Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. He will be aware that, some time ago, an independent review of governance was completed, and recommendations were accepted by the IFA board. I am pleased to say that the IFA has implemented those recommendations, which gave DCAL the assurance that appropriate governance has been and continues to be maintained and fully meets DCAL's needs. I am satisfied that the IFA has made significant progress against all those recommendations. That informed my decision to allow the IFA to proceed with the release of the construction notice for Windsor Park, which enabled construction to proceed. Had I not been satisfied of the governance procedures, as the IFA was fully aware, Windsor Park would not even have started.

Mr Cree: The Minister will know that, because regional stadia funding was returned, the Executive have agreed to consider favourably any in-year bids, provided they have the money. Has the Minister drawn up such a list yet, or is she considering that issue?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Well, I have not drawn up a list of clubs. Certainly, I know what the financial portfolio and the needs are around the subregional stadia and, indeed, the continuation of the stadia. Bear it in mind that the money that was returned also included money for Windsor Park. I have met and discussed this with Simon Hamilton, the Minister of Finance and Personnel. There is a process well under way to draw down those moneys. The Finance Minister anticipates a bid from my Department to make sure that the money to complete the stadia and commence the subregional stadia is available.

Creative Industries: Investment

7. Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the investment provided to the film and creative industries in the north-west. (AQO 7497/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. Investment by NI Screen and the Arts Council in film and the creative industries in the north-west in the last three years exceeds £4.2 million. That funding consists of production funding, film education, film festival funding and creative industries innovation fund grants and supports my focus on establishing the north-west as a key driver for the creative industries and wider social innovation. In addition, as the Member will be aware, DCAL contributed over £12.3 million to the City of Culture in 2013 for projects and events that focused on culture and creativity. They included flagship projects, such as Portrait of a City and Music Promise. This year, a significant amount of the £1 million resource budget secured in the October monitoring round has been allocated to organisations supporting the creative industries sector in the north-west. That includes places such as the Nerve Centre and its creative learning activities and the FabLab programmes, and organisations such as CultureTECH and others have received funding to help increase their capacity to support skills and development. A number of NI Screen-funded productions such as 'Dracula Untold', 'Game of Thrones' and 'Jump' have also used the north-west as a film location, further boosting the local economy, raising its profile and helping the local tourism industry.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for that answer and for the investment and the particular role that she herself has played in relation to the City of Culture and investment in the north-west generally. Will she outline how the development of cultural hubs will benefit the communities in Derry and the wider north-west?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her supplementary question. The cultural hubs are about making sure that it is multi-community and multi-purpose. They can look at things like sport and physical activities, virtual community infrastructure and networks. However, in the main, the principle behind them is making sure that investments, particularly in areas under the responsibility of DCAL, such as libraries, museums, sports and arts venues, are brought together to make sure that they provide an overall wraparound service. Indeed, some venues can be used for other activities. For example, films or discussions could be hosted in libraries, rather than using a theatre or anything else. Particularly in rural areas of the north-west, it is important that those services are available to as many people as possible.

Mr McCausland: The film and creative industries are hugely important for job creation and our economy. Does the Minister recognise the opportunities that arise in her constituency with the arrival of the University of Ulster, with all of the creative energy around that and the potential even to develop some activity in the film and creative industries in that area as the university comes on site?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Absolutely. The investment of the Ulster University at York Road and neighbouring the Cathedral Quarter, one of the most vibrant parts of the city and our constituency — indeed, the Library Quarter as well — has potential to, I suppose, encourage and nurture the creative industries that are currently there and encourage others to invest there. Certainly, we have an opportunity in North Belfast to look at the redevelopment and investment from the university, which I believe will attract other creative industries, crafts and artists to that sector and to that area. That is to be welcomed.

Mrs McKevitt: What support has the Department given to the development of the Irish language independent production sector?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member will be aware that programmes, documentaries and training and apprenticeships are being built around the Irish Language Broadcast Fund. It has caused me concern that, at times, the funds seem to be vulnerable in that they end one year and then you get another year's extension. That is an issue, and I have already started the process from last year to try to get those further secured. I have tried not only to have them secured but to point out that, within both the Irish language and Ulster-Scots broadcast funds, there needs to be more local film production and procurement. Local television-, documentary- and film-makers need to make sure that they have opportunities to benefit and that it is not the same people who benefit from one funding stream to another.

Cultural Hubs: Londonderry

9. Mr Devenney asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the plans for cultural hubs in Londonderry. (AQO 7499/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. I am committed to supporting the development of cultural hubs as part of my Department's focus on north-west development after City of Culture 2013. I want communities to have local access to equipment and support that allows people of all ages to develop new skills and have access to cutting-edge digital technology and encourages social enterprise in the heart of communities.

DCAL has identified over a dozen existing community-based venues across the north-west, including community centres and schools, to be developed as cultural hubs. These venues are in the context of significant need, where provision is inadequate or, at times, non-existent. The Nerve Centre is working with venues to refine equipment and training needs. The programme will roll out until the end of March. Venues will be provided with equipment such as digital technology, software and music-making and film-editing equipment.

Mr Devenney: I thank the Minister for her answer. Does the Minister agree that it is vital that the hubs are situated on sites that every community can use? Would the Minister consider the Ebrington site for one of the hubs, given that it is very much a neutral site?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Ebrington site has benefited from a lot of investment from all Departments. If the Member is hinting or suggesting that the development of the cultural hubs is being done in a way that denies people access, I would refute that. Some of the cultural hubs that have been developed, not only in the city of Derry but elsewhere in the north-west, are based in communities that all people can access. If the Member has any concerns about a particular group or area, I am happy to meet him or to accept his correspondence and get back to him.

Mr Dallat: Does the Minister agree with me that Derry city is an example to the world of how different communities can share their culture? Does she accept that it is a model for the rest of Northern Ireland to emulate? Orangemen, Apprentice Boys, Hibernians — it does not matter who they are: they have this unique capacity to share their culture. In 2013, they showed the world how it could be done.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his supplementary. I am a north Belfast girl — I was born and reared there — but I have a lot to learn from the city of Derry. Many people across the island have a lot to learn from the city of Derry. If each of us can take a wee piece of that and bring it into our constituencies, that is a good thing.

Cycling: DCAL Support

11. Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department supports cycling. (AQO 7501/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question. In the three financial years up to 31 March 2015, my Department, through Sport NI, has provided over £646,000 to promote cycling. In addition, funding to the Sports Institute provides specialist support to talented local cyclists in the form of sports medicine, performance skills, lifestyle management, performance analysis and strength and conditioning. This investment has resulted in success at international competitions for local cyclists.

Events such as last year's Giro d'Italia have boosted a local interest in cycling. I am keen to capitalise on that growing popularity through increased participation. DCAL has also provided £10,000 for VC Glendale cycling club to deliver a cycling training and participation programme for children from the Shankill and Colin areas of Belfast. This is part of DCAL's World Police and Fire Games legacy.

Mrs Dobson: I thank the Minister for her answer. Is the Minister aware that those competing in the disciplines of mountain biking and cyclo-cross do not receive funding? Will she take steps to ensure parity of esteem in the funding of each cycling discipline?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member has raised points that I am not familiar with.

I will ask for, and happily furnish the Member with, details of that. However, it is hard to describe parity of esteem between different brands of cycling, particularly when you do not have the detail. So, I will wait and see what they are and make my judgement but keep the Member informed.

3.15 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): That ends listed questions. We move now to topical questions.

Aonach Mhacha Cultúrlann Project: Armagh

T1. Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the Aonach Mhacha cultúrlann project in Armagh of which she is well aware. (AQT 2051/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am aware of the project to develop a cultúrlann-type project. As an update, the Member may be aware that £150,000 was earmarked to develop the site, pending the successful outcome of the business case, which we are still working through. That was the indicative figure that we hoped to invest in that area.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a freagra. I thank the Minister for her answer. She is well aware of the time and effort that have gone into this project. Will she give a commitment to keep me updated on the project, because it is vital to Armagh city and district?

Ms Ní Chuilín: To answer the latter part of the supplementary first: I will endeavour to keep the Member updated. I agree with him that it is important that the project is resolved and that construction starts. The Member and those involved in the development of this investment and application are well aware of DCAL's requirements and they are very positive in proactively working their way through all the elements and additional information required.

Cycling: Development

T2. Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for details on how Sport NI and the governing body will develop cycling in the future. (AQT 2052/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for her question; I know that she is a keen cyclist. Sport NI has given significant support to cycling, the future development of which is one of the areas of increased demand. Through its work with grass-roots community groups, some cycling clubs and the governing body, Sport NI has taken on board what many people are saying. Some of our athletes who have performed over the years, particularly in cycling, have inspired people to get involved. So, Sport NI and my officials are more than aware of the increased demand around cycling.

Ms McGahan: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for her answer. Will she ensure that the lack of facilities in rural areas, as well as how to encourage more women into the sport, will be considered?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I certainly will. It may encourage the Member to know that many of the groups and individuals that I have spoken to have been from rural communities. I have absolutely no doubt that Sport NI has received the same if not similar representation. The whole area around rural communities has been highlighted, because our own natural environment is one facility that we have on our doorstep, and we need to use it better. If we can use it through the development of sport and physical activity, all the better.

CAL Savings: EQIA

T3. Mr Cree asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the full equality impact assessment on the savings proposal she intends to carry out for the current Budget year. (AQT 2053/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am not yet in a position to give the Member an update, because we are still looking not only at the responses to the consultation but at the whole equality impact assessment process. The Member is on the Culture, Arts and Leisure Committee, which, in the first instance, will receive the report on the outcome of that, which I expect to see in the very near future.

Mr Cree: I will continue to push my luck. Can the Minister reassure us that she is still wedded to her decision to ensure that libraries do not close as a result of budget cuts?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I reaffirm my commitment to ensure that libraries do not close. I understand that some libraries may face a slight reduction in their opening hours, but my decision is to protect libraries as much as possible. I know that other arm's-length bodies (ALBs) in DCAL are unhappy with that, but my commitment remains to protect libraries as much as possible.

Irish Language and Ulster-Scots Strategies: Consultation

T4. Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what level of Executive approval was sought before issuing the consultations on the Irish language and Ulster-Scots strategies, given the cross-cutting nature of some of the issues contained within those strategies. (AQT 2054/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: There is a huge amount of consultation across the Departments. The Member is more than welcome, as is anybody else, to look at the publications, which are on the DCAL website.

Mr Weir: Why were the strategies then issued without approval by the Executive?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The strategies, the consultation and the outworkings of the consultation were all brought to the attention of Executive colleagues. If some people slept in and missed that, that is not my problem.

Festivals: CAL Funding

T5. Mr Newton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how she will ensure adequate funding for community festivals and, in particular, how she expects to fund the Eastside Arts Festival. (AQT 2055/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The role that festivals play is very important. The Member will know that the work of Eastside Arts is very, very important, and not only to the east of the city. Eastside is one of the cultural partners that have been working together for the last couple of years, particularly around the World Police and Fire Games. It has shown very clearly, as have other groups involved in the arts, creativity and festivals, that with a small investment there is a big outcome. That is the sort of work I hope that not only the Arts Council but local councils, in this case Belfast City Council, will support.

Mr Newton: Does the Minister recognise that the Eastside Arts Festival, as it is now branded, has been developed over the past few years basically on a shoestring, and that, as such, needs investment to ensure that it can catch up with all the other festivals that have a history of success?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am sure the Member is not suggesting that, because other festivals in other parts of Belfast have used their initiative, got funding for a period of years and built up their performance portfolio and reputation, they should be held back in order to let Eastside catch up. That is not what Eastside Arts is saying. However, I was the only Minister who invested in Eastside Arts. No one else did it. I appreciate and value the work that it does. I will continue to try to make funding available where possible. I encourage the Member to talk to some of his colleagues about what is a great funding opportunity for their Department to fund such a great organisation that gives great outcomes to the community.

Irish Language and Ulster-Scots Strategies: Next Steps

T6. Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what the next steps are following the publication last Friday of her Department's strategies on the Irish language and Ulster-Scots culture and heritage. (AQT 2056/11-15)

Mr McElduff: Is é mo cheist, cad iad na céad chéimeanna eile don straitéis sin?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I thank the Member for his question. The next steps are that my officials will draw up an action plan for each of the recommendations and commitments that are outlined in both strategies. That will involve other Executive Ministers. If other Executive Ministers, ALBs and public bodies feel that they cannot adhere to the commitments in those strategies, that is a matter for them. However, I am drawing up an action plan for the Irish language strategy and the Ulster-Scots culture and heritage strategy.

Mr McElduff: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for her answer go dtí an pointe seo. Cén ról a bheidh ag na grúpaí seo? What role will core funded groups have in implementing the Irish language strategy?

Ms Ní Chuilín: I know that Conradh na Gaeilge, which is responsible for lobbying and trying to procure the development of services to protect and enhance the language, will have a pivotal role, particularly in relation to local councils and their responsibility to not only the Irish language but to Ulster-Scots culture and heritage. Some of the other groups that are core funded by Foras na Gaeilge will have a role as well. My first contact with one of the six groups has been through Conradh na Gaeilge, which, at the minute, is trying to liaise with local councils to make sure that they are honouring the commitments they have in the European charter.

Rural Communities: Arm's-length Bodies

T7. Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how DCAL's arm's-length bodies could provide a better presence in rural communities. (AQT 2057/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Member was in the Chamber when I spoke about the value of libraries and the commitment I have made to them. Libraries are part of the DCAL family, and we are very keen to ensure not only that the libraries are protected but that people from around the community can use libraries; for example, to show films or have lectures, talks, exhibitions and things like that. Schools and other venues can also be used for that. I have been talking to colleagues about where our resources can provide the best services and outcomes for rural communities, so I am acutely aware of the need to get services, particularly in some of the more deprived rural areas.

Mr McAleer: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for her answer. I am sure that she will agree that libraries and schools are very much the heart of rural communities. Would she be prepared to consider those as potential locations for such events and maybe have a meeting to discuss those propositions?

Ms Ní Chuilín: Yes, I am prepared to consider that, and I am happy to meet the Member and, indeed, any other Member for that matter.

I will elaborate on my first answer to him: I have had the same discussions with the ALBs. I have had discussions with the arts sector about what it can do to bring exhibitions to libraries. The arts sector is also having discussions with those in some of the higher education and further education facilities about what we can do to make sure that we use the resources that we have to try to bring better services and, indeed, events and initiatives to rural areas. I am happy to meet the Member to see how we can further take that forward.

Irish Speakers: DCAL Staff

T9. Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, given her recently announced consultation on the Irish language, how many people employed in the Department have fluency in the Irish language to deal with that consultation. (AQT 2059/11-15)

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Ba mhaith liom ceist a chur ar an Aire maidir leis an chomhairliúchán ar Bhille na teangan. An féidir leis an Aire inse dúinn cá mhéad duine atá fostaithe ag an Roinn a bhfuil cumas Gaeilge acu le déileáil leis an teanga?

Ms Ní Chuilín: The consultation has not been launched yet. However, currently, there are at least three fluent Irish speakers in the Department. If I need additional resources to deal with the response to the draft Acht na Gaeilge — Irish Language Act — I will bring them in to cope with what I expect to be a big demand.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat as an fhreagra sin, a Aire. You said that you have three fluent Irish speakers. Are they employed in the section that will deal with the consultation process?

Ms Ní Chuilín: They are working on the Irish language strategy and the Líofa programme and will be employed directly in that section. They work in the languages branch of the Department and will be working there.

While those three people are fluent Irish speakers, the Member will know that I also outsource translation, and I will outsource additional translation to outside companies and bodies. If I need to, I can bring in additional expertise as and when it is required.

Mr McCausland: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Question Time has not yet been completed.

Jo-Anne Dobson is not in her place. That brings us to the end of the period for questions to the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure. We now come to a question for urgent oral answer.

Mr McCausland: When can I raise my point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): It is normal to raise points of order after Question Time. We will complete Question Time with a question for urgent oral answer. You or any other Member may raise points of order after that.

Question for Urgent Oral Answer

Justice

Maghaberry Prison: Recent Incidents

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I remind Members that, if they wish to ask a supplementary, they should rise continually in their place. The Member who tabled the question will be called automatically to ask a supplementary first. Two other Members tabled similar questions and will be called immediately after Mr Givan.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice what steps are being taken to restore order in Roe House at HMP Maghaberry following an escalation of tensions over the past number of weeks with ongoing adverse incidents as threats and abuse continue against Prison Service employees.

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): The Prison Service has a crucial operational responsibility in delivering a safer Northern Ireland against the backdrop of a dissident threat. I have repeatedly reinforced the difficulties of having separated areas for some prisoners in Maghaberry prison.

The incident in Maghaberry yesterday brought into sharp relief the challenges in that respect.

3.30 pm

In Roe House, at approximately 10.00 am, following a period when staff had been subject to verbal intimidation, several prisoners were instructed either to lock in their cells or move to a communal area. One prisoner who refused to comply was moved to his cell using control and restraint techniques. He was examined by a nurse, who confirmed that he had not sustained any injuries at that time. The Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) remained in control of movement on the landing throughout. Several opportunities were afforded to the prisoners who remained secured in communal areas to return to their cells but were refused. At 6.00 pm, a plan to return the prisoners to their cells was actioned, and it was completed, without the need for any force, shortly after 7.00 pm.

