to address educational underachievement in the Greater West Belfast area.

I am working hard to break the link between disadvantage and educational outcomes; however, there is an important role to be played by parents, community leaders and those with influence in the community in raising educational awareness and aspiration in socially deprived communities.

While some schools persist in the use of academic selection, we will be unable to eradicate social division and those political proponents of social and academic selection must start accepting responsibility for all its outcomes, especially the outcomes for working class children.

I am however encouraged when I see communities where formal education has not traditionally been prized now recognising that education is the path to success in the future.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 49927/11-16, to detail how the figures for each school compare to the approved enrolment figures for 2010-11.

(AQW 50291/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: For comparative purposes the previously supplied data for AQW 49927/11-16 has been updated in the table below to include 2010/11 information:

School Name	School Type	Approved Enrolment number (2015/16)	Approved Enrolment number (2010/11)

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Education to outline the process used by his Department to notify Translink of the need to issue bus passes to students.

(AQW 50312/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA), rather than the Department of Education, is responsible for the process relating to notification and issue of Translink sessional tickets ("bus passes"). Following acceptance of their child into a school, parents may apply to the EA for assistance with transport for their child. The EA determines the most appropriate means of assistance including whether or not the pupil will travel on a Translink service. If so, their details will be forwarded to Translink for the creation of a sessional ticket. The ticket is sent to the EA which then passes it to the pupil's school for issue to the pupil in the first week of term. For pupils eligible for transport assistance from previous years, the EA passes their names to Translink in June with no need for parents to reapply each year.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the Equality Commission's Draft Statement on Key Inequalities in Education.

(AQO 9006/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: This is a Draft Statement and I asked the Equality Commission to meet with me on 19 October to discuss its findings. We have agreed that my officials will have further discussions with the Commission on its draft findings before publication of a final statement in 2016.

I am committed to addressing educational underachievement and disadvantage. Here are some examples of what we have achieved and are progressing:

- In the Progress in International Reading Literacy Study (PIRLS) and Trends in International Mathematics and Science (TIMMS) published in December 2012 we were the highest ranking English speaking region in the world in both reading and numeracy, 5th out of 45 countries surveyed in reading and 6th out of 50 countries surveyed in mathematics.
- funding both the Inclusion and Diversity Service and the Traveller Education Support Service to provide support for pupils who are Newcomers or from a Traveller background; and
- drafting three bills which will improve equality of opportunity and promote good relations - Special Educational Needs and Disability, Addressing Bullying in Schools and Shared Education.

There is more we can do and we are on a journey rather than at a destination. I look forward to hearing from the Equality Commission and other stakeholders about further steps we can take to secure improvement.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Education what advice his Department gives to schools in relation to promoting internet safety.

(AQO 9008/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department has reminded schools of their responsibility to have in place an eSafety policy and has provided guidance and advice on eSafety matters. As with all aspects of the curriculum, the specifics of what is taught in the classroom are matters for each teacher/school to consider.

A number of Departmental Circulars have issued to schools to provide advice on eSafety. DE Circular 2013/25 entitled "eSafety Guidance" issued in December 2013 which provided advice on what should be included in their eSafety policies, including advice on any non-C2k provision. Previous advice was issued in Circular 2011/22 "Internet Safety" and Circular 2007/01 "Acceptable Use of the Internet and Digital Technologies in Schools".

C2k provides schools with access to eSafety information and teaching resources via a dedicated eSafety Zone and includes a 360 degree online safety tool, links to UK Safer Internet Resources offering advice on keeping children safe online, and to an Anti Bullying Network website which provides suggestions for a code of conduct that schools can introduce to pupils.

There are also resources for teachers and pupils available on Fronter, C2k's Virtual Learning Environment. This includes eSafety courses; web links to best practice; audit tools; and advice on sexting/cyberbullying/policy creation. There are two Fronter ready to go rooms for eSafety— one to support staff and the other for pupil use as well as extensive resources to support teachers in their delivery of Internet safety to pupils in a dedicated area within C2k's content management system, EQUELLA.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Education, given the growth in pupil numbers and achievement in Irish-medium education in South Armagh, notably in Gaelscoil Phádraig Naofa, how he plans to develop and further enhance this provision.

(AQO 9009/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: It is the responsibility of the Education Authority and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools working with the Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta to ensure that there is sufficient provision to meet the demands for Irish medium education in the South Armagh area.

In May 2015, I approved Development Proposal 309 to increase the enrolment at Gaelscoil Phádraig Naofa, the Irish medium unit of St Patrick's Primary School from the 1 September 2015 or as soon as possible thereafter. This approval will meet the increased demand for Irish Medium education at the unit and will mean that the enrolment at Gaelscoil Phádraig Naofa will increase from 105 to 147 and the admissions number from 15 to 21.

Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of primary pupils' progression at the end of Key Stages 1 and 2.

(AQO 9010/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: From the 2012/13 school year attainment in Communication and Using Mathematics has been assessed using Levels of Progression. Our assessment arrangements are designed to measure not only the attainment of pupils but also the progress they make.

The arrangements include an 'expected level' at each milestone (the end of Key Stages 1, 2 and 3) and we are able to observe at system level the percentage of pupils attaining the expected level and above at the end of each Key Stage.

The percentage of pupils attaining the expected level in 2013/14 has increased across each Key Stage, and in both skills, since 2012/13.

The percentage of Key Stage 2 pupils achieving Level 4 or above in Using Maths increased from 78.5 to just over 80 percent, while the corresponding figure for Communication increased from 77 to almost 80 percent.

Our arrangements now allow us to assess the comparative performance of free school meals entitled pupils. This underlines the gap: the equivalent figures for free school meal-entitled pupils achieving the expected level are 65 percent in Communication and 66 percent in Using Maths. That's a 15 percentage point difference for Communication and a 14 percentage point difference for Maths. While not as pronounced a gap as we see in post-primary attainment, it is still untenable and I remain determined to take further action to reduce it.

In addition, the new arrangements include an expectation that, as well as achieving the expected level by the end of each Key Stage, pupils will progress by at least one level between each Key Stage. In future years, therefore, this will allow us to capture data on how pupils, or groups of pupils such as those with free school meal entitlement, in each cohort are progressing as they move through their education.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Education, during the last academic year, how many schools were dissatisfied with the outcome of their Education and Training Inspectorate school inspection and raised a complaint at stage one.
(AQO 9012/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Training Inspectorate received two formal complaints during the academic year 2014-15 at stage one however neither of these were in relation to schools being dissatisfied with the outcome of their school inspection.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to outline the process and criteria for applying for a bus pass.
(AQO 9013/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I should begin by clarifying that pupils apply for transport assistance and not specifically a bus pass. Should a pupil be eligible for transport assistance the Education Authority will determine what type of assistance is most appropriate. This may take the form of a bus pass, a seat on an Education Authority vehicle, or a monetary allowance.

Parents may apply to their Education Authority Region for consideration. Eligibility for assistance is determined by application of the school transport policy's criteria which are: distance, and suitable school. The distances used are two miles for Primary pupils and three miles for Post-Primary pupils measured by the shortest route capable of being walked between home and school. A suitable school is one in the recognised categories of grant-aided school. Namely: Catholic Maintained, Controlled and Other Voluntary, Integrated, Irish Medium, Denominational and Non-Denominational grammar. No other definition of 'suitable school' is used.

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the projected reduction of full time equivalent students at local universities, as a result of courses being withdrawn.
(AQW 49132/11-16)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): As a result of the 2015-16 Budget, this academic year, our universities and university colleges will be taking cuts of over £16 million. As a consequence we are witnessing a very real impact in terms of student places and staff posts. Queen's and Ulster University, have reduced their intake of local and European full time students by a total of 540 places this year and this is expected to rise to nearly 2,000 over the next few years.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of students, per university campus, against whom action was taken by their university as a result of plagiarism, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 49376/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department does not hold this information. You may wish to contact the institutions directly.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail any plans by Ulster University to merge or centralise community youth studies, community planning and restorative justice onto one site or school.
(AQW 49377/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department does not hold this information. You may wish to contact the University directly.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail whether his Department has had any discussions with the NEET Youth Forum regarding the possibility of representatives chairing or co-chairing the NEET Advisory Group.
(AQW 49441/11-16)

Dr Farry: Discussions between my officials and the NEET Strategy Forum, the organisation which manages the NEET Youth Forum (NYF), about the future role of the overall organisation given the current refresh of the Pathways to Success strategy, are ongoing.

The NYF has been directly represented on the NEET Advisory Group since December 2014.

There have been direct discussions with the NYF Regional Project Manager about the possibility of a young person co-chairing the NEET Advisory Group. This may be a future option as members of the NYF gain in confidence.

I will be happy to keep the possibility of a young person co-chairing the NEET Advisory Group under review.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what representations the Minister has made or intends to make to St Mary's University College to avoid a repeat of the recent display commemorating republican terrorists at the college.
(AQW 49562/11-16)

Dr Farry: My expectation is that all higher education institutions must be shared and inclusive environments.

Like others, St Mary's University College is responsible for its policies and procedures, including adherence to Section 75 and other equality legislation. My Department highlights in the annual grant letters to all institutions their responsibility to adhere to the relevant legislation.

All higher education institutions engage with the wider community, and this is now an expectation under our higher education strategy. In this regard, St Mary's is responsible for deciding how its premises are used.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in relation to the Ulster University Certificate in Training Level 4 required under the 2014-2020 European Social Fund Programme, to detail (i) how this will impact on the mobility of workers across the EU; and (ii) what steps will be taken to ensure there is no discrimination for facilitators from outside Northern Ireland with existing qualifications.
(AQW 49663/11-16)

Dr Farry: The Ulster University Certificate in Teaching is only required to be undertaken under the European Social Fund 2014-2020 Programme, if a tutor does not already hold a recognised teaching qualification. A list of these recognised qualifications has been provided in response to AQW 49661/11-16.

My Department appreciates that the list of recognised teaching qualifications provided may not be exhaustive, and that some tutors may hold teaching qualifications which could be considered 'equivalent', particularly where those qualifications have been achieved outside the UK or Republic of Ireland. Where this is the case, my Department recommends that Project Promoters consult the UK National Academic Recognition Information Centre (UK NARIC), in order to satisfy themselves that any alternative teaching qualifications are equivalent to those in the Department's list of recognised teaching qualifications.

Access to the UK NARIC database is available across the Department's network of Jobs and Benefits Offices and JobCentres. This service is provided free; however, there may be a need for translation of the certificates and relevant transcripts into English and any translation costs are not covered by my Department.

Where UK NARIC is unable to demonstrate the equivalence or otherwise of a particular qualification, my Department recommends that the individual should undertake the Certificate in Teaching at Ulster University and, if appropriate, seek consideration of accredited prior learning which will be considered by the University in line with its normal procedures.

My Department would therefore maintain that these provisions ensure EU-wide labour mobility, and that there is no discrimination for tutors with qualifications from outside the UK or Republic of Ireland.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, in respect of the terrorist tribute at St Mary's University College Belfast, what discussions has his Department held with staff and Board of Governors prior to, during and since, as to (i) whose initiative this was; (ii) whether it complied with all policies, protocols and procedures expected from a departmentally funded facility; and (iii) the measures or consideration given to the sensitivities of students and staff who may be victims of or had direct or familial connections with victims of those depicted in the tribute, or others associated with the activities of same.
(AQW 49725/11-16)

Dr Farry:

- (i) When the exhibition was first brought to my attention in August, departmental officials contacted St. Mary's and were advised that the exhibition was staged by the support group 'Relatives for Justice' and was part of the Feile an Phobail.
- (ii)&(iii) The funding provided by my Department to higher education institutions is for the specific purposes of the provision of education and the undertaking of research or for the provision of facilities for the carrying on of these activities. All third level institutions are required to have shared and inclusive environments and my Department highlights, in the annual grant letters, the responsibility of individual institutions to adhere to the relevant legislation.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of (i) Knowledge Transfer Partnerships between Further and Higher Education institutions and local companies; and (ii) how budget cuts are likely to impact on the ability of institutions to deliver the Partnerships.
(AQW 49742/11-16)

Dr Farry:

- (i) Since it began in Northern Ireland about 40 years ago some 600 Knowledge Transfer Partnerships (KTPs) have been completed with local companies which have provided numerous benefits to individuals, companies and academic institutions and to the Northern Ireland economy overall.

Northern Ireland as a region is highly successful in terms of KTP Programme participation. Queen's University Belfast has the highest number of current active partnerships in the UK at 42 and Ulster University is currently ranked sixth with 21 active partnerships.

The KTP Programme is an excellent example of a scheme which fosters collaboration and knowledge transfer and delivers significant impacts to the Northern Ireland economy. A recent study<sup>1</sup> commissioned by Innovate UK estimated programme Return on Investment of £8 of net additional GVA generated for every £1 of KTP grant funding invested by sponsors.

- (ii) The higher and further education sectors in Northern Ireland fall under the remit of the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) which provides funding support in relation to teaching, research and knowledge exchange.

In terms of supporting the Higher Education sector's continuing engagement with businesses and the wider community, DEL currently provides around £4 million per annum of underpinning, core funding through its Northern Ireland Higher Education Innovation Fund (NI HEIF).

Just one of the roles of NI HEIF is to support the universities' innovation and enterprise offices to provide practical assistance to academics and businesses to enable the development of high quality, competitive, proposals to KTP and to other important innovation initiatives.

With respect to KTP, both Queen's University and Ulster University have been highly successful. Queen's consistently tops the UK league table with respect to KTP awards and Ulster has recently moved up to sixth position out of 106 registered knowledge providers in the UK.

NI HEIF is complemented by DEL's Connected programme, an initiative supporting universities and further education colleges to work together for the benefit of local businesses. Currently funded at £1.1 million per annum, Connected also plays an important role in the promotion of KTPs and has been instrumental in encouraging the first college based projects.

Despite the wider cuts to the Higher Education budget, DEL has been able to protect NI HEIF and Connected, in recognition of both programmes' particular relevance and importance to the local economy. By taking the strategic decision to do this, DEL is safeguarding the ability of the universities to deliver KTPs and other business-facing activities.

On the Further Education side, DEL has increased the budget for the Employer Support Programme from £2 million in 2014/15 to £3.2 million in 2015/16 to implement and deliver a new strand of the programme, Skills Focus. This reaffirms the commitment of the Department to deliver training to businesses, enabling them to engage in innovation, upskill the workforce and gain qualifications.

Skills Focus, which was introduced in April 2015, aims to support, promote and facilitate collaborative working between business and FE colleges, in order to provide tailored skills provision to small and medium sized enterprises with fewer than 250 employees. The purpose of Skills Focus is to meet business needs by increasing the skills levels and employability of the existing workforce to qualifications at level 2 and above.

The other strand of the Employer Support Programme, InnovateUs, is designed to encourage and promote opportunities for small businesses and FE colleges to work together. In particular, the focus of the programme is to enable small businesses, with fewer than 50 employees, to acquire the skills necessary to engage in innovation activities and research and development across the business and underpin the development of these skills; promote progression in this area; and enable businesses to undertake additional and further forms of innovation, which will contribute to their growth and development, as well as increasing Further Education's role in economic development.

As with the Higher Education sector, this investment in the Further Education sector by DEL will serve to underpin the environment in which programmes such as KTP can flourish.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether the Board of Governors and management of St Mary's University College, Belfast approved the terrorist tribute at St Mary's University College and, if so, on what date. (AQW 49847/11-16)

Dr Farry: As my Department does not hold this information you may wish to write to St Mary's University College directly on this matter.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how many departmentally funded Further and Higher Education facilities have hosted tributes to terrorism in any form during his tenure to date, including that displayed at St Mary's University College, Belfast, shown per financial year.

(AQW 49921/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department does not hold information on displays in Further and Higher Education Institutions.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning (i) whether his Department is the biggest funder of St Mary's University College, Belfast; and (ii) to detail which other bodies provide additional funding, broken down by percentage of gross funding.

(AQW 49967/11-16)

Dr Farry: In the 2013-14 academic year the single largest source of income for St Mary's was Government Grants which made up 53% of its total income. 99.4% of Government Grants were provided by my Department with the balance coming from the Department of Education.

My Department does not hold information on which other bodies provide funding to the University College.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the action he is taking to ensure that there is a neutral working environment at St Mary's University College, Belfast.

(AQW 49968/11-16)

Dr Farry: All third level institutions are required to have shared and inclusive environments. My Department highlights, in the annual grant letters, the responsibility of individual institutions to adhere to the relevant legislation.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) the total contracts awarded to private enterprises engaged in training and recruitment in each of the last 5 years; and (ii) the value of contracts currently held by private enterprises engaged in training and recruitment.

(AQW 49975/11-16)

Dr Farry:

- (i) The total number of contracts awarded to private enterprises engaged in training and/or recruitment in each of the last five years is as follows:

Period	Total number of contracts
1 October 2010 – 30 September 2011	2
1 October 2011 – 30 September 2012	5
1 October 2012 – 30 September 2013	7
1 October 2013 – 30 September 2014	3
1 October 2014 – 30 September 2015	4
Total	21

- (ii) The outstanding value of contracts currently held by the Department for training and/or recruitment as at 26 October 2015 is approximately £205 m. The providers for these large contracts are a mixture of Private Enterprises and Public Bodies. Of the 91 suppliers, 75 are private enterprises.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning (i) whether Steps 2 Success takes preference over other projects which provide opportunities for young people to gain qualifications; and (ii) to give his assessment of the challenges posed for young people who are currently participating on other programmes and who are required to participate in Steps 2 Success.

(AQW 50169/11-16)

Dr Farry:

- (i) Steps 2 Success (S2S) is my Department's main employment programme. Eligibility for S2S is determined by the type of benefit which a client receives, the length of time on benefit and the client's barriers to employment.

S2S provides a personalised, tailored service to meet individual needs. This service, which may include a qualification, is underpinned by Service Guarantees to ensure all participants get the support they need.

Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) claimants, aged 18 to 24 years old, are required under the Jobseeker's Allowance (Schemes for Assisting Persons to Obtain Employment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014, to participate on S2S when they have been in receipt of that benefit for nine months. JSA claimants who are referred to S2S must attend and participate on the programme in order to maintain their entitlement to benefit. S2S, therefore, takes precedence over other employability programmes which are not mandatory.

- (ii) Where a JSA claimant reaches their S2S eligibility point and is participating on another programme, my Department's Employment Service Advisers can consider deferring the S2S referral. This deferral can be up to 90 days and should allow the client time to complete the programme they have started and, where possible, move into employment. This deferral should remove any challenge to young people completing other programmes when they reach the required trigger point to participate on S2S. Clients will be referred to S2S at the end of the deferral period if they have not found employment and are still claiming JSA.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how the individual needs, circumstances and capabilities of young people on Jobseeker's Allowance are assessed so that they are directed onto programmes which develop skills and provide qualifications in the most appropriate way for them.

(AQW 50172/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department, through the Employment Service, provides a tailored one to one service available to all clients including young people on Jobseeker's Allowance, the aim of which is to identify and work to overcome barriers to employment. Employment Service Advisers deliver this tailored service in our network of 35 frontline Jobs & Benefits offices and JobCentres across Northern Ireland, applying a Work Readiness Toolkit at each interview. Using this Toolkit, an adviser discusses and considers a wide range of personal circumstances with individual clients including:

- work history, qualifications, skills, strengths and abilities; and
- realistic employment goals in relation to local labour market needs;
- job search activity and skills;
- any barriers preventing them from securing sustainable employment and the areas of need which should be addressed, e.g. caring responsibilities, health issues;
- the elements of provision available to overcome any barriers identified and any specialist assistance required.

Having gathered this information, advisers are able to assess a client's employability and subsequently, what activities may be required to improve his/her employability and ultimately, to move him/her into sustained employment.

The Employment Service works closely with the Careers Service, referring individuals who would benefit from additional help.

My Department's Careers Service offers impartial and personalised advice and guidance on an all-age basis, provided by professionally qualified advisers. Their aim is to support individuals to make informed decisions about the opportunities available in education, training and apprenticeships to help them fulfil their potential, leading to rewarding and sustained employment. Professionally qualified careers advisers are based in Careers Resource Centres, Jobs & Benefits offices and JobCentres throughout Northern Ireland.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how he plans to support employees at the Michelin factory in Ballymena to ensure that they find other employment ahead of the plant's closure.

(AQW 50262/11-16)

Dr Farry: It is deeply regrettable that Michelin is proposing to close its production facility in Ballymena by mid 2018, with the potential loss of 860 jobs. Your constituency of North Antrim will be one of several affected by the announcement.

To date I have met with the Minister for the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and Invest Northern Ireland to discuss this issue and together we will be meeting with local senior management of Michelin on Friday 6 November. Following that meeting we will also be meeting with Mid and East Antrim Borough Council representatives including the Mayor, the Chief Executive and the Economic Development Officer.

My officials will follow up with Michelin to advise them in more detail of the services available through my Department for those who are working in the plant and may become redundant when it closes.

I will ensure that, over the coming months, my Officials work closely with the company to manage the closure process and ensure that the best advice, help and support are offered to all those affected employees at the appropriate time.

This can include access to my Department's Redundancy Advice Service where the Employment Service will work in partnership with the Social Security Agency, Further Education Colleges, HMRC and other agencies. This may centre on alternative job opportunities, mentoring, access to training courses, entrepreneurship, education opportunities and careers advice as well as a range of other issues such as benefits and taxation for Michelin employees. This service is delivered free of charge to the company and employees facing redundancy.

My staff in Ballymena Jobs and Benefits Office will be identifying a dedicated team to provide immediate advice and support should any of the employees facing redundancy require immediate assistance. This will include guidance on initiatives and programmes, help with jobsearch, job clubs, writing CVs, job application forms, preparing for interviews, careers guidance or assistance with travel costs for interviews.

The further education sector, in particular the Northern Regional College (NRC) with support from the five other colleges, has a key role in providing assistance to individual employees. My officials and I will ensure that NRC maintains regular contact with Michelin so that employees are made aware of the assistance that the colleges can provide.

As I am sure you know, NRC is a centre of excellence in engineering, and has worked with companies such as Michelin and JTI Gallaher to provide a range of courses to their employees. The college's business support unit has also had experience in supporting previous redundancies in their area, including FG Wilson, and they are currently working with JTI Gallaher to assist staff due to be made redundant next year.

I chair the Advanced Manufacturing and Engineering Services Working Group, and I will ask members to consider if any of their current or future vacancies will be suitable for any of the skilled Michelin staff.

I will also call upon the wider engineering sector to consider the Michelin workforce in any current or future job opportunities that they may have.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the investment by Invest NI in East Londonderry, excluding any investment provided to Ulster University, since 2011.

(AQW 48286/11-16)

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Between 1st April 2011 and 31st March 2015, Invest NI offered assistance worth £10.55 million to businesses located in the East Londonderry constituency area. This support led to a total investment in the area of £44.22 million and does not include assistance offered to the University of Ulster.

Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether any of his departmental responsibilities have been affected by the actions of any proscribed organisations since 2011.

(AQW 48301/11-16)

Mr Bell: None.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether there are any plans to introduce a productivity target for businesses.

(AQW 48338/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Executive's economic priority is to improve economic competitiveness in order to create employment and prosperity. Research carried out to inform the development of the Executive's Economic Strategy indicated that it is exposure to external markets that drives productivity improvements in individual businesses and in regional economies such as Northern Ireland.

That is why the Economic Strategy very clearly puts export-led economic growth at the centre of our ambitions. We are doing this by pursuing greater investment in Research & Development and Innovation, by developing our skills base and by supporting local SMEs to develop supply chain linkages.

I believe that achievement of the long term objectives of the Economic Strategy will improve Northern Ireland's economic competitiveness and help lead to convergence with the UK economy on a range of key indicators including productivity performance.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of the recent cuts to the public sector and the resulting reduction in aggregate demand, whether discussions have taken place on measures aimed at increasing private sector spend; and whether the Department of Finance and Personnel have been involved in these discussions.

(AQW 48339/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Executive's Economic Strategy sets out a long term vision to rebalance the NI economy to create a larger and more export-driven private sector.

Departments across the Executive are making significant progress in implementing their Economic Strategy commitments. It is this activity that will, in the longer term, improve the competitiveness of the local economy and deliver higher levels of sustainable growth and prosperity.

The Executive Sub-Committee on the Economy is responsible for monitoring progress in implementing the Economic Strategy actions and will later this autumn publish its third annual monitoring report. The progress reports from years one and two are available on the following links:

- <http://www.northernireland.gov.uk/ni-economic-strategy-first-annual-monitoring-report-2013.pdf>
- <http://www.northernireland.gov.uk/nies-second-annual-monitoring-report-2014.pdf>

The Economic Strategy was designed as a living document to be reviewed and refreshed to meet changing economic conditions. The Executive Committee for the Economy, which I chair, will begin the process of reviewing and refocusing the Northern Ireland Economic Strategy, to set out the key drivers for growing the Northern Ireland economy now that local economic conditions are improving.

A key component in this process will be Corporation Tax which has the potential to transform the local economy, drive job creation and boost living standards. Securing and implementing the powers to lower the rate of Corporation Tax remains a key priority for the Executive to promote the growth of the private sector and I have been working closely with the Minister for Finance and Personnel and other Executive Ministers to help make this happen.

I believe that having control of this power, and subsequently lowering the rate, could enable the rebalancing of the local economy towards greater private sector led and value added growth more quickly than if we were solely reliant upon those policy levers which are currently available.

The refocused Economic Strategy will include actions and targets which will seek to maximise the anticipated benefits of a lower rate of Corporation Tax in Northern Ireland in an affordable manner, subject to the Executive meeting the conditions in the Stormont House agreement.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what consultations will take place in the next year on facilitating growth in small and medium sized enterprises.

(AQW 48340/11-16)

Mr Bell: In line with the development of the next Programme for Government, DETI and its bodies, as part of their corporate planning process, will be consulting and engaging with local stakeholders and businesses to communicate high level strategic priorities for the period 2016-2021. These priorities will be key in driving the future growth and development of our local businesses, including our vibrant SME base.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) to detail the set sub-regional level job-related targets for Invest NI; (ii) whether these targets were met for 2014/15, and (iii) whether they are due to be met in 2015/16.

(AQW 48372/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Northern Ireland Executive's Programme for Government focuses on job creation for Northern Ireland as a whole and does not include sub-regional targets. As Invest NI's targets flow from the Programme for Government its job creation targets are also focused on Northern Ireland as a whole.

However, in terms of local economic development, Invest NI continues to work closely with councils to support them to develop and grow their local economy. In support of this Invest NI has been named as a statutory partner in the Community Planning process and will actively work with the councils to develop and grow plans for each council area.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what progress has been made on introducing contestability for electricity grid connections.

(AQW 48406/11-16)

Mr Bell: On 31 July 2015 the Regulator published a decision paper on the framework for delivery of contestability which can be accessed at the following link:

http://www.uregni.gov.uk/uploads/publications/Contestability\_in\_Connections\_-\_final\_decision\_paper\_-\_July\_2015.pdf

The decision paper sets out those activities which are considered contestable and non-contestable. The Regulator proposes to introduce contestable arrangements on a phased approach, initially targeting some large scale connections in early 2016.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much is being paid annually in fees, or otherwise, to the Joint Supervisors of the Presbyterian Mutual Society administration.

(AQW 48423/11-16)

Mr Bell: The fees paid to the Joint Supervisors in the year to 31 March 2015 was £1,044,184 as published in the Society's Accounts. The level of fees paid in each year is dependent on the level of work undertaken by the Joint Supervisors in that year.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to (i) the express terms of the Scheme of Arrangement approved by the High Court in respect of the Presbyterian Mutual Society bail out; (ii) the express terms of the letter of 29 March 2011 from his Department to the administrator; (iii) the express terms of SR 2011 No. 142; and (iv) the repeated affirmations in the Assembly, answers to Assembly Questions and in the press to the effect that the £25m from HM Treasury was a gift and not a loan, why this £25m is now classified as a loan to be repaid; and to whom will it be repaid and to whose benefit.

(AQW 48424/11-16)

Mr Bell: I refer to the answer to AQW 44074/11-15 which explained that the £25 million supplied by HM Treasury is being treated by the Presbyterian Mutual Society in its accounts as a liability to be repaid to the Department; it is not a repayment to HM Treasury. This is also consistent with the answer to AQW 4144/11 which confirmed that the Northern Ireland Executive is not required to repay the £25 million to the Treasury but that did not mean that the funds provided to the Society are not to be repaid. The treatment of the £25 million complies with the relevant legislation.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of new and existing Social Enterprises that have received support from the Social Enterprise Employment Grant scheme since 2013, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 48477/11-16)

Mr Bell: Twenty three new and existing social enterprises have received Social Enterprise Employment Grant assistance under The Jobs Fund since the 1st April 2013. The breakdown of groups by Parliamentary Constituency Area (PCA) is as follows:

PCA	Social Enterprises	PCA	Social Enterprises
Belfast East	1	Lagan Valley	3
Belfast North	1	Newry and Armagh	3
Belfast South	4	North Antrim	1
Belfast West	2	North Down	1
East Antrim	1	South Antrim	3
East Londonderry	1	Upper Bann	1
Foyle	1

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of new and established Social Enterprises that have received support through Invest Northern Ireland's Social Entrepreneurship Programme since its inception, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 48478/11-16)

Mr Bell: Invest NI's Social Entrepreneurship Programme (SEP) ran from January 2013 until July 2015. During that time 253 new and established groups from the community and voluntary sectors have participated on the programme. The breakdown of groups by Parliamentary Constituency Area (PCA) is as follows:

PCA	Groups that received SEP support	PCA	Groups that received SEP support
Belfast North	21	North Antrim	10
Belfast South	24	Foyle	17
Belfast East	11	East Londonderry	14
Belfast West	31	Mid Ulster	17
Lagan Valley	13	Fermanagh & South Tyrone	11
North Down	6	Newry & Mourne	27
South Down	8	West Tyrone	14
South Antrim	3	Upper Bann	4
East Antrim	16	Strangford	6

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the number of quarries that supply Greywacke; and (ii) the tonnage they extract annually.

(AQW 48487/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Department does not hold this information.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on his Department's exports strategy.

(AQW 48500/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Executive's Economic Strategy clearly identified that the route to economic success would come through a renewed focus on export-led economic growth and this remains a key priority for the Executive going forward.

My Department, working with Invest NI and IntertradeIreland has therefore developed a draft Action Plan, 'Export Matters – Enabling the Conditions for Increasing External Sales and Exports in Northern Ireland'.

Export support providers, economists, Chambers of Commerce and local businesses helped shape the final Action Plan following a period of engagement earlier this year.

I have recently received comments from the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Committee and my Department's Economic Advisory Group on the draft Action Plan and a final Action Plan will be published in due course.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what practical or financial support he can give to large scale manufacturers in North Antrim in relation to energy costs.

(AQW 48502/11-16)

Mr Bell: Invest NI provides a range of support for businesses to assist with the management of energy costs and for the deployment of renewable energy to help reduce operating costs. This support includes technical advice, action plans and project management support to help businesses implement the most cost effective cost saving opportunities. This technical consultancy covers all areas of resource efficiency including energy.

Invest NI also provides funding for the Energy Efficiency Loan Fund in Northern Ireland which is managed and delivered by Carbon Trust. The Fund offers interest-free loans from £3,000 - £400,000 to Northern Ireland businesses to help them install more energy efficient equipment.

Invest NI also supports process efficiency improvement identification and implementation that may also have a positive impact on energy costs.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the (i) date; (ii) times; and (iii) attendees of the Executive Sub-Committee on the Economy.

(AQW 48503/11-16)

Mr Bell: The table below outlines the dates, times and attendees for each meeting of the Executive Sub-Committee on the Economy, from its establishment in 2010 to the latest meeting in 2015.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the capital investments being undertaken by his Department in South Belfast.

(AQW 48549/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department is undertaking the following Capital investments in South Belfast:

- It is expected that the Belfast Waterfront Hall Conference & Exhibition Centre will receive £11.7 million financial assistance in 2015-16 through Tourism NI.
- Invest NI offers a range of Capital support to businesses across Northern Ireland. This includes Capital grant assistance, property assistance, and a suite of access to finance funds providing debt and equity funding to support business growth and development. Details on Invest NI's Capital investment in 2015-16 disaggregated to constituency level will not be available until after year end results are announced.
- During 2015-16, DETI will be investing to further enhance the Northern Ireland telecommunications infrastructure through the Broadband Improvement Project and Superfast Roll-Out Programme. While postcodes within the South Belfast constituency are included in the intervention area for these projects, it is not possible to disaggregate the level of investment by constituency.
- The Renewable Heat Incentive Scheme provides Capital assistance to domestic properties across Northern Ireland. While Energy Division has not allocated any funding to individual constituencies, the scheme is available to properties located in the South Belfast area. From 1 April 2015 to 11 September 2015, Capital grant of £320 has been provided in respect of domestic renewable heat installations in South Belfast.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) the amount spent to date on the second north/south Interconnector; (ii) any individual, organisation or company that has received more than £30,000 in total over the lifetime of the project since its inception; (iii) how much each of these companies received; and (iv) what is the anticipated total project cost based on the current plans.

(AQW 48573/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department does not hold this information. The project developers, SONI and EirGrid, currently estimate total capital costs to be around €300million.

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether there any plans to improve broadband supply and connection for the BT25 2HD postcode area.

Mr Bell: I would refer the Member to the reply to AQW 46573/11-15.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) whether Executive approval would be required for his Department to issue a consent to install a second north/south interconnector under Article 40 of the Electricity (NI) Order 1992; (ii) at what stage of the process would he need to request such approval; and (iii) what alternatives his Department, along with NIE, SONI and Eirgid, are exploring in the event that Executive support for an overhead interconnector is not forthcoming.

(AQW 48683/11-16)

Mr Bell: No Executive approval is required for consent under Article 40 of the Electricity (Northern Ireland) Order 1992 for this or any other line which falls within the provisions of the Article.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the knowledge economy in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 49167/11-16)

Mr Bell: The recently published Knowledge Economy Index shows that for the second year running Northern Ireland has the second fastest growing knowledge economy in the UK. The Knowledge Economy now plays a key role in driving economic growth and prosperity in Northern Ireland. It makes up 5% of the economy and directly employs nearly 38,000 people. These employees earn 50% more than the average Northern Ireland salary and the companies have sales of over £4.4 billion, with 85% of those outside of Northern Ireland.

While I very much welcome the findings of the report, much more work remains to be done to transform the Northern Ireland economy into one that is truly knowledge based. Central to that is encouraging and supporting many more of our companies to engage in innovation and collaboration. The Northern Ireland Innovation Strategy sets out a range of actions designed to achieve this and my Department continues to work with a range of key stakeholders such as the Northern Ireland Science Park, our Universities and Colleges and the private sector to deliver this.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline any stimulus packages in place to assist the sustainable growth of small and medium sized enterprises.

(AQW 49168/11-16)

Mr Bell: Invest NI presently offers a wide range of financial and non-financial support packages to assist the sustainable growth and development of SME businesses. Indeed as the vast majority of Northern Ireland's business base are SMEs (over 99% of NI's total business base), Invest NI's operational approach is specifically tailored to meet their needs. In 2014/15, 91% of Invest NI's offers for support were made to SMEs and 93% of the businesses supported by Invest NI were SMEs.

Broadly, Invest NI's support is focused across five key areas:

- Starting a Business;
- Growing a business;
- Maximising Efficiencies;
- Product Development; and
- International Trade and Investment.

Invest NI's support programmes aim to assist the sustainable growth of SMEs by offering access to finance and property support and helping them to embrace and exploit Research and Development, Innovation, Skills Development, Resource Efficiency, eBusiness and Trade & Export assistance.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline his Department's investment in South Down in each of the last 5 years.

(AQW 49173/11-16)

Mr Bell:

** Reflects the amount invested in telecommunications projects across Northern Ireland. It is not possible to disaggregate expenditure on a constituency basis due to the nature of the projects.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how periods of Ministerial absence impact on his Department's effectiveness.

(AQW 49175/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department continued to plan for and deliver on the policies and measures that I had previously approved. When occasions arose where an urgent Ministerial decision was required, I had set in place arrangements to ensure that this was managed effectively.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions he has had, or plans to have, about increasing the direct connections from Belfast International and George Best Belfast City airports, in particular to Istanbul and Bodrum.

(AQW 49181/11-16)

Mr Bell: Officials in my department and Invest NI are in regular dialogue with all of Northern Ireland's airports and airlines to help bring new air services to Northern Ireland and to promote existing services.

However, while under development these discussions are of a commercially sensitive and confidential nature.

As a major hub airport, a direct service to Istanbul would provide access to a wide range of key emerging tourism and exports markets.

Should such a service be introduced to Northern Ireland, my officials and Tourism Ireland would work with key stakeholders to highlight and promote this route in key markets overseas.

My predecessor met the Turkish Ambassador on his last visit to Northern Ireland to discuss a range of issues including air connectivity.

I must also note that we will be hosting Routes Europe in Belfast in 2017 which provides an opportunity to bring influential decision makers into the region and that this conference has the potential to accelerate route development for both Belfast and Northern Ireland. Routes Europe is also a chance to showcase all that there is on offer here for airlines, tourists, businesses and potential inward investors with the likely attendance of over 1,200 delegates including representatives from the region's leading airlines and airports, tourism authorities and other key industry stakeholders.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what impact the current instability is having on his Department's ability to attract foreign investment.

(AQW 49182/11-16)

Mr Bell: Invest NI has experienced considerable success in promoting Northern Ireland as a location that can meet the needs of international investors. The business proposition, based on a skilled workforce, competitive operating costs and advanced infrastructure in a strategic location, has not changed. There is no evidence to suggest that any potential investors have changed their plans as a result of the current political situation.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether plans exist to attract cross-border tourism by extending the Wild Atlantic Way.

(AQW 49184/11-16)

Mr Bell: Both the Causeway Coastal Route and the Wild Atlantic Way are signposted, where one route ends and the other begins – inviting visitors to continue their journey.

The Causeway Coastal Route and the Wild Atlantic Way are both currently promoted alongside each other in Tourism Ireland's marketing campaigns in its twenty three markets overseas. Car touring holidays are an important feature of Tourism Ireland campaigns, as research shows that visitors who come here by car, or who hire one while here, tend to tour more widely, stay longer and spend more.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions he has had with airlines on the provision of direct routes between Belfast International Airport and German-speaking Europe.

(AQW 49185/11-16)

Mr Bell: Both myself and my officials have met with a number of airlines to explore opportunities for improving our air access to key markets. Direct access to Germany in particular is a priority, however discussions about specific air routes and airlines are of a commercially sensitive and confidential nature.

The recent announcement that Brussel Airlines will run a 5 day a week service from George Best Belfast City Airport to Brussels starting March 2016 is to be welcomed.

I must also note that we will be hosting Routes Europe in Belfast in 2017 which provides an opportunity to bring influential decision makers into the region and that this conference has the potential to accelerate route development for both Belfast and Northern Ireland. Routes Europe is also a chance to showcase all that there is on offer here for airlines, tourists, businesses and potential inward investors with the likely attendance of over 1,200 delegates including representatives from the region's leading airlines and airports, tourism authorities and other key industry stakeholders.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions he has had with airlines and airport management on improved air connections from Belfast International Airport to Scandinavia.

(AQW 49187/11-16)

Mr Bell: Both myself and my officials have met with a number of airlines to explore opportunities for improving our air access to key markets. Direct access to Scandinavia in particular is a priority, however discussions about specific air routes and airlines are of a commercially sensitive and confidential nature.

The recent announcement that Brussel Airlines will run a 5 day a week service from George Best Belfast City Airport to Brussels starting March 2016 is to be welcomed.

I must also note that we will be hosting Routes Europe in Belfast in 2017 which provides an opportunity to bring influential decision makers into the region and that this conference has the potential to accelerate route development for both Belfast and Northern Ireland. Routes Europe is also a chance to showcase all that there is on offer here for airlines, tourists, businesses and potential inward investors with the likely attendance of over 1,200 delegates including representatives from the region's leading airlines and airports, tourism authorities and other key industry stakeholders.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the support he is giving to the small and medium sized retail sector in relation to (i) business rates; (ii) reducing red tape; and (iii) planning.

(AQW 49188/11-16)

Mr Bell: The policy responsibility for retail presently cuts across a number of Departments including DETI, DSD, DRD, DOE and DFP. Support for business rates and planning is the responsibility of DFP and DOE respectively.

My Department has policy lead on better regulation on behalf of the Executive. The Executive is committed to reducing regulatory burden on all business, including the retail sector. Work is underway to develop a strategic approach across the Northern Ireland public sector which will provide an effective structure to move forward.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the effectiveness of joined-up Government in growing the economy.

(AQW 49190/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Northern Ireland Economic Strategy (NIES) was agreed by the Executive in March 2012 and includes commitments from all Government Departments. To date Departments across the Executive have been progressing their NIES commitments which has contributed to a positive shift in the Northern Ireland economy. This progress is outlined in the Northern Ireland Economic Strategy annual monitoring reports which can be accessed at the link below:

- <http://www.northernireland.gov.uk/ni-economic-strategy-first-annual-monitoring-report-2013.pdf>
- <http://www.northernireland.gov.uk/nies-second-annual-monitoring-report-2014.pdf>

The proposed restructuring of Government Departments will provide a further opportunity for more joined-up working across the Executive. The creation of a new Department for the Economy, for example, will better align the core economic functions under one Department.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the level of Government investment in the Agri-Food industry, in order to leverage investment from the industry, since 2013.

(AQW 49194/11-16)

Mr Bell: Since 2013 to date my Department, through Invest NI, has invested £33.77 million in food manufacturing businesses in the Agri Food industry. This has leveraged a total planned investment by the industry of £402.44 million.

Further investment of £5 million was offered to assist establish and operate a Competence Centre for the Agri Food industry to invest in Research & Development.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how employment and sales within the Agri-Food sector have increased since the launch of the Agri-Food Strategy in 2013; and whether employment and sales figures are on track to meet targets.

(AQW 49195/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Agri-Food Strategy Board's report, "Going for Growth" was launched on 16th May 2013, and set the following industry targets for sales and employment in the Agri-food sector. By 2020:

- Grow sales by 60% to over £7billion;
- Grow employment by 15% to over 115,000;
- Grow sales outside NI by 75% to £4.5billion.

DARD annually publish statistics on the "size and performance of the NI food and drinks processing sector", which are publically available to download from:

<http://www.dardni.gov.uk/size-and-performance-of-the-ni-food-and-drinks-processing-sector.htm>

The latest available figures relate to 2013, with provisional estimates for 2014:

- Turnover was £4.772billion in 2014, an increase of 5.8% on 2013.
- External Sales were £3.304billion in 2013, an increase of 11.1% on 2012.

In terms of employment, the Agri-Food Strategy Board's baseline assessment of employment of 100,000 in 2010 is composed of:

- Total Agricultural Labour Force;
- Employment in food and drink processing; and
- Employment in the wider economy linked to the agri-food sector, such as haulage, packaging, hospitality and tourism.

The latest available recorded figures from the DARD Agricultural Census in Northern Ireland 2014 indicate that:

- The Total Agricultural Labour Force was 47,900 in 2014, an increase of 0.2% on 2013.
- Direct Employment in Food and Drink Processing (Full-time equivalents) was 21,783 in 2014, an increase of 2.0% on 2013.
- No figures were available in respect of employment in the wider economy.

As the latest available figures relate to the year of, and the year following, publication of the AFSB's report, while it appears that performance is broadly on track to meet the AFSB's targets to 2020, a time series of data is not yet available to measure the impact of the AFSB's strategy on employment and sales.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how his Department is working with the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development to support Agri-Food businesses in East Londonderry.

(AQW 49196/11-16)

Mr Bell: Since 2013 my Department and Invest NI has been jointly working with the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development to support agri-food businesses across Northern Ireland.

In 2013 Minister Foster endorsed the recommendations in the Agri Food Strategy Board's "Going for Growth" report and Invest NI continues to work to support the delivery of these recommendations.

In 2014/15, Invest NI offered Agri-Food businesses in East Londonderry over £0.25 million of support towards a total planned investment of £0.9 million.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the prospects for attracting further inward investors to the Causeway Coast area, once the Enterprise Zone has been established in Coleraine.

(AQW 49280/11-16)

Mr Bell: Invest NI's International Investment Division is aware of the potential benefits of the Enterprise Zone designation and of the wider proposition in the Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council area. The team travelled to Coleraine on 2 October 2015 to meet with the Council and representatives of Ulster University and North West College. A number of local companies, both indigenous and externally-owned, also shared their experiences of doing business in the area.

The establishment of the Enterprise Zone would increase the marketing proposition for the region and may primarily favour capital intensive projects. While capital intensive projects tend to promote lower employment numbers, there would also be significant benefits in securing an anchor tenant, thereby creating a supply chain or enabler for other companies to locate in the area. For example, the proposed data centre investment could provide an incentive for other high tech businesses to locate in, or close to, the Enterprise Zone.

Invest NI will monitor the progress of the designation and will factor the benefits that it brings into the overall business proposition.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what action will be taken against former members of the NI Events Company board further to its significant failures; and what action will be taken to ensure such failures are not repeated by other boards.

(AQW 49355/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department has considered the report of the company inspectors on the Northern Ireland Events Company Limited. Subject to consideration of any responses to pre proceedings letters, which have issued to a number of board members, my Department presently considers it is expedient, in the public interest, to issue directors disqualification proceedings.

The Public Accounts Committee (PAC) will, in due course, produce a report on the Northern Ireland Events Company Limited to which the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) will formally respond in a Memorandum of Reply. My Department will consider carefully any recommendations made by the Public Accounts Committee which have been accepted by DFP and are relevant to boards of DETI's arm's length bodies.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment when he will bring forward a further closure order on the NI Renewables Obligation regarding off-shore wind developments.

(AQW 49468/11-16)

Mr Bell: Offshore generating stations which are located within Northern Ireland territorial waters receive Renewables Obligation Certificates issued under the Renewables Obligation (RO) for England and Wales. Closure of the RO in England and Wales has already been legislated for under the Renewables Obligation Closure Order 2014 (S.I. 2014 No. 2388). There are currently no offshore wind generating stations operating in Northern Ireland waters.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) why the Warm Homes Discount Scheme does not apply to local domestic electricity users; and (ii) what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change on bringing this scheme to Northern Ireland.

(AQW 49469/11-16)

Mr Bell: The GB and Northern Ireland Energy markets are different in a number of respects, most notably size. The GB scheme is paid for by a charge levied on all domestic customers in GB. The costs of implementing and administering a scheme in Northern Ireland similar to the GB Scheme would be disproportionately high given our small market size and would lead to higher bills for many customers, including, potentially, those in or close to fuel poverty.

My Department has discussed this issue at length with the Department of Energy and Climate Change and it has no plans to extend the GB scheme, which is in any event currently scheduled to finish this year, to Northern Ireland.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans are in place for the introduction of high speed broadband to the BT49 0QY area.

(AQW 49473/11-16)

Mr Bell: In February 2014, my Department contracted BT to deliver the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project (NIBIP) which will extend the availability of basic and superfast broadband to those who have limited choice across Northern Ireland, particularly in rural areas.

I can confirm that improvements are due to take place in the BT49 0** postcode area in the latter phases of the project with a completion date of 31 December 2015. Further details on the project can be found on the NI Direct platform at: <http://www.nidirect.gov.uk/index/information-and-services/leisure-home-and-community/technology-and-online-services/broadband-improvement-project.htm>.

Recognising that NIBIP will not deliver superfast broadband to all premises, my Department, in February 2015, awarded a further contract to BT for the delivery of the Superfast Roll-out Programme (SRP). This project will provide superfast broadband improvements for almost 39,000 premises across Northern Ireland by December 2017. An extensive survey and design process is underway and will take several months to complete. The post code area BT49 0** is included under the intervention area of this project. However, until the survey and design process is completed, it will not be possible to say which individual postcodes will benefit from the upgrades. Further details on roll-out will be published on the NI Direct platform when this becomes available.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what savings have been made by his Department within the 2015/16 budgetary allocations.

(AQW 49476/11-16)

Mr Bell: As part of the Budget 2015/16 allocations, my department made savings totalling £27.9 million.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the impact that the sale of The Bite Group to Adelle Foods Group will have on the local sandwich sector.

(AQW 49477/11-16)

Mr Bell: The purchase of Bite Snack Foods Ltd out of administration by Adelle Foods Group was reported to have taken place on Friday 2nd October 2015. In the short intervening period neither I, nor my officials in Invest NI, have had the opportunity to engage with representatives of Adelle to discuss their future plans. As such, an assessment of the impact on the local sandwich sector cannot be made at this time.

Invest NI officials hope to meet with representatives of Adelle in the near future.

In respect of support to companies within the local sandwich sector, Invest NI will continue to assess applications on a case by case basis and the potential for displacement will be rigorously challenged in line with the recommendations of the sector study.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what communications he, or his Department, has had with the Cerberus investment fund ahead of the sale of The Bites Group to Adelle Foods Group.

(AQW 49478/11-16)

Mr Bell: Invest NI has had no communication with the Cerberus investment fund in relation to the sale of Bite Snack Foods Ltd to Adelle Foods Group.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the support provided by Invest NI to The Bites Group prior to its sale to Adelle Foods Group; and whether Invest NI will be seeking to recoup this investment.

(AQW 49479/11-16)

Mr Bell: In the last five years Invest NI has offered Bite Snack Foods Ltd a total of £153,382, £145,882 of which has been drawn down by the company.

Invest NI has calculated that the amount recoverable from Bite Snack Foods Ltd, which includes interest, is £194,268 and will pursue clawback of the total amount through all available channels.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the current status of the moratorium that was in place to prevent lignite being mined in North Antrim.

(AQW 49480/11-16)

Mr Bell: The moratorium on Mineral Prospecting for Lignite has expired. DETI is continuing to work towards launching a public consultation exercise on a revised policy on lignite and a proposal for a new moratorium that would extend to cover both prospecting and extraction.

DETI's stated policy on lignite is that the lignite deposits near Ballymoney and around Lough Neagh (Crumlin, Coagh) are mineral resources of strategic importance to Northern Ireland which should be protected, so far as is practical, from undue sterilisation from surface development.

Whilst the formal moratorium has expired the above Departmental policy continues to apply and will remain in place until the public consultation exercise has been completed and the outcomes are known.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the events that he has (i) hosted; and (ii) attended since coming to office which were aimed at assisting dairy farmers who are receiving below farm gate prices.

(AQW 49489/11-16)

Mr Bell: Since coming to office I have hosted and/or attended the following events specifically involving the dairy industry:

14 May 2015	Ulster Bank Lunch - Balmoral Show
20 May 2015	Meeting with Tony O'Neill, Chair of Agri-Food Strategy Board
05 June 2015	Meeting with representatives of Dairy Council NI to discuss the effects of the declining milk price on the dairy supply chain and to discuss the Dairy Council's Third Country Export Programme.
08 June 2015	Hosted a dinner for inward buyers from the Far East as part of the Dairy Council's Third Country Export Programme.
17 June 2015	BDO Agri Food In Camera Dinner
09 July 2015	Jointly hosted, with DARD Minister, a meeting with the Agri-Food Strategy Board
02 September 2015	Official opening of Lakeland Dairies' new £8m Global Logistics Centre based at L.E. Pritchitt Ltd in Newtownards.
07 September 2015	Hosted a second dinner for inward buyers from the Middle East as part of the Dairy Council's Third Country Export Programme

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what consideration he has given to linking Northern Ireland's renewable energy subsidies with the subsidy mechanism in the Republic of Ireland on the ending of the Renewable Obligations Certificates.

(AQW 49496/11-16)

Mr Bell: My predecessor issued a discussion paper on the implementation of Contracts for Difference (CFD) in Northern Ireland in March. This paper highlighted the key balance to be drawn between further support for new renewable development under the UK wide CFD scheme and costs to consumers.

Given the UK Government's manifesto commitment to stop any future subsidies for onshore wind, it is sensible to take account of DECC's expected announcement on the matter in due course. This will enable the Northern Ireland Executive to decide whether the CFD scheme should be extended to Northern Ireland, and my Department to consider other options, as necessary.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what proportion of the land bank held by Invest NI is within a flood plain or is otherwise limited due to environmental factors.

(AQW 49675/11-16)

Mr Bell: A majority of Invest NI's land holding was inherited by the agency from the Industrial Development Board and as such it does not hold the requested information across the entirety of its property portfolio.

The organisation is however aware of an area within its Woodside Road Industrial Estate which prevailing planning policy has determined is within a floodplain. This has not adversely impacted Invest NI's ability to attract investment to the Ballymena area.

Environmental factors such as the potential for land to flood have been an important consideration for Invest NI in respect of any capital projects it has taken forward. Recent developments, such as those in Newry and Strabane, have taken full account of proximity of watercourses both prior to acquisition and through the design and planning process to maximise their potential for economic development.

Where floodplain areas are identified Invest NI will work closely with stakeholders to ensure an appropriate outcome can be achieved.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline his Department's plan to support the continued development of small scale wind and household solar projects following the closure of the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation.

(AQW 49699/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation provides a 20 year commitment of support to renewable generation and will continue to do so up to 2037. This is likely to further increase the level of renewable electricity to close to 30% by 2020.

The Department of Energy and Climate Change (DECC) has recently consulted on a review of the GB small scale Feed-in Tariff (FIT) scheme, but do not propose to extend small scale FITs to Northern Ireland. The outcome of this consultation, along with DECC's expected announcement on onshore wind allocations in the Contracts for Difference (CfD) scheme, will inform future policy direction in Northern Ireland.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) to detail the percentage of wind turbines that are owned by individuals, farmers and communities; (ii) whether any targets exist for the extent to which renewable energy ought to be owned by individuals, farmers and communities; and (iii) how Northern Ireland's performance compares with Germany, where over 65 per cent of the turbines and solar panels are owned by individuals, farmers and communities.

(AQW 49700/11-16)

Mr Bell:

- (i) The Department does not hold information on the breakdown of ownership of wind turbines in Northern Ireland.
- (ii) There are no targets in relation to renewable energy ownership.
- (iii) As at (i) above.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether he is aware of any contracts secured by Harland and Wolff Shipyard over the last twelve months.

(AQW 49701/11-16)

Mr Bell: In the last 12 months Harland and Wolff has executed a number of projects including a very significant mobile offshore drilling rig contract within the Oil & Gas sector. The aforementioned project ran from January 15 to July 15. The company has also continued to successfully execute projects in the general Ship Repair, Fabrication and Engineering sectors throughout 2015.

Notwithstanding the challenging market conditions in the Oil & Gas and Offshore Renewable sectors for all UK fabrication facilities, the company continues to actively seek out opportunities in these sectors, however, given commercial sensitivities it would be not appropriate to comment further on individual opportunities. Despite an extremely competitive situation in the general Ship Repair sector, the company has secured contracts going forward for Quarter 4 2015 and into 2016.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list all engagements he attended and the work he carried out as Minister between 9 and 14 October 2015.

(AQW 50010/11-16)

Mr Bell: I met with senior Departmental officials to discuss and clear urgent Departmental business.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of the early closure of the Renewables Obligation scheme, what support mechanisms are being put in place for farmers that have invested in planning applications, grid connection or wind turbines but whose application is unlikely to meet the new deadline.

(AQW 50031/11-16)

Mr Bell: Consultation on the closure of the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation Scheme to onshore wind in 2016 ended on 14 October 2015. Following consideration of the large number of responses received I will publish my decisions in due course.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of the closure of the Renewables Obligation scheme, what support mechanism will be put in place for small engineering works who have commenced production of wind turbines or their components which are unlikely to be installed as the farmers' applications are unlikely to meet the new deadline.

(AQW 50032/11-16)

Mr Bell: Consultation on closure of the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation to onshore wind ended on 14 October 2015. Following consideration of the large number of responses received I will publish my decisions in due course.

Invest NI is happy to assist any company in this sector to explore other potential market opportunities.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the discussions he has had with the Department of Energy and Climate Change on the early closure of the Renewables Obligation scheme.

(AQW 50033/11-16)

Mr Bell: Both I and my officials have been in dialogue with the Secretary of State for Energy and Climate Change and her Department since the general election. These discussions concern the implications for Northern Ireland of her policy to close the Renewables Obligation (RO) scheme to onshore wind in 2016. My aim has been to obtain the best outcome for Northern Ireland by maximising the amount of installed onshore wind capacity for least cost to the consumer. I recently consulted on proposals which secure a later eligibility date for Northern Ireland projects compared to those in Great Britain and do not involve additional costs for Northern Ireland consumers. I am currently considering the responses to the consultation.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, given that the Department of Energy and Climate Change will extend the Renewable Obligation grace period for projects on the grounds that had a correct or timely decision been made by the planning authority, such projects would have met the grace period criteria announced on 18 June, whether such provisions will be extended to local projects.

(AQW 50044/11-16)

Mr Bell: Consultation on the closure of the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation Scheme to onshore wind in 2016 ended on 14 October 2015. Following consideration of the large number of responses received I will publish my decisions in due course. In making my response I will take account of any conditions introduced in Great Britain.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the findings contained within the research paper on the contribution of small businesses to Northern Ireland, produced by the Federation of Small Businesses, the Ulster University SME Centre and the Ulster University Business School.

(AQW 50061/11-16)

Mr Bell: I welcome the report on the contribution of small businesses to Northern Ireland, produced by the Federation of Small Businesses (FSB) and the Ulster University SME Centre. I am particularly pleased with the findings that suggest that four in every five small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) here intend to grow over the next two years.

The important contribution that SMEs already make to the Northern Ireland economy, particularly in terms of employment and turnover, is well established. This work reaffirms that vital contribution while also providing a further useful insight in to the concerns of business. I look forward to seeing the promised work, by the FSB, to capture the findings of this and other research and turning it into policy recommendations and solutions.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether any financial termination packages have been paid, or will be paid, to any Special Advisers in consequence of ministerial resignations in his Department since September 2015.

(AQW 50079/11-16)

Mr Bell: The severance payment criteria for Special Advisers are contained in the 'Code Governing the Appointment of Special Advisers'. It is the responsibility of each Department to implement the policy within the Code and to calculate and arrange any severance payments due from their budgets.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many of his departmental staff have a registered disability, broken down by (i) full time equivalent; and (ii) as a percentage of the workforce.

(AQW 50118/11-16)

Mr Bell: As of 26 October 2015 a total of 17 DETI staff have a registered disability.

This equates to 14.46 Full Time Equivalent staff and 3.25% of the departmental workforce.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the (i) average time; and (ii) longest time taken by his Department to respond to a Freedom of Information request since 2012.

(AQW 50147/11-16)

Mr Bell: The details requested are (i) 41 working days and (ii) 717 working days.

These figures include permitted extensions to the Department's statutory deadline for reply.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the amount of Renewables Obligation Certificate payments by his Department in each of the last six years; and the amounts paid to the wind industry in constraint payments in each of the last six years.

(AQW 50154/11-16)

Mr Bell:

- (i) My Department does not make ROC payments to generators. ROCs are issued by Ofgem to generators which are then sold to electricity suppliers. Table 1 sets out the approximate value of ROCs issued to renewable electricity generators in Northern Ireland in each financial year since 2009/10. Figures for 2014/15 are not yet available.

Table 1: Approximate values of ROCs issued

Year	Approximate value of ROCs issued (£m)
2009/10	33
2010/11	32
2011/12	53
2012/13	56
2013/14	86

- (ii) Information on constraint payments made to the wind industry in each of the last six years is not readily available.

Department of the Environment

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 49017/11-16, for an estimation of (i) the waste permitted to be dumped at the site under the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999; (ii) the amount of unauthorised materials deposited on the site between 1995 and 2006; and (iii) what checks were undertaken to ensure his Department's other regulatory requirements were being met before the Northern Ireland Environment Agency granted this consent in 2002.

(AQW 49881/11-16)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): NIEA has not estimated the quantities of waste deposited at the site.

The regulation of the deposit of waste in 2002 was carried out by Local Councils under the Pollution Control and Local Government Order 1978.

W & J Chambers Ltd applied for consent to discharge to underground stratum at 91 Glenshane Rd, Drumahoe, Londonderry on 8 October 2002. NIEA (then EHS) consulted with Derry City Council on the application on 20 May 2003. Derry City Council did not respond to the consultation. NIEA therefore took the nil return to be no objection to the application and proceeded to grant the discharge consent on 14 October 2003 to underground stratum in respect of an inert landfill restricted to Category A waste types listed in Schedule 1.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how much of Unconventional Gas Exploration and Extraction Research Programme will be carried out by (i) the Shale Gas Industry, CDM Smith or AMEC Foster Wheeler; and (ii) academic institutions, broken down as a percentage of tasks.

(AQW 49920/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Given the multidisciplinary approach to many of the tasks and the robust internal review process involving more than one organisation for many of the tasks; it is not possible to provide a breakdown along the lines you have requested.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment whether (i) he or his Department has extended Ireland's Environmental Protection Agency's statutory immunity from prosecution to Northern Ireland through the Northern Ireland Environment Agency or Department's involvement in the all Ireland Unconventional Gas Exploration and Extraction Research Programme; and (ii) any results of the Unconventional Gas Exploration and Extraction Research Programme, any procedural malpractices, any misuse of public funds, or any bias can be fully challenged in the local courts.

(AQW 49929/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I am currently seeking legal opinion on your question and I will provide a substantial reply in due course.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant AQW 49247/11-16, whether an email was received by departmental staff titled unregulated meters in regulated vehicles, accompanied by a still photograph taken by an on board video system of the vehicle in question.

(AQW 49962/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I can confirm that the Driver & Vehicle Agency received an email and a still photograph on 29 September 2015 in respect of unregulated meters in regulated vehicles. This matter is now the subject of follow up investigation by the Agency's Compliance and Roadside Enforcement Section.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment (i) whether planning permission is required for upgrading an existing mobile mast; and (ii) what consideration has been given to making the planning process more efficient for upgrades .
(AQW 49984/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Whether planning permission is required for upgrading an existing mobile mast will depend on the circumstances and particulars of any such proposal.

While planning permission is generally required for the upgrading of existing mobile phone masts, in certain circumstances operators can avail of permitted development rights under Part 18 of the Schedule to the Planning (General Permitted Development) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015 to upgrade existing masts without the need to submit a formal planning application.

In April 2013 my Department extended the scope of these permitted development rights to include the replacement or extension of an existing mast previously erected following grant of planning permission and the installation, alteration or replacement of antenna on an existing mast, providing it does not extend the mast above 10% of its original permitted height. There are also a number of other conditions and limitations, which if met mean planning permission is not required.

I have instructed my officials to work to consider options to further extend permitted development rights for telecommunications development. Any proposal to emerge from this will be aimed at enhancing the ability of code system operators to undertake necessary works as quickly as possible without having to go through the formal planning process, while at the same time ensuring that amenity and wider environmental safeguards are in place.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the (i) capital; and (ii) resource costs associated with digitisation and online services within his Department and its arm's-length bodies in each of the last three years.
(AQW 50059/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The reply is on the basis that:

- "digitisation and online services" refers to "citizen facing digital services";
- the last three years are 13/14, 14/15, 15/16 year to date;
- the costs are actual costs incurred in each of the financial years and not whole life costs for the systems.

Planning Service, NIEA, Carrier bag levy and DVA were the only areas within DOE to indicate costs associated with digitisation and online services.

NIEA

Capital costs for NIEA's online forms are nil to the agency. No Capital costs were incurred in this period. Subsequent costs for setting up additional forms were met by the Cabinet Office's GOV.UK Programme.

Natural Environment Division's return was Nil capital costs and minimal resource staff costs worked out at an average of one application per week administered by an Administrative officer:-

- 2013/14 £20.33
- 2014/15 £20.33
- 2015 to date £11.73

Resource Efficiency Division's return was nil for 2013/14, nil for 2014/15 and nil for the financial year to date.

NIEA Summary

An average of one application per week administered by an Administrative officer has been taken as an estimate of the resource effort and is summarised below:

- 2013/14, nil capital costs and £20.33 resource costs
- 2014/15, nil capital costs and £20.33 resource costs
- 2015/16, nil capital costs and £11.73 resource costs

Planning policy division

The provision of planning policy consultations pilot was conducted in 2013/14 with a nil capital return but resource costs of £20,825 to run a proof of concept on online policy consultations.

Planning Service

The main planning portal system that is used in the processing of planning applications has been developed prior to and in preparation for the move of planning to councils has developed a more online presence for viewing and consultations on planning applications:

Capital costs

Date	Cost
2013/14	£85,214.00
2014/15	£320,375.00
2015	£59,530.00
Total	£465,119.00

Resource Costs

Resource costs were Nil as changes were part of change projects through the Planning service managed service contract with HP.

Driver and vehicle Agency

The online booking service for practical driving tests and vehicle roadworthiness (MOT) tests was introduced in January 2007 to further enhance the range of booking channels available to customers. All support costs for the service are recovered within the booking fee. The costs of the service in each of the last three years are provided in the table below:

Year	Costs (Support)
2013/14	£105,773.20
2014/15	£113,180.20
2015/16 *	£63,397.20

Carrier Bag Levy

The carrier bag levy system was developed in house by DOE ICT staff and therefore incurred no capital cost. The Resource costs associated with the development of the online system is outlined below:-

Year	Costs (Support)
2013/14	£10,583
2014/15	£69,848
2015/16*	£73,884

* As profiled until 31st March 2015

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of the Environment what action his Department is taking to tackle the growth of giant hogweed.

(AQW 50067/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department's Alien Invasive Species Team provide advice and guidance on all aspects of Giant Hogweed Management, however, they do not carry out herbicide spraying on behalf of members of the public.

An Invasive Alien Species Strategy for Northern Ireland (2013-2016) has been published, and one its main objective is to reduce the risks associated with the growth and spread of established IAS such as Giant Hogweed.

My department, in conjunction with the National Parks and Wildlife Service in the Republic, jointly manage the Invasive Species Ireland website, which provides guidance on the control and management of a range of IAS including Giant Hogweed.

My department engaged with Queen's University Belfast (QUB) to support a £2.6 million Interreg IV project - Controlling Priority Invasive Non-native Riparian Plants and Restoring Native Biodiversity (CIRB), which ran from 2011-2014. CIRB sought to eradicate IAS including Giant Hogweed on trial River Catchments in Northern Ireland including the Newry Canal/Clanry River in the South East and the River Faughan in the North West.

The NEF (Natural Environment Fund) previously referred to as the NIEL Challenge Fund, has supported the Conservation Volunteers (TCV) in the Upper Ballinamallard River Project to manage several IAS including Giant Hogweed. Conservation Volunteers have also been funded, via the NEF, to widen this project to Lough Macrory, An Creggan Drumduff Bog, Owenkillew/Mourne/Strule Rivers and a 10 hectare site in Gortin. The Lough Neagh Alien Invaders Project included Giant Hogweed control in their widely publicised campaign and The Lough Erne Invasive Species Group has controlled Giant Hogweed in waterways in Co Fermanagh since 2006.

Mrs Pengelly asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) when he received the submission in relation to GM crops; (ii) the recommendations in the submission from officials; and (iii) whether the submission from officials indicated that this was an issue that required Executive approval.

(AQW 50104/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The GM crops submission was received in my Office on 28 August 2015. It asked me to confirm that I wished to exercise a transitional opt-out under EU regulations and prohibit the growing of GM crops that are already in the EU approvals' pipeline. It also asked me to agree to officials working with their colleagues in the South to see if a common approach would be feasible for a longer-term opt-out.

The submission indicated that Executive consideration would not be necessary. However, it noted the interest of Minister O'Neill, advised that she shared my views on this issue, and recommended that I should write to her as a courtesy to inform her of my decision.

Mrs Pengelly asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the cost implications included in the submission from officials on GM crops.

(AQW 50105/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The submission did not include any cost implications.

Mrs Pengelly asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) when he made a decision on GM crops; (ii) his reasons for the decision; and (iii) whether the reasoning behind his decision has been recorded by his Department.

(AQW 50106/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I made my decision on 6 September.

Mindful of the fact that none of the varieties in question was commercially attractive to growers here, and therefore my decision would have no practical implications for those growers, I considered it prudent to exercise the opt-out and prohibit cultivation of these crop varieties.

In reaching my decision I took into account the relatively small size of many agricultural holdings here and the potential difficulties in trying to keep GM and non-GM crops separate in the absence of effective coexistence measures. I considered that the costs of doing so could potentially be significant and, in many cases, totally impractical. I was also concerned that the growing of GM crops could potentially undermine our international clean and green image. As Minister with responsibility for our natural environment and rich biodiversity, this was something which I could not ignore.

My decision has been recorded by my Department.

Mrs Pengelly asked the Minister of the Environment whether he sought any legal advice on GM crops, including legal advice from the Departmental Solicitor's Office.

(AQW 50107/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I have responsibility for all matters relating to the deliberate release of GM material into the environment, including the growing of GM crops. I did not seek any legal advice on this matter.

Mrs Pengelly asked the Minister of the Environment whether he requested advice on GM crops from the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development or the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment.

(AQW 50108/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I did not seek the views of the DARD Minister as my officials were aware from contacts with their colleagues in that Department that she shared my views on this particular issue. Mindful that the GM maize varieties in question were not commercially attractive to growers here, and that my decision would therefore have no practical implications for those growers, I saw no need to consult any other Minister, including the DETI Minister. However, as Minister O'Neill had an interest in the subject, I wrote to her as a matter of courtesy to inform her of my decision.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 35491/11-15, (i) whether Queen's University Belfast remains a part of this consortium; and if not, (ii) to detail (a) when they stopped being part of the consortium; and (b) why they are no longer undertaking this research.

(AQW 50120/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Queens University Belfast was originally a partner in the UGEE research consortium but due to resource constraints they were unable to fulfil their allocated tasks. However they remain part of the consortium's internal peer review process for the joint research programme.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 48916/11-16, whether the Court of Appeal and Supreme Court rulings on Champion-v-North Norfolk District Council has any bearing on how his Department must apply the Planning Environmental Impact Assessment Regulations.

(AQW 50121/11-16)

Mr Durkan: This question raises legal issues and refers to an English Case which was eventually before the Supreme Court. It would, therefore, not be appropriate for me to comment or to offer opinions on matters of the legal interpretation.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the reintroduction of the Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme. (AQW 50124/11-16)

Mr Durkan: In April 2015 Her Majesty's Treasury introduced a retrospective Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme (ALCS). The Scheme was a result of an agreement with the European Commission that the original ALCS would be fully compatible with the EC Treaty State Aid guidelines if it was retrospectively applied to allow other Member States to apply for the reduced levy. Without a retrospective scheme, Northern Ireland quarry operators who received ALCS rebates would be expected to repay these rebates that could amount to tens of millions of pounds. The scheme enables eligible businesses that imported aggregate into Northern Ireland from other Member States between 1 April 2004 and 30 November 2010 to claim payments equal to the amount of tax credit they could have claimed had they been able to participate in the original ALCS. The Department is administering the certification part of the scheme.

Her Majesty's Treasury is also engaging with the Northern Ireland quarry industry to seek evidence for the European Commission in order to determine if a new ALCS can be approved by the Commission under the current Environmental Aid Guidelines. The financial incentive created by the original ALCS was successful in providing a mechanism to deliver significant environmental improvements at quarry sites. By building on the lessons learned from the original scheme, the Department would continue to work together with the quarry industry in any new scheme to help create prosperity and well-being through environment and heritage excellence.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 48918/11-16, whether (i) his Department sought to use only on-shore sites to validate the issuance of Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme certificates after his Department determined that it could not issue certificates due to the unauthorised nature of the extraction from Lough Neagh Special Protection Area; and (ii) the Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme files indicate this is the case. (AQW 50125/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The answer to both parts of this question is no. The Department processed Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme (ALCS) applications in accordance with the procedures and comply with relevant legislation. Only applications relating to Lough Neagh onshore sites were received and processed. As no applications were received for sand extraction on Lough Neagh, no determinations were made on the issue of certificates.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment (i) for an up-date on the internal departmental review he ordered into the handling of the Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme; and (ii) whether this relates to Lough Neagh or the whole of Northern Ireland. (AQW 50152/11-16)

Mr Durkan: In my response to AQW 47079/11-15 I confirmed the application conditions and issue of Aggregates Levy Credit Scheme (ALCS) certificates to the operators extracting sand from Lough Neagh would be reviewed. A review has now been carried out relating to Lough Neagh sites. This review has shown that certificates were issued in line with the application process and they complied with the relevant legislation, the Aggregates Levy (Northern Ireland Tax Credit) Regulations 2004 and the Finance Act 2001.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment (i) to detail the reasons behind his decision to use call in procedures to retain a small number of hydroelectric schemes; (ii) whether it is departmental policy to use procedures and resources in this way given the applications were minor; and (iii) given a notice of opinion to refuse was issued, whether these applicants were afforded the same rights as applicants whose cases were transferred to local councils, in terms of the Planning Appeals Commission having the authority to make a decision at appeal. (AQW 50153/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I have previously advised of the rationale for retaining planning applications from my answers to AQW 43674/11-15 and AQW 43674/11-15. This applied to all applications not just those relating to hydroelectric power development.

These applications were retained under the provisions of the Planning (2011 Act) (Commencement No. 3) and (Transitional Provisions) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015. I did not therefore exercise the call in procedures under Section 29 of the Planning Act (NI) 2011. They will however be determined under Section 29 of the Act.

The retention of applications was to assist the transfer of planning powers. Decisions on which applications to retain were taken on a case by case basis and there were a broad range of applications retained. It should be noted that the applications had always been processed in Strategic Planning Division.

I do not consider that in retaining a small number of applications that this has given rise to any potential prejudice to interested parties. An applicant has the right to request a hearing before the Planning Appeals Commission (PAC). However the final decision will rest with the Department and in reaching that decision, account must be taken of the PAC report.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of reported incidents of river or sea pollution in North Down, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50158/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Table A provides the total number of recorded river and sea pollution incidents in North Down in each of the last five years and the approximate costs to NIEA.

Table B provides a breakdown of the level of severity assigned to those recorded pollution incidents.

Table A:

Year	Total Pollution Incidents	Cost to NIEA
2010	39	£5990
2011	41	£6306
2012	33	£5075
2013	40	£6152
2014	36	£5537

Table B:

Year	High Severity	Medium Severity	Low Severity
2010	0	4	35
2011	1	13	27
2012	0	4	29
2013	0	3	37
2014	1	4	31

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the cost of river or sea pollution incidents in North Down, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50160/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Table A provides the total number of recorded river and sea pollution incidents in North Down in each of the last five years and the approximate costs to NIEA.

Table B provides a breakdown of the level of severity assigned to those recorded pollution incidents.

Table A:

Year	Total Pollution Incidents	Cost to NIEA

Mrs Pengelly asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) when he received the submission in relation to the decision on the arc21 Residual Waste Treatment Project; (ii) the recommendations in the submission from officials; and (iii) whether the submission from officials indicated that this was an issue that required Executive approval.

(AQW 50173/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I received a report, recommendation and submission from my officials in relation to the planning application on 22 July 2015. The recommendation was that a Notice of Opinion to approve should be issued. The submission also indicated that there was no need to consult with the Executive Committee.

Mrs Pengelly asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the cost implications included in the submission from officials in relation to the decision on the arc21 Residual Waste Treatment Project.

(AQW 50174/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The report and recommendation from my officials addressed the planning merits of the case. I can advise that no details of potential cost implications were included in the submission from my officials.

Mrs Pengelly asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) when he made a decision in relation to the arc21 Residual Waste Treatment Project; (ii) his reasons for the decision; and (iii) whether the reasons for his decision have been recorded by his Department.

(AQW 50175/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I advised officials of my decision to refuse the application on 21 September 2015.

Having considered the views and fears expressed by third parties and elected representatives, including the potential health implications from pollutants in stack gases, ashes and other residues, pollutants from increased traffic and heavy vehicles and the transport of toxic fly ash to and from the site, I was not convinced that the proposal would not result in an adverse impact on human health.

Furthermore, I am committed to a policy of zero waste and have worked hard with councils to increase recycling rates. I want this to continue. This development could have resulted in an increased market for waste disposal and to maintain a facility such as this, in addition to the other approved waste facilities, could discourage recycling. In that context I did not consider there to be any need for this proposal.

My officials have recorded the reasons for my decision and those reasons form the basis of the Notice of Opinion to refuse planning permission that subsequently issued to the applicant and to Antrim and Newtownabbey Borough Council on 23 September 2015.

Mrs Pengelly asked the Minister of the Environment whether he sought any legal advice on the arc21 Residual Waste Treatment Project, including legal advice from the Departmental Solicitor's Office.

(AQW 50176/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Any legal advice sought or provided in relation to the exercise of my responsibilities is subject to professional privilege and consequently I am unable to say whether I did or did not seek legal advice on the arc21 Residual Waste Treatment Project.

Mrs Pengelly asked the Minister of the Environment, given the impact on secured Financial Transactions Capital, whether he requested advice on GM crops from the Department of Finance and Personnel.

(AQW 50177/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I did not seek any advice on GM crops from the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail whether funds have been made available to the Department of Justice and to the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to pay retired fire and police officers that were affected by the revaluation of commutation of pensions payments between 2001 and 2006.

(AQW 49507/11-16)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): I discussed this issue with the Chief Secretary to the Treasury earlier this year and was able to convince him that the cost associated with making payments to the affected individuals should not be met by the Executive, rather it should be met by HM Treasury via the Annually Managed Expenditure budget.

Departments have now provided details of the additional funding required and Budgets will be adjusted accordingly.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) capital; and (ii) resource costs associated with digitisation and online services within her Department and its arm's-length bodies in each of the last three years.

(AQW 49775/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The costs incurred on the transformation and delivery of citizen facing digital services within my Department over the last three years are set out in the table below. These figures include actual costs in digitally transforming the service, provision of websites, infrastructure and hosting, maintenance and staff costs. The figures for 2015/16 are based on expenditure for the year to date.

Year	Capital (£)	Resource (£)
2013/14	2,558,156	6,747,742
2014/15	1,185,802	7,777,800
2015/16 (to date)	0	3,912,560

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what action she will take following the recent findings contained within the Federation of Small Businesses' study on The contribution of SMEs to Northern Ireland.

(AQW 49924/11-16)

Mrs Foster: I note the findings of this report and in particular the survey results which indicate that respondents want a reduction of business rates and corporation tax, better broadband provision, more help with online/marketing activity, better availability of skilled staff, a reduction in bureaucracy and regulation, a VAT reduction, and action to address late payments.

Business rates and Corporation Tax fall within my areas of responsibility. You will be aware of my strong position on lowering Corporation Tax. This of course requires broader agreement on budgetary issues if we are to put our finances on a sustainable footing to enable the transfer of these powers. In terms of rates, my Department is currently reviewing the whole non domestic system and will be out to public consultation until the 25 January 2016. A copy of the consultation paper can be found in the link below for your consideration.

<https://www.dfpni.gov.uk/consultations/review-northern-irelands-non-domestic-rating-system>

I have a genuinely open mind about the issues and am interested in new ideas to improve the current system and any alternatives that might present themselves. The review is not concerned with raising more money as broadly speaking we already pay rates at similar levels to other parts of the UK; it is about how we spread the burden. The rating system, however, is about raising a set amount of revenue for the Assembly and our Councils each year and in essence it is a distribution mechanism. This inevitably means that any changes to reduce what some groups or sectors pay will result in either someone else paying more or more cutbacks in public spending. This was clear having heard the views from business organisations, including FSB, represented at the 4 day policy symposium organised by DFP in June this year.

You may also be aware that in 2014, the Ulster University's Centre for Economic Policy (UUCEP) undertook an extensive evaluation of Small Business Rate Relief. That report concluded that the scheme should be retained for a further year (2015/16) prior to being phased out as economic conditions improve. Indeed the main criticism of the scheme was that despite its popularity, it provided little economic benefit in terms of increased employment or additional investment. There was also little evidence to suggest that it made a significant difference to business survival rates during the recession. The report also suggested that if a replacement for the scheme was to be considered, it should take a more targeted approach focusing on economic growth, to ensure value for money is maximised.

Any proposals to replace the current scheme will be taken forward as part of a separate consultation and include input from the Department of Finance and Personnel, Department for Social Development as well as the Department for Enterprise, Trade and Investment.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether Special Advisers, in post since before 30 July 2007, are eligible for a final salary pension scheme.

(AQW 49930/11-16)

Mrs Foster: On 1 April 2015, all members of the Civil Service final salary pension scheme arrangements moved to the new career average pension scheme, unless they met certain conditions for full or tapered protection. Civil Service Pensions produced a Q&A to keep staff informed on the introduction of the new scheme. Further details are available at:

<https://www.dfpni.gov.uk/sites/default/files/publications/dfp/pension-reform-in-the-nics-q-a-2.pdf>

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) on how many occasions; and (ii) on what dates departmental officials met with the National Crime Agency to discuss the sale of the National Asset Management Agency's Northern Ireland portfolio.

(AQW 49942/11-16)

Mrs Foster: My officials have been liaising with the National Crime Agency (NCA) on an ongoing basis since the launch of its investigation in July 2015.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether solar farms are rateable.

(AQW 49950/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The generation of electricity from any renewable source, including solar farms, will be rateable where the installed capacity of the plant is greater than 50 Kilowatts. Where the installed capacity is 50 Kilowatts or less, the premises are exempt from rates under Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 as amended by The Rates (Microgeneration) Order (Northern Ireland) 2012.

Rates are determined on the basis of Schedule 12 of the Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977. The basis of assessment is the notional rental value of the property, known as the Net Annual Value, as at 1st April 2013.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an estimate of the change in the number of self-employed people in each constituency, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50084/11-16)

Mrs Foster: Official estimates of the number of self-employed people are sourced from the Labour Force Survey. The Labour Force Survey is a sample survey and is primarily designed to provide labour market information at the Northern Ireland level. Official statistics on the number of self-employed are available at the Northern Ireland and regional NUTSIII level (see Table 1).