These are very real challenges that operational staff in Maghaberry face. I wish to reinforce my appreciation of their dedication and professionalism, and my condemnation of any threat or intimidation of Prison Service employees. The incident that occurred yesterday reinforced the fact that there are well-established arrangements to manage disorder by prisoners and to maintain the security of the establishment. It is important to remember that no prison officers or prisoners were harmed. NIPS will continue to pay the closest attention to Roe House and take action to protect staff. A clear example of the action that has been taken is the physical changes on the landing that were introduced for that purpose.

The report by the independent assessment team, which was published at the end of last year, remains the best way of making progress in Roe House. This is not about fulfilling a wish list from republican prisoners but about responding to an independent report on how to normalise the regime on the separated landings within a secure environment.

Mr Givan: The ongoing level of threat and abuse against the prison officers in Maghaberry by republicans is a deliberate, orchestrated campaign to have their demands met. The Minister and the director general are pandering to them by making concessions. Indeed, they unilaterally made compromises on the back of the stocktake exercise. When will the Minister stand firm against the demands that the republican prisoners are making? Will he condemn the graffiti that was put up on the walls yesterday, which stated, "David Black No 2 very soon"? Indeed, what efforts are being taken to support the staff —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I think that the Member has had two questions.

Mr Givan: — particularly the officer who was subjected to being surrounded by the protesters yesterday —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order. Order. It is a question to the Minister, and the Member has asked two questions.

Mr Ford: I certainly agree with the Member that there appears to be an orchestrated attempt on the part of some of the prisoners in Roe House to gain control of the landings in general, and that is not being allowed to happen. Yesterday proved that that is not being allowed to happen, by the determined, resolute and appropriate response from prison officers and prison management.

The recommendations in the stocktake report were recommendations to normalise circumstances, and the Prison Service, with my support, took action to implement the aspects of the recommendations that fell to it, while noting that there were also obligations that prisoners had to live up to.

Mr Givan referred specifically to graffiti naming David Black. I have been unable to ascertain exactly what the situation was with that. However, there is no doubt that verbal threats have been made against some prison officers, naming David Black, and there have been threats made to the officers on the landings in Roe House. That must be stood against by all of us. There is no room for any such threats. According to the agreement of August 2010, prisoners have obligations to refrain from such conduct, and that is what they must do.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Minister for coming to the House to answer questions. Does he regret giving concessions to the prisoners in Roe House through the stocktake process? Will he ensure that the prison officers on the ground in there get all the help and support that they require?

Mr Ford: The first question is a nonsense question, because I cannot regret doing something that was not done. Concessions were not made. Suggestions were made in the stocktake report of movement towards gradually normalising the regime in Roe House, and that is what was started. There was an implementation of gradual change, subject to measures coming back. Those measures need to come back from prisoners before any further progress can be made. It is not about concessions being made and regret, because that is simply not the case.

Mr McCarthy: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as na freagraí go dtí seo. I thank the Minister for his answers to date. Does he agree that a full investigation of events yesterday is needed to ascertain all the facts and that we then need to move swiftly to ensure that the good work done by the assessors is implemented so that we can have a conflict-free situation, where people can live their life free from any form of intimidation or threat?

Mr Ford: I certainly agree with Mr McCartney's suggestion that we need a conflict-free set of arrangements in Roe House. As would be normal in any such event, an investigation is being carried out in the Prison Service, external to Maghaberry, to see what lessons might be learned from yesterday's events. Certainly, positive lessons can be learned from the way in which it was managed. Other lessons may need to be carried through, and we need to establish the exact facts. That is what I expect to happen in the immediate future.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Minister for his detailed answers. I condemn any threats or attacks on prison officers and the vile graffiti that seems to have appeared yesterday.

Good work was carried out by the assessment team. Will the Minister ask the team to come back to look at the situation and to come up with further proposals to try to ease the situation and get a permanent settlement of the problem?

Mr Ford: I thank Mr Maginness for his condemnation of the threats. I am sure that he speaks for the whole House when he does so.

The role of the independent assessors is ongoing; it is not something that is completed and over with the stocktake role. There will be issues for them to address in the future as they seek to assist in the normalisation of the Roe House regime and to ensure that the 2010 agreement is stuck to by those who are currently not doing so. There will be a continuing role. We look forward to seeing any future recommendations that they make.

Mr Lunn: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. Will he give us an assurance that this prison and all prisons will be run on the basis of safety for all prisoners and staff and the community and not on the basis of what prisoners, politicians or the media attempt to dictate?

Mr Ford: I can certainly assure my colleague that all three prisons are run on the basis that the safety of prisoners, staff, visitors and the wider community is the key issue. There are clearly major difficulties in managing some prisoners, particularly in Maghaberry, but it remains the only way in which prisons will meet the needs of society and be run safely. That will be the case as long as I am Minister.

Mrs Hale: I thank the Minister for his answers today. He will remember that I raised a similar issue last week, and I thank him for meeting me at lunchtime. Will you confirm that, despite staff shortages, the number of prisoners on landings actually increased? What are you doing to remedy the staff shortages at Maghaberry prison?

Mr Ford: Mrs Hale raises the serious issue of staff shortages. Fewer staff are in post in the Prison Service at present than is appropriate. The shift patterns are maintained to some extent by the use of overtime. After a period in which there were virtually no lockdowns because of staff numbers, we saw an increase in November and December. Prison Service management is addressing those issues.

Supervision ratios in Roe House is a particular issue with staffing numbers. My understanding is that staffing ratios have been maintained as they should have been, but I suspect, as I just said to Mr McCartney, that the review of what happened yesterday will identify whether there were specific staffing issues on either of the Roe landings at that point.

Mr Poots: When Sue McAllister was at the Committee, she said that one threat was one threat too many and that the concessions being given to the prisoners would be removed if the threats resumed. Can we be assured in the House today that the concessions given to prisoners will be removed and that we deal with them in a very strong way, as opposed to being lapdogs to the prisoners?

Mr Ford: Yes, Mr Deputy Speaker, I can assure Mr Poots and the rest of the House that Prison Service management, and Maghaberry management in particular, are closely examining appropriate arrangements as they apply today and in the coming days to ensure that there is no repetition of what happened yesterday.

Mr Craig: Minister, there was a very unfortunate incident regarding the protest outside the prison in that a prison officer inadvertently drove into the middle of the protest. I have had a meeting with the Chief Constable and welcome the fact that he is reviewing his procedures. Do you feel it would be appropriate also for the prison itself to review its procedures as to how it notifies its staff of these protests and what routes they should take to the prison?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Members, as you can appreciate, there is an excessive amount of interference. I ask that Members ensure their electronic equipment is not interfering with the sound system. Minister, I am not sure if you caught all of that. If you are able to answer, please proceed. Do you need it to be repeated?

Mr Ford: I think I caught enough, thank you, Deputy Speaker. Mr Craig highlighted the issue of contacting the Chief Constable. He will be well aware that dealing with public order matters outside the prison is an issue for the PSNI. As he is a member of the Policing Board, he is well aware that that is not an issue on which I will comment. The notification of staff is an issue which I imagine will be considered in the review that is being conducted by NIPS as to how the incident was handled yesterday. Clearly, there were matters of significant concern for one member of staff, which were most unfortunate in the way that other members of staff were unable to avoid being caught up in that public order issue.

Mr Moutray: Minister, I have been contacted this morning by prison officers' families who are deeply concerned that they were, in fact, allowed to drive into a hostile protest last night, when going on to night shift. They were verbally abused and, in one case, one had their car attacked. What will you do to assure us that prison authorities will never let this happen again?

Mr Ford: Mr Moutray talks in the plural; my understanding is of one prison officer who got caught up in the public order problems outside the prison gate. As I have just said to his colleague, that is an issue, which I imagine will be followed up by the Prison Service in terms of notification. Mr Craig previously indicated his intention: I did not quite catch whether he had spoken to, or intended to speak to, the Chief Constable, which is the appropriate way in which to discuss the policing arrangements.

Mr Allister: Does the Minister intend to continue with the folly of the concession of tripling the number of prisoners permitted on the landings at any one time, which contributes to such events? He says that what happens outside is a matter for the Chief Constable, but, as Justice Minister, is he not concerned at the lack of policing that was evident last night?

Mr Ford: It appears that even though Mr Craig understands the concept of the operational responsibilities of the Chief Constable, Mr Allister does not. Perhaps I could ask Mr Craig to assist Mr Allister in learning that point. I really do wonder where nonsense like the “folly” of “tripling” numbers of prisoners on the landings come from, because, to me, an increase from three to four prisoners on the landing at a time is an increase of 33%, not 300%.

Mr Frew: Minister, in your last answer, you mentioned moving the number from three to four. When you consider the lack of staff and prison officers who are on the landings, moving from three to four is a colossal leap that puts more officers, prison officers and staff under incredible pressure and —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Can we have a question, please?

Mr Frew: — under more threat.

Mr Ford: I think there was a question there somewhere, Mr Deputy Speaker. The issue of what was described as a “lack of staff on landings” is an issue where there are concerns about the overall staffing of the Prison Service, but staffing ratios on different landings in different houses in different prisons will vary depending on the time of day, the circumstances, the particular group of prisoners and the number of prisoners who happen to be there. Mr Frew and others can remain assured that staffing ratios are at the highest when dealing with category A prisoners and rather lower when dealing with those prisoners who require less supervision for their safety or the safety of officers.

Mr McCausland: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. In relation to the question asked by my colleague Mr Weir to the Culture Minister, is it in order for the Minister to mislead the House in relation to the strategies for the Irish language and Ulster-Scots language and culture? She did not table her strategies for the Executive meetings, and she neither sought nor secured the approval of the Executive for them. Therefore, they have no status whatsoever.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I thank the Member for raising the issue. He has put his points on the record. I will ensure that it is drawn to the Speaker’s attention if there is any need for him to intervene.

I ask Members to take their ease for a few moments as we change the people at the Table.

Crime and Courts Act 2013 (National Crime Agency and Proceeds of Crime) (Northern Ireland) Order 2015

Debate resumed on motion:

That this Assembly consents to the making of the draft Crime and Courts Act 2013 (National Crime Agency and Proceeds of Crime) (Northern Ireland) Order 2015 laid before Parliament on 29 January 2015. — [Mr Ross.]

Mrs D Kelly: I am pleased to speak on behalf of the SDLP this afternoon in support of the motion. The SDLP has, over the last number of months, been negotiating hard and long into the evenings with the Department of Justice, the National Crime Agency (NCA) and the PSNI on the accountability mechanisms that, we believe, are necessary to allow the full operation of the NCA in the North of Ireland. We believe that it is the right time for that. Only recently, senior police officers referred to there being up to 160 organised crime gangs in the North, and we believe that it is in the public interest for the full resources available to the law enforcement agencies in the North to be in place for them to go after the criminals. We are pleased with the level of accountability that we have secured. I will touch on some aspects of that shortly.

Today is a day when, once again, the SDLP gives leadership. It gives leadership across the policing architecture and makes its own decision on what is right, and not just for the people whom we represent. The accountability mechanisms that we have secured will win favour with all of the people. I am told by senior police officers and others that many chief constables in GB are quite jealous of the accountability mechanisms that we have secured.

I noted Mr Kelly's earlier comments. I hope he is not too aggrieved that, on this occasion, he did not act as the postman for the NIO in relation to the delivery of letters of comfort to the SDLP from the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State.

At a recent meeting of the Policing Board, Policing Board member Caitríona Ruane asked the Chief Constable about operations against the UVF, particularly in east Belfast. The answer was that the police would be able to go after them harder and faster if they had the support and the resources available through the full operation of the NCA. I hope that today puts on notice those people who want to destroy our communities and infect our young people with their drugs and their criminality.

So, too, has the NCA been put on notice. It has the support of the broad community in the North, and we want to see results as a consequence of it having, with the police, the full range of powers.

I wish to outline some of the accountability mechanisms, which were not on the table only a matter of weeks ago, in more detail than Mr Ross did. He stole some of my thunder in outlining some of those accountability mechanisms.

One that is most important and which Mr Ross referred to is the code of ethics. We are very pleased that the director general of the NCA will not only be bound by but will be held to account on the code of ethics, which is similar to that of the PSNI. We welcome his intention to see where he can incorporate the best parts of that code of ethics into the operation of the NCA not only here but in GB. That says something about the code of ethics to which our police officers have to adhere.

We are also very pleased with the Police Ombudsman's full range of powers. Not only will he have the full powers available to him in relation to how the NCA operates here, but, if an NCA operative acts wrongly here, or there is a complaint against him, the Police Ombudsman can have that long reach across to GB or wherever that officer may be. There will be no hiding place for them.

We also believe that we have secured a full range of powers, both in statute and in the memorandums of understanding. As detailed in the papers before you, the human rights adviser of the Policing Board will have full powers of inspection and will have the same level of transparency available for her inspection of the NCA. The Policing Board, most especially, will have the full range of powers of accountability and scrutiny, which will include being able to hold the director general to account not only in relation to the annual plan but in how he gives effect to the annual plan.

The SDLP has worked hard. We always said that, if we believed that the time was right and the accountability mechanisms were right, we would lend our support to the operation of the NCA. I believe that that day has come.

Mr Kennedy: This is an important debate. At the outset, I welcome the debate, and I particularly welcome the statement that we have just heard from Mrs Kelly: very clear and distinct support has been indicated — some would say at long last — by the SDLP. It is welcome nonetheless because we bear in mind that it was as far back as 2010 that the then Home Secretary announced the creation of the NCA to lead the UK's fight to cut serious and organised crime, which the NCA's website states is one of the greatest threats to the UK's national security. The National Crime Agency became operational in October 2013, and its website describes it as a new crime-fighting agency with:

"national and international reach and the mandate and powers to work in partnership with other law enforcement organisations to bring the full weight of the law to bear on serious and organised criminals."

Organised crime, of course, covers a diverse range of activities, including child sexual exploitation and abuse; the criminal use of firearms; cyber crime; drugs; economic crime; organised acquisitive crime; plus organised immigration crime and human trafficking. The NCA responds on a 24/7 basis, targeting the criminals and groups posing the biggest risks to the UK. It does this in three ways: by conducting its own operations; by providing operational and specialist support to its partners' operations; and by providing clear national leadership that ensures that UK law enforcement makes the best use of its collective resources and targets them most effectively.

The NCA builds a single comprehensive picture of serious and organised crime affecting the UK, drawing on information and intelligence from a wide range of sources that drives both the NCA's and its partners' operational activity. It has been a great source of concern that the NCA has not been able to operate in Northern Ireland to the same extent as in the rest of the United Kingdom. That denies us the same level of protection as the rest of the kingdom and also risks Northern Ireland becoming a back door for organised and criminal gangs to use as an entry point to pursue their illegal activities in the United Kingdom. The Ulster Unionist Party has been clear from day 1 that this situation is simply not acceptable. We consistently argued that point at Stormont and at Westminster. I pay tribute to my party colleague Lord Empey, who, in another House in another place, has doggedly pursued the issue.

The NCA has a great deal of expertise, which the PSNI should be able to call upon to assist it in the fight against serious and organised crime. There is no question that the PSNI and Northern Ireland plc need the National Crime Agency. Previous opposition to the NCA operating here as in the rest of the UK was couched in terms of concerns about oversight arrangements, and I trust that those have now been overcome.

Police assessments state that there are at least 140 organised criminal gangs operating in Northern Ireland. Members will know from within their own constituencies that many of our communities have a serious problem with gangs supplying illegal drugs. In my own constituency, there is a major and well-documented problem with fuel smuggling. Fuel fraud costs the Exchequer an estimated £80 million per year in lost taxes, which would be better spent on health, education or, dare I say, roads. There is also conclusive proof of the shocking damage that it causes to the environment and the health and well-being of local residents. There have been recent media reports highlighting the shocking extent of pollution to waterways that has been caused as a result of the illegal activities of criminal gangs through fuel smuggling, so any assistance that the NCA could provide would be very welcome. I have absolutely no doubt that the agency, working with the PSNI —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Kennedy: — could make a huge contribution to the welfare of our people in Northern Ireland.

Mr Lunn: I am happy to support the motion. The need for the extension of the NCA into the devolved area is self-evident. The current Chief Constable, his predecessor, the Deputy Chief Constable and all the assistant chief constables have articulated in the strongest possible terms the detriment that is being caused to the fight against organised crime, to the protection of children and to the seizure of criminal assets. In briefings to the Policing Board and in media interviews, they have set out real instances where their inability to work with the NCA on the ground in Northern Ireland has left people exposed. Sometimes, the exposure is direct, where criminality that the NCA could help tackle has not been acted upon as effectively as it could. Sometimes, it is indirect, when resources that could have been deployed to safeguard the public have had to be redirected to fill gaps left by the absence of the NCA.