Table 1 Number of self-employed (16+) by regional NUTS III area, 2010-14

	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
Belfast	13,000	9,000	*	10,000	13,000
Outer Belfast	20,000	16,000	21,000	20,000	21,000
East of Northern Ireland	34,000	29,000	26,000	27,000	30,000
North of Northern Ireland	18,000	22,000	20,000	17,000	20,000
West & South of Northern Ireland	39,000	41,000	33,000	36,000	38,000
Northern Ireland	124,000	117,000	105,000	109,000	121,000

Source: Labour Force Survey, Local Area Database

Notes:

Figures are rounded to the nearest thousand and as a result may not sum to totals.

*Sample size is too small to provide a reliable estimate.

Official statistics on the change in the number of self-employed by constituency are not currently available from the Labour Force Survey due to the wide statistical margins of error associated with such estimates at this level of disaggregation.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 49637/11-16, to detail the breakdown, by year, of the reason agricultural rate relief was removed on these occasions.

(AQW 50116/11-16)

Mrs Foster: As detailed in AQW 49637/11-16, over the last three and a half years this agricultural allowance on rating valuations has been removed in respect of 3,848 properties. It would require a prohibitively expensive and time consuming investigation of Land & Property Services systems and records in order to detail the reason for the removal on each individual property.

The valuation allowance is removed when the occupation of a property no longer complies with the eligibility criteria as set out in the Rates (NI) Order 1977. As already advised, this can be for a variety of situations including where: the property has been demolished; the property is incapable of beneficial occupation; the property is vacant; or the property is no longer occupied by someone primarily engaged in agricultural operations.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether civil servants on an official career break are eligible to leave the Civil Service via the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

(AQW 50126/11-16)

Mrs Foster: I can confirm that permanent NICS staff on career break, or those staff who by 2nd March 2015 had agreed a career break date due to commence within the 2015/16 financial year, were eligible to apply to leave the NICS under the terms of the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for a breakdown of any investment, including capital, her Department has made in West Belfast since May 2011.

(AQW 50138/11-16)

Mrs Foster: My Department's investment, including capital, in West Belfast, since 2011-12 is set out in the table below.

Year	Current £'000	Capital £'000
2011-12	189	-
2012-13	332	-
2013-14	293	-
2014-15	183	80

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what liaison has taken place with other Departments and agencies to ensure full involvement with the Cycle to Work Scheme.

(AQW 50159/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The Cycle to Work Scheme is now an established NICS wide scheme with designated contacts in each department. It was re-launched in February 2014 and continues as an open ended scheme available to all civil servants.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how many civil servants on official career breaks have been offered the opportunity to leave the Civil Service under the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

(AQW 50166/11-16)

Mrs Foster: A total of 240 offers have been made to staff on career breaks in tranches 1, 2 and 3. 157 have accepted from tranche 1 and tranche 2. The closing date for acceptances under tranche 3 is 30 October 2015.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of referrals for assessment for an autism spectrum disorder; and (ii) the total number of suitably qualified and trained staff employed to undertake referrals in each Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last four years.

(AQW 45193/11-15)

Mr Wells (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety):

- (i) Table 1 overleaf contains the number of referrals received for an assessment for autism spectrum disorder (ASD) at year ending 31st March in each of the last four years by Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust.
- (ii) Table 2 overleaf contains the total number of suitably qualified and trained staff employed to undertake referrals for children in each Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last four years at 31 March. Table 3 contains the same information for those undertaking referrals of adults.

Table 1: The number of referrals for an assessment for ASD by HSC Trust at year ending 31st March (2011/12 – 2014/15)

Please note these figures have not been validated by the Department;

The Belfast HSC Trust were unable to provide headcount figures, their diagnostic staff include Paediatricians, Psychologists, Occupational Therapists, Speech and Language Therapists and the Child and Adolescent Mental Health Service; The Northern HSC Trust was unable to provide figures for 2012–2014 for staff employed to undertake referrals of children for ASD, figures for these years recorded by the Trust excluded the medical input which was not dedicated resource at the outset but was part of the core service. Therefore recorded figures for these years are not directly comparable with current figures; WTE for staff in the Western Trust are employed to take referrals for both ASD assessment and intervention

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether Health and Social Care Trust contingency plans enacted in 2015/15 will continue into 2015/16.

Mr Wells: Some of the contingency plan measures implemented in 2014/15 will continue into 2015/16. Savings proposals will be subject to consultation, as appropriate. Details of both the 2014/15 contingency plans and Trusts' savings plans for 2015/16 are already in the public domain.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many patients have received Pharmedgen treatment, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, in the last three years.
(AQW 46040/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: No patients have received Pharmedgen treatment in Northern Ireland in the last three years.

At 29th October 2015, there were no patients waiting to receive Pharmedgen treatment at the Royal Victoria Hospital immunology department.

Belfast Trust has advised that funding is available for Pharmedgen and the Trust will work with HSCB colleagues to implement the service as soon as is practically possible.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients on waiting lists for Pharmedgen treatment at the Royal Victoria Hospital immunology department.

(AQW 46041/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: No patients have received Pharmedgen treatment in Northern Ireland in the last three years.

At 29th October 2015, there were no patients waiting to receive Pharmedgen treatment at the Royal Victoria Hospital immunology department.

Belfast Trust has advised that funding is available for Pharmedgen and the Trust will work with HSCB colleagues to implement the service as soon as is practically possible.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any costs associated with following the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence guidance for the last three years.

(AQW 46104/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The estimated additional cost of following NICE guidance in secondary care for 2012/13 was £10.2m with an additional £14.9m in 2013/14 and a further £16m in 2014/15.

It is not possible to estimate the additional costs of following NICE in primary care as the specific drugs are used for many other non -NICE indications and expenditure is not available for NICE and Non NICE indications separately.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he will publish his Department's Guidance on Termination of Pregnancy in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 46210/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I intend to bring revised Guidance before Executive .

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the number of late or outstanding payments for day care centres providing day care for people with learning difficulties or disabilities through a Trust contract.

(AQW 46448/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Updated information on the number of late or outstanding payments for day care centres providing day care for people with learning disabilities through a Trust Contract is set out in the table below.

Trust	Number of late or outstanding payments for Trust-contracted day centres, providing day care for people with learning disabilities.
BHSCT	62 outstanding invoices at a value of £7,216.36.
NHSCT	No late or outstanding payments.
SEHSCT	No late or outstanding payments.
SHSCT	The Trust is unable to provide details retrospectively of those invoices which were late or outstanding.  Most payments to day care providers are paid via a monthly block contract sum in-month. A small number of providers submit invoices which are approved and paid as promptly as possible.
WHSCT	No late or outstanding payments.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the benefits to care provision following the development of regional and Health and Social Care Trust projects by the Health and Social Care Board.

(AQW 46751/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I attended the second Regional Integrated Care Partnership Workshop and saw for myself the benefits that Integrated Care Partnerships (ICPs) bring to local care provision.

The Partnership Committees, that oversee the work of each of the 17 ICPs, report an improvement in integrated working amongst the healthcare providers involved with improved outcomes for patients and service users.

The detailed work to improve local implementations of regional services for the four ICP priority areas (Frail Elderly, Respiratory, Stroke and Diabetes) undertaken by the specialist Multi Disciplinary Teams in each ICP has produced a number of service changes and innovations. Examples include:

- Improvements in Patient and Care Professional Education
- Improved support for self management by those with Long Term Conditions
- Provision of Acute Care at home for selected treatments
- Enhanced Primary Care Respiratory Service

- Provision of Rapid Access Respiratory Assessment Clinic
- Provision of Multidisciplinary Diabetic Footcare Team and Pathway

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what evaluations were conducted into ADD-NI programmes which informed his decision to cease funding; and their outcome.

(AQW 46806/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: ADD- NI continues to receive core grant funding from my Department.

I intend to consult publicly on proposals for a new Innovation Grant Scheme, which will be open to all voluntary and community sector organisations. The Scheme will be established on a co-design basis. A Scheme Design Team has been established and pre-consultation engagement workshops are currently being held across Northern Ireland. The Scheme will seek to help us deliver key health and social care aims and will have innovation at its heart. It will replace my Department's existing Core Grant Scheme, which will come to an end in March 2018. To minimise the impact on organisations core grant funding will be withdrawn over a three year period. Subject to satisfactory applications being received, all organisations will receive their full allocations in this financial year. However, reductions will be applied in each of the following two years through to the closure of the scheme.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of referrals by each Health and Social Care Trust to ADD-NI in each of the last three years; and (ii) what alternative exists following the cessation of funding to ADD-NI by his Department.

(AQW 46883/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The Belfast, South Eastern and Northern HSC Trusts avail of the services of ADD-NI. The number of referrals by each Health and Social Care Trust to ADD-NI in each of the last three years is not available. The Southern and Western HSC Trusts do not have contracts with ADD-NI.
- (ii) There has been no decision to cease funding to ADD-NI. ADD-NI has been awarded a grant of £25,000 in 2015/2016. Your AQW 46806/11-15 also refers.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the reasons behind his decision to withdraw funding for ADD-NI.

(AQW 46993/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I did not withdraw funding from ADD- NI and refer the Member to my answer to AQW 46806/11-15.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail all the strategies published or endorsed by his Department which are currently in effect or that will come into effect before the end of the current Assembly mandate.

(AQW 47278/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The DHSSPS strategies currently in effect and those subject to consultation are available on my Department's website.

Mr B McCreagh asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why his Department has withdrawn funding for the ADD-NI children's charity.

(AQW 47389/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I did not withdraw funding from ADD- NI and refer the Member to my answer to AQW46806/11-15.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 46728/11-15, whether he will make the report commissioned by the former Western Health and Social Services Board into a midwife led maternity unit for Omagh available to Members.

(AQW 47398/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: A copy of the feasibility study has been placed in the Assembly Library.

The feasibility study has no policy standing and has been superseded by additional evidence collected from across all Trusts to develop my Department's extant regional maternity strategy, 'A Strategy for Maternity Care in Northern Ireland 2012-2018'.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the survival rates for local women with ovarian cancer.

(AQW 47680/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Eurocare-V study conducted on cancer patients diagnosed in 2000-2007 indicated that survival from ovarian cancer in Northern Ireland was similar to that in the other UK countries.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the deficits each Health and Social Care Trusts are projecting for 2015/16.

(AQW 47719/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: All HSC organisations are required to deliver financial breakeven in 2015/16.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much each Health and Social Care Trust spent on Clinical Excellence Awards in the last five years.

(AQW 47771/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The cost of the awards over the past 5 financial years is detailed below. These include employer costs of between 25%-27%. No new awards have been made since the 2009/10 awards round; however, existing awards continue to be paid as a contractual obligation.

	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Belfast Health and Social Care Trust	£8,624,825	£7,219,753	£6,556,067	£6,160,907	£4,842,683
Northern Health and Social Care Trust	£1,319,240	£1,101,000	£946,000	£810,000	£834,740
Southern Health and Social Care Trust	£1,039,602	£875,006	£807,099	£794,495	£584,779
South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust	£1,416,209	£1,293,730	£1,208,524	£1,206,501	£1,115,175
Western Health and Social Care Trust	£1,201,128	£1,102,732	£973,018	£906,014	£740,282

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of local people with anorexia that have been referred for specialist treatment in England in each of the last three years; and (ii) the criteria that must be met in order to be considered for such treatment.

(AQW 47786/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

(i) The number of people referred to facilities outside of Northern Ireland for specialist treatment for an eating disorder in the last 3 years is detailed below. This figure includes all eating disorders, not just anorexia:

(ii)

Year	No of people referred outside of NI for eating disorder treatment
2012/13	8
2013/14	11
2014/15	15

(iii) Decisions on referral to specialist services outside of Northern Ireland are made on the basis of individual clinical need, in line with the criteria and procedures set out in my Department's 'Transfer of Mentally Disorder Patients' guidance (August 2011).

On 7 October, I announced that my Department will be examining the possibility of establishing a specialist eating disorders unit in Northern Ireland, and this work has commenced.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his proposals for reforming the Health Service.

(AQW 47813/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Shortly after taking up office as Minister, I visited the Belfast Cancer Centre on 21st May and I outlined my vision for a world class health and social care system for the citizens of Northern Ireland. The full version of my speech is available on the departmental website at <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/ccspeech210515>.

As indicated during the Health Committee evidence session on 1 July, I intend shortly to outline in greater detail how I believe we should proceed with reforming our health and social care sector to meet the challenges facing us now and in the future.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has spent on legal advice in the last financial year.

(AQW 47887/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Expenditure on legal advice in the last financial year (2014/15) is set out in the table below:

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what progress has been made on the development of Inflammatory Bowel Disease (IBD) medication.

(AQW 47910/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Research into new forms of drug therapies for use in the treatment of inflammatory bowel disease (IBD) continues to be conducted throughout the UK and internationally. The most effective group of drugs for the treatment of IBD, biologics, also known as anti-TNFs, are routinely available to patients in Northern Ireland and there is no waiting list for treatment.

Access to biologics is particularly good in Northern Ireland; recent statistics produced by Crohn's and Colitis UK show that the rate of prescribing of biologics following failure to respond to more conventional treatment is 69% set against 42% nationally, the next highest jurisdiction is England on 43%. Wales 36% and Scotland 28%.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the nature of the attack on the NI Ambulance crew attending to a patient in Cookstown on Sunday 28 June 2015; and whether the (a) ambulance crew sustained any injuries; (b) patient sustained any additional injuries; (c) ambulance was damaged and any estimated repair costs; and to detail (i) how long the ambulance will be out of service; and (ii) whether a second ambulance crew was required to take the patient to hospital.

(AQW 47958/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Details of the attack can be found in the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service HSC Trust press release at <http://www.nias.hscni.net/ambulance-crew-assaulted-attending-call-in-cookstown/>. The full information requested is not available due to possible legal action.

It is appalling that some members of the public should behave in this fashion and such attacks on ambulance service staff must not be tolerated.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much the Western Health and Social Care Trust has spent on legal advice in the last financial year.

(AQW 47972/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Expenditure on legal advice in the last financial year (2014/15) is set out in the table below:

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust spent on storing medical records at the Mallusk site in the last three financial years.

(AQW 47977/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust use sites at Mallusk and Craigavon for external records storage. It is not possible to separately isolate storage costs for medical records at the Mallusk site.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what legislation his Department plans to bring forward by the end of the current Assembly mandate.

(AQW 48062/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Mental Capacity Bill, Food Hygiene Rating Bill, and the Health and Social Care (Control of Data Processing) Bill have already been introduced in the Assembly and are progressing through their various stages.

It is also the intention, subject to the Speaker's agreement, to introduce the Health and Personal Social Services (Amendment) Bill and, subject to Executive agreement, to introduce the Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the waiting time for all elective operations have increased in the last twelve months.

(AQW 48090/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: At the end of June 2015, the most recent date for which official statistics are available, there were 60,127 patients waiting for inpatient admission to hospital in Northern Ireland, with an average waiting time of 18.1 weeks. This was an increase from the end of June 2014 when there were 50,330 patients waiting for inpatient admission, with an average waiting time of 12.4 weeks.

These figures include all patients waiting for 'inpatient admission', both day case and ordinary admissions, and will include a number of patients waiting to undergo a diagnostic scope procedure.

Information on inpatient waiting times is published quarterly and is available online at:

<http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/statistics/hospital/waitingtimes/waitingtimes-inpatient.htm>

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the terms of reference for his Department's Regional Leadership Group's vision document scheduled to be published in Autumn 2015.

(AQW 48096/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: No such group exists.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service will be subjected to any in-year cuts.

(AQW 48145/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Whilst, my Department continues to face significant financial challenges, there are currently no plans for further in-year reductions to the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service budget in 2015/16.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to every temporary contingency measure announced by each Health and Social Care Trust in October 2014, (i) for an update on the status of every measure; (ii) how much longer any on-going temporary measure will continue; (iii) how much each measure saved in the remainder of 2014/15; and (iv) how much each measure has saved to date in 2015/16, broken down by each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 48167/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: An answer could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the services provided at Bangor Hospital. (AQW 48207/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Bangor Community Hospital provides a range of health, social and primary care services which includes:

- Outpatient Clinics for diabetes, rheumatology, ENT, gynaecology, dermatology, pain, family planning, sexual health, respiratory, stroke, wound management and continence;
- A range of assessments, treatments and interventions delivered by healthcare professionals; physiotherapists, occupational therapists, podiatrists, speech and language therapists and dieticians;
- Minor Injuries Unit available 9 am to 5 pm 5 days per week;
- X-ray Department 9 am to 5 pm week day service; and,
- Fostering, Early years and Adoption service for North Down and Ards.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the findings of the consultation into Children's Palliative and End of Life Strategy, which closed in March 2014, will be published.

(AQW 48269/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I hope to be in a position to publish the final Children's Palliative and End-of-Life Care Strategy along with the findings of my Department's consultation later this year.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 45649/11-15, when this report will be brought to the Assembly.

(AQW 48277/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department has worked with the Health and Social Care Board and the Public Health Agency to prepare a progress report on the 99 proposals outlined in the 2011 report 'Transforming Your Care: A Review of Health and Social Care in Northern Ireland'.

I expect to be able to provide an update to the Northern Ireland Assembly shortly.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 47516/11-15, to detail why there has been a reduction in the number of hip operations in the Western Health and Social Care Trust since 2011/2012, given the number of patients awaiting these operations has increased.

Mr Hamilton: The reduction in the number of hip replacement operations in the Western Trust area is in part explained by the fire and flood which occurred in December 2012, which resulted in the temporary closure of more than half of the elective orthopaedic ward in Altnagelvin Hospital. Unscheduled trauma procedures and variation in the complexity of each individual case also contributed to the reduction. The Western Trust in common with other HSC Trusts manages their elective orthopaedic waiting list patient's treatment on a clinical priority and chronological basis.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what investment is planned for local paediatric cardiac care as part of the all island restructuring of services.

(AQW 48318/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I have made £1.2m available this year to facilitate the establishment of the service model recommended by the International Working Group, including the implementation of the Belfast Trust's proposals for enhancing cardiac care locally. A Northern Ireland subgroup of the all-island Congenital Heart Disease Network Board is overseeing the implementation of these proposals locally, and is developing bids for the investment required. Developments being considered include an initiative to improve antenatal detection of congenital cardiac conditions, provision of equipment for patient transfers between Belfast and Dublin, and improvement of telemedicine links between Belfast and Dublin. The Belfast Trust has appointed an additional adult congenital cardiac surgeon, and plans to recruit an additional paediatric cardiologist, clinical physiologist and cardiac liaison nurse. The Trust is also developing options to accommodate a Specialist Children's Heart Centre as part of the all-island network.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given the cost associated with prescription drugs and the benefits connected with meditation, to detail any non-medicated measures in place to manage auto-immune conditions such as Multiple Sclerosis, Type 1 Diabetes and Rheumatoid Arthritis.

(AQW 48324/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Multiple Sclerosis (MS) nursing teams within Health and Social Care Trusts (HSCs) provide general advice to patients in relation to diet, nutrition and exercise. Appropriate referrals are made to colleagues for speech and language therapy, physiotherapy, occupational therapy, dietetics and orthoptics. Action MS and the MS Society offer non- medicinal services such as reflexology, massage, yoga, and counselling services to patients who are made aware of these services by the MS nursing teams.

Patients with Type 1 Diabetes require insulin therapy to live therefore any therapies used by patients are in addition to this essential therapy. Non – medicated measures used by HSCTs to help with the self management of this condition include; Dose Adjustment for Normal Eating (DAFNE) and Bournemouth, Type 1 Intensive Education (BERTIE). These programmes also afford the patients access to health care professionals and referral can be made to a member of the diabetes team for counselling or to the clinical psychologist for diabetes. Clinical evidence has indicated that patients who have attended these two programmes have had a decrease in their insulin requirements. In addition, programmes such as mindfulness and relaxation techniques are also offered.

In respect of patients with Rheumatoid Arthritis, HSCTs' Rheumatology Teams work closely with their colleagues in physiotherapy, podiatry and occupational therapy to provide support. Non-medicated measures such as disease counselling and advice on management and self help for rheumatoid arthritis is also available within HSCTs and information booklets are also provided to patients.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to address waiting times for elective care.

(AQW 48333/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Reducing waiting times is one of my top priorities. I would assure the Member that my Department is fully engaged with Health and Social Care on both short-term action and long-term planning to tackle waiting lists within the resources available to me. It is extremely frustrating that £9.5m is being lost back to Westminster from Northern Ireland's public finances every month as a result of welfare reform being blocked. Such a sum could fund many thousands of assessments and procedures.

I continue to look to the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) to work with each Trust to deliver services in line with Ministerial Standards. I fully appreciate this will be challenging, especially within the constraints of the current financial position, particularly given the increasing number of referrals and necessary reduction in the use of the independent sector.

In tandem with the HSCB, each Trust is continuing to make a concerted effort to keep waiting times at a minimum and is undertaking a range of measures to achieve this, including:

- Maximising delivery of commissioned volumes across all specialties;
- Continuing prioritisation of patients by clinical urgency;
- Chronological management of non-urgent patients;
- Use of dedicated scheduling staff to manage the patient pathway of high risk patients and to maximise capacity;
- Trialling text reminder services to reduce the number of missed appointments;
- Trust specific measures to address long waits in review backlogs; and
- Undertaking specific initiatives to identify and implement alternatives to face-to-face consultant-led outpatient appointments.

The Health and Social Care Board has also been tasked with preparing a plan to cope with demand going forward and stabilise waiting times to put them on a sustainable footing over the next five years.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much (a) his Department; and (b) each of its arm's-length bodies has spent on agency staff in each of the last five years.

(AQW 48359/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

a) The amount spent on agency staff over the last five years, by DHSSPS is given below:

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the all island approach to paediatric cardiac care will mean that Republic of Ireland citizens can access local services.

(AQW 48366/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The immediate priority of the all-island Congenital Heart Disease Network is the transfer of paediatric surgery to Dublin, which requires sufficient capacity to be developed there to accommodate Northern Ireland patients. When the network is fully established patient pathways will be determined by the clinicians who represent both jurisdictions on the Network, and will place the needs of the child at the forefront in all considerations. The possibility of Republic of Ireland children accessing specialist cardiology services in Northern Ireland will therefore be open to them.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the sources used by his Department and the Health and Social Care Board in order to analyse the demand for Health and Social Care services.

(AQW 48381/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Service uses a number of methods to analyse demand for services and to identify the root causes of that demand.

Demand for specific services is analysed regularly using information on referral rates from GP practices. A demographic model - based on current population estimates and national population projections broken down by age and gender - is used to predict the likely growth in demand for services over time. The predicted prevalence of diseases such as heart disease, diabetes and cancer is also considered, drawing on public health data and the findings of national audits and regional and national publications.

As well as analysing demand, these approaches also enable the Health and Social Care Service to identify the root causes of demand, including those associated with a growing and ageing population, changing patterns of disease, and lifestyle factors.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how his Department identifies the root causes behind the increase in demand for Health and Social Care services.

(AQW 48387/11-16)

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people are currently waiting for an insulin pump in each Health and Social Care Trust, broken down by patient age band.

(AQW 48418/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The number of people in each Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust waiting for an insulin pump at 27th October 2015 can be found in Table 1 below.

Table 1. Number of people waiting for an insulin pump at 27th October 2015, by HSC Trust.

South Eastern	43	4	0	47
Southern	6	4	0	10
Western	15	18	0	33

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many insulin pumps have been fitted within the Western Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 48420/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The number of insulin pumps fitted within the Western Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust in each of the last five years can be found in Table 1 below.

These figures relate to new pumps that have been fitted and do not include replacement pumps issued to pre-existing insulin pump users.

Table 1. Insulin Pumps Fitted in the Western HSC Trust (2011-2015)

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 47332/11-15, to make the results of the annual assessment of progress against standards available, for each of the last three years.

(AQW 48429/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) and Health and Social Care Trusts (HSCTs) adopted Adult Audiology Quality Standards in 2013 in order to develop a process of continuous and measurable service improvement in Audiology services across Northern Ireland. The HSCB has acknowledged that while the implementation of the standards by Trusts was expected to take 3 years, the pace of implementation has been slower than expected, mainly due to staffing issues.

The Adult Quality Standards cover a range of nine quality indicators, including Accessing the Service, Information Provision and Communication with Patients, Assessment, Developing an Individual Management Plan with patients, Professional Competence and Multi-Agency working. These indicators are self-assessed and evidence provided by services to support the assessment of progress against the Standards.

In 2012, the first assessment was completed as part of the baseline scoping exercise and the regional average was 41%. In 2013 this position had improved to an average of 49%. In 2014 the HSCB and Trusts focussed on an assessment of the demand and capacity of services required to deliver an audiology service that provides timely care for patients and that meets the Quality Standards. No formal assessment against Standards was carried out while this detailed work was undertaken. The assessment for 2015 will take place in October 2015 and the outcome will inform the continuous improvement process within Trusts.

To complement this work over the past three years, the HSCB has also completed two surveys of patient experience, carried out with local Trusts and Action on Hearing Loss, that have informed services on areas for improvement. The surveys showed that existing services users expressed a high level of satisfaction with their treatment, with the vast majority stating that the staff they had met demonstrated professionalism in their role, and that they were happy with the overall service they had received.

The surveys and the assessments against standards have highlighted areas where Trusts could continue to improve the service, including the provision of timely and relevant information to meet the needs of hearing impaired patients and practical information at the time of fitting on how to fit and wear the hearing aid and action is now being taken forward by Trusts to respond to these findings.

The HSCB remains committed to supporting Trusts to implement the Adult Quality Standards within the context of staffing issues and where required, available funding to enable the capacity of the service to meet the access targets.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail all community initiatives supported by his Department or its arm's-length bodies that promote health outcomes in South Belfast.
(AQW 48435/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information has previously been provided detailing the community and voluntary organisations in South Belfast who received funding from this Department (AQW 46001/11-15 refers).

In respect of family services, the Family Support website may be interrogated geographically to ascertain services being supported. The web link can be accessed at <http://www.familysupportni.gov.uk/>

In respect of health improvement and health inequalities, the PHA supports a wide range of programmes in Belfast, largely commissioned through the community and voluntary sector. Most service providers are commissioned to provide services on a Belfast-wide basis to those most in need, across a number of health and wellbeing programme areas as follows –

- Belfast Strategic Partnership
- Community Development
- Drugs and Alcohol
- Hidden Harm Service Area
- Ethnic Minorities and Migrants
- Healthy Living Centres
- Home Accident Prevention
- Later Years
- Nutrition/Obesity
- Poverty
- Protect Life
- Sexual Health
- Tobacco

Some of the Belfast-wide services are delivered through a number of locally based service providers who collaborate across the city to support efficient access to local services for local residents.

Some key investments in South Belfast to highlight include –

- South Belfast Partnership – Health and Social Wellbeing Development Officer to deliver a Health and Wellbeing Programme within the Partnership Board area; Weight management programme bringing together Healthy Living Centres in a co-ordinated programme
- Healthy Living Centres – Ballynafeigh and Taughmonagh, Greater Village Regeneration Trust, Lower Ormeau Residents Action Group – each runs a series of health and wellbeing programmes for residents
- Chinese Welfare Association – BME Health Link, Advocacy Programme improving access to Health Services for BME and training to health professionals

In addition, the Health and Social Care Board run community initiatives in South Belfast, such as:

- Enhancement of the Diabetes Services
- Acute Care at Home
- Chronic Disease Prevention Hub
- Healthwise
- Primary Care Talking Therapies

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the antenatal detection rate for congenital heart disease by (a) number; and (b) type, for children born in Northern Ireland, in each of the last 3 years.
(AQW 48438/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The requested information is not currently available and could only be acquired at disproportionate cost.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) to confirm a helipad was constructed in accordance with the plans at the new Accident and Emergency unit in the Royal Victoria Hospital; and (ii) why the helipad is not operational.
(AQW 48444/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: No helipad has been constructed at the Royal Victoria Hospital.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he plans to increase access to palliative care for anyone who needs it; including individuals suffering from multiple sclerosis, Parkinson's disease and acute strokes. (AQW 48452/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: 'Living Matters:Dying Matters', my Department's palliative and end of life care strategy for adults, was published in March 2010 with a vision that any person with an advanced, non-curative condition is supported to live well and die well, irrespective of their condition or care setting. This included improved access to care and support services for people living with a terminal illness and their families. Significant progress has been made in the implementation of the Strategy's recommendations.

The Strategy is also supported by the Transforming Your Palliative and End of Life Care (TYPELC) programme, currently being delivered in partnership between the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), Public Health Agency (PHA) and Marie Curie. The aim of the programme is to improve the design and delivery of co-ordinated services and enable people with palliative and end of life care needs to have choice in their preferred place of care, thereby improving access to and the quality of palliative and end of life care.

Areas being considered as part of the TYPELC programme include support for patients and carers, training for healthcare providers, enhanced access to care services at home, redesign of day hospice services and identification and planning for people with palliative care needs.

Planning of care for people with palliative care needs has also been supported by the development of the End of Life Care Operational System (ELCOS) to identify people who may be in the last year of life so that their needs can be appropriately assessed and managed.

There is strong partnership working between the HSCB, PHA, HSC Trusts and community and voluntary sectors in the provision of palliative care services. Recently, the HSCB and PHA further invested in an enhanced palliative care rapid response service. This is a partnership between Marie Curie palliative care nurses and local GP out of hours services to provide response to calls for care and assistance in order to support care at home and avoid unnecessary transfer to hospital.

Co-working between condition specific services, such as those for people with MS and Parkinson's Disease, and palliative care specialists is already in place. Current proposals as part of TYPELC for the re-design of day hospice services will strengthen these arrangements.

The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority has undertaken a review of the implementation of the Living Matters:Dying Matters Strategy to assess progress against the recommendations in the Strategy's action plan. My Department will consider the findings and any recommendations of the review report when this is published.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will update the current Living Matters, Dying Matters palliative and end of life care strategy for adults, so that provision is increased for everyone with a terminal illness. (AQW 48453/11-16)

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of children in full time care homes in each of the last three financial years, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.
(AQW 48468/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: It is assumed that children in full time care homes refer to those children looked after placed in residential accommodation by Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts.

Table 1 below details the number of children in residential care each of the last three financial years broken down by HSC Trust area.

Table 1: Children in Full Time Care Homes by HSC Trust area at 31 March (2013 – 2015)

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 45925/11-15, to detail the amount of Financial Transaction Capital (FTC) that has been allocated to GP practices to date.

(AQW 48499/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Tranche 1 of the GP Loan Scheme was launched in December 2014. Subsequently, Letters of Offer for a total loan value of £3,650,681 were issued to GPs on 1 June 2015. Drawdown of loans issued under Tranche 1 are expected to start in October 2015.

Tranche 2 of the GP Loan Scheme was launched in June 2015. Letters of Offer for a total loan value of £2,490,031 were issued to GPs on 20 August 2015. Drawdown of loans issued under Tranche 2 are expected to start in December 2015.

Tranche 3 of the scheme is open for applications in 2015/16. The HSCB continues to work with GPs interested in applying for a GP Loan under Tranche 3 of the scheme and expects a number of further applications to be received.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what support his Department is providing for children with autism in South Belfast.

(AQW 48501/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Within the Belfast Trust autism services are delivered across the Trust area irrespective of geographical area. Following a diagnosis of autism, all children, young people and families are referred to the Autism Intervention Service which provides a multi-disciplinary and multi-agency approach to care. The Trust also works closely with its third sector partners with regard to delivery of intervention and support and these are integrated into the Trust service delivery model.

A number of workshops are available at initial diagnosis, providing parents and other family members with an opportunity to gain more information regarding autism and to link with other families experiencing similar anxieties. The Trust has also developed 'Level 2' workshops, which provide more problem-specific intervention, advice and follow up. Individual discussion with the child about their diagnosis and individual therapy are also available as required.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of waiting lists for urology services in each Health and Social Care Trust, for each of the last three years.

(AQW 48540/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of people waiting for (i) a first consultant led outpatient appointment and (ii) inpatient admission, in the Urology specialty in each Health and Social Care Trust, is outlined in the tables below. Data is presented for the waiting time position at 30th June 2015, the most recent date for which official statistics is available, and at the same point in time for each of the two years previous.

Tables 1 – 3 detail the waiting times position for a first consultant led outpatient appointment in the Urology specialty by HSC Trust and weeks waiting.

Table 1: Waiting time position at 30th June 2015

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 47517/11-15, for a breakdown of the number of operations undertaken by each orthopaedic surgeon in each of the last three financial years.
(AQW 48541/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of operations undertaken by each orthopaedic surgeon is not collected centrally.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has received an estimate of the cost of completing the repairs identified in the condition report on Northfield House residential home.
(AQW 48544/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: A condition report was completed on Northfield House residential care home in September 2014. The condition report indicated that while the home is maintained in a satisfactory condition, the building is in need of major refurbishment to bring the home to current HTM (Health Technical Memorandum) and Building Control Standards. The South Eastern HSC Trust has advised that the estimated cost of this major refurbishment is £2.2m.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the five new fire station proposals which were previously at business case stage with a view to progressing to design stage.
(AQW 48569/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Outline Business Cases for replacement stations at both Cushendall and Downpatrick are currently under consideration.

Due to current budgetary constraints NIFRS will not be progressing Ballycastle, Fintona and Newtown Stewart business cases in this financial year.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on proposals to reform rules on organ donation, including the introduction of an opt-out system.
(AQW 48593/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I have not made any proposals to change the current arrangements for organ donation. My Department's policy on organ donation and transplantation is to fully implement the 2013 UK-wide strategy 'Taking Organ Transplantation to 2020 – a UK Strategy'. This strategy aims to make the UK's organ donation rate one of the best in the world and enable the UK to match world class performance in organ donation and transplantation.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (i) staff appointed; and (ii) positions still to be filled in the new radiotherapy centre at Altnagelvin Hospital.
(AQW 48611/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: There are (i) 29 staff appointed; and (ii) 186 positions still to be filled in the new Radiotherapy centre, Altnagelvin. This is in line with the profile of appointments necessary to facilitate the service planning and commissioning of the Radiotherapy Centre by Autumn 2016.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of autism coordinators contracted to each Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last five years.
(AQW 48630/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The figures requested are shown in terms of headcount (HC) and whole-time equivalent (WTE) in the table below.

These figures refer to the 1st September in each year. The post in the South Eastern Trust was filled from the 17th October 2011 onwards.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department ensures (i) the effective administration of Direct Payments by Health and Social Care Trusts; and (ii) that Health and Social Care Trusts keep the administration of payments under review.

(AQW 48654/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department issued the following overarching guidance to Health and Social Care (HSC) Board and Trusts in order to assist the HSC in implementation and the administration of an effective direct payment scheme. This guidance can be accessed via the attached link:

http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/direct\_payments\_legislation\_and\_guidance\_for\_boards\_and\_trusts.pdf.

In addition, my Department issued further guidance on accounting and monitoring requirements for the administration of Direct Payments. This provides both the HSC and the Direct Payment recipient with detailed direction on their respective financial responsibilities, see link attached <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/eccu3-09.pdf>.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the introduction of pulse oximetry testing for all new borns.

(AQW 49988/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department is advised by the UK National Screening Committee (NSC) about all aspects of screening. Using research evidence, pilot programmes and economic evaluation, the NSC assesses the evidence for programmes against a set of internationally recognised criteria covering the condition, the test, the treatment options and the effectiveness and acceptability of the screening programme.

The NSC has reviewed the evidence for adding pulse oximetry to the screening pathway to detect congenital heart disease in newborns. At their meeting in March 2014 they recommended piloting the use of pulse oximetry to evaluate the impact of implementation on NHS services and to establish feasibility for future national rollout as an addition to the existing suite of screening tests undertaken as part of the newborn programme.

The pilot has commenced and is expected to report next year. The NSC will consider the findings from the pilot and will make a policy recommendation for the UK. I will consider this advice when it is available.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many local patients are being treated for polio.
(AQW 49990/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: As at 26th October 2015 there are no patients in Northern Ireland being treated for Acute Poliomyelitis.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to protect Lifeline.
(AQW 50000/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Lifeline service is commissioned by the Public Health Agency. The current Lifeline contract ends on 31 December 2015 with the possibility of extension until 30 September 2016, subject to the agreement of the current service provider.

The Lifeline crisis response service is a key component of the Protect Life suicide prevention strategy. It provides essential support to people at a time when they are at their most vulnerable. Lifeline was established to provide immediate support and de-escalation for people in severe emotional crisis who are at high risk of suicide. Proposals for the future model of Lifeline service provision are currently out for public consultation. The aim is to have a new contract in place by October 2016.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his Department's suicide prevention strategy for the next five years, that specifically deals with (i) young people; (ii) the LGBT community; and (iii) people with mental health issues.

(AQW 50001/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: A new draft strategy will be issued for consultation in early 2016. It will be in two parts: the first covering frontline intervention and postvention, and the second covering early intervention to promote emotional resilience and positive mental health as protective factors to reduce suicide risk. The early intervention section will include tailored support for young people, those with mental health issues and raised risk groups. The frontline intervention section will include specific actions to reduce the incidence of suicide amongst those in the care of mental health services.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the final cost of building the new cancer unit at Altnagelvin Hospital.

(AQW 50003/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The final costs for the new cancer unit at Altnagelvin Hospital are not yet known however total, capital investment for this project is £66.1m, which includes a €19m contribution from the Republic of Ireland.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much of the cost of building the new cancer unit at Altnagelvin Hospital will be paid for by the government in the Republic of Ireland.

(AQW 50004/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The final costs for the new cancer unit at Altnagelvin Hospital are not yet known however total, capital investment for this project is £66.1m, which includes a €19m contribution from the Republic of Ireland.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Emergency Departments were closed under the former Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Michael McGimpsey.

(AQW 50005/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: During the period when Michael McGimpsey MLA was Minister for Health, Social Services and Public Safety the following EDs were reconfigured from Type 2 ED to Type 3 ED:

- Tyrone County Hospital Emergency Department (2 March 2009)
- Whiteabbey Hospital Emergency Department (24 May 2010)
- Mid Ulster Hospital Emergency Department (24 May 2010).

Type 2 EDs are a consultant-led service . Type 3 is a minor injuries unit which may be doctor or nurse led.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Residential homes were closed under the former Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Michael McGimpsey.

(AQW 50006/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: There were six statutory residential care homes for older people closed during the period when Michael McGimpsey was Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety. The homes and dates of closures are as follows, broken down by Trust:

South Eastern HSC Trust

- Seymour House, Lisburn: 2009
- Grove House, Ballynahinch: 2009
- St Johns's Grove, Downpatrick: 2010
- Loch Cuan House, Newtownards: 2011

Western HSC Trust

- Foyleville Residential Home: Londonderry/Derry: 2010
- Drumahaw House: Enniskillen: 2011

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the North West Health Innovation Corridor.

(AQW 50016/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The North West Health Innovation Corridor is not a Departmental initiative. However I would be supportive of it insofar as its objectives in promoting healthcare innovation complement the Executive's wider health and economy agenda.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has put in place to address waiting lists in the health service.

(AQW 50034/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Reducing waiting times is one of my top priorities. I would assure the Member that my Department is fully engaged with Health and Social Care Board and Trusts on both short-term action and long-term planning to tackle waiting lists within the resources available to me. It is extremely frustrating that £9.5m is being lost back to Westminster from Northern Ireland's public finances every month as a result of welfare reform being blocked. Such a sum could fund many thousands of assessments and procedures.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what steps he is taking to ensure the work of Lifeline can continue.

(AQW 50042/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Lifeline service is commissioned by the Public Health Agency. The current Lifeline contract ends on 31 December 2015 with the possibility of extension until 30 September 2016, subject to the agreement of the current service provider.

The Lifeline crisis response service is a key component of the Protect Life suicide prevention strategy. It provides essential support to people at a time when they are at their most vulnerable. Lifeline was established to provide immediate support and de-escalation for people in severe emotional crisis who are at high risk of suicide. This focus will be maintained. Proposals for the future model of Lifeline service provision are currently out for public consultation. The aim is to have a new contract in place by October 2016.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department has signed up to National Institute for Health and Care Excellence guidance on social care.

(AQW 50054/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department is considering its policy position in respect of NICE guidance on social care as it is not currently endorsed in Northern Ireland.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) for his assessment of nursing staff levels; (ii) whether an increase in nursing staff levels will be required in order to meet future demand; and (iii) to detail any proposals he has to increase nursing staff levels.

(AQW 50062/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department is currently undertaking a review of nurse staffing levels. In order to determine staffing ranges for the nursing and midwifery workforce across a range of major specialties my Department also developed a framework in 2014; Delivering Care:

- (i) Nurse Staffing in Northern Ireland. In support of the framework's findings the Health and Social Care Board recently allocated £12million for the implementation of Phase 1 in acute hospital wards; further phases will address District Nursing, Health Visiting and Emergency Departments;
- (ii) the current review of nurse staffing levels will assess demands on the nursing and midwifery workforce over a 10-year horizon and will be used to inform any decisions on increasing staff levels, as appropriate;
- (iii) in addition, the findings of the review will inform any measures, including any pre and post-registration training and return to practice training which are necessary to develop and sustain this workforce.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the cost of employing agency nurses in (i) Health and Social Care Trusts; and (ii) the private nursing and residential care sector.

(AQW 50068/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) Trust expenditure on agency nurses is a necessity to ensure that safe and effective services are sustained whilst it also contributes to maintaining service provision to patients and clients. However, I expect all HSC Trusts to continuously examine reliance upon agency staff and my Department will monitor expenditure closely.
- (i) My department is not responsible for staffing arrangements within private sector care homes.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any discussions he has had with the Minister for Employment and Learning regarding the number of nursing places at Universities and Colleges.

(AQW 50069/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Responsibility for the commissioning of student nursing places in Northern Ireland is entirely a matter for my Department therefore no discussions have taken place with the Minister for Employment and Learning.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the tariff for private residential care homes; and whether this is sufficient to enable private residential care homes to employ adequate numbers of staff.

(AQW 50070/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The regional tariff rate is a matter for the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB); the Department has no role in establishing the rates paid for care.

The HSCB negotiates on an annual basis a regional tariff rate with the independent sector for residential and nursing home care. The regional tariff rate is a guide to what the HSC considers to be fair and affordable, not a fixed price for a care placement. It is for the HSCB, as the chief commissioner of care, to assure itself that the rates paid represent the best possible outcome within the resources available to it in terms of procuring quality care at a sustainable price which represents value for money.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the level of the departmental tariff for private residential care homes in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50071/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The regional tariff rate is a matter for the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB). The Department has no role in establishing the rates paid for care.

The table below details the regional tariff rate set by the HSCB for the last 5 years for residential care homes.

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15	2015/16
Programme of Care: Elderly, Learning Disability and Mental Health	£426	£437	£450	£461	£470
Programme of Care: Physical Disability	£478	£490	£505	£518	£528

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on his Department's suicide prevention strategy, including details of existing targets to address and reduce suicide.

(AQW 50111/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: A wide range of services and programmes are delivered under the "Protect Life" strategy. These include the Lifeline crisis response service, suicide prevention training, community-based counselling support, education campaigns, self harm prevention programmes, and bereavement support. A new strategy is being developed and will be issued for public consultation in 2016.

The long-term goal of "Protect Life" is to reduce the prevalence of suicide in Northern Ireland; the aim, within the lifetime of the current strategy, is to reduce the differential in the suicide rate between deprived and non-deprived areas within Northern Ireland. To date, this inequality gap has remained constant, although the final outcome will not be known until 2016 as suicide rates are measured on a three year rolling average.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline how he will work with agencies, including Lifeline, to mitigate the risks leading to the overrepresentation of males in occurrences of suicide.

(AQW 50112/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Public Health Agency commissions a range of suicide prevention services targeted at males including: mental health public information campaigns to encourage help seeking behaviour; mental health training programmes; community focused mental health awareness programmes; and mentoring for young men who have experienced suicidal ideation and/or self harm.

Some of the "Lifeline" communications are also targeted at a male audience, for example, through late night radio programme sponsorship on U105 with customised messages for men, and awareness sessions and information material for construction workers and haulage companies.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the current standard of residential care in Blair House, Newtownards.

(AQW 50113/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) is responsible for inspecting standards of care delivered by statutory and independent providers including nursing homes. RQIA has advised that since it was established in 2005, Blair House has not been subject to any enforcements actions. The most recent inspection on Blair House was undertaken by RQIA in September 2015. It is due to publish a report on its findings in November 2015.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many of his departmental staff have a registered disability, broken down by (i) full time equivalent; and (ii) as a percentage of the workforce.

(AQW 50114/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: At 1 July 2015, 21.6 full time equivalent staff in my Department have declared a disability which represents 4.7% of DHSSPS workforce.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what assurances will he give to older people to ensure they will receive the proper and necessary home care services when they are discharged from hospital following surgery or other treatment.

(AQW 50129/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: A full assessment of individual need is undertaken by hospital and community based teams to ensure that older people receive the necessary care and support at home following a stay in hospital for surgery or other treatment. At the time of discharge the team will ensure that an appropriate community care package has been identified and put in place, including any equipment if required. The team will also work with carers and family members to ensure that the necessary range of wider supports have been provided to enable the discharge to take place effectively and safely.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has plans to introduce pharmacist foot check services for people with diabetes.

(AQW 50131/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Diabetes continues to be one of the most challenging long term conditions, affecting more than 85,000 people across Northern Ireland. Complications of diabetes include impaired peripheral circulation and nerve damage which can result in foot ulcers and in some cases, lower limb amputations.

Foot care for people with diabetes is a very important part of their overall care and people living with diabetes currently have access to podiatry services coordinated through their diabetes care teams. Integrated Care Partnerships in Northern Ireland are developing care pathways to support an integrated multidisciplinary team based approach to detecting and managing foot problems effectively in people with diabetes.

There are currently no specific plans to introduce foot checks for people with diabetes in pharmacies.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what action his Department has taken to reduce the stigma around mental ill-health issues.

(AQW 50134/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Previous Public Health Agency (PHA) annual public information campaigns have aimed to de-stigmatise mental illness and raise awareness of the early warning signs and symptoms. The PHA and Northern Ireland Association of Mental Health are also working in partnership to deliver a future wide ranging three year mental health anti-stigma campaign titled Change Your Mind.

Further action to reduce stigma associated with mental illness, and encourage help-seeking behaviour includes: local seminars and educational workshops; mental health awareness training; the hosting of websites providing advice and information; and work with the media to encourage more positive reporting on the issue.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail when the review of Multiple Sclerosis Neurological Services will be completed.

(AQW 50162/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: This review will be completed by early 2016.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many serious adverse incidents have been recorded in each hospital in (i) each of the last of the last twelve months; and (ii) each of the last five years.

(AQW 50185/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board/Public Health Agency do not collect information on Serious Adverse Incidents (SAIs) on an individual hospital basis.

The number of SAIs, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last twelve months, and the last five years is outlined in the tables below.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) how many newly qualified graduates in medicine from Queen's University Belfast have opted to work outside the United Kingdom; and (ii) the top three destinations newly qualified graduates in medicine choose to work.

(AQW 50186/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) None of last year's graduates in medicine (Bachelor of Medicine) full time first degree leavers (2013–14) left to work outside the United Kingdom,
- (ii) The top three destinations in 2013–14 were
  - Northern Ireland,
  - England, and
  - Scotland.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much it costs to train a doctor.

(AQW 50187/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The nature and cost of a doctor's training varies according to the specialty they are undertaking. It is therefore not possible to quantify how much it costs to train individual doctors.

Department of Justice

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice why legal aid is not available for coroner's cases.

(AQW 49951/11-16)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): Legal aid funding by way of 'advice and assistance' is available for cases in the Coroners' Courts, subject to prescribed tests.

Ordinary legal aid funding for representation is available, subject to the relevant prescribed tests, only for those proceedings listed in paragraph 2 of Schedule 2 to the Access to Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2003. Proceedings before the Coroners' Court are not listed in Schedule 2 and as such ordinary funding for representation is not available for these proceedings.

Depending on the circumstances of the individual case, exceptional legal aid funding may be available if the Director of Legal Aid Casework, in the Legal Services Agency, is satisfied that it meets the statutory tests. Exceptional funding has previously been used to provide representation in certain inquests cases.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 49254/11-16, to place in the Assembly Library copies of the reports of visits by Criminal Justice Inspection NI to Approved Premises in each of the last two calendar years.

(AQW 49959/11-16)

Mr Ford: Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland (CJINI) published a report on Approved Premises in Northern Ireland in November 2013. This document may be viewed on the CJINI website at the following address:

<http://www.cjini.org/TheInspections/Inspection-Reports/2013/October---December.aspx>

CJINI has also conducted an annual unannounced inspection on each of the Approved Premises in the last two years. These reports are not formally published but copies are provided to the relevant management committee of the Approved Premises and partner organisations. CJINI would be willing to meet to discuss the findings of any of these reports.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many defibrillators are installed in each prison facility, including Hydebank College and the Juvenile Justice Unit; and how many (i) prison staff; and (ii) medical staff are trained in their use.

(AQW 49991/11-16)

Mr Ford: The table below shows the number of defibrillators installed in each prison facility and Woodlands JJC, and the number of staff trained in their use.

Facility	No. of defibrillators	No. of prison staff trained
Maghaberry	29*	650
Magilligan	12	257
Hydebank College	10	93
Woodlands JJC	9	86

* Figures include Prison Escort Court Custody Service (PECCS) base.

** All YJA directly employed care and medical staff within Woodlands JJC receive basic First Aid training which includes the use of defibrillators Physical healthcare in the JJC is undertaken by directly employed YJA nurses. SET mental health nursing staff are not included as they do not undertake any physical healthcare.

Part two of the question should be referred to the Minister for Health, Social Services and Public Safety as the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has responsibility for medical care in prison establishments.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 49254/11-16, how many times the Criminal Justice Inspection NI have carried out (i) announced; and (ii) unannounced inspections of Edward Street Hostel, Portadown in each of the last two calendar years; and to list the general findings from each visit.

(AQW 49992/11-16)

Mr Ford: Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland has conducted two visits to Edward Street Hostel, Portadown in the past two years. Both of these visits were unannounced. The general findings from both visits were positive in terms of public protection.

Inspectors did express some concerns regarding the condition of accommodation at Edward Street Hostel and support the decision to refurbish the premises in the interest of public protection.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 49467/11-16, whether consideration will be given to the collation of information on breaches.

(AQW 49995/11-16)

Mr Ford: Approved Hostels report all breaches to Probation Board for Northern Ireland staff, and, where relevant, to Police Service of Northern Ireland. Any such information is recorded on the individual record of the relevant offender.

As outlined previously, there is no operational requirement for information on breaches to be collated centrally and to do so would not be cost effective.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Justice what action his Department is taking to tackle pension fraud.

(AQW 50065/11-16)

Mr Ford: The safety of older people is an important issue for my Department, and this is emphasised by the inclusion of measures to address crime and fear of crime within the Executive's Programme for Government and my Department's Community Safety Strategy, "Building Safer, Shared and Confident Communities".

My Department has been working with Age Sector Platform over recent years to tackle a range of issues affecting the safety of older people and their fear of crime. This culminated in the development of a "Feel Safe" guide, which includes information on how to avoid telephone and mail scams, internet fraud and identity theft. I understand that local PSNI officers have been distributing this booklet to older people who have been victims of crime.

Over the coming months, Age Sector Platform will be holding workshops on a regional basis to promote the messages in this guide. These workshops will include a range of advice on how they can avoid becoming victims of crime, and representation from key providers of advice such as the Trading Standards Service.

At a local level, PCSPs are taking forward a range of initiatives that aim to tackle financial crime against older people. I understand that, for example, Derry City and Strabane PCSP alongside other partners has developed a film resource pack to help raise awareness of scams and financial abuse among older people.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether E-Crime forensic examinations into offences in Northern Ireland are conducted at Forensics Service NI or by an external agency.

(AQW 50092/11-16)

Mr Ford: The majority of digital and E-crime-related forensic examinations are conducted by the PSNI's Cybercrime Unit. Forensic Science Northern Ireland carry out a number of examinations of electronic devices, especially where the joint recovery of multiple evidence types (such as DNA, Fingerprints and Data) is required.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice what initiatives are currently in place within his Department to address the fear of crime among older people and to increase confidence and peace of mind regarding their safety.
(AQW 50117/11-16)

Mr Ford: The safety of older people is an important issue for my Department, and this is emphasised by the inclusion of measures to address fear of crime within the Executive's Programme for Government and my Department's Community Safety Strategy, "Building Safer, Shared and Confident Communities".

The multi-agency Older Persons Delivery Group chaired by my Department has developed an action plan which contains a range of measures being taken forward by the relevant organisations to tackle fear of crime among older people.

My Department has been working with Age Sector Platform, also a member of the Delivery Group, over recent years to tackle a range of issues affecting the safety of older people and their fear of crime. In particular, they have been working with their members to research why older people are fearful of becoming a victim of crime. This culminated in the development of a "Feel Safe" guide, which includes crime prevention advice and information on organisations that can help older people to feel safer. I understand that local PSNI officers have been distributing this booklet to older people who have been victims of crime.

Over the coming months, Age Sector Platform will be holding workshops on a regional basis to promote the messages in this guide and to address the concerns that older people have around crime. These workshops will include a range of advice on how they can avoid becoming victims of crime and representation from key providers of advice.

In addition, a range of initiatives are run at a local level by Policing and Community Safety Partnerships, such as the film resource pack developed by Derry City and Strabane PCSP.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what reductions have been made in legal aid fees for judicial reviews; and whether these reductions are commensurate with those in criminal legal aid.
(AQW 50178/11-16)

Mr Ford: I have not made any reductions to the fees paid for Judicial Review which are supported by legal aid. My Department is currently taking forward work to review remuneration for all types of work supported by Civil Legal Aid. The focus is currently on Family Cases, following which attention will turn to remaining issues, including Judicial Reviews.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 49690/11-16 and AQW 48486/11-16, to outline the reasons for the drop in the number of committal warrants executed in respect of Dungannon Court Office.
(AQW 50180/11-16)

Mr Ford: The number of fines issued and warrants executed in a particular period will fluctuate depending upon a number of variables within fine default proceedings and competing PSNI priorities. For example, variables could include the currency of information relative to a defaulter's home address, the volume of cases to be listed, judicial direction in an individual case and variations in operational demands for police at any given time regarding execution.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what was the average expenditure in legal aid on a judicial review, including the leave to apply stage, in (i) 2013-14; and (ii) 2014-15.
(AQW 50181/11-16)

Mr Ford: In 2013/14 the overall average costs for Judicial review payments was £10,515. In 2014/15 the overall average cost for Judicial review payments was £10,179.

These costs include expenditure for the 'leave to apply stage'. This element cannot be identified separately.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 49737/11-16, what were the costs for (i) 2010-11; and (ii) 2011-12.
(AQW 50218/11-16)

Mr Ford: As outlined in my answer to AQW/49737/11-16 the costs of the removal of remains to the forensic mortuary for the years 2010-11 and 2011-12 cannot readily be identified from the total cost of moving remains both to and from the forensic mortuary. Costs were not analysed in this way at that time, consequently, the information requested could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Department for Regional Development

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development what work he is undertaking with councils to ensure that the cycling provision introduced in Belfast will be replicated in other areas.

(AQW 48311/11-16)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): 'Northern Ireland Changing Gear – A Bicycle Strategy for Northern Ireland' was published in August 2015. Following on from this a Bicycle Strategy Delivery Plan and a draft Belfast Bicycle Network Plan will be published in autumn this year.

Following public consultation on the Belfast Bicycle Network Plan and the finalisation of the Plan, Bicycle Network Plans for other urban areas will be rolled out as part of the Bicycle Strategy.

In addition, my Department's Cycling Unit is preparing a Greenways Strategic Plan for the whole of Northern Ireland.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development when the current authorisation for grants to be paid to water and sewerage undertakers expires should clause one of the Water and Sewerage Services Bill (NIA 51/11-16) not pass.

(AQW 48973/11-16)

Mr Kennedy: My Department pays a subsidy to Northern Ireland Water in lieu of domestic charging for water and sewerage services under Article 213 of the Water and Sewerage Services (Northern Ireland) Order 2006, as extended by the Water and Sewerage Services (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2010 and again, by the Water and Sewerages Services (Amendment) Act (Northern Ireland) 2013. Should the Water and Sewerage Services Bill not pass, my Department's legislative authority to pay this subsidy will expire on 31 March 2016.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the Department's target deadline for resolving appeals to on street penalty charge notices (PCNs); (ii) the current number of on street PCNs which have been issued in each of the last twelve months; and (iii) the number of unresolved appeals to PCNs, broken down by the week the original appeal was made.

(AQW 48988/11-16)

Mr Kennedy: Department's target deadline for resolving appeals to on street Penalty Charge Notices (PCNs) is 15 working days.

The table below details the number of on street PCNs which have been issued in each of the last twelve months:

Year	Month	Number of On-Street PCNs issued
2014	September	5626
	October	6935
	November	6808
	December	6147
2015	January	5616
	February	6236
	March	6422
	April	6412
	May	6804
	June	11970
	July	13904
	August	14781

There has been a significant increase in the number of PCNs issued from June 2015. This is a direct result of the introduction of bus lane camera enforcement which commenced on the 1st June 2015 and included an initial three week warning period.

The increase in the number of PCNs issued has resulted in an increase in the number of challenges received in Parking Enforcement Processing Unit (PEPU), approximately 4000.

To deal with the increased number of challenges, PEPU has appointed five new temporary staff members.

The number of unresolved appeals to PCNs, broken down by the week the original appeal was made, is best represented in the table below, detailing the age of outstanding challenges in terms of number of weeks old:

Weeks old	Number of Challenges
4-5	948

Weeks old	Number of Challenges
3-4	629
2-3	630
1-2	900
0-1	752
Total	3859

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the waiting times for blue badges in each Health and Social Care Trust area.

(AQW 48989/11-16)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's Blue Badge Unit does not maintain records in accordance with Health and Social Care Trust areas.

Currently, applications made under the automatic eligibility criteria, are processed on target within 21 days.

However, the Blue Badge Unit is experiencing a backlog of applications made under the assessed eligibility criteria from across Northern Ireland and some applicants have been waiting for up to four months for a response to their application. New members of staff have recently been appointed to deal with the additional workload this has created and it is anticipated that this backlog will soon start to reduce.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps are being taken to facilitate vehicles bringing increased visitor numbers to the Dark Hedges in North Antrim, while at the same time protecting free passage for local residents and road users.

(AQW 49276/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen (The Minister for Regional Development): My officials are due to meet with Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council in early November to discuss traffic management issues and other related matters regarding the Dark Hedges.

Following meetings with the Northern Ireland Tourist Board, Ballymoney & Moyle Councils and Causeway Coast & Glens Heritage Trust in January 2015, my Department agreed to tourist signing proposals for the Dark Hedges and The Hedges Hotel, which is adjacent to the site. These signs have now been erected and are providing better directional information for drivers to this increasingly popular tourist destination.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development what investment proposal she has settled on in respect of Rathlin harbour, to facilitate the new car ferry service.

(AQW 49277/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department expects delivery of a new improved ferry by late August 2016 to be available for service shortly afterwards. Harbour improvement works are required in Church Bay, Rathlin to facilitate berthing arrangements for the new ferry and to maintain a high quality service for residents and visitors.

The proposals comprise a new ferry ramp, berthing pier, car park area and associated bollards. It also includes a fendering system, lighting and road re-alignment at Rathlin Island Harbour. The planning application for the proposal was lodged in June 2015 and is currently being assessed by Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council.

In line with our ongoing support of work on Rathlin, my Department and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, have agreed to jointly fund the harbour improvements works at an approximate cost of £1million subject to budget being available at that time.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development, should clause one of the Water and Sewerage Services Bill not be passed, on what date the current authorisation expires for grants to water and sewerage undertakers to be paid.

(AQW 49279/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I would refer the Member to his previous question, AQW 48973/11-16.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development when the dualling of the A26 will be completed.

(AQW 49281/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The A26 Dualling scheme commenced in January 2015, and to date its construction has been progressing well. The work is currently on programme and is expected to be completed by summer 2017.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development to list the policy decisions that have been awaiting ministerial sign-off since 10 September 2015.

(AQW 49282/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: There are no significant policy decisions which are awaiting ministerial sign-off.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration she has given to the delivery of Belfast Rapid Transit works in east Belfast; and whether commensurate resources are in place, and secure, to ensure the Belfast Rapid Transit will be operational by the delayed completion date of August 2018.

(AQW 49289/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The implementation of my Department's proposals for Belfast Rapid Transit (BRT) is continuing despite the necessary revision to the completion date. In East Belfast the works on the section of the BRT route on the Upper Newtownards Road between Sandown Road and Knock Road were completed in March 2015 and the new bus lanes were introduced in August 2015. Work commenced on the section of the BRT route on the Upper Newtownards Road between Albertbridge Road and Sandown Road in June 2015 and is scheduled to be completed in March 2016. The next section of the BRT route to be implemented will be on the Albertbridge Road between Castlereagh Street and Newtownards Road. Work is due to start on this section in spring 2016.

My Department's budget for 2015/16 includes an allocation for BRT which will enable the programmed works to be carried out. The Department will require significant additional funding in subsequent budget periods. BRT is a high priority project and I will prioritise the capital funding for BRT within its capital allocations to ensure that the project will be completed in August 2018 to enable operation at the beginning of September 2018.

BRT has the potential to be a transformational project for the city of Belfast and I am satisfied that it will be operational in 2018.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Regional Development whether a strategy has been put in place to upgrade the A1 dual carriageway to motorway status.

(AQW 49292/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has no proposals to upgrade the A1 dual-carriageway to motorway status. However, the A1 Junctions Phase 2 proposal, which will provide a significant upgrade along the route, is currently under development.

This proposal will involve closing up openings in the central median and installing a continuous central safety barrier between the Hillsborough Roundabout and Loughbrickland. It includes the construction of four flyover-type junctions and the closing of some minor road junctions along this stretch of the route. In addition, the provision of a northbound on-slip at Castlewellan Road, Banbridge and a link between the existing underpass junction at Hillsborough Road, Dromore and Milebush Road will also improve access at these junctions.

Delivery of this scheme remains subject to it clearing the statutory procedures, having a satisfactory economic appraisal and is dependent on future funding levels.

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development why no one to one consultations are available to appeal parking fines, as is the case in England, Wales and Scotland.

(AQW 49543/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Penalty Charge Notices (PCNs) are issued under the Traffic Management (Northern Ireland) Order 2005 for a parking contravention. The legislation sets out a statutory process for making formal representations and appealing to the independent Traffic Penalty Tribunal.

Under this legislation the recipient of a PCN has a period of 28 days in which to pay or write to my Department querying the issue of the PCN. If there is no contact within this period, a document called a Notice to Owner is issued to the registered keeper of the vehicle. The registered keeper can then make written representations. If these are accepted, the PCN will be cancelled. If the representations are not accepted, the registered keeper will be notified of the decision and will receive a form to appeal the decision to the independent Traffic Penalty Tribunal.

An appellant can then choose to have the appeal dealt with by an Independent Adjudicator in person or by phone if they wish.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Regional Development whether she will make provision for the repair of road defects and the cutting of grass verges.

(AQW 49546/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Due to the current budgetary pressures facing my Department's resource budget TransportNI is only able to implement a skeleton service for a range of road maintenance activities including road defect repairs and cutting of grass verges.

My Department has been unable to employ external contractors since the end of March and although my internal workforce is endeavouring to carry out as much work as possible it does not have sufficient resources to meet the normal maintenance standards which my Department would expect to provide.

TransportNI will continue to inspect all roads and footways to ensure that safety related issues are recorded and prioritised for repair in line with set maintenance standards. TransportNI will also all grass at least once in all areas by the end of October but will cut grass on sightlines at junctions and bends more frequently as required for safety reasons.

My Department will continue to actively pursue additional funding through monitoring rounds to allow it to deliver the full range of maintenance activities.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development how much her Department has spent on cycling in each of the last five years; and what this represents as per capita spend.

(AQW 49799/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The information set out below provides information about a number of areas of my Department's work. It includes capital projects with a high cycling impact (including the active travel demonstration projects) and the resource expenditure of the Department's Cycling Unit and its predecessor (including the Active School Travel Programme).

	Population million	Cycling Spend £million	Spend per head of population
2010/11	1.8	0.43	£0.24
2011/12	1.8	1.25	£0.69
2012/13	1.8	0.98	£0.54
2013/14	1.8	0.98	£0.54
2014/15	1.8	7.51	£4.17

The attribution of spend to cycling specifically is not a precise exercise as many projects have benefits for cycling even if not carried out specifically for that purpose. Equally, there are cycling-related projects which have benefits for walking and other active travel modes in addition to the cycling benefit. In addition to expenditure by my Department, other Departments have invested in cycling measures or projects that have cycling benefit (e.g. Department for Social Development investment in the new Lagan Weir bridge in Belfast).

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development how many street lights were in need of repair on 2 September 2015.
(AQW 49811/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department estimates that there were in the region of 12,000 street lights in need of repair on 2 September 2015.

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development whether she has any plans to install a pedestrian crossing at the children's play park in Scotch Quarter, Carrickfergus.

(AQW 49839/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department is aware of recent requests for a pedestrian crossing at the children's play park in Scotch Quarter, Carrickfergus. I have therefore asked officials to undertake surveys at this location to ascertain whether the pedestrian and traffic volumes are sufficient to justify the provision of a formal pedestrian crossing.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development whether she plans an investigation into the bonus schemes paid to Transport NI staff to ascertain whether they are fit for purpose.

(AQW 49852/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The current review of Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) Industrial Pay and Grading will consider all elements of pay, including incentive schemes. The proposals arising from the review will be subject to negotiation between NICS management and Trades Unions. It would not be appropriate to comment further on this issue at this stage.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development how many motorcyclists have been detected by bus lane cameras in prohibited instances.

(AQW 49858/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: There is specific legislation in place for each bus lane which determines when the bus lane is in operation and which vehicles can use it. In general terms the bus lanes can be used by:

- buses which can carry more than eight passengers (exclusive of the driver);
- Belfast public hire taxis and taxi buses;
- emergency vehicles;
- motorcycles; and
- bicycles.

Therefore no Penalty Charge Notices have been issued to motorcycles travelling in bus lanes.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development for her assessment of the impact on drivers who are blue badge holders of the enforced ban on vehicle use of bus lanes.

(AQW 50035/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The recent introduction of camera enforcement of moving traffic offences in bus lanes was not accompanied by any change in access arrangements, therefore it did not have any impact on Blue Badge holders.

The purpose of the Blue Badge scheme is to allow people with severe mobility problems to park close to where they need to go. It provides generous parking concessions for Badge holders which are not available to the majority of other drivers. The scheme does not however extend to allowing Badge holders to either park or drive in operational bus lanes.

Bus lanes are mainly provided for more sustainable forms of transport such as buses and bicycles. Motorcycles are permitted access for safety reasons and because they use less road space thereby reducing congestion. Certain taxis are permitted access as they operate in a similar fashion to public transport picking up fares on-street, and because they can also accommodate wheelchairs. Both buses and permitted taxis therefore accommodate people with disabilities. The signs adjacent to the individual length of bus lane will indicate what vehicles are permitted to use the facility during its time of operation.

A full Equality Impact Assessment was carried out for the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan and this concluded that the public transport proposals contained in the Plan, including the provision of bus lanes, would provide benefits across all equality categories identified in Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development for her assessment of the impact on older people and people with disabilities who use non-black taxis, who depend on restricted areas to enter or alight vehicles of the enforced ban on vehicle use of bus lanes.

(AQW 50037/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The recent introduction of camera enforcement of moving traffic offences in bus lanes was not accompanied by any change in access arrangements, so should not have had any direct impact on people with disabilities who use non-black taxis.

Bus lanes are mainly provided for more sustainable forms of transport such as buses and bicycles. Motorcycles are permitted access for safety reasons and because they use less road space, thereby reducing congestion. Certain taxis are permitted access as they operate in a similar fashion to public transport, that is, picking up fares on-street, and because they can also accommodate wheelchairs. The signs adjacent to the individual length of bus lane will indicate what vehicles are permitted to use the facility during its time of operation.

Whilst 'non-black' taxis, like the majority of other vehicles, are not permitted to enter, proceed or wait in an operational bus lane, there are opportunities for them to set down passengers on most of the routes in question, particularly given the fragmented nature of our network of bus lanes. Taxis can stop on yellow lines while passengers board or alight as long no other restriction is in force, such as an urban clearway. Non-permitted vehicles can also cross a bus lane to gain access to premises or to a lay-bay or parking area which is only accessible from that bus lane. Furthermore, the nature of our road network means that side streets and other viable alternatives are never that far away.

Whilst I can appreciate the inconvenience caused in terms of picking up and setting down passengers, I understand that it is not an issue that my Department has been strongly lobbied on in the past number of years.

In terms of the overall impact of bus lanes, a full Equality Impact Assessment was carried out for the Belfast Metropolitan Transport Plan and this concluded that the public transport proposals contained in the Plan, including the provision of bus lanes, would provide benefits across all equality categories identified in Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Regional Development how many of her departmental staff have a registered disability, broken down by (i) full time equivalent; and (ii) as a percentage of the workforce.

(AQW 50135/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: As at 28 October 2015, 79.9 full time equivalent staff in my Department had declared a disability. This represents 4.0% of my Department's workforce.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister for Regional Development for a breakdown of any investment, including capital, her Department has made in West Belfast since May 2011.

(AQW 50140/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department does not hold investment financial data for constituency areas so I am unable to detail all the investment made by my Department in West Belfast. Despite this a number of capital projects are separately identifiable for West Belfast and these are outlined below by each business area in my Department:

Transport NI

Total expenditure incurred within Belfast City Council by TransportNI in the financial years 2011/12 to 2014/15 has been £99m and an estimate of expenditure incurred for the six months to September 2015 is £6m.

The report as issued to Belfast City Council in Spring 2015 which detailed works undertaken during the year 2014/2015 and initial proposals for schemes to be undertaken in the year 2015/2016 can be accessed electronically via the following link - <https://www.drndi.gov.uk/publications/annual-report-belfast-city-council-2015>

Previous reports to Council can also be accessed via the Departments website.

Transport NI has also invested or made available funding to other bodies to advance works which would have impacted on West Belfast. These include planning and developing the Belfast Rapid Transit system including West Way, e-car charge points at Kennedy Way and Blacks Road, Belfast Bikes docking station at Millfield and Audio Visual equipment on 96 Metro buses which service the West Belfast area.

Translink

Translink has specifically invested £145k in capital projects in West Belfast in the Falls road Depot

Metro buses have been purchased over these financial years, a number of which have been deployed in West Belfast.

NI Water

From May 2011 to September 2015, the major Capital Investment by NI Water in the West Belfast area has been approximately £12.3m. This capital investment delivered improvements in water main and sewerage infrastructure, as well as improvements in above ground assets such as pumping stations, wastewater treatment works and reservoirs.

Other investment

In addition to the above projects my Department is responsible for the provision of day to day services to the benefit of all citizens. These include routine maintenance and winter service operations by Transport NI, the provision of public transport services by Translink and the provision of clean, safe drinking water and the provision of sewerage to the appropriate standard in support of a cleaner safer environment in West Belfast and throughout Northern Ireland by NI Water.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development how much of her remaining departmental budget has been earmarked for street lighting repairs (i) carried out by internal staff; and (ii) utilising outside contractors; and how this budget compares with the budget that was allocated to maintain street lighting during each of the last three years.

(AQW 50150/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The amount of my Department's budget which is earmarked for street lighting repairs, split by internal staff and outside contractors, is detailed below:

Street Lighting Repairs Budget	2015-16 £'000s
(i) carried out by internal staff	1,795
(ii) utilising outside contractors	800
Total	2,595

This compares to the budget to maintain street lighting in each of the three previous years as shown in the table below:

Street Lighting Repairs Budget	2012-13 £'000s	2013-14 £'000s	2014-15 £'000s
(i) carried out by internal staff	2,066	2,056	1,999
(ii) utilising outside contractors	4,794	2,779	3,316
Total	6,860	4,835	5,315

Department for Social Development

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how much has been spent on replacing heating systems in each financial year since April 2011, broken down by each of the five contract areas.

(AQW 50008/11-16)

Mr Storey: The NIHE have provided the following table which details the full spend since April 2011 on heating installations. Please note that the current 2015/16 financial year shows the 6 month period to 30th Sept 2015.

Heating Installation by Contract Area 2011 - Present

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of (i) homelessness in the last five years; and (ii) the capacity of the current housing stock to address this issue.

(AQW 50039/11-16)

Mr Storey: With regard to point (i) the changes in homelessness over the last 5 years have shown the following:

- From 2010-15 there was a decrease in the number of people presenting as homeless by around 3% reducing from 20,158 to 19,621 with the trend in households accepted as statutorily homeless remaining stable over the 5 year period at around 50% of applicants;

- Single households are consistently the highest household group of homeless presenters, representing a trend of about 50% of all households, with families at around 31% being the second largest household category.
- The trend in the same period for the top 3 reasons for households presenting as homeless remain as sharing breakdown/family dispute, accommodation not reasonable, and loss of rented accommodation.

With regard to point (ii) the social housing sector capacity has been significantly developed to address housing need has through the use of existing stock and new build. Other housing solutions, including the private rented sector, have also been utilised to address housing need.

The Housing Executive and Housing Associations allocate around 11,000 properties each year. The majority of these are allocated to homeless households, with 68% of all allocations in the last financial year being to those owed a full housing duty under homelessness legislation.

A total of 7,598 new or additional social housing homes have been provided over this period, averaging 1,520 completions per year.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development what consideration has been given to publishing a register of landlords as part of the Houses of Multiple Occupancy Bill.

(AQW 50043/11-16)

Mr Storey: Under the Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMO) Registration Scheme a list of registered properties is currently available from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive HMO offices on request.

Clause 62 of the Houses in Multiple Occupancy Bill requires each council to keep a similar HMO register which will be publicly available. The Department will publish guidance to assist councils with the new requirements.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development how many (i) remand; and (ii) sentenced prisoners, in each prison facility, are in receipt of (a) Disability Living Allowance; and (b) Employment and Support Allowance; and (iii) to detail the procedures undertaken in relation to prisoners who are in receipt of a Social Security Benefit immediately prior to detention.

(AQW 50060/11-16)

Mr Storey: Persons held in custody who are in receipt of (a) Disability Living Allowance and (b) Employment and Support Allowance are subject to a suspension of benefit following detention. However, some Income Related Employment and Support Allowance claimants may still be entitled to retain help with housing costs whilst on remand however that entitlement ends if the claimant is subsequently convicted. Information is not available on the number of people in this group as it is recorded on an individual customer's record and the IT system that is used to administer ESA does not hold data on the total number of people in this category.

The Social Security Agency and Northern Ireland Prison Service have a notification process in place to ensure that social security benefits, where applicable, are not inappropriately paid to those held in custody.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to reconsideration representations on disputed Employment and Support Allowance decisions, to detail a timeframe for (i) an acknowledgement of representation correspondence; (ii) a response to representations; and (iii) decisions following the submission of medical evidence of significant risk to mental or physical health.

(AQW 50074/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Social Security Agency has no specific timeframe for (i) an acknowledgement of representation correspondence; (ii) a response to representations; and (iii) decisions following the submission of medical evidence of significant risk to mental or physical health, in relation to reconsideration representations on disputed Employment and Support Allowance decisions.

Employment and Support Allowance aims to complete a reconsideration of a disputed decision within 30 working days of receipt, on average, and issue an appeals submission to the claimant and the Appeals Service within 40 working days of receipt, on average.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development under what circumstances Employment and Support Allowance decision makers can over rule written GP evidence confirming significant risk to an applicants physical and emotional health in relation to special circumstances.

(AQW 50075/11-16)

Mr Storey: All Employment and Support Allowance claimants are subject to the Work Capability Assessment process that determines their entitlement to benefit by assessing their capability for work and carrying out everyday tasks. The assessment process includes consideration of whether or not exceptional circumstances apply because of a serious or significant risk to the claimant's health and welfare due to their physical and/or mental health-related illness.

Under current legislation, the decision on a claimant's capability for work and whether or not exceptional circumstances should apply is made by an Employment and Support Allowance Decision Maker, who has received specialist training for this role, and who has access to detailed supporting advice and guidance for decision-making.

In making any decision, the Decision Maker will consider all of the available medical evidence, including the report of the work capability assessment, information provided by the claimant, and any other medical evidence from a GP or other healthcare professional.

All Social Security decisions can be reconsidered on request by another Decision Maker and/or can be appealed to the Appeal Tribunal.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development whether any financial termination packages have been paid, or will be paid, to any Special Advisers in consequence of ministerial resignations in his Department since September 2015.
(AQW 50078/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Special Adviser for the Department for Social Development has been paid a financial termination package in consequence of a ministerial resignation since September 2015.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development whether additional or exceptional circumstances, outside of annual income, may be considered as eligibility criteria for the Affordable Warmth Scheme.
(AQW 50109/11-16)

Mr Storey: The qualification criteria for the Affordable Warmth Scheme were determined following a public consultation on proposals between 17 February and 9 May 2014 regarding the Affordable Warmth Scheme. In the consultation, it was proposed to set the household income eligibility level for the Affordable Warmth Scheme at £16,190 (the then free schools meal limit). The findings of the first Affordable Warmth pilot "An Area Based Approach to Finding Households Most in Need" reported that half of the households surveyed had an annual income of less than £12,000 and two thirds of them had an annual income of less than £16,000.

As a result of the public consultation my Department decided that the annual household income level should be set at £20,000. In reaching this figure my Department considered the 2012/13 Family Resources Survey which showed that 39% of Northern Ireland households had an income less than £400 per week.

The £20,000 limit was set as part of the extensive consultation therefore there is no flexibility or discretion to take exceptional circumstances into account. My Department will review the Affordable Warmth Scheme, including the qualification criteria, after one full year of operation to ensure that those households most impacted by fuel poverty are assisted.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development what support is available to families that are at risk of fuel poverty, but are not eligible for the Affordable Warmth Scheme.
(AQW 50110/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Affordable Warmth Scheme is delivered in partnership between my Department, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and local councils. Local council staff make the initial contact with householders considered to be most at risk of fuel poverty to assess eligibility for the Affordable Warmth Scheme. Where the household is not eligible for assistance under the Affordable Warmth Scheme, council staff can refer them on to the Northern Ireland Sustainable Energy Programme which provides a range of schemes to assist low income households improve their energy efficiency. My Department's Boiler Replacement Scheme also provides a grant of up to £1,000 to replace old inefficient boilers. Council staff may also direct householders to the Bryson Energy Freephone advice line to obtain independent and impartial advice for domestic householders in Northern Ireland. This advice line is funded by my Department through the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. Advice and guidance is available on NI Direct for people who want to improve the energy efficiency of their homes.

Council staff also advise householders of the Social Security Agency's 'Make the Call' campaign and if the householder agrees they will send their details to the Make the Call team to undertake a Benefit Entitlement Check.

In addition my Department will issue the annual Winter Fuel Payment (£100 - £300) to qualifying households again this year. My Department also operates the Cold Weather Payment, which is issued to qualifying households when the temperature is or is forecast to be zero or below for 7 consecutive days between 1 November and 31 March. This payment could be made several times during the qualifying period, depending on the temperature.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development how many of his departmental staff have a registered disability, broken down (i) by full time equivalent; and (ii) as a percentage of the workforce.
(AQW 50115/11-16)

Mr Storey: The most up to date information is as at 01 July 2015, 499 Department for Social Development (DSD) staff had declared a disability which equates to 451 full time equivalent or 7% of DSD staff.

It should be noted that there is no requirement for an individual to declare that they have a disability.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Social Development to outline how the Northern Ireland Housing Executive is financed in relation to the Affordable Warmth Scheme.

(AQW 50122/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Affordable Warmth grants are funded by capital Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) funding. The administrative costs of the scheme are funded by resource DEL funding. The Affordable Warmth Scheme launched in September 2014 and its first full year of operation is the 2015/16 year. The 2015/16 budget allocations in respect of the Affordable Warmth Scheme are as follows:

- Capital DEL      £16.5m
- Resource DEL    £1.7m

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on new gambling legislation.

(AQW 50127/11-16)

Mr Storey: Gambling policy is currently under consideration. I will announce the way forward in due course.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the (i) average time; and (ii) longest time taken by his Department to respond to a Freedom of Information request since 2012.

(AQW 50149/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Department for Social Development has since October 2012 collated its average clearance time for Freedom of Information requests on a quarterly basis.

Since then the Department has received 849 Fol requests with the average clearance time of 18.02 days.

The longest clearance time taken to respond to a Freedom of Information request since October 2012 has been 497 days.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development how many people are living in sheltered accommodation in Foyle.

(AQW 50164/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that there are currently 595 people living in sheltered accommodation in the Foyle area of Londonderry.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people awarded full duty applicant homelessness points, broken down by Northern Ireland Housing Executive district in Foyle.

(AQW 50167/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that at 30 September 2015 the number of people awarded full duty applicant homelessness points in the Foyle parliamentary constituency, broken down by NIHE District area was:-

- Waterloo Place      224
- Waterside            179
- Collon Terrace      198

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of pending applications to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in Foyle, that have requested a property transfer based on medical or social grounds.

(AQW 50168/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that at the 1st October 2015 the number of pending transfer requests in respect of the Foyle Parliamentary Constituency registered on the waiting list that have been awarded points on medical or social grounds was 427. Of these requests 348 are deemed to be in housing stress (i.e. they have in excess of 30 points).

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development (i) whether reconsiderations in disputed Employment and Support Allowance decisions will all proceed as notification of intent to appeal; to detail (ii) when this decision was taken; (iii) whether representations continue to be considered; and (iv) whether cases move to appeal hearing only when representations have been fully examined and rejected by Employment and Support Allowance decision makers.

(AQW 50182/11-16)

Mr Storey: When a claimant disputes a social security decision they can:

- Ask for an explanation;
- Ask for it to be reconsidered;
- Ask for a written statement of reasons;
- Appeal against the decision.