The NCA's international reach, expertise and specialism in relation to particular crime types, such as major financial crime and the rapidly growing area of cybercrime, offers the PSNI a level of support and all of us in Northern Ireland a level of protection that we need. They have also made clear how the absence of the NCA in operations relating to devolved policing has meant the diversion of PSNI resources into areas where the NCA could have brought its resources to bear. Work that the NCA would willingly do is having to be done by a diminishing number of PSNI officers. If that was an issue two years ago, how much more of an issue is it now, with the PSNI budget suffering reductions of millions year on year?

The police will, of course, work to fill that gap, just as they have pledged to do so in relation to other areas where the reducing budget is putting them under pressure, but they simply should not have to. The NCA is there as a free benefit to be used in the best interests of law-abiding people, so why on earth would we not avail ourselves of it? The PSNI cannot close the gap in relation to civil recovery, nor can any other agency. In the absence of the NCA, civil recovery has been left largely unattended since October 2013. That is an area where effective action can make a real and lasting impact on organised criminals, tackling them in ways that the criminal law struggles at times to do and in ways that the public want to see. We need to get back into it.

4.00 pm

Some will argue that we should not avail ourselves of the NCA because there is no proper accountability in place. Frankly, nobody who has read the papers that the Minister of Justice circulated to parties in recent weeks can credibly argue that the accountability arrangements for the NCA are still not sufficient.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Member for giving way. He is a member of the Policing Board and has vast experience in that organisation. Does he accept that the additional accountability provisions made as a result of these negotiations and settlement will add to the credibility of the NCA and, indeed, the PSNI in the fight against organised crime?

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Lunn: I thank Mr Maginness for the intervention. I completely agree with him that this can only be of benefit in the overall structure of the accountability mechanisms. At this point, I say to Sinn Féin that, given the Policing Board's role in the future, and, if I may say so, the contribution that the Sinn Féin members, particularly Mr Kelly, Mr Sheehan and Ms Ruane, who, strangely, are not in their places, have made to it — they should not be too concerned about their ability to scrutinise this new body through the auspices of the Policing Board, as they have done successfully in the last four years.

The package now available reflects an array of measures. With the Policing Board, the ombudsman, Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland (CJINI), Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC) and the Surveillance Commissioner, to name only some — there are too many to list in the time that I have available — nobody could credibly claim that any aspect of the NCA's functions in Northern Ireland have been left uncovered. The Policing Board in particular has been given a powerful role.

It is right to acknowledge the SDLP's contribution in intensive discussions in recent weeks. Proper, realistic engagement has paid off. I commend Mrs Kelly, Mr Maginness and Mr Attwood. They have taken due diligence to heights unscaled in the past. That is good because they are now satisfied and on board — you are very welcome.

Ironically, if we were not to pass the motion, the NCA would continue to operate in Northern Ireland on non-devolved matters without any of these accountability measures. There would be no role for the board, the ombudsman or anybody else. You really cannot argue for accountability on one hand and, on the other hand, vote against measures that deliver that accountability. It just does not make sense.

I am perfectly happy to support the motion. It offers us an opportunity to move on, get past the seemingly endless discussions and stand-offs, get on with the job that we were given to do and allow the PSNI and the NCA to get on with theirs. I support the motion.

Mr Craig: I also support the motion. Indeed, it has been an ongoing debate. I declare an interest as a member of the Policing Board, and it has been an ongoing debate for the board itself.

At this point, it is appropriate that we sign up to the resources of the NCA. As some Members have already pointed out, policing in Northern Ireland is under huge budgetary and resource pressures. At present, we are supposed, allegedly, to have 7,000 police officers in Northern Ireland. The simple truth is that the current figure falls 300 short of that. Recruitment is under way to rectify that situation, if possible and if finances allow. There is a huge question mark over that. Under those circumstances, it is quite clear that any external resources that the Chief Constable could rely on, such as the National Crime Agency, are not only welcome but essential in order to ensure the safekeeping and security of everyone in Northern Ireland.

It is clear from the figures presented to the Policing Board that criminal gang activity is rising in Northern Ireland.

In fact, the figures for drugs seized in the past three to four years show an alarming increase, with the figure almost doubling every year for the past three years. That is a clear indication that, given the lack of the National Crime Agency in Northern Ireland and the lack of an ability to seize the assets of crimes in this country, criminals, unlike their caricatures, who are portrayed as being stupid, are far from stupid. They are clearly exploiting the loophole here at present. That is something that, hopefully, the House will rectify today.

I also want to speak on the need for accountability for the National Crime Agency in Northern Ireland. That issue was raised not only by our colleagues on the other side of the House but by us, and, more importantly, it was also raised by the Chief Constable. Even he could not figure out how, under any circumstances, two law enforcement agencies could act in the one jurisdiction and serious incidents not occur. He has argued from the very start that accountability for the NCA and its operations in Northern Ireland should go through the office of the Chief Constable. The order clearly indicates that that is the case and will be the case. Under those circumstances, it is very simple for me to support the measures proposed here today.

We all know that the PSNI is one of the most accountable police forces on the planet, quite frankly. It is accountable to HMIC, CJINI and the ombudsman's office, and, ultimately, the Chief Constable is accountable to the Policing Board. That same Chief Constable will now also have the responsibility of taking on whatever actions the NCA takes in Northern Ireland. Ultimately, it will be accountable to the Policing Board. I am sorely tempted to say that, as members of the Policing Board, we are going to have an awful lot on our plate in a short time, because we will now be accountable not only for the Chief Constable but for the NCA, and, ultimately, we are also going to be held to account by the Historical Investigations Unit (HIU). There will be no slackness on the Policing Board when it comes to the number of things that we will have to look after.

The Bill clearly opens up a pathway forward, which, hopefully, will see the NCA taking action against the criminal gangs who have moved into Northern Ireland over the past number of years, as well as drug dealers and child molesters. I, for one, welcome not only the Bill but the ability of the Policing Board to scrutinise the NCA and its actions taken to attack those criminal activities. I commend the order to the House.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Gerry Kelly dealt with the wider issues of this particular motion. I am very mindful of the fact that Caitríona Ruane made a point of order this morning, and we accept the competency of the motion. However, I want to outline aspects of this important matter that have been brought to the Assembly for a decision that, in my party's opinion, are questionable and inappropriate.

The established mechanism, as laid out in Standing Orders and based on the principles underpinning the Good Friday Agreement, that permits Westminster legislation to take effect here is a legislative consent motion (LCM). Those structures were designed to ensure effective protections, accountability and the primacy of the Assembly. Indeed, the Minister previously tried to bring an LCM to deal with the role and remit of the NCA in this jurisdiction. The route for bringing that to the House is by Executive approval. In particular, Executive approval is sought if a matter is considered significant, controversial or falling outside the Programme for Government. I contend that many people would see the remit of the NCA as significant and, indeed, controversial. It certainly is not in the Programme for Government. That process may not be to the liking of the Minister and those who rushed to have the NCA in place, irrespective of the impact that it will have on accountable policing, good governance and how the Assembly should do its business. However, that process has been circumvented by the Minister bypassing the Executive and the LCM process.

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): Will the Member give way?

Mr McCartney: No, I will not give way. You will have an opportunity and can address all the questions that I will put.

The route chosen is now the one before us, and that is the one that we will vote on today. I want to outline how this has been brought to the Assembly in, in my opinion, a clumsy and damaging manner. The British Government laid an order in their Parliament on 29 January 2015. Paragraph 7.2 of the explanatory notes, which is policy background, states:

“David Ford MLA, the [NI] Justice Minister, laid a motion before the ... Assembly on 27 January ... [The text of the motion reads: —”

Mr Ford: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Mr McCartney is reading from an early inaccurate draft of the explanatory memorandum, and it is inappropriate that he should make an argument on that basis. The correct explanatory memorandum makes it absolutely clear that the motion has not been tabled by the Minister.

Mr McCartney: The Minister finds himself guilty before I make the case.

“[The text of the motion reads: ‘That this Assembly consents to the making of the draft Crime and Courts Act 2013 (National Crime Agency and Proceeds of Crime) [(NI)] Order 2015, laid before Parliament on 29 January 2015.’]”

Paragraph 7.3 outlines the relevant NCA provisions and states that they are:

“consistent with the ... motion laid before the ... Assembly ... by David Ford MLA”.

Mr Ford: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. I have corrected Mr McCartney. Is it appropriate that he should continue to repeat the inaccurate early version that was subsequently corrected and that is available in the Assembly Library for all Members?

Mr Speaker: The point has been made for the record, and I think that it is appropriate that it should be. I think that it is also appropriate to remind ourselves that we are talking about a private Member’s motion. To allege that the Justice Minister has any direct association with that would, at the very least, require that you demonstrate that. We know who co-signed the motion, and it was not the Minister of Justice, no matter what suspicions or beliefs that you have or any quotation of similar text. Let us deal with the facts and the motion that is before us, please.

Mr McCartney: With respect, I am dealing with the facts. I received correspondence as a member of the Justice Committee, and I am reading from that correspondence. The Minister may have subsequently corrected some aspect, but I am reading from a document that I have in my possession.

I will go on. For the record, last Tuesday, 27 January, at the Assembly Business Committee, the DUP requested that its motion on human fertilisation be replaced by another motion, which is the motion that is now before us, the wording of which is the exact wording in the memorandum that was laid before the British Parliament two days later in the name of the Justice Minister. I will not dwell on the inaccuracy or competency of that order; that is a matter for Westminster. Indeed, on Friday 29 January, the Justice Committee received a letter and a copy of the order and the memorandum that again stated that the Minister had tabled the motion at the Assembly. The Minister did not correct what was an obvious error, if that is what it was —

Mr Ford: The Minister did correct it.

Mr McCartney: — in his correspondence to the Committee. I am told that no documents, explanation or correction have since been provided to the Committee. I am told that the documents are now before the British Parliament and that they have been corrected and amended and that the Minister’s name has now been removed.

Mr A Maginness: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCartney: No. No explanation has been offered as to why such an error occurred; there is just reference to the need to withdraw an earlier explanatory memorandum. So that is the trail. I notice that the names of the proposers of the motion do not appear in the explanation. To date, no such corrected document has been sent to the Justice Committee.

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCartney: No. So much for openness and transparency. Indeed, only last week, at the Justice Committee, in response to Edwin Poots, the Justice Minister stated that he did not like taking regulations directly to the Assembly —

Mr Speaker: The Member will bring his remarks to a close.

Mr McCartney: — and that the established protocol was to take them through the Committee. So the Minister has not dealt with this. The Minister has tried today, by points of order, to mislead this Assembly.

Mr Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Ford: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Ask the Member to withdraw that slur, please.

Mr Sheehan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Perhaps I am wrong, but I would have thought that, given that the Minister made a couple of points of order, Mr McCartney would have been given extra time as a result.

4.15 pm

Mr Speaker: The clock was stopped, but you do not get extra time for points of order. The clock was stopped, and I was quite generous in interpreting what was left. You have made your point, and it is on the record. I will take a look at the record and use my judgement to see whether there was a slur. I think that the Member was attempting to set out a paper trail, and he has succeeded in putting that on the record as well. So I suggest that we move on, and I call —

Mr Ford: Further to that point of order, I accept the ruling that you will examine it, but Mr McCartney specifically accused me of misleading the Assembly, and that is a very serious charge against a Minister.

Mr Speaker: I will take the time to read the record before I come to a conclusion. I think that that is only fair on everybody and on the Assembly itself. I will take a look at Hansard, and that is what I would do in any such circumstance.

Mr McCartney: Can I make a point of order?

Mr Speaker: Of course you can.

Mr McCartney: When you examine the record, examine what the Minister alleged that I was doing. The Minister, in effect, accused me of lying.

Mr Speaker: I did not pick that up at all, but I will take a look at Hansard and, if that becomes apparent to me and I missed it, I will return to the subject.

I now call Mr Edwin Poots and thank him for his patience.

Mr Poots: Mr Speaker, it is not often that I am brought in as a peacemaker, but on this occasion I am happy to intervene in the tussle between the Minister and Mr McCartney. Sinn Féin would do well to examine the £700,000 that it pays to Research Services Ireland if the information that it gets is so faulty. I have just come from a Committee meeting where Sinn Féin also had faulty information.

This is a good day. There has been a whole series of blocking mechanisms around this issue for a long period. The people of Northern Ireland will welcome the fact that Sinn Féin is no longer capable of blocking this particular measure from going forward, because it will make a real, tangible, demonstrable difference to the lives of people across Northern Ireland, and it will make a real, tangible, demonstrable difference to the criminals who are operating in Northern Ireland. For the last number of years, we have not been able to claim the assets from the criminals and they have been able to keep them, as a result of the procrastination that has taken place around this issue. As a consequence, the criminals have been pounds in.

What is Sinn Féin afraid of? We know that one of the organisations in republican circles was recently named as being in the top 10 of criminal organisations for its wealth and assets. Why does Sinn Féin not want to go after that organisation? Perhaps it will explain. Maybe the next Sinn Féin member to speak will tell us why that party does not want to go after the assets of those criminals — individuals who will terrorise the communities that they represent. They will bully and evict people within those communities and use weaponry against those individuals — weaponry bought by the benefits of having those criminal assets that Sinn Féin does not want removed from such individuals. It is good news for those people who are opposed to people smuggling and the criminal activities that are taking place in this Province daily. I welcome the fact that we have moved a considerable step forward to bringing the National Crime Agency to Northern Ireland. It will relieve considerable pressure on the PSNI and put considerably greater pressure on individuals involved in crime.

Some months ago, George Hamilton, the Chief Constable, indicated that he was satisfied with the accountability measures that are in place. That had not always been the case. So I welcome the fact that the SDLP has now crossed the line and it, too, is satisfied with the accountability measures. It is right and appropriate that we have one police service in Northern Ireland. That is something that we need to be very careful about in moving forward with historic investigations: that we have one police service that is accountable to the people of Northern Ireland.

Sinn Féin engages in that accountability mechanism yet seeks to block the National Crime Agency, in spite of the fact that the accountability measures have been applied through the Policing Board and the PSNI Chief Constable. One has to pose this question again: what is Sinn Féin's problem with this? Over the past 10 years in Wales — I do not believe that Wales has as strong a criminal underworld as Northern Ireland — £46 million that was in the hands of criminals has been released back into the community. One thinks, for example, of Minister Ford's problems in funding the likes of the Railway Street —

Mr Frew: I thank the Member for giving way. Does the Member agree with me that there may be two things annoying Sinn Féin about this matter? The first thing is that crime will now be tackled effectively in Northern Ireland, or maybe it is that, because they cannot take their seats in Westminster, they will not be able to affect it going through?

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Poots: Thank you, Mr Speaker. Of course, they can take their seats in Westminster; they just choose not to represent the people on that front.

I believe that crime will be tackled more effectively. While it will not be a panacea — there will still be people out there engaging in criminal activity — it will be another tool in the armoury, and a very significant tool it will be.

I was going to suggest that Minister Ford was having tremendous difficulties funding an organisation in the Member's constituency — on Railway Street in Ballymena — that was doing tremendous work. Would it not be wonderful if the assets stripped off criminals could be put into an organisation like that and help to maintain organisations that support women who are being brutalised, people who are trying to come off drugs and all those things? This is a no-brainer, and Sinn Féin would do well to step up to the plate, demonstrate some degree of responsibility —

Mr Speaker: Would the Member bring his remarks to a close?

Mr Poots: — and support the motion today, which can take Northern Ireland a significant step forward in tackling crime.

Mr Sheehan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. First of all, I must refer to the accusation that Sinn Féin is afraid to tackle crime, dissident republicans or any other group. We are the people who come face to face with them in the community. We are the people who stand up to them, who tell them that they are cowards, parasites and traitors. We are the ones who have had death threats from them.

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Mr Sheehan: No, I will not give way. We are not afraid of tackling crime. The best way to tackle crime is to ensure that law enforcement officers have the complete confidence of the community. Given the legacy of policing in this part of the world, it is absolutely essential that law enforcement in all its guises has the complete confidence of the community. We have spent the last number of years building confidence in the PSNI. We are confident that the PSNI itself would have the ability to deal with all crime, if it was properly resourced. It is not, and that is another matter.

The motion came to the Floor of the Assembly today in a rather convoluted way. The Minister, as Raymond McCartney pointed out, has questions to answer around that. The Minister was obviously very defensive during Mr McCartney's contribution, and no doubt he will be able to answer for himself at a later date. I am not going to labour that point.

What is important is that we were in the middle of a negotiation. Gains have been made; there is absolutely no doubt about that. The parties opposite would have settled for anything for the NCA to set up shop here. We said that we needed accountability, and we have gone a long way to getting that. Further progress on the negotiation was cut short by the laying of this Order in Council in Westminster.

Those who settled for that stopped the negotiation. It has opened the way — this is the difficulty — for the Home Secretary at any time by Order in Council to extend the functions of the NCA to include a counterterrorism remit.

The SDLP says that it has a letter of comfort from the British Home Secretary saying that she will not extend the function of the NCA. If she is prepared to say that in a letter, why was she not prepared to do so in the Order in Council? What is the difficulty there? The suspicion here will be that she is not sincere in what she says in her letter; that is what ordinary people in the street will say. This will be another shadowy organisation that will not command confidence. The SDLP has a letter stating one thing, but it is not mentioned in the Order in Council and there is no commitment from the British Home Secretary to ensure that it is included in a further Order in Council.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Sheehan: I will give way; go ahead.

Mr Allister: I am puzzled by Sinn Féin's position; well, maybe not. I would like to explore Sinn Féin's position. They tell us that they have signed up to the support of policing and the rule of law, but, whether they like it or not, it seems probable that the NCA will come into operation. Its officers will be able to operate as PSNI officers in Northern Ireland. The question for Sinn Féin, therefore, is this: will it support those officers and tell the community to support them in their operations as PSNI officers? That is the challenge to Sinn Féin.

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Sheehan: This is the first time I have heard that the NCA will be PSNI officers. My understanding is that it is a distinct organisation. The Member has information that I certainly do not have.

The negotiations ended prematurely as a result of one party here accepting a commitment that will not be enforced in legislation. That is the difficulty. Leaving that to the side, it would be churlish not to acknowledge the gains that have been made around NCA accountability, on the ability of the Policing Board to require disclosure, on ensuring that not only can the board call in the ombudsman but the ombudsman can call himself in if and when required and on making the discharge of civil recovery functions subject to the oversight of the board, the ombudsman, Criminal Justice Inspection (CJI) and HMIC. That is also progress, as is the requirement on the NCA to obtain the agreement of an Assistant Chief Constable (ACC) prior to commencing covert investigations. Of course, the fact that that ACC would be fully accountable to the Policing Board in respect of that agreement is also progress.

Mr A Maginness: I will deal with the last points made by the Sinn Féin Member for West Belfast. The fact is that there have been substantial changes in law. I could go through all of them, but I will go through some of them to satisfy the House. It is in law that the Policing Board will monitor the exercise of NCA functions in Northern Ireland and not only its annual plan. There is in law a provision that the Minister of Justice can —

Mr Sheehan: Will the Member give way?

Mr A Maginness: No, just hear me out, just hear the list. There is a provision that the Minister of Justice can request HMIC to carry out an inspection of NCA in addition to the Policing Board asking the Minister to exercise his power. NCA officers will have to read and understand the PSNI code of ethics and NCA disciplinary code, which is explicitly referred to in statute and makes NCA officers bound by the code of ethics. There will be a statutory requirement on the NCA to supply the ombudsman with such information and documents as the ombudsman may require for the purposes of or in connection with the exercise of any of the ombudsman's functions. As with section 55 of the Police Act 1998, the NCA can call in the Police Ombudsman. I could go on and on; that is in law.

So the Member cannot come to the House and say that his party — I do not recognise that his party negotiated at all in relation to this; he may claim that for the media, but I do not see any evidence, papers or anything else — did any negotiating. Similar to the way in which the PSNI was set up, it was the SDLP that did all the hard work. It was the SDLP that brought about the creation of the PSNI. So we are not going to accept the rubbish — the rubbish — that the Member has just stated in relation to negotiations not being completed. The negotiations were completed. The negotiations were substantial, and my party believes that, in law, we established a massive improvement in the accountability measures and the other measures necessary to bring about the operational acceptance of the NCA here in Northern Ireland.

4.30 pm

The previous Sinn Féin Member who spoke, Mr McCartney, spent most of his time talking about the procedures in relation to the motion. Not once did he refer to any point of substance — not once. He talked about the procedures. Now, the Business Office accepted the motion as valid. I assume it took advice in relation to it. I cannot see how on earth the motion is not a viable motion, not one in law or not one that can be agreed by the House.

Mr Speaker: I want to make it clear that the Member who you just referred to also accepted, in his presentation, that this was a valid motion.

Mr A Maginness: I accept the point that he made, but he spent all his time exclusively talking about procedure. Not once did he comment on the merits of the changes that have taken place in relation to the NCA here in Northern Ireland.

Mr Frew: I thank the Member for giving way. I commend the SDLP on the issue at this time. Does the Member think that there is now any reason why Sinn Féin should withhold support for the NCA?

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Member for his intervention. He, of course, reminds me of what Mr Kelly said in the Assembly in, I think, 2013 in relation to the NCA:

"There is absolutely nothing to fear from accountability. I really do not understand what you are afraid of. The Member spoke about the ombudsman: the easy answer to that is that that will be involved if we can get the full suite of accountability mechanisms, which was agreed in Patten and should be brought in here." — [Official Report, Bound Volume 98, p9, col 1].

That was the point made by Mr Kelly, the spokesperson for Sinn Féin on policing and on the NCA. We have achieved that. The Members outside Sinn Féin accept and recognise that, the Chief Constable recognises that and any reasonable independent observer will accept that. That has been an achievement for all of us, because we all made a contribution to this. It is important that it is publicly recognised that accountability has been achieved. That is what we sought at the beginning of our negotiations. It is what we sought to the very end of the negotiations, and that is what has been achieved. I believe that this is a triumph for common sense, a triumph for negotiation, a triumph for democracy and a triumph for the Assembly.

Mr Frew: I support the motion. It is a good day, as my colleague Edwin Poots suggested. It is a good day for the House, a good day for Northern Ireland and a good day for the people of Northern Ireland, the law-abiding citizens of this country. It is a bad day for the criminal elements in our society, the leeches on our society that, through their crimes and their activities, suck our people dry. We should rejoice in the House today. The will of the House will be tested today, and everyone in this country of the UK and throughout the world will know what the mind of Northern Ireland is on the issue.

Whilst I would have liked to see the NCA with full operational capacity in Northern Ireland much sooner, I recognise the stance taken and the movement made by the SDLP. I did not necessarily agree with their positions and negotiating stances, but I acknowledge that there is still a job of work to be done in negotiation, whether you agree with it or not. I must say that the SDLP has put its hand to the wheel to come up with an outcome that is acceptable to the vast majority of people in the House. At one time, I feared that the SDLP, like Sinn Féin, was hiding behind the cloak of accountability. We will go on for ever and a day on the question of how accountable is accountability. However, I am glad that my fear has not been realised and that we have come to an agreement that the vast majority of people in the House can support.

This will be an asset of great value to the people of Northern Ireland. For the foreseeable future, people will be able to rest easy in their bed, at their place of work and in their home because of the activities of the NCA and the PSNI in combating crime of the most serious and complicated nature. When we talk about these criminals, we are not talking about people who wear stripy jumpers and have a swag bag over their shoulder; these are the most organised, evil, smart, clever criminals in the world. I fear that they have been looking towards Northern Ireland because of the vacuum that was created here, and we must recognise that.

Mr Givan: I appreciate the Member giving way. In anticipation of the democratic decision of the House to pass the motion today, does he not think that it is incumbent on Sinn Féin to accept and respect that democratic decision and then give its support to the NCA and its structures operating in Northern Ireland?

Mr Speaker: The Member will have an extra minute.

Mr Frew: Thank you for your intervention, Mr Givan. That is the crux of the matter, here and now. If you value accountability — the Members opposite say that they do — law and order and democracy, you should have no reason whatever for not putting your full support behind the NCA when it becomes fully operational.

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the Member for giving way. Does the Member agree that, in areas such as south Armagh, which has been scourged by the curse of fuel smuggling and the illicit cross-border trade going through that part of Northern Ireland, moderate nationalist voters who have been plagued by that will equally rejoice today and that, come an election, they may be influenced by the outcomes of what happens in the House today?

Mr Sheehan: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. The NCA already has responsibility and is operational on the issue of fuel smuggling.

Mr Speaker: Thanks for that information. It is on the record.

Mr Frew: The Member across the way misses the point entirely. Even though the NCA has had operational capacity in Northern Ireland and works with an Garda Síochána down south in the Republic, it was not able to claim and collect the assets. It is the assets that make it incredibly lucrative for the criminals. I am glad that those people will now be hunted down and stripped of their assets and their wealth. For far too long, they have held the people of Northern Ireland to ransom. That has to stop, and it should stop now.

I commend the SDLP for coming to its position. It is a day for the enlightened and for slow learners, and I look forward to the day when Sinn Féin also comes to that realisation. If it does not, these questions will remain: what has it got to hide? What is it hiding within its communities, the people whom it says it represents? What is Sinn Féin hiding that it does not want the NCA to find or to collect? That question will be on the lips of all the people of Northern Ireland today.

Mr Attwood: First, I make the point that this is a negotiation that the SDLP should never have had, because these NCA matters, which are now being put into law, were settled in the Patten negotiation, in the Police Acts and in the implementation of Patten's 175 recommendations. When it comes to accountability, oversight and the ombudsman, these matters were settled nearly 15 years ago. Neither the SDLP nor anybody else should have come back to this negotiation, because these matters had been resolved previously. There should not have been any reason for any London Government to roll back, through the front or back door, that which had been achieved in the role of the PSNI, the authority of the Policing Board, the powers of the ombudsman and the new beginning to policing.

However, we had to go back and do some of it again. If people look at the order that was tabled last Thursday, they will see the proof of that negotiation — proof that nobody in the Chamber can find reason to dispute. There is nothing in the legislation that is now proposed, further to the SDLP negotiation, that anybody can dispute. Indeed, it now seems that even the DUP and others accept — I say this gently, because I noted carefully what they said — that the thresholds of accountability now being proposed are beyond what was there two years ago. Consequently, and Mr Craig best made the point, accountability around policing is better than what we had a couple of years ago.

Members have outlined what this will mean. It will mean compliance with the PSNI code of ethics. It will mean that the Home Secretary no longer has a veto over those precious powers of the Policing Board when it comes to reports and inquiries.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: Yes.

Mrs D Kelly: It also means, does it not, Mr Attwood, that the Chief Constable has the power of veto over the operation of the NCA?

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Attwood: Thank you.

Yes, and that includes a veto over the recruitment of agents or the use of other intelligence weapons and mechanisms. More than that, the Police Ombudsman now has the full menu of powers necessary to ensure that he can take complaints in the devolved and non-devolved sectors about NCA conduct or activity. Therefore, as best we can, and far more than some would have suggested, we have recreated the powers of the Policing Board over the NCA and the primacy of the Chief Constable when it comes to the operational life of the NCA. That is no mean success in the past number of months.

I put on record that not just my colleagues but other individuals in government and agencies applied themselves to the task of that most intense negotiation, especially since the summer of last year, in order that what had been secured 15 years ago with Patten, the Policing Board, the ombudsman and all the rest of it should not be prejudiced and put in jeopardy.

I do not agree with what the DUP has done in challenging Sinn Féin in some speeches today. Sinn Féin was largely absent from the negotiation, but it has been fulsome in its recognition of the outcome. From our conversations with Sinn Féin over the past number of days, I do not think that there is any dispute in its Members' minds — it is for them to speak — about the measure of what has been achieved. It seems to me that, in these circumstances, Sinn Féin should look at its own history.

People were ahead of the parties when it came to the new beginning for policing, and it is my belief that people are again ahead of the parties on a whole lot of aspects of public policy in Northern Ireland, including when it comes to standing against organised crime on this island. I ask Sinn Féin, as it processes this, to consider making a call earlier rather than later, rather than what happened on policing, when the call was later rather than sooner.

4.45 pm

Are there issues that even I would have tried to negotiate further on? Yes. However, given the threat of organised crime on this island, given the thresholds of accountability that have now been secured, and given that our people are under the cosh when it comes to environmental crime operations up in Derry and illegal fuel smuggling in the south Armagh area, can anybody deny that it is time for all of us to stand in solidarity with those who face down all the criminals, wherever they might be —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Attwood: — including those who are off limits and those who are not off limits?

Mr Douglas: As a member of the Justice Committee, I support the motion. I congratulate my colleagues Alastair Ross and Stewart Dickson for bringing this hugely important issue before the House.

Earlier today, my colleague Alastair Ross said:

"given the fact that the Westminster term is coming to a close and there is a short window left for legislation to be passed, it is my estimation that this is probably the last opportunity for the House to signal its consent for the NCA to operate fully here in Northern Ireland."

I hope that people will respond to that, accept that this is the last opportunity and go for it.

I want to read from a letter that we got from the Minister. I hope that this does not trigger a point of order, as happened earlier. The Minister says that he believes that:

"the order and the motion, which would be subject to Westminster consent, provide an opportunity for the National Crime Agency to add more of its expertise to the law enforcement effort against organised crime groups here."

I wholeheartedly agree with the Minister. I sincerely believe that some Members are looking a gift horse in the mouth. Let us see what they are potentially rejecting. This morning, I looked up the NCA website. It says that the NCA is a new crime-fighting agency with:

"national and international reach and the mandate and powers to work in partnership with other law enforcement organisations to bring the full weight of the law to bear on serious and organised criminals."

Is this not what the majority of people in our communities want: the full weight of the law being brought to bear in cutting serious and organised crime? I suggest that, if we went round the doors tonight and spoke to people in Belfast and across Northern Ireland, the overwhelming majority would agree with the new agency being set up and would support it.

Earlier, I spoke to a senior PSNI officer, who informed me that organised crime is growing and becoming more sophisticated. There are more international crime gangs in Northern Ireland, including, he said, Russians. Those gangs are operating across Belfast, across Northern Ireland, across the border, in the rest of the United Kingdom and, as we all know, across Europe. Is this not a wake-up call for all of us in the House to support the motion? I understand that some Members may have concerns about transparency and accountability. However, the order will provide a vehicle to hit criminals where it hurts most and would do so in a way that places the PSNI at the heart of decision-making on operations. It also provides a role for the Policing Board to monitor the exercise of NCA functions, to call the director general of the NCA to meetings and to call for reports, updates on progress and so on.

And there is more: the Police Ombudsman also has a full role. I agree with the Minister, who is clear that the order will fill a gap in our law enforcement effort that he, as Justice Minister and chair of the Organised Crime Task Force, and our Chief Constable have highlighted for some time.

I believe that NCA operations will be subject to significant and robust accountability arrangements, because of those assurances and the ability for the agency to respond — let us not forget it — on a 24/7 basis to target those in our communities — the criminals, the blackguards and the groups — who pose the greatest risk to the people of Northern Ireland and beyond. The issue of the National Crime Agency and why it needs to come into operation in Northern Ireland is well known and has been debated in the House before. I support the motion.

Mr Allister: I welcome the fact that we are now on the verge of the NCA being fully operative in Northern Ireland. I acknowledge the role of the SDLP in enabling it to reach this point, but I regret its tardiness in coming to that position, which, of course, has given a couple of years and more of respite to criminal gangs in the Province. Of course, those who will be least happy about this will be the members of the criminal gangs, because I suspect that they fear the NCA. I trust that those fears will be fully realised in respect of the operation of the NCA, and I look forward to the full realisation of those fears.

The gangs are unhappy, and it is quite clear that Sinn Féin is also unhappy, and people can judge the coincidence or otherwise. Sinn Féin is smarting today, because it has been outmanoeuvred. It has been outmanoeuvred on the issue to the point that the NCA will now be operative in Northern Ireland. Its members are also smarting because they know that they are now in a dilemma. Sinn Féin's members tell us that they support the rule of law and have signed up to all of that. If that is so, it follows, as night follows day, that they will be required to support the NCA.

Under article 6 of the order and schedule 3 to the order, the NCA will be qualified to be designated with police powers in Northern Ireland. NCA officers will now exercise the police PACE powers. That means that those officers with police powers will have the power of arrest, the power of search and seizure, and the ability to take fingerprints and samples. The challenge, therefore, to Sinn Féin is whether, when and if the NCA becomes operative in Northern Ireland and begins exercising those powers, it will have the support of a party that claims to support the rule of law. Will Sinn Féin members say to the community that they purport to represent that they encourage them to cooperate with the NCA officers in their exercise of police PACE functions? If they do not, then they are patently defaulting on their supposed commitment to the rule of law.

There is a challenge to the deputy First Minister. I trust that our press will not allow him to wriggle off the hook and that he will be challenged to say whether he now fully supports the operation of the NCA within Northern Ireland and its exercising of those powers and other powers that I have mentioned. I trust that the answer to that will be yes, but we will wait and see whether it will. That is the real political challenge that arises for this moment.

I go on to refer to the editorial, which I assume the Minister has read, in today's 'News Letter', where it raises an issue turning upon this community impact assessment. The editorial states:

"There is a proposal that the NCA will have to secure PSNI agreement to an operation. The PSNI would have to carry out a community impact assessment and the NCA would have to have regard to it.

This is troubling talk.

It is essential that an NCA has the ability to act in a sweeping manner against dangerous and determined criminals, and that it is allowed to operate with the same freedoms as in Great Britain."

So I would like the Minister to tell us a little more about the supposed community impact assessment and whether it will be a restraint. It would be quite preposterous if there was a need for an operation —

Mr Speaker: Will the Member bring his remarks to a close?

Mr Allister: — that could proceed in GB, and in Northern Ireland the Chief Constable would say, "Oh, we have to have a community impact assessment. We must give the criminals time" —

Mr Speaker: Thank you. The Member's time is up.

Mr Allister: That must not be acceptable, and I trust that the Minister will indicate that that is not going to happen.

Mr Ford: I congratulate Alastair Ross on succeeding in achieving this debate today. As Justice Minister and as chair of the Organised Crime Task Force, I want to place on record my absolutely clear view that this is an important motion for those who want to see our law enforcement efforts enhanced in Northern Ireland. The Chief Constable has also gone on record as saying that he, too, would welcome the extension of the NCA's powers in Northern Ireland.