The reconsideration process was introduced to ensure that where cases have been decided incorrectly they can be put right easily and quickly by the decision maker, and not at the tribunal level.

With regard to the specific issues that you have sought clarification on, the answers are detailed below:

- (i) A request for a reconsideration of a disputed Employment and Support Allowance decision will not proceed as notification of an intent to appeal unless the claimant asks for an appeal.
- (ii) Not applicable.
- (iii) A decision maker will reconsider a decision upon receipt of further evidence.
- (iv) A case will move to an appeal hearing when the decision maker has reconsidered the disputed decision taking account of all available evidence, is unable to change the decision (or can only partially change it) and the claimant has asked for an appeal.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister for Social Development whether neighbourhood renewal and regeneration powers will be transferred to councils in April 2016.

(AQO 9056/11-16)

Mr Storey: My Department is not transferring current programmes such as Neighbourhood Renewal to Councils. It is proposed however, through the Regeneration Bill, to confer powers on Councils and transfer to them relevant budgets to enable them to decide how to best tackle disadvantage and take forward regeneration and community development in their areas. In doing this they must have regard for guidance issued by the Department, including the Urban Regeneration and Community Development Policy Framework.

The proposed transfer of powers to local government in April 2016 is, however, dependent on the successful passage of the Regeneration Bill through the Assembly. It has successfully completed the Committee Stage and I am currently considering the way forward in light of a number of amendments proposed by the Social Development Committee.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the factors used when selecting an area for shared housing under Together: Building a United Community.

(AQW 50207/11-16)

Mr Storey: Prospective Together: Building a United Community shared neighbourhood schemes are assessed against overarching criteria, which have been approved by the Housing Executive's Chief Executive's Business Committee. The stage 1 criteria are:

- a Religious mix of the local community. This examines both the existing wider communities and the make-up of the proposed, new shared neighbourhood;
- b The waiting list should demonstrate that the scheme delivered would not have one community in the dominance of more than 70%;
- c A history of good relations in the area. This criterion considers communities which have participated in Housing Executive Good Relations programmes;
- d Potential size of development (not less than 25 units). Exceptions in rural areas will be considered; and
- e Local political/community issues/views indicate support for sharing.

Selection is made using a Selection Criteria Form with data provided by the Housing Executive's Community Cohesion Unit, and signed off by the Department for Social Development / Housing Executive Internal Oversight Group.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the review of the housing points system.

(AQW 50208/11-16)

Mr Storey: My officials are currently working up proposals for changes to the allocations system, following publication of independent recommendations on this issue. This is a fundamental review, which goes much further than looking solely at a points system. Any proposals for change will be subject to a full public consultation.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive properties in East Belfast still require an upgrade to gas heating.

(AQO 8958/11-16)

Mr Storey: Excluding Tower Blocks, there are 3,464 Housing Executive owned properties in East Belfast of which 2,754 currently have gas heating installed. The remaining 710 properties have Economy Seven, oil or solid fuel heating. It is intended that these properties will eventually be converted to gas in accordance with the Housing Executive programme of heating replacement, providing that the gas network is available, that gas can technically be installed in the property and it is safe to do so.

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the action his Department will take to ensure the lessons learnt from recent public realm schemes are shared across councils.

(AQO 8960/11-16)

Mr Storey: An integral part of the post project evaluation process within my department is to ensure that lessons learnt are recorded for all completed public realm schemes. These learning points are then disseminated across the development office structure within the department and applied to the planning and delivery of future projects in council areas across Northern Ireland. This action enables my officials to ensure the lessons learned from previous schemes are taken into account in the management of new public realm schemes, where appropriate.

I believe it is vitally important that construction works are closely managed to ensure that disruption to local business and shoppers is kept to a minimum. Prompt action is crucial when performance is considered to have dipped below that laid out in the project programme as was the case in a current scheme. I personally wrote to the Council Chief Executive to express my concern about the performance of the contractor and to offer the support of my officers and those from the Central Procurement Directorate to address issues that were causing concern. This co-ordinated action from all interested bodies helped to ensure the scheme was brought back on time and within budget.

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the schedule of planned maintenance for properties in East Antrim.

(AQO 8961/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive operates a large scale programme of planned maintenance across all its properties in Northern Ireland, including those in East Antrim.

I am happy to provide the Member with a written schedule of the particular maintenance schemes planned this year in East Antrim. However, to give some indication of the works planned, it is intended that approximately 288 properties in East Antrim will benefit from kitchen schemes and around 197 from heating schemes.

The Housing Executive is currently discussing with its contractors start dates for these schemes.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Special Adviser is bound by a departmental code of conduct.

(AQO 8962/11-16)

Mr Storey: All Special Advisers are Civil Servants and as such, they are bound by the rules on conduct contained in the Northern Ireland Civil Service Human Resources Handbook. In addition, Special Advisers are also bound by the Code of Conduct for Special Advisers.

There is no separate code of conduct for my department.

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister for Social Development what plans his Department has for the delivery of social housing in West Tyrone.

(AQO 8963/11-16)

Mr Storey: In order to help address identified housing need in West Tyrone, 31 new social housing units are planned to be delivered over the next three years. At present two schemes delivering 17 units are currently on site in Omagh, and will be completed during this financial year. A further eight unit scheme in Omagh and a six unit scheme in Strabane are programmed to start on site over the next two years.

The remaining housing need is expected to be addressed either through the reletting of existing stock or the refurbishment of void properties.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the public realm scheme in Lisburn City Centre.

(AQO 8964/11-16)

Mr Storey: My Department, along with Lisburn and Castlereagh City Council, is working diligently to ensure that work to the streets of Lisburn City Centre is completed as soon as possible. I anticipate that the vast majority of works will be completed by the end of October 2015, and any residual issues will be dealt with before Christmas. As with most Public Realm Schemes, no major work will be carried out on the cities' streets over the Christmas period.

Public realm improvement schemes can truly transform a place and can act as a catalyst for revitalising our town and city centres by creating new opportunities, attracting and bringing in new investment. The Lisburn Public Realm scheme is a very impressive scheme and it will significantly raise the quality of the environment, to help create the right environment to attract new business and leisure activities into the city centre. I am confident that this scheme will help to stimulate the local economy and help to sustain activity outside traditional business hours. I look forward to visiting the city centre to see the completed scheme in the near future.

Mr Lynch asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on his plans to reform licensing laws.

(AQO 8965/11-16)

Mr Storey: In November 2012 the then Minister for Social Development consulted on a number of proposed changes to current liquor licensing law, which sought to strike a balance between controlling the sale of alcoholic drinks and supporting the local hospitality sector.

In July 2014, the Executive agreed to the drafting of a Bill to introduce changes to liquor licensing law. The proposed changes include

- restrictions on the advertising of alcohol in supermarkets and off sales premises;
- introduction of an occasional additional late opening hour for certain licensed premises on up to 12 occasions per year;
- modest changes to the Easter opening hours for public houses, with normal opening hours applying on the Thursday and Saturday before Easter;
- the alignment of the alcohol and entertainment licensing systems to make enforcement of the law on late opening easier for the police;
- formal approval for codes of practice on the responsible sale of alcohol; and
- minor changes to the law affecting private members clubs

A Bill has been drafted and I am still considering the content of the draft Bill.

Mr Somerville asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the current area in hectares of both surplus and undeveloped land owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

(AQO 8966/11-16)

Mr Storey: There is a total of 29 hectares (71 acres) of land owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive which have been declared surplus for disposal.

In addition to the 29 hectares (71 acres) of surplus land, there is a further 194 hectares (479 acres) of undeveloped land owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. This gives a total of 223 hectares (551 acres) of undeveloped land on their Undeveloped Land Schedule.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the findings of the Poverty Bulletin 2013-2014.

(AQO 8967/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister currently has lead responsibility within the Executive for tackling poverty. However, my Department holds many of the policy and operational levers to address poverty and disadvantage on the ground and has and will continue to play a major role in progressing the Executive's Delivering Social Change Agenda, the aim of which is to break the cycle of poverty and disadvantage that characterises our most deprived individuals, families and communities.

My Department is responsible for measuring poverty in Northern Ireland and the results of the 2013-14 Poverty Bulletin would indicate that the overall long-term trend of poverty in Northern Ireland has remained fairly stable since 2002/2003, with approximately one fifth of the population living in poverty. Northern Ireland has experienced a slight increase in relative poverty from 19% in 2012-13 to 21% both before and after Housing Costs.

Clearly, there is much work still to be done by this Executive in relation to reducing poverty in Northern Ireland.

I would reiterate the full commitment of myself and my Department to continuing to work to support the Executive in its efforts to tackle poverty and social exclusion.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of whether the provision of social housing in rural areas matches that in urban areas.

(AQO 8968/11-16)

Mr Storey: I am committed to increasing the number of social homes throughout Northern Ireland whether it is in an urban or rural area. Housing activity in rural areas, which is classed as a settlement with a population of up to 5,000 is identified by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive through their Rural Action Plan, and then delivered through the Social Housing Development Programme.

During the last financial year 2,013 new social homes were started in Northern Ireland of which 119 were in rural areas. In monetary terms, this equates to some £6.5 million of Housing Association Grant invested in new social housing schemes in the rural parts of Northern Ireland to help address need and sustain local communities.

I continue to support the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's commitment to deliver social housing in rural communities.

Written Answers to Questions

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many cattle thefts, or reports of missing cattle, in each departmental area have been recorded with her Department in the (i) 2013; (ii) 2014; and (iii) 2015 calendar years to date; and how many of these cattle were recovered.

(AQW 50191/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): The figures below reflect reports received by my Department concerning cattle herds in each departmental area.

During the 2013 calendar year the reports received regarding missing/stolen cattle and those subsequently reported as recovered are as follows:

Divisional DARD Office	Total Incidents per departmental area	Total animals reported as missing/stolen	Total animals reported as recovered
Armagh	207	604	8
Ballymena	102	216	15
Coleraine	116	206	15
Dungannon	239	624	14
Enniskillen	161	280	11
Mallusk	92	178	11
Derry	41	137	0
Newry	243	817	34
Newtownards	90	272	7
Omagh	266	527	4

DARD's Veterinary Service Central Enforcement Team assist the PSNI in the investigation of such cases and share intelligence with them but we do not have access to any police records concerning their investigations nor the outcome of these.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 48915/11-16, when our Officially Brucellosis Free status will be published in the Official Journal of the EU; and what on-going yearly costs will apply to the lower level of surveillance testing over the next five years.
(AQW 50247/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: On 9 September 2015, we received the tremendous news that our application to the EU Commission for Officially Brucellosis Free (OBF) status had been approved by the Standing Committee on Plant, Animals, Food and Feed in Brussels.

On 6 October 2015, this decision was formally published in the Official Journal of the EU, thus confirming our formal recognition as an OBF region.

Achieving formal OBF status has allowed us to introduce further proportionate reduction in the frequency of testing in our surveillance regime, which must be maintained for 5 years after achieving OBF status.

These changes will greatly reduce the costs that our control measures place on both farmers and taxpayers. In recent years the cost to taxpayers has been some £8 million per year and related compliance costs for farmers have been some £7 million per year.

In June 2015 I reduced by half the level of surveillance testing for beef herds, that is by replacing annual testing by biennial testing. This will continue for another two years, when the level of testing will again reduce to testing one third of beef herds each year over the following three years. From September 2015 I abolished brucellosis pre-movement testing for moves within the north of Ireland. From October 2015 I increased the age at which animals are routinely tested from 12 to 24 months. From November 2015, testing for dairy herds will reduce to some 20% of herds per year over the next 5 years. Dairy herds can be tested less frequently than beef herds given the assurance provided by bulk milk sampling.

These changes will significantly reduce the on-going yearly costs of the Brucellosis Programme.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail her Department's spend on funding and capital projects in South Belfast since May 2011.
(AQW 49170/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): I apologise for the delay in responding to your question. Enquiries of this nature, which require the collation of information from a number of sources over a number of years, require more time to address than is usual.

I have attached a table listing the resource and capital spend by my Department and its arm's length bodies in South Belfast since May 2011. It should be noted that spend in this constituency is high compared with others. This is due mainly to the location of almost all of the Arts Council's major funded bodies (Lyric, GOH, Ulster Orchestra, NI Opera and Belfast Festival at Queen's) and of Windsor Park, which is undergoing redevelopment, within the constituency.

DCAL Funding in the South Belfast Constituency: May 2011 to Date

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the (i) capital; and (ii) resource costs associated with digitisation and online services within her Department and its arm's-length bodies in each of the last three years. (AQW 50057/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: A table is attached which details capital and resource costs associated with digitisation and online services for the last three years, including the current year to date.

You should note that the costs allocated to Electronic Libraries cover the entire project which includes both internal and client facing services. It has not been possible to separate these.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what opportunities exist for community or sports groups to apply for funding for a minibus through the Tackling Poverty initiative in 2015-16.

(AQW 50215/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: All of the activity supported by my Department is focussed on the Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion (PETPSE) agenda, aimed at improving the lives of those most in need. This includes the activity undertaken directly by the Department and that of our Arm's Length Bodies.

In the current financial year 2015-16, there is no specific grant scheme administered by my Department with opportunities for community or sports groups to apply for funding for a minibus through the Tackling Poverty initiative.

In 2014/15 under the PETPSE agenda, the Department funded a pilot Community Minibus Scheme. The aim of the scheme was to provide transport to a range of community-based organisations that have been excluded from undertaking certain activities due to the unavailability or expense of transport.

The evaluation of this pilot scheme along with the availability of funding will determine if the scheme will be rolled out on a larger scale.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the availability of funding for musical instruments for bands.

(AQW 50219/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The cuts imposed on the north are unprecedented and the consequences are unpalatable in every part of the Department's business. The shortfall in my Department's capital budget meant that the Arts Council was unable to introduce the Musical Instruments for Bands Scheme in April this year. The scheme remains on hold until funding can be secured.

As I have clarified previously, the Scheme has not been withdrawn and I remain committed to supporting it. I will continue to work to ensure that it is adequately supported and funded going forward.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail (i) why Libraries NI board members receive remunerations whether they attend board meetings or not; and (ii) whether she will consider examining a linkage between attendance at meetings and remuneration.

(AQW 50242/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: All Libraries NI board members have received remuneration for overseeing the work of the Authority, including attending Board meetings and other events, since the organisation was created in 2009. The purpose of remuneration is to encourage diversity in applications for membership of the Libraries NI Board and to reinforce the importance of the work the Board does in managing and promoting the public library service in the North of Ireland. Libraries NI also has a statutory obligation to remunerate its Chair and other Board members under Article 4, Schedule 1, of the Libraries Act (NI) 2008.

The question of establishing a linkage between attendance at Libraries NI Board meetings and remuneration has been, and is, the subject of ongoing consideration and examination. Previous considerations by my Department suggested that removal from the Board would be the most appropriate sanction for persistent non-attendance at meetings. Other options, including re-couping of salary and payment per meetings, are currently being considered as possible future control measures by Libraries NI in conjunction with DCAL. It is my view that a government wide policy on board member remuneration is needed. Any decision as to whether or not such a policy is required would ultimately be a matter for the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP).

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQO 7498/11-15, for an update on the development of a business case aimed at securing resources for the development of a new public library in Enniskillen; and whether consideration has been given to the potential synergies from co-locating on a site with the South West College.

(AQW 50270/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI is in the process of finalizing a draft business case aimed at securing resources for the development of a new and improved public library in Enniskillen. Due to a range of other emerging pressures and resource commitments, it is unlikely that this business case will be completed until early in the New Year.

As part of the business case development process, Libraries NI is considering whether or not synergies can be achieved by co-locating the Library with the South West College on the old Erne Hospital site. The same process, however, also requires that the benefits of any co-location be fully tested and evaluated alongside a range of other potential options. One of these is that the Library should remain at its existing site, which is readily accessible to the centre of Enniskillen, and where it has already built up a strong and valued presence in the community.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to publish the attendance record of each board member of Libraries NI at board meetings in 2014-15.

(AQW 50287/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI has published details of the attendance of Board members at its board meetings in 2014/15 in its Annual Report & Accounts for that year. These are set out on pages 53 and 54 of the document which is available on the Libraries NI website.

A copy of this table is set out below:

Name	Possible Attendance	Actual Attendance
Mr Nigel Macartney (Chairperson until 31 October 2014)	4	4
Professor Bernard Cullen (Chairperson from 1 November 2014)	2	2

Dr Margaret Ward	6	5
Ms Jane Williams	6	6

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline her response to the Audit Office report criticising two board members of Libraries NI for their non-attendance at board meetings.
(AQW 50288/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I accept the findings of the Audit Office's recently completed report into the 2014/15 financial statement of Libraries NI as well as Libraries NI's management response to that report. I consider the level of non-attendance at Board meetings of two Board members in 2014/15, as described in the report, to be unsatisfactory. This level of attendance is out of step with that of the majority of Board members who in 2014/15 provided, and continue to provide, a dedicated service that supports Libraries NI's excellent work in the community.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list the organisations in North Down that have received funding through the Cultural Programme in each of the last three years.
(AQW 50340/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The organisations in receipt of funding through the culture programme in each of the last three years were not based in North Down.

The first Cultural Programme in 2013 was established to complement the World Police and Fire Games which were taking place in Belfast. The 2014 Cultural Programme also took place in Belfast.

In 2015, my Department will support another Cultural Programme which will be a cross community programme of arts and cultural events and festivals delivered by Cultural Partners from right across Belfast and also for the first time from a rural area.

Mr Wells asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps she has taken to recognise the recent success of the Northern Ireland football team.
(AQW 50404/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I was delighted with the NI Team's recent success in qualifying as group winners for the UEFA European Championship Finals in France next year.

To recognise this success, I issued a Press Release on 8 October to publically congratulate the team on their fantastic achievement.

I also wrote to Patrick Nelson, CEO, Irish Football Association (IFA), on 28 October to congratulate the team and officials of the IFA on their success and to invite them to DCAL's annual Celebration of Sport event in Enniskillen on 9 March 2016.

Furthermore, at Oral Question Time on 3 November, I again congratulated manager Michael O'Neill and the team on securing a place at the Finals in France in 2016 and stated that I had invited officials of the IFA and the players to take part in the Celebration of Sport event.

I look forward to the tournament in France next year and wish the team every continued success in the Championship Finals.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much funding has been donated by patrons to museums in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50450/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department's investment in the museums sector is primarily directed to National Museums and the NI Museums Council (NIMC). The NIMC has not received any financial donations during the last three years.

The funding which has been donated by patrons to National Museums (i.e. money received from donation boxes) in each of the last three years is as follows:

Year	Amount Donated(£)
2012/13	£22,184
2013/14	£39,035
2014/15	£65,793
Total	£127,012

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) when the business case for the Cultural Programme for 2014-2015 was received by her Department; (ii) when it was signed off; and (iii) by whom it was signed off.

(AQW 50559/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: A bid was submitted on 6th June 2014 through June monitoring for the Executive to support a Cultural Programme in 2014/2015.

As June Monitoring was significantly delayed in 2014, a final business case was signed off by the then Director of Culture on 5th December 2014.

The Committee was advised about the proposed bid for the 2014/2015 Cultural Programme on 5th June 2014.

Department of Education

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) capital; and (ii) resource costs associated with digitisation and online services within his Department and its arm's-length bodies in each of the last three years.

(AQW 49772/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The costs incurred on the transformation and delivery of citizen facing digital services within my Department and its ALBs are given in the table below. The figures for 2015/16 are based upon expenditure to date.

	2013-2014	2014-2015	2015-2016
DE Capital	0	183,000	85,000
DE Resource	276,000	349,990	93,000
ALB Capital	34,000	8,015	0
ALB Resource	266,216	250,929	78,921

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Education how many (i) schools in West Tyrone had accommodation issues raised by the Education and Training Inspectorate in the last three years; and (ii) of these issues are still outstanding.

(AQW 49842/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Nine (9) schools in West Tyrone had accommodation issues raised by the Education and Training Inspectorate in the last three years and of these six (6) are still outstanding, which include ongoing works, or works planned to proceed once the necessary funding is secured.

Some of the issues highlighted by ETI, however, may be able to be addressed directly by the school, in conjunction with the Education Authority. Other works may require a longer term solution.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education when he will publish his Department's policy for Looked After Children.
(AQW 49928/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My officials are liaising with the Health Department to consider how we can work together effectively for the benefit of children in care. I am also keen that we continue to listen to the voice of young people in care so that we get it right in relation to improving their educational experience and outcomes. This experience should be no less than that of any other young person.

I am aware of the upcoming OECD case study report in relation to improving the educational outcomes for Looked After Children, and I will want to take the findings into account, along with continued collaborative work with the Health Department.

My officials will continue to develop our policy into 2016 for implementation in the 2016/17 school year. I am determined to get it right in terms of supporting and nurturing children in care in an educational setting.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) number of teachers in primary and post-primary schools suspended from work in the last five years; and (ii) number of teachers (a) that were reinstated; (b) that resigned; and (c) that were dismissed.

(AQW 49983/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education does not employ teachers, and as such is not directly involved in employment matters, including the precautionary suspension of teachers. Teachers are employed by the relevant Board of Governors (BoG) for each school setting. Decisions on precautionary suspension are therefore a matter for the BoG, in conjunction with the relevant employing authority.

Teachers can be placed on precautionary suspension by the BoG, the Chairperson of the BoG or the Principal for any of the following reasons:

- an allegation of misconduct which requires to be investigated; or
- an allegation of a child protection nature; or
- on medical or health and safety grounds awaiting a referral to an Occupational Health physician.

The decision to place a teacher on precautionary suspension, without prejudice, should only be taken after careful consideration and where it is deemed absolutely necessary.

Details of the (i) number of teachers in primary and post-primary schools suspended from work in the last five years; and (ii) number of teachers (a) that were reinstated; (b) that resigned; and (c) that were dismissed are shown in the tables below as provided by the Education Authority and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools.

(i) Number of teachers in primary and post-primary schools suspended from work in the last five years:

Financial Years	Primary Schools	Post-Primary Schools	Total
2010/11	8	10	18
2011/12	14	8	22
2012/13	22	10	32
2013/14	14	14	28
2014/15	10	13	23
Total	68	55	123

Notes:

- Information is not available in relation to Voluntary Grammar Schools and Grant Maintained Integrated Schools.
- Some suspensions will transcend more than one financial year.
- Figures are in financial years.

(ii) Number of teachers: (a) that were reinstated; (b) that resigned; and (c) that were dismissed:

Number of Teachers Reinstated	Number of Teachers who Resigned	Number of Teachers Dismissed
95	51	6

Notes:

- Information is not available in relation to Voluntary Grammar Schools and Grant Maintained Integrated Schools.
- 1 One Teacher Retired.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail the cost of (i) salaries; (ii) pension contributions; (iii) National Insurance contributions paid; and (iv) legal expenses associated with teachers suspended from work in the last five years.

(AQW 50007/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education does not employ teachers, and as such is not directly involved in employment matters, including the precautionary suspension of teachers. Teachers are employed by the relevant Board of Governors (BoG) for each school setting. Decisions on precautionary suspension are therefore a matter for the BoG, in conjunction with the relevant employing authority.

The decision to place a teacher on precautionary suspension, without prejudice, should only be taken after careful consideration and where it is deemed absolutely necessary.

Details on the cost of (i) salaries; (ii) pension contributions; and (iii) National Insurance Contributions paid to teachers suspended from work in the last five years are outlined in the table below. The information required to answer these questions has been taken from the Teachers' Pay and Pensions Team payroll system. However, Voluntary Grammar schools are excluded because the Department does not pay these teachers.

Financial Years	Gross Salary Costs £	Pension Contribution Costs £	National Insurance Costs £	Total £
2010/11	503,246.15	68,349.93	40,094.37	611,690.45

Notes:

- Figures do not include Voluntary Grammar Schools
- Figures are in financial years

Details on the cost of (iv) legal expenses associated with teachers suspended from work in the last five years is not available, as this information is not presently collated by Employing Authorities or the Department.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Education for a breakdown of any investment, including capital his Department has made in West Belfast since May 2011.

(AQW 50087/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the table below.

	2011/12 £	2012/13 £	2013/14 £	2014/15 £	Total £

* includes spend on schools, school meals kitchens, youth clubs, transport, Sure Start, special needs etc.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of local Integrated schools.
(AQW 50102/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: A breakdown of integrated schools in 2015/16 is as follows:

	Primary	Post-primary	Total
Controlled integrated	20	5	25
Grant maintained integrated	23	15	38
Total integrated	43	20	63

Source: NI school census

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail how much of his Department's budget has been assigned to the Catholic Maintained sector in each of the last five financial years.
(AQW 50145/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The amount of my Department's budget that has been assigned to the Catholic Maintained Sector in each of the last five financial years is detailed in the table below:

	2010-11 £000s	2011-12 £000s	2012-13 £000s	2013-14 £000s	2014-15 £000s
Capital	16,251	26,542	27,155	22,272	54,866
Resource 1	430,9312	427,8652	425,386	424,963	435,1623

- 1 Resource figures include funding relating to the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS), the aggregated schools budget, earmarked funds delegated to schools and funds delegated to schools from block grant.
- 2 Figures include CCMS Voluntary Severance Funding of £460k and £687k in 2010-11 and 2011-12 respectively.
- 3 Figures include Transitional Funding where applicable.

The Education Authority (former Education and Library Boards) also receive an annual block grant allocation, however, excluding delegated funds noted above, block grant is generally not assigned to Schools, therefore it is not possible for the Education Authority (EA) to identify the element of block grant budget that is attributable to the Catholic Maintained Sector.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the investment (i) allocated to St Louis, Ballymena in the last two financial years; and (ii) planned for St Louis, Ballymena in the next two financial years.
(AQW 50196/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I announced the School Enhancement Programme scheme for St Louis Ballymena in March 2014 representing a planned investment of £4.0m. The final designs have been approved and the scheme is currently 3rd on the list of prioritised schemes, held pending availability of capital funds for the construction works. To date £82k has been grant aided for design services associated with this project.

In addition during 2014/15 and 2015/16 a number of minor works have been approved for St Louis valued at £515,086.30. These include kerbs, canteen refurbishment, kerbing and pavements, 4 replacement mobiles and photovoltaic panels

Approval in principal was issued on 13 March 2015 for provision of a modular canteen to progress at an estimated cost of £800,000 however the EA has recently advised that following additional consideration the preferred option is to provide a permanent build canteen at an additional £200k.

Fire Risk Assessment Works have also been approved to proceed to pre-tender stage. As construction costs are estimated at £1m a business case is required to justify expenditure above the minor works threshold of £500k. The scheme can only progress to construction should additional budget become available.

A number of other minor works have been submitted by the school including refurbishment of home economics accommodation.

Until budgets for future years are confirmed for Education, I am unable to confirm capital investment figures for 2016/17 and 2017/18.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education what investment is planned for Ballymena Nursery School to improve the health and safety of pupils.
(AQW 50198/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Ballymena Nursery School (NS) is a controlled nursery school and as such the Education Authority (EA) has responsibility for it. The EA fully appreciates the needs of the school and has been progressing works related to the health and safety of pupils as a priority within available resources. This has included completion of four schemes with a high Disability Discrimination Act priority for specific pupils. Further funding for minor works has been made available and this will enable nine further schemes to be progressed in this financial year to address urgent health & safety issues at the school.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) actual; and (ii) approved intake numbers for each post-primary school in Omagh in the last three academic years.

(AQW 50245/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Actual year 8 enrolments and approved admissions figures for post-primary schools in the former Omagh LGD for the last three years can be found overleaf.

Notes:

- 1 Most recent figures relate to the 2014/15 academic year. While the 2015/16 school census took place on the 9th October this year, provisional figures will not be available until December 2015 and will not be finalised figures until February 2016.
- 2 An approved admissions number is the number of year 8 pupils a school can admit. Please note that the number of unfilled places in year 8 is not the difference between the approved and actual admissions; statemented children and children admitted by appeal or by direction of the ECB are supernumerary. A school can only exceed this number with the permission of the Department.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children that have been waiting over twelve months for Special Educational Needs or autism assessments.

(AQW 50266/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that it does not collect information on categorisation of special educational need (SEN) until the statement of special educational needs is complete.

With regard to all categories of SEN there were twenty children who were waiting for more than 12 months for their statutory assessment of SEN to be completed as at 30 October 2015.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of pupils that have received an Autism Spectrum Disorder statement, broken down by constituency in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50272/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that the information is not available by constituency.

The number of pupils who have received a statement of special educational needs and whose primary special educational need is Autism in each of the last three academic years, broken down by region, is as follows:

	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Belfast	111	138	73
North Eastern	27	40	54
South Eastern	111	101	135

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Education for an update on the future configuration of Maintained post-primary schools in Enniskillen.

(AQW 50281/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: As the managing authority for maintained schools, it is the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) role to manage provision and bring forward Development Proposals (DPs) relating to maintained schools in the Enniskillen area.

To date no DPs have been brought forward for maintained post-primary schools in Enniskillen. I have been advised that CCMS are conducting a pre consultation on the future of post-primary education in the Enniskillen area, reflecting the commitment in the former WELB Strategic Area Plan published in January 2015.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail any post-primary school with fewer than 300 pupils enrolled in 2014-15; and in each case the number of pupils enrolled.

(AQW 50292/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: There are 28 post-primary schools with fewer than 300 pupils. They are as follows:

Aughnacloy College	153

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Education to detail the expected timeframe for the passage of the Shared Education Bill. (AQW 50300/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Shared Education Bill was introduced to the Assembly on 2 November 2015 and second stage is scheduled for 10 November. The Committee stage would commence immediately thereafter and providing there is not an extension to this stage, I would anticipate the Consideration stages taking place during February with the Final stage in early March.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Education whether his Department intends to formally mark the European Day on the Protection of Children Against Sexual Exploitation and Abuse.

(AQW 50301/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department has made the European Day on the 'Protection of Children against Sexual Exploitation and Abuse' the subject of the November 'Message of the Month' to mark the launch. The 'Message of the Month' forms part of the i-Matter programme, which aims to address issues relating to emotional health and wellbeing.

My Department continues to engage with schools to share information and advice on the issue of child sexual exploitation. I recently published my Departments progress report on the CSE Action Plan, following the Marshall Report. In August 15 I issued new guidance for schools on Relationship and Sexuality Education (RSE) and Drugs Education, this guidance references the recent inquiries into child sexual exploitation and provides an opportunity for schools to play a preventative role by improving awareness amongst staff of the vulnerability factors and current indicators of child sexual exploitation.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education what action he is taking to address the accommodation issues at Enniskillen Integrated Primary School.

(AQW 50327/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I am pleased to confirm I have given approval for a 2 classroom extension at Enniskillen Integrated Primary School to proceed under the Minor Capital Works Programme. The Education Authority is currently drawing up detailed design and specification to enable works to proceed to tender.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education for an update on the new Controlled sector body.

(AQW 50328/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Work is progressing to establish the Controlled Schools' Support Council (CSSC) as agreed by the Executive in September 2014. A contract for funding is being prepared and will shortly be issued to enable the CSSC to be formally established.

In the interim period, my Department continues to provide funding to support the Working Group to oversee the establishment of the CSSC. This funding will continue until the Council is established.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education, given the limited response from schools in reporting Levels of Progression, whether his Department is considering other methods of measuring educational attainment.

(AQO 9005/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The statements that make up the Levels of Progression flow from our revised curriculum and focus not just on knowledge but on skills and their application. They are closely and deliberately aligned to our curriculum. They were developed with input from teachers and other educational professionals and the current system of assessment was passed into legislation by the Assembly following scrutiny by the Education Committee.

Despite the challenges relating to the implementation of the current arrangements, I have not heard a compelling case for a different approach. In fact, the main teaching unions and I are in agreement that teacher judgement of pupils' progress and achievement in the areas of our curriculum remains the best way forward. Equally, when it reviewed our arrangements in 2013, the OECD called on us not to change them but to consolidate and build consensus around them

So Key-Stage outcomes will continue to be an important aspect of performance measurement at system level. However, they cannot be the only means we use of measuring the performance of either our system or the schools within it. That is why work is underway to look at the potential to develop a wider range of performance and contextual information (a 'dashboard' of measures) which could be used to enhance understanding of the performance of our education system.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the schools in North Down that have received Extended Schools Funding in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50347/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The required information is set out in the table below.

Schools located in the North Down constituency eligible to receive Extended Schools (ES) funding	2013/14	2014/15	2015/16
Clandeboye Primary School	Eligible	Eligible	Eligible

Mr Lyons asked the Minister of Education to detail the percentage of pupils with Special Educational Needs statements in (a) Controlled; (b) Maintained; (c) Integrated; and (d) Irish-medium schools.

(AQW 50349/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The percentage of statemented pupils in 2014/15 broken down by school type is as follows:

	(a) Controlled	(b) Maintained	(c) Integrated	(d) Irish medium schools
Primary schools	2.9%	2.9%	3.3%	1.7%
Post-primary schools	4.1%	6.4%	8.1%	3.6%

Notes:

- 3 Figures relate to the 2014/15 academic year. While the 2015/16 school census took place on the 9th October this year, provisional figures will not be available until December 2015 and will not be finalised figures until February 2016.
- 4 Figures include pupils at stage 5 on the Special Educational Needs Code of Practice.
- 5 Pupils in primary schools include those in nursery, reception and year 1-7 classes.
- 6 Maintained schools refers to both Catholic Maintained and Other Maintained schools
- 7 Integrated schools refers to both Controlled Integrated and Grant Maintained Integrated schools. Controlled Integrated schools have not been included in the total for Controlled schools.
- 8 As Irish medium schools are not a school management type like the other categories, statemented pupils in Irish medium schools have also been included in the Controlled and Maintained figures.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Education what steps his Department has taken in each of the last five years to address (i) educational inequalities; (ii) educational underachievement; and (iii) the effects of poverty on the learning process.

(AQW 50366/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Since coming to office I have been determined to take action to break the link between social disadvantage and educational underachievement wherever it exists.

I have the correct policies such as 'Every School a Good School' and the 'Literacy and Numeracy Strategy' in place and these are being implemented with renewed vigour.

I have provided additional resources to schools serving those most at risk of underachieving, through the weighting of school funding, and through targeted programmes such as Extended Schools, the Full Service Programmes and Nurture Units.

Funded programmes have been implemented to improve literacy and numeracy outcomes including the Delivering Social Change (DSC) Literacy and Numeracy Signature programme; the Special Educational Needs Literacy CPD project and the Strategic Development Fund to Area Learning Communities. A Legacy Programme will continue the success of the DSC Literacy and Numeracy Signature programme.

I have also provided funding to support programmes aimed at improving school-community links. These include the Community Education Initiatives Programme and the Greater West Belfast Community Project. In addition, the Education Works programme launched in 2012 highlights the vital role parents can play in helping their child do well at school and improve their life chances.

Other programmes that are impacting positively on addressing educational inequalities and educational underachievement include the revised SEN and Inclusion framework; the full implementation of the Entitlement Framework; Sure Start; the Early Years fund; the Achieving Belfast and Achieving Derry-Bright Futures Programmes.

The provision of free school meals (FSM) and school uniform grants to pupils from low income families are key measures through which my Department supports learning and ensures that all pupils have an equal opportunity to fulfil their potential. The eligibility criteria for FSM were extended from 2010/11, on a phased basis, to pupils from low income families in nursery and primary schools and to post-primary schools from 2014/15. Over this period the number of children entitled to FSM has increased by over 35,000 pupils.

In 2014/15, over 97,000 pupils were entitled to FSM across the education sector. FSM entitlement normally also brings with it entitlement to a school uniform grant (with the exception of nursery school pupils).

However, there are two other key issues. Firstly, a socially balanced education system enables all pupils to perform better. While some schools persist in the use of academic selection, we will be unable to eradicate this social division.

Secondly, inequality in outcomes is a societal issue and one that education authorities and schools cannot tackle on their own. The challenge of tackling inequalities, be they educational, health or economic, is one that we all face and success will depend on all stakeholders working together in order to achieve greater equity in our society.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children in each Irish-medium school in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50372/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Enrolments in Irish medium schools in 2012/13 – 2014/15 are as follows:

Source: NI school census

Notes:

- 9 Figures relate to the 2014/15 academic year. While the 2015/16 school census took place on the 9th October this year, provisional figures will not be available until December 2015 and will not be finalised figures until February 2016.
10. Figures for primary includes nursery, reception and year 1 - 7 classes.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education for an update on the scoping study to outline possible models for primary school counselling further to the recommendations of the Audit of Counselling and other Therapeutic interventions in Primary and Special Schools in October 2009.

(AQW 50408/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I remain committed to providing counselling support to pupils of primary school age.

The Department is in the process of collating data and researching models that would be suitable for younger children. The 2015 School Omnibus Survey, which is due for publication by the end of the year, included a section on primary school counselling and this information will inform the departmental analysis. The aim is to have an appropriate model identified by late 2016.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education whether he has any plans to change the curriculum to include mental health.

(AQW 50415/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: In our curriculum at primary level, managing feelings and emotions is a compulsory element of Personal Development and Mutual Understanding and provides opportunities for pupils to better understand their own feelings and the feelings of others, as well as how to sustain their health, growth and wellbeing.

At post-primary level, the Personal Health strand of Learning for Life and Work provides opportunities for pupils to understand the importance of recognising and managing factors that may influence physical and emotional/mental health throughout life.

The statutory curriculum clearly states that pupils should be taught about the importance of learning about mental health and wellbeing.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education, under current legislation, (i) whether parents can place their child in a private pre-school for an additional year; and if so, (ii) to detail the circumstances which allow this to take place.

(AQW 50428/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Current legislation does not enable parents to defer their child's starting age. Article 45 of the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986 states that the parent of every child of compulsory school age shall cause him/her to receive full time education suitable to his/her age, ability, aptitude and to any special educational needs he/she may have, either by regular attendance at school or otherwise.

The most common way that parents do this is by sending their child to school when they reach compulsory school age. However, parents can decide to make their own arrangements when their child reaches compulsory school age and attendance at a non-funded/private pre-school may form part of these arrangements. Parents making these arrangements would be required to meet the cost of a pre-school place.

If at any stage it appears to the Education Authority (EA) that a parent is not meeting the duty as set out above, the EA will write to the parents asking them to demonstrate that their child is receiving suitable full time education.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education (i) for his assessment of the issue that not all children are ready to start formal schooling at four years of age; (ii) to detail how parental concerns that their child is not ready to start school is addressed in the new guidance on school starting age; and (iii) whether he plans to introduce any flexibility on school starting ages in the future.

(AQW 50429/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The foundation stage of the curriculum is specifically designed to provide an age-appropriate education for pupils in Years 1 and 2. The foundation stage provides teachers with flexibility to use their professional judgement and adapt their teaching to best meet the needs of their pupils and to provide for diagnostic assessment, which will provide greater opportunities for teachers to pick up earlier on pupils with particular difficulties.

The Education Authority published its "School Starting Age – A Guide for Parents" on 29 October 2015. This guidance covers a range of issues associated with school starting age, including advice for parents who are worried that their child is not ready to start school.

I have said before that I am keen to introduce flexibility on school starting age in certain circumstances but this will require a change to primary legislation. Compulsory School Starting Age

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the rationale behind recent departmental guidance that makes four years the compulsory school starting age; and (ii) what support is available for primary schools to put in place different arrangements for individual Year 1 children that find starting school challenging.

(AQW 50430/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The date of commencement of compulsory school age is defined in the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986, as amended by the Education Reform (NI) Order 1989, changing school starting age from five to four. This was to take account of the fact that many parents enrolled their children at four years of age and was to ensure that all children had access to an equal number of years of school. A cut off date of 1 July, provided clarity for parents and schools on the beginning of compulsory school age that was common to all children rather than relying on the date of birth of the individual child.

I understand that, for a variety of reasons, some children may have more difficulty settling into primary school than others. My Department issued guidance on 14 April 2015 on "Induction and Transition to Year 1 of Primary School" which noted that for these children, primary schools may need to put in place different arrangements for induction and transition to P1 to take account of the individual circumstances of the child.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education whether children starting school later than four years of age can be placed in a year group which is different to their own chronological year.

(AQW 50431/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Parents of children who did not start school at four years of age, and were educated outside the formal school system, can apply for a place in a grant-aided school at any time. A child applying for admission to a school would be admitted to his/her chronological age group.

Nevertheless, the flexibility does exist for children to move outside their chronological age group. Any such decision is made by a school's Board of Governors, taking into account the views of parents, the Principal and the Education Authority. This could see a child moving to a year group below his/her chronological age or to a year group above his/her chronological age.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 50161/11-16, when the funding for the accommodation requirements at Kilronan School will become available.

(AQW 50436/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: I am pleased to tell you that I have secured additional funding for minor works which will include a scheme to provide additional accommodation at Kilronan School. This funding has been released to the Education Authority (EA). The EA anticipates that, subject to all necessary approvals, on-site works will commence at the school before the end of this financial year.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 49774/11-16, what actions can an individual that believes they come under the exceptional circumstances reference take if they have been unable to convince the General Teaching Council of the nature of their case.

(AQW 50626/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The General Teaching Council (GTCNI) is responsible for registering teachers. This function is provided for in the Education (Northern Ireland) 1998 and regulations made under it. Those regulations provide that a person is not eligible for registration if he/she is not a qualified teacher. The qualifications required are determined by GTCNI rather than my Department. Applications are dealt with on a case by case basis and decisions may vary according to individual circumstances.

Anyone wishing to register as a teacher should contact GTC to discuss their case including what steps they might take in order to become eligible for registration.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education what actions his Department has taken to improve uptake of the cycle to work scheme.

(AQW 50654/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: When the NICS Cycle to Work Scheme was re-launched in February 2014 it was promoted corporately to all NICS staff. No additional action to improve uptake has been taken in the Department of Education because it is now an established NICS wide scheme, which permits staff to make applications all year round.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Education for an update on the planned new build for Holy Trinity College, Cookstown.

(AQW 50761/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is currently working with the Department of Finance and Personnel to secure approval of the business case for Holy Trinity College, Cookstown.

It is too early to be able to estimate when construction works for the new school would commence.

Department for Employment and Learning

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how a terrorist tribute, displayed at St Mary's University College Belfast, was permitted in a government funded facility.

(AQW 49649/11-16)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): My expectation is that all higher education institutions must be shared and inclusive environments.

Like others, St Mary's University College is responsible for its policies and procedures, including adherence to Section 75 and other equality legislation. My Department highlights in the annual grant letters to all institutions their responsibility to adhere to the relevant legislation.

All higher education institutions engage with the wider community, and this is now an expectation under our higher education strategy. In this regard, St Mary's is responsible for deciding how its premises are used.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether his Department will (i) carry out an investigation into the potential damage caused by the terrorist tribute at St Mary's University College Belfast, particularly in respect of its obligations as an equal opportunities employer and its acceptance of students from all communities; and (ii) determine whether a breach of its Equal Opportunities Policy has occurred as per Section 4.1 paragraph 2.

(AQW 49784/11-16)

Dr Farry: My expectation is that all higher education institutions must be shared and inclusive environments.

Like others, St Mary's University College is responsible for its policies and procedures, including adherence to Section 75 and other equality legislation. My Department highlights in the annual grant letters to all institutions their responsibility to adhere to the relevant legislation.

All higher education institutions engage with the wider community, and this is now an expectation under our higher education strategy. In this regard, St Mary's is responsible for deciding how its premises are used.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to ascertain how the terrorist tribute at St Mary's University College, Belfast balances against their Mission Statement.

(AQW 49909/11-16)

Dr Farry: My expectation is that all higher education institutions must be shared and inclusive environments.

Like others, St Mary's University College is responsible for its policies and procedures, including adherence to Section 75 and other equality legislation. My Department highlights in the annual grant letters to all institutions their responsibility to adhere to the relevant legislation.

All higher education institutions engage with the wider community, and this is now an expectation under our higher education strategy. In this regard, St Mary's is responsible for deciding how its premises are used.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what consideration has he given to his Department collaborating with the European Social Fund, United Youth Programme and Steps 2 Success providers to ensure that individuals can complete their training with, or participation on, other projects before they are ready to progress onto Steps 2 Success.

(AQW 50170/11-16)

Dr Farry: Steps 2 Success (S2S) is my Department's main employment programme, and is part of a wider package of support, which my Department's Employment Service Advisers can offer to unemployed clients.

Employment Service Advisers offer advice, guidance and assistance to help unemployed clients find work at the earliest opportunity. This support includes a range of other programmes designed to move unemployed clients into work. These programmes include the European Social Fund Programme and the United Youth Programme.

European Social Fund Programme

European Social Fund (ESF) Programme aims to support participants with pre-employment training to enhance jobsearch skills, improve confidence and acquire the necessary skills to access sustainable employment. Support can include providing vocational training for employability up to Level 1. All applications submitted to the European Social Fund had to demonstrate how they would not duplicate local provision in other geographical areas and how they would complement existing Departmental and other Government programmes.

United Youth Programme

My Department is currently leading, on behalf of the Executive, on the development of the United Youth Programme. This is a good relations programme that will provide flexible, high quality, young-person-centred opportunities for 16-24 year olds who are not in education, employment or training.

The programme is a key commitment in the 'Together: Building a United Community' Strategy. A total of 13 pilots, with approximately 360 places, are being delivered across Northern Ireland in 2015/2016. These pilots will test a range of approaches which will inform the service design framework for the United Youth Programme.

As the target group of young people for the United Youth Pilots are those Not in Education Employment or Training (NEET), a sizeable proportion of young people targeted will be on Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA).

Steps 2 Success

JSA claimants will, at certain points in their benefit claim, be required to participate on S2S. Those aged 18 to 24 years old will be required to participate when they have been claiming JSA for 9 months. Those aged 25 years old and over will be required to participate when they have been claiming JSA for 12 months.

Clients referred to S2S must attend and participate on the programme in order to maintain entitlement to benefit.

Where a JSA claimant is participating on another programme when they reach their S2S eligibility date, my Department's Employment Service Advisers can defer the S2S referral for up to 90 days. This deferral period should allow the client time to complete training or participation on the programme they have started and move into employment where possible. If the client does not move into employment on completion of another programme, they will be referred to S2S.

My Department's Employment Service works closely with the ESF Managing Authority and Youth Policy and Strategy Divisions to ensure the integration of Departmental provision meets the needs of unemployed clients.

This collaboration between Divisions within my Department ensures that Employment Service Advisers can refer unemployed clients to the most appropriate provision or programme to meet their job goals and overcome individual barriers to employment.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49504/11-16, to detail the breakdown of all travel and accommodation costs for departmental staff, organised by Proteus NI, including the period in which the expenditure occurred.

(AQW 50437/11-16)

Dr Farry: My officials have confirmed that the information is not readily available, and could only be obtained at significant cost. Therefore, as it is only available at disproportionate cost, I am not in a position to provide the information to the Member.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49504/11-16, to detail (i) which organisation directed Proteus NI in respect of travel and accommodation costs for departmental staff, organised by Proteus NI; and (ii) whether Proteus NI were advised to adhere to Civil Service guidance on procurement and the most economic travel and accommodation options.

(AQW 50438/11-16)

Dr Farry: The Department gave direction to Proteus in respect of travel and accommodation costs for departmental staff.

Under the ESF 2007-2013 Programme, the work of Proteus was subject to all requirements set out in the ESF Promoter's Manual 2007-2013 (Priority 3 Technical Assistance). This manual specifies, under Purchasing Procedures, that the organisation is legally obliged to obtain value for money, and that they should demonstrate that they have followed the guidelines as laid down by the Central Procurement Directorate.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) who is undertaking the role in the European Social Fund 2014-2020 Programme carried out by Proteus in the 2007-2013 Programme; and (ii) whether his Department plans to use external consultants for any of this activity.

(AQW 50519/11-16)

Dr Farry: Under the 2014-2020 ESF Programme, the role previously undertaken by Proteus will be carried out by Departmental staff in the ESF Managing Authority. The Department does not plan to use any external consultants for this activity.

Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the joint Economic Inactivity Strategy.

(AQO 9034/11-16)

Dr Farry: Enabling Success, the Executive's new strategy, aimed at reducing the level of economic inactivity in Northern Ireland, was published on 20th April 2015.

The implementation of the strategy, over its proposed fifteen year period, is based on eleven key projects, to be managed and resourced on a cross-departmental basis.

However, due to the ongoing pressure on budgets, and the subsequent absorption of these pressures through Departmental baselines, the Enabling Success strategy remains largely unresourced and implementation severely hindered.

A research mapping exercise of economic inactivity service provision in Northern Ireland, aimed at the strategy's key target groups has been completed.

In addition, the Department for Social Development leads on a pilot project in the new Derry and Strabane District Council area. This pilot project received funding via the Executive's Change Fund for 2015/16, and it is based on early and more intensive engagement with new claimants of the Employment and Support Allowance benefit.

The remaining cross-departmental projects have yet to commence, due to the lack of financial and other resource allocations.

Updated, indicative project costs have been provided for the ongoing discussions between the Executive parties.

Should the Executive secure additional finance to enable the full or part implementation of the strategy, a new implementation plan and timetable will need to be agreed between the relevant Executive departments.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he plans to retain maintenance grants.
(AQO 9035/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department now spends almost £70 million per year in student maintenance grants, which is nearly one tenth of its total budget.

I have no current plans to remove or reduce maintenance grants for students from Northern Ireland.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the Big Conversation.
(AQO 9036/11-16)

Dr Farry: I launched the Big Conversation on the 15th of September as an innovative and experimental approach to engaging with people about the sustainability and the future of our higher education system. It concluded on the 23rd of October.

The process was designed to be iterative, comprising two main stages which were themed on a week-by-week basis. The first stage, called 'Did you Know?', ran for the first three weeks and focussed on raising public awareness about the purpose and importance of our existing higher education system. This was followed by a second stage, called 'Have your Say', which launched on the 6th of October and invited people to put forward their views on some of the most critical issues facing our higher education system.

During the first stage, people were invited to test their knowledge about our existing higher education system through online 'did you know?' style surveys.

The second stage was more akin to a traditional consultation. Equipped with the knowledge gained in stage one, people were invited to have their say on a range of issues through a consultation questionnaire. Questions focussed on the adequacy and the sustainability of our existing higher education funding and delivery systems, and whether there might be alternatives which could work better for Northern Ireland.

During the process my officials and I sought to stimulate debate and engage with people in a wide range of ways. We had formal meetings with stakeholders; we held workshops and focus groups and a Twitter Q&A in the penultimate week to answer people's questions directly. Various other stakeholders, including our universities and colleges, promoted the process through their own channels.

In the final week my officials also organised a panel discussion to examine some of the different higher education funding and delivery systems maintained in other parts of the world. That event was very well attended and received, and we were really fortunate to secure some excellent panellists.

Now that the Big Conversation has concluded, I will be using the evidence base to formulate a paper to present to my Executive colleagues, outlining the ways in which higher education could be sustained in the future.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what representations he has made or will make to St Mary's University College to avoid a repeat of the recent display commemorating republican terrorists at the college.
(AQO 9037/11-16)

Dr Farry: My expectation is that all higher education institutions must be shared and inclusive environments.

Like others, St Mary's University College is responsible for its policies and procedures, including adherence to Section 75 and other equality legislation. My Department highlights in the annual grant letters to all institutions their responsibility to adhere to the relevant legislation.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the higher education Big Conversation.
(AQO 9039/11-16)

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on his Department's efforts to address youth unemployment.

(AQO 9040/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department has a wide range of measures in place to help address youth unemployment.

The Youth Employment Scheme Work Experience Programme offers work experience placement opportunities to unemployed 18-24 year olds who are job ready. Participants have the opportunity to learn and apply the soft skills increasingly valued by employers.

Young people can avail of Steps 2 Success, which is a flexible personalised service tailored to meet individual need. Those with significant barriers can enter this programme early. This personalised service is underpinned by Service Guarantees, which ensure that all participants receive the support they need to find and sustain employment.

Following the publication of "Generating our Success: The Northern Ireland Strategy for Youth Training" in June 2015, my Department is currently establishing a new system of professional and technical training for all young people aged 16 to 24 who require training at level 2.

My Department is also implementing a new apprenticeship system which will be open to everyone irrespective of age, but with a primary focus on young people aged 16 to 24. There will be progression from the new youth training system, with apprenticeships offered at level 3 and above.

Under the current Northern Ireland European Social Fund Programme, the Department fund 66 projects, many of which have a specific focus on addressing youth unemployment.

The Department's Employment Service works closely with the Careers Service, referring young people who would benefit from careers guidance. The Careers Service offers impartial and personalised advice and guidance, provided by professionally qualified advisers.

The aim is to support young people to make informed decisions about the opportunities available in education, training and apprenticeships to help them fulfil their potential, leading to rewarding and sustained employment.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the impact of a UK withdrawal from the EU on (i) the local commercial agriculture sector; and (ii) local small and medium sized businesses.

(AQW 48378/11-16)

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): My Department has not made an assessment of the impact of a UK withdrawal from the EU on either the local commercial agricultural sector or local small and medium sized businesses.

Any change in the UK's status as a member of the EU is dependent on the outcome of a referendum and at this stage no set date has been announced for this.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what policy decisions have been awaiting sign off since he first resigned on 10 September 2015.

(AQW 49183/11-16)

Mr Bell: There are no policy decisions referred to me between 10 September and 21 October that are awaiting sign off.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the scoping study currently being undertaken by his Department into reviewing the impact of a UK exit from the EU will have on the Northern Ireland Economy.
(AQW 49191/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Department became aware of an existing Oxford Economics research project that was seeking UK wide funding to examine the potential impacts of a UK exit from the EU under a selection of plausible exit scenarios (<http://www.oxfordeconomics.com/brexit>).

Given the potential impacts of a UK exit on the local economy the Department has accepted a proposal from Oxford Economics to join its UK study and to have the work extended to cover Northern Ireland. This follows on from a formal approach the Department made to Oxford Economics during October 2015.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for a breakdown of any investment, including capital his Department has made in West Belfast since May 2011.
(AQW 50089/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department has invested £13.2 million in West Belfast between May 2011 and March 2015. Of the £13.2 million, £12.3 million was invested by Invest NI.

There are also a number of telecommunications infrastructure projects aimed at enhancing access to telecommunications services which resulted in investment totaling just over £20 million in the period May 2011 to March 2015. Whilst it is not possible to disaggregate this investment by constituency, these projects have resulted in improved broadband availability in West Belfast.

In addition, DETI provided £1.5 million funding between May 2011 and March 2015 from the EU Sustainable Competitiveness Programme to Belfast City Council, which provided generic business development support and benefitted enterprises across the entire council area. It is not possible to disaggregate the level of investment by constituency during this period.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether he will follow the lead of the Department of Energy and Climate Change in extending the grace periods for on-shore wind operators by nine months to include those projects that are currently awaiting a planning decision.
(AQW 50205/11-16)

Mr Bell: I am currently considering my response to consultation on the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation closure and will take account of any proposals in Great Britain in doing so. It should be noted however that the nine months is in respect of an investment freeze and not related to planning.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of the Prime Minister's statement on the planned compensation for energy intensive industries to assist with high energy costs, (i) how this will effect local businesses; (ii) what talks he plans with the Government to discuss the effect on local businesses; and (iii) what measures he will have to implement to allow local businesses to avail of the compensation.
(AQW 50225/11-16)

Mr Bell: Analysis suggests that no local business qualify for compensation under the scheme. Northern Ireland successfully negotiated a derogation from the Carbon Price Floor in 2013 so local businesses already benefit from the effects of that derogation. Since this is a UK scheme there would be no need for separate action in Northern Ireland anyway.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what engagement he has had with (i) 3M Industrial Tapes Ltd; and (ii) Unite on the potential job losses at the Bangor company.
(AQW 50241/11-16)

Mr Bell: Invest NI met with local management on the 3 November 2015 to discuss the situation and will continue to work with the company going forward, in order to secure the best possible outcome.

In January 2014, my predecessor, Arlene Foster MLA, met with the company to discuss concerns about increasing energy costs and lack of competition in the energy sector. As a result of this visit Invest NI provided advice and support to 3M on Sustainable Development and Skills and Strategy for Process/Production Improvements.

To date neither myself or my Department have had any direct contact with Unite in relation to 3M.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether he is aware of the reasons for the potential relocation of some of the factory jobs at 3m Industrial Tapes Ltd from Bangor to Italy.
(AQW 50243/11-16)

Mr Bell: 3m Group implemented a global restructuring programme which resulted in 1500 jobs being cut across the Group. As a consequence of this initiative they decided to move production of their lower grade tapes from Bangor to Italy resulting in the potential loss of 34 posts at the Bangor facility.

The company in Bangor has struggled with their input costs and, as a consequence have been unable to meet key financial metrics required by the corporate group. This led to the decision to move production of the lower grade tapes to Italy.

The company will continue to manufacture their profitable higher specification tape at the Bangor facility.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what plans Tourism NI has to promote cycling.
(AQW 50263/11-16)

Mr Bell: Tourism NI is currently in the process of undertaking research to ascertain current market performance and explore potential for cycling in Northern Ireland. As part of this study Tourism NI has requested recommendations for maximising the appeal of the cycling product to visitors, including identifying specific marketing opportunities.

Northern Ireland's terrain lends itself to both road cycling and mountain biking, as evidenced by the success of the Giro d'Italia and the world class mountain bike trails throughout Northern Ireland.

Tourism NI works closely with Outdoor Recreation NI to ensure continued promotion of mountain biking and cycling trails in Northern Ireland on both digital channels and its website www.discovernorthernireland.com.

Blogs have been developed and published to promote the new Cycle Sperrins route and new mountain biking trails in Northern Ireland. Tourism NI also has a cyclist's welcome scheme & mountain bikers' welcome scheme for accommodation providers which are both promoted on www.discovernorthernireland.com.

Tourism NI will continue to promote Northern Ireland as a cycling destination across its various promotional platforms and through PR including hosting familiarisation trips for media.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment why he did not respond to the Unite Union following their meeting in July 2015, in respect of matters affecting the future of the Michelin plant.
(AQW 50354/11-16)

Mr Bell: I met with representatives from the Unite Union on 7 July to discuss their document "The case for a Manufacturing Strategy for Northern Ireland".

This document is still under consideration by the Department. I will continue to work with Unite and others to grow the manufacturing sector in Northern Ireland.

Mr I McCreagh asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what mobile phone and mobile data provision is available in Portrush, broken down by operator.
(AQW 50356/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department does not gather or hold the information requested.

Data on mobile coverage is collected by Ofcom which makes the information available through a coverage checker that can be found at <http://www.ofcom.org.uk/mobile-coverage>. In addition, each Mobile Network Operator also supplies a coverage checker on their individual websites.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether 3M are a client of Invest NI; and what engagement Invest NI has had with 3M as part of the 45 day consultation on the 34 potential job losses.
(AQW 50386/11-16)

Mr Bell: 3M Bangor is a client of Invest NI. Officials from Invest NI met with the management of 3M on 3 November 2015 to discuss the implications of the recent announcement to begin consultation on the potential loss of 34 jobs. Invest NI will continue to liaise with 3M throughout this process and beyond to ensure the best possible outcome.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 49480/11-16, on what date the last moratorium expired.
(AQW 50403/11-16)

Mr Bell: The last moratorium expired in October 2010.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 49480/11-15, what is meant by undue sterilisation.
(AQW 50414/11-16)

Mr Bell: Undue sterilisation refers to surface development which would prejudice future exploitation.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what impact the rejection by the House of Lords of the proposals to cease renewables obligation certificates for onshore wind will have on similar proposals for Northern Ireland.
(AQW 50449/11-16)

Mr Bell: I understand that the clauses relating to early closure of the Renewable Obligation and associated grace periods in the Energy Bill will be reintroduced in the House of Commons.

I will continue to be alert to any changes made in GB that may be applied in Northern Ireland. As current arrangements are set out in legislation the final position will, of course, be subject to Assembly approval.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what progress has been made in achieving the target of 40 per cent of electricity generated from alternative energy sources by 2020 as set out in the Strategic Energy Framework 2010.
(AQO 9047/11-16)

Mr Bell: The most recent official statistics covering the twelve months ending March 2015 show that nineteen point nine per cent of electricity consumed was generated from renewable sources.

The latest unofficial figures for the twelve months ending September 2015 show an increase to approximately twenty three per cent.

The key Programme for Government target to have twenty per cent of electricity consumption from renewable sources by 2015 has been achieved and the renewables industry and infrastructure providers are to be applauded for delivering this growth.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Innovation Centre at Forthriver Business Park, Belfast.
(AQO 9048/11-16)

Mr Bell: Belfast City Council is continuing to make good progress with its plans to develop an Innovation Centre on the Forthriver Business Park. The construction phase of the project is scheduled for completion April 2016 and the project remains on budget. A process is currently underway to identify a suitable operator to manage the Centre.

Invest NI, DETI and Belfast City Council continue to work closely to ensure successful implementation of the project.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on plans for Northern Ireland's Year of Food 2016.
(AQO 9050/11-16)

Mr Bell: Tourism NI is leading on the Year of Food & Drink. However the industry will play a key role in the delivery of this initiative and Tourism NI is working to support and enable them to maximise every opportunity.

Following the launch of this initiative in September 2015, Tourism NI co-ordinated a series of dedicated industry roadshows across Northern Ireland. This was complemented by Events Funding Roadshows which highlighted the new dedicated Year of Food and Drink Events Fund which is open for applications until 16 November.

Industry toolkits, mentorship programmes, brand guidelines and templates to support initiatives have also been developed.

Tourism NI is leading on an integrated communication delivery plan in order to maximise PR and communications opportunities.

Tourism Ireland and Invest NI are also integrating the Year of Food and Drink into their communication plans for 2016.

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the investment by his Department in South Antrim since August 2011.
(AQO 9051/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department has invested £26.5 million in South Antrim between August 2011 and March 2015, including £25.2 million by Invest NI.

In addition, since August 2011 there have been a number of telecommunications infrastructure projects across Northern Ireland totaling over £31 million where it is not possible to disaggregate the level of investment by constituency, but which have benefited South Antrim.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list the occasions during his recent trip to China on which he was described or introduced as the Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Investment.
(AQO 9052/11-16)

Mr Bell: I have not visited China in my capacity as Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the rollout of broadband to rural areas.
(AQO 9053/11-16)

Mr Bell: In February 2014, my Department contracted BT to deliver the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project (NIBIP). This is primarily aimed at rural areas and seeks to extend the availability of basic and superfast broadband to those who have limited choice, across Northern Ireland with a target of 45,000 premises by 31 December 2015.

Improvements have already been carried out for over 32,000 premises across Northern Ireland, including more than 1,600 in the Strangford constituency. Further details on the project can be found on the DETI website and the NI Direct platform at: <http://www.nidirect.gov.uk/index/information-and-services/leisure-home-and-community/technology-and-online-services/broadband-improvement-project.htm>.

Recognising that NIBIP will not deliver superfast broadband to all premises, my Department in February 2015, awarded a further contract to BT, for the delivery of the Superfast Roll-out Programme (SRP). This project, which again has a primarily rural focus, will provide superfast broadband improvements for almost 39,000 premises across Northern Ireland by December 2017. An extensive survey and design process is underway and will take several months to complete. Further details on roll-out will be published on the NI Direct platform, as it becomes available.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the economic benefit of Invest NI's £1.5 million support for the collaboration between the Almac Group and Queen's University Belfast.
(AQO 9054/11-16)

Mr Bell: This collaboration has helped bring internationally renowned staff and resources to the Almac Group, enhance the company and its service offering, and provided opportunities to retain highly skilled graduates in Northern Ireland. This project has further strengthened Almac's strategic partnership with Queen's University Belfast (QUB), and created a culture of innovation and industry focussed research within QUB.

An independent assessment by Innovate UK for setting up the Precision Medicine Catapult (PMC) highlighted this collaboration as a strength unique to Northern Ireland, allowing it to be chosen as a Centre of Excellence for the PMC network.

Department of the Environment

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration has been given to extending permitted development rights to rooftop solar projects over 50kw.
(AQW 49702/11-16)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): I believe that it is important to promote the use of energy efficient renewable energy systems. I met recently with representatives of the solar panel industry to listen to their views on this issue. Following this meeting I have asked my officials to undertake work to consider options to extend permitted development rights for the installation of non-domestic roof top solar panel arrays beyond the current 50 kW output limit. I will consider these options and the way forward as soon as this work is complete.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of the Environment to detail why he called in and subsequently approved planning application C/2011/0459/F by Cam Burn Wind Farm Ltd.
(AQW 50303/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I was contacted by the applicant who outlined the recent history of the case since it had transferred to the council for processing prior to 1 April 2015. My reasons for calling in the planning application were due to the planning history of this application and the particular difficulties arising from the current DETI proposals concerning the qualifying date for the NI Renewables Obligation Scheme, which was 30 October 2015. I also noted the potential economic and environmental contribution from this project.

In reaching my decision I took account of the report and recommendation of my officials. I was also aware of the strong level of public representation in both objection to, and support of, the application. The key issues I considered in the determination of the application were the potential visual impact on the wider landscape of the area and the potential impact on nearby residents. Overall I considered that these impacts would not be unacceptably adverse and that the proposal met the requirements of planning policy.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of the Environment whether he has issued formal written approval for planning application C/2011/0459/F; and if so, to detail the date it was issued.
(AQW 50374/11-16)

Mr Durkan: On 30 October 2015 I issued a Notice of Opinion to approve planning permission. The notice indicates the decision the Department proposes to take on a planning application. The notice was served on both the applicant and Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council. If so requested by the applicant or the council within 28 days from the date of the notice, the Department will afford each of them an opportunity of appearing before, and being heard by the Planning Appeals Commission. If no such request is made, the planning permission will issue. If a request is made then a planning permission would not issue until a report is received from the PAC. The final decision would still rest with the Department.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 49610/11-16 and given that the issue being interrogated is not whether the department had any role in the sale of the NAMA loan book, to confirm whether any records ever existed of the ministerial meeting with Cerberus.

(AQW 50151/11-16)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): My Department has no record of the content of this meeting having been minuted.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on community pharmacy reimbursement and whether his Department will release funds as an interim payment, to ensure that many of these pharmacies remain economically sustainable.

(AQW 45202/11-15)

Mr Wells (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): In order to ensure that the Northern Ireland Drug Tariff provides fair and reasonable reimbursement for generic medicines, an Ongoing Margin Survey (OMS) has been in place since 2011 as a collaborative arrangement between Government and community pharmacy contractors to assess available profit margins from generic medicines. A Cost of Service Investigation (COSI) has also been initiated under the Department's statutory powers to quantify the cost of providing pharmaceutical services in Northern Ireland.

The level of appropriate remuneration for community pharmacy services will be informed by the OMS and the outcome of the COSI.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the extent of the dialogue his Department has had with clinicians regarding newly commissioned National Institute for Health and Care Excellence approved medicines.

(AQW 45729/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): On 1 July 2006, the Department established formal links with National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) whereby all Technology Appraisals published by the Institute from that date would be locally reviewed for their applicability to Northern Ireland (NI) and, where appropriate, endorsed here. This arrangement has ensured access to up-to-date, independent, professional, evidence-based guidance on the value of health care interventions.

NICE recruit a diverse range of members to sit on their Appraisal Committees, including clinicians. They also invite consultees to take part in the development process, inviting comments on draft remits, scopes and guidance. Committee recruitment and stakeholder participation are open to clinicians and HSC bodies in Northern Ireland, and the Department works closely with the NI NICE Managers Forum to raise awareness and increase participation.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what strategy his Department is pursuing to provide support for early intervention for parents of deaf children.

(AQW 46272/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The assessment framework agreed across the key agencies in children's services is the 'Understanding the needs of Children in Northern Ireland (UNOCINI). The key strategies which reflect the legislative content for children's services are the Families Matter Strategy (2009) and the Physical and Sensory Disability Strategy (2012-15). Both reference the interface with the UNOCINI Framework and the NI Family Support Model as contained within the Families Matter Strategy.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much his Department has paid to consultants in each year since 2011; and how much each agency or individual received in each year.

(AQW 46693/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The amount of payments by DHSSPS for external consultancy since 2011/12 is as follows:

Financial Year	Consultancy	Expenditure
2011-12	Chris Ham	£17,054.86
2011-12	Deloitte MCS Ltd	£9,806.00

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the impact on children and adults with Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder following the withdrawal of funding to ADD-NI.

(AQW 46985/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Funding has not been withdrawn from ADD-NI in the current financial year.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the rationale behind the cuts to the training of clinical psychologists.

(AQW 47027/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The reduction in the annual intake of trainee Clinical Psychologists is a direct result of the financial pressures on the Health and Social Care budget in 2015/16.

I recognise that there is potential for waiting times for services to increase.. Nevertheless, my Department remains fully committed to improving mental health care in Northern Ireland, including access to psychological interventions and therapies and I hope that this reduction in annual training numbers will be a temporary measure for 2015/16 only.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail why local training commissions per capita are the lowest among all the UK regions.

(AQW 47028/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The reduction in the annual intake of trainee Clinical Psychologists is a direct result of the financial pressures on the Health and Social Care budget in 2015/16.

Nevertheless, my Department remains fully committed to improving mental health care in Northern Ireland, including access to psychological interventions and therapies and I hope that this reduction in annual training numbers will be a temporary measure for 2015/16 only.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has given any consideration to the impact on waiting times and access to services if the numbers of clinical psychologists locally are reduced.

(AQW 47029/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The reduction in the annual intake of trainee Clinical Psychologists is a direct result of the financial pressures on the Health and Social Care budget in 2015/16.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if his Department has published a biodiversity strategy as required by the Wildlife and Natural Environment Act (Northern Ireland) 2011.

(AQW 47307/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Wildlife and Natural Environment Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 does not place a duty on the DHSSPS to publish a Biodiversity Strategy.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether (i) he is aware of recent developments in the ACWY meningitis vaccine, and if so (ii) how and when he intends to make this vaccine available to teenagers; and (iii) what will be the minimum age for which the vaccine will be made available.

(AQW 47321/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I am aware of the advice from the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI) in relation to a rise in Men W cases in the UK.

A Men ACWY vaccination programme was introduced in Northern Ireland on 3 August this year, with the initial priority being given to those who are 18 years old, who will be offered a Men ACWY vaccine by their GP. This will be followed by a school-based programme during the academic year 2015/16 and a further GP-based programme beginning in April 2016. In line with JCVI advice the Men ACWY vaccine will be offered to all 14- to 18-year-olds.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the actions being taken to vaccinate babies and young children to combat Meningitis B.

(AQW 47530/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Meningitis B is a dangerous, and in some cases deadly, illness. The Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI), an independent panel of experts that advise the 4 UK Health Ministers on issues related to vaccination have recommended the introduction of a Men B vaccine into the routine childhood vaccination schedule.

The Men B vaccination programme was introduced in Northern Ireland in September, in line with the rest of the UK.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline any plans his Department has to roll out the new Meningitis B vaccine for babies.

(AQW 47531/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Meningitis B is a dangerous, and in some cases deadly, illness. Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the European Union legal implications for the provision of domiciliary care packages; and (ii) to what extent does his Department measure and review such standards to ensure compliance.

(AQW 47550/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Where such services fall within the scope of the New EU Procurement Directive (brought into law on 26 February as the Public Contracts Regulations 2015) and are not subject to any exemptions, they generally require contracting authorities to follow a light touch regime. Essentially this means that there is a process which meets the principles of transparency and equitable treatment, when purchasing services to the person worth over €750k from independent providers. The Department obtains assurances through overarching accountability and sponsorship arrangements with its arms length bodies.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety Further, pursuant AQW 45787/11-15, to detail (i) the expenditure on branded medicines in 2014-15 broken down by (a) primary; and (b) secondary care; and (ii) the percentage of total medicines' expenditure represented by branded medicines in (a) 2012-13; (b) 2013-14; and (c) 2014-15. (AQW 47683/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The expenditure on branded medicines in 2014/2015 in (a) primary care was £225.9m and (b) secondary care was £143.2m.

The percentage of total medicines' expenditure represented by branded medicines in primary and secondary care is as follows:-

Year	2012/2013	2013/2014	2014/2015
Primary Care	69.1%	67.1%	66.4%
Secondary Care (Average across HSC Trusts)	84.3%	86.1%	86.9%

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the criteria used by his Department to select ten care homes, across five Health and Social Care Trusts, for possible closure following a twelve week consultation. (AQW 47765/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The review of the future of statutory residential accommodation is being led by the Health and Social Care Board. The Board publicly consulted on the criteria to be used to assess future accommodation needs for older people, and the role of statutory residential homes in meeting those needs.

Each of the Health and Social Care Trusts used these regionally agreed criteria to evaluate their residential care homes. The agreed criteria were quality of care; availability and accessibility of alternative services; care trends; and best use of public money.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) wheelchairs; (ii) walking equipment; and (iii) aids used to transport multiple patients in hospitals and statutory residential care homes; and (iii) whether arrangements are in place across all Health and Social Care Trusts to ensure that these items are decontaminated between each use; and (iv) who is responsible for cleaning the equipment. (AQW 47767/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested by the Member is provided below:

- (i) Electric, manual, self propelling wheelchairs and tilt in space wheelchairs.
- (ii) Zimmer frames, rollators, crutches, tripods, walking sticks.
- (iii) Wheelchairs, beds, chairs, wheeled cable rollators, wheeled walkers, crutches, walking sticks, buses with tail lifts, ambulances, voluntary drivers, and taxis. In addition, residential care homes often have communal wheelchairs to transport residents within the care home setting.

All Wheelchairs are cleaned in accordance with the Trust Guideline:

- (iv) 'Cleaning and Decontamination of the Care Environment & Equipment; Guidance and Principles'. Furthermore, wheelchairs that are no longer required by clients are collected from their homes and returned to the wheelchair repair service at Musgrave Park Hospital where they are examined to determine if they remain fit for purpose. If items are deemed suitable for re-use they are decontaminated as per infection control guidance and re-issued to other users.
- (v) Cleaning Assistants employed by the HSC Trusts as part of their Community Equipment Stores Teams are responsible for the decontamination and cleaning of equipment. Also portering staff are responsible for the decontamination and cleaning of wheelchairs used to transport patients throughout HSC Trusts' hospitals.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the Maudsley approach to treating anorexia; whether it is being used to treat local patients; and if not, to explain why this approach is not being used. (AQW 47784/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Maudsley Model is a family therapy based intervention, mainly recommended for treating people with an eating disorder under the age of 18, with duration of illness of less than 3 years.

The Maudsley Model is one of a range of interventions provided in Northern Ireland, and is used to treat patients where it is deemed the most appropriate model for intervention, following clinical assessment which will take account of co-morbid physical and / or mental health conditions, and family and social circumstances.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people waiting for non-elective surgery in each (a) hospital: and (b) Health and Social Care Trust broken down by procedure.

(AQW 47797/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of people waiting for non-elective surgery is not available as a non-elective admission is one which is unpredictable and at short notice because of clinical need.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there is a shortage of NHS dentists given the size of the local population.

(AQW 47818/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: No, at present approximately 59% of the population in Northern Ireland is registered with an NHS dentist (2014). The number of NHS registered Dental Practitioners in 2014 per 100,000 of population is significantly higher than in England and Wales and only slightly lower than in Scotland.

■	England	44.3
■	Wales	38.3
■	Scotland	60.9
■	Northern Ireland	57.1

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there is any formal duty by which he must cooperate with the Minister for Education in relation to the Special Educational Needs and Disability (SEND) Bill.

(AQW 47900/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Both the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 and the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1996 currently require health and social care bodies to respond to requests for help in the exercise of the Education Authority's duties. In responding to any request a HSC Trust would have regard to whether such help is necessary for the assessment; whether it has sufficient resources; and whether it is compatible with its own statutory duties or functions.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether any concerns have been expressed to local health authorities about the use of the anti-psychotic drug Risperidone being prescribed to children with Down Syndrome and autism.

(AQW 47925/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust (SHSCT) has recently received a formal complaint about the prescribing of the antipsychotic drug risperidone to a child with Down Syndrome and autism. The complaint is being considered in line with the HSC Complaints Procedure (Complaints in HSC: Standards and Guidelines for Resolution and Learning) and a formal response will be issued by the SHSCT. Where a complainant remains dissatisfied following completion of the local resolution process, they have a right to refer their complaint to the NI Commissioner for Complaints (the Ombudsman).

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients that have had their personal medical data shared with organisations for uses other than their own personal care.

(AQW 47969/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: All Health and Social Care organisations holds a register of data access agreements that are in place for the sharing of information for uses other than personal care. The numbers of individual patients relevant to each data access agreement is not routinely collected.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (i) non-medical; and (ii) medical staff in his Department and each of its arm's-length bodies that had a total annual remuneration in excess of £100,000 in each of the last 3 years, broken down by job title or grade; and to list every individual remuneration in excess of £125,000.

(AQW 48168/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: It is not possible to provide the information in the format requested. The tables below detail the number of non-medical and medical staff in my Department and its arm's-length bodies that had a total annual remuneration in excess of £100,000 in each of the last 3 years broken down by staff grouping.

As well as basic salary, locum payments, travel expenses and arrears etc. have been included.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much his Department and each of its arm's-length bodies have spent on private taxis for (a) patients; and (b) staff in each of the last five years.
(AQW 48170/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much has been spent on drug and alcohol addiction services in each of the last five years, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.
(AQW 48193/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department funds a range of alcohol and drugs services, either under the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs Phase 2 or the Mental Health Services Budget. The table below provides a breakdown of the funding over the last 3 years; it has not been possible to provide funding over the past 5 years given some of the Review of Public Administration changes were still being embedded during this period.

It should be noted that this will not cover all funding spent on alcohol and drug misuse – some services are funded from other sources (including other government departments and organisations like the Big Lottery Fund). In addition, some alcohol and drug misuse treatment and support is provided by generic services such as primary care, pharmacy, etc and it is impossible to disaggregate out the costs for the alcohol and drug misuse elements of these services.

Table 1 – Total Spend

* The “regional” budgets do not refer to the overall budget across the region, but rather to a designated budget for regional work.

Information on the breakdown of this spending between the community and voluntary sector and the Health and Social Care sector, and between inpatient and outpatient services, is not held centrally. Currently the Health and Social Care Trusts, the Public Health Agency, and the Health and Social Care Board categorise these spends in different ways and this means that providing a consistent and meaningful comparison could only be provided at disproportionate costs.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) community and voluntary spending; and (ii) NHS spending on (a) inpatient and (b) outpatient drug and alcohol addiction services in each of the last five years, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) his Department’s policy on psychoactive substances; and (ii) the measures being taken on the use and regulation of psychoactive substances.

(AQW 48196/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) My Department leads on the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs Phase 2, which is the cross-sectoral strategy aimed at reducing the harms caused by alcohol and drug misuse in Northern Ireland. New Psychoactive Substances were specifically identified as an emerging issue when this strategic framework was published in 2012.
- (ii) A range of psychoactive substances are already regulated through existing legislation such as the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, Human Medicines Regulation 2012, alcohol licensing legislation, etc.

However, these existing regulations do not cover all potential novel and emerging New Psychoactive Substances. Following substantial lobbying and support from my Department, the UK-wide Psychoactive Substances Bill is currently working its way through the parliamentary process. This Bill will ban the manufacture, import/export, sale and supply of New Psychoactive Substances and is similar to the legislation brought forward in the Republic of Ireland, which saw the closure of almost all the "headshops" in that jurisdiction. As legislation in this area is not devolved, officials from my Department and the Department of Justice have been working closely with the Home Office to ensure the legislation will be appropriate and effective within Northern Ireland.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration has been given to introducing a programme for the vaccination of men that have sex with men (MSM) that are aged 16 – 40 years, being implemented in GUM or HIV clinics using the quadrivalent HPV vaccine.

(AQW 48249/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Vaccination policy in Northern Ireland and the rest of the UK is guided by the recommendations of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI). JCVI is an independent expert committee that advises the four UK Health Ministers on matters relating to the provision of vaccination and immunisation services. JCVI considers all the available medical and scientific evidence before recommending which groups should be offered vaccination. JCVI also considers the cost-effectiveness of vaccination programmes, both existing programmes and programmes that are being proposed.

JCVI is currently considering whether HPV vaccination should be offered to MSM. I will consider JCVI's advice on this when I receive it.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration has been given to introducing a universal HPV vaccination strategy for both adolescent boys and girls.

(AQW 48250/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Vaccination policy in Northern Ireland and the rest of the UK is guided by the recommendations of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI). JCVI is an independent expert committee that advises the four UK Health Ministers on matters relating to the provision of vaccination and immunisation services. JCVI considers all the available medical and scientific evidence before recommending which groups should be offered vaccination. JCVI also considers the cost-effectiveness of vaccination programmes, both existing programmes and programmes that are being proposed.

Vaccination against HPV was introduced in 2008 for girls aged 12/13 with the aim of preventing cervical cancer. At that time JCVI did not recommend vaccinating boys as it was not cost-effective with regard to preventing cervical cancer.

JCVI is currently considering whether HPV vaccination should be offered to adolescent boys.

I will consider JCVI's recommendations when I receive them.

In the meantime it should be noted that the existing programme for adolescent girls already affords a degree of protection to heterosexual males by interrupting transmission of the virus.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the additional cost of extending the HPV vaccination programme to boys; and the estimated annual savings as a result of the reduction of cases of HPV-related cancer.

(AQW 48252/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Vaccination policy in Northern Ireland and the rest of the UK is guided by the recommendations of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI). JCVI is an independent expert committee that advises the four UK Health Ministers on matters relating to the provision of vaccination and immunisation services. JCVI considers all the available medical and scientific evidence before recommending which groups should be offered vaccination. JCVI also considers the cost-effectiveness of vaccination programmes, both existing programmes and programmes that are being proposed.

JCVI is currently considering whether HPV vaccination should be offered to adolescent boys as well as girls. JCVI assesses the cost-effectiveness of proposed programmes before making recommendations. I will consider JCVI's advice on this matter when I receive it.