I spoke to the Home Secretary when plans for the NCA were first announced, and I made it clear then, more than two years ago, that its role in Northern Ireland would have to take account of our very different policing architecture here, especially regarding accountability and the primacy of the PSNI, and she accepted that. I have spent two years in ongoing dialogue with Assembly parties and others regarding the issue. Unfortunately, it has not proved possible to reach the Executive consensus necessary for me to bring the motion to the Assembly myself, and it is no secret that I would have wished to. Therefore, I welcome the opportunity that the Assembly is being offered to resolve what is currently an unacceptable situation.

During a previous debate on 6 October 2014, I shared with Members of the Assembly the difficulties being faced by law enforcement bodies because of the ongoing situation with the National Crime Agency. Agreement was not reached before the NCA came into operation on 7 October 2013. In discussions since then, parties have not reached agreement on its powers extending into the devolved arena with appropriate accountability. Let me re-emphasise: extending the powers with appropriate accountability. Failure to reach that agreement means that some 16 months have passed, with the PSNI having to stretch resources to cover work that it should have been able to pass to NCA colleagues; 16 months of no civil recovery; and 16 months of the people of Northern Ireland being at a disadvantage in terms of organised crime compared with people in the rest of the UK.

We are not talking about low-level crime. As a number of Members have emphasised, it is serious and organised crime. PSNI figures estimate there being 140 to 160 organised crime groups active in Northern Ireland — an estimated 800 active criminals. I know that the PSNI and others in law enforcement have worked hard to ensure that the impact of the gap on the people of Northern Ireland has been as small as possible. They would, however, acknowledge that, at times, due to limited resources, hard decisions about priorities have had to be made.

In opening his remarks, Gerry Kelly said that the PSNI was more than capable of fighting all crime. I have no doubt, and I agree with Gerry Kelly, that the PSNI is an excellent police service, but it does not have the operational international reach; it does not have the specific expertise in matters like fighting child exploitation online or the financial matters that are available through the NCA.

I know, too, that organisations have stretched, so that help has been given up to the limits of the law. However, there is absolutely no doubt that, for those 16 months, law enforcement agencies have had their hands unnecessarily tied behind their back in trying to serve us and to protect this community. One example I have been given was of police officers having to be moved from important drug searches to attend a serious sexual assault incident, thus delaying the searches and endangering the NCA's case against a UK-wide organised crime group operating in our midst.

The NCA could not do the work itself because we had not given it the powers.

Moreover, SOCA, the NCA's predecessor, assisted the Environment Agency in respect of a major investigation into waste crime, which was highlighted this afternoon. The specialist skills were in SOCA, but when the NCA was created, that had to stop; it no longer had the powers necessary. While there have been workarounds where possible, we have no statutory input into NCA planning, so we cannot shape its work to assist the PSNI. Given the global nature of organised crime, which is an area where the NCA, with its international reach, has particular benefits, we need the support of the NCA. Over the past year, that has impacted on cases involving child abuse, drugs and money laundering.

Let me give the House some stark figures on civil recovery. Since June 2013, there has been a 58% decrease in the number of Northern Ireland investigations, from 19 to eight. Obviously, there have been no new devolved cases, although there have been two HMRC referrals. There has been a 71% decrease in the number of property-freezing orders in Northern Ireland cases. The House should also remember that the NCA has some powers here, such as customs and immigration powers, which are not devolved, but, currently, it has no accountability for its conduct in using those.

A full statutory role for the Police Ombudsman across all NCA powers has been sitting on the statute book waiting for the House to reach agreement. There has also been no formal role for the Policing Board. In addition, my desire to see formal police primacy over NCA operational powers has been stalled. Let me make it clear: I have been working hard to ensure appropriate accountability; it is accountability comparable to that for the PSNI. However, one has to recognise that the NCA is different in terms of its structure and the nature of its work. For one thing, it is a UK-wide body. For another, as was mentioned, its reach is well beyond these shores.

I recognised that some Members had concerns regarding the accountability arrangements. That is why I, along with the Chief Constable, the director general of the NCA, the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and the Home Secretary have all engaged to seek to address those concerns and provide reassurance at a governmental and an operational level. Over that time, and especially in recent weeks, the SDLP, in particular, as much lauded by the DUP Benches, has engaged constructively and energetically with me and my officials — sometimes too energetically — and with the PSNI and the NCA in seeking to reach a resolution to outstanding issues.

As my colleague Trevor Lunn said, the SDLP has taken accountability to new heights. As a result of that engagement, and also from considering concerns raised by Sinn Féin, the Home Secretary and I have agreed draft legislation that we are confident provides a robust, tailored accountability framework for Northern Ireland circumstances. It is, in fact, a very extensive framework, especially when compared with the arrangements elsewhere in the UK for the NCA. I had hoped that, before today, we could have got Executive agreement; unfortunately, that was not possible.

Let me set out some of the elements of the accountability framework. Many Members have already referred to aspects of them. The role of the Police Ombudsman would extend to cover any complaint about NCA officers in devolved matters, non-devolved matters and in civil recovery. The Policing Board will monitor NCA activity in Northern Ireland. That point was noted by, amongst others, Dolores Kelly and Jonathan Craig, possibly noting the amount of work that may fall to them. The board can request reports and institute inquiries as necessary. It must consult the Home Secretary, but it does not require her agreement. The Chief Constable's agreement is needed for the use of constabulary powers and any covert investigations. NCA officers in Northern Ireland will be bound by the PSNI code of ethics, which is a point that was similarly highlighted. In addition, the NCA is already an active member of the Northern Ireland Organised Crime Task Force. Therefore, it works closely with other law enforcement bodies in Northern Ireland.

In an exchange between Jim Allister and Alastair Ross, issues were raised about paragraph 14 of schedule 3. Paragraphs 14 and 15 deal with directed assistance from the PSNI to the NCA and from the NCA to the PSNI. I concluded at an early stage that, given the arrangements that we have for the policing architecture here, it was not appropriate for there to be any powers of ministerial direction. Therefore, they do not appear.

With agreement to the motion, and if Westminster then affirms the order, we will have access to the NCA's considerable expertise and support while embedding the agency in our local structures.

Gerry Kelly asked about a potential counterterrorism role for the NCA. The Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland have both said that that will not happen. Were there to be any such proposal, a super affirmative procedure is in place. It could not be introduced through the order-making powers in schedule 24: there is simply no vires for it.

Jim Allister referred to the 'News Letter' editorial — I confess, it is not always the first thing I read every morning, although I did read it today — which referred to the issue of community impact statements. The reality is that community impact statements are carried out by the PSNI when considering major operations. It is exactly the same measure for the NCA; it is not something new. Sadly, it appears that Mr Allister is reading editorials in the 'News Letter' rather than considering the legislation.

Mr McCartney quoted from the early version of the Home Office's explanatory memorandum. I hope that I have adequately drawn attention to the fact that that was corrected when it was drawn to the attention of my Department. Clearly, I had wished that it would have been possible to get Executive agreement and I had wished to introduce this measure as Minister, because that was appropriate. However, it is also absolutely clear that things have been done by an entirely proper procedure.

Mr Speaker, I would not call into question the decision you took to list this business as part of today's proceedings. Not everything is done by an LCM, as we saw, for example, with a proposal to devolve justice powers to this House. That was not technically an LCM; it was a motion of a very similar nature to the one that is before us.

So, there was lengthy negotiation over a significant period of time. Pat Sheehan said that he believes that the negotiations ended prematurely. I believe that the negotiations ended at a point when, as Sammy Douglas highlighted, time was running out in the Westminster timetable to get business concluded before the general election and at a point when it appeared to me that there were sufficient grounds for believing that this House was likely to pass the motion to bring into play the devolved responsibilities of the NCA in Northern Ireland. When we look at the fight that we have against organised crime and look at what we need to do to protect vulnerable people in this society from those who would prey on them, we can wait no longer.

Intensive negotiations took place with those who wished to intensively negotiate. If others were not particularly involved, I am sorry, but I did my best to meet the concerns that were put before me. What we have on the table is an extremely high level of local accountability that preserves the PSNI's position as the lead local law enforcement agency.

I thank all those who have done that detailed work over the last while, including MLAs, party staffers, people in other bodies and, most of all from my perspective, officials in the Department of Justice, who worked to ensure that we got the maximum possible arrangement. I also offer my thanks to the Home Secretary and the officials in the Home Office. Perhaps they do not always understand the nuances of Northern Ireland when business starts off, but they certainly understand the nuances of Northern Ireland now, and they have been extremely helpful in making the changes that we put forward as we worked from the initial position I took of the need to recognise the primacy of the PSNI and the need for proper accountability mechanisms to take account of our architecture for policing.

I urge all Members to support the motion before the Assembly to allow the National Crime Agency to come into full operation in Northern Ireland. I want all parties to step up so that we can send a signal of unity against the organised crime gangs that prey on this society and see it as easy pickings without the NCA and the operational reach that it has in England, Wales and Scotland.

Many Members highlighted the problems we face from organised crime. Let us stand united against that, because if we miss the opportunity today, we will be selling our law enforcement effort and our community short for a long period of time. I urge Members to support the motion.

Mr Elliott: Obviously, it has been an interesting debate. It is one that we had some time ago. In fact, on two occasions, we have had debates in this House over the National Crime Agency. I am almost tempted to say that I feel the hand of history on my shoulders, but I do not think it has gone that far. This is an important day. It is important in the sense that we are getting a level of comfort and security for the citizens and the people of Northern Ireland. That, I think, is what is most important.

For once, I pay tribute to the Justice Minister and indeed to those in the National Crime Agency for their persistence and perseverance. This has been rumbling on now for two years, I am sure, maybe even more. I know that they have not had a very easy time. Indeed, I put on record that the SDLP has persisted through difficult times on this as well. It is a pity that the SDLP did not come to this conclusion earlier, but, as my mother always said, it is much better late than never. We will give the SDLP some credit for where it is today.

The question remains: why has it taken us this long? I know that people have issues with the accountability mechanisms, and those are important, but we must get our priorities right as well. It is also important that the people and communities of Northern Ireland are safeguarded and feel safe. It is important that we catch criminals, especially the large organised crime rings. It is important that we stop child exploitation. It is important that we stop drug trafficking. It is important that we stop all the fuel smuggling that people talk about. It is important that we recover assets from those criminals. All that I am trying to say is this: let us put it in perspective. Yes, accountability is important. We want that as much as Members on the other side of the House do, but the priority is catching criminals and allowing people to be safe in their communities and in their homes.

The NCA can, of course, be an important tool in the fight against organised crime and international crime. The NCA and the PSNI should complement each other. They should cooperate with each other, and I do not see a major issue with that.

I heard Mr Allister pose a question about the community impact, and maybe that was not fully explored by the Minister, who may not have had time. I met the Chief Constable yesterday: I also wanted reassurance on that very issue because I had concerns. I am informed that the community impact is, as the Minister highlighted, within the PSNI. It is to ensure that they get the timing of operations right so that they do not inhibit other operations. I was assured by the Chief Constable that the community impact will be valuable as opposed to inhibitive. The one thing that I do not want is for operations to be inhibited. I do not want the crime gangs to get away with drug smuggling and human trafficking. I do not want that to be allowed to persist, so I would not want that community impact to stop those operations. Neither would I want other aspects of the accountability mechanisms to stop the NCA and the PSNI taking on those criminal organisations. I think it important that they have a level of freedom and enforceability to do that in a legal manner that allows them to cut out and curtail those criminal activities.

It was quite interesting to hear some of the Members' thoughts on the processes, and Mr Ross highlighted the proposals very well. He took us through how the National Crime Agency would operate and put some perspective into the debate. I will not dwell on Sinn Féin's suggestions and how its Members put forward their thoughts. It is more important that we are moving forward with something that will help society here in Northern Ireland.

Dolores Kelly was first up for the SDLP, which has taken up the mantle and put forward its thoughts and proposals on how the National Crime Agency can work better. On some of those aspects, we may disagree slightly, but that is what democracy is about, and that is why we are here. We may have got to a compromise now that is fairly suitable and satisfactory for most.

5.15 pm

Mr Danny Kennedy welcomed the stance by the SDLP, and he rightly paid tribute to Lord Empey in the House of Lords, who has pursued the matter with vigour over the last number of years. I also want to pay tribute to Lord Empey's persistence.

Mr Lunn of the Alliance Party very effectively highlighted how the fight against international crime will operate. Indeed, an issue that he mentioned, which may go unnoticed on many occasions, is the fight against cybercrime, because the NCA is an organisation that can deal with international crime. He also indicated that these are free benefits, which we do not often get. I assume that he meant that the benefits to Northern Ireland will be free in financial terms.

Mr Craig highlighted the mounting pressures on the Policing Board. I am not sure whether the Policing Board is looking for a much greater role or whether that has been forced on it, but, one way or another, it is clearly going to have much more work to carry out in the not-too-distant future.

Mr Edwin Poots indicated that the Chief Constable is satisfied with the accountability mechanisms. He went on to say — this was quite interesting — that there must be only one police service in Northern Ireland. He warned of the future and the proposals that may be brought forward for the Historical Investigations Unit. I think that Mr Poots was putting down a marker there as to how we may deal with that in the future.

Mr Alban Maginness highlighted the amendments secured to the proposals and said how it was, in his terms, a "triumph for common sense". That is what I am trying to say as well. I think that we have probably got to that common-sense compromise. It is just a pity that it did not happen a couple of years ago and that the SDLP did not accept it then, but, anyway, we accept it now that it has come this far.

What Members have highlighted today is that common-sense approach: that they want to bring forward the National Crime Agency; that they want it to work in partnership and cooperation with the Police Service of Northern Ireland; and that they want it to fight criminals and crime. I, for one, look forward to the National Crime Agency taking on the criminal organisations and helping to rid our society of such crime and criminals. We do not want to make Northern Ireland a haven for international and organised criminals. We do not want Northern Ireland to be a criminal's paradise. We want it to be a safe place for everyone to live in, for communities to grow and prosper, and for everyone to live in the harmony that we all look forward to.

Question put.

The Assembly divided:

Ayes 68; Noes 26.

AYES

Question accordingly agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly consents to the making of the draft Crime and Courts Act 2013 (National Crime Agency and Proceeds of Crime) (Northern Ireland) Order 2015 laid before Parliament on 29 January 2015.

Mr Speaker: The House will take its ease while we change the top Table.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

Motion made:

*That the Assembly do now adjourn. —
[Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat).]*

Adjournment

Housing: Temporary Sites in Antrim

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The proposer of the topic will have 15 minutes and all other Members will have approximately six minutes.

Mr Clarke: I rise to talk about a Travelling site that arrived in Antrim some months ago. I suppose that I am coming at it with some degree of concern. I know that Sinn Féin took exception to my definition yesterday of “ordinary” people. Habitual residents who live in a particular area and reside in a purpose-built brick house are what I would describe as ordinary. Indeed, I am one of those ordinary people myself. Many people from Rathenraw and, indeed, the wider Antrim area come to my office and those of my constituency colleagues daily looking for accommodation. They are in housing stress in the greater Antrim area.

I am appalled at how the Housing Executive has handled this site and the complaints of the residents of Rathenraw. It has made a difference between members of the Travelling community and — again I use the terminology — “ordinary residents”. Many of those people are in housing stress and come to our offices daily, as I have said, looking to be housed in a particular area. It pains me that the Housing Executive has treated the Travelling community differently from other residents. If I, a father of three children, were in housing need, the Housing Executive would not go to the same lengths for my family as it has done for the Travelling community. It would not build my family temporary accommodation.

Rathenraw had its difficulties in the past, but, thankfully, it has turned a corner and improved over the last 10 or 15 years. Those problems are now in the distant past. However, the people of that area are disappointed to realise that they now have a permanent camp or site, whatever you want to call it. Whilst I have sympathy — I think — for the Travelling community, in that Travellers need somewhere to stay, I am surprised that people who define themselves as Travellers are in permanent caravans. They will not be towing those caravans along our county roads as they go from site to site. I do not know why they need permanent residence in a residential area. Indeed, if they want to be treated the same as everyone else, they should be afforded the same housing stock. I do not think that we should deny anyone the opportunity to be housed; however, Travellers should be treated the same as other residents of the Antrim area.

Then there is the question of how the Housing Executive has approached the subject. It made a retrospective application. Mr Deputy Speaker, when, some years ago, you were an elected representative sitting in council, I am sure that, like the rest of us, you would have been critical of individuals seeking retrospective applications for houses in any area. However, this public authority, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, has set up a temporary site in Antrim, moved the diggers in and brought in static caravans. I stress that these are static caravans, not the type that you would normally associate with the Travelling community. The Housing Executive set up a static caravan site where Travellers have the right to bring in horses, donkeys and whatever else they want to bring. Housing Executive rules suggest that there should be only one domestic animal, so we are treating the Travellers differently. They are not on a par with everyone else; they do not come within the definition of ordinary residents of that area.