Estimating the cost of extending the programme to boys is relatively straightforward. If boys were offered a 2-dose schedule, as is offered to girls, the total cost of an adolescent programme for all boys and girls would be approximately £1.6m, which is twice the cost of the existing programme.

Estimating the possible savings to the health service is less straightforward for several reasons. Any savings would not be seen until 10 to 30 years after the introduction of a programme. Also, because in the existing programme for adolescent girls the uptake is approximately 90% and vaccine efficacy is high, the existing programme already provides a degree of protection for heterosexual males by interrupting transmission of the virus. Pending JCVI's recommendations my Department has not attempted to estimate the potential savings to the health service.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why his Department has not introduced routine screening for Group B Streptococcus.

(AQW 48257/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The UK National Screening Committee (NSC) is an expert body which advises the four UK Health Departments on screening programmes. In November 2012 the committee re-reviewed the research evidence on screening for GBS and recommended that antenatal screening for GBS carriage should not be offered because there is insufficient evidence to demonstrate that the benefits to be gained from screening would outweigh the harms. The screening test only identifies women carrying GBS when they are screened and some women will not carry GBS by the time they receive antibiotics in labour. Others who were negative at screening may be carriers when they go into labour. Screening cannot identify the small number of women whose babies would be affected and therefore many thousands of women would receive antibiotics in labour when their babies would not be affected.

The UK NSC will be commissioning an update review of any new evidence in 2015/2016. I will consider any advice from the NSC when it is made available.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any discussions that have taken place regarding the use of Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme (PPRS) rebates to improve patient access to new National Institute for Health and Care Excellence approved medicines.

(AQW 48261/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My officials have ongoing discussions with the Health and Social Care Board, representatives of the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry and a number of the major pharmaceutical companies regarding the use of receipts from the Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme and access to new National Institute for Health and Care Excellence approved medicines.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what (i) data is used; and (ii) is included in primary care spending when calculating the allocation of Pharmaceutical Price Regulation Scheme (PPRS) rebates.

(AQW 48262/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: PPRS payments are made to the Department of Health (London) (DH) by individual drug companies on the basis of their UK-wide quarterly sales data for branded medicines.

To date, the payments to the devolved administrations are calculated by the DH on the basis of prescription cost data for the total expenditure in primary care on branded medicines in each of the devolved administrations in the quarter to which the overall industry sales data relates.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Individual Funding Request (IFR) consultation.

(AQW 48273/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department has publicly consulted on the recommendations from the published report of the evaluation of the Individual Funding Request (IFR) process. The responses to the consultation are in the final stages of analysis and when this has been concluded I will announce my decision, taking into consideration the views gathered, and subject to available funding.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the discussions his Department is having with the Department of Education regarding waiting lists for autism assessments for children.

(AQW 48274/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The two Departments regularly discuss a wide range of issues surrounding children with special educational needs, including autism. The Department of Education are members of the Autism Strategy Inter-departmental Senior Officials Group. Education is also represented on the Regional Implementation Team, tasked with the delivery of the autism strategy and action plan. Both groups provide an opportunity for discussions regarding all aspects of services, including waiting lists.

Within each HSC Trust area there is a cross-agency Autism Forum, with representation including Education, Voluntary Sector and service users. This provides an opportunity for discussion, at a local level, regarding initiatives which will impact on services.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why carbon fibre leg callipers are not available locally given patients would be willing to contribute to the cost.

(AQW 48280/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The term “leg calliper” may cover any orthosis from a basic Ankle Foot Orthosis through to a full Hip Knee Ankle Foot Orthosis. Belfast Health and Social Care Trust’s Regional Disablement Service at Musgrave Park Hospital provides carbon fibre orthoses where these are deemed clinically appropriate.

Furthermore, there is no mechanism which allows the Trust to seek or take part funding from a patient in consideration of payment for a device other than that prescribed, however current guidelines do allow for a patient to make their own arrangements to pay for a device/orthosis other than that prescribed.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will consider meeting some polio sufferers to discuss why carbon fibre callipers are not available locally.

(AQW 48281/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I refer the Member to my response to AQW 48280/11-15. As this addresses the relevant issues, in my view such a meeting is not necessary.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) destination; (ii) duration; (iii) total cost; and (iv) purpose of each trip outside the United Kingdom and Ireland taken by (a) the Minister; (b) his Special Adviser; (c) his departmental officials; and (d) personnel in each of the departmental arm’s-length bodies, in each of the last four years.

(AQW 48294/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not readily available and can only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the proposal for a Derry Health Campus.

(AQW 48334/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board’s Strategic Implementation Plan, including the Health and Social Care Cityside scheme, remains under consideration alongside other capital investment priorities and is subject to future budget availability, confirmation of value for money and affordability.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (i) counsellors; and (ii) psychotherapists operating in each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 48354/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

(i) The table below shows the number of counsellors employed at September 2015.

	Belfast		Northern		South Eastern		Southern		Western
	HC	WTE	HC	WTE	HC	WTE	HC	WTE	HC	WTE
Counsellors	14	11.39	3	2.4	1	1.0	3	1.8	0	0.0

Source: HSC Trusts

The Western HSC Trust does not employ counsellors, but does have three Counselling Psychologists. These have not been included in the first table to prevent double counting.

	Belfast		Northern		South Eastern		Southern		Western
	HC	WTE	HC	WTE	HC	WTE	HC	WTE	HC	WTE
Clinical Psychologists <sup>1</sup>	93	84.1	54	48.6	43	37.2	35	31.4	43	40.7

Source: NI HSC Human Resources, Payroll, Travel & Subsistence (HRPTS)

<sup>1</sup> It is important to note that not all Clinical Psychologists will deliver psychotherapeutic treatment. Many Trust staff, including some social workers, nursing staff and psychiatry staff, will provide therapeutic or in some cases psychotherapeutic intervention to patients, clients and service users on a daily basis while not specifically or solely employed as psychotherapists.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 46584/11-15, to detail the equivalent figures for each year since 2011, broken down by hospital.

(AQW 48355/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information collected on the total number of non-urgent elective operations cancelled in each year from 2012/13 to 2014/15, broken down by hospital has been provided in Table 1.

The table includes cancellations due to both clinical and non-clinical reasons, as well as patient cancellations. Non-clinical reasons include list over-run, emergencies/trauma, etc. while clinical reasons are those where the patient was clinically unsuitable to undergo the procedure, though these lists are not exhaustive.

Information is not available prior to April 2012 when the associated Indicator of Performance was introduced.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 48165/11-15, for his assessment of these costs, for each arm's-length body.

(AQW 48357/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The costs within the health and social care system are increasing given the increasing demand from a growing and aging population, as well as the costs of improved treatments and technologies which can improve patient outcomes.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much his Department has paid to each recruitment agency responsible for sourcing agency and locum staff in his (a) Department; and (b) arm's-length bodies, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 48358/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

a) The amount paid to recruitment agencies over the last five years, by DHSSPS is given below:

Organisation	Financial Year
	2010/2011	2011/2012	2012/2013	2013/2014	2014/2015
DHSSPS	£56,715.62	£67,745.55	£0.00	£13,815.20	£23,906.12

Source: DHSSPS

- b) Nil. As recruitment matters are the responsibility of individual HSC employers, the Department does not pay recruitment agencies directly for staff employed in the HSC.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) whether there are any concerns about the introduction pulse oximetry screening as a method of detecting congenital heart defects; and (ii) why this method has not been introduced.
(AQW 48370/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) My department is advised by the UK National Screening Committee (NSC) about all aspects of screening. Using research evidence, pilot programmes and economic evaluation, the NSC assesses the evidence for programmes against a set of internationally recognised criteria covering the condition, the test, the treatment options and the effectiveness and acceptability of the screening programme.

The NSC has reviewed the evidence for adding pulse oximetry to the screening pathway to detect congenital heart disease in newborns. At their meeting in March 2014 they recommended piloting the use of pulse oximetry to evaluate the impact of implementation on NHS services and to establish feasibility for future national rollout as an addition to the existing suite of screening tests undertaken as part of the newborn programme.

- (ii) The pilot has commenced and is expected to report next year. The NSC will make a policy recommendation for the UK and I will consider this advice when it is available.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on his Department's review into the provision of Adult Social Care.
(AQW 48380/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My officials are developing an evidence base for potential strategic reform to the system of care and support. Officials are also liaising with other government departments on cross cutting issues relevant to care and support.

The decision of the Westminster Government to postpone financial reform in England means that there will now be no corresponding increase to the NI Block Grant. My Department is therefore also assessing the impact of this on the scope of reform in NI.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why the meningitis B vaccination programme has been limited to children under 12 months; and whether he would consider a discretionary approach in order to temporarily allow parents of older children to avail of the vaccine.
(AQW 48383/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In Northern Ireland as in the rest of the UK, vaccination policy is informed by the work of the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation (JCVI), an independent expert advisory committee that advises the four UK Health Ministers. In formulating its advice and recommendations the Committee's aim is to ensure that the greatest benefit to public health is obtained from the most appropriate vaccination and immunisation strategies.

JCVI has recommended that the Men B vaccine is offered to all infants aged two months of age. This will then be followed by a second dose when they are 4 months old and a booster dose at 12 months.

JCVI also recommended a limited catch-up programme for those infants aged 3 or 4 months as the programme begins to protect them in time for when they are most at risk of Men B infection.

JCVI did not recommend a catch-up programme for children aged 5 months or above.

The Men B vaccine was added to the routine childhood vaccination schedule from 1 September. As meningococcal disease peaks around 5 months of age before declining, the priority of the programme is to provide protection to the most vulnerable group prior to the peak in incidence of disease at 5 months of age.

I will continue to be guided by the independent expert advice provided by JCVI when considering the vaccination policy for Northern Ireland.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the implementation of the recommendations of the Bamford review.
(AQW 48385/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The most recent Bamford Action Plan annual monitoring report (November 2014) was published on my Department's website in March 2015. This report highlights good progress on the Bamford Action Plan 2012-15, with 83% of the 76 actions on target for completion, and the remaining 17% progressing, with some delay against the target date.

An evaluation of the Bamford Action 2012-15 is currently being carried out and is expected to be completed by Spring 2016.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how long orthopaedic patients with polio are waiting between appointments.
(AQW 49997/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the length of time waited between orthopaedic appointments by patients with polio is not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

A review appointment is different from a first appointment in that it is scheduled for a 'clinically appropriate' time, which can range from weeks to years depending on the patient's individual case.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail when he intends to update the Assembly on Transforming Your Care.

(AQW 50055/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I refer the Member to my response to AQW 48277/11-15.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps is he taking to reduce the waiting time for children to see a paediatric cardiologist in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust. [R]

(AQW 50304/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: All referrals to the Paediatric Cardiology service in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust are triaged by consultants to ensure that urgent cases are prioritised. Any child with whom there is a high level of clinical concern will get an urgent appointment.

The Trust has plans in place to recruit an additional Paediatric Cardiologist and a Clinical Physiologist to assist in reducing waiting times for new and review appointments.

Department of Justice

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Justice for a breakdown of any investment, including capital, his Department has made in West Belfast since May 2011.

(AQW 50139/11-16)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): The resource investment made by my Department, including its Agencies but not it's arm's-length bodies, directly attributable to West Belfast in each of the last four years is shown in the table below:

Resource Investment £

2011-12	2012-13	2013-14	2014-15
166,380	337,145	319,631	306,910

The increase in expenditure from 2012-13 onwards mainly relates to the introduction of the West Belfast District Policing Community Safety Partnership.

Expenditure relating to a wide range of services that are provided across Northern Ireland by my Department has not been included as it cannot be costed out to specific areas.

During the same period there has been no capital investment by my Department in West Belfast.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many cases are currently in (i) magistrates'; and (ii) crown court under anti-terrorism legislation, broken down by court division.

(AQW 50197/11-16)

Mr Ford: The table below sets out the number of cases under anti-terrorism legislation currently before the courts broken down by court division as of 4 November 2015.

Court Division	Crown Court	Magistrates Court	Total Cases <sup>1</sup>
Armagh and South Down	0	10	10
Belfast	7	5	12
Craigavon	0	3	3
Fermanagh and Tyrone	0	1	1
Total	7	19	26

1. A case may contain one or more appropriate charges under the Terrorism Act (2000), the Terrorism (Northern Ireland) Act (2006) or the Counter Terrorism Act (2008) and may involve multiple defendants.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many victims of trafficking have been provided with support for an extended period of time under the powers provided in section 18(9) of the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Criminal Justice and Support for Victims) Act (Northern Ireland) 2015.

(AQW 50200/11-16)

Mr Ford: Since the commencement of the Act, my Department has supported 34 potential victims of trafficking as they progress through the National Referral Mechanism. Our current records indicate that 20 potential victims have been supported for an extended period of time. These numbers may increase as information on decisions and support is received.

My Department has always provided support to potential victims, based on their needs, beyond the reflection and recovery period. This arrangement has been bolstered by the provision of support now being on a statutory footing.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether he has been furnished with a copy, or briefed on the content, of the report into the Public Prosecution Service counsel referred to Professional Conduct Committee in the wake of the Sir Kier Starmer enquiry into the handling of the Maria Cahill case.

(AQW 50203/11-16)

Mr Ford: I have not received a copy of, nor have I received briefing on, any such report.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) if the approved Northern Ireland Prison Service pay award has been paid out; and if not (ii) when she expects it to be paid out.

(AQW 50236/11-16)

Mr Ford: The approved 2015 pay award for prison grades in the Northern Ireland Prison Service was paid in October salaries.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice whether the arrears of payments due to retired police officers because of the miscalculation of benefits will be paid in the December pension payment; and to outline the action he is taking to resolve this long outstanding matter.

(AQW 50268/11-16)

Mr Ford: On 9 October 2015 the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) informed my officials that HM Treasury hoped to resolve issues regarding the Milne v GAD redress payments, but that in the meantime, it would be advisable to hold off making any payments. Written confirmation that payments may commence was received from DFP on 4 November 2015.

The methodology on the payment of the Pension Ombudsman's ruling is an administrative issue and ultimately the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Policing Board as scheme manager.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice whether his Department has had any discussions with the Home Office on the delay in payments due to retired police officers because of the miscalculation of accrued benefits.

(AQW 50269/11-16)

Mr Ford: My officials have kept in ongoing contact with Home Office officials in relation to this matter. I understand that discussions are continuing between the Home Office, HM Treasury and the Department for Communities and Local Government. I remain hopeful that any outstanding issues will be resolved in the very near future.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 49914/11-16, why the Legal Services Agency is not required to rely on Section 40 of the Freedom of Information Act; and given that he authorised the original decision to grant legal aid for coroners court representation, why he cannot disclose the figures under Section 40.

(AQW 50283/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Legal Services Agency NI has not engaged Section 40 of the Freedom of Information (FOI) Act 2000 to withhold the information referred to in AQW/49914/11-16. However, the Agency did engage the exemption under Section 44(1)(a) of the Freedom of Information Act "Prohibitions on disclosure".

This FOI exemption allows for non-disclosure when there is other legislation which must be complied with and it prohibits release of information. As a result, Legal Services Agency relied on FOI Section 44(1)(a) due to the legal duty to comply with Article 24 of the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (Northern Ireland) Order 1981.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Justice what efforts the Prison Service have made to meet the needs of transgender prisoners; and what further steps are under consideration.

(AQW 50334/11-16)

Mr Ford: The needs of all prisoners who may find individual challenges in respect of their time in custody can be effectively addressed by the Northern Ireland Prison Service. If a person who is transgender is committed to custody by the Courts, NIPS will consider their specific needs on a case by case basis upon committal. Specific arrangements can be made in respect of where the person is accommodated and how they access services in prison to ensure that they can fully engage in the regime. As part of the committal process any specific healthcare needs can be assessed by the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Justice to outline his Department's involvement in the Public Health Agency's Lifeline proposals to change the procured service from the third sector to a commissioned service from the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service; and for his assessment of how this will impact on the service provided to people in the justice system contemplating suicide.

(AQW 50338/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Public Health Agency has shared its consultation questionnaire on the future of Lifeline crisis intervention service with Departmental officials and a response is being considered.

Lifeline is one of a range of services available to vulnerable individuals in custody. The proposed change to commission the service from the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service offers potential benefits in respect of integration with other emergency and statutory service providers and extant clinical, information and corporate governance arrangements.

What is crucial is that the provision of the helpline service and the follow-on support services are well integrated with existing support mechanisms within criminal justice.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice to outline the future plans for the houses on the Woburn site in Millisle.

(AQW 50646/11-16)

Mr Ford: The site at Millisle, which includes all the attendant houses, has been declared surplus to the Northern Ireland Prison Service's requirements.

The Strategic Investment Board Asset Management Unit is handling the disposal of the site and is seeking vacant possession to facilitate early disposal. NIPS is working to provide vacant possession by early 2016.

Department for Regional Development

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Regional Development whether she will revisit the funding allocations for the Belfast Rapid Transit works as a matter of urgency and assess whether the original completion date can be reinstated.

(AQW 49288/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen (The Minister for Regional Development): The implementation of the Belfast Rapid Transit (BRT) system is not only dependent on the completion of the BRT road infrastructure and procurement of vehicles, but also on the delivery of a number of significant interdependent projects. These include:

- the Ticketing Replacement project - to develop and implement a new Translink bus and rail ticketing system. The new ticketing system is required to be in place to provide off-board ticketing for BRT; and
- the Duncrue Depot project - the development of a new Translink depot, workshop and stores intended to house and maintain approximately 100 buses, including the new fleet of 30 BRT vehicles.

The combined costs of BRT, the ticketing replacement project and Duncrue Depot are approximately £130 million.

I share your disappointment in the delay to the operational date for BRT. It will unfortunately not now be possible to deliver all the elements for BRT to become operational in 2017. An independent Project Assessment Review of the BRT project in July 2015 confirmed that the revised completion date of August 2018 is achievable.

I would stress that the implementation works for BRT are continuing and will provide benefits for existing public transport users in advance of BRT becoming operational.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans there are to re-engage contractors to repair streetlights.

(AQW 49541/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I am actively considering options to address the situation.

Department for Social Development

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the number of claims made by; and (ii) the compensation paid to, residents that do not have adequate cavity wall insulation.

(AQW 50002/11-16)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): The information is not available in the format requested because the Housing Executive advises that claims maybe registered as "Dampness" which is a symptom with a number of causes and at the time of registration, the actual cause would not be known.

The Housing Executive has advised that a search of the claims registered on the Housing Executive system, revealed 256 claims under the heading of "Dampness". However, the causes of "Dampness" would include failure of the damp proof course, general household condensation, failure/absence of insulation, rising damp, penetrating damp etc.

The Housing Executive has confirmed that a small number of claims have been received that have been linked to cavity wall insulation and, as explained above, there may be others. The Housing Executive has advised that five cases have been settled to date and the total compensation amount was £49,730.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development how many employees have been recruited to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in the last ten years, broken down as a percentage of (i) Protestants; (ii) Roman Catholics; and (iii) non-determined categories.

(AQW 50025/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has provided the table attached which details the religious composition of staff recruited to the NIHE for the ten year period from 2006 to 28 October 2015.

Year	Total Recruited	Protestant		Roman Catholic		Non Determined
		No	%	No	%	No	%
2006	243	82	33.7	138	56.8	23	9.5
2007	294	101	34.3	164	55.8	29	9.9
2008	127	52	40.9	51	40.2	24	18.9
2009	178	60	33.7	95	53.4	23	12.9
2010	98	47	48.0	40	40.8	11	11.2
2011	114	57	50.0	37	32.5	20	17.5
2012	69	22	31.9	34	49.3	13	18.8
2013	52	16	30.8	26	50.0	10	19.2
2014	67	26	38.8	20	29.9	21	31.3
2015 (to date)	34	7	20.6	16	47.1	11	32.3

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development, given Northern Ireland Housing Executive staff attended and spoke at the launch of a mural in Londonderry on 16 October 2015, whether he intends to speak to senior Northern Ireland Housing Executive officials to ensure staff do not get involved in political controversies.

(AQW 50026/11-16)

Mr Storey: I raised this with the Housing Executive's Chief Executive and have been advised that he wrote to you on 28 October 2015 in relation to this matter and has also offered to meet with you.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development how many people living in sheltered accommodation in Folye have their tenancy funded by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

(AQW 50165/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that 541 people living in sheltered accommodation in the Foyle area of Londonderry have their tenancy funded by the Housing Executive through Housing Benefit.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what responsibility he has for addressing homelessness.

(AQW 50229/11-16)

Mr Storey: As Minister for Social Development I have responsibility for addressing homelessness in Northern Ireland. The Northern Ireland Housing Executive has statutory responsibility for responding to homelessness. My Department chairs the Homelessness Strategy Steering Group that oversees the implementation of the Homeless Strategy by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and partner organisations.

Whilst in office as Minister for Social Development I have visited many organisations involved in addressing homelessness and I have seen at first hand the issues faced by these organisations and heard from those who have experienced homelessness. This year, my Department has allocated £27 million to homeless related services through the Supporting People Programme, administered by the Housing Executive. This funding provides practical assistance such as temporary accommodation and funding to support organisations.

From 2010-15 there has been a decrease in the number of people presenting as homeless in Northern Ireland by around 3% reducing from 20,158 to 19,621 with the trend in households accepted as statutorily homeless remaining stable over the 5 year period at around 50% of applicants.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development why social security offices do not publicly display signs advertising the services offered by local food banks.

(AQW 50248/11-16)

Mr Storey: I and my officials have been having regular engagement with a wide range of food bank representatives to better understand their issues and to explore how public services from my Department and those of other departments can be delivered in a way that helps reduce the need for food banks in our society. One example of this is that my Department has been working closely with a large number of food banks to put in place a partnership model which ensures every individual and family presenting in need of food support is referred to the Social Security Agency for a full and confidential benefit entitlement check. This assesses their entitlement not only to social security benefits but to a wide range of additional government benefits, services and support.

My Department also offers a second layer of support, a named Community Outreach Officer will work closely with staff and volunteers to ensure that anyone who needs further benefit advice or help with making a claim is given the support they need immediately, in their own homes if necessary.

My Department has also undertaken specific research in Northern Ireland, to get a better understanding of who are the people using food banks, where are the busiest centres and how frequently are they being used. I have been very clear in the past that whilst I understand and value the work that food banks undertake, I do not believe that food banks should have a formal role in the social welfare system in Northern Ireland.

On the specific point of publicity materials it is important to understand that my Department works with and provides financial support for a large number of voluntary and community organisations. Jobs and Benefits Offices are public offices and it is the policy of my Department that the only publicity material available in Jobs and Benefits Offices should relate to how claimants can better access public services. I am sure the Member would recognise that allowing all voluntary and community organisations across Northern Ireland to publicise their services in Jobs and Benefits Offices would not make best use of the available space in the offices.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development (i) whether the Charity Commission have made payments to Senior Council in excess of £800 per hour or reading expenses at lesser rates; (ii) to detail the exact hourly rates paid to Senior Council; and (iii) how many hours Senior Council have been employed by the Charity Commission, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50306/11-16)

Mr Storey:

- (i) The Commission has not made payments to Senior Counsel in excess of £800 per hour. When appropriate, the Commission has engaged Counsel on the Government Legal Services for Northern Ireland - Appointment of Civil Panel, terms and conditions. The Civil Panel list sets the hourly fee rate and applicable uplifts (if any). In all cases the hourly fee rate did not differentiate between, for example, attendance in court or reading.
- (ii) The following hourly rates (excluding VAT) were paid to Senior Counsel in each of the last three years:
  - 2012-13            £250 per hour;
  - 2013-14            Nil; and
  - 2014-15            £180 per hour and £210.
- (iii) Senior Counsel was employed by the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland for the following number of hours in each of the last three years:
  - 2012-13:            8 hours.
  - 2013-14            No Senior Counsel engaged.
  - 2014-15            119.2 hours.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development (i) to detail the rationale behind each potential declaration of a conflict of interest by members of the Charity Commission Northern Ireland Board at their meeting on 22 September 2014; and (ii) once a potential conflict of interest was declared whether (a) it was recorded; and (b) people recused themselves from the business relating to that potential conflict once they had made a declaration.

(AQW 50308/11-16)

Mr Storey:

- (i) The rationale behind each potential declaration of conflict at the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland Board meeting on 22 September 2015, or any Board meeting, is to ensure that where there is a conflict or potential conflict that these are addressed appropriately;
- (ii) Two potential conflicts of interest were declared at the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland Board meeting on 22 September 2015;
  - (a) the conflicts were recorded; and
  - (b) there was no need for the people involved to recuse themselves as the only business discussed was noting the fact that investigations cited in the declarations were open.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Social Development, given the information compiled or recorded by the Compensation Recovery Unit, to detail (i) how many road traffic personal injury claims have been registered; and of those (ii) how many claimants registered were not legally represented, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50540/11-16)

Mr Storey: Using the information compiled or recorded by the Compensation Recovery Unit:

- (i) the number of road traffic personal injury claims that have been registered in each of the last three years is:
  - 2012/13 = 20955
  - 2013/14 = 19925
  - 2014/15 = 19031
- (ii) the number of claimants registered who were not legally represented in each of the last three years is:
  - 2012/13 = 2852
  - 2013/14 = 3023
  - 2014/15 = 3518

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Social Development, given the information compiled or recorded by the Compensation Recovery Unit, to detail (i) how many road traffic accidents claimants were not legally represented; and (ii) how many were under the age of 18 in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50541/11-16)

Mr Storey: Using the information compiled or recorded by the Compensation Recovery Unit:

- (i) the number of road traffic accidents in which claimants were not legally represented in each of the last three years was:
  - 2012/13 = 2852
  - 2013/14 = 3023
  - 2014/15 = 3518
- (ii) the number of claimants who were not legally represented and who were under the age of 18 in each of the last three years was:
  - 2012/13 = 2143
  - 2013/14 = 2087
  - 2014/15 = 2003

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development whether (i) Employment and Support Allowance and Disability Living Allowance appellants are entitled to have their appeal hearing date adjourned, particularly in instances of a first request to adjourn to enable them to secure the advocate of their choice and to facilitate the timetable of the advocate in question; and (ii) the same criteria apply in the event of Employment and Support Allowance and Disability Living Allowance officials requesting an adjournment for any reason which may be relevant.

(AQW 50685/11-16)

Mr Storey: Decisions on adjournments are the responsibility of the Appeal Tribunal. The Appeal Tribunal is an independent judicial body and therefore not within the remit of responsibility of the Minister.

The President of the Appeal Tribunals is Mr John Duffy. Mr Duffy can be contacted directly at Office of the President of Appeal Tribunals, 6th Floor Cleaver House, 3 Donegall Square North, Belfast BT1 5GA.

Written Answers to Questions

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 49727/11-16, why no such departmental reporting mechanism exists for sheep; and what consideration is being given to an introduction of such a mechanism.

(AQW 50192/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): The system for the identification and traceability of sheep is laid down by Council Regulation (EC) 21/2004 and the Sheep and Goats (Records, Identification and Movement) Order 2009. There is a requirement for keepers to notify DARD of sheep movements but not births and deaths.

In early 2016, my Department will provide a mechanism enabling keepers to update their flock details which will include recording sheep that are lost or stolen. Keepers will be able to update their flock details using APHIS-on-line (AoL) or by submitting a movement document (SG2) to their local DARD Direct Office. Publicity will be issued before the launch to inform keepers of the introduction of this facility.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what departmental grants are available to farmers.
(AQW 50204/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The 2007-2013 Rural Development Programme (RDP) is being wound up at present, but it provided £14.13m of grant support to farmers through the Farm Modernisation Programme.

Going forward, the Farm Business Improvement Scheme (FBIS) within the 2014-2020 RDP, will be the main source of grant support for farmers. It will consist of a package of measures aimed at knowledge transfer, cooperation, innovation and capital investment.

The plan is to roll out the FBIS in stages with the early focus on making advice and support available to farmers through knowledge transfer to assist them in clearly identifying their needs and make informed decisions about investments in their business.

This first phase, Farm Business Development Groups (BDG's), opened for applications on 9 November and will close on 14 December 2015. The aim of BDG's is to help farmers improve their technical efficiency, improve their business management skills and introduce them to new technologies and innovative ways of working.

The main capital intervention is the proposed Business Investment Scheme (BIS), aimed at assisting on-farm efficiency by supporting those who wish to invest to improve farm practices, grow their business and increase farm competitiveness. It is likely to be provided in a tiered manner linked to the needs identified by the farmer, and will open in 2016.

I opened the new Forestry Grant Schemes (The Forest Expansion Scheme, Forest Protection Scheme and Woodland Investment Grant) on 10 November. Applications for new woodland planting under the Forest Expansion Scheme must be submitted to Forest Service by 3p.m. Monday 4 January 2016 for tree planting this winter. These schemes will encourage creation of larger woodlands, support restoration of woodland damaged by pests and improve the resilience and environmental value of existing woodland.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on her Department's access to the Criminal Record Viewer to help enforce animal welfare.

(AQW 50217/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Further to my response to AQW 46844/11-15, my Department is working with the Department of Justice to finalise service level and data-sharing agreements with the intention of finalising arrangements by the end of this month.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action will be taken on members of Local Action Group boards that do not attend mandatory training.

(AQW 50226/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My officials have confirmed that any Local Action Group (LAG) Board member who has not attended the relevant mandatory training will be unable to participate in the decision making processes of the LAG Board. For example if a member has not attended 'Assessment panel' training then they cannot sit on an assessment panel. Ultimately if they cannot carry out the functions of a LAG Board member then they should be replaced.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether decisions taken by members of Local Action Group boards that have not under taken the mandatory training will be open to challenge.

(AQW 50227/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Any Local Action Group Board member not fulfilling the required level of mandatory training will be unable to participate in any decision making role, for example assessing applications, and therefore they will not be open to challenge.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for a breakdown of the departmental funding awarded to projects or groups in (i) Limavady; (ii) Coleraine; (iii) Ballymoney; and (iv) Moyle, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50276/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development has awarded a total of £12,145,735 to projects or groups in Limavady, Coleraine, Ballymoney and Moyle from the 1 April 2012 to 31 March 2015. This is broken down in the table below.

DARD Project / Group Spend

In addition to the funding noted above, the Department also funded the North Coast Community Partnership and Maximising Access in Rural Areas projects. As funding was made available at a project level, it is not possible to provide the geographical split requested. A split of the funding provided in each year is noted below:

- North Coast Community Partnership - £296k, (£80k 2012/13, £101k 2013/14 and £115k 2014/15); and
- Maximising Access in Rural Areas (Coleraine and Ballymoney only) - £112k (£36k 2012/13, £42k 2013/14 and £34k 2014/15).

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what consultation was carried out on the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute 2020 Strategy, to ensure that the ongoing and future research needs of farmers remained a core part of its design.

(AQW 50368/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The development of AFBI's 2020 Strategy was driven in part by the significant budget pressures facing the public sector as a result of reductions in the Executive's block grant.

I consulted on DARD's draft 2015/16 budget spending and savings proposals from November 2014 to February 2015. This included the proposed £3m scaling back of the work programme assigned to AFBI by DARD. Responses to that consultation were received from a range of industry stakeholders.

Going forward, DARD's research agenda is defined within its Evidence and Innovation Strategy which is currently being refreshed. This will define the evidence needs of my Department as well as addressing the innovation needs of industry.

Although AFBI is our primary research provider, it is not our sole source of research and development.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the impact that a 26 per cent cut to the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute budget will have on the agri-food sector.

(AQW 50369/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: On a like-for-like basis, the reduction to AFBI's 2015/16 budget is 11.5% compared with a reduction to DARD's overall budget of 15.1%.

My Departmental budget is being constrained by public sector budget cuts as a result of reductions to the Executive's block grant by the Tory Government in Britain. I have therefore had to prioritise my spending plans, taking account of the full range of Departmental responsibilities and the potential effect on frontline services. These plans include much more than the budget I allocate to AFBI. However, you will note that the reduction applied to AFBI's 2015/16 budget baseline is less than that for the Department as a whole.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the economic output from the agri-food sector, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50370/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The economic output of the Agri-Food Sector (the agriculture sector plus the food and drinks processing sector) as measured by Gross Value Added for the last five years (for which data is available) is provided in the following table:

Gross Value Added (GVA) £ Million	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
Agriculture	277.9	351.8	454.4	388.0	470.0	450.5
Food and Drinks Processing	617.8	636.6	643.0	681.9	717.7	N/A
Total GVA for Agri-Food	895.7	988.4	1,097.4	1,069.9	1,187.7	N/A

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how she will ensure that the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute 2020 Strategy complements the plans set out in her Department's Going for Growth strategy.

(AQW 50371/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: AFBI, like the rest of my Department, are subject to the budget constraints as a result of the Tory Government's cuts to the Executive's block grant. However, AFBI has defined its strategic priorities taking on board the ambitions of the Going for Growth strategy and has articulated its desire to grow its funding from other sources using the very substantial budget allocation that it continues to receive from DARD as the platform from which to leverage this additional funding. I welcome this approach, which is entirely consistent with the ambitions set out in Going for Growth.

We are currently developing some very exciting plans for the AFBI estate which would see AFBI consolidating onto a smaller number of sites with modern, efficient, leading edge facilities. Such facilities will underpin AFBI's scientific capabilities and its ability to bring in income from external sources. I hope to be in a position to bid for substantial capital funding to begin to deliver these plans during the next budget period.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on plans to introduce compulsory testing for bovine viral diarrhoea.

(AQW 50461/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department has been working closely with Animal Health and Welfare NI (AHWNI) with a view to introducing compulsory BVD tag and testing as early as possible.

There has been some delay due to the need to resolve important issues; the main one being that AHWNI's database provider has introduced upgrades to its database in order to enable it to handle the volume of data associated with the introduction of compulsory testing. These upgrades are currently undergoing verification testing to confirm both that they work reliably and that the upgraded database interfaces with my Department's APHIS system satisfactorily.

Subject to receiving the necessary assurances following these tests, I would hope to commence the legislative process in December, which will mean that the compulsory programme should commence in the early part of 2016.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what priority her Department is giving to the prompt payment of the 2015 Basic Payment to farmers; and what assurances she can give that payments will not run into the next financial year, given the issues that this would cause around taxation.

(AQW 50769/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department is giving the prompt payment of Basic Payments to farmers the highest priority. I can give an assurance that farmers who have to date provided all of the necessary information to my Department will have their applications fully processed and payments issued by the end of the current financial year.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the rationale behind her recent decision to cut funding to the Arts Council by £870,000 and to give £500,000 to a Communities Festivals Fund.

(AQW 50554/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Of the £500,000, £200,000 has been made available for a Cultural programme and £300,000 has been made available for Together: Building a United Community projects. Both of these are distinct from the Community Festivals Fund administered by the district councils.

I want to make clear that austerity is not the choice of the NI Executive nor is it my choice. I have been put in this position due to cuts imposed by the conservative government that continue to erode the block grant.

Due to the lack of a June monitoring round, I have been faced with having to re-prioritise my budget to deal with health and safety, statutory commitments, and my stated priorities -many of which are also consistent with the Executive's priorities, particularly Delivering Social Change and Together: Building a United Community.

While the absolute value of the reduction in the Arts Council budget is higher, at £870,000, than other organisations, it is the same percentage reduction as SportNI (9.1%). My Department's own budget has also been reduced by £416,000 and Libraries NI by £350,000.

I will continue to try to secure more funding for all cultural services. In the meantime, it is necessary to take difficult decisions in the context of the Conservative government's austerity programme.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how she proposed to redistribute the money that was cut from the Arts Council; and what was this money being redirected towards.

(AQW 50555/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I want to make clear that austerity is not my choice nor is it the choice of the NI Executive. My Department has been put in this position as a result of cuts imposed by the conservative government.

My Department's opening budget was £10m less than the previous year. In this context and due to the lack of a June monitoring round, I have had to re-consider the budget available to me to deal with health and safety, statutory commitments and my stated priorities to take actions and measures to tackle poverty, social exclusion and disadvantage.

To achieve this, I have had to reprioritise budgets not only in relation to the Arts Council but also my Department, the Arts Council, SportNI and LibrariesNI.

Part of this was to address statutory needs such as new regulations for the Public Record Office NI and board appointments for National Museums NI.

There were also a range of binding commitments, including funding for:

- Programmes run by the Governing Bodies to promote equality and tackle social exclusion;
- The Ministerial Advisory Group for Ulster-Scots (MAGUS);
- Cross Community Cultural Programme;
- Together: Building a United Community projects which are a key Executive priority;
- The highly successful Líofo programme;
- Increasing female participation in fishing;
- Creative Industries Development and Departmental led projects which tackle poverty and social exclusion; and
- The North West, continuing the legacy of the City of Culture.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how she plans to ensure that credible, transparent and accountable funding of all arts sectors can be maintained.

(AQW 50556/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: All funding and accountability processes within my Department are in line with Government accounting practices and take account of propriety, regularity and value for money. The need for credible, transparent and accountable funding is not unique to the arts sector.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department assessed the impact that the proposed cuts and redistribution of funds would have on the provision of the arts; and how it balanced that with funding decisions made about other functions within the Department.

(AQW 50557/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: It is important to note that these are not my cuts, but cuts by the Conservative government. The collective Executive budget has been reduced very significantly, as has the DCAL budget. We started this year with £10m less than last year. In that context, it was not a question of whether this would have an impact, the question was how to reduce the impact on the most vulnerable whilst continuing to deliver on priorities such as health and safety and statutory obligations.

Given that we are now mid-year, many of my Arm's-Length Bodies' costs, such as salaries and building costs, are committed in the medium term. I had no alternative but to look to grant programmes for a significant part of the savings required. Therefore programmes by the Arts Council, Sport NI and the Department have inevitably been affected, as has Libraries NI.

While, in absolute terms, the cut against the Arts Council's grant programme is the largest, it is the same percentage reduction as Sport NI, which also had a 9.1% budget reduction amounting to £320,000. The Libraries budget was cut by £350,000 and the Department's budget by £416,000. It is therefore fair to say that the Arts have not been cut disproportionately.

I have heard from some of the organisations affected and I understand the difficulties they are facing. Organisations have indicated that there will be staffing consequences and cuts to programming. I will continue to promote the benefits of the arts and the Arts & Culture Strategy which I will introduce will also emphasise the importance of arts and culture to society.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 49725/11-16, as the principle funder of Feile an Phobail (i) whether she was aware of this exhibition in advance of its opening; (ii) how this exhibition met her Department's equality and good relations policies; (iii) whether she attended the exhibition; and if so, (iv) on what date.

(AQW 50742/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Féile an Phobail receives financial support from a range of organisations one of which, the Arts Council, is sponsored by my Department. As part of the application process for all Arts Council award schemes, applicants must indicate their acceptance of an Equality of Opportunity and Good Relations Commitment which is contained within the application form. They must also provide a copy of the applicant organisation's Equal Opportunities policy.

I did not attend this exhibition in my role as Minister.

Department of Education

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education whether his Department intends to issue guidance on serving processed pork following the publication of the World Health Organisation's report which concluded it causes cancer.

(AQW 50325/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The Department has issued detailed guidance on Nutritional Standards for School Lunches which are compulsory for all grant-aided schools. This ensures school meals deliver a healthy and well balanced diet. These standards were developed in conjunction with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS), the Public Health Agency (PHA) and the Food Standards Agency (FSA).

My officials regularly meet with officials in DHSSPS, FSA, PHA, school caterers and others to address all issues concerning food in schools, including research and reports that may impact on these standards. The current guidance reflects the latest DHSSPS advice which support the recommendations in the WHO report.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of teaching staff on temporary contracts in East Belfast, broken down by school.

(AQW 50597/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department is not the employer of teachers, and is not responsible for the appointment of teachers. Teachers are employed by the Board of Governors (BoG) for each school setting, and appointments are carried out in conjunction with the relevant employing authority; such as the Education Authority (EA) and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) or in the case of Voluntary Grammar and Grant Maintained Integrated schools by individual BoGs.

Whilst the decision on whom to appoint to a particular post rests with the BoG of individual schools, the Department of Education has advised schools that they should recruit to vacancies on a permanent rather than a temporary basis unless the vacancy is clearly of a temporary nature.

The number of teaching staff on temporary contracts in East Belfast schools, broken down by school, is outlined in the table below. This information is provided by the EA and the CCMS, at October 2015.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Education whether there are any plans for the Magilligan Field Centre.
(AQW 50641/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority is currently carrying out a review of all its outdoor centres, including Magilligan Field Centre.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the (a) number; and (b) composition of appointments to Boards of Governors for each education sector in nursery education.
(AQW 50750/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The number of Governors in nursery education by category and sector is as follows:

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) a school's responsibility in relation to cyber bullying occurring outside normal school hours; and (ii) the current powers school staff possess to intervene in such circumstances.

(AQW 50757/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: A school can only take action where any incident of bullying falls within the scope of its discipline policy. Typically this will restrict its ability to act to incidents occurring on school premises, within school hours, whilst pupils are travelling to or from the school, whilst they are representing the school or while pupils are otherwise under the control of school staff, such as during an organised school trip or after-school event.

Beyond these circumstances, responsibility for addressing bullying incidents lies solely with the parents and guardians of the pupils involved and guidance for schools on handling "out of school" incidents has not therefore been deemed necessary.

I am currently taking forward a new 'Addressing Bullying in Schools Bill' which will recognise cyber-bullying as one of the possible forms bullying can take. It was identified during the public consultation on this Bill that, disputes between pupils can begin with exchanges via social media before spilling over into physical or verbal bullying within the school itself. I recognise that in such complex situations it can be difficult for schools and parents to understand where they must take action and where they can expect the other party to do so.

The supporting guidance to the Bill will therefore specifically address cyber-bullying, providing greater clarity for both schools and parents on the boundaries of their respective responsibilities; and suggesting best-practice approaches for each to follow where the responsibility to act lies with them.

DE funds the regional Anti-Bullying Forum (NIABF). In addition to our guidance in support of the Bill, we have asked the Forum during 2015-16 to update its guidance on cyber-bullying and to prepare a section on cyber-bullying to extend its best practice guide for schools, "Effective Responses to Bullying Behaviour".

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education to detail the guidance given to schools with regard to cyber bullying occurring outside of normal school hours.

(AQW 50758/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: A school can only take action where any incident of bullying falls within the scope of its discipline policy. Typically this will restrict its ability to act to incidents occurring on school premises, within school hours, whilst pupils are travelling to or from the school, whilst they are representing the school or while pupils are otherwise under the control of school staff, such as during an organised school trip or after-school event.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Education for an update on the planned new build for Edendork Primary School.
(AQW 50762/11-16)

Mr O’Dowd: The planning process for the new build for Edendork Primary School is currently at business case stage. It is anticipated that approval of this business case will be obtained early in the new calendar year. This approval will permit a design team to be procured to take forward the design of the new school.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Education for an update on the planned new build for Holy Family Primary School, Magherafelt.
(AQW 50763/11-16)

Mr O’Dowd: There are no current plans for a new build at Holy Family Primary School (PS).

There are many school building projects I would like to fund and difficult decisions have to be made on how to invest the reduced capital budget available to me. This in no way implies that a project for Holy Family will not be considered for a new build at some later stage.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education for a breakdown of the gender balance on each of his Department’s publicly appointed boards and arm’s-length bodies.
(AQW 50830/11-16)

Mr O’Dowd: The gender balance for the public appointments made to the Non Departmental Public Bodies sponsored by my Department is as follows:

	Male	Female
Education Authority	8	13
Council for Catholic Maintained Schools	2	2
Diocesan Education Committees of the CCMS	5	2
General Teaching Council	1	2
Middletown Centre for Autism, Armagh - Board of Directors	1	4
Council for the Curriculum Examinations & Assessment	8	6
Youth Council for NI	3	3
Exceptional Circumstances Body	20	23
Council for Integrated Education	DE posts are currently vacant
Comhairle ns Gaelscoilíochta	DE posts are currently vacant

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools that are overseen by the (i) Council for Catholic Maintained Schools; (ii) Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education; (iii) Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta; and (iv) Governing Bodies Association Northern Ireland.
(AQW 50857/11-16)

Mr O’Dowd: The Council for Catholic Maintained Schools has a statutory responsibility to ensure the effective management of catholic maintained schools by their boards of governors. It is also the employing authority for teachers in catholic maintained schools. In this context the Council oversees 471 schools.

While the Northern Ireland Council for Integrated Education, the Comhairle na Gaelscolaíochta and the Governing Bodies Association Northern Ireland may work with schools in their respective sectors, they do not have any formal oversight role in respect of schools

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what strategies his Department is pursuing to encourage community based education provision for adult learners.

(AQW 49796/11-16)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): The strategic aim of the NI European Social Fund (ESF) Programme 2014-2020 is to combat poverty and enhance social inclusion, by reducing economic inactivity and to increase the skills base of those currently in work and future potential participants in the workforce.

The 2014-2020 Programme will have five distinct funding streams focusing on support for specific groups of beneficiaries:

- Priority 1.1 – Individuals facing barriers to employment and economic activity;
- Priority 1.2 – Young people not in education, employment or training (NEET);
- Priority 2.1 – People with a disability;
- Priority 2.2 – Community-based support for families, aimed at preventing young people becoming NEET; and
- Priority 3 – Apprenticeships and Youth Training

The total value of the new ESF 2014-2020 Programme is €513.4m – over 20% more than the initial allocation to the previous programme. This amount is made up of €205.4m (40%) from the European Union, which requires 60% match funding of €308m.

Under the first call of the programme, which relates to projects operating from 2015-2018, 67 projects have been successful, of which the majority will be taken forward by community-based organisations in the voluntary and community sector.

Training suppliers, based across Northern Ireland, are contracted to deliver my Department's Training for Success and ApprenticeshipsNI programmes. Training suppliers are drawn from the Community, Private and Further Education sectors.

My Department's Further Education curriculum policy is based on high quality provision and clear progression routes for all learners. The policy has also been developed to ensure that, through the curriculum offer, further education colleges achieve an appropriate balance between provision that strengthens economic and workforce development, enhances social cohesion and advances the individual's skills and learning.

The promotion of social inclusion through education and learning is a priority for my Department and all six Further Education Colleges. Colleges provide a wide range of courses for adults across all of their main campuses, as well as in a number of community outreach centres. Courses delivered in the community enable individuals and small groups to undertake courses in an informal environment that help them gain the knowledge, skills and qualifications to develop employment and career prospects, while others, such as hobby and leisure activities offer individuals the opportunity to meet new friends and enjoy a new and rewarding learning experience.

Funding allocated to my Department in this financial year was severely reduced and as a result colleges had to make a number of very difficult decisions, particularly in relation to part time community outreach provision. However, colleges are fully committed to ensuring that community educational provision continues to be available across all areas albeit on a reduced basis.

In addition, colleges have developed their own Community Strategies and have responded well to the need to source other income streams for community provision to enable them to maximise the number of opportunities they can offer to learners, by working in partnership with a range of organisations including Neighbourhood Renewal and Big Lottery.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for a breakdown of any investment, including capital his Department has made in West Belfast since May 2011.

(AQW 50088/11-16)

Dr Farry: Investment, including capital, since May 2011 is detailed below. Where possible, I have provided this for the West Belfast area. However, for some projects, it has not been possible to disaggregate to this specific area.

1 United Youth Programme

My Department is currently leading, on behalf of the Executive, on the development of the United Youth Programme. This is a good relations programme that will provide flexible, high-quality, young-person-centred opportunities for 16–24 year olds who are not in education, employment or training. Funding of £3m was secured via the Executive's Change Fund to deliver the pilots in 2015/16. Pilot activity is across all geographical areas of Northern Ireland and it is not possible to specify the amount of funding relating to West Belfast. Further information on the United Youth Pilots, including the names of the organisations delivering pilots, may be found on DEL's website at www.delni.gov.uk/news/farry-launches-united-youth-pilot.

2. Higher Education: St Mary's University College

St. Mary's University College is situated in West Belfast. Since May 2011 the College has received the following investment from DEL:

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15	2015/16
Recurrent Block Grant	£5,098,265	£4,792,369	£4,657,567	£4,533,743	£4,304,480
Other Recurrent funding (PGCE & Access Funds)	£138,047	£134,259	£74,529	£35,000	£35,000

<sup>1</sup> April 2014 to September 2015

3. Further Education: Belfast Metropolitan College

Since May 2011, my Department has provided Belfast Metropolitan College with capital funding totalling £10.1m (see breakdown below) to complete the 'e3' facility at its Springvale campus. The 5,000m<sup>2</sup> building is a model of best practice in environmental development. Its design centres on a number of key operating zones, which are linked to both the College's curriculum and a range of priority workforce development activities.

2011/2012	2012/2013
£7,392,860	£2,729,201

My Department also provides (i) capital funding to cover minor works projects across the College's estate and (ii) an annual block grant to cover the running costs of Belfast Metropolitan College as detailed below. However, my Department does not hold a breakdown of how this is invested across each of the College's campuses, including its facilities in West Belfast. You may wish to contact the Principal of the College, who may be in a position to provide the information you require (Marie-Therese McGivern, 028 90265163 / mmcgivern@belfastmet.ac.uk).

4. Collaboration and Innovation Fund (CIF)

Four projects offered assistance to young people in the West Belfast area for young people not in education, employment or training to help them move closer to positive destinations. These projects ended on 29th March 2015 and funding is detailed as follows. (Some residual funding will be paid at the end of 2015/16 but these figures are not yet available):

Project Name:	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Now Project	£56,738	£182,774	£213,541

5. Community Family Support Programme (CFSP)

The Community Family Support Programme (CFSP) was a pilot programme from 2012 to March 2015, delivered in five contract areas across NI that mirrored the Health and Social Care Trust Areas. Upper Springfield Development Trust was the lead provider in the Belfast contract area with one CFSP Co-ordinator and four Family Liaison Officers to work with families and young people disadvantaged with multiple health, social and economic issues. However, it has not been possible to disaggregate the funding specific to West Belfast and the figures below are for the whole of NI.

Project Name:	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Community Family Support Programme	£149,505	£76,586	£2,392,873

6. Local Employment Intermediary Service (LEMIS)

This was a community employment initiative designed to help the "hardest to reach" in targeted areas to find employment which ended on 31st March 2015. The service was delivered by community organisations aimed at helping unemployed people in the community overcome issues that may be preventing them from finding and keeping a job.

7. Employment Service

My Department's Employment Service has a number of programmes across Northern Ireland. However, it has not been possible to disaggregate the actual amounts invested in the West Belfast area alone.

Name of project	1 May 2011 to 31 March 2012	2012 /13	2013/14	2014/15	2015/16 (to 29 Oct 15)

Employment Service Support (ESS)				£0.480m	£0.365m
Steps 2 Success (S2S)				£1.719m	£3.342m

- Workforce II investment covers the Lisburn and West Belfast areas.
- Steps to Work ran from September 2008 with the last participants entering the programme by 25 August 2014. It was delivered in West Belfast by Springvale Learning.
- Employment Service Support (ESS) launched on 2 June 2014 with the last participants entering the programme by 31 March 2015. ESS was delivered in West Belfast by Springvale Learning.
- Steps 2 Success launched on 20 October 2014. It is delivered in the Belfast contract area by Ingeus. It is not possible to disaggregate spend for West Belfast from the contract area spend.

8. Training for Success/ApprenticeshipsNI

Training for Success (including Programme-Led Apprenticeships) is a programme designed for young people aged 16-17, under 22 years for those with a disability, and under 24 years for those who qualify under the Children (Leaving Care) Act (NI) (2002). The programme provides training for learners who have not yet found full-time employment. It is designed to enable learners to progress to higher level training, further education or employment by providing training to address personal and social development needs, and develop occupational and employability skills and, where necessary, Essential Skills training.

ApprenticeshipsNI aims to provide participants with the opportunity to take part in a Level 2/Level 3 Apprenticeship where the apprentice, in paid employment from day one, works towards achieving an industry-approved Level 2/Level 3 Apprenticeship Framework.

Details of funding from May 2011 in the West Belfast area are set out in the tables below. No capital funding is provided on these programmes.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the seating capacity for the performing Arts and Technology Innovation Centre at the South Eastern Regional College in Bangor.

(AQW 50238/11-16)

Dr Farry: The South Eastern Regional College Performing Arts, Computing and Engineering (SPACE) facility in Bangor has a total seating capacity in excess of 350 across all the performing arts elements of the building. The main auditorium has a fixed seating capacity of 167 which can be extended to 200 depending on the type of performance being staged.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) how he plans to support the study of the Chinese language and culture; and (ii) whether there are plans for further investment.

(AQW 50320/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department provides funding and sets the strategic direction for the higher and further education sectors. However, decisions regarding course provision and curriculum, including Chinese language and culture, are a matter for individual institutions.

My Department does not currently allocate any specific funds to our universities for the study of Chinese language and culture and has no plans to do so. However, my Department funds the UK wide Study China programme. This funding enables up to 45 Northern Ireland students to avail of a three week cultural mobility opportunity to partner universities in China. This funding is in place to July 2016, and future funding will be considered as part of the spending review.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 48696/11-16, whether a decision regarding the preferred option for the accommodation needs of the Northern Regional College has been made, and when it will be announced.

(AQW 50321/11-16)

Dr Farry: A final Outline Business Case was received from the Northern Regional College on 15 October 2015 and is being assessed by my Department. It sets out the College's proposals for addressing its accommodation needs in the Coleraine, Ballymoney and Ballymena areas.

Following my acceptance of the Business Case proposals, further approval will be required from the Department of Finance and Personnel before the College's plans can be made public.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how he evaluates the financial support provided to universities in terms of (i) academic courses; (ii) job creation; and (iii) contribution to the community.

(AQW 50322/11-16)

Dr Farry: The universities are autonomous bodies and decide on their own course offerings. However, as part of the Higher Education Strategy for Northern Ireland, Graduating to Success, the universities are looking at the rebalancing of their courses, so that qualifications offered more closely reflect the needs of the economy. Indeed, despite the recent reduction in university funding, both universities have undertaken to protect the economically important narrow STEM courses.

In terms of the wider evaluation of universities in relation to job creation and impact on our communities and economy, I commissioned a review of the sector which completed in January 2015. The report by Viewforth Consulting Ltd on "The economic impact of higher education on the Northern Ireland economy" clearly demonstrates the important contribution made by our universities.

The research has shown that in 2012-13 Northern Ireland's higher education institutions directly created over 6,000 jobs and indirectly created almost 12,000 in Northern Ireland. That means for every job created almost another two were created in other parts of the economy.

As well as creating jobs, higher education institutions and their students also make significant contributions to the economy by generating spending and other types of economic activity.

As with job creation, direct spending can create knock-on spending which ripples through other parts of the economy. For example, higher education institutions spend money on staffing costs, and when those staff spend their salaries in other parts of the economy this represents knock-on spending. In total, in 2012-13 Northern Ireland's higher education institutions and their students generated over £1.6 billion of spending in the Northern Ireland economy.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail what financial structures are in place to scrutinise expenditure by universities in terms of value for money.

(AQW 50324/11-16)

Dr Farry: Our universities are required to demonstrate that value for money has been achieved. To this end they submit an annual value for money report to my Department as part of the annual accountability process. The need to demonstrate value for money has also been highlighted in the Diamond report, issued by Universities UK, which recognises that efficiency and effectiveness are key priorities for the UK higher education sector. The report is available at the following link:

<http://issuu.com/universitiesuk/docs/efficiencyeffectivenessvalueformone/1?e=15132110/11601172>

A key guiding principle within the Diamond report has been to ensure that efficiency is seen as part of a wider strategic objective to enhance the effectiveness of universities and ensure that they continue to deliver high quality teaching and research, rather than simply find mechanisms for short-term cost savings. The achievement of value for money is particularly important in light of the current funding environment and the ongoing financial challenges which this poses.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the relocation of the South West College's Enniskillen campus.

(AQW 50326/11-16)

Dr Farry: Following the purchase of a site for the new campus on the former Erne Hospital site in March 2015, the South West College has been working with my officials and with Central Procurement Directorate in the Department of Finance and Personnel, on the procurement of an Integrated Consultancy Team. The Consultancy team will develop the design of the new campus and progress any planning application required.

Tenders were received on 9 October 2015 and are currently being assessed. It is anticipated that a design team will be in place by end November 2015 with a forecast start date for construction in July 2017, subject to the availability of funding.

The relocation cannot take place until construction and fit out have been fully completed and the building has been formally handed over to the College. At present this is anticipated to be in summer 2019.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the cost to build the Performing Arts and Technology Innovation Centre at the South Eastern Regional College in Bangor.

(AQW 50391/11-16)

Dr Farry: The final capital cost of the SPACE building (South Eastern Regional College's Performing Arts, Computing and Engineering facility), formerly referred to as the Performing Arts and Technology Innovation Centre, cannot be confirmed at this stage. The approved project sum is £11.659 million, and I can confirm that the estimated projected expenditure outcome is within this specified budget.

My Department does not hold the information requested in AQW 50392/11-16 or AQW 50393/11-16. Consequently, I would advise the Member to address these queries directly to Mr Ken Webb, Principal and Chief Executive of South Eastern Regional College. His contact details are:

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49389/11-16 and AQW 49602/11-15, why is his Department unable to break down the support structure costs of £1.14m.
(AQW 50433/11-16)

Dr Farry: As I explained in my response to AQW 49602/11-16, the figure of £1,141,646 relates to the general costs incurred under the European Social Fund (ESF) 2007-2013 Programme support contract.

Whilst the general costs involved relate to salaries, premises costs and insurance, claims were not broken down into these individual categories. It is therefore not possible to disaggregate the total sum into separate categories.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49422/11-16, to detail (i) the number of staff that are covered by the £1.035m spend on departmental staff salaries, for the period August to December 2015; and (ii) how this compares, in terms of value for money, to the priority three project costs of £1.14m over a seven year period.
(AQW 50434/11-16)

Dr Farry: The £1.035m referred to is the estimated resource set aside to cover staff salaries. The number of staff detailed to work on both the European Social Fund (ESF) 2007-2013 Programme and the 2014-2020 Programme between August and December 2015 is as follows:

Month	ESF Managing Authority	Contract Staff	Additional Departmental Resources
August 2015	23
September 2015	24
October 2015	21
November 2015	20	8	10
December 2015	20	8	10

The Priority 3 project costs of £1.14m referred to relate to the overall costs of the Department's contract with Proteus. These costs include salaries, rent/rates, heat and light, telephone, postage and stationery and insurance. It is therefore impossible to undertake a like-for-like value for money comparison.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49422/11-16, why did his Department transfer £1.5m from Priority 3 to Priority 2 of the European Social Fund 2007-2013 Programme.
(AQW 50435/11-16)

Dr Farry: The decision to transfer £1.5m from Priority 3 to Priority 2 arose as one of a number of required actions resulting from the European Commission's decision to place an Interruption on the 2007 - 2013 ESF Programme. This Interruption was due to management and control issues relating to the Voluntary and Community Projects, as identified by the Audit Authority in their annual control report.

As part of a range of actions taken by the NI ESF Managing Authority to address the audit concerns, it was agreed with the European Commission that no further Priority 1 open call (Voluntary and Community) project expenditure would be included in claims to the Commission.

However, in order to ensure that Northern Ireland received its full ESF allocation for the 2007-13 programming round, it was necessary to introduce alternative eligible low-risk government programme expenditure.

Accordingly, Training for Success expenditure, together with increased amounts of Programme Led Apprenticeships expenditure (both of which are eligible for inclusion), were brought into Priority 1 to replace the amount of Voluntary and Community expenditure that could not now be claimed. The interruption on Priority 2 was lifted, and there was an increase in the expenditure in that Priority area, allowing the Department to maximise the draw-down of its overall allocation. Removal of activity from Priority 3, and subsequent transfer of £1.5m to Priority 2, has also afforded the opportunity to increase expenditure within the other Priorities to meet their pressures.

The overall total of the Programme remained unchanged, and this transfer was approved by both the ESF Programme Monitoring Committee and the European Commission. The transfer will also have no impact on the intended outcomes of the Programme.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail whether his Department held any meetings with the former North Down Borough Council or whether it was consulted before building the Performing Arts and Technology Innovation Centre at South Eastern Regional College in Bangor.

(AQW 50469/11-16)

Dr Farry: I met with the North Down Council Chief Executive Officer and Group Leaders on 28 May 2013 to discuss the Performing Arts and Technology Innovation Centre proposals. A Project Board was established by the College to take forward all aspects of the development, including consultation with interested parties. This consultation included discussions with representatives from the former North Down Borough Council. If you require further details of these meetings I would advise you to contact Mr Ken Webb, Principal and Chief Executive of South Eastern Regional College directly.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49604/11-16, to detail why travel was arranged by Proteus NI given that all NICS staff travel must use the NICS-wide travel contract.

(AQW 50499/11-16)

Dr Farry: Proteus NI has held contracts with my Department to offer assistance to the ESF Managing Authority in delivering both the main ESF programme and associated Learning Networks, which included arranging travel for project promoters, Departmental staff and their own staff, in line with the procedures outlined in my answer to AQW 50438/11-16.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49600/11-16, to detail the breakdown of taxi costs at £100.20, including the reason for the costs.

(AQW 50516/11-16)

Dr Farry: The breakdown of these costs is as follows:

■ Taxi to Belfast City Airport:	£8.50
■ Taxi from Belfast City Airport:	£9.50
■ Taxi from Brussels Airport to hotel:	£39.74
■ Taxi from hotel to Brussels Airport:	£42.46
■ Total:	£100.20

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49684/11-16 and given that the whole Technical Assistance budget for the 2014-2020 European Social Fund Programme has not been profiled, to detail how his Department knows how many staff they plan to employ through this budget.

(AQW 50518/11-16)

Dr Farry: As with all areas of its work, the Department calculates the number of staff required through workforce and business planning exercises, by scoping future activity, and subsequently allocating an appropriate number of staff to this activity. This is, by its nature, an iterative process and is therefore subject to potential change.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail why his Department is funding the unequal delivery of support to unemployed people in Mid and East Antrim compared to Mid Ulster as a consequence of the Job Match Programme administered by Network Personnel.

(AQW 50520/11-16)

Dr Farry: Network Personnel's profiled targets for provision under the ESF-funded Job Match project aim to deliver training and support to exactly the same number of participants in Mid Ulster District Council as in Mid and East Antrim Borough Council. This amounts to 327 participants per council area over the 3-year lifespan of the project.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49562/11-16, was the display at St Mary's University College Belfast compatible with Section 75 obligations.
(AQW 50538/11-16)

Dr Farry: While my Department highlights, to all higher education institutions, their responsibility to adhere to relevant legislation, assurance of compatibility with Section 75 is not within my Department's remit.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how his Department plans to meet its Article 10 Obligations given that it no longer employs Proteus NI in the 2014-2020 European Social Fund Programme and has not yet budgeted for transnational activity on an ad hoc basis.
(AQW 50584/11-16)

Dr Farry: I have already answered this question in my response to AQW 49665/11-16.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many groups, awarded under the 2014-2020 European Social Fund Programme, have had to reprofile their budgets as a result of them not being able to secure full match-funding.
(AQW 50585/11-16)

Dr Farry: Under Year 1 of the 2014-2020 European Social Fund (ESF) Programme, there are 24 projects which have re-profiled their budgets, due to changes in anticipated match funding.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49389/11-16 and AQW 49602/11-16, to detail how his Department, as a responsible Managing Authority, is not able to break this data down.
(AQW 50586/11-16)

Dr Farry: As I have stated in my previous two responses, whilst the general costs involved relate to salaries, premises costs, and insurance, claims were not broken down into these individual categories. It is therefore not possible to disaggregate the total sum into separate categories.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49606/11-16, to detail the page number of the Promoter's Operating Manual, or any other document issued, that states the requirement of participants of the 2007-13 European Social Fund Programme to present themselves to jobs and benefits offices.
(AQW 50587/11-16)

Dr Farry: The requirement for participants on the 2007-2013 European Social Fund (ESF) Programme to present themselves to Jobs and Benefits Offices, as is the case for all people in receipt of benefits, is contained in various regulations in The Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the timeline for a decision on the Ulster University Magee Business Case.
(AQW 50592/11-16)

Dr Farry: I provided an update to the member in September this year on this topic and not much has changed in the interim. A draft of the business case was resubmitted in late June. However, some issues required further clarification as is the norm in any complex business case. My officials are awaiting receipt of a revised business case.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) the number of JTI employees supported through his Department's training programmes since the announcement of the plant closure; and (ii) the total spend to date on retraining JTI employees before the final closure.
(AQW 50622/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department has been in regular contact with Japan Tobacco International (JTI) since the announcement of the factory closure to discuss a number of issues including training.

JTI appointed an Outplacement Provider to carry out a skills audit of the current staff. As a result of this exercise, six courses which can be delivered by the Further Education sector were identified and presented to Departmental officials for possible support. Due to the shift patterns at JTI it will not be possible for all staff to attend these courses through the normal college timetabled courses.

I have, therefore, agreed to provide support towards the delivery of these courses specifically for JTI staff. A meeting has been arranged by Departmental officials with JTI and Northern Regional College (NRC) on 12 November to discuss putting arrangements in place for the delivery of the courses.

The information provided to the Department indicates that a total of 157 JTI staff have requested these courses. The amount of funding will be determined by the number of staff that chooses to take up the courses once they have been scheduled.

There are six essential skills classes currently operating and being delivered by NRC. Four of these are in ICT, one in communication (literacy) and one in application of number (numeracy). There are a total of 65 JTI staff undertaking the essential skills courses. These courses are fully funded by my Department and the approximate cost will be £20,000 which will be paid to NRC upon completion of the courses.

I understand that JTI will also be providing assistance for training which is separate to the support available through my Department.

My Department will continue to work with JTI and other agencies to provide staff with the assistance and advice they require prior to their redundancy. This may centre on alternative job opportunities, mentoring, access to further training courses, entrepreneurship, education opportunities and careers advice; as well as a range of other issues such as benefits and taxation. This service is always delivered free of charge to the company and employees facing redundancy.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what actions his Department has taken to improve uptake of the cycle to work scheme.

(AQW 50655/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department participates in the NICS Cycle to Work Scheme and there is a designated contact within the Department. The Cycle to Work Scheme is now an established NICS-wide scheme and continues, as an open ended scheme, which has been available to all Civil Servants since February 2013.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the success of the recent jobs fair on Wednesday 23 September 2015 in the Millennium Forum, Londonderry; and to detail the numbers of employers and job seekers in attendance.

(AQW 50661/11-16)

Dr Farry: The recent Job Fair in the Millennium Forum was a successful event attracting 27 employers, offering 550 jobs. Just over 2,000 jobseekers attended the event. To date, three employers have confirmed that they have recruited 26 jobseekers directly from the event. Further updates from employers are anticipated on completion of their recruitment process.

A range of onsite workshops provided jobseekers with the opportunity to obtain information on potential careers with companies such as Convergys, Fujitsu and Debenhams. A Job Club, facilitated by the local Jobs and Benefits Office, offered advice and guidance on skills and techniques to improve an individual's prospect of finding employment.

Feedback gathered from both employers and clients indicates that the event was a success in meeting both the needs of employers, support/training organisations and those jobseekers who attended. Results from the exit survey confirm that 95% of jobseekers found the Job Fair very beneficial.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what material is held on the geographical distribution of the residency of the workforce of Michelin Ltd and, if available, how does it break down either by parliamentary constituency or council area.

(AQW 50697/11-16)

Dr Farry: My Department does not hold specific residency information on Michelin employees.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how much European Social Funding has been paid to the community and voluntary sector in the Fermanagh South Tyrone & Dungannon District Council area in each of the past 5 years.

(AQW 50773/11-16)

Dr Farry: Under the 2007-2013 European Social Fund (ESF) Programme, the following funding was paid to organisations based in the Fermanagh South Tyrone and Dungannon District Council area:

Financial Year	Total ESF Funding
2011/12	£502,011.79
2012/13	£448,158.69
2013/14	£624,458.60
2014/15	£665,418.66

Under the 2014-2020 ESF Programme, £313,077 has been allocated from the ESF/DEL contribution during the 2015/16 financial year, for organisations in the same area. £99,328.43 of this allocation has been paid to date.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for a breakdown of the £4m funding, that he mentioned in the Assembly on 3 November 2015, provided by Invest NI to Michelin, specifying the purpose and date of each grant.

(AQW 50350/11-16)

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): A total of £4,754,297 was offered to Michelin Tyre Plc by way of grant as follows:

Offer Issued Date	Assistance Offered	Drawn Down	Grant Type
20-09-2007	£86,678	£86,678	Business Improvement Training Programme (BITP)
13-12-2007	£2,550,000	£2,190,967	Selective Financial Assistance (SFA) - Capital Grant
07-05-2009	£612,040	£608,741	Business Improvement Training Programme (BITP)
22-07-2009	£49,050	£49,050	Accelerated Support Fund (ASF)
12-02-2012	£654,359	£654,359	Business Improvement Training Programme (BITP)
24-06-2014	£750,000	£0	Selective Financial Assistance (SFA) - Capital Grant/Energy Project
2007/08 - 2014/15	£52,170	£52,170	Various small interventions regarding energy, skills and consultancy
Total	£4,754,297	£3,641,965

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether any assistance afforded to Michelin will stand to be paid back in light of the announced closure of the Ballymena plant.

(AQW 50351/11-16)

Mr Bell: Invest NI will determine the amount of clawback relating to Michelin's offers and recover this.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list the contacts between Invest NI and Michelin over the last twelve months, indicating the purpose and result of each meeting.

(AQW 50352/11-16)

Mr Bell: Over the past twelve months Invest NI have had a total of 26 meetings with Michelin.

The purpose of these meetings was to discuss a range of issues relating to claims advice, energy related matters, liaison re the Michelin Development Fund and relationship visits by the Client Manager.

In addition to the above numerous telephone calls took place on a wide range of ongoing issues.

Over the period in question DETI officials have also participated in a number of economic and energy related events such as Major Energy Users Council at which the interests of Michelin and other large energy users were represented.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment of the Foreign Direct Investment visits to the Mid and East Antrim Council area in 2014/15, to which he referred in the Assembly on 3 November 2015, how many took place within the North Antrim constituency.

(AQW 50353/11-16)

Mr Bell: In addressing the Assembly on 3rd November I referred to 23 FDI visits to the Mid & East Antrim Council area between 2009/10 and 2013/14, of these, eight were to North Antrim.

However, attracting FDI is only one element of our work to grow and develop the economy. Of equal importance is our work to support indigenous businesses to grow and during the same period £24m of support was offered to nearly 1,000 projects by local businesses planning to invest £120m in North Antrim. These offers included projects that are expected to create jobs, as well as projects that were aimed at other business development activities such as R&D, skills and trade development etc. Although not directly related to job creation, these activities will underpin business competitiveness and may lead eventually to growth and employment opportunities.

Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment when he was first advised that Michelin would be ceasing production at their Ballymena factory.

(AQW 50357/11-16)

Mr Bell: Michelin gave no prior warning relating to their announcement concerning the impending closure of the Plant. My Departmental officials became aware at 11:00am on the morning of the announcement on Tuesday 3 November 2015.

Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what meetings departmental officials, or representatives of Invest NI, have held with the Michelin company since he became Minister in May 2015.

(AQW 50358/11-16)

Mr Bell: Since becoming Minister in May 2015 my officials and Invest NI have held a total of 17 meetings with Michelin. These meetings were to discuss a variety of matters including improving the competitiveness of the Ballymena plant, energy, grant claims against existing offers of support, liaison regarding the existing Michelin Development Fund and relationship visits by the Client Manager.

There were also a number of additional visits by energy consultants appointed by Invest NI.

Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what requests for meetings were made to Invest NI and his Department on the future of the Ballymena Michelin factory before the announcement of its closure on 3 November 2015.

(AQW 50359/11-16)

Mr Bell: My Department and Invest NI received no requests for meetings from Michelin before the announcement of its closure on 3 November 2015.

Mr Cochrane-Watson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what representations his Department has received from Michelin about energy costs since 2011.

(AQW 50360/11-16)

Mr Bell: Between April 2013 and April 2015 my predecessor met the company twice to discuss energy costs and other issues. Four letters were also received in the period July 2013 to March 2015 from political representatives specifically referencing the company's energy costs.

Over the period in question DETI officials have participated in a number of economic and energy-related events such as the Major Energy Users Council at which the interests of Michelin and other large energy users were represented.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment when he was informed of the closure of the Michelin Factory in North Antrim.

(AQW 50361/11-16)

Mr Bell: Michelin gave no prior warning relating to their announcement concerning the impending closure of the Plant. My Departmental officials became aware at 11:00am on the morning of the announcement on Tuesday 3 November 2015.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what involvement InvestNI will have in managing the £5million Development Fund that will be provided by Michelin following the closure of its Ballymena Factory.

(AQW 50364/11-16)

Mr Bell: I warmly welcome the announcement of the £5million Development Fund by Michelin. My officials and I will be happy to provide whatever support we can to Michelin once they decide how the fund is to be managed.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether he has any plans to develop Gaelic games tourism.

(AQW 50377/11-16)

Mr Bell: Tourism NI currently has no plans in relation to the development of Gaelic games tourism.

However, Tourism NI has been working closely in recent years with sporting organisations such as Ulster GAA and Ulster Rugby in developing marketing initiatives to assist with targeting their respective fan bases.

Tourism NI provided support in recent years to a number of projects with a GAA focus including the Garvaghey Centre project in County Tyrone and the Scullion Hurls Économusée initiative.

Tourism Northern Ireland features event information, as supplied by event organisers and local authorities, on its consumer website www.discovernorthernireland.com and through its digital & social media channels.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what consideration has been given to the protection of redundancy payments in cases of company insolvency.

(AQW 50388/11-16)

Mr Bell: If an employer cannot make a redundancy payment because they are insolvent, the employee can make a claim against the Northern Ireland National Insurance Fund through the Department for Employment and Learning's Redundancy

Payments Service. Payment will be limited to what the person is entitled to under relevant statute law. This will be based on his or her age and length of service and a statutory maximum of £490 per week will apply.

The person's contract of employment may have entitled him or her to an enhanced redundancy payment which is over and above what the statutory entitlement would be. If so, the difference may be claimed in the insolvency proceedings and will rank as an unsecured creditor.

I have no plans to change the status of such claims which is in line with that applying in England and Wales.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on any discussions his Department has had with 3M on the potential job losses.

(AQW 50398/11-16)

Mr Bell: Officials from Invest NI met with the local management of 3M on the 3 November 2015 to discuss the implications of the recent announcement regarding the potential loss of 34 jobs. Invest NI will continue to liaise with the local management team at 3M in Bangor throughout this process to ensure the best possible outcome.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 49480/11-16 and AQW 33580/11-16, when the twelve week consultation will commence.

(AQW 50402/11-16)

Mr Bell: The date for commencement of the twelve week consultation remains to be informed.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether the Health and Safety Executive (HSENI) carried out its assessment of planning permission Z/2012/1387/F for a waste incinerator at Airport Road, East Belfast on the basis of the Summary of Proposed Revisions document disclosed by HSENI under the Environmental Information Regulations 2004; and why these differ from what was proposed and approved under the planning permission.

(AQW 50456/11-16)

Mr Bell: HSENI carried out an assessment of planning application Z/2012/1387/F under PADHI (Planning Advice for Developments near Hazardous Installations) Guidelines, and made a recommendation of a 'Don't Advise Against' response, along with supporting comments on the 28th March 2013. The comments HSENI made in the consultation process, were later included in the summary of the proposed revisions created by Bombardier and discussed with consultees at a meeting on 10th September 2013. The papers from this meeting were disclosed by HSENI under the environmental information regulations FOI/34/2015.

HSENI is not aware, nor normally would be, of what was proposed and approved under the planning permission outside of the above.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether the Health and Safety Executive was consulted on planning permission Z/2014/1346/F for an incinerator at Airport Road, East Belfast; and whether it has provided comment to the Department of the Environment in relation to this proposal development.

(AQW 50457/11-16)

Mr Bell: HSENI was not consulted on Z/2014/1346/F. HSENI was consulted on planning application LA04/2015/0301/F which referred to variations to conditions 6 and 7 of Z/2014/1346/F.

HSENI responded that it had no comments to make in relation to the consultation on LA/2015/0301/F, as the variations did not affect any response following its previous PADHI (Planning Advice for Developments near Hazardous Installations) Guidelines assessment for application Z/2012/1387/F.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the finding of the SONI report that circa 1800MW of wind power capacity has already received planning permission, whereas circa 1200MW meets the 2020 target of 40 per cent electricity from wind.

(AQW 50458/11-16)

Mr Bell: In its All Island Generation Capacity Statement 2015-2024, SONI refers to an amount of 1200MW of onshore wind within its scenarios which could deliver the 40% target but goes on to consider other renewable technologies which would also contribute to its forecast potential mix of 1625 MW by 2020.

While it will depend on the mix of renewable technologies, it is estimated that the 40% equates to around 1600MW installed capacity.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the Ricardo report finding that, in cost benefit terms, production of electricity from wind becomes a net negative at 40 per cent of energy being produced from wind.

(AQW 50460/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Ricardo report was not a cost benefit analysis of wind energy but assessed all renewable technologies and their potential to contribute to the Executive's target of 40% renewable electricity consumption from renewable sources. It developed a number of potential scenarios with different renewable technologies to meet the 40% target and concluded that deployment up to and including that level will have a positive effect on the local economy, as long as that deployment is located in Northern Ireland.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether at any time during his or InvestNI's meetings, Michelin referred to the £5.25 million offered by the Scottish Executive and accepted by Michelin Tyre plc towards investment at its tyre manufacturing facility in Dundee, which was expected to create 109 new jobs and safeguard 187 existing jobs.
(AQW 50467/11-16)

Mr Bell: During meetings with my officials Michelin made no reference to the Scottish Executive offer, or planned investment in Dundee. The Ballymena plant is a heavy truck tyre manufacturing facility and therefore would not have been in consideration for this investment which relates to car tyre manufacturing.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list the 803 jobs created in Derry in 2014-15.
(AQW 50478/11-16)

Mr Bell: As jobs are created over the lifetime of a project, the number of jobs created by individual investments at any particular point in time is commercially sensitive. Release of this information could potentially provide competitors with an insight into a company's business performance.

Invest NI is therefore unable to provide the detail requested at this point in time. Such information can only be released when a project has been successfully completed and control periods have ended.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 50079/11-16, whether, within the Code Governing the Appointment of Special Advisers, a financial termination package has been paid to a Special Adviser in consequence of the ministerial resignations in his Department since September 2015.
(AQW 50521/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Department acted in line with the Code Governing the Appointment of Special Advisers.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 50147/11-16, what action is being taken by his Department to ensure that it complies with the statutory obligation to respond to Freedom of Information requests within 20 working days.
(AQW 50524/11-16)

Mr Bell: The process is kept under regular review.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether consideration is being given to bringing the setting of taxi-fares and metering under the remit of Trading Standards.
(AQW 50530/11-16)

Mr Bell: My officials have had no discussions with those in the Department Of Environment in relation to bringing the responsibility for setting of taxi-fares or metering within the remit of Trading Standards.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 46005/11-15, to outline the planning permission which informed the meetings, held between the Health and Safety Executive and Bombardier on 28 January 2015 and 1 May 2012, to discuss arrangements for Combined Heat Power plant construction at Airport Road, East Belfast.
(AQW 50536/11-16)

Mr Bell: The meetings held on 28 January 2015 and 1 May 2015 (there was no meeting on this subject on 1 May 2012), were informed by what HSENI understood to be planning permission Z/2012/1387/F, which HSENI had been asked to comment on as a statutory consultee.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what measures he will deploy to mitigate energy bill increases for businesses and householders.
(AQW 50539/11-16)

Mr Bell: The majority of an electricity bill is made up of wholesale costs which, in the Single Electricity Market, are largely determined by the price of natural gas on world markets. Recent industry reports show that energy costs in Northern Ireland are at their lowest level for six years. For domestic consumers and most businesses, costs are around the EU average following retail tariff reductions in 2014 and 2015. While larger energy users negotiate their requirements outside formal tariff arrangements, they will also have seen significant reductions in their bills as a consequence of falling commodity prices, primarily gas, on world markets.

Oversight of energy market arrangements is a matter for the Utility Regulator through the process of Price Determinations for network costs, and setting of retail tariffs for incumbent energy suppliers. A 2014 report on network costs found that Northern Ireland's core network costs are broadly similar to GB and significantly lower than RoI. Including add-on charges would still leave costs below those of GB and RoI. An independent report commissioned by the Regulator in 2014 concluded that competition arrangements for large energy users were unanimously perceived to be competitive.

My Department continues to support the delivery of the North South Interconnector in the most cost-efficient manner, and further extension of the gas network into the West. It also works with the Regulator on arrangements to re-design the electricity market to meet EU market harmonisation and integration requirements.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline Tourism NI's plans to promote Ballycastle. (AQW 50547/11-16)

Mr Bell: Tourism NI's remit is to promote Northern Ireland as a destination to the Republic of Ireland and Northern Ireland markets. Through a year round programme of promotional activity, Northern Ireland is promoted through various distribution channels to our key segments in both markets.

Ballycastle, as part of the Causeway Coastal Route, will be promoted through the spring marketing campaign activity planned for 2016 in the Republic of Ireland market. The Causeway Coastal Route is also regularly promoted via Tourism NI's programme of domestic PR activity with press releases, press trips, competitions and editorial. In addition, the Causeway Coastal Route frequently features on the itineraries of Tourism NI's international media programme and international press regularly visit the Causeway Coastal Route including Ballycastle.

On the www.discovernorthernireland.com website, the area is promoted throughout the year in editorial and highlighted event listings. In 2015 this has included the Rathlin Sound Maritime Festival, which was one of Tourism NI's funded events for 2015/16. Other events highlighted during 2015 have included:

- Ballycastle Town July Holiday Markets;
- The Auld Lammas Fair;
- Giant's Causeway Coast Sportive; and
- Ballycastle Christmas Market.

Other promotion for Ballycastle has included elevating Traditional Music and Dance and details on the website of music sessions in Ballycastle and nearby areas.

Tourism NI has already received listings for some key 2016 Ballycastle events from the town's Visitor Information Centre and these will again be elevated in editorial produced as part of the web content plan and as highlighted events throughout the website. The Ballycastle area will also be highlighted as part of a major refresh of the Causeway Coast & Glens/Causeway Coastal Route section of the website.

Ballycastle and the surrounding area have been featured on Tourism NI's social media and digital marketing channels during the past 12 months. Looking ahead, Ballycastle and the Causeway Coastal Route will be promoted via our social and digital channels as part of our planned spring marketing campaign, and throughout our planned programmed of activity during 2016/17.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in light of the recent Financial Conduct Authority credit card market study interim report, to outline the departmental support that exists for people that find themselves in unmanageable credit card debt. (AQO 9074/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Department of Enterprise, Trade & Investment (DETI) funds the provision of a free debt advice service. The current contract, which started on 1 August 2012, was awarded to AdviceNI following a competitive tendering exercise. This contract has provided free, impartial and confidential advice to over 11,000 clients on a varying range of debt related matters. AdviceNI operates the current contract under the title 'Debt Action NI'. The face-to-face element of the service is available at 28 centres located throughout Northern Ireland and is integrated with a telephone and internet based debt advice service.

Up to 31st October 2015 the service has handled £40,124,687.74 of credit card debt; assisting 5,132 clients with credit card debt specific issues.

From 1 April 2016 the Money Advice Service (MAS) will assume responsibility for the procurement and funding of debt advice services in Northern Ireland. Following the 2016 NICS wide restructuring programme Departmental responsibility for all advice services, including debt advice, will transfer in May from DETI to the new Department for Communities.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the travel allowance and other subsistence paid to the present Chair of Tourism NI since taking up their post. (AQW 50578/11-16)

Mr Bell: The travel allowance and other subsistence paid to the present Chair of Tourism NI since taking up their post on 1 April 2015 to date is as follows:

Travel Description	£
Car Parking	95.20
Mileage	740.70
Public Transport	2.13
Taxis	168.00
Grand Total	1,006.03

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline (i) the process for appointing the Agri-Food Strategy Board; (ii) the independence of the Board collectively; and (iii) the independence of individual members of the Board to fulfil the role.

(AQW 50588/11-16)

Mr Bell:

- (i) The Chair and industry members of the AFSB were originally appointed on merit following an open competition conducted in accordance with the spirit of the The Commissioner for Public Appointments for Northern Ireland Code of Practice (CPANI). This included the presence on the assessment panel of a CPANI affiliated independent Panel Member. The criteria used to appoint members were as follows:
- A proven track record of contributing successfully at Board level to the strategic direction of a complex organisation;
  - A proven ability to work at a strategic level with stakeholders from different perspectives to agree a common strategy and evaluate and monitor progress against agreed targets; and
  - A good knowledge of the issues facing the local economy and a good understanding of the strategic issues facing the local agri-food industry.

In line with the CPANI guidance, a public appointee may be reappointed for a second term subject to evidence of effective performance, continued adherence to the principles of public life, and a willingness to continue in post. The AFSB Chair and members were reappointed for a further 2 year term until 19 February 2017. There are also 4 ex-officio members of the Agri Food Strategy Board, appointed as representatives of DETI, Invest NI and DARD.

- (ii) The Chair and Industry Members were appointed on the basis of their skills and experience to develop a strategic plan for the agri-food sector, rather than to ensure that specific sectors, or elements of the supply chain were represented. They act independently from the Departments.
- (iii) As part of the appointment process Members committed to uphold the seven principles of public life as defined by the Committee on Standards in Public Life, which commit to independence through selflessness, integrity, objectivity, accountability, openness, honesty and leadership.

Members also committed to disclose all actual or potential conflicts of interests to the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development or the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment as they arise. DETI/Invest NI and DARD's internal procedures to deal with such issues are sufficiently robust to guard against any actual or potential conflict affecting any of the industry members.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to 46023/11-15, (i) to outline the changes to which the answer refers; (ii) when the Health and Safety Executive (HSENI) was made aware of the changes to the proposed development; and (iii) which planning approval was granted for those changes prior to any consultation with HSENI.

(AQW 50594/11-16)

Mr Bell:

- i) There were several changes to the proposed development listed in application Z/2012/1387/F. All of the changes that HSENI are aware of were included in the summary of proposed changes document which was included in the papers disclosed by HSENI under the Environmental Information Regulations FOI/34/2015. None of the proposed changes altered any of the outcomes of the PADHI (Planning Advice for Developments near Hazardous Installations) assessment.
- ii) HSENI was made aware of the changes at the meeting in DOE on 10th September 2013 at which all of the consultees and Bombardier were present. The papers from this meeting were also disclosed by HSENI under the Environmental Information Regulations FOI/34/2015.
- iii) HSENI would not be aware of any planning approvals being granted prior to any consultation with us. While HSENI are statutory consultees to any planning proposal in relation to a development adjacent to a COMAH (Control of Major Accident Hazards) site, the specific decision to consult or not consult with HSENI lies with the relevant planning office.

HSENI were consulted on Z/2012/1387/F and LA 04/2015/0301/F which concerned the proposed changes to conditions 6 and 7 of Z/2014/1346/F.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what actions his Department has taken to improve uptake of the cycle to work scheme.

(AQW 50656/11-16)

Mr Bell: The Cycle to Work Scheme is now an established NICS wide scheme and continues as an open ended scheme which has been available to all Civil Servants since February 2013.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail any work undertaken by his Department on the development of the Narrow Water Bridge project during the past four years.

(AQW 50662/11-16)

Mr Bell: Neither my Department nor Tourism NI has undertaken any work on the development of the Narrow Water Bridge project during the past four years.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions he has had with UK Treasury regarding the rate of VAT within the tourism and hospitality industry in Northern Ireland; and to detail the outcomes of these discussions.

(AQW 50683/11-16)

Mr Bell: I have had no discussions with the UK Treasury regarding the rate of VAT within the tourism and hospitality industry in Northern Ireland. The Finance Minister takes the lead on financial issues such as this.

The Finance Minister wrote to David Gauke MP, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, on 15 June 2015 calling on the Government to once again consider how a reduced rate of VAT could be used and targeted to improve the competitiveness of the UK tourism industry. In his response dated 27 July 2015, Mr Gauke responded reaffirming Her Majesty's Treasury's position that such a change could not be applied exclusively to Northern Ireland, and that the Government had no plans to introduce a reduced rate of VAT for tourism across the UK as a whole.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions he has had with UK Treasury regarding the admissibility of a regional variation in the rate of VAT within the tourism and hospitality industries across the UK, which would benefit Northern Ireland.

(AQW 50684/11-16)

Mr Bell: I have had no discussions with the UK Treasury regarding the admissibility of a regional variation in the rate of VAT within the tourism and hospitality industries across the UK, which would benefit Northern Ireland. The Finance Minister takes the lead on financial issues such as this.

The Finance Minister wrote to David Gauke MP, Financial Secretary to the Treasury, on 15 June 2015 calling on the Government to once again consider how a reduced rate of VAT could be used and targeted to improve the competitiveness of the UK tourism industry. In his response dated 27 July 2015, Mr Gauke responded reaffirming Her Majesty's Treasury's position that such a change could not be applied exclusively to Northern Ireland, and that the Government had no plans to introduce a reduced rate of VAT for tourism across the UK as a whole.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment on what date will the new rates for Renewable Heat Incentive come into effect; and why their implementation has been delayed.

(AQW 50691/11-16)

Mr Bell: Subject to Assembly approval the new Renewable Heat Incentive Amendment Regulations will come into operation on 18th November. There was a delay in securing the necessary legal and financial approvals.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much actual electricity is produced in Northern Ireland from renewable energy sources, as opposed to the stated capacity of such sources.

(AQW 50814/11-16)

Mr Bell: Official statistics published by the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency state, in terms of the volume of electricity consumption between April 2014 and March 2015, approximately 7,928 Gigawatt hours of total electricity was consumed in Northern Ireland. Of this, some 1,581 Gigawatt hours was generated from renewable sources within Northern Ireland. This equates to 19.9 % of total electricity.

Department of the Environment

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to (i) list the planning permissions approved in the last two years by Strategic Planning Division, where it relied on a negative Environmental Impact Assessment screening but also required a stage two Appropriate Assessment under Article 6(3) Habitats Directive; and ii) whether this is permissible.

(AQW 49411/11-16)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): The compilation of this information has been complicated due to the transfer of records to local government which has meant that the specific information is no longer available to the Department for the full 2 year period requested.

From the available administrative information still held by the Department, the following applications meet the criteria as referred to in your question for 2013/14 and the first 3 quarters of 2014/2015 - J/2012/0270/F, K/2012/0372/F, J/2012/0368/F, K/2013/0072/F & K/2012/0468/F

As regards the second part of the question, it would not be appropriate for me to comment or to offer opinions on matters of legal interpretation.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail any objections he or his Department has made in relation to the role given to CDM Smith in the Unconventional Gas Exploration and Extraction Research Programme.

(AQW 49923/11-16)

Mr Durkan: No objections have been raised by either me or my Department on this matter.

The two key questions UGEE Research has been designed to answer are:

- Can UGEE projects/operations be carried out in the island of Ireland whilst also protecting the environment and human health?
- What is 'best environmental practice' in relation to UGEE projects/operations?

I would like to state that this research is undertaken by a consortium. CDM Smith is partnered with organisations of the highest repute and integrity, including University of Ulster, University College Dublin and the British Geological Society.

Queen's University Belfast was originally a partner in the UGEE research consortium but due to resource constraints they were unable to fulfil their allocated tasks. However they remain part of the consortium's internal peer review process for the joint research programme.

I am content that the appropriate processes, procedures and systems were applied to tender evaluations and continue to be applied by the Programme's Steering Committee, which includes DOE officials, to ensure the integrity of the research outcomes are not compromised. The Consortium has put in place a robust internal peer review process and in addition all reports produced must go through a stringent technical review process made up of experts from the Programme steering committee as well as independent external experts.

On the issue of health impacts from UGEE, the research requires a review of health impact studies worldwide in order to develop a suitable protocol. This is set out in the Terms of Reference as a specific task, which states: "The potential role of Health Impact Assessment in regulation of UGEE projects/operations should be considered based on the experience in other countries, and recommendations should be made towards developing a protocol in the island of Ireland context."

Also, as a result of comments received to the public consultation exercise on the Terms Of Reference, for the Research Programme, an Official from the Health Service Executive (Ireland) was added to the Programme Steering Committee.

With regard to the recently published Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS), the SPPS reaffirms my position that there should be a presumption against the exploitation of unconventional hydrocarbon extraction until the Department is satisfied that there is sufficient and robust evidence on all environmental and health impacts. I believe this is a sensible and reasonable approach.

The SPPS must be taken into account by Councils in the preparation of new Local Development Plans and is material to all decisions on individual planning applications and appeals. The provisions of the SPPS apply to the whole of Northern Ireland, including County Fermanagh. I believe the SPPS provides clarity and certainty to Councils and everyone affected by and interested in planning decisions in relation to this form of development.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment whether there is a conflict of interest with CDM Smith and their role in the Unconventional Gas Exploration and Extraction Research Programme, given their sponsorship of the Shale Gas World Europe 2013 Conference provided a platform for Tamboran Resources to promote its project on the island of Ireland.

(AQW 49937/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The two key questions UGEE Research has been designed to answer are:

I believe the SPPS provides clarity and certainty to Councils and everyone affected by and interested in planning decisions in relation to this form of development.

I am therefore content that there are currently no conflicts of interest at this time. This position is reviewed frequently by the Programme Steering Committee.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how many times the Northern Ireland Environment Agency has sent fish suspected of being killed to external test laboratories, in the last five years.

(AQW 50046/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Northern Ireland Environment Agency has not sent any fish to an external test laboratory in the last five years because it would be highly unlikely that short lethal exposure to chemicals will be taken up in the fish organs. NIEA uses water samples to seek to detect the cause of fish kills.

DCAL Inland Fisheries staff assist in NIEA investigations of pollution incidents where a fish kill has taken place. Where there is suspicion that fish disease may be a factor, DARD Fish Health is notified as the competent authority for aquatic animal health and a sample of fish may be taken for testing in communication with DARD. In the last five years DCAL Inland Fisheries Group has not sent any fish suspected of being killed to external test laboratories

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment (i) to detail what consideration has been given, or will be given, to the introduction of defibrillators in all council sports and similar facilities; and (ii) will he discuss an inter-departmental strategy with the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure.

(AQW 50090/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Department for Health Social Services and Public Safety hold the policy responsibility for the delivery of its Community Resuscitation Strategy.

District councils in the North are statutory authorities in their own right and must therefore make whatever provision they deem appropriate for their district. The cost of the relevant equipment and training in its proper use will naturally be a consideration for any authority. I agree that local government in the North has a role to play in the realisation of the objectives of the DHSSPS strategy. As the then Health Minister stated, the purpose of the strategy is to save lives and therefore we should be ambitious. It would be desirable that local government should be a partner in the delivery of the objectives outlined in the DHSSPS strategy. It may therefore be appropriate that this issue be tabled by the DHSSPS Minister for discussion at a future Partnership Panel meeting with a view to co-ordinating the delivery of the strategy.

It is my understanding following advice from DHSSPS, that a register holding the location of automated external defibrillators (AEDs) is in development and it is anticipated that once established, such a register is to be maintained and updated by the NI Ambulance Service. Facilitating public access to AEDs through knowledge and communication of their location is something that councils could certainly contribute to.

In addition to any discussion on the matter that might happen at the Partnership Panel and given the importance and cross cutting nature of the matter I would certainly welcome a discussion on an inter-departmental strategy. However I believe it would be most appropriate for my colleague the Minister of Health to initiate such a discussion in the first instance.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether it is normal procedure for a departmental proposal to be subjected to both an Appropriate Assessment and a negative Environmental Impact Assessment screening.

(AQW 50123/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The processing of each individual planning application will reflect the particular characteristics of the development proposed within its context.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of the Environment for a breakdown of any investment, including capital, his Department has made in West Belfast since May 2011.

(AQW 50136/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The attached table details the investment, including capital, made by my Department in West Belfast since May 2011.

Funding Programme	2011-12 £	2012-13 £	2013-14 £	2014-15 £	2015-16 £

Total Investment	317,387	458,854	421,661	324,373	138,106

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment whether he will ensure that core funding for groups such as the Causeway Coast and Glens Heritage Trust is in place for the next financial year.

(AQW 50199/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Conscious of the difficult operating environment and the fact that current funding arrangements finish on 31 March 2016 I had indicated that I would urgently consider the development of appropriate funding mechanisms to enable third parties to deliver key environmental outcomes from April 2016. I have listened to the views of stakeholder and I have therefore announced a new 'Environment Fund'. This is a broader fund than the previous Natural Environment Fund and will cover delivery of a wider range of key environmental outcomes under two broad themes: Ensuring good habitat quality, landscape and species abundance and diversity and Promotion of health, well-being, resource efficiency and sustainable economic development, realising the full value of our environment.

Calls for the new fund opened on the 12 November and will close on 10 December.

This will be a competitive process with value for money and delivery of critical environmental priorities being key criteria. It would not therefore be appropriate for me to comment at this stage on the prospects of any specific organisations being successful.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of the Environment whether he has given any consideration to rolling out a grants scheme to householders wishing to replace their septic tanks with the aim of promoting greater environmental protection.

(AQW 50252/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Department does not have a scheme in place for providing grants for the replacement of septic tanks and has not considered the development of such a scheme.

To date research has indicated that only 10 – 15% of the Nitrogen Loading within Northern Ireland water bodies can be apportioned to septic tanks. NIEA will therefore continue to tackle the issues relating to septic tanks through the current regulatory regime under the Water Order 1999 and the delivery of targeted catchment improvement projects.

The Department recognises the concerns over the potential financial impact on individuals who may need to upgrade or replace their septic tanks. NIEA will continue to take a pragmatic and sensitive approach to resolving issues with householders.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the legality of councils paying a Councillor's allowances directly to a third party.

(AQW 50313/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The legislation clearly states that councillor allowances are payable by councils directly to councillors. This is contained in Part 3 of the Local Government Finance Act (NI) 2011 and in the Local Government (Payments to Councillors) Regulations (NI) 2012.

In light of the recent court proceedings, my officials wrote to all district council chief executives to remind them of their duty under this legislation. However the legislation is silent on which bank accounts councillors' allowances must be paid into and councils do not have an investigative power to allow enquiries; such as that available to the Assembly. This is a subject that I will discuss with council Chief Executives to ascertain if such a legislative power is necessary and would be of benefit.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether (i) the Republic of Ireland's Environmental Protection Agency and CDM Smith are the sole parties on the contract that engages CDM Smith to carry out the Unconventional Gas Exploration and Extraction Research Programme; and (ii) the Northern Ireland Environment Agency or any other party has a veto.
(AQW 50319/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The contract agreement is between CDM Smith Ireland Ltd and the EPA.

It is important to note that whilst the EPA is the named party on the contract and signatory to the contract, that this was done on behalf of the other funders, namely NIEA and the Department of Communications, Energy and Natural Resources.

All decisions are made by the research programme Steering Committee with no one party having the authority to veto a decision.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to training completed by all taxi drivers before the renewal of their required licence, to detail (i) who will conduct this training; (ii) where the training will take place; (iii) whether this is an initiative hosted by his Department or outsourced; (iv) if the training is to be outsourced, when the tender will be advertised; (v) the estimated cost of the courses; (vi) what grant funding is available for drivers to cover or contribute to the cost of the course; and (vii) whether drivers will be compensated for loss of earnings due to attending the training course.
(AQW 50339/11-16)

Mr Durkan: From 1 September 2016 all taxi drivers renewing their Taxi Driver's Licence are required to complete periodic training from an approved training centre.

- (i) The training will be conducted by approved training providers who will be authorised by the Joint Approvals Unit for Periodic Training (JAUPT) on behalf of the Department. This is the same process used for the Driver Certificate of Professional Competence (DCPC) required by Lorry and Bus drivers. Currently there are 47 approved training providers in Northern Ireland authorised to deliver taxi, lorry and bus periodic training.
- (ii) The training will take place at various approved centres which will be organised by the respective approved training providers.
- (iii) The training will be hosted by the approved training providers referred to above.
- (iv) A tender process is not being entered into as the Department is not purchasing goods or services. JAUPT's approved trainer application process is open to all.
- (v) The cost to drivers, based on similar DCPC courses delivered by approved provider, is estimated to be in the region of £50 per seven hour module. The Department is also, in association with IMTAC (The Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee), finalising two 3½ hour Disability Awareness modules that will be made available to approved training providers free of charge. This may reduce costs for providers and these reductions could be passed on to course participants.
- (vi) & (vii) The Department does not intend to make grant funding available to drivers or to compensate for a loss of earnings. The average taxi driver can recover all of the additional costs of the Taxi Reform programme (including the periodic training, purchase of taximeters, printers and roof signs) over a three year period by a fare rise of one penny per mile.

The regulations also permit the training to take place in 3½ hour modules, to make it easier for taxi drivers to fit in around their driving schedules.

Mr Lyons asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on his consultation on increasing the weight and speed limits for agricultural tractors and trailers.
(AQW 50348/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The consultation to increase the speed and weight limits for agricultural tractors and trailers ran from 26 May to 7 July 2015, and received five written responses, from the Road Haulage Association (NI), Ulster Farmers Union, Agricultural Engineering Association, the Freight Transport Association and the RAC. All the responses received supported the proposal.

The proposed new amendments to legislation to increase the weight and speed limits for agricultural tractors and trailers have been drafted, and as these are technical amendments, are required to be sent to the European Commission for a period of three months to allow other member states to comment. Providing that there are no comments from the Commission, the Department would hope to make the legislative amendments early in the New Year.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) what action he has taken following the Marine Litter Survey 2014, which found the worst litter levels on our coastlines since 2012; and (ii) whether he will introduce a Northern Ireland wide litter strategy.

(AQW 50365/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I welcome the publication of the Marine Litter Survey 2014 which reports on levels of litter along our coastline observed during 2014, and the interest it has generated. The report finds that litter levels increased in 2014 on a number of beaches.

The reported increase in litter levels in 2014 should be considered in the context of the severe storms of 2014 which lashed our coastline. These deposited large amounts of litter onto our coast which may have been dislodged from the Irish Sea gyre.

The actions I am taking are in line with the Northern Ireland Marine Litter Strategy which my Department published in 2013 to address the problem of litter across our beaches. The Strategy, the first of its kind in the UK or Ireland, is a coordinated response to the problem of marine litter. It aims to reduce the amount of litter entering the marine environment and to remove some of the litter that is already present in our seas. It is being delivered by a coalition of public and private sector organisations.

The programmes being delivered under the Strategy include: the Wrigley's Litter Less Campaign; Blue Flag Awards for beaches and marinas; the Line Out campaign which focuses on reducing angling litter; the Bag it and Bin It campaign aimed at reducing levels of sewage related debris; upgrades to coastal sewage infrastructure, and the Great Northern Irish Beach Clean, which I participated in at Culmore Point in September.

The Strategy has been instrumental in delivering schemes such as 'Fishing for Litter', which engages the fishing sector to remove litter caught during fishing activities and promotes a change of culture within the industry. The Fishing for Litter scheme is in operation across the three main fishing harbours at Ardglass, Kilkeel and Portavogie and since its inception in 2014, almost 24 tonnes of litter have been removed from the sea by fishermen.

The Department also introduced the five pence Carrier Bag Levy in 2013. This signature piece of legislation has been a resounding success not only in reducing carrier bag numbers by tens of millions but also by generating additional funding for environmental projects. The publicity generated by the levy has brought home to a wide audience the notion that a disposable, throwaway society is not sustainable.

I am committed to tackling this problem at both a Strategic and Programme level and while we have already made progress, the Marine Litter Survey 2014 shows that there is still much to be done. I will continue to ensure the Strategy is implemented.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, given the findings of the independent Davies Report that found planners were neither open, fair, nor transparent in their dealings with the public when processing planning application A/2005/1166/F, whether he will ensure that objectors are treated fairly in the future.

(AQW 50387/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I commissioned the independent Davies Report into the handling of two planning applications at Prehen Woods, Derry by the Department. I have accepted the findings of the report which concluded that application A/2005/1166/F was not handled in a manner that was open, fair and transparent. This was primarily in relation to some inadequacies in the case officer's report which did not properly evaluate all objections and did not explain fully the reasons to support the recommendation to approve the application.

Notwithstanding these findings the report concluded that although there were some errors in the processing of the application, its planning judgement was not exercised inappropriately and its decision to approve was not unreasonable.

I am mindful that these inadequacies in processing occurred around 2007, some eight years ago. In the intervening period the Department has provided advice to staff on the need for comprehensive case officer reports that properly evaluate objections and give clear reasons when making a recommending on a planning application. I am satisfied that the Department has addressed many of the inadequacies in processing that were highlighted in the Davies Report.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of the independent Davies Report that planners were neither open, fair nor transparent in their dealings with the public when processing planning application A/2005/1166/F, whether objectors received full and clear answers to their questions and concerns raised in relation to planning approval K/2013/0072/F and subsequent associated permissions.

(AQW 50389/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Planning permission K/2013/0072/F and subsequent permissions at this site have undergone due process and in the absence of any successful challenge, are valid, extant permissions. Throughout the processing of these applications the opinions of third parties received careful consideration prior to the issuing of any decisions.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, following the findings of the Champion-v-North Norfolk District Council Court of Appeal and Supreme Court rulings, whether (i) planning application K/2011/0072/F did not require an Environmental Impact Assessment; and if not (ii) to detail the justification for this given the requirements of the Environmental Impact Assessment, Habitats Directives and European Commission guidance on developments impacting on a Natura 2000 site.

(AQW 50390/11-16)

Mr Durkan: This question raises legal issues and refers to an English Case which was eventually before the Supreme Court. It would, therefore, not be appropriate for me to comment or to offer opinions on matters of the legal interpretation.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment (i) whether the Uber or Hailo taxi companies have applied for a taxi licence; and if so, (ii) at what stage are the applications.

(AQW 50405/11-16)

Mr Durkan: To date my Department has not received a completed application for a Taxi Operator Licence from either UBER or HALLO. Should either company submit an application for a Taxi Operator Licence, this will be considered in line with statutory requirements and procedures.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the proposed introduction of printers in taxi meters for receipting purposes, to detail the estimated time frame for the introduction of printers, given many receipts are now available by electronic means; and if this is going to be a temporary measure for receipting until more advanced and environmentally friendly options become more widely available, whether his Department will supplement the financial outlay taxi drivers will be required to expend to become compliant.

(AQW 50407/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Department is intending to make the regulations that will require taximeters and printers in the coming weeks, with the new requirements coming into force from 31 May 2016.

The introduction of printers is not intended to be a temporary measure; it was a key part of the Act. The purpose of the printer is not only to produce a receipt detailing the price and distance of the journey, but also to identify from where the journey started and finished. The receipt will also include the vehicle's registration mark that will enable to consumer to follow up on any issues that arise.

In terms of the environmental impact you refer to, I have taken the decision to implement an 'offer and print' policy, where no receipt is required if the customer has been offered one and clearly declined. This is an alternative to the 'print and offer' approach that could lead to a large number of unwanted receipts being printed.

My Department does not intend to provide funding to drivers relating to the implementation of the Taxis Act.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of the Environment, given the lack of social housing in rural areas, whether he has any plans for zone sites in emergency housing areas to help young people stay and live in the rural area of their choice.

(AQW 50432/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Members will be aware that I transferred the majority of planning powers from my Department to councils on 1 April and that the responsibility for the preparation of Local Development Plans (LDPs) and zoning sites for housing now rests with councils. To inform councils in this work, I published the Strategic Planning Policy Statement for Northern Ireland (SPPS) on 28 September this year.

The SPPS enables councils to shape how their areas will grow and develop in ways that are more responsive to the needs and aspirations of the communities they serve through their LDP. Councils can develop bespoke local policies tailored to reflect the specific economic, social and environmental issues they face, which includes the provision of social housing in appropriate locations.

Whilst the majority of land considered suitable for housing developments will be allocated by councils through the development plan process within settlements, planning policy also provides for social and affordable housing schemes.

The SPPS also allows for Planning permission to be granted for a small group of dwellings adjacent to or near a small settlement to provide social and affordable housing where a demonstrable need has been identified.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how a two-stage taxi booking is deemed compliant.

(AQW 50451/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Certain elements of the provisions in the Taxis Act 2008 and the Taxi Operator Licensing Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012 refer to the making of a booking, whilst others refer to instances where a booking is accepted. This phrasing of the legislation implies that there are two components to a taxi booking, and that both of these must occur before a taxi booking is deemed to be completed.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of the Environment to detail any discussions he has had with the First and deputy First Minister in relation to delays within the Planning Appeals Commission, particularly with regards to Belfast City Airport.

(AQW 50470/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I have not had any discussions with the First Minister or deputy First Minister in relation to delays within the Planning Appeals Commission. My Department has recently received the PAC report in respect of the public inquiry into the proposed modification of the planning agreement with George Best City Airport and is currently reviewing the report and its recommendations.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, following the ruling of the Court of Appeal and Supreme Court on Champion-v-North Norfolk District Council, whether an Environmental Impact Assessment was required for planning approval K/2013/0072/F.

(AQW 50517/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I am aware of this case however it would not be appropriate for me to comment or to offer opinions on matters of legal interpretation.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the training completed by all taxi drivers before renewal of their required licence, to detail the content of the training in both the seven hour and twentyone hour recommended courses.

(AQW 50532/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The taxi periodic training scheme is similar to the Drivers Certificate of Professional Competence (DCPC) for lorry and bus drivers but is linked to the taxi driving licence renewal. Drivers will not be able to renew their taxi licence until they have completed the portion of periodic training required as set out in the table below.

Date Taxi Driver Licence Expires	Number of Hours Training Required
1st September 2015 – 31st August 2016	Nil
1st September 2016 – 31st August 2017	7 Hours
1st September 2017 – 31st August 2018	14 Hours
1st September 2018 – 31st August 2019	21 Hours
1st September 2019 – 31st August 2020	28 Hours
1st September 2020 onwards	35 Hours

The courses can be a minimum of 3.5 hours in duration or multiples of 3.5 hours; this was introduced to allow taxi drivers to fit the training in around their driving schedules.

The taxi syllabus was designed to tie in as close as possible to the DCPC syllabus to ensure drivers with lorry or bus licences, who have taking training in similar subject areas, can be given credit toward there taxi periodic training.

The taxi subject areas are as follows:

- Disability Awareness
- Loading/Unloading
- Legislation (including the Working Time Directive)
- Safe and Fuel Efficient Driving
- Customer Service
- Health, Safety and Emergencies
- First Aid
- Vehicle Systems (Transmission System)
- Vehicle Systems (Safety Controls)
- Regulations for Carriage of Passengers
- Prevention of Criminality and Trafficking
- Personal Health and Wellbeing
- Physical/Mental Health and Wellbeing
- Professional Driver and Company Issues
- Economic Environment for Carriage of Passengers.

The Department feels the taxi drivers and operators themselves are best placed to identify their own individual training requirements; therefore, they will have the flexibility to choose within which of the areas they wish to complete training. The only mandatory module is a disability awareness course of a minimum of 3.5 hours. The Department is, in association with IMTAC (The Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee), finalising two 3½ hour Disability Awareness modules that will be made available to approved training providers free of charge.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment what actions his Department has taken to improve uptake of the cycle to work scheme.

(AQW 50657/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Cycle to Work Scheme is now an established NICS wide scheme with designated contacts in each department, including DOE. It was re- launched in February 2014 and continues as an open ended scheme available to all civil servants.

The scheme is well established and is open to all staff all year round. It is advertised regularly in the Departmental team brief.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of the Environment, in light of recent fatalities, including in South Belfast, to detail what initiatives he has introduced to improve road safety.

(AQW 50678/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The number of road deaths in 2015 is a serious concern and I extend my sympathy to those who have lost loved ones and also those who have suffered life changing injuries. So far this year, 62 people have died compared to 73 for the same time last year.

At the beginning of the year, severe cuts were made by the Executive to my Department's budget allocation. Despite the very challenging financial position, I was able to allocate just over £1 million to road safety communications, grants and educational materials. In recent weeks, I have been able to supplement this with a further £184,000 through internal re-allocations.

My Department strives to ensure activities are effective in influencing attitudes and behaviours. While not specific to particular geographic areas, they target the most at-risk cohorts of the entire population and the biggest killer behaviours on our roads.

We focus on problem areas, such as drink driving, speeding, carelessness and inattention; and on groups which are over-represented in the casualty figures. These are a key focus of the Road Traffic (Amendment) Bill which completed its Consideration Stage in June 2015. The Bill includes a package of measures to tackle drink driving, to reform the learner and restricted driver schemes and to introduce a system of Graduated Driver Licensing (GDL).

I plan to bring the Bill back to the Assembly as soon as possible to conclude its legislative passage. This is an important Bill that seeks to address key causes of death and serious injury on our roads and I hope that we can work together to ensure early completion of its legislative passage.

In March I launched a new motorcyclist safety campaign and in June, I launched the 2015/16 Road Safety Grant Scheme through which I have approved funding for 15 projects across the North.

Also in June, I launched a road safety Community Toolkit to give local voluntary groups all the resources they need to organise events, bringing road safety messages into the heart of local communities. In the same month, I rolled out the Safe Driving Teaching Aid, enabling driving instructors to address road safety with the learner driver.

I have recently commissioned two social media campaigns – the first to reinforce that the only safe level of alcohol when driving is no alcohol; the second will specifically address the various issues in relation to mobile phone use while driving.

My Department also continues to provide a range of resources and schemes to be used by teachers to allow them to improve road safety behaviours in children and young people.

I can assure you that I remain fully committed to continue working with my Executive colleagues, the PSNI and other stakeholders to improve road safety and to reduce casualties.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the quantity of both retained and exported recycled waste. (AQO 9062/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The total quantity of retained recycled waste in the North is unknown; however, from data received by my Department from those waste management facilities accepting waste for final recycling, an estimate can be made of the waste reprocessed annually. The last available figures show that in 2012 at least 417,000 tonnes of waste were recycled here.

Similarly, my Department holds details on the amounts of waste exported from here to countries outside the United Kingdom destined for recycling operations and in 2012 just over 598,000 tonnes was exported.

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment whether he will provide additional funding to meet the needs of councils facing financial difficulties. (AQO 9066/11-16)

Mr Durkan: You will be aware that my Department suffered from a very significant cut to its opening 2015-16 Budget. This gave rise to a number of areas of financial pressure across my department, including the Rates Support Grant, the De-Rating grant and other grants to Councils.

As a consequence of the budgetary constraints my Department faced, I had to reduce the level of grant funding allocated to councils. In doing so, I was always committed to trying to find ways to address the difficulties faced by councils as a consequence of reduced funding.

Since then, through good financial management and the approval of the Voluntary Exit Scheme, in-year savings have now become available in my Department.

I have recently announced that £2.6 million of additional grant funding will be made available to councils this year.

This extra funding of £2.6m, which is being made to councils for Rates Support - £2.1m and £0.5 million for Emergency Planning (£0.5m), will to some extent ease the financial difficulties they have been facing over the past few months.

This allocation now provides additional in-year money to less well off councils through the Rates Support Grant.

The Emergency Planning allocation will support councils in preparing emergency plans and responding to local emergencies in each of their council areas. This £0.5m of funding will help councils to plan ahead to ensure they are fully prepared for the winter months ahead.

Over the coming months, I will continue to monitor my Department's financial position. If further funding becomes available I will consider very carefully how best to utilise this bearing in mind the extremely difficult public expenditure position overall.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of the Environment in light of Section 29 of the Planning Act (Northern Ireland) 2011, to detail why he called in and subsequently approved planning application C/2011/0459/F by Cam Burn Wind Farm Ltd.

(AQW 50711/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I refer to your previous correspondence AQW 50303/11-16 and would reiterate my previous comments.

I was contacted by the applicant who outlined the recent history of the case since it had transferred to Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council for processing prior to 1 April 2015. My reasons for calling in the planning application were due to the planning history of this application and the particular difficulties arising from the current DETI proposals concerning the qualifying date of 30 October 2015 for the NI Renewables Obligation Scheme. I also noted the potential economic and environmental contribution from this project.

In reaching my decision I took account of the report and recommendation of my officials. I was also aware of the strong level of public representation in both objection to, and support of, the application. The key issues I considered in the determination of the application were the potential visual impact on the wider landscape of the area and the potential impact on nearby residents. Overall I considered that these impacts would not be unacceptably adverse and that the proposal met the requirements of planning policy. A Notice of Opinion to approve the application issued on 30 October 2015.

The Council has the opportunity to request a hearing within 28 days from the date of the notice. If so requested, the Department will afford it an opportunity of appearing before, and being heard by the Planning Appeals Commission. If no such request is made, the planning permission will issue. If a request is made then a planning permission would not issue until a report is received from the PAC. The final decision would still rest with the Department.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the restructuring of Departments in relation to his departmental functions.

(AQO 9060/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Stormont House Agreement of 23 December 2014 included a commitment to reduce the number of Departments from twelve to nine in time for the May 2016 Assembly elections.

As part of this restructuring programme the future Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs will take on DOE's environmental and marine group; the future Department for Communities will take on the DOE's responsibilities for local government and built heritage; and the future Department for Infrastructure will take over the responsibilities for planning, road safety and driver and vehicle agency functions.

Within the restructuring programme, projects are progressing to ensure the establishment of the future departments, including determining the management structure and operating model of the future Departments; staffing; accommodation; records transfers; continuity of policies; and budgets.

I am committed to ensuring that not only the current functions and policies of DOE are protected, but that they go into the future departments on a strong, confident footing with no disruption to public facing services.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the long term cost of options for the recycling of materials by either public or private initiatives.

(AQO 9061/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The longer term economic and environmental benefits of resource efficiency are becoming increasingly clear. This is recognised at a European level where resource efficiency is seen as a priority, closely linked to the promotion of the circular economy, to offset the future challenges and pressures on finite resources and energy usage, and help ensure our longer term resource security and global competitiveness.

If we are to make the transition towards a more sustainable economy all parts of our society will need to become more resource efficient. Recycling will play an ever increasing role as part of a sustainable economy, which should see the value of recyclates increase.

In the short term, the current volatility of energy prices is one of the key factors which has created turbulence in commodity markets and caused the price of some recyclates to fall, particularly plastics. Although this may temporarily increase the cost of delivering recycling services, the differential between landfilling and recycling costs still provides an economic benefit to recycle.

Going forward, it will be essential to maximise the value of recyclates and reduce the cost of recycling systems through increased capture rates, higher recyclate quality and reduced contamination rates. The public and private sectors need to assess existing and new recycling initiatives against these outputs. They need to view recycling as an opportunity to realise economic benefits through valorisation of materials rather than being treated simply as a waste management process. Introduction of effective and efficient recycling initiatives will increasingly provide a return on this investment.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on any departmental plans to develop or enhance conservation schemes for endangered species.

(AQO 9063/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Endangered species in Northern Ireland are included in the published list of 481 priority species, which my Department plans to revise by 2017.

Current conservation schemes involving my Department include the designation and management of nature conservation sites; increasingly close working with DARD on the development of agri-environment schemes; and the launch of an INTERREG V programme to promote cross-border co-operation to facilitate the recovery of selected protected habitats and priority species (including endangered species such as freshwater-pearl mussel, corncrake and breeding waders).

My Department is also continuing to provide advice and financial support for a wide variety of conservation schemes in partnership with others, particularly NGOs including HLF projects such as the recently announced Saving the Red Squirrel project.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of the Environment, given the transition to the new councils, to outline any future role for the Local Government Staff Commission for Northern Ireland.

(AQO 9064/11-16)

Mr Durkan: In July 2012, my Department initiated a review of the Local Government Staff Commission. Following consultation, I concluded that, although the Commission had performed well in a necessary and challenging role for 40 years, other developments meant that a statutory body of that type was no longer required. As a consequence, in 2014, my Executive colleagues agreed that the Commission should be wound up on 31 March 2017.

One of the central objectives of the reform process is to strengthen local government and to allow local authorities to assume more powers, taking responsibility for the well-being and development of their district. Therefore, it seems counterintuitive not to expect the new councils to take full responsibility for the recruitment and management of their own workforces.

I consider, therefore, that the Staff Commission is still required for a period to help reform to bed in. There is precedent in other jurisdictions for using such a body to assist and advise councils during a period of reorganisation. That is why my Department is working to ensure the orderly closure of the Staff Commission on 31 March 2017, two years after the councils were established.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department will launch a public consultation in December 2015 regarding the proposed Marine Conservation Zones.

(AQO 9065/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Powers to designate Marine Conservation Zones became available in Northern Ireland under the Marine Act (Northern Ireland) 2013.

Since then my Department has been developing potential sites based on sound scientific evidence and with the involvement of stakeholders for all marine sectors including fishing, angling, renewable energy, ports & harbours and environmental groups.

It is my intention to launch a public consultation on proposals for Marine Conservation Zones in December 2015.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of the Environment when he will make a decision on the planning application by Whitemountain Quarries for a hazardous waste transfer site, including asbestos and other toxic materials, at the Blackmountain quarry.

(AQO 9067/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The planning application to which the member refers transferred to Belfast City Council on 1 April 2015 as part of the wider transfer of functions to local councils.

As such, it will be for Belfast City Council to determine when it expects to make a decision on this application. I would advise the member to contact the Chief Executive of Belfast City Council, Ms Suzanne Wylie, in order to establish the most up to date position. She can be contacted at planning@belfastcity.gov.uk or at Belfast City Council, City Hall, Belfast, BT1 5GS.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of the Environment, given the recent announcement of a further £2.1 million allocation in rates support, to outline the financial benefits to each council.

(AQO 9068/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The purpose of the Rates Support Grant is to provide extra financial resources for those councils whose needs exceed their wealth base generated through rates. The basic principle is that the grant is intended to support the less wealthy councils.

Due to a significant reduction in my Department's opening 2015-16 Budget, I was forced to reduce the Rates Support Grant paid to Councils in 2015-16 from £18.3m to £15.5m, representing a reduction amounting to £2.8m.

When this reduction was made I promised that I would try to find ways of addressing the difficulties it posed for Councils.

Since then, through good financial management and the approval of the Voluntary Exit Scheme, in-year savings have now become available in my Department.

I was pleased to announce recently that my Department is now able to re-instate part of the Rates Support Grant, with an additional £2.1 million being made available for the less well off Councils.

The additional £2.1 million will be allocated to the 7 councils that receive this grant in 2015-16 using the current allocation method.

In terms of the specific financial benefits to each Council -

- Armagh, Banbridge and Craigavon will receive £459,219
- Causeway Coast and Glens will receive £291,753
- Derry and Strabane will receive £417,478
- Fermanagh and Omagh will receive £186,373
- Mid and East Antrim will receive £129,236
- Mid Ulster will receive £325,371
- Newry, Mourne and Down will receive £290,570

Councils, as autonomous bodies responsible for their own expenditure decisions, will be able to prioritise the use of these additional funds to those areas of most need.

While I am certain that these Councils will welcome the additional funding and that it will to some extent ease the financial difficulties they have been facing over the last number of months, I recognise that it does not represent a full reinstatement of the Rates Support Grant.

Over the coming months, I will continue to monitor my Department's financial position. If further funding becomes available I will consider very carefully how best to utilise this bearing in mind the extremely difficult public expenditure position overall.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to detail he has spent on maintaining thatched roofs on listed buildings in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50795/11-16)

Mr Durkan: A total of £475,829.00 has been spent through the listed building grant-aid scheme to support the repair and maintenance of thatched roofs on listed buildings, broken down as follows:

- 2014/15 - £158,513
- 2013/14 - £150,148
- 2012/13 - £167,168

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what mechanisms are available to owners of domestic properties who have been unfairly awarded a completion notice but are outside the timeframe for appealing it.

(AQW 50329/11-16)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): The Rates (NI) Order 1977 legislates that when a new domestic property reaches a point of construction where it could reasonably be expected to be completed within a period not greater than three months, a Completion Notice will be issued. The Notice will specify a Completion Day at which point in time the property will then be valued and added to the Valuation List.

Any owner who disagrees with the Completion Notice may submit an appeal within 28 days as detailed on the Notice. If an appeal is not made within the statutory timeframe, there are no further statutory mechanisms available to contest the Completion Notice.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether her proposed Bill on rates relief, and its subsequent regulations, will provide further rates relief for sports clubs that are licensed to sell alcohol.

(AQW 50459/11-16)

Mrs Foster: I intend to bring forward a Bill containing an enabling power that would permit enhanced rate relief for sports clubs subject to conditions.

My current intention would be to use that power to permit enhanced relief of 100% for those Community Amateur Sports Clubs that do not have a permanent liquor licence. This would then align with the rating treatment of community halls under legislation.

The final shape of the policy to be implemented will however be guided by the outcome of the targeted consultation that my Department will begin to undertake.

That process of engagement can begin shortly, providing I secure the necessary agreement at Executive level to take forward the Bill, and obtain the support of the Finance Committee to do so through accelerated passage.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel when she intends to bring forward a Bill to provide rates relief for sports clubs.

(AQW 50463/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The Bill has now been drafted and it is my intention to secure Royal Assent for it this mandate, providing I can secure both an agreement at Executive level to take this matter forward and the support of the Finance Committee to progress the Bill through Accelerated Passage.

I will be in a position to provide more detail when I appear before the Finance Committee.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail all meetings her Department has had regarding rates for amateur sports clubs and where the issue was discussed, in the last 18 months.

(AQW 50465/11-16)

Mrs Foster: During the last 18 months there have been no meetings specifically convened for the purpose of discussing enhanced rate relief for amateur sports clubs, except for the pre-meeting briefing that took place with my lead official immediately before I met you on the 12 October this year, and another pre-brief that occurred before you met Simon Hamilton on 12 May 2014.

The matter was, however, mentioned as part of a regular policy update at a series of meetings attended by officials, including the LPS/RPD Policy Advisory Group Meeting on the 6 May 2015 at Lanyon Plaza, Belfast a UK policy quadrilateral meeting on the 25 June 2015 at County Hall, Coleraine and the Penny Product Working Group meeting on 24 September 2015 at Lanyon Plaza, Belfast. No substantive issues were discussed on this subject at any of those meetings.

A meeting was held in Longbridge House with officials from HMRC and Sports NI on 3 June 2015 to discuss the issue of rate relief and professional players. While the issue of amateur sports clubs came up in discussions the meeting was requested by HMRC to discuss and explain current rating policy.

An informal meeting was also held with Colin Neill of Hospitality Ulster, at his request on the 29 October 2015 in the Radisson Blu Hotel, to discuss the ongoing Review of Business Rates. The matter was discussed briefly on the margins of that meeting.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel when she expects the report into the sale of the National Asset Management Agency NI property portfolio to be completed.

(AQW 50491/11-16)

Mrs Foster: This is a matter for the Committee for Finance and Personnel which is conducting the inquiry into the 'Review of the sale of the National Asset Management Agency property loan portfolio in Northern Ireland'.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how her Department is supporting small and medium sized businesses to cut their business costs.

(AQW 50542/11-16)

Mrs Foster: My Department provides direct support to small and medium sized businesses by reducing their rates burden through a number of schemes.

Since introducing Small Business Rate Relief in response to the economic downturn in April 2010, 35,000 businesses have benefitted from a reduction in their rates liability. By the end of 2015/16 rating year around £100m of support will have been provided through this scheme.

Since April 2012 almost 500 businesses have been set up in empty units on our High Streets through the Empty Shops Rates Concession. This was a policy designed and put in place in Northern Ireland and then subsequently copied in all other regions of the UK. The policy sees 50% rate relief provided to new businesses in their first year of trading where they occupy a long term vacant unit.

Industrial derating, continues to provide 70% rates relief to manufacturing businesses of all sizes in Northern Ireland at a cost of around £60m per annum in revenue forgone.

In addition many business ratepayers who would otherwise have faced excessive rises in their rates bill as a result of local government reform are receiving assistance from the District Rates Convergence Scheme.

In addition to these schemes, business ratepayers have benefited from a regional rate freeze throughout the previous budget period.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether her Department plans to implement the recommendations of the Northern Ireland Independent Retail Trade Association 15 point plan for cutting the costs to businesses.

(AQW 50543/11-16)

Mrs Foster: As the Member is aware, my Department recently launched a twelve week consultation exercise on a wide ranging Business Rates review. This will consider the issue of business rates within a wider strategic context. Stakeholders such as NIIRTA are invited to provide input on the direction of business rates in Northern Ireland and I expect they will put forward the rating policy proposals set out in their 15 point plan.

This review is not to raise more money from businesses. We all want to keep rates as low and as acceptable for ratepayers throughout Northern Ireland but we still need to get the money in to pay for the public services that our businesses and citizens need; such as our health, education, policing and roads systems.

I note that 8 or 9 of the 15 points in NIIRTA's plan relate to measures designed to reduce rates for its members and these can be carefully considered as part and parcel of the review. There are no suggestions, however, as to how they can be implemented without jeopardising our public finances. Perhaps this will emerge during the consultation, as rates reductions for one group inevitably mean that some else has to pay more, if our public services are not to suffer.

One final point I would like to make. NIIRTA's 15 point plan states that 45% of our members' rate bills were increased by between 20-200% following the Revaluation. This is far from the case. The impact of the Revaluation has been widely publicised this year by LPS, as you will be aware from the answers you have been given to a whole series of Assembly questions.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how the Rating Policy Division assess and supports the needs of small businesses.

(AQW 50544/11-16)

Mrs Foster: Rating Policy Division is not responsible for assessing and supporting the needs of small business in Northern Ireland.

However, its role is to advise on ways in which the rating system can be made more responsive and acceptable to the business community. This work is currently being undertaken through the ongoing review of business rates.

I would hope that as many individuals as possible respond to the consultation over the coming weeks though bear in mind that 98% of businesses in Northern Ireland are classified as small and medium sized businesses.

Clearly it is not possible to consult with each and every business individually and my Department is relying on a full engagement with business organisations to represent their views. This process has already begun and the direction of the review was set by the representative organisations who participated in the 4 day Innovation Lab in June this year. Attending that event were representatives from the Federation of Small Businesses, the Institute of Directors, NI Manufacturing, the Chamber of Commerce and the Association of Town and City Management.

Follow up meetings were also held with organisations who could not attend including the NI Independent Retailers Association (NIIRTA) and the CBI.

Since the consultation began on 26 October, preliminary and informal meetings have been held with Hospitality Ulster, NI Manufacturing, the NI Independent Retailers Association and the Federation of Small Businesses. The latter meeting involved the FSB's national policy expert on business rates. This process will continue throughout the consultation period until 25 January.

There are also 3 seminars or conferences scheduled for December and January arranged separately by the Federation of Small Businesses, the NI Local Government Association and the NI Council for Voluntary Action (NICVA).

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the role of the Rating Policy Division.

(AQW 50545/11-16)

Mrs Foster: Rating Policy Division is a small unit of 6 staff and forms part of the Strategic Policy and Reform Directorate within DFP. Its role is to provide advice to the Finance Minister on rating policy, to develop, then appraise and evaluate, new policy issues; to take forward the annual Regional Rates Order (to reflect Executive decisions made as part of the annual budget process) and prepare all rating and valuation legislation taken forward by DFP.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how her Department will consult with local small and medium sized businesses regarding a non-domestic rates review.

(AQW 50546/11-16)

Mrs Foster: Rating Policy Division is not responsible for assessing and supporting the needs of small business in Northern Ireland.

However, its role is to advise on ways in which the rating system can be made more responsive and acceptable to the business community. This work is currently being undertaken through the ongoing review of business rates.

I would hope that as many individuals as possible respond to the consultation over the coming weeks though bear in mind that 98% of businesses in Northern Ireland are classified as small and medium sized businesses.

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the introduction of a Northern Ireland Investment Fund.

(AQO 9080/11-16)

Mrs Foster: Significant progress has been made towards establishing the Northern Ireland Investment Fund. The Deloitte feasibility study has now concluded and further market testing has been carried out to determine the potential structure and scope of the Fund.

However, a significant amount of technically complex work remains before the Fund can become operational and DFP officials continue to engage with the European Investment Bank on these works streams. The outstanding work includes, amongst other things, development of a Fund Investment Strategy, determination of the appropriate governance structure, development of the fund manager procurement strategy and completion of the fund manager procurement process.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for her assessment of the Rating of Empty Homes since its introduction in 2011.

(AQO 9081/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The Executive's policy of rating empty homes was intended to encourage those who own fit but unused homes to bring them onto the market for sale or rental and to raise some revenue in the process.

I think the policy has been successful on both counts. My Department cannot say how many empty homes are now put to good use. This is because ratepayers pay the same in rates whether a home is occupied or lying empty and LPS do not distinguish between them.

For the same reason the rates raised from the measure form part of the overall rating pool and cannot be calculated. Estimated revenue at the time the policy was introduced indicated that between £10m and £15m a year would be raised. Whatever way you look at it, more properties are now liable for rates which has helped spread the rating burden and kept average bills down for everyone else.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel when she will introduce rate relief for amateur sports clubs.

(AQO 9082/11-16)

Mrs Foster: Relief for amateur sports clubs has been a feature of the rating system in NI for many years.

From 1972 until 1979 there was 35% relief applied and this has been progressively increased since then.

The current scheme was established in 1979 and relief applied at 65%. This was increased to the current level of 80% relief in 2007.

Mr Kennedy asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel why it is necessary to review the system of business rates at this time.

(AQO 9083/11-16)

Mrs Foster: It is necessary to review the system of business rates at this point given that business community has been asking for it for some time.

It was important, however, to allow the recent Non-Domestic Revaluation to take effect before commencing this review; this is therefore the earliest opportunity the Department has had to take this forward.

Many business organisations have expressed the view that the review is a timely one and I know of no organisation that has disagreed with or expressed concerns about its timing.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 47496/11-15, to provide further details regarding his discussions with the Minister of Finance and Personnel including the (a) dates of any discussions; (b) specific issues discussed; and (c) any outcomes.

(AQW 48360/11-16)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I have ongoing discussions with Executive colleagues in relation to a range of budgetary matters that affect my Department which are aimed at increasing mutual understanding of the pressures and demands within the health service. The outcome from the November Monitoring process is awaited.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether (i) there is any funding available for improving or expanding GP surgeries that rent their properties; and if not (ii) he will consider the introduction of funding for this purpose.

(AQW 50036/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In April 2015 my predecessor announced an investment of up to £10m for GPs to borrow to invest in upgrading and expanding their premises. However, the GP Loan Scheme, funded via Financial Transactions Capital (FTC), requires security in a suitable form (e.g. premises) and is therefore best suited to improving or expanding GP owned premises. FTC can also be considered for a new build option where current premises are not satisfactory, with the GPs retaining ownership of the new premises.

The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) is, however, willing to explore the specific circumstances of each GP practice and to consider whether FTC funding could be used to support any development.

Additionally, the General Medical Services Contract roll forward letter, which the HSCB issues to all general practices each year, invites practices to apply for an improvement grant to fund premises developments. The level of improvement grant funding the HSCB can give is not less than 33% or more than 66%. Practices which applied previously have been granted funding provided their proposed project was in line with the terms of the General Medical Services Premises Cost Directions.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department has a policy on the implementation of do not attempt resuscitation orders for inpatient treatment, and if so, whether he will provide a copy.

(AQW 50163/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Advance Care Planning (ACP) can support more effective communication and decision-making between clinicians and patients. ACP may include decisions around resuscitation.

Each Health and Social Care Trust currently has its own policy for making and recording Do Not Attempt Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation (DNACPR) decisions. Work is ongoing to develop a regional operational policy on DNACPR for use in community and hospital care settings and across organisations.

A booklet 'Your life and your choices: plan ahead (Northern Ireland)' has been developed by the Public Health Agency and Macmillan to help provide the public with information on Advance Care Planning and can be accessed at <http://be.macmillan.org.uk/be/p-21065-your-life-and-your-choices-plan-ahead-northern-ireland.aspx>

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department can work with pharmacists to help deliver more care in the community.

(AQW 50212/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

The 'Making it Better through Pharmacy in the Community' strategy sets out the Department's strategic direction for the development of pharmaceutical services. An implementation plan to accompany the strategy was published in February 2015; a copy is available from www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/making-it-better-pharmacy-community-implementation-plan.pdf.

The implementation plan includes specific actions to increase the utilisation of pharmacists' clinical skills in the delivery of services in the community and greater collaboration of pharmacists with other health and social care professionals to contribute to the improvement of the health of the population.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) any instances of vomiting and diarrhoea at residential care homes in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust area in the last six months; (ii) when the Southern Health and Social Care Trust were first made aware of any instances; and (iii) what action was taken to contain the spread of any instances.

(AQW 50250/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust advise that there have been no instances of vomiting and diarrhoea in their four statutory residential care homes over the last 6 months.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of referrals to autism services in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50261/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: It is assumed that a referral to autism services means a referral for an autism assessment.

Table 1 below contains the number of referrals received for an assessment for autism spectrum disorder (ASD) at year ending 31st March in each of the last five years.

Table 1: The number of referrals for an assessment for ASD at year ending 31st March (2011 – 2015)

	2011	2012	2013	2014	2015
No. of referrals received for an ASD assessment	1,647	2,181	2,465	2,979	3,394

Source: HSC Trusts Information Systems

Please note that these figures include referrals for both children and adults

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of local children that have travelled to England, Scotland, Wales or the Republic of Ireland for medical treatments, since the 10 September 2015. [R]
(AQW 50278/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of local children that have travelled to England, Scotland, Wales or the Republic of Ireland for medical treatment, since the 10th September 2015, is not available.

However, information on the number of children that have been approved for travel to England, Scotland, Wales or the Republic of Ireland is available. The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) have advised, as at Friday 6th November 2015, that since 10th September 2015, 36 children under 16 have been approved to travel to England, Scotland, Wales and Republic of Ireland for medical treatment. The HSCB have advised that ECR approvals information may include referrals for assessment.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) how much was spent on processed pork by each Health and Social Care Trust, in the last twelve months; and (ii) whether his Department intends to issue any guidance on serving processed pork following the publication of the World Health Organisation's report which concluded it causes cancer.
(AQW 50323/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not hold the information requested in part (i) of the question.

My Department has no plans to issue guidance to the Health and Social Care Trusts on serving processed pork following the publication on 26 October of the findings of an evaluation carried out by the International Agency for Research on Cancer. The current Food Standards Agency guidance for consumers, which is published on NI Direct, is that anyone consuming more than 90 grams (cooked weight) of red and processed meat a day should cut down to 70 grams. This is in line with the advice provided on NHS Choices.

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has any plans to pay National Health Service staff their annual uprating.
(AQW 50344/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Decisions on the 2015/16 HSC Pay Award have not yet been made.

The Department is keen to progress discussions with HSC Trade Unions. These discussions will help inform its decisions

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of staff employed in the Health and Social Care Board, broken down by year since its establishment.
(AQW 50379/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The number of staff recorded as having been employed by the HSC Board in each year since its inception are shown in terms of headcount (HC) and whole-time equivalent (WTE) in the table below. Staffing levels are shown at the end of each financial year during which the Health and Social Care Board existed i.e. 31st March. Members of staff with a WTE of less than 0.03 and those on career breaks are excluded.

Year	Headcount	WTE
2010	436	390.0
2011	407	365.1
2012	478	433.8
2013	497	444.6
2014	578	525.4
2015	603	545.9

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether people with long term health conditions will be forced to pay any form of prescription charges before the end of April 2016.

(AQW 50385/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: There are no plans to charge people with long-term conditions for medication dispensed on a Health Service prescription before end April 2016.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on continuing healthcare proposals.

(AQW 50480/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My officials are currently undertaking a scoping exercise to re-examine the broader issue of Continuing Healthcare. This includes the development of an options paper which will be submitted to me for consideration in the near future.

Once I have had an opportunity to review the content of the options paper and decided on a definitive way forward, all stakeholders will be notified of the outcome of the scoping exercise.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration he has given to making an independent life story service an entitlement for care experienced and adopted children.

(AQW 50533/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: A regional Life Story Service for care experienced and adopted children is currently provided by the Family Care Society. As part of any future review of strategy or legislation as it relates to care-experienced or adopted children and young people, consideration will be given to how service provision for both groups of children could be further enhanced, including Life Story service provision.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he intends to announce and implement the 2015-16 pay award for nurses.

(AQW 50571/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Decisions on the 2015/16 HSC Pay Award have not yet been made.

The Department is keen to progress discussions with HSC Trade Unions. These discussions will help inform its decisions

Mr Allen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any communication he has had with the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service regarding the Lifeline Service being operated through the Ambulance Service as a result of the current consultation.

(AQW 50614/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Responsibility for commissioning and contract management of the Lifeline Service rests with the Public Health Agency. I have not had any communication with the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service with regards to the Lifeline Service.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of occasions that officials from the Department of Health in London have been in contact with officials from his Department in the last twelve months, in relation to sharing information and best practice on suicide and self harm issues.

(AQW 50627/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Department of Health in London has been in contact with officials from my Department once in the last twelve months, in relation to sharing information and best practice on suicide and self harm issues.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the current waiting time for an appointment with a Speech and Language Therapist in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 50688/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Table 1 below details the number of patients in the Northern Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust waiting for an appointment with a Speech and Language Therapist (SALT), by duration of wait, at 30 September 2015. These are the latest figures available.

Table 1: Patients waiting for an SALT appointment by duration of wait at 30 September 2015 in the Northern HSC Trust

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the development of Paediatric Cardiac Services in Belfast.

(AQO 9089/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: We continue to provide excellent children's heart services in Belfast, and the commitment to developing a specialist Children's Heart Centre within the all-island Network was given in order to preserve and enhance the service. The plans for the Heart Centre are currently being progressed by the Congenital Heart Disease (CHD) Network Board within an overall implementation plan and business case which is expected to be submitted to my Department later this month for consideration and approval. It will describe the vision and standards for the all-island network, building on the model recommended by the International Working Group, including the role of the Belfast Children's Heart Centre within that model. The timeline for the development of the service, announced by my predecessor in October 2014 remains unchanged. That is the phased transfer of the majority of paediatric congenital surgical patients from centres in England to the Dublin children's heart centre will take place over the period 2016 to 2019 and the new Belfast Children's Heart Centre, or hub, will also become operational during this period.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on his Department's review of the Future of Adult Care and Support.

(AQO 9090/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: As part of my Department's Reform of Adult Care and Support, officials are in the process of researching potential reforms and developing an evidence base in relation to how care and support should be provided and funded. Officials are also liaising with other government departments on relevant cross cutting issues.

It is intended that consultation will commence on potential reforms in 2017 before final reforms are identified thereafter.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the establishment of an air ambulance service.

(AQO 9091/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: In September this year I was pleased to announce my commitment to invest in the transformation of our major trauma services with the establishment of the regional trauma network and the development of a Helicopter Emergency Medical Service (HEMS). The start-up cost for the HEMS is estimated at £2.1m and the annual running costs for it and the network is estimated at £2m. This money is on top of the £151.7m invested in the new Critical Care Building at the Royal Victoria Hospital, which houses the Regional Major Trauma Centre (MTC) for Northern Ireland.

Planning for the HEMS is already underway and the first stage will be a consultation to ask the public for their views on the important matters of: whether the HEMS should be a paramedic or consultant-led service; the main patient groups it should serve; the most suitable home base location; and, how it should be funded. I am keen to see whether we can deliver the service in a public/voluntary sector partnership with charitable donations similar to the service models successfully operated in England.

This transformation of our major trauma service will deliver the vision which the late Dr John Hinds, and his colleagues, have highlighted and I acknowledge the exemplary service that they provide in striving to save lives across Northern Ireland.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the reasons for the delay in introducing the Stopping Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse Strategy for 2013-2020.

(AQO 9093/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Extensive engagement with a diverse range of stakeholders, severe financial pressures and the complex nature of the domestic violence and sexual violence, have been the main contributing factors to the delay.

While I am aware that the Department of Justice has a number of issues to resolve with the Justice Committee, the development process is now largely complete and, in partnership with Minister Ford, I am currently giving active consideration to how my Department can deliver against the aims of the proposed Strategy in the exceptionally difficult financial environment in which we are now operating.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he will answer AQW 46693/11-15, AQW 47797/11-15, AQW 48166/11-15, AQW 48167/11-15, AQW 48170/11-15, AQW 48294/11-16, AQW 48355/11-16, AQW 48357/11-16, AQW 48358/11-16, AQW 48513/11-16, AQW 48607/11-16 and AQW 48608/11-16.

(AQO 9094/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I have answered 8 of the Assembly questions listed and expect to answer the others in the near future.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will join with Scotland and Wales and oppose any changes to junior doctors' contracts.

(AQO 9095/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I stated recently that I have no desire to impose a new contract on junior doctors in training. I also want to see junior doctor representatives re-engage with the Department of Health in London and to work together to improve the existing contract which everyone has agreed is not fit for purpose. The 'firm offer' made by the Secretary of State on the 4th November 2015 I believe provides the perfect opportunity for both parties to re-engage in negotiations, as a negotiated settlement is in the best interests of the health service, patients and staff.

On a local level I have instructed my officials to engage in discussions with the local BMA Junior Doctor Representatives to help me to identify and better understand the contractual issues in relation to post-graduate doctors in training in Northern Ireland. It is anticipated that this open dialogue will assist me to make a fully informed decision as to the best way forward for Northern Ireland. I am keen to see these discussions continue.

I am committed to ensuring that appropriate safeguards will be included in any new arrangements. Any new contract must underpin safe working practices, including hours worked, for the benefit of both patients and post-graduate doctors in training, who I recognise as highly valued members of the health and social care workforce.

I can assure you that maintaining the safety of patients and clients, as well as staff will remain my primary focus.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the support his Department provides to the Northern Ireland Hospice.

(AQO 9096/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department has provided capital investment of some £2.7m to assist in the development of the NI Hospice adult hospice project at its site on Somerton Road, Belfast.

The building work commenced in March 2014 and is now well advanced.

My Department currently provides core grant funding of £133,829 per annum to the NI Hospice towards core administration costs. The level of funding in 2015/16 has been maintained at that received in previous years.

The First Minister and Deputy First Minister have also made £1m available to the NI Children's Hospice in 2014/15 and 2015/16 through the Delivering Social Change Fund, which is being administered and overseen by my Department.

The Health and Social Care Board has arrangements in place with the Northern Ireland Hospice to commission both adult and children's hospice services. In 2014/15, funding from the HSCB to the NI Hospice for services amounted to £2.7million.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when guidelines clarifying the existing law on abortion will be issued.

(AQO 9097/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I hope to bring guidance to the Executive shortly.

Department of Justice

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 49912/11-16, whether both inspections were announced; and whether the approximate 18 month gap between visits is appropriate and acceptable.

(AQW 50331/11-16)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): Both visits to Edward Street hostel were unannounced. Criminal Justice Inspection unannounced visits to Approved Premises have been in the range of one to 23 months so as to avoid predictability. The timing of visits is determined by an emphasis on public protection, and is deemed appropriate and acceptable.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether an instruction has been issued to solicitors and law firms by the Northern Ireland Legal Aid Agency, or any other agency under his departmental remit, to have clients complete their own legal aid applications forms or direct them to community advice offices for assistance, and if so (i) whether notification has been given to the community advice offices; and (ii) has training been offered by his Department.

(AQW 50332/11-16)

Mr Ford: No instruction has issued from the Legal Services Agency, or any other Agency of my Department, to solicitors and law firms that applicants should complete their own legal aid applications.

Under the Civil Legal Services (General) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015 only a solicitor can submit an application to the Legal Services Agency for representation. This application involves the applicant's solicitor providing an assessment of the legal merits of the application.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the future of Newtownards courthouse.

(AQW 50342/11-16)

Mr Ford: As I have previously informed the Assembly, I wish to carefully consider all the responses to the consultation before reaching any conclusions.

I hope to have a report on the consultation with the Justice Committee on 26 November following which I will make my decisions.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice to detail the provision of defibrillators in courthouses.
(AQW 50367/11-16)

Mr Ford: There are currently seven defibrillators throughout the Court Estate. Two are located in Laganside Courts complex, one in the Royal Courts of Justice, and in the cell areas of Antrim, Coleraine, Dungannon and Londonderry Courthouses.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Justice how his Department is measuring the success of the Victim Charter.
(AQW 50396/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Victim and Witness Steering Group, which is made up of representatives from each of the criminal justice organisations and our voluntary sector partners Victim Support NI and the NSPCC, will monitor and assess the delivery of services, including those provided under the Charter. This is an action in the five year Victim and Witness Strategy.

The Northern Ireland Victim and Witness Survey, which seeks the views of victims and witnesses on their experience across the criminal justice system, as well as planned research projects with victims of specific serious crimes, can also be used to seek feedback on the Charter.

To ensure that the Victim Charter is a success, and delivers the standard of support and services to which a victim is entitled, it is important that victims are aware of the Charter and their rights under it. Various steps have been taken to promote the Charter and raise public awareness of it.

The new information leaflet that is given to victims when they report a crime includes reference to the Charter, as does initial correspondence issuing from the Victim and Witness Care Unit. Links to the Charter, and supplementary documents, have been placed on the web sites of key criminal justice organisations. Posters and information cards about the Charter have also been produced and will be made available in police stations and other public buildings.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Justice, given that the majority of domestic and sexual assaults happen at weekends, whether he plans any legislative changes to allow Non-Molestation Orders to be served on Sundays.
(AQW 50397/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Sunday Observance (Ireland) Act 1695 provides that no order shall be served or executed on a Sunday (except in cases involving treason, indictable offences or breaches of the peace).

If it is not possible to serve a Non Molestation Order, an officer will consider other appropriate measures, including under the Protection from Harassment (NI) Order 1997 - specifically the offence of harassment and the offence of putting people in fear of violence.

I am assured that measures currently exist to protect victims at risk during the weekend period. In all incidents of domestic violence and abuse, PSNI will exercise their power of arrest where such power exists and where it is necessary and proportionate in order to carry out an effective investigation or prevent further offences.

In addition, information will be provided to a victim of domestic violence on support agencies and a referral can be made by the Police Service with the consent of the party concerned. Officers will also undertake a risk assessment and refer the case for attention by a specialist Domestic Abuse Officer (and thereafter MARAC) if assessed as being 'high risk'.

As I take forward the justice elements of the new "Stopping Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse Strategy", I shall consider whether it is necessary to consider amending Section 7 of the Sunday Observance (Ireland) Act 1695 to allow Non-Molestation Orders to be served on a Sunday.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 49783/11-16, to list the substances the tests can detect.
(AQW 50410/11-16)

Mr Ford: Tests administered by hostel staff detect the following substances:

- |                                |                                      |
|--------------------------------|--------------------------------------|
| ■ Abused Prescribed Medication | ■ Cocaine                            |
| ■ Alcohol                      | ■ MDMA (Ecstasy)                     |
| ■ Amphetamines                 | ■ Opiates (e.g. Morphine and Heroin) |
| ■ Benzodiazepines              | ■ Methamphetamines                   |
| ■ Cannabis                     | ■ Methadone                          |

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in light of the report on the unannounced inspection of Maghaberry Prison 11–22 May 2015, (i) to detail the role of Change Managers; (ii) what the Change Managers have achieved since they began their roles; (iii) for his assessment of the work, and value for money, provided by the Change Managers; (iv) whether he will order an independent review of the work of the Change Managers; and (v) whether these roles remain tenable and sustainable.

(AQW 50528/11-16)

Mr Ford: NIPS' Change Manager has been leading the programme of transformational reform since May 2012. The Change Manager's role will conclude when the formal programme structures are brought to an end.

To date, 33 of the 40 recommendations made by the Prison Review Team have been signed off, with an additional two recommendations having been referred to Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland for independent assessment.

I will not be ordering an independent review into the work of the Change Manager.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice who will be conducting the independent review as recommended in the report on the unannounced inspection of Maghaberry Prison 11–22 May 2015 into the circumstances of and management response to the serious fire started by prisoners.

(AQW 50531/11-16)

Mr Ford: A senior governor from the National Offender Management Service will be conducting the recommended investigation.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, given the content of the report on the unannounced inspection of Maghaberry Prison 11–22 May 2015, how this facility has operated in compliance of health and safety legislation for prisoners and staff.

(AQW 50549/11-16)

Mr Ford: Maghaberry Prison has a dedicated health and safety unit with support from the Headquarters Health and Safety Adviser. There is currently a number of staff within the prison trained to the National Examination Board of Occupational Safety and Health (NEBOSH) Certificate standard. Health and Safety systems and procedures are in place that meet legislative requirements with oversight provided by quarterly reports to the Prison Service Management Board.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Justice how many race hate incident prosecutions have led to convictions, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50572/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland holds information on the outcome of cases considered by a prosecutor to have involved racial hate crime which was 'Aggravated by Hostility'. I am committed to respecting the independence of the PPS and have been advised that they will respond directly to you.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the future of Magilligan Prison, given the proposals in the Outline Estate Strategy 2012-2022.

(AQW 50603/11-16)

Mr Ford: All preparatory work has been completed on the Redevelopment of Magilligan Project pending a decision by the Executive on its capital budget.

The outline business case was approved by the Department of Finance and Personnel in January 2015.

A Design Team is already in place and ready to commence work, subject to capital availability.

My officials will continue to make a strong case to secure funding for the redevelopment of Magilligan, and other NIPS Capital Estates Programme Projects, in advance of the Executive's decision on its capital budget.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice whether any Police Ombudsman staff are currently under investigation; and if so, whether these staff are suspended as a result of such investigation.

(AQW 50636/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Office of the Police Ombudsman is operationally independent of my Department. The information sought is not retained by my Department. I have, however, been informed by the Office that it does not have any members of staff currently under investigation and, consequently, no staff are suspended.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how much funding Victim Support NI will receive from his Department in this financial year.

(AQW 50650/11-16)

Mr Ford: Funding of £1,827,914 will be provided to Victim Support NI in this financial year to provide support services to victims and witnesses of crime through their Community, Criminal Injuries Compensation and Witness Services as well as providing support for hate crime victims through their Hate Crime Advocacy Co-ordinator.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how much funding the Public Prosecution Service will receive from his Department in this financial year.

(AQW 50651/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Public Prosecution Service is a non-ministerial government department and does not receive funding from my Department.

Technical budget adjustments can be agreed and actioned by my Department or any other, from or to the PPS, during monitoring rounds.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice (i) on what date was the most recent tender for electronic tagging (a) advertised; and (b) awarded; (ii) what was the duration of the contract; (iii) how many companies tendered; and (iv) who was the successful applicant.

(AQW 50658/11-16)

Mr Ford: The current electronic monitoring contract was advertised on 18 October 2013 and awarded on 24 March 2014. The contract is for a period of three years with potential for a contract extension for a period of up to a maximum of 24 months. Two companies submitted tenders for the contract and the successful applicant was G4S Security Services (UK) Limited.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, given the findings of the unannounced inspection of Maghaberry Prison 11–22 May 2015 report, whether separated prisoners in Roe House are on an enhanced regime compared to other prisoners; and how the differentiation in prisoner management between separated and non-separated prisoners meets equality standards, policy and legislation.

(AQW 50738/11-16)

Mr Ford: Separated prisoners in both Roe and Bush House are managed outside of the integrated regime and are not classified as Enhanced. All prisoners are managed in compliance with Equality standards, policy and legislation.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Justice, given the Hillsborough Agreement's requirement for reform of the youth justice system, for his assessment of the impact on this reform of the Youth Justice Agency's alignment with the Prison Service, particularly in light of the recent Criminal Justice Inspectorate report on Maghaberry prison.

(AQW 50768/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Hillsborough Castle Agreement provided for a comprehensive Review of the youth justice system, giving due consideration to international standards and children's rights.

The Scoping Study on Children in the Justice System, which I announced in the Assembly on 19 May, is being undertaken with a view to building on the progress made against this Review and improving outcomes for children and young people by, in particular, keeping as many as possible out of the criminal justice system and providing effective, targeted support and intervention.

The creation of a Reducing Offending Directorate within my Department, which incorporates the Youth Justice Agency, strategic policy on reducing offending amongst children, young people and adults, and the NI Prison Service, allows for the sharing of experience, research and knowledge and is ultimately to the benefit of the criminal justice system.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what consideration is being given to the recommendation contained in the Criminal Justice Inspectorate report on the unannounced inspection of Maghaberry Prison 11–22 May 2015 that, if it is necessary to continue to manage separated units in line with different criteria from the rest of the prison, their location, management and resources should be removed from the rest of the prison.

(AQW 50785/11-16)

Mr Ford: As detailed in the published Action Plan, work is ongoing to manage and resource Separation to minimise further impact on the integrated population.

As part of the plans to develop the prison estate NIPS plans to build a dedicated High Security Facility, which will be managed and resourced separately from the rest of Maghaberry Prison. This will be dependent on the availability of capital finance.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice where Access NI applications are processed.

(AQW 50796/11-16)

Mr Ford: AccessNI applications are processed by my Department in offices on the Stormont Estate.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 50203/11-16, whether he intends to request a copy of the report, or briefing on same; and whether any of his departmental staff have received a copy or been briefed.

(AQW 50835/11-16)

Mr Ford: This is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecution and the Bar Council. Both organisations are independent of me as Minister of Justice and I do not propose to seek a copy of the report or briefing on it. My officials have not received a copy or briefing on any such report.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice what is the average time taken to process an Access NI application.
(AQW 50859/11-16)

Mr Ford: The average time to process an Enhanced AccessNI check is currently eight days. Basic and Standard checks are ordinarily being processed within a working day of receipt.

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Justice how many people have been convicted of paramilitary membership since the Good Friday Agreement.
(AQW 50929/11-16)

Mr Ford: Offences relating to membership of a proscribed organisation may be prosecuted under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1984, the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1973, the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978, the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1991, the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1996 and the Terrorism Act 2000. Information on the number of convictions in relation to these offences is provided in the following table.

Convictions at courts for membership of a proscribed organisation offences, 1998 – 2014:

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Justice to outline any additional funding that can be allocated to local Policing and Community Safety Partnerships to continue the success of youth intervention schemes.
(AQO 9106/11-16)

Mr Ford: Policing and Community Safety Partnerships are jointly funded by my Department and the Northern Ireland Policing Board. To date, approximately £2.2m has been allocated to support the work of PCSPs in 2015-16.

I am pleased to confirm that further funding of £1.5m (£900k from DOJ and £600k from NIPB) has been released for PCSPs for the remainder of this financial year. It will be for the PCSPs to decide how best they can invest this money in services to improve community safety and public confidence in policing in their area.

In addition to this core funding, I have been able to allocate nearly £117,000 of Priority Youth Intervention funding for projects aimed at disaffected young people who are vulnerable and at risk of involvement in violence and criminal activity, especially at times of heightened tension.

Also in 2015, PCSPs have been successful in accessing approximately £199,000 from my Department's Assets Recovery Community Scheme. This is money which has been taken out of the hands of criminals and returned to the community to fund a wide range of community safety initiatives including youth diversionary and education and awareness projects.

I will soon be inviting PCSPs to bid again for Assets Recovery funding for local community safety project delivery in 2016-17.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Justice to outline the action his Department is taking to address the increasing numbers of burglaries in South Belfast.

(AQO 9107/11-16)

Mr Ford: Whilst burglary offences have been on a downwards trend since 2002/03, I understand that the rise in South Belfast is indicative of a recent increase across Northern Ireland.

Burglary, whether committed in a domestic or a non-domestic setting can have a significantly detrimental impact upon individuals and the areas within which they live and work.

For victims of domestic burglary in particular, it is clear that those who carry out this type of crime are targeting the very place where we should feel the safest. This is particularly true in instances where the victim is older or more vulnerable.

Locally, Policing and Community Safety Partnerships have taken forward a range of tailored initiatives and delivered practical crime prevention sessions aimed at older people as well as referral to Neighbourhood Watch schemes.

Recently I supported the launch of a regional domestic burglary campaign. This joint PSNI and PCSP initiative highlighted the few simple steps that individuals can take to protect their home, their family, and their belongings. This campaign also promoted the Commissioner for Older People's 'Nominated Neighbour' scheme.

Linked to this campaign, Belfast PCSP will be targeting hot spot areas for burglary during leaflet drops and hosting a number of public engagement events. I understand that South Belfast DPCSP is also currently exploring possible ways to make the homes of older residents more secure.

This work will support the ongoing actions delivered more generally through both Home Security and Neighbourhood Watch Schemes.

My Department will continue to work in partnership to deliver on its strategic commitments in this area in support of the PSNI's response to this invasive type of criminal activity.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Justice, following his recent announcement that he will consider both an animal cruelty register and maximising the penalties of those convicted of related offences, to outline when he expects to make a decision on these matters.

(AQO 9109/11-16)

Mr Ford: I have recently agreed to a request from the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to increase the statutory maximum penalties for those convicted of animal cruelty offences under the Welfare of Animals Act (NI) 2011. Although DARD has policy responsibility for animal welfare, it does not have a suitable vehicle to bring forward the necessary legislative amendments in the current mandate. Rather than delay the proposed changes, I have agreed to include provision in the Justice No2 Bill. I am pleased that the Agriculture Committee supported this last week.

The feasibility of a central register is one part of the joint DARD and DOJ animal welfare review into the implementation of the 2011 Act.

The establishment of a central register raises complex legal issues about the sharing of conviction data and how such a system would work in practice. DOJ and DARD are working through these issues.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Justice to outline any discussions he has had with the Minister for Regional Development and the Minister for Social Development to address the problem of the illegal flying of flags in the community.

(AQO 9110/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Executive policy lead on this issue falls to the First Minister and deputy First Minister and not to me.

The Stormont House Agreement committed parties to a Commission on flags, identity, culture and tradition. Responsibility for that falls to OFMDFM. I have not, therefore, engaged directly with other Ministers on this matter.

Naturally, I want to see progress on this issue, because of the divisive effects on community relations of illegal flag flying and the consequences for the justice system.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the outcome of the Speeding up Justice pilot in the Ards court division.

(AQO 9111/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Indictable Cases Pilot launched in Ards on 2 January this year and will run until the end of December.

Currently, 128 cases are in the pilot, of which 96 are at court stages. Ten cases have concluded. Two of those cases took only 56 days from the date the incident was reported to police until sentencing, with an average of 97 days across the ten concluded cases.

This is a significant improvement on processing times for the same period in the same area last year, when the average time taken was 197 days.

I want to recognise the tremendous efforts of PSNI, PPS and FSNI in the pilot, and the leadership provided by the Lord Chief Justice and local judiciary.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice why his Department has only met the Commissioner for Older People for Northern Ireland on two occasions since 2012 to discuss both crime and the fear of crime amongst older people.
(AQO 9113/11-16)

Mr Ford: The formal meetings with the Commissioner for Older People for Northern Ireland to which the Member refers do not represent the full extent of the work which my Department has taken forward to address fear of crime amongst older and vulnerable people.

Members will be aware from previous questions of the work my Department has undertaken to address fear of crime, including through the Older Persons Delivery Group, established to take forward actions to address fear of crime under the Community Safety Strategy. This group, chaired by my Department, includes a range of statutory and non-statutory bodies.

The Office of the Commissioner for Older People for Northern Ireland was previously invited to provide representation on the Older Persons Delivery Group, but was not in a position to take up the offer at that time. My officials continue to liaise with the Commissioner's staff as required on issues around fear of crime.

My Department works closely with Age Sector Platform, a voluntary sector organisation which has a membership of individuals and older people's groups across Northern Ireland, representing approximately 200,000 people. Age Sector Platform engages with the Office of the Commissioner on broader issues affecting older people.

My Department recently supported Age Sector Platform in the development of their "Feel Safe" guide, which has a particular focus on practical measures that older people can take to avoid becoming a victim of opportunistic crime such as burglary and bogus callers.