What makes it even stranger is that the very site that the Housing Executive has picked is beside a historic monument. Anyone else seeking planning permission for that area would be refused. I come here tonight somewhat disappointed. I appreciate that my colleague, the Minister for Social Development, is here to respond to the debate because it is primarily a social development topic; however, there is a degree of crossover with regard to this site. The site has been granted permission, albeit the process continues, and there will be meetings at which strong objections will be lodged. I would love it if the Minister of the Environment could tell us, the elected representatives, how a temporary site for caravans can be afforded beside a historic monument. If someone wanted a permanent residence there, it would not have been afforded them. I am bewildered as to how that decision has come about.

In relation to the Travelling community itself, it is sad for me to say that there has been an increase in incidents in the area since they arrived. Indeed, as one delves into the origins of the people, we find that they are not unknown or unfamiliar to the law. Indeed, they have been somewhat involved with the police over this last number of years. The Minister may be responsible for the Housing Executive, but he is not the Housing Executive; therefore I am sure that it will be difficult for him to account for how the Housing Executive arrived at the ridiculous decision to bring Travellers to this area and make such a site.

One of the things that the Housing Executive prides itself on — some would say, and others would say that it does not pride itself very well on it — is that we have areas where the Housing Executive places problem tenants, who cause great difficulties to other tenants in that area. Not only has the Housing Executive brought in problem tenants, it has brought in a permanent camp that has brought the problem itself. Indeed, the attitude of the tenants who have come to the area is telling.

Indeed, some of the people who live there will tell you about bicycles being stolen. They think it is a case of, “You have to tie it down, or it is gone”.

There have been problems with crime in the town itself, and it is reported that those involved were from the Travelling community. As I said, the Housing Executive prided itself in the past on how quickly it reacted to problems from ordinary residents — you keep logs and various things. Many residents have made representations to the Housing Executive about the problems associated with these individuals, but it is falling on deaf ears: nothing seems to be done to help the residents of the area, and everything to help the Travelling community. What I really want is for the Minister to relay our concerns to the Housing Executive and to see what assurances he can get that issues in the area will be addressed.

The Minister will be aware that I have had much correspondence with him on a number of questions relating to how much is being spent. They have temporary roads and standpipes. The Housing Executive is now picking up the cost of maintaining and servicing the temporary toilets. The Housing Executive is picking up the costs of emptying the skips that have been put on sites. These residents are being treated entirely differently from everyone else living in the Antrim area. I am not saying that all individuals should be allowed more for domestic waste. Everyone is allowed a black bin, which is emptied once a fortnight; however, if you come from the Travelling community, you can have a skip. It will be emptied at will, and it will be paid for out of the public purse. Could we ascertain from the Minister whether those members of the Travelling community who are now permanent residents in Rathenraw make any contribution through rent? What do they contribute to the Housing Executive that they should be treated in such a royal manner? There seems to be such a difference in how these individuals are treated versus the people who reside and have grown up in the area.

I can understand the worry and frustration of those living in the area as the whole escapade unfolded. There are not two or three objections to this, but hundreds; there is a petition to the Planning Service in relation to this site. One would say they have to be housed — I have no issue with that — but they arrived at this site from somewhere in the Belfast area. I hope that they do want to fit in with society and get involved, but if they were previously housed in the greater Belfast area, and if they have been educated, how has the Housing Executive seen fit to bring them to Antrim, dispersing them from where they were originally? Are they continuing within the education programme or, indeed, are they treated differently in that?

Certainly, lots of questions have to be asked. If they did need a site such as this, why did the Housing Executive not see fit to keep them in Belfast? It is widely known that there was trouble created where they were in the past. The trouble should have been dealt with. Antisocial behaviour should be treated the same as when committed by other residents, instead of bringing them to Antrim to a perfectly good site, where people have enjoyed looking out at green fields for many years and which, as I say, has a historic monument. I am absolutely bewildered that the Planning Service has seen fit to do as it has done.

I would like assurances from the Minister that, however this debacle has unfolded, he will use his good offices to liaise with the Housing Executive to try to bring about a conclusion that is favourable to the people who have lived there for many years and who want to continue to live there.

As I said in my opening remarks there has been trouble there in the past. The residents of Rathenraw have seen that come and go, have got on with their lives, have stayed the course and want just to live in and enjoy the Rathenraw area without looking out at what can only be deemed as — Well, I had better not say on the public record what type of camp this is. How is it that the animals roam all day tethered by a chain or piece of rope, doing circles on the grass while they eat, whereas the other residents in the area are allowed only one domestic animal each?

Mr Kinahan: I am glad for the chance to have this debate, and I thank Trevor Clarke for bringing it forward. When I looked at the title and saw “temporary accommodation”, it made me think of another key point that comes our way often. Before I lose the Minister, it was the fact that there are often young homeless males in every patch.

When I first looked at the title of the adjournment topic, that is what came to mind. One late Friday afternoon, when I tried to find housing for single males, the closest place that I could find them anywhere for the weekend was in Armagh. Later, when I rang St Vincent de Paul and the Simon Community, only to discover that there are some 30,000 calls every year for houses, that is what I was thinking.

Now that we are here and talking about Ballygore and Rathenraw, I will move on to the main subject of the debate. With others, I have met some of the residents and heard their concerns. There were, Minister, 253 objections, which I am sure that you are aware of, and a petition of 301 signatures. Councillor colleagues have taken many calls — some very angry, some just concerned. I have also met the Travellers. We must all remember that we have to respect everybody's rights. Residents have rights and Travellers have rights, but with rights come responsibilities. We all have to live within the law, and the law must be applied equally to everyone, just as the Housing Executive and the councils must abide by the rules and policies.

The provision of proper housing sites is the responsibility of the Housing Executive. Therefore, it is up to it to decide on such locations, but it does not seem to have looked at this site with any strategic forward thinking. It looks like we have a complete Horlicks on this site.

I will turn to the specific problem. We have a group of Travellers who arrived in the northern end of Rathenraw and made themselves at home in the car park. We have the Housing Executive putting in for temporary planning on the site. At the last Antrim Borough Council meeting, the matter was deferred to an objectors' meeting that was meant to happen tomorrow. I am told, however, that it will not happen because of a legal case. The whole matter raises a raft of questions.

I will focus on the residents first. Not all the residents were consulted. I am told that only the owners of Housing Executive properties were informed or consulted. As the Minister knows, I have written to him and the Minister of the Environment to ask for clarification of this and other matters. I am told by the residents that there were plans to make the Ballygore area of Rathenraw into its own little community, and the residents had been encouraged in the past by the Housing Executive to buy their homes. Understandably, what is going on affects the value of those homes, and, at present, it would be difficult to sell them. If we have temporary planning, it will stay like that.

We need to know whether this is really temporary or whether it will turn out to be permanent. We need to know what the future of that site is because it affects the value of all those houses. As I asked on the back of yesterday's question, can we find out whether the Housing Executive looked or is looking at other sites? What do we really mean by “temporary”? Is it two years from when the Travellers arrived on the site or two years from when they get planning permission? Can the Minister guarantee that it will be temporary?

The biggest gripe all the way through this has been the lack of consultation, the lack of talking to the community and letting it have a say. Does the Department have a consultation policy? If so, was it followed? It does not seem that that is the case. Does it include every house? It should. When we were looking at the Planning Bill a few years ago and I asked, in relation to community planning, who was included, I was told that it was all those who lived there, all those who worked there and all those who passed through. There lies the whole problem of who will be consulted when we move to the super-councils.

Mr Clarke: Will the Member give way?

Mr Kinahan: I am happy to give way.

Mr Clarke: That brings something to mind. You will be familiar with other areas in Antrim where the Housing Executive contacted community representatives before it would consider housing developments. Maybe the Minister could explain, through his officials, why this is different. As an elected Member, I know that my colleagues had no correspondence whatever. However, in the case of other permanent sites, the Housing Executive always consulted and tried to bring them on board.

Mr Kinahan: Thank you. That is a very good point, which I did not have here, so it is very helpful.

I want to move on to the Travellers. There are three or four caravans on the site, surrounded by animals and everything else. They have been given an area with gravelled access, but they have no electricity. You can imagine what it is like at the moment, particularly on a cold night such as last night. Travellers have their rights, too, so we need a proper system. I am on the all-party group on ethnic minority communities, and we have had presentations from the Travelling community. I want to make two key points. I know that Travellers choose the lifestyles that they have, but we have to look after them as well. Their life expectancy is 10 to 15 years worse than ours, and, when it comes to education, the figures for those who achieve five GCSEs at A* to G is 88% for all pupils but just 24% for Travellers. Therefore, we have a great duty to find a way forward.

If we look at the application proposed, we will see a red line where they are and where the access road is. Residents nearby were not consulted. Look at that line and you will see that it is never going to keep them within it, if you think of all the things that come with their caravans — the animals, the ornaments and everything else. If — it is a big “if” — the site is to be there for a while, the red line does not even work. Therefore, we need to listen to the residents, find out what they are happy to live with, if, indeed, this is to be a temporary site for two years, and try to find some way forward and something that works for everyone.

I know that many do not want it there at all, but we should look at suitable fencing, suitable access and a suitable set of rules — maybe even a code of conduct that everyone has to work to. However, we have to find a way forward, and I look forward to hearing what the Minister will say and whether there are alternative sites. Let us see how this goes. I look forward to his help in resolving the matter.

Mr Girvan: I thank my colleague for bringing forward the Adjournment topic. It highlights a major difficulty that we have. I, for one, believe in using the Housing Executive list to identify those in greatest housing need. Unfortunately, we have one section of the community that has decided that it can sidestep all the measures in place to ensure that people get accommodation on a fair and equitable basis. Whether they want to call themselves Travellers is one way of looking at it. We are dealing with one family in particular, who have occupied a site, not necessarily with approval. They have tended to wreak mayhem everywhere that they have been, and I would class them as a lawless family. They have created all sorts of disturbances, right from Belfast City Hall forward. They tented the area around Belfast City Hall to highlight their plight.

I agree that, if you want to talk about equality, I would say that we have had a measure of inequality dealt to those who wish to abide by lawful means and go through the proper process. They are being put to the back of the list, in favour of those who want to ride roughshod over the process. Having been on the receiving end of some physical abuse from members of that community, I can say that they have done nothing to endear themselves to the wider community by showing any intention of wanting to integrate or by being in any way friendly towards those whom they have to live beside. As a consequence, a large number of residents and others have signed a petition. We are not talking about small numbers but about hundreds of people in the community who feel that the Housing Executive has failed them, not just by not consulting them but by going down the route of looking for temporary approval on what I deem a sensitive site. Trevor already mentioned the issues with the monument beside it —

Mr Clarke: Will the Member give way?

Mr Girvan: I will indeed, yes.

Mr Clarke: The Member talks about how the Housing Executive has failed the residents. Maybe the Member would like to draw out how it has failed them. I am sure that the Minister, in his response, will talk — I hope he will — about how much has been spent on the site. There are people in the Antrim area who have been waiting for Housing Executive repairs to bring their house up to a good standard.

I am sure that the Member will agree that the failure extends to that. I know, from some of my questions, that the cost of accommodating them is running into thousands of pounds. However, there are permanent residents with Housing Executive houses who are still waiting on repairs that will run into thousands as well.

Mr Girvan: That is the point. The Housing Executive has failed people who have been good tenants and who attempt to look after their properties. It has gone down the route of making an application for what is a temporary site. I do not like the word “temporary” and want to know how long “temporary” will be. We all know that, once something has had an approval on a temporary basis, that sets a precedent and opens the door for a permanent application to be approved. There is a major issue there that needs to be looked at.

We have to consult widely if we are going to put in a permanent site. However, I do not think that that should be over and above what is expected of any other tenant of Housing Executive stock. I do not think that special accommodation should be made. We all talk about turning areas into mixed and shared spaces. This is one community that does not want to have shared space with anyone. That has been demonstrated throughout, with the problems that it has caused elsewhere.

We have recently had difficulty in the south Antrim area, where a number of businesses were held to ransom by these families. They parked up and asked for several thousands of pounds to move away from people's gates. All the customers had to come in and out past them. They have created all sorts of mayhem as a consequence. Some very big international companies have been affected like that. I know that Caterpillar, which was FG Wilson, also had a major problem on its Larne site.

That community needs to recognise that it has not endeared itself. It is not going down the right route. Crime figures in the area have increased, and a lot of fingers are pointing in one direction. It needs to be looked at. This site has caused major concern. I blame the Housing Executive for allowing what was an open space area to be occupied and for creating this problem.

Mrs Cameron: I welcome the debate. I am pleased to speak on the matter on behalf of my constituents. Much is said in the House about tradition and culture, and, for the most part, whilst we do not always agree on the individual argument, there is broad consensus that individuals have the right to choose how to live and how to express their view in society, provided they do so in a law-abiding manner. So I immediately have a problem here. I want to respect the rights of any member of the Travelling community to live the life that they choose and to be free to travel wherever they wish. However, I need to balance that against the rights of those who are affected by the establishment of the Travellers' camp in their midst.

The residents who are affected by the subject of this debate have made a choice. They have chosen to pay their taxes. They have chosen to abide by their contract with the Housing Executive or the terms of their mortgage. They pay their bills, and they have chosen to adopt a pattern of society in which they are subject to the law of the land and must abide by that code of practice. To the best of my knowledge, the Travelling community is not bound by any such contract. In some ways, I almost envy them their freedom.

I am here because the people in the community place their trust in me to speak on their behalf. It would be a dereliction of my duty if I failed to represent them now. We might talk in this place about the Stormont House Agreement or a matter of the day, but it is what greets my constituents when they look out their windows each morning that really affects them. That is why I must speak out against this infringement of their rights. We must accept a dose of reality here. In this case, it appears that the Housing Executive has played the political correctness card over and above the wishes of the broader community.

It is my understanding that due regard has been given to the rights of the Travelling community through the creation of spaces across Northern Ireland where they are free to park up and use facilities provided to them with no charge or contract.

Mr Clarke: The Member raises the point that they are free to travel, and I do not think that anyone should be against their right to travel. However, I am sure that the Member finds it as strange as the rest of us do that this is not actually a Travellers' site as such. These are static caravans that you would find in a holiday village and not the type that you will see pulling into a lay-by. Do you not find it particularly strange that these are not caravans that we would see being towed by vehicles?

6.00 pm

Mrs Cameron: I thank the Member for his intervention and agree with his remarks. Given that this is how it is, I am at a loss as to why the Housing Executive has in this instance created a space in the middle of an established community. It seems to me to have no logic whatsoever and goes against the wishes of the community. Whilst I completely comprehend that the Housing Executive has been faced with the difficult task of balancing its obligations to the Irish Travellers and its responsibilities to the settled community, I do feel that this has been handled particularly poorly. Allowing the family in question to move onto the site prior to any planning application or community consultation has left an extremely bad taste in the mouths of the people of Antrim.

The Minister needs to establish who is at fault here, what precedents are being set and why the development has been given priority over and above the residents who are committed long term to the community. I hope that in his remarks he can explain to the people of my constituency what actions his Department will be taking to rectify the situation.

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): I thank all those who have contributed to the debate and my colleague Mr Trevor Clarke for securing the Adjournment debate and the representation that he and his colleagues have made on this issue. I realise that I have a time constraint of 10 minutes, so I want to try to set some comments on the record about the detail of this. Then, I will address some of the specifics that have been raised by Members. Following on from the debate, we will then check the Hansard report. Any issues that we have not addressed, we will then follow up, so that we have a comprehensive response for Members in relation to this issue.

Before getting into some of the specifics raised during the debate, it might be helpful if I set out what is required of the two main statutory agencies involved in this case: the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and the Department of the Environment planning group.

Until 2003, district councils were responsible for the provision of sites for the Travelling community. The system did not work particularly well, and in 2003 the law was amended to give the Housing Executive the legal obligation to provide such caravan sites as appear to it to be appropriate for the accommodation of caravans of the Irish Traveller community. The Housing Executive establishes the accommodation needs of Travellers through the Northern Ireland-wide comprehensive Traveller accommodation needs assessment. In providing accommodation for Travellers, the Housing Executive needs to balance the needs of the Travellers with the needs of the settled community. That point was raised by a number of Members, particularly in the concluding comments of Mrs Cameron around the way in which the settled community is dealt with or disadvantaged in how this can play out.

There are three main types of sites. First, group housing. Some Travellers want to live in conventional housing, either in existing social housing estates or in group housing schemes that cater for their desire to live together in extended family groups. Secondly, serviced sites. A number of Travellers have indicated a desire to live on serviced sites, which provide facilities for residing in static mobile home-type accommodation. There are currently four occupied serviced sites in Northern Ireland. Thirdly, transit sites. Some Travellers wish to remain nomadic, and their needs are provided for through transit sites. The progress made by the Housing Executive since 2003 has reduced the number of illegal encampments in Northern Ireland and improved the living conditions for the Travelling community.

I turn now to planning issues. Any temporary or permanent Traveller site is subject to the planning rules. The Department of the Environment planning group currently determines all planning applications and has the responsibility to consult residents near any planning application site, as well as the appropriate district council. In some cases, the applicant seeking planning approval will also engage with the local residents, but there is no legal requirement currently so to do. That said, my Department expects housing associations that are developing new social housing to consult residents in the vicinity of new social housing developments. My Department does not currently place similar requirements on the Housing Executive in relation to Traveller sites, and I want to revisit that issue for any future developments.