Age Sector Platform is currently working with my Department on the development and delivery of workshops on a regional basis to promote the messages in this guide and to address the concerns that older people have around crime. These workshops will include a range of advice on how they can avoid becoming victims of crime, and representation from key providers of advice such as the Trading Standards Service.

Department for Regional Development

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development when she will sign off on the agreed speed limit reductions outside Derrychrin, Ballylifford and Drummullan St Malachy's Primary Schools.
(AQW 50009/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen (The Minister for Regional Development): The Derrychrin, Ballylifford and Drumullan speed limits are contained in The Roads (Speed Limit) (No. 4) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015. I have approved the draft Order and notice has been sent to the Committee for Regional Development.

I am hopeful that the speed limits can now be implemented at Derrychrin, Ballylifford and Drumullan during December 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development how motorcyclists can be detected by bus lane cameras, given the positioning of their registration plates.
(AQW 50179/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: In situations where motorcycles are travelling illegally in bus lanes, these lanes are prioritised for enforcement and the mobile camera unit, which can position its CCTV camera to read rear number plates, may be deployed.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the introduction of residents' parking schemes in Belfast.
(AQW 50189/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I have no proposals, at this time, to implement residents' parking schemes in any other areas of Belfast other than the Lower Malone and College Park Avenue / Rugby Road areas of South Belfast.

On 29 October 2014, my officials advertised their intention to introduce residents' parking schemes in the Lower Malone and Rugby Road/College Park Avenue areas of Belfast. During the 22-day formal notice period 51 objections were received for the Lower Malone scheme and 6 objections were received for the Rugby Road/College Park Avenue scheme. In addition, 5 objections were received to both schemes.

Each objector has been offered the opportunity of a meeting to explain the rationale for the scheme and to listen to their concerns, with the hope that they would remove their objection. During March this year my officials met with some of those objectors and four of the objections were subsequently withdrawn. Three of these were from the Lower Malone area and one from the Rugby Road/College Park Avenue area. Unfortunately, until the other objections have been dealt with, the schemes are unable to proceed.

I wish to take some time to consider my Department's policy and the difficulties with its implementation and, in due course I will be meeting with my officials to discuss the progress of these and other proposed residents' parking schemes in Northern Ireland.

Mr Wells asked the Minister for Regional Development whether her Department is responsible for the removal of litter from the Sheepbridge Car Park near Newry.

(AQW 50190/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Sheepbridge Park and Share facility is a Transport NI site. This location is routinely inspected by my officials on a monthly basis and any maintenance work required, including litter removal, is identified during this inspection and programmed for removal.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister for Regional Development whether her Department has had, or plans to have, any discussions with Translink to extend the 300 Airport Link Bus Service to include an alight and halt point at the new Ballymartin Park and Ride facility.

(AQW 50231/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I refer you to my previous response AQW49525/11-16 on this topic.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to list the roads in North Down that require resurfacing, ranked in order of priority need.

(AQW 50264/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department undertakes an annual programme of road reconstruction and resurfacing works, subject to the availability of financial resource. Safety inspections help to identify the condition of public carriageways and this information is then used in the preparation and prioritisation of TransportNI's annual resurfacing programme.

Programmes are prepared on the basis of a number of factors encompassing the road usage, general surface condition, structural deformation, public enquiries and public liability claims. However, it is necessary to regularly revise and reprioritise schemes for a wide range of reasons, for example, receipt of additional in year funding, notification of works by utilities etc. This, unfortunately, can result in some planned works being delayed longer than initially planned.

At present, the three highest priority roads within North Down that require resurfacing, ranked in order of priority need, are as follows:

- High Street, Holywood
- Ballymiscaw Road, Holywood
- Ballyrobert Road, Crawfordsburn

It should be noted that this list is continually assessed, with individual schemes being prioritised relative to each other. However, the timescale for their implementation is subject to the availability of funding.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to list the footpaths in North Down that require resurfacing, ranked in order of priority need.

(AQW 50265/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department's programme of potential new footway schemes in the North Down area is continually assessed with individual schemes prioritised relative to each other.

Programmes are prepared on the basis of a number of factors encompassing the road usage, general surface condition, structural deformation, public enquiries and public liability claims. However, it is necessary to regularly revise and reprioritise schemes for a wide range of reasons, for example, receipt of additional in year funding, notification of works by utilities etc. This, unfortunately, can result in some planned works being delayed longer than initially planned.

At present, the three highest priority footways within North Down that require resurfacing are as follows:

- My Lady's Mile, Holywood
- Morston Park, Bangor
- Seymour Park, Bangor

It should be noted that this list is continually assessed, with individual schemes being prioritised relative to each other. However, the timescale for their implementation is subject to the availability of funding.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what the cost would be to spray the footpaths in North Down for weeds. (AQW 50267/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I can advise the member the annual cost to carry out weed control operations within the North Down area is approximately £78k.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Regional Development what measures her Department and Transport NI have in place to assist road users and pedestrians during the winter period. (AQW 50271/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Some 300 staff are available every day to salt the road network that serves around 80% of daily traffic flow in Northern Ireland. The full winter service fleet of 130 gritters and eight specialist snow blower vehicles are operational and available to be deployed to help drivers and road users cope with wintry conditions.

Salt barns and stockpiles have also been filled to maximum capacity. In addition, I already have reserve stocks of around 20,000 tonnes of salt, strategically placed at points across Northern Ireland, taking the overall stock level to over 90,000 tonnes of salt. I have also made provision for further supplies of salt, if required, at the rate of around 15,000 tonnes per month.

During periods of prolonged snow, all gritters will be fitted with snow ploughs and efforts directed to clearing snow from motorways and the trunk roads, before moving to other main roads and the busiest urban link roads. In addition, contracts are in place to enable contractors and farmers to help to clear roads of snow.

My Department will continue to provide approximately 4,800 salt bins and 50,000 grit piles, placed at strategic locations, for use on a self help basis by pedestrians and motorists alike to help prevent the formation of snow and ice on pavements and untreated roads. These will be continually replenished, as required, throughout the winter period.

In addition, as a further measure relating to footways, I can confirm that at the end of last season arrangements were in place with 25 out of the 26 Councils for the clearance of ice and snow from town and city centre footways during prolonged severe weather. My Department is currently consulting with the new super councils to roll over these agreements for this important service.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development when the refurbished Enterprise trains will resume service between Belfast and Dublin; and whether there are plans to introduce an early morning train to Dublin. (AQW 50273/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Translink has advised that the first refurbished Enterprise train re-entered passenger service on 16 November 2015 and it is planned that the remaining three Enterprise trains will re-enter service by the end of 2015.

Discussions between Translink and its partners Irish Rail on a new Enterprise timetable are on-going. This includes the possibility of an earlier train arrival in Dublin.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the reduction in the number of level crossings on the Belfast-Derry railway over the last five years; and what plans are in place to make further reductions in level crossings. (AQW 50274/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Translink has advised that the number of level crossing closures on the Belfast to Londonderry line in recent years is as follows:

Year	Amount
2010	6
2011	24
2012	10
2013	5
2014	3
2015	7
Total	55

Translink is currently in negotiations with the owners of land at an additional 27 crossings on the line who have indicated they would like to progress the closure of their crossing(s).

Closure is dependent on several factors;

- Agreement with other third parties (when building laneways, etc. are involved);
- Requisite statutory approvals;
- Agreeing compensation; and
- Internal approvals process.

Some of these potential closures are at an advanced stage and may be completed in this financial year.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development why there are occasions on which students are back to school before their travel passes are issued.

(AQW 50307/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Student travel passes are the responsibility of the Education Authority (EA). Translink produces travel passes for the Education Authority (EA). However, Translink can only produce a travel pass once it has been formally requested by the EA. Translink believe it is the capture of each individual pupil's travel requirements which is the main cause of delay.

Translink has advised that there are two significant peaks in pass production every year.

The first peak occurs in July and relates to passes required for eligible pupils who are starting secondary school for the first time and also for eligible pupils who are returning to school for another academic year.

The second peak occurs in late August, usually after GCSE exam results are known, which leaves a short amount of time before the start of school term. This peak relates to passes for eligible pupils who may either stay on at the same school or change to another school or college.

This year, Translink accepts it made changes to its services and timetables relatively late in summer. This was due to negotiations with the Unite trade union who asked for time to endorse the changes. This was agreed at the time with my predecessor.

In some cases these changes led to delays in the production of travel passes. However, authorisation letters for the affected pupils were provided to ensure that they could avail of free school travel on Translink services.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the introduction of residents' parking schemes.

(AQW 50309/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department is currently proposing residents parking schemes in the Lower Malone, Stranmillis and Rugby Road areas in Belfast, as well as Antrim and Londonderry. These schemes are at varying stages of development. However, following a recent round of consultations with residents affected by the Lower Malone scheme, a significant degree of objection was received which my officials are currently considering.

The mixed reaction to residents parking schemes, and the need to take account of the often conflicting views of those affected by the proposals has resulted in limited progress on their introduction. Unfortunately the obstacles are such that my officials are reviewing the longer term viability of such schemes.

I am conscious of the significant resource that has been expended since the first schemes were proposed in 2008 and am concerned that to date, only one small scheme in Antrim has been completed through the statutory processes successfully. In addition, I am concerned that the cost of works on the ground to facilitate the implementation of residents' parking schemes and the consequent ongoing enforcement would impose a financial burden on my Department.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the road safety review of the A26 from Dunsilly to Ballee.

(AQW 50314/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department, in conjunction with PSNI, has completed an initial review of safety along the A26 from Dunsilly to Ballee.

This investigation has shown that although there is a history of collisions on this route, it is considered 'medium risk' due to the volume of traffic using the road.

Approximately 50% of the collisions occur at random locations, with a variety of causation factors which are difficult to resolve using engineering measures alone. The remaining collisions are concentrated around the junctions at Barnish Road, Fernisky Road, Woodgreen Road and Cromkill Road.

My Department is currently considering appropriate remedial measures at these junctions and will advise Mid and East Antrim Council of these once definitive schemes are developed.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development what traffic management measures are being considered to improve road safety at the Woodgreen Junction with A26 Lisnevenagh Road.

(AQW 50315/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department's officials met with PSNI on site at Woodgreen on 20 October 2015 to discuss the collision history at this junction. As a result, a number of site specific Traffic Management measures are currently being considered for this location.

However, before a final decision can be made on the extent of remedial measures, further detailed traffic surveys are required to ascertain turning movements, volumes and classification. It is hoped this survey will take place in the next few weeks.

I have asked my officials to advise the Mid and East Antrim Council once a definitive scheme for this junction is developed.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the proposed Cullybackey throughpass.
(AQW 50316/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The Cullybackey throughpass scheme is included in the old but still current Ballymena Area Plan 1986–2001. This status ensures that the indicative road alignment for the scheme is afforded planning protection.

Some preliminary design work for the scheme has been completed by TransportNI, however the scheme is not currently on my Department's works programme.

The funding for major capital road improvement schemes is focused on improving the Key Transport Corridors across Northern Ireland. The Cullybackey Bypass is not located on a Key Transport Corridor and therefore it is not included in the Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan 2015 (RSTNTP) for Northern Ireland.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development whether she would consider putting in place an annual budget for the development of greenways.
(AQW 50375/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I am keen to look at ways in which I can assist in the development of greenways and am giving consideration to drawing up a strategic plan for greenways throughout Northern Ireland. Such a plan could consider ways in which individual schemes might be funded.

My Department is working closely with DTTAS to scope out greenway projects for INTERREG V funding particularly those that are strong propositions in their own right. The budget provision allocated under this programme is €14 million and within this I would be willing to consider supporting specific projects that promote sustainable or active travel. It is the sustainable travel aspect of the greenway that will be key in determining which projects are funded under INTERREG.

I believe that there is also an opportunity for other bodies, such as local councils, to make a contribution to developing greenways.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the progress of the A26.
(AQW 50376/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The A26 Dualling scheme commenced in January 2015, and to date its construction has been progressing well. So far, around one million tonnes of earth has been moved, and the realignment of a section of the River Clough along with the demolition of the Crankhill Bridge have been completed. Three culverts have also been installed and work is currently progressing on the construction of three new bridges as part of the the scheme.

The work is currently on programme and is expected to be completed by summer 2017.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what the cost would be to cut the grass on the road verges and central reservations in North Down.
(AQW 50381/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: It costs my Department between £8,000 and £9,000 per grass cut, to cut the verges and central reservations for safety reasons within the North Down area.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development whether sufficient salt has been stockpiled to deal with any major snow falls this winter.
(AQW 50383/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: As part of my Department's winter service preparations, salt barns, which are strategically placed in depots throughout Northern Ireland, have been filled to capacity.

I can confirm that approximately 70,000 tonnes of salt is available in these barns for the start of coming winter period. This is more than enough to treat the scheduled roads during a typical winter.

TransportNI has additional resilience salt stocks, held at six strategic locations, totalling a further 20,000 tonnes. This stock is held over and above normal operational requirements for use only during prolonged severe wintry conditions, such as those experienced during the 2010/11 winter.

My Department also has arrangements in place to supplement stocks throughout the winter period, with an additional 15,000 tonnes per month available if required.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Regional Development for her assessment of the level of parking fines being imposed within the grounds of private shopping centre premises.

(AQW 50384/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has no authority or responsibility for the regulation of car parks on private land, so does not gather information on the level of parking fines being imposed.

I cannot therefore offer any assessment.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development when work on the A26 will be completed.

(AQW 50716/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The A26 Dualling scheme commenced in January 2015, and to date its construction has been progressing well. So far, around one million tonnes of earth has been moved, and the realignment of a section of the River Clough and the demolition of the Crankhill Bridge has been completed. Three culverts have also been installed and work is currently progressing on the construction of three new bridges along the scheme.

The work is currently on programme and is expected to be completed by summer 2017.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development whether Part VII 87 (1) of the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 includes flags and street lighting columns.

(AQW 50779/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Article 87(1) of the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 states:

87. - (1) Any person who, without lawful authority—

- (a) paints or otherwise inscribes or affixes any picture, letter, sign or mark; or
- (b) displays any advertisement, upon the surface of a road or upon any tree, structure or other works in or on a road, shall be guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 2 on the standard scale.

While flags are not specifically listed in the article, I can confirm that street lighting columns are included, since they are structures in or on a road.

Department for Social Development

Ms McCorley asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown of any investment, including capital, his Department has made in West Belfast since May 2011.

(AQW 50194/11-16)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): The table below shows the breakdown of investment, including capital, made within West Belfast since May 2011:

Year	Urban Group (£)	Social Security Agency (£)
2011-12	8,832,809	5,487,088
2012-13	10,115,366	7,694,770
2013-14	8,006,799	8,598,436
2014-15	8,279,767	8,041,012
2014-15 (to Sept 2015)	6,447,856	3,913,432

In addition to the above amounts, May 2011 – Under PEACE 111, Priority 2.1 (Creating Shared Public Spaces) four projects within the West Belfast area been received match-funding of £832,307. It is not possible to disaggregate this figure into financial years.

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) any housing improvement and maintenance scheme work completed in the last twelve months; (ii) any improvement and maintenance scheme work scheduled for the future in East Belfast; and (iii) the timeframe for those schemes, listed by housing area.

(AQW 50206/11-16)

Mr Storey: The NIHE has provided the following tables, which detail the improvement and maintenance scheme works it has completed in East Belfast in the last twelve months, those that it is due to complete, and those it has planned, along with the proposed timeframes for those schemes.

Table 1: Completed Projects

* Whincroft House and Carnet House are a combined scheme totalling 128 properties. As this scheme involves cladding the exterior of the buildings the number of dwellings in the scheme includes some non-NIHE properties.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of people who have presented as homeless in (i) North Antrim; (ii) Mid and East Antrim Borough Council; (iii) Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council; (iv) Ballymena Legacy Council; and (v) Ballymoney Legacy Council areas, in each of the last four years.

(AQW 50230/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has provided the table below, which details the number of people who have presented as homeless in the areas in question.

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
North Antrim *	1213	1074	976	1033
Mid and East Antrim Borough Council	1565	1465	1417	1499
Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council	1145	1130	1084	1124
Ballymena Legacy Council	904	767	695	763
Ballymoney Legacy Council	209	185	143	138

- * The Housing Executive has advised that it is not possible to provide accurate homelessness figures for North Antrim Parliamentary Constituency – these figures are an amalgamation of former Ballymena, Ballymoney and Moyle Council areas. Moyle Council includes Waterfoot, Cushendall and Cushendun areas whereas North Antrim Parliamentary Constituency does not.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 48450/11-16, to detail (i) the number of queries the Housing Executive has directed to each of the electricity suppliers in each of the last three years; and (ii) how many of the queries have been answered.

(AQW 50280/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that the information is not available in the format requested because enquiries to electricity providers are made on a case by case basis and are not compiled in any central register.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 50072/11-16, to detail (i) which groups received funding through the Women's Centres Childcare Fund; and (ii) what responsibility his Department has to ensure similar funding provisions remain as part of a new childcare strategy.

(AQW 50289/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Women's Centres Childcare Fund Groups are:

- ATLAS Women's Centre
- Ballybeen Women's Centre
- Chrysalis Women's Centre
- Falls Women's Centre
- First Steps Women's Centre
- Footprints Women's Centre
- Greenway Women's Centre
- Kilcooley Women's Centre
- Magherafelt Women's Group Ltd
- Shankill Women's Centre
- Strathfoyle Women's Activity Group
- The Women's Centre Derry
- Waterside Women's Centre
- Windsor Women's Centre

- (i) My Officials have been in discussions with OfMdfM Officials regarding the services to be covered under the new childcare strategy.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of planned new social housing units in the next five years in (i) Ballymena; (ii) Broughshane; (iii) Cullybackey; (iv) Ahoghill; (v) Kells; (v) Portglenone; and (vi) Clough.

(AQW 50317/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Social Housing Development Programme is formulated on a three year basis, so I am unable to provide details of any schemes planned beyond 2017/18.

Location	Programmed on-site year			Total
	2015/16	2016/17	2017/18
Ballymena	182*	79	69	330
Broughshane	0	7	40	47
Cullybackey	24	0	0	24
Ahoghill	0	0	0	0
Kells	9	0	0	9
Portglenone	0	0	10	10
Total	215*	86	119	420

- * of which 53 units are Supported Housing

Please be advised that programmed schemes can be lost or slip to future programme years for a variety of reasons. New schemes may also be added through the annual housing association bidding round / programme formulation process. This process is currently underway and we hope to publish the new SHDP 2016/17 to 2018/19 in early 2016.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the provision of each traveller halting site; and (ii) whether he has any plans to expand this provision.

(AQW 50373/11-16)

Mr Storey: The current provision of Traveller halting sites (transit sites) is detailed in the table below:

Strabane	Greenbrae
Londonderry	Daisyfield Ballyarnett
Coalisland	The Glen
Belfast	Glen Road Heights
Craigavon	Legahory Close

Based on the latest Traveller Needs Assessment and NIHE's record of unauthorised encampments, there are currently no plans to expand this provision.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Social Development whether urban regeneration and community development powers and budgets are still set to be conferred on local councils from 1 April 2016.

(AQW 50394/11-16)

Mr Storey: You will be aware that the proposed transfer of powers to local government in April 2016 is dependent on the successful passage of the Regeneration Bill through the Assembly. The Bill completed its formal consideration by the Social Development Committee on 28 May and the Committee has proposed a number of amendments in its report. I am currently considering the options for the way forward, before bringing the Bill to the Assembly for Consideration Stage.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the supply of social housing in rural areas.

(AQW 50425/11-16)

Mr Storey: I am committed to increasing the number of social homes throughout Northern Ireland whether it is in an urban or rural area. Housing activity in rural areas, which is classed as a settlement with a population of up to 5,000 is identified by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive through their Rural Action Plan, and then delivered through the Social Housing Development Programme.

During the last financial year 2,013 new social homes were started in Northern Ireland of which 119 were in rural areas, which is an increase of 12% in rural new starts from the previous year. In monetary terms, this equates to some £6.5 million of Housing Association Grant invested in new social housing schemes in the rural parts of Northern Ireland to help address need and sustain local communities.

I continue to support the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's commitment to deliver social housing in rural communities.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the final cost of the Public Realm work in Bangor.

(AQW 50452/11-16)

Mr Storey: The public realm works in Bangor town centre are progressing well and on target to be completed by September 2016. The estimated final cost for the works is expected to be £8,081,000.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the final cost of the Public Realm work in Holywood.

(AQW 50453/11-16)

Mr Storey: The public realm works in Holywood town centre were completed in June this year and the estimated final cost for the scheme is £2,464,201.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the final cost of the Public Realm work in Donaghadee.

(AQW 50454/11-16)

Mr Storey: The public realm works in Donaghadee town centre are due to complete later this month and the final estimated cost is £2,417,493.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how many cases of anti-social behaviour have been recorded by the Housing Executive due to (i) damage caused to property; or (ii) problem tenants in the last three years.

(AQW 50455/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that in relation to (i) the number of anti-social behaviour cases recorded for damage to property were as follows:-

- 2013/14                    60
- 2014/15                    95
- 2015/16 to date        59

The Housing Executive has further advised that the information in relation to (ii) is not available in the format requested because they record 22 categories to determine different types of anti-social behaviour and the table below outlines the cases recorded across Northern Ireland since 2013.

Anti-Social Behaviour Category	2013/14	2014/15	2015/16 to date
Ageism	0	0	0
Alcohol	18	23	21
Boundary Dispute	22	13	15
Criminal Behaviour	40	47	29
Damage to Property	60	95	59

Ms Hanna asked the Minister for Social Development to outline any surveys or studies her Department has undertaken to establish the extent of negative equity among local home owners.

(AQO 9073/11-16)

Mr Storey: As your question relates to the work of the Housing Repossessions Taskforce, Minister Foster has forwarded your query to my Department. The Housing Repossessions Taskforce was established at the start of 2014 to investigate the impact of mortgage repayment arrears, repossessions and negative equity in Northern Ireland. Membership included representation from the advice sector, lenders, private landlords, professional bodies and the statutory sector. The work of the Taskforce was completed in two phases: the first phase produced an initial evidence paper on the mortgage debt landscape in Northern Ireland which was published in July 2014; the second phase used this evidence base to produce a suite of recommendations which was published in February 2015.

For your reference links to the Taskforce Initial Evidence Paper and Final Report are provided below:

Ms Lo asked the Minister for Social Development whether he has any plans to amend the Tenancy Deposit Scheme regulations so tenants can report failure to comply after the first six months of the tenancy, given that most deposit disputes occur at the end of the tenancy.

(AQW 50613/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Tenancy Deposit Scheme which was introduced in April 2013 requires private landlords to protect tenancy deposits within 14 days of receiving the deposit and inform the tenant where and how the deposit has been protected within 28 days. Tenants who do not receive this information should report the landlord immediately and not wait until the end of the tenancy.

An advertising campaign including TV, press, bus sides, street liners and online advertising is currently taking place. The material informs landlords and agents of the legal requirement to protect deposits in an approved scheme and urges private tenants to report their landlord to their Council as soon as possible after the 28 day deadline. This would allow Councils to take appropriate enforcement action.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Social Development whether he has any plans to change legislation to allow junior discos and other non-alcoholic social events to take place in hotels and licensed premises where trained staff are available to deal with child protection, health and safety and other services, that are not available elsewhere.

(AQW 50624/11-16)

Mr Storey: Following a consultation in November 2012 on the reform of liquor licensing legislation in Northern Ireland, the Executive agreed to the drafting of a Bill which includes a measure to allow certain licensed premises, including hotels, to run underage functions provided adequate safeguards are in place.

I am considering the draft Bill and will announce how I plan to proceed in due course

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Saville Report on Northern Ireland Housing Executive Properties.

(AQW 50642/11-16)

Mr Storey: The work undertaken by Savills in 2014/15, which was commissioned jointly by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) and my Department, was a large and complex Asset Management Commission and it has delivered a number of consultancy outputs - one of which is a survey appraising the condition of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) stock. The Commission has now practically completed and my Department, along with NIHE, is currently planning the publication of the findings of the entire Commission.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development what steps he is taking to extend the Women's Centre Childcare Fund post March 2016.

(AQW 50676/11-16)

Mr Storey: I have indicated that, in the context of the OFMDFM Childcare Strategy, this will be the last year of funding under the Women's Centre Childcare Fund.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the work supported by the Women's Centre Childcare Fund.

(AQW 50677/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Department recently commissioned an evaluation of the Women's Centre Childcare Fund, which has been an emergency measure since 2008. The evaluation concluded that the programme provided a wide range of positive impacts, both in relation to the development and well-being of children and also in supporting parents to access services and opportunities.

Mr Cree asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of properties owned by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive in North Down that have (a) one bedroom; (b) two bedrooms; and (iii) three bedrooms.

(AQW 50704/11-16)

Mr Storey: The table attached details the number of (a) one bedroom; (b) two bedroom and (iii) three bedroom properties owned by the Housing Executive in North Down.

Total no. of bedrooms	Total no. of properties
1	498
2	1,333
3	1,228

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Social Development whether he has any immediate plans to amend the Licensing (NI) Order 1996 to remove the prohibition of young people being in licensed premises.
(AQW 50774/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Licensing (Northern Ireland) Order 1996 (the '96 Order) provides that young people under 18 years of age are only allowed in the "bar area" of licensed premises up to 9.00pm where the court has granted a Children's Certificate to the relevant premises and certain safeguards are in place.

Following a consultation in November 2012 on the reform of liquor licensing legislation in Northern Ireland, the Executive agreed to the drafting of a Liquor Licensing Bill which includes amendments to the '96 Order in relation to young people under 18 years of age in licensed premises.

Provided adequate safeguards are in place licence holders would no longer be required to apply for a Children's Certificate to allow young people in their premises until 9.00pm and certain licensed premises, including hotels, would be allowed to run non alcohol underage functions after 9.00pm.

I am considering the draft Bill and will announce how I plan to proceed in due course.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of use of his Department's funds to support the Outburst Queer Arts Festival in Belfast in staging The Gospel According to Jesus Queen of Heaven.
(AQW 50864/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Outburst Arts Festival made an application for funding from the Belfast City Centre Event Grant Scheme for a festival that is running from the 13 – 21 November 2015 with events taking place in various venues across the City. The application was assessed by Departmental officials against set criteria and an offer of funding was made. The grant was not specific to any particular event within the festival programme.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development (i) what funding his Department and its arm's-length bodies have provided to Outburst Queer Arts Festival; (ii) to outline the purpose of such funding; and (iii) what funding went towards the staging of The Gospel According to Jesus Queen of Heaven.
(AQW 50866/11-16)

Mr Storey: In response to the three questions you raised in relation to the Outburst Queer Arts Festival I would advise as follows:

- (i) My Department has provided grant funding of £3.5k towards the cost of the 2015 festival.
- (ii) This grant was a contribution towards the overall costs for venue hire and artists fees for the festival.
- (iii) This grant was not offered for any specific event within the festival programme.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how much has been paid in all benefits to non-UK and Republic of Ireland citizens in each of the last three years, broken down by benefit type.
(AQW 50880/11-16)

Mr Storey: The table below details the amounts of Social Security Agency benefits paid to non-UK Nationals for the previous three financial years. Figures are rounded to the nearest £1000.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 50676/11-16 and AQW 50677/11-16, whether he has requested that additional funding be made available under the Office and the First and deputy First Minister's Childcare Strategy to supplement the funding lost from the Women's Centre Childcare Fund.

(AQW 50900/11-16)

Mr Storey: I have shared the evaluation of the Women's Centre Childcare Fund with the Office of the First and deputy First Minister and requested that the matter is considered in the context of the Childcare Strategy. In addition my officials have been engaging with OFMdfM with a view to ensuring the provision of pre-school childcare under the Strategy.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development how many staff are employed in the Child Maintenance Service (CMS); and what percentage of CMS staff have been made voluntary redundancy offers under the voluntary exit scheme.

(AQW 50927/11-16)

Mr Storey: There are 1112 permanent staff employed in Child Maintenance Service. It is important to note that not all CMS staff applied for the Northern Ireland Civil Service Voluntary Exit Scheme. To date, 25% of the CMS staff who applied for the Scheme, have received offers to exit.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 50624/11-16, to provide a timeframe for the development of the draft Bill.

(AQW 50986/11-16)

Mr Storey: A Licensing and Registration of Clubs (Amendment) Bill has been drafted in line with the policy agreed by the Executive at its meeting on 8 July 2014.

I am still considering the content of the draft Bill and will announce how I plan to proceed in due course.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how much has been paid for the discretionary fund for welfare in each of the last three years.

(AQW 51087/11-16)

Mr Storey: The information requested is set out in the Table below.

Northern Ireland Discretionary Social Fund Expenditure

	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Community Care Grants	£13.42m	£13.69m	£13.71m

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Assembly Commission how many bids were received during the sale of Ormiston House.

(AQW 50253/11-16)

Mr Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The sale of Ormiston House was a long and protracted process that was finally drawn to a conclusion by means of final sealed bids being tabled with our agent Lambert Smith Hampton (formerly BTW Shiels) in June 2014.

The following bids (in descending order) were received:

- Bid 1           £1,505,355.00
- Bid 2           £1,350,000.00
- Bid 3           £1,350,000.00
- Bid 4           £1,100,000.00

The sale was agreed with the highest bidder and the Memorandum of Sale was signed and completed on the 28th November 2014.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Assembly Commission if Ormiston House was sold to the highest bidder.

(AQW 50255/11-16)

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the proposed age legislation, including timescale, which will include provision for goods, facilities and services and protect against discrimination on the grounds of age.
(AQW 36823/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): Public consultation on policy proposals to extend age discrimination legislation to the provision of goods, facilities and services closed on 8 October 2015. The responses received during the consultation period are currently being analysed.

We will then consider the options available to us for bringing this legislation before the Assembly.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the proposals to extend age discrimination legislation to the provision of goods, facilities and services.
(AQW 38575/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Public consultation on policy proposals to extend age discrimination legislation to the provision of goods, facilities and services closed on 8 October 2015. The responses received during the consultation period are currently being analysed.

We will then consider the options available to us for bringing this legislation before the Assembly.

Mr Rogers asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Social Investment Fund, broken down by how much (i) has been spent; (ii) is committed to future spending; and (iii) remains unspent.
(AQW 46690/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Expenditure on the Social Investment Fund to date is just over £3.2million.

£58million of the overall programme is now committed to projects across the nine social investment zones.

This leaves £22m for projects continuing to be considered through the approvals process. Work on attaining business case approval for these is ongoing and it is hoped we will see significant progress in the next few months.

Mrs Dobson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much of the £80 million Social Investment Fund budget was distributed by the end of the 2014-15 financial year.
(AQO 8330/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Committed expenditure on SIF is just over £58million; this is profiled over a number of years in line with proposals from the local zones. Spend in the Social Investment Fund in the financial year 2012/13 was £496,539; in 2013/14 it was £27,610; and in 2014/15 it was £897,348. This represents a total spend of £1,421,497 and includes consultancy support provided to Steering Groups in 2013 to develop their Area Plans.

We have minimised this type of spend to ensure maximum available spend for the actual projects.

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the rationale behind declining to make the Gateway Reviews of the Social Investment Fund available to the Committee for the Office of First and deputy First Minister or the public.
(AQW 47034/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The SIF Gateway review process is a voluntary process which is designed to give full and frank advice in order to improve processes. The purpose is not for publication.

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what progress has been made to meet the Programme for Government 11-15 commitment to fulfil obligations to reduce child poverty under the Child Poverty Act.
(AQW 48377/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Child Poverty Act 2010 requires the Executive to publish a Child Poverty Strategy, prepare and publish annual reports on the Strategy and to formally review the Strategy every third year. The 2011-14 Child Poverty Strategy was published in March 2011, to date three Annual Reports have been published and a review of progress was completed in 2014 in consultation with departments. A revised Child Poverty Strategy has been developed, and is expected to go to the Executive shortly.

A new framework - Delivering Social Change – was launched in 2011 to oversee the delivery of the Executive's commitments under Priority 2 of the Programme for Government and considerable work has been undertaken to tackle child poverty. Delivering Social Change Signature Programmes were initiated in 2012 to improve literacy and numeracy levels, offer increased family support and to support job creation within local communities – all of which were identified as being key priorities.

The Executive's Annual Reports on child poverty, published on our Department's website, set out further work undertaken in greater detail.

In 2012, OFMDFM commissioned work to develop a joined up approach which would allow departments to better understand their role in reducing child poverty. This resulted in the publication of the Child Poverty Outcomes Framework in October 2013. It proposed the introduction of Outcomes Based Accountability as a method of planning and assessing performance. The proposed 2014-17 Child Poverty Strategy will adopt this approach.

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline what representations they have made to the UK Government with regards to the inclusion of Kincora Boys Home in the UK independent inquiry into Child Sex Abuse.
(AQW 48511/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: On 30 September 2014 the Assembly unanimously agreed that allegations of cover up by intelligence services and MI5 relating to abuse in Kincora Boys' Home should be investigated by the Westminster independent inquiry. Naturally, we were disappointed by the Secretary of State's announcement that this was not to be the case.

We wrote to both the Secretary of State and the Home Secretary in February to reinforce our position and to express our disappointment about that decision.

It is too soon to be sure that the Inquiry into Historical Institutional Abuse here will find itself able to deal satisfactorily with allegations of cover up relating to Kincora Boys' Home. However, the Inquiry Chairperson has told us that he was satisfied with the assurances given by the Secretary of State of full co-operation with the HIA Inquiry.

A judicial review taken by a victim of child abuse at Kincora Boys' Home challenging the Government's decision to exclude the home from the Westminster child abuse inquiry was heard in Belfast's High Court in June. We await the judgment with interest.

Mr Gardiner asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the scale of each of the 2015/16 inescapable budgetary pressures faced by their Department.
(AQW 48515/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Department's inescapable pressures identified to date are shown in the table below:

Description of pressure	Amount
Beijing Office/International Relations	£0.137m
Foreign Exchange Loss	£0.150m

The Department has put plans into place in 2015/16 to ensure all inescapable pressures can be met from within its existing budget allocations.

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether their Department have assessed the relevance of the poverty measures in the Child Poverty Act 2010.
(AQW 48589/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The measures to which you refer were established by the UK Government and were included in the Child Poverty Act 2010 to help reduce child poverty.

In July 2015, the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions and the Secretary of State for Education introduced Life Chances clauses in the new Welfare Reform and Work Bill which would remove the duty on the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions to meet the poverty measures and to enact a new approach to tackling child poverty for England.

The Government has indicated that each Devolved Administration can decide whether or not to propose amendments to the provisions in relation to their duties and statutory obligations. In line with Scotland and Wales we have not agreed the proposals and we are currently considering the potential impact. The Executive's approach to child poverty won't be determined by the Bill currently before Parliament.

Mr Lunn asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what progress has been made on the creation of an Equality and Good Relations Commission as referenced in Together: Building a United Community; and (ii) to detail any plans to ensure its creation by May 2016.

(AQW 48603/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The draft Bill to establish the Equality and Good Relations Commission is under active consideration within the Department. We are aware of the time pressures with regard to the enactment of the legislation before May 2016.

In advance of the enactment of legislation, departmental officials are working with both the Equality Commission and the Community Relations Council to consider the extent to which the aims and objectives of the 'Together: Building a United Community' Strategy can be delivered by these respective organisations within their existing vires and remits.

Mr Lunn asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the timescale for meeting all the targets in Together: Building a United Community.

(AQW 48605/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Together: Building a United Community was published on 23 May 2013 and is the Executive's Strategy to improving community relations. It outlines how Government, communities and individuals will work together to build a united shared and reconciled community and achieve change against four key priorities; Our Children & Young People; Our Shared Community; Our Safe Community; and Our Cultural Expression. It contains a package of significant and strategic actions aimed at making these changes happen.

Implementation of the Strategy is being progressed with work ongoing to deliver the actions and commitments within the 10 year lifespan of the Strategy. OFMDFM continues to monitor progress of the Strategy's implementation and achievement of actions and commitments. Whilst OFMDFM leads on the implementation of the Strategy, delivery of the actions and commitments arising from it are being taken forward across a number of departments.

Mr Middleton asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Active Ageing Strategy.

(AQW 48609/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The draft Active Ageing Strategy has been prepared following public consultation and advice from the Ageing Strategy Advisory Group. Once agreed by the Executive, the finalised Active Ageing Strategy will be published. A public consultation will then be launched on the indicators to be used to measure progress on the implementation of the Strategy.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for his assessment of the (i) Childcare Fund within the Delivering Social Change Framework; (ii) initial targets for this fund; and to date (iii) whether these targets have been met.

(AQW 48653/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: As part of the Programme for Government, we committed to publish and implement a Childcare Strategy with key actions to provide integrated and affordable childcare. In the 2011-2015 Budget, £12 million was ring-fenced to support the development of the Executive's Childcare Strategy. With the development of the first phase of the Strategy in 2013, it was agreed by the Childcare Strategy Programme Board that the £12 million fund would be used strategically to resource the Key First Actions. Of the £12 million childcare fund, £4.7 million has been allocated and £3.4 million spent. The balance will continue to be used to resource the Key First Actions of the Childcare Strategy.

The 15 Key First Actions were designed to meet the main areas of childcare need identified through research and consultation. The School Age Childcare Grant Scheme has been implemented from March 2014 and is the most ambitious action of the first phase of the Executive's Childcare Strategy. Its exact funding requirements depend upon the quality and quantity of the applications submitted and how current and future successful projects progress. The Scheme is ongoing having created or sustained 2,200 childcare places and a further call for grant applications is expected to be made in November 2015.

The Executive Childcare Fund is not the budget for the full Childcare Strategy. The budget for the Childcare Strategy will be determined on the basis of the final version of the Strategy, to be developed post consultation.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) the time scale for the publication of the Active Ageing Strategy; and (ii) what communication they have had with Age Sector groups regarding progress to date.

(AQW 48859/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Subject to Executive approval, the Active Ageing Strategy will be published as soon as possible.

We have had ongoing communication concerning the Strategy with the Ageing Strategy Advisory Group, which has representation from the Age Sector and was chaired by the former Commissioner for Older People for Northern Ireland.

Mr Lunn asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on Together: Building a United Community with specific reference to targets to be completed by 2015.

(AQO 8672/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Together: Building a United Community was published on 23 May 2013 and is the Executive's strategy to improving community relations across our society. The Strategy outlines how Government, communities and individuals will work together to build a united shared and reconciled community and achieve change against four key priorities; Our Children & Young People; Our Shared Community; Our Safe Community; and Our Cultural Expression. The strategy contains a package of significant and strategic actions aimed at making these changes happen. Of these actions there were two that required completion by 2015:

- To review the Good Relations Indicators by the end of 2013.
- The delivery of the pilot of 100 Summer Camps by 2015.

The Good Relations Indicators have been reviewed and consulted upon and with the final set of Indicators receiving Ministerial approval in April 2015. The first report detailing baseline and historic statistics for the Good Relation Indicators was published on 22 September 2015.

We can confirm that 101 Summer Camps have been delivered and therefore the 2015 target has been met.

Mr Swann asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how many of their departmental staff have a registered disability, broken down (i) by full time equivalent; and (ii) as a percentage of the workforce.

(AQW 49370/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We refer the member to answer AQW 48642/11-16 which was provided on 30 October 2015.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) what mechanisms exist to link the Sub-Committees on Poverty and Social Inclusion and Children and Young People with the Pathways to Success Strategy; (ii) how these are operating in practice; and (iii) what steps have been taken to ensure that Pathways to Success forms a key part of the Delivering Social Change Programme.

(AQW 49444/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Delivering Social Change is the Executive's framework to deliver a sustained reduction in poverty and associated issues across all ages and aims to provide an outline framework for future social policy interventions.

The Executive's Ministerial Sub-Committees on Poverty and Social Inclusion and Children and Young People lead on the Delivering Social Change programme of work. Both Sub-Committees meet once a year and there is also one joint meeting. The Ministerial Sub-Committees are supported by the Delivering Social Change Programme Board and the Delivering Social Change/Atlantic Philanthropies Programme Board.

The Department for Employment and Learning contributes fully to the work of Delivering Social Change and with regard to ministerial and programme board meetings on this matter, provides regular updates on its key activity in support of same, including appropriate updates and information concerning the Pathways to Success Strategy.

Pathways to Success is intended to provide the best chance for some of the most vulnerable young people in our society. The aim is to guide them towards playing a full role in the life of our community and economy, with the skills our region needs for the future.

The Community Family Support Programme, one of the Pathways interventions, reports monthly to the Early Intervention Transformation Programme's (EITP) Project Board which in turn reports to the Delivering Social Change /Atlantic Philanthropy Programme Board.

The EITP Programme is one of three Delivering Social Change Signature Programmes, announced by the then First Minister and deputy First Minister in September 2014, which are being jointly funded with Atlantic Philanthropies.

The Department for Employment and Learning has also been involved in chairing cross Departmental Groups to develop policy papers on issues such as low skills and disengaged youth.

Mr Allen asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQT 2925/11-16, to detail the source of those resources that have been identified for use in the second and third years of the Syrian Vulnerable Persons Relocation Scheme.

(AQW 49490/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We refer the member to the answer given to AQW 49488/11-16.

Mr Allen asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQT 2925/11-16, in relation to the Syrian Vulnerable Persons Relocation Scheme, to detail what consideration has been given to the geographical location of any settlement.

(AQW 49492/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Officials have begun significant preparatory work to ensure that we are in a position to respond effectively to the needs of those who might arrive under the Vulnerable Persons Relocation scheme. The operational details of how the scheme might work have not yet been finalised.

Any decision on locations will take into account the needs of the refugees and those of the receiving community.

Mr McKinney asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the need for a mechanism to enforce the Ministerial Code of Conduct.

(AQW 49642/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Pledge of Office requires Ministers to comply with the Ministerial Code of Conduct. The Northern Ireland Act 1998 contains provisions allowing the Assembly to resolve on questions of whether a Minister has failed to observe any of the terms of the Pledge, and to impose the sanctions it considers appropriate. We therefore consider that a mechanism already exists for the enforcement of the Ministerial Code of Conduct.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail a timeframe for a public consultation on the updated Gender Equality Strategy.

(AQW 49904/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: It is envisaged that a twelve week public consultation period will be run in 2016.

As previously stated, the current Gender Equality Strategy 2006 – 2016 will remain in place until the new Strategy is developed and operational.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the publication of the Active Ageing Strategy.

(AQW 49906/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Active Ageing Strategy has been finalised and, subject to agreement by the Executive, will be published.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail any departmental targets on public appointments made to (i) people under 30; and (ii) women.

(AQW 49931/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: OFMDFM does not currently set public appointment targets for people under 30 or for women.

Data on appointments of people under 30 and women are collected and published annually by OFMDFM in the Public Bodies and Public Appointments Annual Report. The former Commissioner for Public Appointments made a recommendation in his 2014 diversity report that work should begin on establishing diversity targets. This recommendation is currently under consideration.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) any projects that received money from the Central Good Relations Fund; (ii) which of these are rural projects and; (iii) whether all funding has been allocated until April 2016.

(AQW 49932/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The table below details: groups that have received funding from the Central Good Relation Fund and indicates if the group is urban or rural.

There has been significant demand for 2015/16 Central Good Relations Funding. Funding is being released in phases and to date over £1.7 million has been approved and allocated to priority projects. We intend to release further funding soon and successful groups will be contacted when decisions have been made.

It should be noted that groups based in both rural and urban areas may have participants taking part in their projects from outside the area.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail (i) which groups have benefited from the Bright Start Childcare Scheme since 2014 in East Londonderry; and (ii) for an update on a third call for applications to this scheme, including whether funding has been ring-fenced for this.

(AQW 49933/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Since 2014 the following the following childcare settings in East Londonderry Parliamentary Constituency have been funded under the Bright Start Childcare Scheme:

Group	Revenue (£)	Capital (£)
The Nest Out of School Club, Claudy	34,777	0
Burnfoot Playgroup, Dungiven	32,784	0
Dry Arch Childrens Centre, Dungiven	19,497	30,000
Gaelscoil Leim An Mhadaidh, Limavady	28,845	13,500
Apple Tree Childcare, Garvagh	11,764	30,000

To promote a further round of funding for the Bright Start Grant Scheme a series of eight events were held between 27 May and 12 June. It is now planned to open up the application process for funding again in November 2015.

In the 2011-2015 Budget, £12 million was ring-fenced to support the development of the Executive's Childcare Strategy. Of the £12 million childcare fund, £4.2 million has been spent to date. The balance will continue to be used to resource the Key First Actions of the Childcare Strategy, such as the Bright Start Grant Scheme.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the highest remuneration paid to an employee within their Department in 2014-15.

(AQW 49944/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The highest remuneration paid to an employee within OFMDFM in 2014-15 was within the salary range £150k - £155k.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister why the First Legislative Counsel received pension benefits of £97,000 in 2014-15.

(AQW 49945/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS) pension benefits are determined by the terms and conditions of the NICS pension schemes. Pension entitlement is determined by a number of factors including: pensionable earnings; length of service; the terms of the pension scheme; age; and gender. The pension benefits of £97,000 due to the First Legislative Counsel were calculated in accordance with these factors and reflect additional payments for added years made by First Legislative Council.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister why the former Director of the Equality Directorate in their Department received pension benefits of £348,000 in 2014-15.

(AQW 49946/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The former Director of Equality and Strategy did not receive pension benefits of £348,000 in 2014-15. The pension benefits figure as presented was negative £348,000. This negative figure was based on the former Director's current period of service in the NICS which began in 2009 and was calculated on the basis of a standard approach in presenting the pension benefits of senior officials in Departmental accounts.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail all the inward visits from international government, political and diplomatic leaders in May 2014.

(AQW 49947/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: During May 2014, we and our Junior Ministers met with the Turkish Ambassador to the UK, HE Mr Unal Cevikoz; the Romanian Ambassador to the UK, HE Dr Ion Jinga; the Korean Ambassador to the UK, HE Sungham LIM and with the Ambassador of Palestine in Dublin, HE Ahmed Abdelrazek.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail all the inward visits from international government, political and diplomatic leaders in (a) 2013-14; (b) 2014-15; and (c) 2015-16 to date.

(AQW 49949/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The table below lists the formal diplomatic meetings with international visitors we and our Junior Ministers held since April 2013.

Mrs Dobson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the (i) capital; and (ii) resource costs associated with digitisation and online services within their Department and its arm's-length bodies in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50058/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The table below details the costs for OFMDFM and its arm's-length bodies (ALBs) in each of the last three financial years (2013/14, 2014/15 and 2015/16 to date).

OFMDFM	2013/14		2014/15		2015/16 (to date)
	(i) Capital	(ii) Resources	(i) Capital	(ii) Resources	(i) Capital	(ii) Resources
Within Accounting Boundary	£374,628.13	£0.00	£247,450.00	£24,853.00	£0.00	£18,922.00
ALBs	£2,934.00	£95,232.66	£18,096.00	£103,064.01	£780.00	£31,700.73
Totals	£377,562.13	£95,232.66	£265,546.00	£127,917.01	£780.00	£50,622.73

Notes:

- Internal staff costs for ongoing content management of websites and costs for shared services delivered by Department of Finance & Personnel (DFP) are excluded.
- Costs include back office systems where information is pushed or pulled from a citizen facing website and for design & support for websites hosted outside the NICS.

- (c) Entities included as "Within Accounting Boundary" for OFMDFM include:
- Office of the Attorney General for Northern Ireland
  - Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments for Northern Ireland
  - Inquiry into Historical Institutional Abuse
  - North South Ministerial Council Joint Secretariat (North)
  - Planning Appeals Commission and Water Appeals Commission

Mr Swann asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, in relation to legislation specific to Northern Ireland, to detail the difference in the definition of a child and the definition of a young person.

(AQW 50228/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: There is a wide range of legislation specific to Northern Ireland which relates to children and young people. Each piece of legislation will define the terms "child" or "young person" for the purpose of that Act or statutory provision. The definitions may therefore vary depending on the context or the scope of the legislation in question.

From an OFMDFM perspective, the term "children and young people" is an all encompassing term which describes people up to the age of 18 and in certain circumstances, where the young person has specific additional needs, to the age of 21. This is consistent with the Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995 and legislation which underpins the role of the Commissioner for Children and Young People.

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail all outstanding funding grants that are yet to be allocated by or through their Department; including (i) the amount set aside for the funding grant allocation; (ii) the closing date of each funding application; (iii) the number of applications that have been made for each funding grant; (iv) the initial date their Department indicated the funding would be allocated; and (v) the reason for any delays in allocating the funding.

(AQW 50244/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The table below details the information requested.

Funding Scheme	Funding allocation	Closing date for applications	Applications received	Initial date funding to be allocated	Reason for delay
Central Good Relations Fund	£2,000,000	20 April 2015	182 *	Funding released in phases, no target date for allocation	N/A
Minority Ethnic Development Fund	£1,136,786	27 April 2015	92	27 March 2015	No Delay
Crisis Fund	£100,000	Will be 31 March 2016 fund not yet open	N/A	To be announced	N/A * Central Good Relations Fund small grant funding remains open for projects up to the value of £500 that can be delivered by 31 March 2016.

Mr Wells asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the total grant aid paid to each group through the Central Good Relations Funding Programme since its launch.

(AQW 50421/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The information has been placed in the Assembly Library. This reflects the total grant paid to each group at 10 November 2015.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline how departmental officials participated in the UN Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities inquiry into disability rights violations when it met recently in Belfast.

(AQO 9023/11-16)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: All United Nations inquiry processes are confidential and that confidentiality should be respected.

However, our Department remains committed to fulfilling our obligations under the Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities and we will continue to work to promote and protect the rights of people with disabilities. In addition, we will continue to co-operate with the UN in all respects and fully support the UN treaty monitoring mechanisms.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 48915/11-16, whether Brucellosis testing arrangements for cattle being exported to other regions of the United Kingdom will be relaxed.

(AQW 50479/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): On 6 October 2015, the north of Ireland secured formal recognition of its Officially Brucellosis Free (OBF) status from the European Commission. This is excellent news and represents a major achievement for our cattle industry.

Now that we have attained OBF status, I hope to be able to introduce changes to pre-export tests to other Member States in the coming months.

My officials are also continuing to liaise with their counterparts in England, Scotland and Wales.

We always anticipated that changes to pre-export testing requirements would take a little longer. This is due to necessary APHIS changes and securing bilateral agreements for revisions to export licence documentation.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how the Programme for Government 2011-16 could be reviewed and modified to better facilitate her Department.

(AQW 50505/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Programme for Government (PfG) Commitments relating to my Department all remained valid throughout the 2011-16 period.

These were in respect of the eradication of Brucellosis in cattle; the implementation of a Strategic Plan for the Agri-Food Sector; a financial package to tackle rural poverty and social and economic isolation; the relocation of the Department's headquarters to rural areas; and the introduction of arrangements for the implementation of the new Common Agricultural Policy (CAP) and the commencement of payments under the new rules.

A review of the implementation of the current PfG is, however, being undertaken by OFMDFM to identify opportunities to support more effective delivery.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, given the reduction in the incidence of BSE, whether she is aware of any plans to revise the EU regulations governing cattle aged over 30 weeks and the mechanical removal of meat from the bone.

(AQW 50526/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The requirement for BSE testing of healthy cattle slaughtered for human consumption has gradually reduced since November 2005 when cattle aged over thirty months and born on or after 1 August 1996 were allowed back into the food chain subject to BSE testing.

From 1 March 2013, the requirement to BSE test healthy cattle slaughtered for human consumption within the EU 25 Member States ended.

There are no proposals from the European Commission to revise EU legislation on the mechanical separation of meat from bones.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 50191/11-16, what action her Department has taken since 2013 to address these figures, particularly but not exclusively in respect of cattle entering the human food chain which were not ready for slaughter or that had been treated with prohibited chemicals.

(AQW 50551/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Responsibility for tackling rural crime (including the theft of livestock) lies primarily with the PSNI. DARD's Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch assists and advises the PSNI regularly on this issue.

Veterinary Service represents DARD on the steering group of a dedicated Rural Crime Unit which was set up by the PSNI. The Unit, jointly funded by the Department of Justice and NFU Mutual, is focusing on a range of issues from the identification of trends and patterns to the delivery of targeted initiatives. This multi-agency approach has led to the recovery of stolen animals and successful prosecutions in the north and the south. Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch assists particularly with the detection, tracing, recovery and identification of stolen livestock and has been using sophisticated DNA profiling techniques to verify the ownership of recovered animals.

My Department's responsibility in slaughterhouses, on behalf of the Food Standards Agency, is to inspect, verify, audit the Food Business Operator's (FBO's) food safety controls and to take appropriate enforcement action to secure compliance where the FBO's controls do not satisfy food hygiene legislation. This includes inspecting all cattle ante mortem and post mortem.

Specifically in the case of cattle identity checks, the Department conducts verification of 10% of cattle identities by reference to the accompanying movement documents and APHIS records. Cattle whose identity cannot reasonably be ascertained are excluded from the food chain by the FBO.

In the case of prohibited substances, the Department considers any veterinary medical treatments disclosed accompanying documents and any indication from the appearance of the animal or its carcase as part of the inspection process. Suspect animals or carcasses are sampled and detained pending the results of laboratory analysis. Cattle which test positive for prohibited substances or licensed substances in excess of the maximum residue limit, are excluded from the food chain.

The Department also undertakes drug residue surveillance through a regime of targeted risk and random sampling of carcasses. All positive findings are traced back to farm of origin and investigated by DARD officers.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether her Department has made any assessment of the effect the fishing operation undertaken by the Mv Margiris will have on fish stocks available to the Northern Ireland fishing fleet. (AQW 50563/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department has not made any assessment of the effect of fishing operations carried out by the Margiris. This is a Lithuanian registered vessel which fishes for pelagic species. It is currently operating off the west coast of Ireland outside the jurisdiction of my Department. The vessel has no fishing opportunities in waters where our fleet operates.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline (i) the process for appointing the Agri-Food Strategy Board; (ii) the independence of the Board collectively; and (iii) the independence of individual members of the Board to fulfil the role.

(AQW 50589/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill:

- (i) The Chair and industry members of the Agri-Food Strategy Board (AFSB) were appointed on merit following an open competition conducted in accordance with the spirit of the CPANI Code of Practice. This included the presence on the assessment panel of a CPANI affiliated independent Panel Member. The criteria used to appoint members were as follows:
- A proven track record of contributing successfully at Board level to the strategic direction of a complex organisation;
  - A proven ability to work at a strategic level with stakeholders from different perspectives to agree a common strategy and evaluate and monitor progress against agreed targets; and
  - A good knowledge of the issues facing the local economy and a good understanding of the strategic issues facing the local agri-food industry.

I made the appointments jointly with the DETI Minister.

In line with the CPANI guidance, a public appointee may be reappointed for a second term subject to evidence of effective performance, continued adherence to the principles of public life, and a willingness to continue in post. The AFSB Chair and members were reappointed for a further 2 year term until 19 February 2017.

There are also 4 ex-officio members of the Agri Food Strategy Board, appointed as representatives of DARD, DETI, and Invest NI.

- (ii) The Chair and industry Members were appointed on the basis of their skills and experience to develop a strategic plan for the agri-food sector, rather than to ensure that specific sectors, or elements of the supply chain were represented. They act independently from the Departments.
- (iii) As part of the appointment process Members committed to uphold the seven principles of public life as defined by the Committee on Standards in Public Life, which commit to independence through selflessness, integrity, objectivity, accountability, openness, honesty and leadership.

Members also committed to disclose all actual or potential conflicts of interest to DARD or DETI as they arise. DETI/Invest NI and DARD's internal procedures to deal with such issues are sufficiently robust to guard against any actual, potential or perceived conflict in relation to any of the industry members.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what actions her Department has taken to improve uptake of the cycle to work scheme. (AQW 50593/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Cycle to Work Scheme is now an established NICS wide scheme and continues as an open ended scheme which has been available to all Civil Servants since February 2013.

The scheme was fully advertised at its launch and further promoted to all staff through features in an NICS wide publication and through the HR Connect website. Ongoing promotion at NICS level is not carried out as the scheme has become well established across the NICS, including the Department of Agriculture & Rural Development.

My Department has not undertaken any additional promotion of the Cycle to Work Scheme over and above that carried out centrally by the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP).

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when Binevenagh Forest will be open for recreational pursuits.

(AQW 50633/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Binevenagh forest already delivers significant recreational and social benefits and is popular for many outdoor activities such as leisure walking, hill running, cycling and organised mountain bike events.

The potential exists for further development particularly through working with other recreational and tourism providers and my officials in Forest Service will be pleased to discuss working in partnership with recreation providers who wish to develop additional outdoor recreational facilities at Binevenagh Forest.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 50191/11-16, whether her Department meets costs or provides compensation in respect of stolen or missing cattle.

(AQW 50660/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department does not meet costs or provide compensation in respect of stolen or missing cattle.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when the rural Business Investment Scheme (BIS) will open for applications; and how her Department is disseminating information on the rural BIS to potential applicants.

(AQW 50680/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Local Action Groups (LAGs) are currently developing their Local Development Strategies which are to be submitted to DARD by 31st December 2015. Once the strategies have been approved and contracts are in place the LAGs will be able to open calls, hopefully early in the new year.

It is the responsibility of the LAGs to hold funding workshops, this is the first stage of opening for applications. At these events LAGs will advise potential applicants on eligibility and the pre application documentation that they need before applying for funding, such as a business plan. Funding workshops will be advertised by the LAGs using local press, media, social media and any business and community networks. Once workshops are complete in a LAG area the LAG will advertise that it is open to receive online applications. My Department will also provide information on calls for applications through the DARD website and the LEADER facebook page.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her Department's definition of a rural village, including the maximum population size and proximity to an urban centre.

(AQW 50681/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: For the purposes of the NIRDP, rural areas are defined as all those areas identified outside the statutory development limits of those towns and settlements with a population in excess of 5,000 inhabitants. To allow for a more flexible approach my Department does not apply any further definitions below 5,000. This can be further defined by Local Action Groups if they wish, however they must provide a rationale within their Local Rural Development Strategy to support this. Where the thirty miles per speed limit starts is used to define where the boundary of any settlement starts.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail her monitoring round bid of £2.0m to deliver essential ICT support developments required for Common Agricultural Plan Reform, including the Environmental Farming Scheme and Geo-Spatial Development; and how the success of this bid would benefit farmers.

(AQW 50717/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: This bid is for the delivery of essential ICT to support developments required for CAP Reform. The bid will be used for the design and development of ICT systems to support 2016 area based scheme claims, including Agri-environment schemes. DARD must put in place a Geo-Spatial Aid Application (GSAA) to meet mandatory EU uptake targets. This will improve the 2016 application process and reduce the risk of non-compliance.

The success of this bid would help ensure that farmers' 2016 payments are made in a timely manner and that essential claim functionality is in place.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 49704/11-16, how education and training programmes to improve efficiency and increase resilience to market volatility are being made available by her Department; and how many of the 157 dairy type farms in East Londonderry have engaged with this type of programme.

(AQW 50744/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department, through the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE), offers a range of training and education programmes to all dairy farmers in East Derry. In the current year, in recognition of the issues facing dairy farms as a result of the low milk prices, a series of on-farm workshops and technical meetings have been organised by CAFRE. The focus has been on feed efficiency and finance as well as the importance of financial planning and cashflow management. All of the dairy farmers in the area received an invitation to attend one of the training events. I can confirm 38 farmers from East Derry took up the offer this year and 54 dairy farmers attended training last year.

From 1 April 2015 to 17 November 2015, 19 dairy farm businesses have completed full financial benchmarking, and CAFRE is working with a further 16 dairy businesses that have either started, or are interested in starting, the benchmarking process. CAFRE advisers are dealing with a range of technical and business queries on an on-going basis including budgeting, farm cashflow, winter feeding and dairy cow fertility. A number of the farms are receiving one to one assistance from their adviser.

Knowledge transfer through Business Development Groups (BDGs) is a new training programme which is funded through the 2014-2020 Rural Development Programme. It will recruit up to 3000 like-minded farmers in group sizes of 15-20, and it aims to improve technical efficiency and business competence. I anticipate that the Groups will consider the systems of milk production which will deliver long-term sustainability for the farm family and improve resilience to price volatility. I would encourage all the dairy farmers from East Derry to apply to this Programme.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of farm diversification in the last five years; and how her Department is supporting farm businesses to diversify in order to increase resilience against income and market volatility.

(AQW 50745/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Under Axis 3 LEADER of the NIRDP 2007-2013 some 605 farm diversification projects were funded, receiving almost £15.2m in grant aid. This when matched funding is taken into account resulted in a total investment in farm families and rural areas of £33.7m over the five years of the programme. This led to the creation of 389 new jobs in rural areas and 162 brand new businesses being set up.

Under the Priority 6 LEADER Measures of the NIRDP 2014-2020, up to £27m will be available under the Rural Business Investment Scheme, to all rural businesses including farm families. This funding will allow for new non farming rural businesses to be setup or expanded, including farm diversification businesses. This investment has the potential to further increase the number of rural jobs, with a target of 700 being set within the programme. Having the funds under one scheme means there are greater potential funds available for farm diversification if the businesses come forward.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 49045/11-16, for her assessment of the number of farmers under the age of 30; and how young people are being encouraged and supported to invest in agri-businesses to ensure the future sustainability of this sector.

(AQW 50746/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The last time data on age within the farm labour force was collected was under the EU Farm Structure Survey (FSS) in 2013. Age data was collected in bands and unfortunately the category of interest (under 30) did not coincide with the thresholds used in the survey. The closest available group was under 35, and at that time the number was in the region of 2235. However, CAP reform has moved things on since 2013, with more young people becoming farmers. This should be reflected in the numbers when the FSS is re-run in 2016.

Changes to the CAP in 2015 has seen the introduction of The Young Farmers' Payment (YFP), which provides assistance to young farmers establishing a business for the first time. Applicants must meet the eligibility conditions (which includes being under 40 years of age, having a Level II qualification and being Head of Holding ) to receive a top-up to their Basic Payment, which for 2015 equates to €81.28 per hectare. In addition, those eligible for the YFP can also apply to have the value of their Basic Payment entitlements valued at the regional average value. This will be favourable where they either have no entitlements or entitlements valued at less than the regional average.

The Farm Business Improvement Scheme (FBIS) will be an important part of our new Rural Development Programme 2014-20. I anticipate that it will include a portfolio of measures to support sustainable growth in the sector with the objectives to improve competitiveness and productivity in farming through increased efficiency, up-skilling on farm, farm modernisation and a commitment to working with supply chain partners to improve performance. It is important that young farmers take advantage of this programme of support in the years ahead.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many animal cruelty cases have been brought to court by each local council in the last available twelve months; and what was the outcome of each case.

(AQW 50789/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Local Councils are responsible for enforcing the Welfare of Animals Act 2011 in respect of non-farmed animals. Enforcement action available to Councils includes providing advice, issuing legally binding Improvement Notices or prosecution.

My Department does not hold the information you have requested, however I have sought input from the Animal Welfare Project Board which oversees enforcement of the Act by Councils.

Cases taken forward by Councils in the twelve months from April 2014 to March 2015 are summarised in table below. The information is based on the 26 Council structure.

Animal Welfare Prosecutions taken by local Councils between 1 April 2014 and 31 March 2015

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail what additional cycling and cycle parking facilities have been provided (i) to departmental staff; and (ii) outside departmental buildings to increase the uptake of cycling. (AQW 50806/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: To increase the uptake of cycling DARD has cycle parking facilities provided at AFBI Newforge, AFBI Stormont, CAFRE Greenmount Campus, CAFRE Loughry Campus and Belvoir Forest Park. New cycle parking facilities are also scheduled to be provided at the CAFRE Enniskillen Campus early 2016. All of these facilities are outside departmental buildings and are available for the use of departmental staff.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for a breakdown of the gender balance on each of her Department's publicly appointed boards and arm's-length bodies. (AQW 50827/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: A breakdown of the gender balance on each of my Department's publicly appointed boards and Arms Length Bodies is set out in the Table below.

Public Body	Females	Males
Non Departmental Public Bodies
Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute	3	9
Agricultural Wages Board (Chair and Independent Members)	2	1
Drainage Council	3	10
Livestock and Meat Commission	1	5
NI Fishery Harbour Authority	1	6
Ad-Hoc Advisory Groups
Agri-Food Strategy Board (sponsored jointly with DETI)	1	12
TB Strategic Partnership Group	1	6
Total	12	49

In order to improve female representation on these bodies a range of initiatives to encourage more women to apply for board positions has been introduced, including the examination of selection criteria to widen the pool of candidates and the promotion of public appointment opportunities with organisations representing women. In addition my officials will liaise with the Commissioner for Public Appointments on further actions to address female under – representation.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many Single Farm Payment applications her Department has received in each of the last five years. (AQW 50842/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The number of Single Farm Payment (SFP) applications received in each of the last five years is set out in the table below:

Year	SFP applications
2010	38,489

Year	SFP applications
2011	38,200
2012	37,936
2013	37,643
2014	30,981

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what meetings she has had with the Department for Regional Development on the recent flooding in West Tyrone.

(AQW 50967/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: DARD Rivers Agency is still in the investigation phase on flood recovery and officials from the Agency have had meetings and discussions with Transport NI officials from the Department for Regional Development on a number of issues relating to the recent flooding in West Tyrone.

Rivers Agency Western Regional Engineer was in discussion with an official from Transport NI Bridge Maintenance Section on Monday 16 November 2015 regarding the closure of bridges during flooding events in West Tyrone.

Rivers Agency officials had a site meeting at Clady Co. Tyrone on Tuesday 17 November 2015 with Transport NI officials in relation to actions required for the repair of the collapsed section of parapet wall at Clady Bridge.

Discussions have been held between the Rivers Agency Western Regional Engineer and a Maintenance Engineer from Transport NI on Wednesday 18 November 2015 in relation to a review of the Flood Risk assessment for the Park & Share car park at Crevenagh Road, Omagh which is situated on the floodplain of the Drumragh River.

Rivers Agency's Western Regional Engineer took part in a Conference call on Wednesday 18 November 2015 with the Emergency Planning Officer of Fermanagh & Omagh District Council and other members of the Western Emergency Preparedness Group (WEPG) relating to the response and recovery phase of the flood event. Transport NI officials also participated.

A meeting of the WEPG is scheduled for 2 December 2015 and a discussion and debrief on the effectiveness of the emergency response and recovery will be on the agenda. Transport NI is represented at this group.

Rivers Agency officials will continue to liaise with DRD officials as investigations continue into the recent flooding in West Tyrone.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what works have been carried out, and what works are proposed, by Rivers Agency to address the flooding risk at Townhill Court, Portglenone.

(AQW 50969/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: There are no designated watercourses in the vicinity of Townhill Court, Portglenone, therefore Rivers Agency has no maintenance remit under the Drainage (NI) Order 1973 in relation to this location. Agency staff responded to flooding incidents on several occasions and provided sand bags to alleviate the impact of flooding on residents. Following flooding in 2012, Agency staff carried out post-flood investigations and concluded that the likely cause of flooding in this area is overland flows generated from the nearby grasslands and carriageways. Agency staff also contacted NEELB regarding the gullies within the grounds of Portglenone Primary School as their lack of maintenance may be a contributory factor. I understand Agency staff have arranged a site meeting for Wednesday 25 November 2015 to discuss the matter with you directly. I hope you find this meeting useful.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when Countryside Management payments will be made.

(AQW 50973/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: Countryside Management Scheme payments have been made throughout 2015. My response to AQW 50974/11-16 provides additional detail on this.

Following routine upgrading of the payments processing system, my Department is currently processing agri-environment payments as a high priority.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the (i) percentage; (ii) number; and (iii) value of Countryside Management paid as of 13 November 2015.

(AQW 50974/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: In the calendar year until 13 November 2015, agri-environment scheme payments had been made to 73% or 5,882 of businesses with either an Environmentally Sensitive Areas (ESA) Scheme or a Countryside Management Scheme (CMS) agreement, to a total value £10,753,884.00.

Claims for NI Countryside Management Scheme (NICMS) are initially made on the Single Application Form and relate to the calendar year in which the claim was made. Consequently, claims are paid in the calendar year following the initial claim. In the year until 13 November 2015, 98% or 1,406 claims for the 2014 NICMS claim year had been returned and paid to a value of £5,746,803.20.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on steps to improve farm safety for families and employees.

(AQW 51029/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I am committed to the safety of our farmers, their families and employees. My Department works closely with its partners in the Farm Safety Partnership with the aim of reducing farm accidents and fatalities.

Health and Safety is the remit of the Health and Safety Executive. My Department, as a Partner in the Farm Safety Partnership, in delivering its actions from the Partnership's action plan, for 2014 to 2017, will be including farm safety, as a key cross cutting component, in the delivery of the Rural Development Programme 2014-2020.

As part of the first phase of the Farm Business Improvement Scheme (FBIS) the Business Discussion Groups recently opened and farm safety discussions will be a requirement. In the Farm Family Key Skills element, farm safety will also be an individual key element of the knowledge transfer to farmers, their families and employees.

FarmSafeNet is currently available on-line providing FarmSAFE Awareness training 24/7 to all in the farming industry. It provides valuable information on farm safety. The Farm safety Partnership will also be launching the Make It Safer tool as part of FarmSafeNet. This will allow farmers to take that next step from awareness to assessing the dangers on their farms including making decisions and planning how they can make the farm safer for themselves, their family and employees.

I would encourage all farmers to avail of this training available on-line and also use the Make It Safer tool when it also becomes available over the coming weeks.

The Business Investment scheme (the capital element of FBIS) is being launched next year and farm safety will be a cross-cutting feature of the scheme.

While my Department, through its work in the Farm Safety Partnership, provides a framework of training, awareness and funding, only farmers can take the actions necessary to reduce the dangers on their farms and make it a safer environment for themselves, their families and employees.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline any discussions she has had with local supermarkets in relation to local produce and the prices paid to suppliers.

(AQO 9160/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I have met with representatives of local supermarkets both formally and informally on a number of occasions. While the price suppliers receive for their produce is a commercial matter and is not within my remit, at each opportunity I highlight the need for a fair and equitable distribution of profits throughout the supply chain.

Most recently I met with representatives from the NI Retail Consortium (NIRC) and NI Independent Retailers Association (NIRTA) to discuss milk prices and other supply chain challenges. In addition, I have met with NIRC to discuss beef labelling in the context of mixed origin cattle, and written to retailers highlighting the difficulties faced by vegetable growers and packers.

A significant amount of local produce is sourced by supermarkets for both their stores here and further afield. In the near future I will be visiting two of the major retailers operating in the north, to discuss opportunities for increasing local sourcing, ways the supply chain can be improved, and initiatives to promote local foods during the Year of Food and Drink 2016. I will also use these opportunities to impress upon them the difficult trading conditions suppliers are facing at present and the need for an adequate financial reward to secure the sustainability of their businesses.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline how her Department is supporting local agri-food businesses in pursuing new markets.

(AQO 9159/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: I am committed to opening as many new export markets for our high quality agri-food produce as possible. I visited China for a third time this year to progress trade negotiations on a range of products. My officials visited the Philippines and South Africa for the same purpose. We have recently agreed terms to trade beef with Canada. We are preparing for a range of trade inspections in early 2016 with the aim of accessing both the Australian pork market as well as the US and Philippine beef markets.

Maintaining and improving our animal health status is also vital to securing trade opportunities. On 6 October 2015, the north of Ireland secured formal recognition of Officially Brucellosis Free (OBF) status from the European Commission. This is excellent news, representing a major achievement for our cattle industry and will allow us to continue to roll out progressive and proportionate reductions in our routine surveillance testing, generating savings for both industry and taxpayers.

We have a robust EU Commission approved TB eradication programme in place. This TB eradication programme continues to be a priority to ensure continued access to the export trade by our livestock and livestock products industry, which is worth over £1 billion per year. Looking ahead, I established the TB Strategic Partnership Group (TBSPG) last year to develop a long term TB eradication strategy and implementation action plan. The TBSPG has made significant progress, resulting with the completion of their interim report during the summer. I look forward to seeing the TBSPG final TB Eradication Strategy and Implementation Action Plan in due course.

My Department also sponsors the Regional Food Programme.

Finally, our Livestock and Meat Commission aims to increase red meat consumption in the domestic market.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the timescales for the delivery of the most recent Rural Micro Capital Grant Programme.

(AQO 9161/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: So far this year to date, one hundred and forty six rural community and voluntary groups, spanning a diverse range of interests have benefited from funding from the Rural Micro Capital Grant Programme. These micro grants of up to £1,500 have helped rural groups to improve and develop their facilities and assets, in turn contributing to improved community engagement within their local areas. We are now in the process of paying Phase One grant claims with the first of these being paid only six weeks from the issue of the last Letters of Offer.

The second phase of the Programme closed on 30 October and I am pleased that 316 rural groups have submitted applications for funding to deliver micro projects along the themes of modernisation, health and well being and ICT (Information and Communications Technology). The local Rural Support Networks, who are administering this programme on behalf of my department are currently processing these applications with the intention of issuing Letters of Offer during December. Claims for these second phase projects will be paid during early Spring of next year.

I anticipate that at least 320 rural community organisations will directly benefit from this Programme in its first year of running. I have seen and heard first hand from groups that, despite the value of individual grants being relatively low, the impact of these projects locally and collectively across the north is significant. The Rural Micro Capital Grant Programme is proving to be an extremely effective component of my departments Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation Framework.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail what action is being taken to remove the discrepancy between beef prices paid to local farmers compared to those to farmers in other parts of the United Kingdom. [R]

(AQO 9162/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: As you will be aware, the price paid to farmers by processors in the north is a commercial matter and outside the remit of my Department. However, I do understand the concerns of farmers who feel that they are not getting a fair price for their produce in comparison to their counterparts in Britain.

A 2013 Livestock and Meat Commission study examined the beef price differential. It identified transport costs to Britain, cheaper supply available from the south and seasonality of production - usually with an over-supply in the autumn as the main causes.

These factors are beyond DARD's control. My Department is therefore focussed on those areas where it can assist the local industry. For example, I have led significant efforts to agree voluntary all-island beef labelling solutions which would help address the issues around mixed origin cattle.

DARD is also focussed on enhancing our penetration of existing markets and developing new export opportunities. We have recently agreed terms to trade beef with Canada and are preparing for a range of trade inspections in early 2016 with the aim of accessing the US and Philippines beef markets. In addition, our largest ever Rural Development Programme proposes a range of measures to support improved skills, knowledge, cooperation and capital investment, through the Farm Business Improvement Scheme. We also provide support for education, research and knowledge transfer through the work at the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise and the Agri-food Biosciences Institute.

Finally, I asked the Agri-Food Strategy Board to convene a Supply Chain Forum to bring together farmers, processors, retailers etc to address challenges and opportunities for all sectors. The Forum should provide an opportunity for the beef supply chain to work together to strengthen relationships and support a fair reward for all elements of the chain.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline how her Department is delivering education and industry training to the agri-food industry's future generation of employees.

(AQO 9169/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department, through the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) delivers a number of higher and further education programmes for students wishing to enter employment in the agri-food industry. Education programmes are designed to develop the practical, technical and business management knowledge and skills of students and provide graduates for employment in the agri-food industry.

The education and training programmes at CAFRE encompass the disciplines of Agriculture, Food, Horticulture, Equine and Rural Enterprise. Course provision includes lectures and tutorials with hands-on practical sessions and a number of courses also offer industry placement. Enrolments remain high with 1800 students currently on full-time and part-time programmes.

In addition to the full-time and part-time education programmes, CAFRE also delivers a range of industry training programmes for those already employed in the agri-food industry. In 2014-15, CAFRE delivered industry training programmes to over 12,000 people. The industry training programmes are delivered to the agriculture, food, horticulture and equine sectors across the north. The programmes range from on-farm bespoke training events to nationally accredited courses.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many Single Farm Payments remain outstanding.
(AQO 9170/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Single Farm Payment scheme opened in 2005 and closed in 2014. Over £2.5 billion was paid to farmers in the north of Ireland during the lifetime of the scheme. Over 380,000 applications for payment were made over the ten years of the scheme and 906 currently remain outstanding. These claims remain outstanding due to circumstances outside my Department's control such as probate proceedings, disputes between farmers and farmers failing to provide bank account details to enable payment. My Department has written to all farmers concerned and will process payments as information is returned.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the action she has taken to ensure that the level of Basic Payments do not go below their current level.
(AQO 9171/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill: The Basic Payment Scheme is a key priority for my Department and I have taken steps to ensure that the appropriate level of resources is devoted to processing applications for payment. The payment performance of my Department has improved significantly in recent years, reaching record levels. I recently announced that my Department will make payments in December to 95% of eligible claims. This year has brought significant challenges with the introduction of a set of new schemes though improvements continue to be made and I look forward to further improvements in the years ahead.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how the Programme for Government 2011-16 could be reviewed and modified to better facilitate her Department.
(AQW 50503/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): The Programme for Government (PfG) commitments relating to my Department all remained valid throughout the 2011-16 period.

These were as follows –

- Support 200 projects through the Creative Industries Innovation Fund
- Develop sports stadiums as agreed with the IFA, GAA and Ulster Rugby
- Host the World Police and Fire Games in 2013

A review of the implementation of the current PfG is being undertaken by OFMDFM to identify opportunities to support more effective delivery.

Any extended Programme for Government must continue to focus on tackling disadvantage and promoting social inclusion. This would support my Department in ensuring that culture, arts and leisure activities continue to promote equality, and tackle poverty and social exclusion. It would also assist in ongoing work to prioritise funding to ensure that where possible it is directed towards those who are most in need.

I would also hope that a new Programme for Government acknowledged the commitments given at St Andrews and would therefore prioritise the bringing forward of an Acht na Gaeilge – an Irish Language Act – in order to support the Irish Language and all those who speak it across the north.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of funding her Department has allocated to sports clubs within the East Belfast constituency during the past financial year, broken down by sport.
(AQW 50590/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In the financial year 2014/15, Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, allocated £43,799 Lottery funding through the Active Awards for Sport programme to sports clubs within the East Belfast constituency as detailed at Annex A. This small grants programme is primarily aimed at grassroots community based sport.

In addition, my Department provided £570 to City of Belfast Boxing Academy in East Belfast through the Greater Village Regeneration Trust (GVRT). This payment was made in April 2015 under the Together Building a United Community cross community sports project that my Department leads on.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what engagement her Department has had with sports clubs within the East Belfast constituency in the past year.

(AQW 50591/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In the financial year 2014/15, Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, provided £43,799 Lottery funding through the Active Awards for Sport programme to sports clubs within the East Belfast constituency. This small grants programme is primarily aimed at grassroots community based sport.

In addition, Sport NI has engaged with various sports clubs within the East Belfast constituency through the delivery of its Active Communities and Active Clubs programmes. These programmes provided opportunities for club development, governance advice and support.

Sport NI is also currently working with 30 sports clubs in the East Belfast area who are at various stages in attaining their Clubmark Accreditation.

Furthermore, DCAL Officials have been working closely with the Belfast Giants and the Odyssey Trust on the delivery of legacy activities around the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Festival of Ice Hockey (also known as 'Friendship Four'). The legacy activities include the Giants and students from the Boston Universities working with schools and clubs from the East Belfast constituency on educational and sporting initiatives.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what actions her Department has taken to improve uptake of the cycle to work scheme.

(AQW 50653/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Work Scheme is established NICS wide and has been available all year round to Civil Servants since February 2013.

In DCAL, the scheme is advertised to staff through the Department's Staff Brief and will be featured in the next edition.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 50028/11-16, whether the (i) formal investigation; and (ii) report has been completed; and when she expects these discussions to conclude.

(AQW 50775/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) The formal investigation into the elver mortalities at the ESB facilities at Ballyshannon in April 2014 has been completed;
- (ii) Discussions on the release of the report on the cause of the elver kill has been completed and I understand that it will be released to the public on the 1st December 2015.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail what additional cycling and cycle parking facilities have been provided (i) to departmental staff; and (ii) outside departmental buildings to increase the uptake of cycling.

(AQW 50808/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) My Department introduced showers and separate changing rooms with lockers to Causeway Exchange when it moved to the building in 2011, with the specific aim of facilitating cyclists. There is also a secure storage room for cycles in the building.
- (ii) At the Public Record Office there are showers and lockers plus a storage yard for cycles. The Fisheries premises at Bushmills, Castlewellan, Movinagher, Portadown and Riversdale do not have dedicated cycle amenities but do have plenty of storage areas where the parking of cycles is facilitated.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for a breakdown of the gender balance on each of her Department's publicly appointed boards and arm's-length bodies.

(AQW 50828/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: A breakdown of the gender balance on the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure's publicly appointed boards and arm's length bodies is detailed in the following table:

Body	Gender breakdown
	Male	Female
Armagh Observatory and Planetarium (AOP) – Board of Governors	13	0
AOP – Management Committee	9	2
Arts Council NI	9	6
Libraries NI	10	7
National Museums NI	7	7
NI Museums Council	6	7
NI Screen	8	5
Sport NI	4	1

Some appointments to AOP's Board of Governors and Management Committee, and NI Museums Council's Board of Directors are not made via a public appointment process and are outside of my control.

In relation to AOP, I am responsible for appointing one individual onto its Board of Governors and six individuals onto its Management Committee, with other members representing organisations such as the Church of Ireland and Queens University, Belfast.

In relation to the NI Museums Council, I am responsible for appointing three individuals onto its Board of Directors, with other Directors representing organisations such as National Museums NI, local councils and local universities.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) what funding her Department and its arm's-length bodies have provided to Outburst Queer Arts Festival; (ii) to outline the purpose of such funding; and (iii) what funding went towards the staging of The Gospel According to Jesus Queen of Heaven.

(AQW 50865/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Arts Council has provided the following funding to Outburst Queer Arts Festival over the past three years:

Year	Amount £	Fund	Purpose
2015/16	40,000	Lottery Project Funding	To fund the annual multi-disciplinary arts festival, plus one-off events throughout the year and community programmes.
2014/15	35,500	Lottery Project Funding
2014/15	10,000	Small Grants	To deliver a new piece of theatre (DAMAGE by PJ O'Reilly) at the 2014/15 festival.
2013/14	29,100	Lottery Project Funding	To fund the annual multi-disciplinary arts festival.
2013/14	3,769	Equipment	Purchase of video, IT and digital musical equipment to enhance project delivery.