It is never easy to reconcile competing views and interests. In many ways, with the provision of Irish Traveller sites, the Housing Executive is in a difficult position in trying to balance its legal obligation to Travellers with the views of local communities. It is rarely easy, and there have been particular difficulties in this case that it would be helpful to set out briefly.

In 2009, the Irish Traveller family in question began unlawfully occupying land owned by Northern Ireland Water close to the M2 motorway in north Belfast. In line with its obligations, the Housing Executive invoked its Traveller cooperation policy that allows Irish Travellers to camp on a temporary basis and to have basic humanitarian amenities provided.

Northern Ireland Water sought to have the family removed from the land, and, at a hearing on 19 and 20 December 2013, the court gave an order for possession to take effect as of 31 March 2014. The Housing Executive investigated what existing established Traveller sites were available, but none was suitable. The Housing Executive followed good practice that recommends that, where a body owes a duty to secure accommodation but an appropriate site is not immediately available, the housing authority may need to provide an alternative temporary solution until a suitable site or some other suitable option becomes available.

It would be good to put on record the outcome of that hearing. As I said, at that hearing, the court gave an order to take possession on 31 March 2014, but the family indicated that the offers of accommodation on established Traveller sites were unsuitable. Sites that were offered at the time — this might address Mr Kinahan's point about what other sites were looked at — included sites in Strabane, Londonderry and Craigavon, as well as the Glen Road Heights in Belfast. The family's representatives indicated that the family needed to be in that area of north Belfast to meet the children's educational needs and the family's health needs. They also gave reasons why they could not occupy land in west Belfast. I understand that the Housing Executive also looked at other sites in the Antrim area, but the family came to the site in question. We will come to that in a moment.

The Housing Executive investigated what public land was available that could be considered to meet the immediate needs of the family. Given the short time available, the Housing Executive looked to its land bank first. A number of sites were explored, but all were unsuitable. In the difficult circumstances, the lands at Rathenraw offered, in the opinion of the Housing Executive, the least worst short-term option; although, as many Members have commented, the site is not ideal.

Mr Clarke: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Yes, I will give way.

Mr Clarke: The site may not be ideal, but it also not in north Belfast, so I am wondering how the Irish Travellers settled in Antrim.

Mr Storey: That raises an issue that we need to revisit in what will happen following the debate. I want to revisit a number of points, and I have already alluded to some of those. I intend to write to the chief executive of the Housing Executive about the matter following the debate, and some of the comments that have been made in the House will be conveyed to him. The issue needs to be addressed.

Mr Girvan: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Yes, I will. Briefly.

Mr Girvan: You mentioned education in north Belfast. The Department of Education is providing transport to and from the school, so it has obviously changed its policy on children going to their closest school.

Mr Storey: That is another issue, and we will seek clarification on that from the relevant education authority.

The Housing Executive has assured me that it is continuing to investigate the availability of other suitable land or a more permanent site. The Housing Executive has told me that, given the short time available from the date of the court order to the family's eviction from the Northern Ireland Water land, it did not have adequate time to consult the community in the normal way.

I want to come to a question that was asked by Mr Clarke. I trust that I will be able to get through some of the points that Members have made. I assure Members who raised specific points that I will write to them if I run out of time. The Member asked about the cost. I will indicate what facilities have been provided at the temporary site in Antrim and their cost.

The Housing Executive operates a cooperation policy that, in summary, means that it provides basic amenities as a way of dealing with humane requirements. The amount spent at Rathenraw to date on the temporary provision of skips is £900; the amount for the temporary provision of a Portaloo is £2,845; while the provision of a water supply has cost £2,694. More recently, an access road has been provided to facilitate access for the family and the service providers at a cost of £26,000. Those costs were incurred for the period from 1 April 2014 to December 2015. Whilst not directly related to the provision of facilities, the costs for a temporary planning application at Rathenraw amount to a standard fee of £831. To save Members counting all that up, the total comes to £33,270.76. I think that that gives some indication of the cost.

A question was asked about whether rent was charged. No rent is charged for the temporary site. If it were to become permanent and established, rent and rates would be charged. However, it would not be retrospective; it would only be from the time that the application was approved.

Mr Kinahan: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Yes, I will give way.

Mr Kinahan: I do not want to break the love-in between all of you up there. However, on the cost of putting in electricity, do you have any estimate of that in the future? It does not exist at the moment, but I know that they are pushing for it. No. OK.

Mr Storey: No. In relation to the love-in, that is the nature of our party; we enjoy a family atmosphere.

There is no electricity, so no cost has been incurred.

Mr Deputy Speaker, is my time still up?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I was hoping that you would not ask that.

Mr Storey: OK. Well, maybe I could deal with a couple of other issues. How many complaints were received about the site? There are no antisocial complaints about the site from the PSNI, although some complaints to the Housing Executive were from anonymous sources. Investigations from different bodies have not confirmed the allegations.

Mr Clarke: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Yes.

Mr Clarke: I am sure, Minister, that you understand why people would take the time to be anonymous. Given the history of the individuals on the site, the person who made the complaint would want to remain anonymous in case of retribution.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order. I ask the Minister to wind up. Giving way to more Members is just pushing it a bit far.

Mr Storey: I thank the Deputy Speaker for his indulgence and concur with the comments that have been made.

I conclude by making one response, which is the obligation that Travellers have in relation to the keeping of animals on permanent or temporary sites. The Member made a very valid point. Horses are not permitted on caravan sites, and the Housing Executive endeavours to work with the Travelling community to find grazing land for the horses. The Housing Executive has advised me that the horses associated with this site are not on Northern Ireland Housing Executive land and that Travellers have the same rights to have a domestic pet as any other tenant.

There are other comments that I could make, but I gave an assurance to Members that I would write to them.

In conclusion, this issue has created considerable concern, and valid points have been raised about how the settled community is treated. There was a very valid point about historic monuments and the whole planning process. There is a planning process, and we await the DOE's decision on that. I assure Members that I will write to them on the points that have not been covered in my responses in the House this evening.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Monday 9 February 2015

The Assembly met at 12.00 noon (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Committee Business

Committee Membership

Mr Speaker: As with similar motions, the motion on Committee membership will be treated as a business motion and there will be no debate.

Resolved:

That Mr Roy Beggs replace Mr Michael Copeland as a member of the Committee for Social Development; and that Mr Robin Swann replace Mr Roy Beggs as a member of the Assembly and Executive Review Committee. — [Mr Swann.]

Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4): Suspension

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel):
I beg to move

That Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4) be suspended for 9 February 2015.

Mr Speaker: Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the motion requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That Standing Orders 10(2) to 10(4) be suspended for 9 February 2015.

Supply Resolution for the 2014-15 Spring Supplementary Estimates; Supply Resolution for the 2015-16 Vote on Account; and Supply Resolution for the 2015-16 Main Estimate

Mr Speaker: As usual, there will be a single debate on the motions. One amendment has been selected for debate regarding the Supply resolution for the 2015-16 Vote on Account and is published on the Marshalled List. As a valid of petition of concern was presented on Friday 6 February in relation to the amendment, the vote on the amendment will be on a cross-community basis. I shall call the Minister to move the first motion, which is on the 2014-15 spring Supplementary Estimates. The debate on all three motions and the amendment will then begin. When all those who wish to speak have done so, or when the time limit has been reached, I shall put the Question on the first motion.

The second motion, which is the 2015-16 Vote on Account, will then be read into the record, and I will call the Minister to move it. The amendment will then be read into the record, and I will call Mr Allister to move it. The Question will then be put on the amendment followed by the Question on the second motion. After the Question is put on the second motion, the third motion, which is the 2015-16 Main Estimate, will then be read into the record, and I will call the Minister to move it. The Question will then be put on that motion.

The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to four hours and 30 minutes for the debate. The Minister will have up to 60 minutes to allocate at his discretion between proposing and winding. The proposer of the amendment will have 10 minutes to propose the amendment and five minutes to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who are called to speak will have 10 minutes. If that is clear, I shall proceed.

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Could I have clarification about the validity of a petition of concern? Surely, at the point at which the signatories apply their name, they should know that which they are petitioning. In this case, the petition that was lodged contains your name, Mr Speaker, Tippexed out, which suggests that it came out of the bottom of a drawer and was prepared long before the motion that it is petitioning ever came into existence. How, therefore, could a petition of concern be valid if, when the signatories applied their signatures, they did not know that which they were petitioning?

Mr Speaker: The Member will understand the process as well as anyone in the House. I, as Speaker, have to judge whether the petition of concern is valid. I seek to determine whether the names of those who have signed that petition are valid and whether it was submitted in the appropriate fashion. That is as far as I intend to go with the point that you made. You have succeeded in putting it on the record, and I suspect that you will be satisfied with that.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): I beg to move

That this Assembly approves that a total sum, not exceeding £15,646,075,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food

Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 and that total resources, not exceeding £17,051,879,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(c) and 2(c) of table 1 in the volume of the Northern Ireland Spring Supplementary Estimates 2014-15 that was laid before the Assembly on 2 February 2015.

That this Assembly approves that a sum, not exceeding £7,075,640,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund on account for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 and that resources, not exceeding £7,742,283,000, be authorised, on account, for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 4 and 6 of table 1 in the Vote on Account 2015-16 document that was laid before the Assembly on 2 February 2015. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

That this Assembly authorises resources, not exceeding £50,000, for use by the Department of Justice Northern Ireland Judicial Pensions Scheme for the year ending 31 March 2016, for the purposes specified in column 1 of the 2015-16 Main Estimate document that was laid before the Assembly on 2 February 2015. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

The Supply resolution debate is a critical step in the legislative process that governs our finances. The debate commencing today primarily covers the final spending plans for the 2014-15 financial year, but it also covers the first few months of 2015-16 and the 2015-16 Main Estimate for the new judiciary pension scheme. Today, I am tabling three Supply motions for debate. Through the first motion, I seek the Assembly's legislative approval of the Executive's final spending plans for 2014-15. As Members will be aware, these final spending plans are detailed in the spring Supplementary Estimates. The second motion requests interim legislative cover for resources and funding for the first few months of 2015-16 in the form of a Vote on Account. The third motion seeks legislative cover to spend in respect of the new judicial pension scheme that will come into effect on 1 April 2015.

I request the levels of Supply set out in the motions under section 63 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, which provides for the Minister of Finance and Personnel to make recommendations to the Assembly, leading to cash appropriations from the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund. The amounts that I now ask the Assembly to vote in Supply for 2014-15 are substantial: some £15.6 billion in cash, £17.1 billion of resources and £2.4 billion of accruing resources to be used by Departments and other public bodies in Northern Ireland.

As I mentioned, the first Supply motion relates to the spring Supplementary Estimates, which reflect all in-year changes made since the Main Estimates were approved by the Assembly last June. That includes any funding surrendered by Departments, allocations received or other technical transfers of funding processed through the three monitoring rounds in this financial year. They reflect the departmental expenditure limit (DEL) changes agreed by the Executive at the June, October and January monitoring rounds, and the annually managed expenditure (AME) funding agreed by the Treasury since the approval of the 2014-15 Main Estimates. Therefore, this legislation process simply ratifies Budgets previously agreed by the Executive.

Before going into the detail of the 2014-15 public expenditure transactions, I think that this is an opportune time to reflect on what has been an incredibly challenging year. The public expenditure environment that the Executive and Assembly had to face was immensely difficult, and there were times when the scale of the challenges facing us threatened to unhinge the entire Executive. The reasons for the very tight public expenditure position have been well documented. It was a combination of a reduction in our spending power since 2010 of more than £1 billion, increasing pressure on our public services, such as health, and the impasse over welfare reform. With the Stormont House Agreement, we now have a basis to move forward in respect of both political agreement and public finances. Specifically, the agreement on welfare reform has put the Executive's finances back on a long-term sustainable footing. The Executive's publication of a 2015-16 Budget last month means that we can look ahead with a key cornerstone in place to underpin the agreement.

The Stormont House Agreement also paved the way for the Assembly to take on new powers to vary our rate of corporation tax. What we have achieved over the last few months should, therefore, not be underestimated. That said, it is well known that it has been a bumpy road. I am still frustrated that it took so long to get agreement to implement welfare reform. The UK Government still insist on deducting funding from our Budget for the non-implementation of welfare reform to date. In this financial year alone, that deduction amounted to £87 million, which could otherwise have been used to deliver public services in Northern Ireland. With the Stormont House Agreement, we were able to negotiate additional flexibility to address the issue of welfare reform deductions, and I am pleased that we now have a mechanism to deal with that, but we should not forget that failure to proceed earlier on welfare reform has cost us £100 million in lost investment in public services.

I now want to look ahead with renewed focus and optimism to ensure that we continue to deliver for the people of Northern Ireland. I hope that everyone else in the Chamber shares that vision.

Let me return to the detail of the 2014-15 in-year changes, which is the focus of today's debate. We began the 2014-15 financial year with an overcommitment of £76.7 million on the resource side and £51.6 million on the capital side. That is normal budget management practice and was based on the expectation that the Executive would be able to more than recoup those amounts through reduced requirements being surrendered in the monitoring rounds. In any other year, that approach would have been perfectly logical, as it was when the Executive agreed their 2011-15 Budget in 2010. However, in terms of the resource budget, this year was not business as usual.

As I said, in the June monitoring round, we were facing a critical financial position that required in-year resource reductions to be imposed on Departments. As Members will recall, the Executive agreed reductions to departmental resource DEL of 4.4% across the June and October monitoring rounds. That impacted all Departments, with the exception of the Departments of Health and Education and a number of minor public bodies. In fact, the total amount of departmental reductions applied in this year was £164.6 million.

So far, my understanding is that the Departments are on target to deliver those savings, perhaps with the exception of the Department for Regional Development, which bid for additional resource funding in the January monitoring round. I reiterate the critical importance of all Ministers adhering to their budget control totals and, indeed, the resource and cash limits included in the spring Supplementary Estimates.

Despite the in-year reductions applied to departmental resource budgets, some reduced requirements were still surrendered through the monitoring rounds. On the non-ring-fenced resource side, that amounted to £36.1 million. As would be expected, given the in-year reductions, that was significantly less than the £90.7 million surrendered last year.

If we take funding to manage the overcommitment, technical adjustments and other issues into account, the Executive balanced the in-year reductions with allocations of some £206.8 million non-ring-fenced resource during 2014-15. A considerable proportion of that — £80 million — went to the Department of Health to ensure continuation of critical front-line health services. Funding was also allocated to key Executive commitments, including local government reform, Invest NI business support and the historical institutional abuse inquiry. Additional resource funding was also provided to the Department of Justice for the PSNI and legal aid pressures.

On the capital side, the Departments surrendered some £331.1 million through the in-year monitoring rounds. Members should note that that included some £132.8 million identified in the Executive's capital reallocation exercise in 2013, and that was not available for reallocation in this year. Some of the largest reductions included £119.5 million from the Department for Regional Development in respect of the A5 road scheme and £63.1 million from the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure in relation to its regional stadia programme.

If we take the opening position at the start of the year, technical adjustments and other issues into account, capital allocations to Departments amounted to some £226.9 million in 2014-15. That included £54.5 million to the Department for Social Development, primarily for the co-ownership scheme, social housing development and urban regeneration projects. There was also £48.3 million for the Department for Regional Development to fund the structural maintenance of roads and other capital works. There was also an allocation of £48.5 million financial transactions capital towards the University of Ulster's greater Belfast development scheme.

Those were just some of the departmental expenditure limit allocations in the monitoring rounds. However, the 2014-15 spring Supplementary Estimates also include some £3 billion of annually managed expenditure for social security benefits.

This funding goes a long way to protect those most in need and provides mainly for expenditure on disability benefits, pension support, employment and support allowance, jobseeker's allowance, income support and housing benefit.

Before leaving the detail of the spring Supplementary Estimates, I would like to highlight some limited headroom that has been built into the position over and above the January monitoring position. Headroom has been included for the Department for Social Development and the Department for Regional Development to ensure that, should other Departments have capital underspends before the end of the financial year, there is sufficient legislative cover to allow unspent capital to be redirected to these Departments. This will help the Executive to maximise capital expenditure and should ensure that no capital funding is lost to Northern Ireland under the Budget exchange scheme. I must emphasise that this headroom has been included on the condition that it must only be used if capital funding becomes available before the end of the financial year. I hope that Members will endorse these actions in respect of headroom and share my desire to avoid scarce capital funding being surrendered to the Treasury at the year-end.

Turning from the 2014-15 financial year and looking ahead to 2015-16, the second motion seeks approval of a cash and resource Vote on Account to ensure the continuation of services into the next financial year. The amounts of cash and resources proposed are an advance of around 45% of the final 2014-15 provision and have no direct correlation to the Budget allocations for 2015-16. This advance is simply necessary to enable services to continue into 2015-16 until the Main Estimates are presented to the Assembly for approval in June.

The final motion is the Main Estimate for the 2015-16 judicial pensions scheme. Legislation is currently under way to establish a new pension scheme for the devolved judiciary to take effect from 1 April this year. Since authority to spend in relation to this scheme must be in place before 1 April, the third motion introduces the 2015-16 Main Estimate for this new pension scheme.