In general terms, Arts Council Lottery Project and Small Grants funding is provided to assist organisations to deliver arts projects which contribute to the growth of arts in the community for new and existing audiences and which reflect the diversity of the north's society and culture. The purpose of the Equipment Programme is to enable organisations to purchase equipment or carry out refurbishments which will enhance their artistic services.

DCAL also provides funding to festivals through the local Council administered Community Festivals Fund (CFF). The following funding was awarded to Outburst Queer Arts Festival through Belfast City Council's CFF programme in the past three years. Please note that these figures represent the total amount awarded, which includes Council match funding.

Year	Amount £	Fund	Purpose
2015/16	*7,000	CFF	To fund the annual multi-disciplinary arts festival.
2014/15	5,400	CFF
2013/14	8,018.70	CFF

* This is the amount allocated by Belfast City Council in their 2015/16 letter of offer and may differ from the final amount claimed by the organisation.

No funding was specifically allocated for named events within the 2015/16 Outburst Festival.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 50028/11-16, (i) whether the formal investigation has been completed; (ii) whether the report has been completed; and (iii) when she expects these discussions to conclude.

(AQW 50966/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) The formal investigation into the incident has been completed.
- (ii) The report on the incident has been completed.
- (iii) Discussions on the contents of the report into the cause of the elver kill have concluded and as per my response to AQW 50775/11-16, I understand that the report will be made public on the 1st December 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 50742/11-16, to address part (i) of the original question.

(AQW 51097/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I was aware of the 2015 Féile an Phobail but not of this particular event in advance of its opening.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 50742/11-16, whether she will launch an investigation into the breaches of the Equality of Opportunity and Good Relations Commitment, and further seek to recoup funds from the organisers.

(AQW 51100/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have no plans to launch such an investigation.

The 'Remembering Quilt', which was on exhibition at St Mary's, is an important and moving way for families to express their grief and in some cases, the circumstances of the death of their loved ones.

As the opportunity to participate in the project was open to all who had lost a loved one due to the conflict, I see no breach of equality obligations or good relations commitments.

You may wish to see the full quilt on the Relatives for Justice site – web address below.

<http://relativesforjustice.com/services/remembering-quilt>

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 50742/11-16, whether she or any of her departmental officials received an invitation to this event; and if so (i) on what date was it received; and (ii) whether any officials attended.

(AQW 51101/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Neither myself in my capacity as Minister or any of my officials received an invitation to this event. No-one attended the event in an official capacity on behalf of DCAL.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the Framework for Sign Language.

(AQO 9178/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Sign Language Roadmap Review process and my meeting with the mother of a Deaf child earlier this year highlighted shortcomings in the provision of, and access to, services for Deaf people and families with deaf children. Following that meeting I was determined to work to improve the lives of Deaf people and their families.

I have recently written to my Executive colleagues to advise them of my intention to bring forward an Executive paper outlining my Framework of policy proposals to support improvements in access to services for Deaf sign language users and their families.

This Framework will improve the lives of our Deaf citizens, including deaf children and their families. It will target resources at a community that experiences high levels of inequality and social exclusion. This community has long called for better access to public information and services and the Framework will place Sign Language at the heart of our efforts to improve lives.

Early years' intervention must be a priority to redress the academic under achievement and poor life outcomes experienced by previous generations of Deaf people. The provision of free British and Irish Sign Language classes for families with Deaf family members will enhance communication skills from an early age and promote social inclusion within the family as a starting point.

We are in the unique position of having two indigenous Sign Languages. This offers us an opportunity to develop our Irish Sign Language links with the south of Ireland such as those between our Deaf organisations. For example, the British Deaf Association and the Irish Deaf Society share common aims and membership of the World Federation of the Deaf. We can also share expertise and learn lessons such as the benefits that Deaf Village Ireland in Dublin brings to the Deaf community in the south.

Likewise, we can support our universities to develop closer links with for example, Trinity College Dublin in the south and with renowned British Sign Language seats of learning at University of Edinburgh and Lancaster University to develop Sign Language linguistic and cultural research and development.

The British Deaf Association make a valid point when they ask: Why must Sign Language users be the only linguistic minority which has to declare themselves as disabled to gain limited access to services in their language.

Let me be clear, there are no statutory protections for Sign Language. I want all members to join me in helping Sign Language users and the parents of deaf children to play a full, active and equal role in our society.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on initiatives to provide support to boxing clubs outside Belfast.

(AQO 9177/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department and Sport NI have been able to provide both practical and financial support to established boxing clubs across the north of Ireland, including to boxing clubs outside Belfast.

This has been achieved through Sport NI's Boxing Investment Programme, which will see Lottery funding of three point two seven million pounds invested across the sport. In addition, under the City of Culture Legacy Programme, my Department is investing a further one million pounds of exchequer funding for boxing in Derry.

The aims of the Boxing Investment Programme are to help the sport address the needs of boxing clubs around club development and sustainability, the provision of suitable facilities and the provision of boxing equipment. A Club Development Manager has worked with a large number of clubs to enable them to meet governance standards.

Ninety four clubs have received a range of boxing equipment valuing almost one hundred and seventy thousand pounds; and two point five million pounds has been allocated to take forward capital works for the premises of forty boxing clubs, twenty of which are based outside Belfast.

The one million pounds exchequer funding under the City of Culture legacy has so far delivered boxing equipment, valued at one hundred and twenty thousand pounds to Derry County Board and seven boxing clubs in Derry. The remainder of this funding will see three of these boxing clubs in Derry also benefiting from capital works to their premises.

I can also confirm that a further three boxing clubs, based outside Belfast, are set to benefit from phase one of Sport NI's Sports Facilities Lottery Fund.

My Department and Sport NI are also working with a number of other organisations to improve facilities for boxing clubs. This has secured partnership funding for a number of boxing club projects. For example, joint funding with Department of Social Development for St Joseph's Boxing Club in Derry and partnership funding with Newtownabbey Borough Council to refurbish Monkstown Boxing Club.

My officials are also working with officials from the Department of Social Development, Department of Education and local district councils to identify suitable premises for a number of boxing clubs and to provide support as required.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the support her Department is providing to the arts sector, following the 8 per cent in-year reduction to the Arts Council's budget.

(AQO 9183/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have agreed to meet with a number of arts organisations over the coming weeks and I met with members of the Board of the Arts Council, including the Chair, and members of the Executive to hear at first hand what the effect of this funding reduction is likely to be and what impact this would have on the sector's ability to deliver access to the arts for all.

I will continue promoting the benefits of the arts and trying to secure more funding, not only for the arts, but for all cultural services that deliver to our people.

I will also keep on doing what I can to broaden the access to and availability of arts and culture for everyone.

That is why I launched, yesterday, a consultation on a strategy for culture and arts. I hope this consultation will help me to make a resounding case for appropriate and sustainable funding for arts and culture as we move forward.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what involvement she has when her Department's arm's-length bodies are setting their forward work plans.

(AQO 9184/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department's Arm's Length Bodies' forward work plans are contained in their annual business plans.

My Department works closely with all of its arm's length bodies during all stages of the business planning process. The planning process commences in the autumn of each year with a business planning meeting between the Departmental sponsor branch and the arm's length body. This meeting is also attended by my Department's Corporate Strategy Unit to ensure that key Departmental objectives – especially those relating to Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion – are strongly reflected throughout the arm's length body's business plan. Each ALB then drafts its plan.

A final draft of the business plan is submitted for scrutiny. My Officials scrutinise the plan to ensure it:

- is of a high standard;
- covers the key elements of the business of the ALB;
- focuses on delivering key departmental objectives including Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty, and Social Exclusion; and
- Contains SMART targets which are challenging and adequately resourced.

When my officials are content with the above, each plan is submitted to me for final review and approval.

When reviewing each plan, I look specifically for assurance that the ALB will deliver on its statutory functions and focus as much of its resources as possible to delivering front-line services and contributing significantly to my key objective of Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion.

Where necessary I will request that an ALB amends its plan if, in my view, it needs to place more emphasis on delivery of particular Departmental objectives.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the Arts Council's five year strategic plan for the arts which includes the potential development of a major regional art gallery.

(AQO 9180/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Arts Council's Strategic Plan Ambitions for the Arts 2015-2018 is available in full on the Arts Council's website has three main themes:

- Champion the Arts;
- Promote Access; and
- Build a sustainable sector

A target in the plan, under the 'Champion the Arts' theme, was 'To undertake an economic appraisal for a Dedicated Gallery for the North of Ireland by 2014/15'. A draft appraisal has been prepared and the way forward is still under consideration.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the proposed redesign of Casement Park to comply with planning and safety regulations.

(AQO 9181/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: There remains a strong resolve within the Ulster Council GAA to develop a regional stadium at Casement Park. I share that commitment.

Since the JR decision, the GAA have studied the judgement in order that the new planning application fully addresses and take into account the points raised in the judgment.

A significant amount of work has taken place in relation to the implementation of the lessons learned following the JR decision and also to implement the recommendations from the recent project assessment review (PAR). I am delighted that the PAR confirmed that the Casement Park project is achievable.

In line with the PAR recommendations, a new Independent Chair has recently been appointed to the Safety Technical Group (STG). The new Chair is currently holding a number of one to one meetings with all the STG members and the first full STG meeting has been convened for the end of November 2015. It is worth noting that all STG members have confirmed their commitment to actively participating to ensure a robust safety compliant stadium can be achieved.

A robust and detailed programme has being produced by the GAA which takes account of the major tasks associated with the successful delivery of the Casement Park Stadium. This includes the submission of a new planning application, traffic management arrangements and community engagement.

It is of course a matter for the GAA, but I would expect that a new planning application will be submitted by the end of June 2016.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what preparations her Department has undertaken to ensure that the arts will be adequately represented in the new Department of Communities.

(AQO 9182/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Executive decisions on restructuring will result in the most extensive reorganisation of the departmental system since 1999.

The changes will involve a reduction in the number of departments from 12 to 9, the renaming of most departments and a re-allocation of some departmental functions, so that the Executive appointed after the 2016 Assembly election will be on a nine-department basis.

DCAL's functions will be integrated into three of these new Departments. DCAL's responsibility for inland fisheries will transfer into the Department for Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs. The responsibility for Inland Waterways will transfer to the Department for Infrastructure. And the majority of DCAL's functions will form a key part of the Department for Communities.

In addition the Department for Communities will contain DSD functions, the Employment Service and Economic Inactivity Strategy from DEL, Local Government and Built heritage from DOE, Debt Advice and the Financial Capability Strategy from DETI and a range of functions from OFMDFM including some responsibilities for children, older people and the Social Investment Fund.

As part of this restructuring no functions are being done away with and no policies terminated, so all functions in relation to arts will continue to be represented in the new Department for Communities.

My officials undertake regular engagement with all of the Department's Arms Length bodies. Workshops and meetings have already taken place with the Arts Council to discuss the Departmental restructuring and the opportunities this will provide to help ensure that as wide a range of the community as possible, particularly those suffering from poverty and disadvantage, are able to access the benefits delivered from participation in the arts.

My officials are represented at all levels across the Restructuring Programme to ensure that the benefits of culture, arts and leisure remain embedded at the heart of our civil service.

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the SportNI board.

(AQO 9185/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As members are aware, nine members of the Sport NI Board resigned on 6 July.

I commissioned an open competition to appoint up to five new members to the Board. The competition is being taken forward in accordance with the Commissioner for Public Appointments 'Code of Practice for Ministerial Public Appointments'.

Interviews with candidates have concluded, and the next step is for me to select new Board members from those candidates deemed suitable for appointment following the interview process. I expect these new appointments to be made in December.

Following the resignation of nine members, I acted swiftly to ensure that the Board continues to operate effectively, until new members can be appointed.

Following an Interest Circular seeking volunteers throughout the NI Civil Service, I can confirm that three Senior Civil Servants were co-opted to provide advice and support to the remaining Board members. These volunteers are also providing additional support by sitting on a number of sub-committees, including the Audit and Risk Assurance Committee.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when the members of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure were informed of the Culture Partnership Programme.

(AQO 9186/11-16)

Ms Ní Chuilín: CAL Committee members were fully aware of my intention to support a Cultural Programme to coincide with the 2013 World Police and Fire Games.

A written briefing with details of the programme and the Cultural partners was provided on 25th June 2013 and the Committee was briefed on bids for subsequent Cultural Programmes on 5th June 2014 and 2nd June 2015.

Department of Education

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education, following acceptance of their letter of offer, whether schools that incur expenditure on the Delivering Social Change Shared Education Signature Project, will have those funds taken out of their school budget if they don't fully comply with the statutory assessment process.

(AQW 50616/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): All schools that have signed their letter of offer have accepted the terms and conditions of funding. I am currently in negotiation with teaching unions regarding the assessment process and am hopeful of a speedy resolution that would negate the situation outlined.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of times the Teaching Appointments Committee of the Education Authority met in the last twelve months.

(AQW 50644/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education does not employ teachers, and as such is not directly involved in employment matters.

The Education Authority has advised that the Teaching Appointments Committee of the Education Authority has met 49 times since becoming operational on 1 April 2015.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail how much the Education Authority has spent on facilitating the Teaching Appointments Committee in the last twelve months.

(AQW 50645/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education does not employ teachers, and as such is not directly involved in employment matters.

The Education Authority has spent £3,645 from 1 April 2015 facilitating the Teaching Appointments Committee.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the daily rate of pay or expenses allowance available to members of the Teaching Appointments Committee in the Education Authority.

(AQW 50647/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that Attendance Allowances are payable to ELB-TAC Members only at the following rates:

Attendance at a TAC for up to 4 hours	£22.00
Attendance at a TAC for more than 4 hours	£30.39

No other member of a Teaching Appointments Committee (TAC) receives separate payment or attendance allowance for attending a TAC.

Travel expenses, on a mileage basis, as appropriate, are payable to:

- Board Members (1 in attendance at each TAC)
- ELB-TAC Members (up to 2 in attendance at each TAC)
- Principal Representatives (up to 2 in attendance at each TAC)

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many meetings of the Teaching Appointments Committee in the five Education and Library Boards took place in each year since 2010.

(AQW 50648/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The number of meetings of the Teaching Appointments Committee in the five Education and Library Boards in each year since 2010 are detailed in the following table.

Number of Teaching Appointments Committee Meetings in the ELBs

	Belfast	North Eastern	South Eastern	Southern	Western
2010/11	10	11	9	4	15
2011/12	4	13	15	6	14
2012/13	12	14	19	13	9
2013/14	8	18	7	18	5
2014/15	9	12	13	18	10

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail how much each Education and Library Board spent on facilitating the Teaching Appointments Committee in each year since 2010.

(AQW 50649/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The cost of facilitating Teaching Appointments Committee (TAC) in the ELBs in each year since 2010 are detailed below.

Cost of Facilitating Teaching Appointments Committees in the ELBs £

	Belfast	North Eastern	South Eastern	Southern	Western
2010/11	713	2,506	7,750	752	1,309
2011/12	240	2,724	11,922	1,185	1,353

	Belfast	North Eastern	South Eastern	Southern	Western
2012/13	868	2,240	14,641	2,594	659
2013/14	580	3,048	6,812	3,565	608
2014/15	642	2,222	10,109	3,336	1,371

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Education to detail what support is available for pupils with speech and language disorders in primary schools.

(AQW 50686/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) has advised that there is a range of support available for pupils in primary schools with speech and language difficulties including:-

- Advisory support for school staff on meeting the needs of pupils;
- Capacity Building/Training to school staff and parents in a range of speech, language and communication themes;
- Direct intervention for referred pupils on an individual or small group basis;
- Support in specialist speech and language learning support centres. These centres provide opportunities for intensive teaching and speech and language therapy in a language rich environment.

Pupils with significant speech and language problems may also be able to avail of the health trust's speech and language therapy service, usually either through direct therapy or a home/school programme.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education for a breakdown of the period of time that teachers have been suspended in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50699/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education does not employ teachers, and as such is not directly involved in employment matters, including the precautionary suspension of teachers. Teachers are employed by the relevant Board of Governors (BoG) for each school setting. Decisions on precautionary suspension are therefore a matter for the BoG, in conjunction with the relevant employing authority.

Teachers can be placed on precautionary suspension by the BoG, the Chairperson of the BoG or the Principal for any of the following reasons:

- an allegation of misconduct which requires to be investigated; or
- an allegation of a child protection nature; or
- on medical or health and safety grounds awaiting a referral to an Occupational Health physician.

The decision to place a teacher on precautionary suspension, without prejudice, should only be taken after careful consideration and where it is deemed absolutely necessary.

The period of time for suspensions of teachers within the Education Authority and The Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, over the last five years, has been grouped in order to prevent the disclosure of personal information:

Duration of Suspension	No of cases in the past 5 years
0 – 3 months	62 cases
4 – 12 months	24 cases
13+ months	16
Total	102

The period of time varies for each case, as the nature of precautionary suspensions can be very complex and a number of agencies can be involved in resolving issues relating to the suspension, such as Social Services, the Police Service of Northern Ireland and the Occupational Health Service.

Information in relation to Voluntary Grammar Schools and Grant Maintained Integrated Schools is not available for the period requested.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the schools awarded green flag status under the Eco-Schools programme.
(AQW 50907/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Eco-Schools programme is operated by the environmental charity 'Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful'. The principal sponsor is SSE Airtricity, with the Department of the Environment providing funding and support. My department does not endorse or recommend any particular curriculum resource; rather it is up to individual schools to determine how they wish to deliver the curriculum. I understand that there are currently 244 Green Flag Eco-Schools here. Further information can be obtained directly from enquiries@keepnorthernirelandbeautiful.org

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail how much funding his Department has given to the Eco-Schools programme in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50908/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education has not provided any funding to the Eco-Schools programme. The Eco-Schools programme in the north of Ireland is operated by the environmental charity 'Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful'. The principal sponsor is SSE Airtricity, with the Department of the Environment providing funding and support. My department does not endorse or recommend any particular curriculum resource; rather it is up to individual schools to determine how they wish to deliver the curriculum.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many permanent staff employed by the Education Authority transferred in from groups or organisations not affected by the Review of Public Administration.

(AQW 50912/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: In September 2014, the Executive agreed to withdraw the commitment to establish an Education and Skills Authority (ESA) from its Programme for Government 2011-15.

The subsequent amalgamation of the five Education and Library Boards and their Staff Commission to form the Education Authority was not part of the Review of Public Administration (RPA). Therefore, none of the staff employed by the Education Authority transferred from groups or organisations affected by the RPA.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the rationale for appointing Directors in the Education Authority before a permanent Chief Executive had been appointed.

(AQW 50913/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The appointment of Directors in the Education Authority is required to progress the transition from a sub-regional to a functional management structure and thus expedite the regionalisation of the Authority's services. This transition is being overseen by the interim Chief Executive appointed by my Department in accordance with the provisions of the Education Act (NI) 2014. The Act also provides that within one year of the date of its first Board meeting (which took place on 30 April 2015), the Authority shall commence a process to appoint a permanent chief executive. The exact timing of that appointment is a matter for the Board of the Education Authority.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of tribunals in the last twelve months that have had a cost bearing on his Department relating to disciplinary matters involving (i) teaching staff in primary and post-primary schools; and (ii) non-teaching staff in primary and post-primary schools.

(AQW 50923/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: There have been no tribunals in the last 12 months relating to disciplinary matters involving school-based staff for which the Department bore any costs.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) outcome; and (ii) cost of industrial tribunals relating to the suspension of staff in (a) primary; and (b) post-primary schools in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50924/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The employing authorities of staff in primary or post-primary schools in the controlled and maintained sector have advised that there have been no industrial tribunals relating to the suspension of staff in the last five years.

Information is not available relating to staff in voluntary grammar and grant maintained integrated schools where each individual Board of Governors is an employer in their own right.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education whether he will introduce coding for all pupils from year eight onwards.

(AQW 50979/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The flexibility already in place within the curriculum, enables schools to teach coding in any Key Stage, including at primary school level, if they feel it appropriate.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education for an update on the Community Relations, Equality and Diversity fund.

(AQW 51000/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Earmarked funding for Community Relations, Equality and Diversity (CRED) ended in March 2015, with a view to CRED work continuing in the schools and youth sectors through mainstream funding.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the recent survey conducted by the National Association of Head Teachers Northern Ireland that indicates increased levels of stress amongst teachers.

(AQW 51001/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The NAHT did not share a copy of their recent survey with me, so my officials had to request the same which has just been received. As such, I am not in a position to make a fully informed assessment of the findings; however I have stated that I am willing to meet with them to discuss this matter.

The health and wellbeing of school principals, is a matter of the utmost importance to me. I am aware of the health and wellbeing issues faced by all of our teaching workforce, and the importance of addressing them if we are to retain a committed, motivated and healthy teaching workforce.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Education what support is in place to protect the welfare of school principals.
(AQW 51034/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The health and wellbeing of school principals is a matter of the utmost importance to me. I am aware of the health and wellbeing issues faced by all of our teaching workforce, and the importance of addressing them if we are to retain a committed, motivated and healthy teaching workforce.

Most recently, I personally endorsed the reinvigoration of the Teachers' Health and Wellbeing Working Group of the Teachers' Negotiating Committee (TNC).

Responsibility for the health and wellbeing of school principals rests with the Board of Governors as their employers and, where relevant, the employing authorities.

My Department, in conjunction with employing authorities and teaching unions, through the Teachers' Negotiating Committee, continue to work together to tackle issues that impact on teachers health and wellbeing.

In recent years a number of measures have been introduced to provide support to the teaching workforce, which includes school principals. These measures include the development of a strategy for teachers' health and wellbeing; a policy statement on tackling violence and abuse against teachers; a workload agreement; a teachers attendance procedure, which includes a new provision for the recording of incidences of work-related stress; an independent 24 hour confidential telephone counselling service for all teachers provided by Carecall; schemes to enable flexible working, job sharing, career break and temporary variation of contract and also a policy statement on planning, preparation and assessment time. Support mechanisms, where there is concern regarding the effective leadership of a school principal, have also been put in place.

In 2008, in recognition of the particular pressures facing primary school teaching Principals, I introduced funding to enable them to avail of at least two days per week release time from teaching duties to concentrate on their leadership, management and administrative duties.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether there are any plans for compulsory redundancies in the Education Authority.
(AQW 51053/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that it has no plans for compulsory redundancies.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what steps are in place to ensure that best practice from the Education and Library Boards is adopted by the Education Authority.
(AQW 51054/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: A change programme is currently being implemented to manage the transition from five organisations with responsibility for delivery of education services to a single authority. In effecting this transition, business continuity has been the Education Authority's priority. This has been achieved through retention of the existing operational structures and procedures of the former Education and Library Boards (ELBs). These transitional arrangements will remain in place until Directors are appointed to review and redesign the delivery of services within a single structure, building on best practice within the ELBs.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what actions the Education Authority has put in place to address or prevent work related stress for non-teaching staff.
(AQW 51055/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) has advised that various actions have been put in place to address or prevent work related stress.

Line managers will always investigate / engage with staff who have notified them of absence due to work related stress, with the aim of identifying the contributing factors in order to work towards a resolution. The Management of Attendance Policy and occupational health arrangements provide support for staff during absence and in their return to work. For example, this would include identifying where reasonable adjustments are required or where a phased return to work will be beneficial.

Staff welfare officers, employed by the EA are available to provide support to staff and signposting of specialist services which can provide further support for individual staff. In addition, all staff have access to independent, confidential 24 hour counselling support and individual counselling sessions which are provided by Carecall on behalf of EA.

There is also a suite of HR policies in place to support the health and well-being of non-teaching staff. These have been negotiated with the trade unions, and include the right to request flexible working arrangements, career breaks, job share, emergency leave, etc.

Grievance procedures and harassment and bullying policies are in place, as is a whistle-blowing policy for circumstances in which staff require formal mechanisms for having any grievance or concern addressed.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the rationale for advertising Director posts within the Education Authority in the Sunday Times.

(AQW 51056/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The recruitment and selection exercise to appoint five Directors to the Education Authority is of major significance to the Education Authority (EA).

These are important leadership roles and the Directors appointed through this exercise will play a lead role in the planning, development and delivery of a new vision and strategy for the EA. The EA was therefore seeking to attract a pool of high quality candidates.

Roles of such significance are often advertised beyond the north of Ireland. In addition to advertising the roles in the local papers (Belfast Telegraph, Irish News and Newsletter), they were also advertised in the Sunday Times – a market-leading publication for the advertisement of roles of this stature and significance – and in the Irish Times.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) what professional support is provided by his Department to reduce stress among teachers; (ii) whether he has any plans to increase the support available; and (iii) what discussions his Department has had with stakeholders in the last twelve months regarding stress levels among teaching staff.

(AQW 51086/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Responsibility for the health and wellbeing of teachers rests with the Board of Governors as their employers and, where relevant, the employing authorities. It is therefore their responsibility, dependant on the circumstances, to determine the appropriate professional support which should be made available to teachers.

My Department, in conjunction with the employing authorities and teaching unions, through the Teachers' Negotiating Committee, continue to work together to tackle issues that impact on teachers health and wellbeing and this issue is a regular agenda item at those meetings.

Most recently, I personally endorsed the reinvigoration of the Teachers' Health and Wellbeing Working Group of the Teachers' Negotiating Committee (TNC). This group will consider matters in relation to support which is, or can, be made available to the teaching workforce.

In recent years a number of measures have been introduced to provide support to the teaching workforce. These measures include the development of a strategy for teachers' health and wellbeing; a policy statement on tackling violence and abuse against teachers; a workload agreement; a teachers attendance procedure, which includes a new provision for the recording of incidences of work-related stress; an independent 24 hour confidential telephone counselling service for all teachers provided by Carecall; schemes to enable flexible working, job sharing, career break and temporary variation of contract and also a policy statement on planning, preparation and assessment time.

At my request, a series of meetings was recently held between the teaching unions and my Department to discuss strategic matters in relation to education and I can advise that matters regarding teachers' health and wellbeing were raised for discussion by a number of representatives in attendance.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether the Education and Schools Estate Management allocation of £5m announced in the November monitoring round will go directly to schools or be allocated through the Education Authority.

(AQW 51117/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) is responsible for the maintenance of Controlled and Maintained schools and therefore the allocation of £5million for maintenance was made to the EA on 19 November. The EA will select the school maintenance projects to which this additional funding will be directed.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Education for an update on any plans his Department has to make a capital investment in Recarson, Primary School in Omagh, County Tyrone.

(AQW 51131/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Recarson Primary School (PS) has not been included in any of my announcements to date for new major capital builds due to budget constraints. However this in no way implies that the school will not be considered for a new build in the future.

I understand that three capital minor works schemes have been designed to provide Recarson PS with modular accommodation; CCTV & access control and a pick up/drop off area. The current financial situation has meant that these schemes, along with many others, have not been able to progress beyond pre-tender stage at this time. However I will continue to seek funding for these and other outstanding minor works schemes as the opportunities to bid for additional capital resources arise.

Meanwhile the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools has confirmed that it will continue to keep the capital needs of the school under review.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 49980/11-16, to detail what opportunities stakeholders have had to respond to proposals for the new Pathways Fund.

(AQW 51137/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd: Procurement for the Fund Administrator is underway with Central Procurement Directorate (CPD), DFP which is a Centre of Procurement Expertise (CoPE), with the view to having an administrator in place in December 2015. Once the Administrator has been appointed they will liaise with the Early Years sector in relation to the application and assessment process.

The Pathway Fund will be open for applications in early 2016, with the aim of awards being made by April 2016.

The Pathway Fund will be open to all providers of Early Years education (aged 0-4) to apply.

Department for Employment and Learning

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how Pathways to Success projects collect data at an individual level regarding (i) participant characteristics; (ii) the forms of support they receive; and (iii) their destinations, both within projects and following their completion.

(AQW 49439/11-16)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): Pathways to Success project mentors capture data, directly from clients availing of the respective programme, when clients join the project and when they progress to positive destinations. The information obtained from initial mentoring sessions is confidential and remains with the organisation, as very often young people in the NEET (not in employment, education or training) category have multiple barriers to employment. A broad spectrum of support is tailored to suit individual needs e.g. personal advice and mentoring, job search, interview preparation, one to one and group work, short accredited training courses, pre employment programmes and ongoing work placement opportunities.

NEET interventions are intended to guide young people towards playing a full role in their communities and to support the economy, with the skills needed for the future. Project mentors supported young people while they were in training and, afterwards, followed up with the young people into their new destinations and continued to provide mentoring support. Going forward, European Social Fund (ESF) project providers will use Richter scales and other methodologies to track clients. Those who leave and return to the benefit system will be tracked through the Client Management System and with the support of Careers Service staff.

The outcomes achieved from previous Pathways interventions were collected by project organisations and were as follows. The Collaboration and Innovation Fund supported 6,017 young people aged 16 to 24 years who were in the NEET category. During the period January 2013 to March 2015 4,719 young people completed the programme with 692 (12%) moving into employment, 622 (10%) commenced education and 1,702 (28%) started training, representing an overall positive outcome of 3,016 (50%).

The Community Family Support Programme, was designed as a signature project for Delivering Social Change, and was piloted from January to June 2013. It successfully engaged 44 families and, subsequently, was up scaled to 720 families in 2013-15.

Between 2013-2015, a total of 610 families attended a Family Learning Component intervention session, and 458 young people participated on the programme with 293 entering education, training or employment. Further data was captured on those starting (341) and completing (74) essential skills, short accredited training courses (179) and other positive outcomes.

The Local Employment Intermediary Service (LEMIS) supported 1,156 young people in 2014/15. A total of 480 young people moved to positive destinations of education, training or employment. Personal advice and mentoring support and ongoing support 13 weeks after a client secured employment was given to ensure job retention.

My Department's aim is to continue the delivery of customer focused provision through the new NI ESF Investment for Growth & Jobs Programme from April 2015 to March 2018. Good practices delivered under previous Pathways projects will be continued under the new ESF strand to ensure support for the most disengaged young people continues.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail what conversations he has had with St Mary's University College, Belfast regarding the Certificate in Religious Education.

(AQW 49917/11-16)

Dr Farry: The Certificate in Religious Education has featured in my discussions with representatives of St Mary's University College as part of the wider discussions arising from the two stage review of initial teacher education infrastructure and the Aspiring to Excellence report of the International Review Panel.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail what conversations he has had with Bishop Treanor regarding the Certificate in Religious Education.

(AQW 49918/11-16)

Dr Farry: My most recent conversations with Bishop Treanor took place on 5 October 2011 and 25 January 2012. However, more recently, the Certificate in Religious Education has featured in my discussions with representatives of St Mary's University College as part of the wider discussions arising from the two stage review of initial teacher education infrastructure and the Aspiring to Excellence report of the International Review Panel.

I also requested a meeting with the Archbishop of Armagh earlier this year to discuss the Aspiring to Excellence report. Unfortunately the request was declined.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49725/11-16 and given that his Department funds over half the budget of St Mary's University College and issues guidance with each annual grant of funding requiring a shared and inclusive environment, to detail (i) what action he has taken against St Mary's University College given the clear breach; and (ii) whether he intends clawing back funding as a result of the sectarian nature of the exhibition.

(AQW 50666/11-16)

Dr Farry: While my Department highlights, to all higher education institutions, their responsibility to adhere to relevant legislation, assurance of compatibility with this legislation is not within my Department's remit.

I am not considering any claw back of funding as the College has not breached any conditions of funding.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the names and grades of the members of the European Social Fund Quality Improvement Team.

(AQW 50829/11-16)

Dr Farry: There is no specific 'European Social Fund (ESF) Quality Improvement Team' within my Department. There is a Departmental Quality Improvement Team which provides support to all relevant business areas, including ESF. The Quality Improvement Team also acts as a liaison between the ESF projects and the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI), to help implement the quality inspection processes to which all projects will be subject.

The Departmental Quality Improvement Advisor is Angela Whiteside, who is a Grade 6. Angela advises on quality matters across all relevant departmental programmes, policies and projects, including the ESF projects.

She is assisted by an administration team, including one deputy principal (DP), one staff officer (SO), one executive officer (EO2) and one administration officer (AO), who as part of their roles will assist with ESF quality administration tasks.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail what additional cycling and cycle parking facilities have been provided (i) to departmental staff; and (ii) outside departmental buildings to increase the uptake of cycling.

(AQW 50874/11-16)

Dr Farry: The Department of Finance and Personnel manages all buildings for my Department and will provide the requested information in its response to AQW 50877/11-16.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 49600/11-16, to detail the location of the starting and end points of the taxi journey costing £100.20.

(AQW 50905/11-16)

Dr Farry: I have already provided this information in my recent response to AQW 50516/11-16. The figure of £100.20 relates to four separate taxi journeys.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many (i) co-operatives; (ii) community benefit societies; (iii) community interested companies; and (iv) registered charities have been formed with the support of the 11 Social Enterprise Hubs since they were funded under the Executive's Accelerating Social Enterprises programme.

(AQW 51051/11-16)

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The 11 Social Enterprise Hubs are now in their second year of delivery. The hubs offer various types of support including training, mentoring, workshops and advice clinics to enable groups to set up social enterprises.

To date they have assisted groups to form 3 co-operatives, 10 community benefit societies, 82 community interest companies and 21 registered charities. In addition to this, 9 companies limited by guarantee, 1 development trust and 10 companies limited by guarantee with charitable status have been established. Work is ongoing with many other groups who are at various stages of setting up social enterprises.

Department of the Environment

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment what plans his Department has to increase the ability of the Northern Ireland Environment Agency to analyse dead fish to establish the cause of death in the event of pollution.

(AQW 50345/11-16)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): When fish are exposed to lethal concentrations of chemicals it is unlikely that these substances will be accumulated in flesh or organs because of the short exposure time. This is why the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) take water samples as opposed to fish samples.

NIEA laboratories have at their disposal sophisticated 'state of the art' analytical instrumentation with ultra sensitivity. This allows the detection of potential contaminants in water at concentrations from parts per billion to parts per trillion in some cases. The techniques of analysis can be applied to pollution cases and used to determine the types of pollutants present which can assist in identifying potential sources.

DCAL Inland Fisheries staff assist in NIEA investigations of pollution incidents where a fish kill has taken place. Where there is suspicion that fish disease may be a factor, DARD Fish Health is notified as the competent authority for aquatic animal health and a sample of fish may be taken for testing in communication with DARD. In the last five years DCAL Inland Fisheries Group has not sent any fish suspected of being killed to external test laboratories.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the training that must be completed by all taxi drivers before renewal of their required licence, to detail why drivers with a licence that expires between 1 September 2016 and 31 August 2017 are required to complete seven hours training, while drivers with a licence that expires between 1 September 2018 and 31 August 2019 are required to complete twenty one hours.

(AQW 50574/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Periodic training is applicable to all taxi drivers and, in the longer term, a taxi driver licence will only be granted if a driver has undergone 35 hours of such training by an authorised training provider within the five year period of the expired licence.

Rather than require all drivers to undertake the 35 hours, from 1 September 2015, the new requirement is being phased in, in accordance with the table below. This means that drivers can take a more manageable seven hours per year in advance of their Taxi Driver Licence renewal date.

Date of expiry of licence	Training required
1 September 2015 – 31 August 2016	Nil
1 September 2016 – 31 August 2017	7 hours
1 September 2017 – 31 August 2018	14 hours
1 September 2018 – 31 August 2019	21 hours
1 September 2019 – 31 August 2020	28 hours
From 1 September 2020 onwards	35 hours

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 36475/11-15, given this response and the recent recommendation by the Planning Service to approve a Centralised Anaerobic Digestion plant at Ballynakelly, County Tyrone, despite residents objections, to detail what action he will take against the Planning Service following their decision to approve this project against departmental policy, or will he review the original answer to AQW 36475/11-15.

(AQW 50579/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Member will be aware that, following the transfer of most planning functions on April 1, the majority of applications for Centralised Anaerobic Digestion (CAD) will be determined by local councils. The transfer of planning functions is an important aspect of local government reform that gives elected representatives the power to determine what is appropriate for their areas, within a strategic framework of regional policy. It should be welcomed on this basis.

In making a determination on a proposal a council must, however, have regard to the local development plan, so far as material to the application, and to any other material considerations before either granting planning permission unconditionally, subject to such conditions as they see fit or, alternatively, refusing permission.

Material considerations include policy and guidance prepared by my Department and any representations received from the public, including objections to the proposal. They can, however, include any consideration that relates to the use and development of land. The relevance of considerations, and weight afforded to each, is a matter of planning judgement for the decision-taker.

In this instance Mid-Ulster Council, as the local planning authority, has determined that this development should proceed, subject to such conditions as they consider necessary to make it acceptable in planning terms.

I do not consider that it is necessary or appropriate to take any action against Mid Ulster District Council in relation to their decision as the local planning authority.

The member will note that, following the publication of my Department's Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) I have requested that officials commence a review of the strategic planning policy on Renewable Energy, which is of relevance to anaerobic digester development.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to detail all thatched properties that are listed buildings.
(AQW 50581/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The detail of the information you have requested, which has been extracted from the Northern Ireland Buildings Database, is attached and a copy will be placed on the assembly library.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether the consultation requirements currently being conducted under Regulation 20(d) of the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015 for planning application LA04/2015/0301/F where previously conducted under Regulation 16(d) of the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012 for planning permission Z/2012/01387/F for a waste incinerator at Airport Road, East Belfast.
(AQW 50619/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I can confirm that the consultation requirements under Regulation 16(d) of the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012, in relation to planning permission Z/2012/1387/F, were undertaken on 14 January 2013.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, following the appellants' withdrawal of enforcement appeals relating to the unauthorised use of land for the deposit of controlled waste at Mobuoy Road, Derry, to detail (i) whether the enforcement notices remain valid; and (ii) what action his Department will take to ensure these notices are complied with.
(AQW 50652/11-16)

Mr Durkan: These matters relate to ongoing enforcement proceedings and it is not appropriate to comment further pending the outcome of those proceedings.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 48956/11-16, to explain the anomaly between his Department's planning permission which shows a chimney height of 51 metres and the documentation used by the Health and Safety Executive to assess the proposal for a waste incinerator at Airport Road, East Belfast on the basis of information provided by Bombardier which indicates an increase in chimney height to 57 metres.
(AQW 50702/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI) was consulted in relation to the original planning permission (planning ref Z/2012/1387/F). The consultation included details of the planning application, the drawings and the Environmental Statement (ES). The drawings for the application show a 51m high chimney from finished floor level and the ES advises that the chimney stack would "extend to a height of 51m (57mAOD) at the northwest elevation of the building". Therefore there is no anomaly. The chimney height is 51m above finished ground level and can also be described as 57m above ordnance datum (i.e. 57mAOD).

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 42531/11-15, to detail the reasons behind why his Department decided it is no longer appropriate to enter into a Memorandum of Understanding with the Ulster Farmers Union.
(AQW 50733/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Farming is a critical sector for economic success in Northern Ireland. Successful farming depends on a clean and healthy environment. I have been engaging with a range of stakeholders throughout the farming community to promote partnership working between NIEA and the agricultural sector with a view to delivering better environmental outcomes and supporting sustainable and profitable farming.

Key NIEA staff engaged in a number of meetings with the UFU and worked with teams within the Agency to agree key actions to take forward in a Memorandum of Understanding (MOU). At the initial stages of drafting the MOU a proposal was included for a change in the regulatory approach for dealing with low severity farm pollution incidents.

NIEA officials discussed the proposed approach on dealing with low severity with the European Commission Cross Compliance Auditors who indicated that the proposed approach to dealing with low severity farm pollution incidents would be in contravention of the relevant Cross Compliance Regulations and that findings had been made against other Member States for similar approaches. Given this position it was decided not to implement the proposed approach to dealing with low severity farm pollution incidents and the UFU were informed of this by NIEA officials at a meeting on 25 September 2015.

The UFU expressed their disappointment that the proposed approach to dealing with low severity farm pollution incidents would not be implemented but acknowledged the efforts of NIEA officials in their discussions with the European Commission.

The UFU Environment Committee met on 29 September 2015 and decided not to commit to signing the MOU at that time but agreed to pursue the proposed approach to dealing with low severity farm pollution incidents with the European Commission in the first instance through political representatives.

Given the position of the European Commission Cross Compliance Auditors and the decision of the UFU it was decided that probability of signing the MOU was unlikely and therefore should not be pursued further.

NIEA will continue to work in partnership with stakeholders such as the UFU to create prosperity and well being through environmental excellence within legislative requirements.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment, given Ballyholme Beach, Bangor is currently ineligible for the Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful Beach Awards due to its poor water quality, to detail what actions his Department is taking to improve the water quality at Ballyholme Beach.

(AQW 50748/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Ards and North Down Borough Council is responsible for managing Ballyholme beach in addition to the beaches at Groomsport, Millisle and Ballywalter. Bathing water quality at Ballyholme beach has been classified as 'sufficient', not 'poor', under the new standards which came into effect in 2015 under the revised Bathing Water Directive (2006/7/EC). In addition, the water quality at Ballyholme has been improving in recent years.

The classification of 'sufficient' meant that Ballyholme could have been put forward for a Seaside or Green Coast Award, had the Council chosen to do so. They did not put any of the beaches under their management forward for an award in 2015 but will still be able to do so in 2016. Crawfordsburn and Helens Bay, beaches in North Down, which are under the management of my Department were awarded a Blue Flag and Seaside Award, and Green Coast Award respectively.

The Ballyholme bathing water catchment is a complex mixture of urban and rural pollution sources. Northern Ireland Water is currently undertaking a programme of improvement work to upgrade the sewerage infrastructure and key pumping stations in the Bangor area. This is an estimated £10M total investment by Northern Ireland Water in Bangor's sewerage infrastructure. Additionally, the Department has made representations to the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development and to the agriculture sector to highlight the impact of poor agricultural practices on our coastal waters (bathing and shellfish waters).

My Department has been working tirelessly to improve the standards of all our beaches and bathing waters through the Good Beach Summits. These are held twice per year, and an action plan has been developed in partnership with stakeholders to;

- Improve water quality
- Improve beach cleanliness, facilities management and signage
- Keep the public and media better informed
- Support the coastal economy

My Department recently published its 'Better Beaches Report' which sets out the progress made against the above criteria during the period of the Good Beach Summits. A copy of this report will be placed in the Assembly Library.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 42531/11-15, to detail the conflict that exists between the Northern Ireland Environment Agency, the Ulster Farmers' Union and the farming community.

(AQW 50767/11-16)

Mr Durkan: NIEA has no conflict with either the Ulster Farmers Union or the wider farming community. NIEA will continue to work in partnership with stakeholders such as the UFU to create prosperity and well being through environmental excellence within legislative requirements.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of taxis that are licensed as (i) Belfast Public Hire taxis; (ii) taxis for advanced booking only; (iii) public hire taxis outside Belfast; and (iv) taxi buses.

(AQW 50784/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Official statistics detailing the breakdown of licensed taxis are tabulated below.

Public Restricted (outside Belfast)	6,879
Private Hire	1,688
Belfast Public Hire	421
Taxi Bus	224

Notes: Figures sourced from DOE National Statistics and relate to the total current licences as a snapshot at the 30th June 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 49247/11-16 and AQW 49962/11-16, to detail the reasons for the disparity between the two responses provided.

(AQW 50786/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I do not consider there is any disparity between the responses provided to AQW 49247/11-16 and AQW 49962/11-16. In each case, a different question was posed and a factually correct response issued.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the (i) plans in relation to taxi roof signs; and (ii) differences between roof signage for private and public hire taxis.

(AQW 50854/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The forthcoming Taxi Licensing Regulations will bring in a new standard taxi roofsign for Class A and Class B taxis. The regulations will state the sign will be yellow to the front and back, a minimum of 125mm high and no less than 750mm across. The front can display either the name or trading name of the operator or the word "Taxi", whilst the back can display a telephone number or the word "Taxi". It must be capable of holding and displaying a taxi licence plate on the nearside of both the front and rear surfaces, and this must be easily removable. Class B taxis (Wheelchair Accessible) will, additionally, have to display a wheelchair symbol on the sign.

Once the new Regulations are made, the existing legislation for 'public service vehicles' will cease to apply to taxis. As a result, the terms "public hire" and "private hire" will no longer be used; instead, all taxis will fall into one of the new Classes, dependant on the use of the vehicle. However, there will be particular restrictions placed upon Class A taxis (non wheelchair accessible taxis) in Belfast, in terms of plying for hire, thus providing the current Belfast Public Hire taxis with the advantage they currently benefit from.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of detections made for breached taxi operator licensing in the last six months.

(AQW 50855/11-16)

Mr Durkan: During the period 1 January to 30 June 2015 there were 177 detections made for breaches of taxi operator licensing requirements.

Figures from July to September 2015 are subject to the Official Statistics Code of Practice and are scheduled to be published on 17 December 2015.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment whether a total ban on snares would require legislation to be introduced; and if so, to detail (a) whether it would be primary or subordinate legislation; and (b) the timeframe for introducing this legislation.

(AQW 50856/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The use of snares is regulated by Article 12 of the Wildlife (NI) Order 1985.

Any proposal to ban the use of snares would require amendment of that legislation and would require primary legislation.

There is limited time left within the scheduled mandate of the Assembly to take forward primary legislation.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of the Environment for a breakdown of the gender balance on each of his Department's publicly appointed boards and arm's-length bodies.

(AQW 50870/11-16)

Mr Durkan: My Department is responsible for five arm's-length bodies, the membership details of which are attached at Annex A. Public appointment vacancies arising are publicly advertised and circulated to Section 75 representative groups, including a number of women's groups to encourage applications from as diverse a pool of applicants as possible.

Body	Members (Including Chairpersons)	Female	Male	% Female
Council for Nature Conservation and the Countryside	10	4	6	40%
Historic Buildings Council	15	5	10	33%
Historic Monuments Council	15	5	10	33%
Local Government Staff Commission for Northern Ireland	12	6	6	50%
Northern Ireland Local Government Officers' Superannuation Committee (NILGOSC)	13	4	9	31%

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) the last time the Northern Ireland Environment Agency visited the St Lucia Barracks site, Omagh regarding all the buildings within the walled barracks; (ii) whether a report has been compiled on the state of buildings; and (iii) whether he will take steps to ensure the listed buildings are maintained to the required standard.

(AQW 50894/11-16)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) The last time my officials visited St Lucia Barracks was in February 2015, when the senior Conservation Architect for the Omagh area visited the site in the company of the DFP Construction Procurement team. A complete walkthrough of all the buildings was made, options for regeneration discussed and record photographs taken.
- (ii) I understand a transfer condition report was prepared by the Central Procurement Division within the Department of Finance and Personnel over the summer.
- (iii) An official from Historic Environment Division in my Department attended a stakeholder meeting on 17 November 2015 in the Department for Social Development's offices in Omagh to discuss options for the future of the site. At the meeting the official from my Department highlighted the need to carry out regular routine maintenance to the buildings.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to the River Ridge Recycling operation at the site formerly owned by Brickkiln, at Electra Road, Derry, to detail (i) when the waste licence was granted to the new owner; (ii) when the new owner commenced the storage of waste at the site; and (iii) whether his Department was aware of, or consented to, any River Ridge Recycling operations taking place outside of any licensing requirements.

(AQW 50896/11-16)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) The waste licence for the site formerly owned by Brickkiln Wastes Ltd, Electra Road, Derry, currently in administration, was transferred to Coleraine Skip Hire & Recycling Ltd trading as (t/a) River Ridge Recycling on Tuesday, 10 November 2015; and
- (ii) Coleraine Skip Hire & Recycling Ltd t/a River Ridge Recycling has not yet brought any new waste onto the site; and
- (iii) The Department is not aware of, and has not consented to any River Ridge Recycling operations taking place outside of any licensing requirements.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether any waste regulations were being breached by the new owners of the former Brickkiln recycling depot at Electra Road, Maydown, Derry; (a) before the fire took place on 10 November 2015; (b) on the day of the fire; and (c) are currently being breached.

(AQW 50897/11-16)

Mr Durkan: There are two licences for the treatment and storage of wastes on the site at Electra Road, Maydown, Derry and these were transferred on Tuesday, 10 November 2015 from Brickkiln Wastes Ltd, currently in administration, to Coleraine Skip Hire & Recycling Ltd t/a River Ridge Recycling.

- (i) No waste regulations were being breached by Coleraine Skip Hire & Recycling LTD t/a River Ridge Recycling before the fire took place on the 10 November 2015 as they were not the licence holder; and
- (II) No waste regulations were being breached by Coleraine Skip Hire & Recycling LTD t/a River Ridge Recycling on the day of the fire; and
- (III) All waste currently on site was brought onto the site by Brickkiln Waste Ltd, prior to the company entering administration in July 2015. The waste was permitted under the site's waste management licence. However, the licence was suspended on 10 July 2015 because the amount of waste stored at the site was in excess of the permitted quantities. The effect of the suspension was to prohibit the acceptance of any further waste until the excess was removed, and no further waste was accepted after that date. This suspension is still in effect until the excess waste is removed, and therefore no waste regulations are currently being breached by Coleraine Skip Hire & Recycling Ltd t/a River Ridge Recycling.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment (i) whether any Refuse Derived Fuel was present at the site of the fire at the former Brickkiln waste recycling facility at Maydown, Derry; and if so, (ii) to detail when the fuel was brought on to the site.

(AQW 50898/11-16)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) Approximately 10,000 tonnes of mixed household and commercial waste (no hazardous waste) was stored onsite, the majority of which was baled as Refuse Derived Fuel (RDF).
- (ii) All waste currently on the site was brought on by Brickkiln Waste Ltd, prior to the company entering administration in July 2015. The waste was permitted under the site's waste management licence; however, the licence was suspended on 10 July 2015 because the amount of waste stored at the site was in excess of the permitted quantities. The effect of the suspension was to prohibit the acceptance of any further waste until the excess was removed, and no further waste was accepted after that date.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether the waste which caught fire on 10 November 2015 at the River Ridge Recycling depot at Electra Road, Derry was material; (a) left there by the former Brickkiln operation; (b) brought on to the site by the new owners; (c) when it was brought on to the site; and (d) whether it was covered by the necessary waste licensing requirements at the time it was brought on to the site.

(AQW 50899/11-16)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) All waste currently on the site was brought on by Brickkiln Waste Ltd, prior to the company entering administration in July 2015.
- (ii) No waste has yet been brought onto the site by the new owners.
- (iii) All waste on site was brought on prior to the licence being suspended on 10 July 2015.
- (iv) All waste on site was permitted under the site's waste management licence which was suspended on 10 July 2015.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail how much funding his Department has given to the Eco-Schools programme in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50914/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Department has provided total funding of £330,000 to Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful for Eco-Schools (£85,000 in 2013/14, £125,000 in 2014/15 and £120,000 in 2015/16) over the last three financial years.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 49207/11-16, whether Executive approval was secured using emergency procedures.

(AQW 50917/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Pursuant to AQW 49207/11-16, Executive approval was secured by Urgent Procedure on 22 September 2015.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment whether he intends to remove the wind turbine erected at 89 Ballygowan Road, Comber, BT23 5RP in order to meet his obligations to preserve the rural environment.

(AQW 50942/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Planning permission was granted in November 2012 for the erection of a 225kw wind turbine generator on a 31 metre self-supporting mast, at 350 metres north-west of 89 Ballygowan Road, Comber.

If the development has been carried out in accordance with the approved plans there would be no reason to intervene. However, if there has been a breach of planning control, then any enforcement issue will now be the responsibility of the local council, in this case Ards and North Down Borough Council.

If you consider that there is an enforcement issue with the wind turbine, you should address any concerns to the Chief Executive of the Council, who can be contacted at the address below;

Mr Stephen Reid
Chief Executive

Ards and North Down Borough Council, Council Offices, 2 Church Street, Newtonards BT23 4AP.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, given his announcement of a notice of opinion to refuse planning application A/2011/0237/F, to detail why the case officer's report has not been made publicly available on the planning portal.

(AQW 50962/11-16)

Mr Durkan: I can confirm that the case officer's report was available to view on the application file and is now available to view on the NI Planning Portal Public Access.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on research by the Republic of Ireland's Environmental Protection Agency into natural gas from shale which is being partly funded by his Department.

(AQW 50996/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Research Programme consists of 5 inter related projects which themselves are made up of a large number of tasks. A dedicated website has been established to allow interested stakeholders to monitor progress on the research programme. I commend this website to you at www.ugeereresearch.ie.

In summary, the first phase of the research is progressing well, with a second phase required which will be the subject of a supplementary tendering exercise, subject to sufficient funding being available from the funding organisations.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department has assessed the comparisons in carbon emissions between coal and natural gas.

(AQW 50997/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The 5th Assessment Reports published by the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change between September 2013 and November 2014 provide a clear and up to date view of the current state of scientific knowledge relevant to climate change. The report on mitigation sets out the role for unabated fossil fuels and states that the use of the full range of natural gases in a modern gas-fired plant would reduce emissions per kWh by half when shifting from the current world average coal fired power plant, evaluated using 100 year global warming potentials.

The Committee on Climate Change provides independent advice to the UK government and the devolved administrations on tackling and preparing for climate change and reports regularly to the Parliaments and Assemblies on the progress made. The Committee endorses the findings from the Intergovernmental Panel report which are consistent with their stated position on decarbonising the UK energy system.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of times taxi drivers were detected as picking up fares illegally within the Belfast City limits on 12 January 2015.
(AQW 51048/11-16)

Mr Durkan: Our records show that there were no detections of taxi drivers picking up fares illegally within the Belfast City limits on 12 January 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment for a breakdown of the £138.50 charge for a Public Service Vehicle taxi test.
(AQW 51049/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The Public Service Vehicle (PSV) taxi licence fee comprises of 3 main elements:

- Licensing costs                      £85.00
- Testing costs                         £33.50
- Compliance costs                   £20.00

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment whether a phone app or similar device qualifies under regulation and legislation as a taxi meter.
(AQW 51050/11-16)

Mr Durkan: The definition of “taximeter” as set out both in the Measuring Instruments (Taximeters) Regulations 2006 and the Taxis Act (Northern Ireland) 2008, means ‘a device that works together with a signal generator to make a measuring instrument, with the device measuring duration, calculating distance on the basis of a signal delivered by distance signal generator ...’

As such the Department does not consider that the types of smartphone apps on the market, are taximeters.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 49678/11-16, to detail the amount of rates paid on the following university campuses (i) Magee; (ii) Coleraine; (iii) Jordanstown; (iv) Belfast York Street; and (v) Queen’s University, Belfast.
(AQW 50495/11-16)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): The cash receipts received in relation to non-domestic university properties in the (i) Magee; (ii) Coleraine; (iii) Jordanstown; (iv) Belfast York Street; and (v) Queen’s University Belfast campuses in each year from 2010/11 to 2014/15 are given in the table below.

Campus	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Magee	£438,692	£450,947	£460,845	£471,759	£485,243
Coleraine	£780,019	£863,340	£859,020	£859,860	£873,210
Jordanstown	£1,383,641	£1,428,073	£1,463,513	£1,493,888	£1,516,138
Belfast York Street	£42,769	£1,114,397	£352,083	£357,259	£362,555
Queen’s University Belfast	£3,171,626	£3,343,449	£3,845,776	£3,685,506	£3,722,993
Grand Total	£5,816,746	£7,200,206	£6,981,237	£6,868,272	£6,960,138

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of households that receive Disabled Person’s Allowance Rate Relief to meet the special needs of a disabled person.
(AQW 50664/11-16)

Mrs Foster: As at 31st October 2015, there were a total of 11,091 properties for which the ratepayers benefit from Disabled Persons Allowance Rate Relief.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the annual cost of the Disabled Person's Allowance Rate Relief.

(AQW 50665/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The net amount of Disabled Persons Allowance Rate Relief awarded in 2014/15 (the latest complete year for which information is available) was £3.1 million.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what actions her Department has taken to improve uptake of the cycle to work scheme.

(AQW 50723/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The Cycle to Work Scheme is now an established NICS wide scheme with designated contacts in each department. It was re-launched in February 2014 and continues as an open ended scheme available to all civil servants.

The uptake of the Scheme has been very good in the Department of Finance and Personnel and while no additional action has been taken in this regard, the designated contacts in the Department continue to provide advice and guidance to interested staff.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) the current level of Executive debt; (ii) the level of Executive Debt over each of the last 8 years, broken down by source of debt; and (iii) the total level of interest paid on each type of debt in each of the last 8 years.

(AQW 50737/11-16)

Mrs Foster:

(i) The current level of Executive net debt as at 31 March 2015 totalled £1,892,734,040.

The main component of Executive debt is borrowing from the National Loans Fund. This consists of two elements:- borrowing to fund onward lending to councils, schools and the NI Housing Executive; and borrowing under the Reinvestment and Reform Initiative to fund departmental capital expenditure.

In addition the Executive has small amounts of residual debt relating to historic borrowing through Ulster Savings Certificates and Ulster Development Bonds. The sale of Ulster Savings Certificates ceased in 1991, with the opportunity to reinvest in Ulster Savings Reinvestment Issue Certificates which were subsequently withdrawn in March 1997. Ulster Development Bonds were last issued in 1985 with the last claim being made during the 1995/96 financial year.

(ii) The level of debt in relation to each of these components over the last 8 years is provided at Annex A.

(iii) Total interest paid is shown in Annex B.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what consideration is being given to an Executive wide review of the remuneration of board members to create linkage with actual attendance at board meetings and to end remuneration of members who fail to attend board meetings.

(AQW 50771/11-16)

Mrs Foster: DFP does not have responsibility for the policy surrounding when remuneration should, or should not, be paid to board members of public bodies.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the current cost of servicing the Executive's borrowings.

(AQW 50772/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The Executive's Budget 2015-16 showed estimated total interest of £57.5 million payable in 2015-16 in relation to RRI borrowing.

The actual interest paid in 2015-16 will depend on the amounts borrowed and the interest rates applicable at the time. This will be reported in Final Outturn and shown in the Public Income and Expenditure account.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) the employment; (ii) the unemployment; and (iii) the economically inactive figures for each quarter of the last year for (a) Northern Ireland; and (b) each Council Area.

(AQW 50802/11-16)

Mrs Foster: Official estimates of employment, unemployment and economic inactivity are sourced from the Labour Force Survey (LFS). The LFS is a sample survey that is primarily designed to provide labour market information at the Northern Ireland level.

The attached tables 1 - 4 provide details of economic status (relating to those aged 16 or over) for Northern Ireland and where these are available, for each Council Area, for the last four quarters.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail what plans she has to act on the recommendations of the Northern Ireland Law Commission's Report on Land Law Reform, and specifically what plans she has to introduce the Draft Land Law Reform Bill (Northern Ireland).

(AQW 50832/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The position remains as stated in the response to AQW 44141/11-15.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for a list of the non-domestic rates relief schemes and exemptions which are currently available to assist rate payers.

(AQW 50932/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The reliefs and exemptions available to assist non-domestic ratepayers are the same schemes that I outlined in my answer to another recent question from you (AQW 49401/11-16).

These include Small Business Rate Relief, Small Business Rate Relief for Small Post Offices, Empty Shops Rates Concession, Charitable Exemption, Sports and Recreation Rate Relief, Residential Homes Rate Relief, Industrial Derating, Empty Premises Relief, Hardship Relief, Exemption for Rural ATMs and District Rates Convergence.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether any businesses that submitted an appeal to their rates revaluation, following Reval2015, had their valuations increased as the outcome of their appeal.

(AQW 50933/11-16)

Mrs Foster: I can confirm that to date a small number of ratepayers who submitted an Application to the District Valuer following Revaluation 2015, have seen their properties' Net Annual Values (NAV) increase on completion of the case.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether she will consider recalibrating the qualifying threshold for Small Business Rates Relief, following the revaluation of non-domestic rates from April 2015.

(AQW 50934/11-16)

Mrs Foster: I have no plans to recalibrate the scheme for those who fall outside the thresholds.

The NI Centre for Economic Policy (NICEP now UUCEP) in their evaluation of SBRR in 2014 recommended that the scheme should be retained in its current form for 2015/16, and that spend on the scheme should be capped. My predecessor extended the scheme for an additional year in its current form but did not favour capping the scheme which would have resulted in more ratepayers losing support. This contributed to a slight increase in the cost of the scheme this year in terms of revenue forgone.

NICEP also recommended that SBRR should be phased out as wider economic conditions improve. I am now working alongside the DSD Minister and DETI Minister, and am currently researching potential alternatives to the SBRR scheme to come into operation in line with any SBRR phase out.

While this research is being undertaken, subject to final Budget agreement, I am minded to continue the SBRR scheme for the 2016/17 year and would, subject to the final budget propose to take legislation through early in the New Year to extend the scheme.

I laid out the wide range of rate relief available to the non domestic sector, which includes those properties which may previously have been entitled for small business rate relief prior to April 2015 in my response to your AQW 50932/11-16.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what support her Department offers to businesses that received Small Business Rates Relief Scheme prior to the re-valuation of non-domestic rates in April 2015, but that now fall outside the threshold following the revaluation of their rates.

(AQW 50936/11-16)

Mrs Foster: I have no plans to recalibrate the scheme for those who fall outside the thresholds.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of vacant domestic dwellings in the Electoral Areas which were included in the former Dungannon Borough Council.
(AQW 51080/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The numbers of vacant domestic dwellings in the Electoral Areas which were included in the former Dungannon Borough Council are shown in the table below.

Former District Electoral Area	Vacant Residential Properties at 31/10/2015
Blackwater	244
Clogher Valley	277
Dungannon Town	221
Torrent	246
Total	988

Since the introduction of the Rating of Empty Homes legislation on 1st October 2011, the rate liability for vacant domestic properties has been assessed at 100%. There is currently no requirement for ratepayers to inform Land & Property Services that their property is vacant, nor is there any financial advantage to doing so. As such, current information on the number of empty domestic properties may not be complete.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what percentage of bars and restaurants in Ballycastle town received an increase in their rates this year of over 50 per cent as a result of the rates revaluation.
(AQW 51194/11-16)

Mrs Foster: The requested information has been compiled using the wards of Ballycastle and Kinbane as an approximate delineation of the town of Ballycastle. There are within this area, 16 bars including restaurants that have a full on-sales licence, and 14 restaurants that have a partial licence or no licence at all. Of these, 9(56%) of the bars and 2 (14%) of the restaurants had increases of over 50 per cent in their Net Annual Values (NAV) as a result of Revaluation 2015. This data is based solely on NAV and not rate bill. It therefore does not take into account the effect of Small Business Rate Relief, adjusted rate poundages, or eligibility for District Rate Convergence.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average waiting times in each Health and Social Care Trust area for a routine ultrasound.
(AQW 45657/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Information on the Number of patients waiting, in weeks, and the average waiting time, for a routine ultrasound, in each Health and Social Care Trusts, is shown in the table overleaf.

1 Information from Trusts relates to those waiting during week commencing 26th October 2015.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the recent Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission's Inquiry into Emergency Healthcare.

(AQW 46323/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: In 2014 my predecessor commissioned the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) to carry out a comprehensive review of emergency and unscheduled care. The RQIA published its report in July last year and my Department has implemented its recommendations through the work of the Unscheduled Care Task Group. The RQIA is the responsible statutory authority for assessing the quality of care provided by the HSC and not the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what percentage of his budget is dedicated to treating diabetes and diabetes related ailments.

(AQW 48421/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The full costs of treating diabetes and diabetes related ailments cut across the acute and community sectors, as well as Family Health Services. As such, these costs are not readily available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) for his assessment of the new junior doctors contract to be introduced in August 2016; and (ii) how this will impact on the health and wellbeing of both patients and doctors.

(AQW 49845/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Our junior doctors deserve a contract which is fair to them and which recognises the key role they play in delivering services to the people of Northern Ireland. They are a highly valued part of our workforce and I pay tribute to their contribution. I have made clear that I have no desire whatsoever to impose a new contract on junior doctors. An imposed contract would be the worst possible outcome.

I do, however, have sympathy for the Department of Health's desire to improve the existing contract which everyone has agreed is not fit for purpose - but it is essential that we work with our staff to achieve it. Just as imposing a new contract is far from ideal, so too is maintaining a contract that is broadly regarded as being unsatisfactory.

I am fully committed to doing what is in the best interests of the people of Northern Ireland and that means I will not do anything that jeopardises patient safety and achieving the highest standard of care.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many local polio patients are being treated by orthopaedic services.

(AQW 49993/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 49745/11-16, to detail (i) what support is available to local students that have to travel to England or Wales to undertake graduate entry courses in medicine; and (ii) the conditions that determine whether financial support is granted or denied to local students studying graduate entry courses in medicine in England or Wales.

(AQW 50193/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) Northern Ireland students who travel to England and Wales to undertake graduate entry courses in medicine may be entitled only to a maintenance loan for living costs.
- (ii) Provision of finance for second degrees in Northern Ireland is set out in the Education (Student Support) (No.2) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2009 (the Student Support Regulations). Regulations 20, 28 and 57, preclude access to other forms of financial assistance, such as fees loans or maintenance grants, for NI domiciled students who already hold a primary degree and who are undertaking a second degree in an institution within the United Kingdom.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) whether payment arrears owed to fire officers due to a miscalculation of benefits will be paid with their December pension payment; and if not, (ii) what action is being taken to address this matter.

(AQW 50279/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department is currently putting in place arrangements to make payments to the retired officers affected. I expect payments to issue early in 2016.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the provision of a full time Cath Lab at the Ulster Hospital.

(AQW 50399/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The role of the current temporary cath lab sessions at the Ulster Hospital will be considered in 2016. This will take into account the need to build upon the strong specialist skills of the Ulster Hospital team in all cardiac imaging technologies, including cardiac CT.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of social workers (i) employed by the Northern Health and Social Care Trust to work with children and adults with special needs or disabilities; and (ii) that the Northern Health and Social Care Trust (a) has in post; and (b) post that are vacant.

(AQW 50424/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is shown in the table below.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on proposals for a Health Campus in Derry.

(AQW 50483/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My response to your previous question, AQW 48334/11-15, remains unchanged.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he first became aware of the staffing difficulties within the Southern Health and Social Care Trust in relation to the Emergency Department at Daisy Hill Hospital.

(AQW 50484/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Southern Health and Social Care Trust (SHSCT) advised the Department in May 2015 that it was experiencing difficulties in covering medical rotas in the Daisy Hill Hospital Emergency Department (ED) due to difficulties in recruiting middle grade doctors and securing regular locum cover.

I understand that the SHSCT is maintaining a weekly review of the position and is holding regular meetings with the HSCB and PHA.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any discussions he has had with the Southern Health and Social Care Trust to discuss staff succession planning in relation to the (a) Downe Hospital; and (b) Daisy Hill Hospital in the last twelve months.

(AQW 50486/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Staffing matters including succession planning are a matter for employers and are therefore the responsibility of the respective Health and Social Care Trusts.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total number of school nurses employed in each Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50498/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The number of staff graded as school nurses by each Health and Social Care Trust is published annually as part of the HSC Workforce Census, available at <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/statistics/workforce.htm>.

Figures from the last five editions, showing staffing at 31st March (excluding bank staff, staff with a WTE [whole-time equivalent] of less than or equal to 0.03 and members of staff on career breaks) are shown in the table below.

	Belfast HSC Trust		Northern HSC Trust		South Eastern HSC Trust		Southern HSC Trust		Western HSC Trust

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Western Health and Social Care Trust's plans for the future of The Cottages Respite Care facility in Derry.

(AQW 50508/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Western Trust's Short Break Review Project Team is continuing its work to review the provision of residential short breaks for children with disabilities and their families. As part of this, families were notified in September 2015 that they will continue to benefit from service provision at the Cottages Respite Care facility.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he plans to take to reduce the waiting times for cystoscopies within the Western Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 50512/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board continues to work with the Western Health and Social Care Trust (the Trust) to ensure the full delivery of funded urology capacity and to address the increasing demand for urology services. The Trust has recently secured additional funding to put on additional cystoscopy sessions that will reduce the waiting times for all flexible cystoscopies before the end of March 2016.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (a) how data on heart failure is collected and collated; and (b) whether he intends to move towards data collection on patient outcomes relating to heart failure.

(AQW 50550/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information on patients admitted to HSC hospitals in Northern Ireland with a diagnosis of heart failure is collected via the Hospital Inpatient System (HIS). The HIS is a patient-level administrative data source which records information on patients admitted to acute hospitals as inpatients or day cases. Each record relates to an individual consultant episode and contains information on the primary diagnosis and up to fifteen secondary diagnoses for that episode. It is therefore possible to identify consultant episodes with a diagnosis of heart failure (defined using International Classification of Disease codes). During a single hospital admission, a patient may have more than one consultant episode if they are transferred from the care of one consultant to another.

These data are used for a wide range of purposes including informing the management of patient care and outcomes, target monitoring and policy development.

Heart failure is also one of the clinical domains in the Quality and Outcomes Framework (QOF), which was introduced in 2004 as part of the General Medical Services contract. The purpose of the QOF is to reward contractors for the provision of quality care and it helps to standardise improvements in the delivery of primary medical services. Contractor participation in QOF is voluntary. Whilst the primary purpose of QOF is concerned with contractor payments, the data collected is also used for secondary purposes.

In relation to heart failure, the contractor establishes and maintains two registers of patients with heart failure. The HF001 register includes all patients with a diagnosis of heart failure. The second register, which is a subset of register 1, is composed of patients with heart failure due to left ventricular systolic dysfunction. There are also three QOF indicators relating to the initial diagnosis and ongoing management of heart failure. They relate to:

- diagnosis of heart failure confirmed by an echocardiogram/ specialist assessment between 3 months before and 15 months after entering on to register
- patients with a current diagnosis of heart failure due to left ventricular systolic dysfunction who are currently treated with (i) an ACE-I or ARB
- and (ii) who are additionally currently treated with a beta-blocker licensed for heart failure

The Department is also currently conducting an analysis of the management of chronic conditions, including Heart Failure as part of its work on Integrated Care Pathways (ICPs).

The Heart Failure Pathway is one of the areas being considered by the Care Pathways Reform Project. As part of this work, a range of data available across the HSC on heart failure is being collated. The main focus for this pathway is on diagnosis and referral. Further clinical engagement is to be sought in the coming weeks via the regional Heart Failure Network to seek agreement on the starting point of the pathway development work.

The department continually reviews and refines the information available to it to inform policy development and to improve the outcomes for all patients including those with a diagnosis of heart failure.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has given any consideration to the introduction of a cardiac testing programme for the prevention of sudden cardiac death in young people.

(AQW 50575/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The UK National Screening Committee (NSC), which advises the four UK Health Departments on all aspects of screening has considered screening for sudden cardiac death in the young. The most recent evidence review was considered at its meeting in June 2015 when they advised that screening should not be offered at present.

This is a complex issue, sudden cardiac death has many different causes and many of these causes are difficult to detect through screening. There is no single test that can pick up all these conditions and for some of the conditions implicated in sudden cardiac death there is no known or proven treatment.

I will continue to be guided by the expert advice provided by the National Screening Committee.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the administrative costs of the Public Health Agency in each of the last three years; and (ii) for his assessment of whether this spending represents value for money.

(AQW 50604/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The administrative costs of the Public Health Agency (PHA) are set out in the PHA's published annual accounts.

All HSC organisations are required to discharge their functions in the most economic, efficient and effective manner.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on equipping cars used in emergencies with high visibility chevrons.

(AQW 50621/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: All new rapid response cars purchased by the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service are liveried with high visibility chevrons.

Ms Hanna asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to address the disparities in pay received by NHS staff in Northern Ireland compared to the rest of the UK.

(AQW 50679/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Decisions on the 2015/16 HSC Pay Award have not yet been made.

The Department is keen to progress discussions with HSC Trade Unions. These discussions will help inform its decisions

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of Speech and Language Therapists in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 50687/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: At 30th June 2015, the Northern HSC Trust employed 117 (98.8 whole-time equivalent) Speech and Language Therapists. This figure excludes bank staff, members of staff with a whole-time equivalent of less than 0.03, and members of staff on career breaks.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) whether his Department is aware of any complaints in relation to the quantity, quality and nutritional value of food served to patients in some wards in the Belfast City Hospital; and if so (ii) to detail his Department's response to any complaint received.

(AQW 50689/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The Belfast HSC Trust has advised that it received two formal complaints and two enquiries regarding catering at the Belfast City Hospital during 2014/15 and 2015/16. These have been followed up by the Trust in line with their complaints procedures.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the meetings he has had with the British Medical Association over proposed changes to Junior Doctor contracts.

(AQW 50706/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I met with the BMA 1st September 2015 and the Junior Doctors contract was discussed during this meeting. I have further agreed to meet with the NI Chair of the BMA (JDC) Dr Conan Castles to discuss this important issue. I have also instructed my officials to engage in informal discussions with the local BMA to identify and better understand the issues for post-graduate doctors and dentists in training in Northern Ireland and I am keen that these discussions continue.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 48294/11-16, to detail (i) why the information is not readily available; (ii) why the information could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost; and (iii) whether he will now answer the question that was originally asked.

(AQW 50722/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information at this level of detail is not held centrally and its extraction would involve a significant manual and time consuming exercise being undertaken across the Department and all of its Arms Length Bodies.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 50185/11-16, for a breakdown of the incidents for each year under each programme of care.

(AQW 50739/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The HSC Board took over responsibility for the SAI system on 1 May 2010 and information on SAIs recorded by Programme of Care was collected from this date therefore information on Serious Adverse Incidents (SAIs) was not collected by Programme of Care for the period 1 January to 30 April 2010. The number of SAIs for each Trust, broken down by Programme of Care from 1 May 2010 is outlined in the table below.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 50185/11-16, for his assessment of the reasons behind each of the increases across each of the years.
(AQW 50740/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: There has been a considerable effort to raise awareness of the SAI procedure since it was first introduced and to encourage the reporting of incidents so that learning can be identified and shared in an open manner across HSC and a general upward trend in SAI reporting would therefore be anticipated and welcomed.

The most significant increase in the numbers of SAIs reported year on year was in 2013 and 2014 which can be attributed to the introduction of revised SAI guidance in October 2013 which required the mandatory reporting of all child deaths as an SAI.

There was also a marked increase in the number of SAIs in 2014 arising from falls resulting in severe to moderate harm. The rise in incident reports followed advice to prevent falls and increase awareness of the need to report some of these as SAIs.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) what independent assessments have taken place in relation to the Lifeline service; and (ii) the conclusions of any assessment.

(AQW 50764/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) An independent review into the clinical performance of the Lifeline service provider was undertaken in 2013.
- (ii) The findings of the review highlighted best practice; areas requiring further development to enhance contract delivery; areas requiring further clarification before a decision could be made on future determinations; and areas of concern. An action plan was developed between the Public Health Agency (PHA) and the current service provider to address the issues raised within the review. An assurance was given to the PHA by the current provider that all actions had been addressed in October 2015.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the rationale behind replacing a Lifeline counsellor with call handlers that have not been trained in counselling.

(AQW 50766/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: This is one of the proposals on which the Public Health Agency is presently consulting in terms of a future model for the Lifeline service. The new model proposes separation of telephone helpline crisis support from follow-on support services.

The Agency is of the view that formal counselling qualifications are not required for a crisis telephone helpline role where follow-on support services are available that would include counselling. The function of the helpline would be to help the caller deal with the immediate emotional crisis, assess the risk of suicide, and refer or signpost the caller to the most appropriate service for their needs.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what percentage of doctor on call response times fell within the Northern Health and Social Care Trust in each of the last three years,

(AQW 50790/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: GP Out-of-Hours Services in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust area are provided by Dalriada Urgent Care. There are 2 key performance indicators in respect of response times to patients: at least 90% of Urgent Calls within 20 minutes; and at least 90% of Routine Calls within 60 minutes.

Table 1 shows the percentage of responses to urgent and routine calls to Dalriada Urgent Care that have met these response times, in each of the last 3 complete financial years.

Table 1 Dalriada Urgent care, performance against urgent and routine call response time targets

Financial year	Urgent calls, % within 20 minutes	Routine calls, % within 60 minutes
2012/13	93.94%	93.69%
2013/14	94.29%	95.36%
2014/15	93.43%	89.90%

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he intends to make a decision on the business case for the replacement of Cushendall fire station.

(AQW 50797/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: It is anticipated that a decision on the business case for a replacement fire station in Cushendall will be made in early 2016 .

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) what targets have been set for Health and Social Care Trusts to help identify older carers; and (ii) whether any changes have been made to those targets in each of the last three years.

(AQW 50798/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: No targets have been set for Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts regarding the identification of older carers.

The Carers and Direct Payments Act (NI) 2002 imposed a statutory duty on HSC Trusts to make information on the right to a carers assessment widely available, and to notify carers directly, where they become known to the Trust. Departmental Guidance Circular HSS (ECCU) 4/2006 requires that HSC Trust staff are particularly proactive in identifying the presence of older carers.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) how Health and Social Care Trusts inform carers of their entitlement to a carers assessment; (ii) how often assessments are required to be completed; (iii) the number of carers assessments that have been completed in the last twelve months; and (iv) the number of carers, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 50799/11-16)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) Where it appears to a Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust that an individual is carrying out a caring role, legislation requires that the Trust notify the individual of their right to request an assessment. In addition, HSC Trusts are required to make information regarding a carer's right to assessment widely available; this is achieved via the provision of targeted information on Trust websites, partnership arrangements with local pharmacies, GP surgeries and voluntary and community sector organisations, service wide communication strategies lead by the Carer Coordinator in each HSC Trust, and inclusion in staff training programmes to drive the improved identification of carers.
- (ii) Once an individual accepts the offer of a carers assessment, the assessment must be completed at a time and date suitable for the individual.
- (iii) From July 2014 to June 2015, there were 4,566 carers assessments accepted/completed in Northern Ireland. This information can be found published online on the DHSSPS website.
- (iv) The information requested is not available (previous AQW 46898/11-15 refers).

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail GP prescribing rates over the last three years.

(AQW 50847/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: The number of prescription forms and the number of prescription items, for which a prescription was written, dispensed by a community pharmacist, dispensing doctor or appliance supplier, and presented for payment in each of the last three calendar years, are shown in Table 1. Not all prescriptions issued are subsequently dispensed and presented for payment, so the number of prescriptions issued is not known centrally.

The figures shown are presented by the calendar year in which the prescription was paid to the pharmacist; it should be noted that there may be a time lag where prescriptions have been dispensed by the community pharmacist in a particular year but paid the following year. The data provided only covers drugs dispensed in primary care, as drugs prescribed and dispensed in hospital cannot be captured centrally due to the use of different hospital IT systems.

Table1: Number of prescription forms and prescription items dispensed in each of the last three calendar years

Calendar Year	Number of Prescription Forms	Number of Prescription Items
2012	21,424,191	37,841,141
2013	21,677,596	38,661,481
2014	22,235,510	39,687,529

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the waiting times in relation to people with heart failure being diagnosed and accessing specialists in each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 50888/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: My Department collects waiting times for a first consultant-led appointment. Reason for referral, or confirmed diagnosis, is not collected for patients waiting for a first consultant-led appointment. Therefore it is not possible to separately identify patients with heart failure waiting for a first appointment with a consultant cardiologist.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the proportion of (i) hospital admissions; and (ii) inpatient bed days that patients with heart failure accounted for in (a) 2000-2001; (b) 2005-2006; (c) 2010-2011; and (d) 2014-2015.

(AQW 50889/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: Information is available on (i) the proportion of hospital admissions and (ii) the average number of occupied inpatient beds for patients admitted with a primary diagnosis of heart failure and is detailed in the following table;

Year	Percentage of hospital admissions	Average Occupied Beds
2000/01	0.7%	106.6
2005/06	0.6%	116.3
2010/11	0.5%	86.8
2014/15	0.6%	89.0

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to reduce bureaucracy in the Health Service.

(AQW 50902/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I set out my intention to reduce bureaucracy in the Health Service during my recent speech on 4 November at the Leadership Conference in Ballymena. In my speech I announced the remodelling of the administrative structures of the Health and Social Care system through the abolition of the Health and Social Care Board and the transfer of responsibilities to either the Public Health Agency, local Trusts or into my Department.

Other initiatives underway include the reduction in the amount of GP paperwork through a reduction in the number of Quality Outcomes Framework (QOF) indicators to be completed, allowing GPs to spend more time with their patients, and the successful deployment of the Electronic Care Record that brings information together in one place for clinical staff avoiding unnecessary duplication of tests and investigations, to the benefit of the patient while reducing costs.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the Marie Curie report titled Triggers for Palliative Care; and whether he will ensure (i) staff are aware of the local palliative care teams; (ii) that information about palliative care is provided to staff, patients and their families; and (iii) increased access and availability to palliative care for anyone that needs it, including people with multiple sclerosis, Parkinson's disease and acute strokes.

(AQW 51025/11-16)

Mr Hamilton: I welcome publication of the Marie Curie report 'Triggers for Palliative Care' and the important issues it has raised. My Department's palliative and end of life care strategy for adults, 'Living Matters:Dying Matters', was published in March 2010, with a vision that any person with an advanced, non-curative condition is supported to live well and die well irrespective of their condition or care setting. I am pleased that significant progress has been made in the implementation of the Strategy's recommendations to improve palliative and end of life care across Northern Ireland, including in a number of areas highlighted in the Marie Curie report.

The Strategy is also supported by the Transforming Your Palliative and End of Life Care (TYPELC) programme, currently being taken forward in partnership between the Health and Social Care Board, Public Health Agency and Marie Curie. The aim of the programme is to improve the design and delivery of co-ordinated services and enable people with palliative and end of life care needs to have choice in their preferred place of care, thereby improving access to and the quality of palliative and end of life care.

A number of initiatives are ongoing across Northern Ireland to improve palliative and end of life care through better information, education and service re-design. These include the provision of information and support services for patients, families and carers, and education and training in palliative and end of life care for staff working in health and social care. Palliative care service improvement leads within each Trust have supported raising awareness of palliative care services.

Identification and planning for people with palliative care needs has also been supported by the development of the End of Life Care Operational System (ELCOS) to identify people who have palliative and end of life care needs, irrespective of their condition, so that these needs can be appropriately assessed and managed.

Co-working between condition specific services, such as those for people with MS and Parkinson's disease, and palliative care specialists is already in place.

Department of Justice

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 49783/11-16, whether this testing is a condition of residence; and what is the process in place for non-compliance.

(AQW 50552/11-16)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): Alcohol and drug testing are conditions of residence for those offenders who have a court order or licence condition to submit to testing. In addition, other residents may be required by Approved Hostel staff to undergo testing. Such testing will be carried out where hostel staff have a reasonable suspicion that a resident may be under the influence of a substance.

Where a test result indicates the presence of a substance, or a resident refuses to submit to testing, this non-compliance will be notified by hostel staff to the supervising Probation Officer. The Probation Board will decide on a case by case basis what enforcement action is necessary in relation to non-compliance.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice (i) how many judicial reviews were taken against the Prison Service by separated prisoners in each of the last five financial years; (ii) how many were dismissed; (iii) how many were upheld; and (iv) what was the cumulative legal aid costs in each financial year.

(AQW 50659/11-16)

Mr Ford:

Year	No Taken	Dismissed	Upheld	Withdrawn	Ongoing	Leave not granted by Court
11/12	8	1	1	6
12/13	1		1
13/14	4	2		2

15/16 to date	9	3	1	2	3
Total	29	10	4	11	3	1

In relation to part (iv) I will write to you to provide the cumulative legal aid costs when I receive them.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Justice how many children under the age of 18 have been admitted to Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre under the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 in the last year; and for an outline of the efforts that are being made to ensure that such children are not detained within the Juvenile Justice Centre inappropriately.

(AQW 50671/11-16)

Mr Ford: During 2014/15 there were 233 Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order (PACE) admissions to Woodlands JJC involving 130 individual children.

This is a priority issue for the current Scoping Study of Children in the Youth Justice System as the large number of admissions to Woodlands under PACE runs contrary to the principle of custody as a last resort.

The Scoping Study is examining a range of options to address the use of PACE and the current bail legislation, with a view to ensuring more children can be released and supported to remain on bail.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Justice how many children under the age of 18 have been admitted to Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre under the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 in the last year as a result of the absence of a suitable alternative bail address.

(AQW 50672/11-16)

Mr Ford: When a young person is admitted to the Juvenile Justice Centre, the information contained on the Police and Criminal Evidence Order admission form is recorded centrally. It is not always the case, however, that absence of suitable alternative accommodation, or a bail address, is highlighted but this is something that my officials are examining in conjunction with the PSNI.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Justice how many Looked After children under the age of 18 have been admitted to Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre under the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 in the last year.

(AQW 50673/11-16)

Mr Ford: During 2014/15 there were 93 Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order admissions to the Juvenile Justice Centre that related to Looked After Children, involving 50 individual children.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Justice how many Looked After children under the age of 18 have been admitted to Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre under the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 in the last year as a result of the absence of a suitable alternative bail address.

(AQW 50674/11-16)

Mr Ford: When a young person is admitted to the Juvenile Justice Centre, the information contained on the Police and Criminal Evidence Order admission form is recorded centrally. However, it is not always the case that the absence of suitable alternative accommodation, or a bail address, is highlighted. This is something that my officials are examining in conjunction with the PSNI.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the number of children under the age of 18 coming into contact with the criminal justice system that have a mental health concern.
(AQW 50675/11-16)

Mr Ford: Concerns about Mental Health are common in terms of the children who become known to the Youth Justice Agency. The Agency works in partnership with Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS) colleagues and all other relevant agencies, both in the community and in custody, to ensure the best package of support is available to children who require it.

Due to the complex needs of many of the children in contact with the criminal justice system, it is not possible to provide a single figure for those with mental health concerns. However, currently 21% of Youth Justice Agency cases in the community are known to CAMHS, although some children may disengage with the service, or refuse to attend entirely.

In recent months, the proportion of children in the Juvenile Justice Centre with mental health concerns has fluctuated between 45% and 64%.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many fires there have been in prisons in the last five years.
(AQW 50695/11-16)

Mr Ford: There have been 142 malicious and 17 accidental fires in prisons in the last five years.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to list the occasions and types of illegal drugs seized in prisons over the last two years.
(AQW 50696/11-16)

Mr Ford: The table below sets out the number of occasions and the types of illegal drugs seized in prisons in the last two years.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Justice what actions his Department has taken to improve uptake of the cycle to work scheme. (AQW 50728/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Cycle to Work Scheme is now an established NICS wide scheme and continues as an open ended scheme which has been available to all Civil Servants since February 2013.

As part of my Department's Wellbeing Programme, information on the scheme is available to all staff on the Departmental intranet and highlighted at various Departmental wellbeing events such as the Road to Health event.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Justice how many children under the age of 18 in Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre have a mental health concern or have a history of mental health needs.

(AQW 50731/11-16)

Mr Ford: Concerns about Mental Health are common in terms of the children who become known to the Youth Justice Agency. The Agency works in partnership with Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS) colleagues and all other relevant agencies, both in the community and in custody, to ensure the best package of support is available to children who require it.

Due to the complex needs of many of the children in contact with the criminal justice system, it is not possible to provide a single figure for those with mental health concerns. In recent months, the proportion of children in the Juvenile Justice Centre with mental health concerns has fluctuated between 45% and 64%.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to paragraph 2.45 of the Inspectorate report into the unannounced inspection of Maghaberry Prison, what action (i) has been taken; and (ii) will be taken to ensure the complaints system is no longer abused.

(AQW 50735/11-16)

Mr Ford: There is currently a review of the complaints system taking place. The views of all stakeholders, including prisoners, have been sought with the aim of improving the administration of the system.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what was the cost of each of the three most expensive Judicial Reviews funded by legal aid in (i) 2013-14; and (ii) 2014-15; and whether each review was successful.

(AQW 50741/11-16)

Mr Ford: The tables below indicate the three highest value payments made in 2013-14 and 2014-15 in respect of a legal aid certificate granted for Judicial Review proceedings.

2013 - 2014

Case Result	Total Payment

Case Result	Total Payment
Unsuccessful	£134,934.23
Withdrawn	£112,478.29

Case Result	Total Payment
Unsuccessful	£66,257.19

Certificates granted in one year will not necessarily result in payment being made in the same financial year. There is often a time span of several years between certificates being granted and payments being made.

Total costs include VAT (where applicable), costs of solicitor, counsel and disbursements.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 50180/11-16, whether there is any link between staff restructuring and the reduction in executed warrants.

(AQW 50780/11-16)

Mr Ford: The management of police officers is a matter for the Chief Constable. I am committed to respecting the operational independence of the Chief Constable. You may therefore wish to direct your question to the PSNI.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice (i) on what date the most recent tender for provision of security services for the Courts and Tribunal Service was (a) advertised; and (b) awarded; (ii) what is the duration of contract; (iii) how many companies tendered; and (iv) which company was successful.

(AQW 50782/11-16)

Mr Ford: The most recent tender for the provision of security services for the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunal Service was advertised on 18 December 2010 and awarded on 30 March 2012. The current contract is for a three year term with the option to extend for two further years. Twelve submissions were received at Pre-Qualification Questionnaire stage, shortlisted to five at the tender stage and the successful company was G4S Secure Solutions (UK) Limited.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how much funding his Department allocated to the Police Service of Northern Ireland in the last financial year.

(AQW 50791/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Resource and Capital Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) budgets allocated by my Department to the Police Service of Northern Ireland, Northern Ireland Police Fund and Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service during the 2014-15 financial year is shown in the table below:

Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) Budget 2014-15	£k
	Resource DEL	Capital DEL
Police Service of Northern Ireland*	760,817	34,024
Northern Ireland Police Fund	1,627	0
Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service	47,408	2,041

* This includes a funding stream that was allocated by HM Treasury to PSNI via the Department of Justice for national security funding.

The Organised Crime Task Force (OCTF) is a multi-agency partnership which includes a number of Northern Ireland Government Departments, law enforcement agencies, the Public Prosecution Service, Policing Board, the business community and the community at large.

No funding is allocated to the OCTF. Each member body funds its own involvement. My Department provides secretariat support and some support activities such as printed materials, event coordination and planning.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how much funding his Department allocated to the Organised Crime Task Force in the last financial year.

(AQW 50792/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Resource and Capital Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) budgets allocated by my Department to the Police Service of Northern Ireland, Northern Ireland Police Fund and Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service during the 2014-15 financial year is shown in the table below:

Departmental Expenditure Limit (DEL) Budget 2014-15	£k
	Resource DEL	Capital DEL
Police Service of Northern Ireland*	760,817	34,024

	Resource DEL	Capital DEL
Northern Ireland Police Fund	1,627	0
Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service	47,408	2,041

* This includes a funding stream that was allocated by HM Treasury to PSNI via the Department of Justice for national security funding.

The Organised Crime Task Force (OCTF) is a multi-agency partnership which includes a number of Northern Ireland Government Departments, law enforcement agencies, the Public Prosecution Service, Policing Board, the business community and the community at large.

No funding is allocated to the OCTF. Each member body funds its own involvement. My Department provides secretariat support and some support activities such as printed materials, event coordination and planning.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice (i) on what date was a decision taken to contact local government staff offering applications for posts in the Prison Service; (ii) on what date was contact initiated; and (iii) by what means.

(AQW 50834/11-16)

Mr Ford: The decision to inform local councils of vacancies within the Northern Ireland Prison Service was originally taken in March 2013. This action is part of the NIPS Engagement Strategy to encourage applications from all sections of the Northern Ireland community. Through this form of action it is hoped that council representatives will advise those with whom they have contact of this employment opportunity.

Contact with councils for the current recruitment competition for Custody Prison Officers and Night Custody Officers was initiated on 30 October 2015.

Details of the job advertisement were emailed to the council offices.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the report on the unannounced inspection of Maghaberry Prison 11–22 May 2015, why contrary to assurances of progress, the Supporting Prisoners at Risk system remains weak as described in the safety section, S1, of the executive summary.

(AQW 50836/11-16)

Mr Ford: The review of the Suicide and Self Harm Prevention Policy was concluded in May 2015 and circulated for consultation.

The inspection of Maghaberry Prison took place when the policy review was still being carried out. The consultation process is now complete and consideration is being given as to how best to introduce the new policy.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice what impact the proposed changes to legal aid will have on civil cases involving domestic violence.

(AQW 50845/11-16)

Mr Ford: The proposed changes to Legal Aid will have no impact on civil cases involving domestic violence, including the individual's right to apply for the protection of a non-molestation order.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how much funding his Department allocated to Access NI in the last financial year.

(AQW 50858/11-16)

Mr Ford: AccessNI operates on a cost recovery basis. The cost of running AccessNI is offset against the fees it charges for processing disclosure checks. In 2014/15, the cost of operations in AccessNI was £3,001,000, plus £157,000 in depreciation charges. The income generated from fees was £2,895,000. Therefore £263,000 was allocated by my Department to meet the cost of AccessNI.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many staff work in Access NI.

(AQW 50861/11-16)

Mr Ford: There are currently 45 staff working in AccessNI; equivalent to 40.4 full time posts. By 2017, this is expected to reduce to 29.6 full time equivalent posts because of the introduction of on-line checks, an update service and more efficient working process.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many Access NI applications are waiting to be processed.

(AQW 50862/11-16)

Mr Ford: At present, applications arriving in AccessNI are usually processed on that, or the following working day. In respect of Enhanced checks however, approximately 27% of these are referred to PSNI or other UK police forces in line with the relevant legislation for them to conduct their own checks. AccessNI, with the assistance of PSNI and other forces, is exceeding its published targets for all types of applications as set out below;

For applications received in September 2015:

Application	Target	Achieved
Basic	95% within 14 days	99.8%
Standard	95% within 14 days	98.8%
Enhanced	70% within 14 days	95.2% within 14 days
	90% within 28 days	98.2% within 28 days

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Justice to detail the re-offending figures for prisoners released in Northern Ireland convicted of (i) rape; (ii) sexual offences other than rape; (iii) paedophilia; (iv) burglary; (v) supply of drugs; (vi) people trafficking; (vii) drink driving; (viii) armed robbery; (ix) membership of a proscribed organisation; (x) child abuse; (xi) drug possession; (xii) theft; (xiii) money laundering; and (xiv) violent crimes.

(AQW 50863/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice publishes one year proven reoffending rates for offenders who received a non-custodial disposal at court, or a diversionary disposal, or were released from custody within a given financial year.

The information provided is based on the latest published figures which relate to the 2012/13 cohort and, as requested, relate solely to those released from custody. This includes 1,624 offenders, of whom 760 (46.8%) reoffended within one year of release.

For the purposes of answering this question, the reoffending rate is calculated from the first date on which an offender is released from custody per offence category. Each offender is counted only once per category. However, it should be noted that, in the information provided, a single offender may be counted within several categories. This is a result of both the approach to calculating the reoffending rate and the natural overlap between the offence categories requested.

(i) Rape;

The 2012/13 cohort included 13 offenders released from custody following a conviction for rape. Of these, one reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(ii) Sexual Offences other than Rape;

The 2012/13 cohort included 64 offenders released from custody following a conviction for sexual offences other than rape. Of these, six (9.4%) reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(iii) Paedophilia;

Offender information available for reoffending analysis does not specify if an offender is a 'paedophile', nor does it include information on the age of the victim or provide details of the circumstances of the offence.

Information has, therefore, been provided on those who have committed a sexual offence that identifies the age of the victim as a young person under 18 within the wording of the offence. It should be noted this is a proxy and may not include all offenders who have committed sexual offences against young people.

The 2012/13 cohort included 55 offenders released following a conviction for identifiable sexual offences against young people. Of these, five (9.1%) reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(iv) Burglary;

The 2012/13 cohort included 204 offenders released from custody following a conviction for burglary offences. Of these, 129 (63.2%) reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(v) Supply of Drugs;

The 2012/13 cohort included 28 offenders released from custody following a conviction for supply of drugs offences. Of these, eight reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(vi) People Trafficking;

The 2012/13 cohort did not include any offenders released from custody following a conviction for people trafficking.

(vii) Drink Driving;

The 2012/13 cohort included 73 offenders released from custody following a conviction for drink driving offences. Of these, 40 (54.8%) reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(viii) Armed Robbery;

Available offence information does not enable a distinction between armed robbery and robbery offences. The 2012/13 cohort included 117 offenders released from custody following a conviction for robbery offences. Of these, 50 (42.7%) reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(ix) Membership of a Proscribed Organisation;

The 2012/13 cohort included less than five offenders released from custody following a conviction membership of a proscribed organisation, none of whom reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(x) Child Abuse;

Information available for reoffending analysis does not include information on the age of the victim or provide details of the circumstances of the offence.

Therefore, information has been provided in relation to those who have committed a violent or sexual offence that identifies the age of the victim as a young person under 18 within the wording of the offence. It should be noted this is a proxy and may not include all offenders who have committed such offences against young people.

The 2012/13 cohort included 88 offenders released from custody following a conviction for violent or sexual offences against young people. Of these, 19 (21.6%) reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(xi) Drug Possession;

The 2012/13 cohort included 215 offenders released from custody following a conviction for drug possession offences. Of these, 109 (50.7%) reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(xii) Theft;

The 2012/13 cohort included 412 offenders released from custody following a conviction for theft offences. Of these, 260 (63.1%) reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

(xiii) Money Laundering;

The 2012/13 cohort did not include any offenders released from custody following a conviction for money laundering.

(xiv) Violent Crimes

For the purposes of this question, violent crimes have been interpreted as offences which are included in the 'Violence Against the Person' offence category currently in use within the Department of Justice.

The 2012/13 cohort included 745 offenders released from custody following a conviction for Violence Against the Person offences. Of these, 371 (49.8%) reoffended within the one year observational period following release.

Note:

- 1 The methodology used to calculate reoffending rates has been published on the DOJ website.
- 2 Where the denominator is less than 50 a reoffending rate expressed as a percentage is not shown.
- 3 Where the number of offenders in a category is less than five people, the exact number will not be given to avoid identification.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the report on the unannounced inspection of Maghaberry Prison 11–22 May 2015, how many prison adjudications were commenced in each of the last three financial years; and of these how many were (i) upheld; (ii) dismissed on evidence; and (iii) dismissed having timed out.

(AQW 50910/11-16)

Mr Ford: The following table provides a breakdown of all adjudications held, during the last three financial years.

	Apr 12 – Mar 13	Apr 13 – Mar 14	Apr 14 – Mar 15
Guilty	1256	1862	1856
Not Guilty	108	158	159
Dismissed	16	10	40
Withdrawn	277	340	513

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice which prison facility holds, or is equipped to hold, remand or sentenced prisoners who are regarded as criminally psychopathic but not of diminished responsibility.

(AQW 50911/11-16)

Mr Ford: Maghaberry prison has a landing located within Quoile House to accommodate both remand and sentenced prisoners who are considered to be vulnerable or at risk of self-injury. This landing is staffed by prison officers and supported by Healthcare staff employed by South Eastern Trust.

Prisoners with serious mental health illness would be assessed by the Mental Health Team and depending on the diagnosis those identified to have a mental illness may be transferred to an external psychiatric facility. There is no inpatient facility currently in any Northern Ireland prison.

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Justice what is the rate of recidivism of people convicted of paramilitary activity.

(AQW 50931/11-16)

Mr Ford: My Department annually publishes the one year proven reoffending rate for offenders who received a non-custodial disposal at court, a diversionary disposal or were released from custody. The information provided is based on the latest published figures which relate to the 2012/13 cohort.

Information available for reoffending analysis does not specify if an offender has engaged in paramilitary activity, nor does it provide details of the circumstances of the offence. However, as an alternative, information has been provided on all those who have committed an offence that falls under terrorism legislation or identifies 'terrorism' or 'paramilitary activity' within the wording of the offence.

The 2012/13 cohort included nine offenders convicted for such offences, of whom one reoffended within the one year observational period following receipt of a non-custodial disposal at court, a diversionary disposal or release from custody. It should be noted this is a proxy and may not include all offenders who have engaged in offences related to paramilitary activity.

Notes:

- 4 The methodology used to calculate reoffending rates has been published on the DOJ website.
- 5 Where the denominator is less than 50 a reoffending rate expressed as a percentage is not shown.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Justice to detail what additional cycling and cycle parking facilities have been provided (i) to departmental staff; and (ii) outside departmental buildings to increase the uptake of cycling.
(AQW 50952/11-16)

Mr Ford: My Department has not provided any additional cycling and cycle parking facilities. However, my Department has an agreement in place with the Northern Ireland Civil Service Sports Association, whereby staff based on the Stormont Estate who cycle to and from work can avail of shower facilities at the Pavilion free of charge.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Justice for a breakdown of the gender balance on each of his Department's publicly appointed boards and arm's-length bodies.
(AQW 50955/11-16)

Mr Ford: The breakdown of the gender balance on each of my Department's publicly appointed boards and arm's-length bodies is as follows:

Body	Male	Female
Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland	1	-
Northern Ireland Policing Board (Independent Members)	3	6
Office of the Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland	1	-
Probation Board for Northern Ireland	7	5
Royal Ulster Constabulary George Cross Foundation	6	-
Northern Ireland Police Fund	8	2
Police Rehabilitation and Retraining Trust	5	2
Independent Assessor for Police Service of Northern Ireland Recruitment Vetting	1	-
Independent Monitoring Board – Maghaberry Prison	3	6
Independent Monitoring Board – Magilligan Prison	5	5
Independent Monitoring Board – Hydebank Wood College and Women's Prison	4	3
Prisoner Ombudsman for Northern Ireland	1	-
Northern Ireland Law Commission	Positions are currently vacant

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what is the proposed target date for the abolition of preliminary investigations and mixed committals.
(AQW 51005/11-16)

Mr Ford: Committal reform is scheduled to commence in early summer 2016, on an incremental basis.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what is the current cost in legal aid of the combined cases referenced 14/020710 in the Fermanagh/Tyrone Court Division, shown by (i) law firm; (ii) junior counsel; and (iii) senior counsel.
(AQW 51006/11-16)

Mr Ford: No claims have been received from any of the legal representatives. At this point in time there is insufficient information to enable the Legal Services Agency to provide an estimate of the costs.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Justice what allocation of the £2 billion extra money from the Chancellor for cyber security is designated for the PSNI.
(AQW 51013/11-16)

Mr Ford: Funding for Northern Ireland's share of the recent announcement by the Chancellor for cyber security is not known at this point in time.

It is expected that any additional funding allocated to Northern Ireland will be allocated to the NI Block, for funding decisions to be taken by the Executive.

Any requirement for specific bids for cyber security funding from PSNI, will, subject to business case approval, be made to the Executive for consideration.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the legal aid paid in the case of Jimmy Seales and the subsequent appeal, broken down by (i) law firm; (ii) junior counsel; and (iii) senior counsel.

(AQW 51043/11-16)

Mr Ford: The fees provided relate to the legal representatives acting for Jimmy Seales.

The total fees paid (including VAT) in relation to Magistrates' Court proceedings are:

First Solicitor	£3,841.86
Second Solicitor	£10,456.07
Total	£14,297.93

The total fees paid (including VAT and disbursements) in relation to Crown Court proceedings are:

Solicitor	£53,037.23
Junior Counsel	£16,423.20
Senior Counsel	£31,018.08
Total	£100,478.51

The total fees paid (including VAT) in relation to Court of Appeal proceedings are:

Solicitor	£57,254.40
Junior Counsel	£72,000.00
Senior Counsel	£108,000.00
Total	£237,254.40

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what was the cost of installing the Skype system, sound-proof suite and the security cameras at HMP Maghaberry.

(AQW 51044/11-16)

Mr Ford: The cost of installing the Skype system in Maghaberry was £2400. There is no sound proof booth and there were no extra security cameras installed.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Justice what action his Department has taken on the issue of equal pay for the PSNI, the Department of Justice and the Northern Ireland Office personnel following the passing of an Assembly motion calling for urgent action on this issue on 12 October 2015.

(AQW 51045/11-16)

Mr Ford: I have always been, and remain, fully supportive of a centrally-driven and centrally-funded solution. This is a matter for the Department of Finance and Personnel, not the Department of Justice, as it affects staff across a number of Departments and other bodies.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 50738/11-16, whether there is a specific policy, procedure or understanding that separated prisoners are dealt with differently; and why convicted separated prisoners are dealt with differently than other non-separated prisoners.

(AQW 51099/11-16)

Mr Ford: Separated prisoners are managed in line with the recommendation of the Steele Report. This regime has necessitated differences in the regime delivered to separated and integrated prisoners.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice for what purpose will the money raised through the sale of the Woburn site in Millisle be used.

(AQW 51119/11-16)

Mr Ford: The Capital budgets for 2016-17 have not yet been allocated to Departments. Any capital receipts from the sale of Woburn House will be considered as part of the wider Departmental capital spending plans for 2016-17.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Justice how many convictions have been secured for offences relating to the theft of dogs, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 51134/11-16)

Mr Ford: The information requested is not available from datasets held by my Department. Prosecutions and convictions data are recorded for generic offences, such as theft, robbery or criminal damage and datasets held by my Department currently do not contain information on items stolen or circumstances in which offences were committed. Therefore, it is not currently possible to identify from the data held whether a conviction relates specifically to the theft of dogs.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 50785/11-16, what consideration has been given to out-sourcing separated prisoner service delivery to an agency specialising in high security provision.

(AQW 51174/11-16)

Mr Ford: This has not been considered as an option.

Department for Regional Development

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the consultation carried out on the introduction of a residents' parking pilot scheme in the Rugby Road and Lower Malone areas of South Belfast; and the results of the consultation.

(AQW 50260/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen (The Minister for Regional Development): I would refer the member to the answer provided to his recent question AQW 50189/11-16.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 49858/11-16, how this applies in prohibited bus lanes.

(AQW 50333/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The only bus lane in Belfast where motorcycles are prohibited under the bus lane legislation is East Bridge Street. However, in the knowledge that motorcycles only have rear number plates and the fact that the fixed CCTV camera is forward facing, the mobile camera unit could be deployed at this location if the illegal use of the bus lanes by motorcycles becomes a problem.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) to list the dates on which monitoring or inspection of Killyhevlin WasteWater Treatment Works has taken place since May 2011; (ii) on which occasions was it found that full compliance with the drinking water standards had not been met; and (iii) for an update on the Consideration of Provisional Enforcement Order that was placed on NI Water in 2011 with regards to Killyhevlin WasteWater Treatment Works.

(AQW 50337/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Northern Ireland Water (NI Water) monitor the quality of the water produced by Killyhevlin Water Treatment Works (WTW) on a daily basis as required by the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2007.

There have been 47 contraventions of the drinking water standards at Killyhevlin WTW since January 2011. Details of the occasions when full compliance with the drinking water standards have not been met are set out in the table below.

Through the regulatory compliance process, the Drinking Water Inspectorate (DWI) for Northern Ireland took enforcement action against NI Water and issued a Consideration of Provisional Enforcement Order (CPEO) against the company in October 2011, for contraventions of the regulatory standards for the taste and odour parameters in respect of the Killyhevlin WTW supply area. The CPEO was officially closed by the DWI in December 2012 following completion of the agreed undertakings. As a result of this enforcement action, NI Water agreed to install new filters at Killyhevlin WTW. Seven new filters were installed in June 2015 and since then there have been no taste, odour or pesticide contraventions within the Killyhevlin water supply area.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on plans to introduce residents' parking schemes outside Belfast.

(AQW 50341/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has progressed Residents Parking Schemes in Antrim and Londonderry, as well as Belfast.

However, given the difficulties in securing public support for schemes in Belfast and the costs associated with the implementation of a scheme in Londonderry and in Antrim, and taking into consideration my Department's current budgetary pressures, I wish to take some time to consider my Department's policy and also the difficulties with implementation before making any decisions.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on plans for a new Belfast Transport Hub at Great Victoria Street, including an estimated completion date.

(AQW 50400/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Translink is working closely with my Department, the Strategic Investment Board and Belfast City Council on the plans for the new Belfast Transport Hub to ensure the development is fully realised as a major public transport and development opportunity.

The project was awarded TEN-T European Funding in September 2014 for a technical development study and my Department has also provided funding to allow for detailed design, master planning and Outline Business Case (OBC) to be progressed.

The design options that are now being explored show the inclusion of eight platforms and 26 bus stands to cater for the on-going expected growth in bus and rail passenger journeys within Northern Ireland. The new Hub will be able to cater for 18 million passenger journeys by 2040 and will facilitate quicker Enterprise services to Dublin.

A considerable number of environmental surveys and investigation works have been undertaken on the existing site and engagement is on-going with the surrounding communities.

An OBC is being prepared for early 2016, with a possible planning application later in 2016 and an estimated completion date of 2021 but this is clearly dependent upon OBC approval and affordability considerations.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the proposed new taxi ranks in Belfast and the upgrading of the taxi ranks at Donegall Square North.

(AQW 50406/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My officials met with representatives of the public hire taxi drivers in Belfast on 10 June 2015. At this meeting the taxi drivers put forward a proposal to amend how the taxi ranks in Donegall Square (in and around Belfast City Hall) operate. My officials agreed to consider this proposal and consult with the main stakeholders to gauge their views.

Belfast City Council and the PSNI have rejected the proposal. Consequently, my Department is considering if the proposal can be amended to overcome their concerns.

In relation to other potential sites for taxis ranks in Belfast, my Department has been consulting with key stakeholders and frontagers on five separate potential sites with a view to proceeding to the formal legislative stage in the New Year.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether any man power, material or vehicle reductions will be made to the winter gritting schedule.

(AQW 50416/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I can confirm that there has been no change to policy to reduce the winter service programme for this season.

During this winter season, some 300 staff are available every day to salt the road network that serves around 80% of daily traffic flow in Northern Ireland. The full winter service fleet of 130 gritters and eight specialist snow blower vehicles are operational and available to be deployed to help drivers and road users cope with wintry conditions.

Salt barns and stockpiles have also been filled to maximum capacity of over 70,000 tonnes. In addition, I already have in place reserve stocks of around 20,000 tonnes. I have also made provision for further supplies, if required, at the rate of around 15,000 tonnes per month.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Regional Development for her assessment of the lighting on the Comber Greenway.
(AQW 50426/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I am considering proposals for a number of improvements to the Comber Greenway as part of the Bicycle Network Plan for Belfast and this could include lighting on the route. Following consultation on the plan, I am willing to give consideration to whether lighting is appropriate along the entire route taking account of environmental concerns and the needs of adjacent properties and neighbours.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) for details of the proposals and indicative costs and benefits of the motorway improvement schemes at (a) the M1 between Stockman's Lane, Junction 2, and Blaris, Junction 8; and (b) the M2 between York Street, Junction 1a, and Sandyknowes, Junction 4; and (ii) when his Department will make a decision on these schemes.

(AQW 50462/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: A high level feasibility study on how best to maximise the potential of motorway hard shoulders as running lanes was recently completed for my Department. My officials have advised me that it is not possible to provide the information as you have requested because costs for individual sections of the scheme cannot be extracted from this report. However, the report identified the following schemes as producing positive benefits for hard shoulder running:

- a) Both carriageways on the M1 from Junction 1 (Broadway) to Junction 8 (Blaris), £30 - £35million indicative cost,
- b) Both carriageways on the M2 from Junction 1 (Duncrue Street) to Junction 4 (Sandyknowes), £25 - £30million indicative cost, and
- c) M2 Foreshore (citybound) – hard shoulder busway, £2 - £3million indicative cost.

Hardshoulder running or “Smart Motorways” are intended to relieve congestion, improve safety and journey times. They have reduced capital construction costs compared to traditional road widening.

Work to date has examined the feasibility of these proposals and the timing of further development work is currently being considered against competing priorities. As work is still at the feasibility stage, costings are provided only as an indication of the likely scale of the works.

In addition, two schemes have been identified by my Department to help mitigate against traffic congestion during the construction phase of York Street Interchange. These are:

- a) Extend the existing M1 city bound busway to the Sprucefield Park and Ride facility by utilising the existing hard shoulder; and
- b) Install a busway on the M2 city bound hard shoulder between Junction 2 (Greencastle) and Junction 1b (Duncrue Street).

The schemes are not yet at a detailed design stage so reliable costs are not yet available however, indicative costs would be £1-£2million for the M1 bus lane extension and £2-£3million for the construction of a bus lane on the M2.

The introduction of both these interim schemes would help to alleviate traffic congestion in and around the York Street Interchange during construction works, by incentivising car users to switch to Public Transport as an alternative means of getting into Belfast. Public Transport users will also benefit from more reliable journey times into the city.

Currently, these bus lane schemes are being developed in parallel with the York Street Interchange and, their continued development is predicated on the York Street Interchange scheme progressing further through the various statutory processes.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline any future plans for the introduction of 20mph zones. (AQW 50464/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department has, over recent years, rolled out an extensive programme of traffic calmed roads, mainly in residential areas. The location of these schemes have been evidentially led and identified from a set of criteria such as speed and volume of traffic, collision statistics and local environmental considerations. These engineering measures ensure that traffic speeds are kept below 20mph and have resulted in a considerable reduction in pedestrian and other vulnerable road user casualties.

An action measure in the Northern Ireland Road Safety Strategy commits my Department to pilot the concept of signed only 20mph speed limit schemes without any additional engineering measures such as road humps. Following consultation between my officials and the PSNI, five test sites were selected for the reduced speed limits.

These are located at:

- The Whitehall area of Ballycastle;
- Langley in Ballynahinch;
- The Rosses in Ballymena;
- Merville Garden Village in Newtownabbey; and
- Belfast City Centre within the Belfast on the Move project area.

All schemes are now functioning with the exception of the Belfast site, which should come into operation shortly. It is intended that these schemes will be monitored to assess their effectiveness or otherwise of reducing traffic speeds and collisions. This will inform a decision as to whether there should be a more extensive roll out of 20mph signed only speed limits across Northern Ireland.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development how many people (i) in Belfast; and (ii) outside Belfast were recorded as cycling in 2015; and how these figures compare to the previous two years. (AQW 50466/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The information is not available in the form requested but the Travel Survey for Northern Ireland (TSNI) collects information on the percentage of people who have cycled in the last 12 months. The most recently available results are from 2011-2013 and these are compared to 2010-2012 and 2009-2011 TSNI results in the following table.

Table 1: Proportion of residents in NI who have cycled in the last 12 months

	Resident in Belfast <sup>1</sup>	Resident outside Belfast	All NI
2011-2013	24%	27%	27%
2010-2012	24%	28%	28%
2009-2011	25%	28%	28%

1. Belfast Local Government District (LGD) based on 26 LGD's

The recently published Belfast Bike Life 2015 (page 5) reports that around 31% of Belfast people cycle although no comparative data is available from previous years.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the new sewerage infrastructure for Millisle.
(AQW 50488/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The £1 million programme of essential improvement work to upgrade the sewerage infrastructure and a key pumping station in Millisle commenced in June 2015 and is progressing well. The pumping station is currently under construction, and the laying of the sewage pumping main is substantially complete with the exception of the final connections. It is anticipated that the overall programme of work will continue until summer 2016.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development when work to upgrade the sewerage infrastructure at Abbey Street, Bangor is due to commence.

(AQW 50490/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The proposed work in Castle Park (Abbey Street) is part of an overall estimated £10 million investment in the sewerage infrastructure in Bangor. Following extensive archaeological investigations by NI Water, major incoming and outgoing pipework to the new pumping station in Castle Park has been granted a route alongside the historic St. Malachy's Wall by NI Environment Agency. This will reduce the impact of the planned work on traffic and local traders in Abbey Street. The work is currently programmed to commence in Spring 2016, subject to statutory approvals and the availability of funding.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development how she plans to change the funding percentages between public transport and roads.

(AQW 50492/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Whilst there has been considerable investment in the transport network over the past decade, there remains a clear need to enhance the levels of investment in transport further. I will continue to make the case for transport and will consider the balance of spend between both roads and public transport as I prioritise investment going forward. The long term allocation of spend will be guided by the Executive's priorities set out in the next Programme for Government, the Comprehensive Spending Review and the next Investment Strategy for Northern Ireland.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development whether her Department has any plans to promote the conversion of the Ballycastle - Ballymoney railway to a greenway.

(AQW 50493/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: In relation to the former Ballymoney to Ballycastle railway line the Member will be aware that the majority of the track bed was sold to numerous parties in and around the mid to late 1950s.

I believe that the development of greenways as traffic-free off-road routes is an area where there is an opportunity for local authorities to take ownership. In order to assist such development, my Department is currently considering the development of a strategic plan for greenways for Northern Ireland. The purpose of such a plan would be to provide a framework for the development of greenways which will assist local councils and other bodies to develop their own schemes.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development what is her Department's projected spend on cycling for this financial year.
(AQW 50494/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The attribution of spend to cycling specifically is not a precise exercise as many projects have benefits for cycling, even if not carried out specifically for that purpose. Equally, there are cycling-related projects which have benefits for walking and other active travel modes in addition to the cycling benefit. Other Departments also invest in projects that have cycling benefit.

It is anticipated that my Department will spend over £2 million on cycling infrastructure, measures and promotion of cycling in this current financial year.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development what is her Department's projected spend on greenways for this financial year.

(AQW 50496/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The Comber Greenway is the only greenway under the ownership of my Department.

There is no projected capital spend on the Comber Greenway in this financial year. The Comber Greenway is maintained by TransportNI's in-house contractor and any actionable defects will be repaired as and when required.

However, I am considering proposals for a number of improvements to the Comber Greenway as part of the draft Bicycle Network Plan for Belfast.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development how much has been spent on greenways in each of the last four financial years.

(AQW 50497/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department invested £75,000 in a new bridge on the Comber Greenway at Ballyrainey Road, Comber in 2011/12. This is the only greenway under the ownership of my Department.

My Department has also provided funding totalling £2.9 million for a number of council greenway projects over the past four years, including two of the recently completed active travel demonstration projects. Details are provided in the table below.

£ million	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Greenway expenditure	0.4	0.4	0.4	1.8

Maintenance work has been carried out by Transport NI's in-house contractor with no spend by way of external contractors. Internal costs for TransportNI Operations & Maintenance section are not readily available.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration has been given the adoption of the alleyway at Olympia Drive, Belfast.

(AQW 50523/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I can confirm the adoption of the alleyway at Olympia Drive, Belfast, has been raised and considered by officials on no less than five separate occasions. The alleyway is not adopted and does not meet my Department's criteria for adoption into the public road and footway network. Officials have estimated the cost of bringing the alleyway up to an adoptable standard. This is likely to be in the order of £50-60,000 and this cost would normally be borne by the frontagers, as the alleyway is not currently in public ownership. In addition, under my Department's current limited Resource funding levels, it is not in a position to increase the long term maintenance burden that would arise from adoption of this alleyway.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development whether Translink busses have been affected by the diesel emissions scandal; and if so, to provide further details.

(AQW 50537/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Translink has confirmed that it does not operate any buses or coaches that are affected by the engine emissions scandal relating to Volkswagen automotive engines.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the Department's responsibility for dealing with flags on street furniture.

(AQW 50548/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: In dealing with flags on street furniture, my Department's primary responsibility is to remove flags or attachments that pose a danger to road users.

Where there is no such danger, my Department acts in accordance with the multi-agency Joint Protocol in Relation to the Display of Flags in Public Areas which was introduced in 2005.

Under the Protocol, when called upon by the lead Agency, my Department provides the access equipment and resources to remove unwanted flags, once agreement has been reached for their removal and where they are not easily accessible.

However, my Department also has a duty of care to its staff, and therefore the safety of personnel tasked with the removal of flags must always be taken into account.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Regional Development under what conditions would NIWater be able to dispose of assets in an auction situation to a lower bidder.

(AQW 50562/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: NI Water has developed policy and guidance to cover the disposal of surplus assets. This requires the company to ensure that it obtains the best price, achieves value for money and maintains high standards of propriety. It is not aware of any conditions where assets would not be sold to the highest bidder at an auction.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development why road closed and diversion signage have remained in place on the Largy Road, Portglenone-Randalstown, for several weeks after the road was reopened.

(AQW 50601/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The 'road closed' and 'diversion' signage, which is currently in place along the Largy Road between Portglenone and Randalstown, is intended to inform motorists of the 'one way' closure currently in place to facilitate the Public Realm works at Main Street, Randalstown.

These works have been ongoing since September this year with 'road ahead closed' and 'diversion' signs being placed along the Largy Road. In addition, a number of Variable Message Signs have been erected along the route to inform motorists of the closure and diversion.

To facilitate carriageway resurfacing, my Department also put in place a road closure at the Largy Road/Taylorstown junction between Monday 28 September and Thursday 1 October. This allowed the existing diversion routes already in use for the Randalstown Public Realm scheme. Temporary signage associated solely with the resurfacing scheme has been removed.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are any plans to provide shower, locker or storage facilities for cyclists at the new halt at Bellarena.

(AQW 50630/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Translink intends to include the provision of a cycle shelter at this location as a variation to the project, subject to the necessary approvals.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the maximum number of bicycles that can be carried on a rail carriage.

(AQW 50631/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Information on the carriage of bicycles is available on the Translink website under the heading NI Railways (NIR) Conditions of Carriage. The website address is: www.translink.co.uk/Services/NI-Railways/NI-Railways-conditions-of-carriage/

The bicycle policy states that:

- All bicycles (subject to the conditions below) will be carried FREE of charge on trains.
- Bicycles will not be permitted on trains prior to 0930 hours Monday to Friday.
- Up to 4 full sized bicycles can be carried at any one time within the designated bicycle area. Space will be allocated on a first come first served basis, in the designated area, and at the discretion of the Conductor. There is no bicycle reservation system.
- There are no travel restrictions nor limit to the number of 'folding bicycles' NIR can carry, provided they are completely folded down.
- Tandems, tricycles, motorcycles, mopeds, motorised cycles and scooters are not permitted on any train.
- Bicycles will not be carried during periods of bus substitution.
- Bicycle parking shelters are available at many of the main stations throughout the rail network.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 48311/11-16, when Bicycle Network Plans for urban areas in North Down will be published.

(AQW 50692/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The indicative delivery schedule in the Bicycle Strategy for Northern Ireland indicates that work will initially be done on developing a Bicycle Network Plan for Belfast. It is planned that this will be consulted on in the near future.

The delivery schedule also indicates that this will be followed by the development of network plans for other urban areas. This will begin in the next financial period.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development how, under the Roads (NI) Order 1993, a person obtains lawful authority from her Department to paint, or otherwise inscribe or affix any picture, letter, sign or mark upon a structure on a road.

(AQW 50698/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Under the Roads (NI) Order 1993 my Department has no powers to consent to or provide lawful authority for the erection or placing of any picture, letter, sign or mark upon a structure on a road.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the (i) amount and the nature of offences; and (ii) removals that have occurred under the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 Part VII 87 (1) and (2) in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50701/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department does not hold information on the number of offences which took place. However, I can provide information relating to offences where action was instigated by my Department.

The table below provides an estimate of the number of signs which were removed under the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 Part VII (1) and (2) in each of the last five years:

Financial Year	Number of signs removed
2010/11	1425
2011/12	982
2012/13	911
2013/14	676
2014/15	788

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the amount of money invested in pension funds for senior management in (i) Translink; and (ii) Northern Ireland Water, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50712/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The tables below provide details on the amount of money paid into pension funds (in respect of Employer pension contributions only) in respect of the Senior Management Teams of both Translink and Northern Ireland Water in each of the last five years. For the purposes of this question, Senior Management Team is being interpreted for Translink as the Group Chief Executive, Chief Operating Officer, Chief HR & Corporate Services Officer and Chief Financial Officer; and in respect of Northern Ireland Water, it is being interpreted as Executive Committee positions up to and including the Chief Executive.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans are in place to increase the capacity of the Belfast-Dublin Enterprise rail service.

(AQW 50713/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The Enterprise fleet has been out of service undergoing a significant refurbishment programme, and in the interim the Belfast – Dublin rail service has been operated by NI Railways and Iarnród Éireann using local commuter trains from within the existing networks which has led to reduced capacity on the line during the project.

However, the first refurbished Enterprise train has just completed its final stages of testing and commissioning and it returned to full service on Monday, 16 November 2015. It is planned that the remaining 3 Enterprise train sets will be back in passenger service by late 2015 or early 2016. This will bring capacity between Belfast and Dublin to the level before the refurbishment programme started.

In addition, in the run-up to Christmas additional trains will operate to Dublin each Saturday at 09:35, returning from Dublin at 18:20.

This project will mean a significantly enhanced customer experience. Longer term plans for the service will be considered going forward in light of passenger trends and both rail company views and financial situations.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development how many incidents relating to motorists using level crossings in an inappropriate way have been reported in each of the last five years.

(AQW 50714/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: The records of vehicle incursions at public road crossings (level crossings) for the last 5 complete calendar years are as outlined below:

2014	83
2013	138

2012	81
2011	96
2010	82

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what financial support has been provided to preserve the history of railways with working locomotives and static displays.

(AQW 50715/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department provides no financial support to preserve the history of railways and static displays but Translink has ensured that railway vehicles of historic importance have been offered to the Railway Preservation Society of Ireland (RPSI), Downpatrick & County Down Railway and the Ulster Folk and Transport Museum.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on plans to install a pedestrian crossing at Holy Rosary Church, on the Ormeau Road, south Belfast.

(AQW 50718/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I understand you have been previously advised that this location does not rank sufficiently highly in my Department's priority list to be included in the current works programme. It remains on the list of potential sites for future consideration when developing programmes of work.

However, officials agreed to resurvey this site to update the assessment. I can confirm this survey is underway and when completed the results will be analysed and the overall priority score for this proposal will be updated.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the reasons for the overcrowding on the Larne line train, in particular at Whiteabbey station in the morning when there are such large crowds that passengers are left behind; and what action she is taking to rectify this matter.

(AQW 50759/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Translink has advised me that since 29 September 2015, NI Railways has been operating a 6-carriage train on the 07:30 service from Whitehead to accommodate demand. It is scheduled to arrive at Whiteabbey at 7.55 am. Regrettably, this service has been reduced to 3 carriages on a number of occasions due to fleet availability.

Whilst the Whitehead service is scheduled to operate as a 6-carriage set there is another service leaving 9 minutes later at 8:04 am from Whiteabbey which is a 6-carriage set (originating in Londonderry).

Translink is hopeful that this is a temporary problem and should ease in the coming weeks when the first refurbished Enterprise train re-enters passenger service, releasing an additional train unit back into the fleet pool.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development when work on the Enniskillen bypass will begin.

(AQW 50776/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: I fully recognise the benefits that a Southern Bypass would bring to the town of Enniskillen and in particular travellers moving in and around the town and can confirm that the preferred alignment for this scheme was announced in June 2015.

I am keen to advance the scheme to the next stage which involves progressing the project through the statutory procedures. It is my intention to take the project to this stage however, the timing of this will be dependent on future financial settlements.

Enniskillen Southern Bypass must compete with other major road infrastructure projects for limited funding resource and I am unfortunately not in a position at this time to give you an undertaking as to when construction of the bypass will begin.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the Accessible Transportation Strategy 2025.

(AQW 50787/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department launched the Accessible Transport Strategy 2025 for public consultation on 28 August 2015. The consultation closed on 20 November 2015.

In developing a draft Strategy for public consultation, my officials consulted with the Inclusive Mobility Transport Advisory Committee (IMTAC) as a source of advice on the issues to be addressed. All responses to the pre-consultation and consultation will be considered when taking forward the Strategy.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the Electricity Supply Board intends to introduce an equivalent flat rate charge of 17 Euros per month for use of the electric car charging points.

(AQW 50959/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: In July 2015 the responsibility for the operation, maintenance and development of the public charge point network for electric vehicles users in Northern Ireland transferred to the Electricity Supply Board (ESB).

The Electricity Supply Board (ESB) has advised the Department that they do not envisage introducing any fee for charging electric vehicles at public charge points in Northern Ireland until at least the latter part of 2016. ESB also indicated that at this stage they cannot be specific about how any fee will be structured as they are continuing to develop products best suited to all users of the Northern Ireland ecar system.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development, given the importance of renewed timetables for the operation of the Strangford Ferry service, whether she will consider offering a 2 or 3 week extension to the present consultation period.
(AQW 51033/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Given the importance of the Strangford Lough Ferry Service within the local area, I feel it is important that any decision on timetable amendments is based upon a full understanding of public opinion on this matter.

As such I would be content to allow a two week extension to the consultation period which will now close on 11 December 2015.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development, in light of two more accidents at this junction in the last few days, when the agreed road safety improvements at the junction of Gracefield Road and Aughrim Road, Magherafelt, will take place.

(AQW 51089/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: My Department considers improvements to the junction of Aughrim Road with Gracefield Road a very worthwhile scheme and has therefore included this scheme in the draft Local Transport and Safety Measures programme for years 2016 to 2018, for the Mid Ulster District Council area.

The timing of delivery of schemes within this programme will depend on the level of funding made available during this period for Local Transport and Safety Measures schemes. Priorities and programmes for 2016/2017 can only be identified once funding levels are confirmed, and this will not take place until early 2016.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development what action is being taken to remedy flooding at Greenisland Railway Station.

(AQW 51120/11-16)

Miss M McIlveen: Translink has advised me that all of the local station drains including a large storm sewer have been opened up and cleaned out to ensure that maximum flows can be achieved.

CCTV investigations of the drains are being undertaken to ensure that there are no blockages or collapses in the vicinity of the station which might prevent the water from getting away and Translink is also seeking to make contact with the relevant authorities to progress a study of the drainage capacity in the area.

Department for Social Development

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development how the Programme for Government 2011-16 could be reviewed and modified to better facilitate his Department.

(AQW 50447/11-16)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): A review of the implementation of the current Programme for Government is being undertaken by OFMDFM to identify opportunities to support more effective delivery.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) number of agency staff employed by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive; (ii) the average length of service for agency staff; (iii) the fees paid to agencies in each of the last five years; and (iv) whether it is more cost effective to fill vacancies with short-term contracts.

(AQW 50595/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that in relation to:-

- (i) They had 556 agency workers in its employment as at 30 September 2015;
- (ii) The average length of an agency worker's assignment is 14.61 months.
- (iii) The fees paid to the agency cover the worker's salary, cost of using the agencies' services, pension, National Insurance, and other costs associated with the Agency Workers Regulations (AWR).

Financial Year	Fees (£m)
2011/12	2
2012/13	3.4
2013/14	7.2

Financial Year	Fees (£m)
2014/15	11.2
2015/16 (1 Apr-30 Sep 2015)	5.4

- (iv) The fees would be broadly comparable to the costs associated with direct employment. The employment of agency workers is deemed to be as cost effective as direct employment.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Queens Parade project in Bangor.
(AQW 50643/11-16)

Mr Storey: My Department has secured full planning permission for a major regeneration scheme at Queen's Parade, Bangor. The proposals put forward will restore the area into an attractive, vibrant, inclusive place for everyone to enjoy and enhance the reputation of the town as a key tourist and shopping destination. The granting of planning permission is the first stage in the development process. My Department in conjunction with Council are working closely together and hope to appoint a private sector development partner in September 2016 to take forward the proposals.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the sites where the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has provided land for the establishment of a monument or memorial garden since 2011, broken down by each council area.
(AQW 50705/11-16)

Mr Storey: The table attached, provided by the Housing Executive, details the sites that they have provided land for the establishment of a monument or memorial garden since 2011, broken down by each council area.

Council Area	Site	Monument or Memorial Garden/ Garden of reflection.
Belfast City Council	Annadale	Memorial/reflective garden funding under the Building Relationships In Communities programme
Belfast City Council	Village	Memorial/reflective garden funding under the Building Relationships In Communities programme
Belfast City Council	Ardoyne	Memorial/reflective garden
Mid Ulster District Council	Sandybrae	Community Garden/Praxis
Mid Ulster District Council	King William III	Community Garden/Grounds Maintenance
Mid Ulster District Council	Glenburn	Community Garden/Grounds Maintenance
Mid Ulster District Council	Killowen	Community Garden/Grounds Maintenance
Mid Ulster District Council	Loup	Seating with assistance from Arts Council
Mid Ulster District Council	Pomeroy	Lady feature at entrance to Park View with Arts Council assistance
Mid Ulster District Council	Gortalowry	Slabs featuring remembering people from the past/supported by Community Cohesion
Fermanagh and Omagh District Council	Lisnaskea	Large structure of interlocking rings, funded by Arts Council.
Ards and North Down Borough Council	Beechfield Drive, Donaghadee	Community reflective space. The delivery agent was Ards Borough Council and funding came from phase 2 of PEACE 3. Six loyalist emblems were removed and all territorial colours were cleaned from kerbstones and lamp posts to allow the reflective space to happen. The reflective space remembers those who died in World War 1.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the timeframe for the replacement of wooden framed double glazed windows with PVC double glazed windows in Northern Ireland Housing Executive properties in North Down.
(AQW 50749/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has informed me that it is currently preparing a window replacement programme for 2016/17. Although all of the surveys have not yet been carried out, it is currently estimated that 90 dwellings in North Down with timber-framed windows will have these replaced with PVC installations under this programme. As regards the replacement of the rest of the timber-framed windows in North Down, this will be programmed as part of the Housing Executive's future investment plans.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development what actions his Department has taken to improve uptake of the cycle to work scheme.

(AQW 50803/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Cycle to Work Scheme is a well established NICS-wide initiative and information on the scheme is available to all staff on the HRConnect portal. It continues to be popular with staff in my department with over 100 applications supported so far this calendar year and 535 supported since the scheme was launched in 2012.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how many people were in receipt of an Employment Support Allowance for each quarter of the last year for (i) Northern Ireland; and (ii) each Council Area.

(AQW 50807/11-16)

Mr Storey: The table overleaf shows the number of people in receipt of Employment and Support Allowance in each of the last 5 quarters, broken down by council area. This is the latest available information.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) what maintenance schemes are scheduled for Newbuildings, Londonderry; and (ii) the estimated start dates.

(AQW 50820/11-16)

Mr Storey: The NI Housing Executive has provided the following table detailing the schemes it has scheduled for Newbuildings. Please note that these schemes represent current intentions and may change subject to confirmation of funding and programmes.

Scheme	Estimated Start Date	Number of properties in Newbuildings
Stevenson Park/Goshaden Kitchens	01/04/2016	1
Retrofit Double Glazing Elder Crescent/Stevenson	02/05/2016	70

Mr McNarry asked for Social Development to detail the (a) highest amount claimed; and (ii) total claimed by the top ten claimants in benefits, in the last twelve months by a non-UK or Republic of Ireland citizen.

(AQW 50881/11-16)

Mr Storey:

- (i) The United Kingdom Statistics Authority Code of Practice prohibits the disclosure of information, which might identify an individual, therefore details of the highest amount of benefit claimed by a non-UK national cannot be provided.
- (ii) The total amount of Social Security Benefits paid to the top ten non-UK nationals claiming benefit in the 2014/2015 financial year was £290,000 (rounded to the nearest £1,000).
- (iii) The total amount of Social Security Benefits paid to the top ten UK nationals claiming benefit in the 2014/2015 financial year was £362,000 (rounded to the nearest £1,000).

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 49717/11-16, to detail with whom the consultants engaged when drafting the Development Plan.

(AQW 50883/11-16)

Mr Storey: The appointed Consultants held two comprehensive rounds of meetings with all the public stakeholders who had expressed an interest in purchasing land within the St Patrick's Barracks site. The public stakeholders involved in these meetings were NI Housing Executive, Mid & East Antrim (M&EA) Borough Council, Department of Education, Education Authority NI, Department of Employment & Learning, PSNI and the NI Science Park, in addition to the Department's Housing Division.

Other bodies contacted by the consultants during this period were M&EA Borough Council's Planning Department, Transport NI, Land and Property Services and the Reserve Forces and Cadets Association.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 49115/11-16, (i) to detail the number of Job Seekers Allowance claimants that have had a sanction applied from October 2014 to June 2015 as a result of the Steps 2 Success Programme; and (ii) how many of each type of sanction was applied.

(AQW 50940/11-16)

Mr Storey: It is not possible to differentiate between sanctions applied to claimants who were on the Steps to Work Programme and those who were participating in the Steps 2 Success programme, as the period specified in the question covers the time when Steps to Work Programme ended and Steps to Success commenced. It is also not possible to be accurate as to the number of individuals who may have been sanctioned as individuals may have been sanctioned more than once.

Figures are available on the total number of Jobseeker's Allowance claimants sanctioned during the period 1st October 2014 to 30th June 2015 whilst participating in one of these programmes. The total number of people sanctioned was 1,560.

The reasons for the application of sanctions are detailed below;

- Failure to attend a Steps to Work/Steps 2 Success interview – 1470
- Failure to accept a Steps to Work/Steps 2 Success place – 1
- Failure to start or complete Steps to Work/Steps 2 Success place - 89

Mr Allen asked the Minister for Social Development when community groups can apply for funding for Good Morning services in 2016-2017.

(AQW 50950/11-16)

Mr Storey: My recent Statement to the Assembly on the Regeneration Bill advised my conclusion that now is not the right time to go ahead with the transfer of the Department for Social Development's urban regeneration functions to local councils; and that my Department will continue to have responsibility for the delivery of functions, including relevant funding programmes, until such time as the Executive decides otherwise.

My Department currently provides support for Good Morning Services in Belfast under its Neighbourhood Renewal Investment Fund. Applications for support under that Fund were sought in 2014 and assessed on the basis of a three year funding period. The Department issued contracts for 2015/16 only, as it was intended that local councils would make decisions on any future financial support. My officials are now reviewing existing funding applications for possible funding in the 2016/17 financial year. This will be done in the light of available resources for 2016/17 and with no guarantee whatsoever that funding will be provided.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what additional cycling and cycle parking facilities have been provided (i) to departmental staff; and (ii) outside departmental buildings to increase the uptake of cycling.

(AQW 50954/11-16)

Mr Storey: The vast majority of the Department's staff and customer-facing services are located within buildings either owned or leased by the Department of Finance and Personnel. Therefore, any facilities available at those sites are as stated in the Department of Finance and Personnel Minister's related response.

There are a further twelve buildings that are either owned or leased by the Department for Social Development in which no additional facilities have been provided to increase the uptake of cycling. The majority of those are multi-occupancy sites thereby preventing the Department from making any such changes.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown of the gender balance on each of his Department's publicly appointed boards and arm's-length bodies.

(AQW 50957/11-16)

Mr Storey: Please see attached table containing the gender balance for my Department's publicly appointed boards and arm's-length bodies.

Body	Number of Members	Number of Male Members	Number of Female Members
Northern Ireland Housing Executive	10	8	2
Charities Advisory Committee	4	2	2
Charity Commission for Northern Ireland	7	5	2
Vaughan's Charity	6	4	2

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the rationale behind the 25 per cent reduction in funding for the Gingerbread creche in Derry.

(AQW 50965/11-16)

Mr Storey: As with all Executive Departments, my Department was required to implement efficiencies across its business areas which included a reduction in the funding available to Neighbourhood Renewal projects. My Department had to undertake a robust approach with the aim of maximising the delivery of high quality services to the most disadvantaged and ensure funding was prioritised against the projects which had a greater focus on Neighbourhood Renewal areas. All projects which applied for funding, were subject to an evaluation and economic appraisal.

During this process, my Department concluded that the Gingerbread project in Londonderry did not have the focus on Neighbourhood Renewal areas that had originally been envisaged. In detailed analysis, it was found that a lower than expected proportion of people benefiting from Gingerbread's services came from Neighbourhood Renewal areas. For this reason, Gingerbread did not present itself as strongly as some of the other Neighbourhood Renewal projects, and funding was reduced by £10,000 in 2015/16.

However, my Department continues to fund £32,573 in 2015/16 towards this project and my officials continue to work closely with Gingerbread in optimising service delivery to those most in need.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the value of the Christmas Bonus for social security claimants; (ii) when that amount was first set; (iii) a breakdown of the Christmas Bonus since its inception; (iv) how much is paid annually in Christmas Bonuses; and (v) whether he has any plans to increase the value of the Christmas Bonus.

(AQW 50980/11-16)

Mr Storey: A Christmas Bonus of £10 was introduced in 1972 and has remained unchanged, apart from 1975 and 1976 when no payment was made and 2008 when an additional £60 was paid.

A total of £5,159,000 was paid out on Christmas Bonuses in 2014/15. There are currently no plans to increase the value of the Christmas Bonus.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development whether Sinn Fein have made arrangements to repay benefits wrongly claimed by a councillor; and if so, whether the repayment includes interest on the sum owed.

(AQW 50990/11-16)

Mr Storey: There have been no arrangements made by Sinn Fein to repay any benefits wrongly claimed by a Councillor.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Queen's Parade project.

(AQW 51035/11-16)

Mr Storey: My Department has secured full planning permission for a major regeneration scheme at Queen's Parade, Bangor. The proposals put forward will restore the area into an attractive, vibrant, inclusive place for everyone to enjoy and enhance the reputation of the town as a key tourist and shopping destination. The granting of planning permission is the first stage in the development process. My Department in conjunction with Council are working closely together and hope to appoint a private sector development partner in September 2016 to take forward the proposals.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how the calculation of the £240m set aside following the announcement of A Fresh Start on 17 November was determined in relation to Tax Credit ameliorations.

(AQW 51144/11-16)

Mr Storey: The monies included in the Fresh Start Agreement were the subject of discussion and agreement at the Executive.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how the calculation of the £345m set aside following the announcement of A Fresh Start on 17 November was determined in relation to welfare ameliorations.

(AQW 51145/11-16)

Mr Storey: The monies included in the Fresh Start Agreement were the subject of discussion and agreement at the Executive.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the statement in paragraph 2.5 on page 23 of A Fresh Start that states the welfare and tax credit top-ups will be taken forward by the Assembly.

(AQW 51146/11-16)

Mr Storey: The monies included in the Fresh Start Agreement were the subject of discussion and agreement at the Executive.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development to detail which Department will be responsible for the former Ministry of Defence St Patrick's Barracks site in Ballymena following the reduction in the number of Executive Departments.

(AQW 51170/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Department for Social Development purchased the St Patrick's Barracks Site from the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister on 30th September 2015 – AQW 49717/11-16 refers.

As the site was acquired by my Department for a housing-led regeneration scheme prior to re-structuring of Executive Departments, it will be transferred along with other existing functions of DSD into the new Department for Communities.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department intends to reassess claimants with lifetime Disability Living Allowance awards when transitioning to Personal Independence Payments.

(AQW 51210/11-16)

Mr Storey: Personal Independence Payment will replace Disability Living Allowance for working age claimants (age 16 – 64). All existing working age claimants with an indefinite (lifetime) award of Disability Living Allowance will be reassessed for Personal Independence Payment over a period of time.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the measures taken to ensure the maximum take up of the Affordable Warmth Scheme.

(AQO 9150/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Affordable Warmth Scheme is a new and innovative approach to tackling fuel poverty in Northern Ireland. The scheme is delivered in partnership with the eleven local councils and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. All eleven councils have shown full commitment to the new scheme and as well as assessing homes for Affordable Warmth they have been able to introduce other council services such as home safety checks. The Affordable Warmth Scheme's focus is on helping those in the most severe fuel poverty by targeting them directly and installing measures to increase energy efficiency in their homes. This approach has been endorsed by leading fuel poverty experts both in academia and lobbying organisations. The targeted nature of the Affordable Warmth Scheme means that there is no need to take any additional measures to maximise take up as local councils have extensive lists of potentially eligible homes to visit.

Already almost £9 million in Affordable Warmth grants has been approved to improve the energy efficiency of homes in the most severe fuel poverty. These homes are receiving cavity and loft insulation, new and improved heating systems, and even replacement windows if needed.

My Department has recognised that it is taking longer than anticipated to process applications and the Housing Executive is carrying out an urgent review of the process aimed at streamlining it, whilst maintaining financial and eligibility assurance levels. Some changes have already been made which will speed up the process.

My Department will also carry a comprehensive end-year-review to examine performance to date, scheme qualifying conditions, process effectiveness and delivery arrangements; including the potential for easier access to installers.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 51087/11-16, whether (i) the top up fund agreed as part of the Stormont House Agreement incorporated the discretionary fund; (ii) the discretionary fund was paid from the block grant or from annually managed expenditure; and to detail what provision there will be for community care grants, budgeting loans and crisis loans.

(AQW 51294/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan states that the discretionary fund is included in the funding for the top up scheme. This relates to Community Care Grants and Crisis Loans, which are funded from the Northern Ireland Block Grant.

The discretionary fund within social security comprises of elements which are funded both from Annually Managed Expenditure, primarily Budgeting Loans, and Block Grant which are the Community Care Grants and Crisis Loans.

The working group chaired by Professor Evason has been asked to bring forward proposals for top ups in Northern Ireland within the financial envelope provided for in the Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan. These proposals could include replacements specifically for Community Care Grants and Crisis Loans which will be abolished by the Welfare Reform (NI) Order 2015. The Budgeting Loans will not be dealt with by Professor Evason as they will be replaced by Budgeting Advances when Universal Credit is introduced in Northern Ireland.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister for Social Development whether Neighbourhood Renewal will remain within his departmental remit or become a local council responsibility after April 2016.

(AQO 9149/11-16)

Mr Storey: My Department's Neighbourhood Renewal programme will come to an end if regeneration powers are extended and budgets transferred to Local Government. Thereafter it will be for Councils to decide how best to address the needs of their areas through their respective Community Plans; and to be clear there is no obligation on Councils to deliver programmes such as Neighbourhood Renewal, or to support any groups, including those currently supported under Neighbourhood Renewal, in the way that the Department currently does.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Social Development how many new social housing units are planned for Upper Bann.
(AQO 9151/11-16)

Mr Storey: I can advise you that there are currently 50 new social housing units under construction in the Lurgan and Portadown area which will be completed during this financial year. A further 52 units are programmed to start on site this year with an additional 80 units programmed to start in 2016/17.

Of course schemes may slip or be lost from a given programme year for a variety of reasons.

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Social Development whether he plans to release funding for improvement works for Portrush and its surrounding area ahead of the British Open in 2019.
(AQO 9152/11-16)

Mr Storey: I believe the Open Championship offers a major opportunity to sustainably develop the tourism economy of Portrush and the North Coast in a way that will bring substantial benefits not only to the area but to Northern Ireland as a whole.

Before moving forward with a major regeneration programme for Portrush I need to seek the Executives agreement on how this programme of works should be delivered and how it should be funded.

A paper setting out the programme of regeneration works for Portrush and a proposal for its delivery has been issued to Executive colleagues and I hope that it can be discussed and a way forward agreed at the earliest opportunity.

I have recently announced funding of £1.5M for a public Realm scheme in Portstewart, work will commence on this scheme before the end of November 2015.

Mr Byrne asked the Minister for Social Development to outline how he is addressing the issue of unfit social housing, particularly west of the Bann.
(AQO 9154/11-16)

Mr Storey: The recent stock condition survey of the NIHE stock, completed by Savills as part of the joint DSD / NIHE Asset Commission, found that the number of NIHE properties which technically failed the Fitness standard was statistically negligible. Of approximately 25,000 properties surveyed by Savills only 24 could be categorised as technically "unfit", and of these around 5 were located west of the Bann.

However whilst the vast majority of NIHE stock currently meets the very minimum standards for social housing, significant investment will be needed to achieve and maintain a modern housing standard over the next thirty years. Delivery of the investment needed will require considerably increased resources to be available to the NIHE.

In the meantime, in line with the Interim Investment Plan, the NIHE has 16 schemes, totalling around 955 homes, either already underway or planned to commence in the next year in areas west of the Bann, worth a total investment of approximately £4.4m. Further necessary investment has been made in properties west of the Bann and continues to be made through planned and response maintenance, with around £38.4m committed to schemes during the last 2 years.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on how many of the current households on the social housing waiting list are deemed to be statutorily homeless.
(AQO 9155/11-16)

Mr Storey: As of 30 September 2015 there were 14,372 applicants deemed to be statutorily homeless under the rules of the housing selection scheme. To be statutorily homeless a number of factors are taken into account as set out in the Housing (NI) Order 1988. Applicants deemed to be statutorily homeless either have accommodation that is deemed inappropriate or no accommodation.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister for Social Development to outline his plans to bring departmentally controlled brown field sites back into use for the benefit of local communities.
(AQO 9156/11-16)

Mr Storey: My Department currently retains ownership and control of a number of brown field sites in Northern Ireland and is currently progressing development opportunities for some of them, whilst considering regeneration options for others. I am willing to consider suitable proposals for the development of all such sites, and that includes encouraging Housing Associations to consider the use of public sector land for building new and affordable homes where possible. It should be noted that it is expected that brown field sites held for the purposes of regeneration will transfer to Councils when Reform of Local Government (RLG) is implemented at 1 April 2016.

Mr Lyons asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Northern Ireland Housing Executive's progress in relation to the Asset Management Strategy.
(AQO 9157/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has drafted its first ever Asset Management Strategy and submitted it for consideration on the 2nd November. The Strategy sets out that the Housing Executive wishes to move to an active asset management approach across its housing stock and other assets. Once agreed the Strategy will provide a direction for the Housing Executive's long term investment approach.

The production of the draft Strategy is a significant achievement. I am confident that the use of active asset management principles by the Housing Executive will result in an improved delivery of services that will benefit tenants and help to sustain our social housing for future generations.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development whether the top up fund as agreed as part of the Stormont House Agreement, incorporated the Northern Ireland Discretionary Social Fund.
(AQW 51358/11-16)

Mr Storey: The Stormont Agreement and Implementation Plan states that the discretionary fund is included in the funding for the top up scheme. This relates to Community Care Grants and Crisis Loans which are funded from the Northern Ireland Block Grant.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Mr B McCrea asked the Assembly Commission whether there are any plans to upgrade the WiFi service in Parliament Buildings.
(AQO 9193/11-16)

Mr Gardiner (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The NI Assembly wireless network extends throughout Parliament Buildings and provides all building users with WiFi access to internet resources.

The Information Systems Office completely replaced the Assembly's wireless network infrastructure in August 2013 at a cost of £77,933. This project involved the installation of a fully resilient system comprising 2 wireless LAN controllers together with 90 wireless access points distributed throughout Parliament Buildings.

The system is used extensively by users and visitors to the building, serving in excess of 500 users on Assembly sitting days. The service is centrally managed, monitored and configured to ensure that it continues to provide comprehensive signal coverage throughout the building. Information Systems Office is not aware of any major problems with the WiFi service in Parliament Buildings and considers this system fit for purpose. The Assembly Commission therefore has no current plans to replace or significantly upgrade the service.

Mr Craig asked the Assembly Commission what measures it is taking to reduce costs.
(AQO 9198/11-16)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The costs incurred by the Assembly Commission cover a range of different expenditure categories including Members' salaries and allowances, payments to Political Parties, Assembly Secretariat staffing costs and general administration costs.

The Member will be aware that the Commission has no control over the level of expenditure that is incurred on Members' salaries and allowances. All such costs are established by the Independent Financial Review Panel. Some 40% or just over 16 million pounds, of the Commission's budget for this year falls into this category. The Commission has no legal authority to reduce these costs.

For the remaining 60% of costs that are controllable by the Commission, the Commission has already delivered significant savings. For the four years of the Spending Review 2010 between 2011-12 and 2014-15, the Commission reduced its controllable budget by 3.1 million pounds. This saving was achieved through a comprehensive Business Efficiency Programme that looked at every business areas across the Assembly Secretariat to identify potential efficiency savings.

In this financial year alone, the Commission delivered a further saving of one point seven million pounds on its controllable budget and over the course of this financial year, 38 Full Time Equivalent posts will have been suppressed across the range of staff that provide services to the Assembly and its Members. These further savings were enabled through a package of cuts to contracts and services delivered as part of a Strategic Planning programme looking at this year and beyond.

The Commission will continue to deliver savings. It has been widely reported that a further cut of at least 5% will be applied to non-protected entities funded from the Northern Ireland Block Grant in 2016-17. The Commission is willing to play its part to meet that level of cut on the expenditure that it can control.

While the Commission remains committed to supporting the Assembly and its Members, the cuts to funding mean that the range and the quality of services that the Commission can provide will reduce; Members' expectations in this regard and their support for that approach will be required.

Mr Kennedy asked the Assembly Commission what discussions it has had with the Department of Finance and Personnel on the 2016-17 budget.

(AQO 9200/11-16)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): As with all entities funded from the Northern Ireland Block Grant, discussions with the Department of Finance & Personnel on budget matters happen at formal and informal levels.

Discussions with the Department on the 2016-17 budget have focused on two specific aspects. Firstly, the need to implement an agreed methodology for setting the Assembly Commission's budget that recognises the constitutional independence of the Assembly from the Executive and, secondly, discussions on the actual level of budget that the Commission will require in 2016-17 to deliver the services required by the Assembly and by Members.

On 10 September and 10 November 2015, the Speaker, as Chair of the Assembly Commission, wrote to the Finance Minister to seek a meeting to discuss these two matters. A meeting has now been arranged for mid -December.

In his correspondence, the Speaker highlighted the Commission's view that an alternative approach to setting the Commission's budget is required that involves scrutiny of - and agreement to - the Commission's budget proposals by this House. He also noted that the Commission has delivered considerable savings over the recent period of austerity and he stressed the continuing commitment of the Commission to play its part in dealing with budgetary pressures for the next financial year and beyond.

In addition, Assembly Secretariat officials liaise with colleagues in the Department to help to inform the Commission's deliberations on its budget planning for coming years.

Mr McKinney asked the Assembly Commission for its assessment of the impact of proposed changes to Office Cost Expenditure on the services provided by Members to constituents.

(AQO 9201/11-16)

Ms P Bradley (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Assembly Commission is aware that the Independent Financial Review Panel has consulted widely on proposed changes to the quantum, structure and eligibility criteria for Office Cost Expenditure. The responsibility for determining the level of financial support for Members falls to Panel. Therefore, the Commission has no role in assessing the impact of changes proposed by the Panel – that responsibility falls to the Panel.

The Commission is aware that the limits for OCE have fallen by 11.5% from £75,857 per Member in 2011-12 to £67,161 in this financial year. However, the Commission's statutory role in this regard is to administer the financial support that is made available to Members in line with robust standards of governance, regularity and propriety.

The Commission is committed to supporting the Assembly and its Members within the limits of financial support that is available to Members.

Revised Written Answers

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

In Bound Volume 108, page WA286, replace AQW 47507/11-16 with:

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Aseptic Unit Audit which was conducted by a Regional Quality Assurance team at Craigavon Area Hospital in December 2014; and to further detail any non-compliance issues were raised by this audit.

(AQW 47507/11-16)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The RQA's December 2014 Audit made 9 findings. Of these one was classed as 'critical', one as 'major', and 7 as 'other minor'. The critical finding related to the facilities themselves which it judged did not meet EU requirements. A business case has been submitted to the Department and will be considered alongside other capital priorities. Other findings, related to aseptic processing; monitoring; documentation; product approval; materials, components & consumables and adherence to audit schedule, have been addressed. Work to address findings relating to personnel, training & competency assessment and the need for comprehensive contingency plans was completed in September 2015.

Department for Social Development

In this Bound Volume, page WA84, replace AQW 48485/11-16 with:

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the number of non EU nationals that are in receipt of benefits; and (ii) the detail the amount paid in each case, broken down by council area.

(AQW 48485/11-16)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development):

- (i) The number of non EU nationals in Northern Ireland that are in receipt of benefits at October 2015 is 2050.
- (ii) Number of non EU nationals in Northern Ireland in receipt of benefit detailing amount paid by Council Area

Department of Education

In Bound Volume 108, page WA97, replace AQW 49367/11-16 with:

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education, given the school term finishes at the end of June, to detail (i) why the cut off for children to start formal education includes children born on 1 July; and (ii) what consideration he has given to introducing flexibility to school starting ages.

(AQW 49367/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The date of commencement of compulsory school age was changed from five to four by the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 as amended by the Education Reform (Northern Ireland) Order 1989. This was to take account of the fact that many parents enrolled their children at four years of age and was to ensure that all children had access to an equal number of years of school. A cut off date of 1 July, provided clarity for parents and schools on the beginning of compulsory school age that was common to all children rather than relying on the date of birth of the individual child.

Following consultation on deferral of school starting age in exceptional circumstances earlier this year, I decided not to proceed with legislation in this Assembly mandate. As a result of calls from parents for clarity on this issue, I have asked the Education Authority to produce guidance for parents. I remain keen for legislation to be brought forward to address this issue in the next Assembly mandate.

In this Bound Volume, page WA115, replace AQW 50198/11-16 with:

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education what investment is planned for Ballymena Nursery School to improve the health and safety of pupils.

(AQW 50198/11-16)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): Ballymena Nursery School (NS) is a controlled nursery school and as such the Education Authority (EA) has responsibility for it. It is therefore for the EA to consider what schemes will be funded this year from within its limited capital budget allocation. The EA currently has five minor works schemes for Ballymena NS under consideration. While some of these schemes relate to health & safety matters, they are not of sufficient priority to be categorized as inescapable (which is where the priority currently is due to the constrained capital budget). However the EA has stated that it fully appreciates the needs of Ballymena Nursery School and that it will do its utmost to address accommodation issues at the school as resources permit.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

In this Bound Volume, page WA24, replace AQW 49742/11-16 with:

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of (i) Knowledge Transfer Partnerships between Further and Higher Education institutions and local companies; and (ii) how budget cuts are likely to impact on the ability of institutions to deliver the Partnerships.

(AQW 49742/11-16)

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The higher and further education sectors in Northern Ireland fall under the remit of the Department for Employment and Learning (DEL) which provides funding support in relation to teaching, research and knowledge exchange.

In terms of supporting the Higher Education sector's continuing engagement with businesses and the wider community, DEL currently provides around £4 million per annum of underpinning, core funding through its Northern Ireland Higher Education Innovation Fund (NI HEIF).

Just one of the roles of NI HEIF is to support the universities' innovation and enterprise offices to provide practical assistance to academics and businesses to enable the development of high quality, competitive, proposals to Knowledge Transfer Partnerships (KTP) and to other important innovation initiatives.

With respect to KTP, both Queen's University and Ulster University have been highly successful. Queen's consistently tops the UK league table with respect to KTP awards and Ulster has recently moved up to sixth position out of 106 registered knowledge providers in the UK.

NI HEIF is complemented by DEL's Connected programme, an initiative supporting universities and further education colleges to work together for the benefit of local businesses. Currently funded at £1.1 million per annum, Connected also plays an important role in the promotion of KTPs and has been instrumental in encouraging the first college based projects.

Despite the wider cuts to the Higher Education budget, DEL has been able to protect NI HEIF and Connected, in recognition of both programmes' particular relevance and importance to the local economy. By taking the strategic decision to do this, DEL is safeguarding the ability of the universities to deliver KTPs and other business-facing activities.

On the Further Education (FE) side, DEL has increased the budget for the Employer Support Programme from £2 million in 2014/15 to £3.2 million in 2015/16 to implement and deliver a new strand of the programme, Skills Focus. This reaffirms the commitment of the Department to deliver training to businesses, enabling them to engage in innovation, upskill the workforce and gain qualifications.

Skills Focus, which was introduced in April 2015, aims to support, promote and facilitate collaborative working between business and FE colleges, in order to provide tailored skills provision to small and medium sized enterprises with fewer than 250 employees. The purpose of Skills Focus is to meet business needs by increasing the skills levels and employability of the existing workforce to qualifications at level 2 and above.

The other strand of the Employer Support Programme, InnovateUs, is designed to encourage and promote opportunities for small businesses and FE colleges to work together. In particular, the focus of the programme is to enable small businesses, with fewer than 50 employees, to acquire the skills necessary to engage in innovation activities and research and development across the business and underpin the development of these skills; promote progression in this area; and enable businesses to undertake additional and further forms of innovation, which will contribute to their growth and development, as well as increasing FE's role in economic development.

As with the Higher Education sector, this investment in the FE sector by DEL will serve to underpin the environment in which programmes such as KTP can flourish.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

In this Bound Volume, page WA233, replace AQW 50746/11-16 with:

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 49045/11-16, for her assessment of the number of farmers under the age of 30; and how young people are being encouraged and supported to invest in agri-businesses to ensure the future sustainability of this sector.

(AQW 50746/11-16)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): The last time data on age within the farm labour force was collected was under the EU Farm Structure Survey (FSS) in 2013. Age data was collected in bands and the category of interest (under 30) does not coincide with the thresholds used in the survey. The closest available group is people under 35 with day to day responsibility for managing a farm. In 2013 the number was in the region of 1335. Since then CAP reform measures may have impacted management arrangements, with more young people becoming farmers. This should be reflected in the numbers when the FSS is re-run in 2016.

Changes to the CAP in 2015 has seen the introduction of The Young Farmers' Payment (YFP), which provides assistance to young farmers establishing a business for the first time. Applicants must meet the eligibility conditions (which includes being under 40 years of age, having a Level II qualification and being Head of Holding ) to receive a top-up to their Basic Payment, which for 2015 equates to €81.28 per hectare. In addition, those eligible for the YFP can also apply to have the value of their Basic Payment entitlements valued at the regional average value. This will be favourable where they either have no entitlements or entitlements valued at less than the regional average.

The Farm Business Improvement Scheme (FBIS) will be an important part of our new Rural Development Programme 2014-20. I anticipate that it will include a portfolio of measures to support sustainable growth in the sector with the objectives to improve competitiveness and productivity in farming through increased efficiency, up-skilling on farm, farm modernisation and a commitment to working with supply chain partners to improve performance. It is important that young farmers take advantage of this programme of support in the years ahead.

6. Private Members' Business

6.1 Motion – Regional Economic Imbalance

Proposed:

That this Assembly expresses concern at the high levels of regional economic imbalance, as evidenced by high levels of long term unemployment and economic inactivity in North and West Belfast, west of the Bann and along the border corridor; welcomes the commitment in the Programme for Government 2011-2015 to address regional imbalance, and the establishment of the Ministerial Sub Group on Regional Opportunities; recognises the role that the availability of property, skills, appropriate infrastructure and telecommunications can play in making areas magnets of attraction for investment; acknowledges the desire of local government, political, community and business leaders in areas of high unemployment to work in partnership with government to attract greater investment and prosperity; and calls for the inclusion of sub-regional job creation targets in the next Programme for Government.

Mr P Flanagan

Ms M Fearon

Mr M Ó Muilleoir

Debate ensued.

The Question being put, the Motion was negatived (Division).

The Speaker took the Chair.

6.2 Motion – Funding for Transport Infrastructure

Proposed:

That this Assembly, mindful of the transport infrastructure in the North West and conscious of the influence good transport infrastructure has in attracting new inward investment, asks that a special case be made to source the capital investment needed to complete the A5 cross-border project, the A6 dual carriageway, including the bypass for Dungiven, the final upgrade of the Belfast-Derry rail line that will ensure an hourly service, and the reopening of the Antrim-Portadown line to allow a direct service to Dublin.

Mr J Dallat

Mr M Durkan

Mr C Eastwood

Mr P Ramsey

Debate ensued.

The Question being put, the Motion was carried without division.

30 November 2015

Division 3

Motion - Climate Change Conference in Paris

That this Assembly notes that the 2015 United Nations Climate Change Conference is taking place in Paris from 30 November to 11 December; considers that this is an opportunity to agree an ambitious global plan to tackle the threat of climate change; welcomes the Minister of the Environment's attendance at this conference to represent Northern Ireland; further notes that the projected reduction of greenhouse gas emissions of 33·3% by 2025, based on 1990 levels, falls just short of the Programme for Government target of 35%; and calls on the Minister of the Environment to work with his Executive colleagues to introduce a Climate Bill for Northern Ireland that includes legally binding, long-term and interim targets on the reduction of greenhouse gas emissions.

The Question was put and the Assembly divided.