I commend to Members the 2014-15 spring Supplementary Estimates, the 2015-16 Vote on Account, the 2015-16 judicial pensions scheme Main Estimate and the related Supply motions. At the end of today's debate, I will endeavour to deal with the issues raised by Members.

Mr Allister: I beg to move the following amendment:

Leave out all after "Assembly approves" and insert

"that a sum, not exceeding £7,075,390,000, reflecting a reduction in the cash grant from OFMDFM to the Equality Commission, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund on account for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 and that resources, not exceeding £7,742,033,000, reflecting a reduction in the cash grant from OFMDFM to the Equality Commission, be authorised, on account, for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 4 and 6 of table 1 in the Vote on Account 2015-16 document that was laid before the Assembly on 2 February 2015."

I will speak primarily to the subject matter of the amendment. Contrary to what I suspect some will allege, this amendment is not an assault on the existence of the Equality Commission. If it were, then, of course, the attempt to reduce its budget would be much more radical, because it has a budget of something approaching £6.5 million. This amendment, in a very proportionate way and by a relatively modest amount, seeks to afford MLAs an opportunity to rebuke the Equality Commission for its anti-Christian agenda.

The Equality Commission is publicly funded. Indeed, it requires the votes of today on the two resolutions to provide it with the funding that it spends. It is, effectively, living off and spending public money as an arm's-length body of OFMDFM, and its money comes by that route: through OFMDFM. Therefore, it is right that an elected Assembly should take an opportunity such as the Estimates debate to lay down markers in respect of the public performance of such a body.

This amendment seeks to do that in that measured way, to oppose and expose its adventurist agenda to try to suppress freedom of conscience in the area of human rights law. However you look at its recent actions, it is hard to escape the conclusion that part of this adventurist agenda is to push the boundaries of equality law to the point that it is beyond disputation that what they call "gay rights" trumps freedom of conscience. They utterly overwhelm them to the point that, no matter what religious freedom one might be supposed to have and no matter what freedom of conscience one might be supposed to have, there are circumstances, such as those that are manifesting themselves in current litigation, in which the Equality Commission wishes to demonstrate and to put beyond doubt that gay rights trump the Christian right to freedom of conscience. That is wrong, which is why, I believe, the opportunity is appropriate and timely to rebuke the mischievous madness of the Equality Commission in this regard.

Mr Givan: I thank the Member for giving way. The commentary is around gay rights trumping the rights of conscience and Christians in our society, but is it not the case that for Ashers bakery the sexual orientation of the customer was irrelevant? It was the message that the bakery was being asked to produce that was the problem. Therefore, had a heterosexual male asked for a cake with that message, it would have denied the service to that individual as well, because it was the message as opposed to the messenger that there was an issue with.

Mr Speaker: I invite the Member to return to the subject of the debate. I was giving you some scope — I am sure you will appreciate that — but it is time to discuss the business of today. The intervention has required me to make that clear. I was worried that we might head off in a different direction on a different debate for a different occasion. Today, we are discussing the budgetary measures, and I invite the Member to concentrate on that in his remaining time.

Mr Allister: I agree entirely with the comments made in the intervention. The purpose of the amendment is to put down a marker to the Equality Commission on its spend of public money and show it that there are those in this House who object to its actions and want to take the opportunity, I hope, to disapprove in a tangible way, such as by voting for the amendment, to demonstrate that.

It strikes me that the Equality Commission must have too much money if it can afford to go on the adventurous persecution that it is involved in. Of course, the Equality Commission is very bloated with its level of public support: it has 130 staff. We run the Policing Board, apparently, with 47 staff, but the Equality Commission needs 130. The Victims and Survivors Service has 136; the Equality Commission has 130.

When we come to the Equality Commission, we discover the astounding fact that it cannot even provide for equality in its own house. According to its last annual report, of its 130 staff, 66% are from a Roman Catholic background and 33% are from a Protestant background. Sixty-five per cent are from a female background, but 34% are male. Surely within the Equality Commission we should expect wholly transparent manifestations of equality. Yet, we find that things are of that nature.

My message to the Equality Commission through this amendment is very straightforward. Take the beam out of your own eye in terms of equality before you start worrying about the adventurous matters that you are meddling in.

I trust that the House will take the opportunity to mark the Equality Commission's card in this matter. It is a matter of regret to me that the republican front in this House has sought to block expression through a petition of concern, but there still will be an opportunity for people to show their tangible disapproval.

I trust that many will take that opportunity today and send the message that needs to be sent to the Equality Commission.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Senior DFP officials briefed the Committee for Finance and Personnel in relation to the spring Supplementary Estimates (SSE) and Vote on Account, and the Committee approved accelerated passage for the Budget Bill, which will be introduced by the Minister later today. That decision was on the basis that there had been appropriate consultation with the Committee as provided for by Standing Order 42(2), and I wrote to the Speaker to provide confirmation of that.

As was pointed out, the SSE reflect the changes that were made to the opening Budget position for 2014-15 as a result of the monitoring rounds in June, October and January. Additionally, the Department explained to the Committee that headroom was built into the spring Supplementary Estimates to give the Executive ability to spend any last-minute underspends on priority areas to ensure that no resources are lost to the Treasury under the Budget exchange scheme. That relates to the Department for Social Development and Department for Regional Development in particular.

During the evidence session, the Committee received helpful clarification from officials on a number of significant allocations, easements and technical adjustments that occurred during the in-year monitoring round process. The officials ran through the detail of those when explaining the reconciliation of the spring Supplementary Estimates with the Main Estimates of Departments, which were approved in the Assembly last summer.

That reconciliation exercise highlighted the scale of the movement of moneys across Departments during the year. From a quick calculation, the total resource allocations amounted to £239 million, while total capital allocations amounted to almost £227 million. That was against total easements of almost £78 million in resource and £331 million in capital. In some instances, the figures were substantial, in particular for Health, Social Development and Regional Development.

The Committee for Finance and Personnel undertook an active role in scrutinising the quarterly monitoring rounds at a strategic and departmental level throughout the 2014-15 financial year and received timely briefings on the Department's position prior to each monitoring round.

As regards its own expenditure, the Department of Finance and Personnel reported easements totalling £1.6 million in resource. In allocations, the Department received £5.8 million resource and £29.4 million capital, primarily in relation to the asset management strategy.

In the Committee's previous debate on its report into flexible working, a key issue in relation to office accommodation savings was that we do not yet have firm figures from the Department for the potential savings or even a plan setting out when and how those savings will be achieved. The Committee discovered that only 20% of Civil Service office space met workspace utilisation targets and traditional office space was typically occupied for only 45% of the time. Given the scope for significant savings in this area in 2015-16 and beyond, I expect the Committee will wish to closely monitor progress in this area.

Arising from last week's evidence from the Department of Finance and Personnel, the Committee agreed that in its future scrutiny it would be beneficial if, in advance of the Committee receiving an oral briefing and of the related Supply resolution debates, the Department provided the more-detailed information explaining the changes in departmental positions from the opening position to the Estimates. That would ensure that the Finance Committee and other Statutory Committees had a more detailed understanding of the changes ahead of debates. I look forward to the Department's response in that regard.

I turn now to the motion relating to the Vote on Account for 2015-16. That is a practical measure that provides interim resources at approximately 45% of the 2014-15 provision. That enables Departments, as the Minister said, to ensure that public services continue during the early part of the financial year until the Main Estimates for 2015-16 and the associated Budget Bill are debated by the Assembly before the summer.

12.30 pm

I will now speak from my party's position. I turn first to Mr Allister's amendment. The amendment is juvenile and petty. The Member for North Antrim does not like a decision that the Equality Commission has made, so he wants us to just take its money away. This is a Budget debate. It is a serious debate for the House. We should not be led into any diversionary debates that, as the Speaker has already said, belong elsewhere. You cannot have your cake and eat it. Have your 10 minutes and have your little argument, but, as far as we are concerned, this proposal is going nowhere. It is part of a homophobic front, to use the Member's terminology, because the whole argument that has arisen from the proposed legislation is about not only targeting the LGBT community and undermining the Equality Commission but opening a Pandora's box on equality. It is no surprise that the Member has brought this proposal forward.

I turn now to corporation tax. The Committee recently received evidence from Dr Graham Gudgin from the Centre for Economic Policy. He made a very interesting point, and one that we certainly agree with, that, in the calculations around corporation tax, there is a clear deficit. Most people expect that if, when the Assembly receives corporation tax powers, there were a decision to reduce the rate, then the secondary tax impacts of that — for instance, an increase in income tax revenues, an increase in VAT, and a reduction in welfare payments — should result in a benefit to the Department of Finance here in Belfast. We looked at Scotland, because the Smith Commission has rightly secured an assurance that any secondary tax impacts arising from fiscal powers used by the Scottish Government will make their way back to Edinburgh and to the Scottish Government. The Minister and the Executive need to seek an assurance that we do not get only the sting in the tail of corporation tax in terms of the cost, the £300 million projections, that have been put out there. If this is going to result in significant revenues going to the Treasury in London, those should be taken off the cost of corporation tax.

We do not know what is going to happen in Westminster over the next few months. However, there is every possibility that Scotland and the SNP, which wants to see corporation tax powers in Edinburgh, will get a better deal on corporation tax. It is important that we ensure that we get a good deal and a complete deal on corporation tax and that the Treasury does not pull a fly one with the Executive. A lot of these situations arise for a very simple reason: the fact that we do not have adequate detail on revenues and taxes. The Department of Finance and Personnel is often left in the position where the Treasury can wilfully pull the wool over its eyes whether it likes it or not. This is not an ideal position and does not represent good governance as far as the people we represent are concerned. It will lead to situations where we are not getting an appropriate and fair deal when it comes to any dealings with the Treasury.

In the DEL budget contained in the document before us today, there is reference to the European Social Fund (ESF). There is a lot of concern out there at the moment. I recently met a number of organisations in my own constituency to talk about how the ESF payments and the ESF process have been dealt with. There is a sense that community-based groups have been cut out of this process. There have been questionable changes made to the criteria for level 1 and level 2 qualifications. It is important that, over the next financial year, the Minister for Employment and Learning looks after not only his own Department but those in the community and voluntary sector who, in a lot of instances, deliver better outcomes and better results on the community line.

Finally, a lot of money has gone to Health over the past year for front-line support. That will continue with the £200 million uplift in 2015-16, but I hope that the Health Minister will learn —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr McKay: — that any decisions he makes will have to be based on protecting front-line services, like those at Dalriada, and that they will also need to be rural proofed in the year ahead.

Mr Ross (The Chairperson of the Committee for Justice): I am pleased to be able to speak on behalf of the Committee for Justice, which has obviously regularly scrutinised through written and oral briefings the Department of Justice's budget, including the delivery of savings plans, as well as pressures and easements, which are identified in monitoring rounds. As everyone is now aware, it has been a particularly challenging time for the Department of Justice, given the in-year budget reductions arising from the October monitoring round and the ongoing pressures created in other parts of the Department, its agencies and non-departmental public bodies.

Primarily, the ongoing costs of legal aid are of particular concern. Last week, I was at a Commonwealth Parliamentary Association conference to mark the 800th anniversary of the Magna Carta, a document that many Members will understand is rooted in the foundation of parliamentary democracy and, indeed, the rule of law. Article 39 of the Magna Carta talks about access to justice, and I think that we are all aware of the importance of access to justice and a good legal system. At the same time, we also have to be cognisant that the cost of legal aid in Northern Ireland is rising, is continuing to do so and is, indeed, spiralling out of control.

Given the cost of legal aid and its overall impact on the Justice budget, I will talk about it first. As early as the June monitoring round, very large pressures were being highlighted as a result of the cost of legal aid, and the Department was looking for savings in other areas to enable it to allocate additional funding. Over the year, the Department allocated £35.5 million of additional funding to the legal aid budget, including £13.2 million of the £29 million additional funding that the Executive provided as part of the October monitoring round. That money could have been used — some would argue that it should have been used — to fund other areas, including policing pressures and other front-line pressures facing the Department during the latter part of the 2014-15 financial year. At the Committee meeting on 10 December 2014, departmental officials confirmed that all budget areas had taken cuts to fund the legal aid pressures.

The cost of legal aid is unsustainable, given the reduction in budget that the Department is facing in 2015-16 and the impact that that will have on the provision of front-line services, which I will return to shortly. When he appeared at the Justice Committee meeting on 28 January this year, the Minister of Justice indicated that the key risk to the Department living within its budget next year is legal aid spending and said that radical action is clearly required. The Minister is proposing a range of further reforms, including a short-term exceptional measure to assist in managing the pressures on an in-year basis. That would involve a strictly controlled levy on bills to be paid, based on the amount required to live within the budget. The Assembly will take that decision annually. The Committee has asked for further details on that. It has not seen the detailed proposals, but when it does, it will obviously scrutinise them to make sure that the action will result in the immediate reductions that the Minister claims. Such a reduction in the cost of legal aid will, therefore, provide the time needed for the implementation of a longer-term reform, which, I think, everyone in the House believes is absolutely necessary.

Turning to the PSNI budget, which accounts for over 60% of the overall Justice budget — indeed, it is in the range of being seven times more than any other area of DOJ spending — the Chief Constable clearly outlined the impact that the in-year reductions in the budget would have. They included a severe detrimental impact on police resilience and capacity, including a significant impact on community policing, combating serious crime, legacy investigations and police recruitment plans for police officers and staff. The additional funding from the Executive at the October monitoring round was welcome and provided some assistance to the Chief Constable when making difficult decisions on priorities to ensure that he lives within his budget for 2014-15. The extra £20 million provided in the final budget allocation specifically for the PSNI will also enable the Chief Constable to undertake a level of recruitment and to mitigate to some extent the impact on front-line services during 2015-16. Again, that is to be welcomed.

Given that the police budget receives the bulk of Justice funding, the Committee has emphasised the importance of ongoing scrutiny of all areas of its spend to identify further efficiencies and opportunities to avail itself of shared services. Whilst the PSNI has identified and implemented a wide range of efficiency measures and savings, the need for the Department and the Chief Constable to continue to work closely together is of particular importance in this climate of reducing budgets. The Committee will continue to keep an eye on this area of the budget.

One other pressure that has emerged recently relates to hearing-loss claims from prison officers. Whilst the scale of the claims is unlikely to be anywhere near as high as those for police officers, the Department needs to give consideration to the best approach to handling the claims, given the criticism that has been directed at the handling of the legal and medical costs for the police claims.

I turn now to the Vote on Account, which provides the initial funding for 2015-16. According to the Department of Justice, its aim, amongst other things, is to prevent crime and reduce the risk of reoffending. The Department has already faced substantial pressures in-year, resulting in a range of reductions in funding that have clearly affected the delivery of front-line services, not just by the PSNI, as I have already highlighted, but projects delivered by the voluntary and community sector to address offending behaviour. My colleague Mr Frew, who is sitting along the Benches from me, has raised on a number of occasions the Railway Street Drug, Arrest Referral and Harm Reduction Service in Ballymena. NIACRO has been mentioned as well, and, of course, the work of the Probation Board, including the monitoring of sexual and violent offenders who are living in the community.

The Minister will continue to have to prioritise funding during 2015-16, and the Committee has raised concerns regarding the adoption of an approach to cutting spending that does not include a cost-benefit analysis and an analysis of the likely impact on and cost to other areas of the criminal justice system. By reducing funding to projects that aim to prevent offending behaviour and rehabilitate offenders, not only will the Department reduce the likelihood of achieving its overall aims and objectives for the justice system but it is likely to increase costs for the PSNI, the Courts and Tribunals Service and, ultimately, the Prison Service. The Committee has asked the Minister of Justice to revisit some of the funding proposals, and, again, we will continue to monitor saving plans and related impacts to ensure that budget allocations are not based on a false economy.

When the Minister attended the Committee meeting on 28 January, the budget for the Prison Service was discussed. I raised concerns regarding staffing levels, the use of overtime to cover staff shortages, the number of lockdowns, particularly in Maghaberry, and whether adequate funding is being made available to maintain safety levels for prison officers and prisoners. This morning, I noticed a reply to an Assembly question that I had tabled. It puts this in very stark view over the past five years. In 2010, 63 members of the Prison Service left with no new officers recruited; in 2011, 47 prison officers left the service and none was recruited; in 2012, 257 members left with 140 recruited; in 2013, 323 left and 170 were recruited; in 2014, 104 members left and none was recruited; in 2015, up until the 23 January, nine members of the Prison Service have left with no new recruits. Whilst we acknowledge that many left under the voluntary exit scheme, it highlights that we are running short on the number of prison officers that we have. That will obviously have an impact on the running of our prisons. The Minister indicated that staffing arrangements will be considered and that emerging funding pressures will be considered as part of the monitoring rounds, but it is, as I said, an area of particular concern, particularly given recent events at Maghaberry prison. The Committee will no doubt wish to discuss the situation with the director general of the Prison Service when she next attends the Committee.

Finally, I wish to mention the Desertcreat community safety training college capital project. The Department has indicated that an allocation of up to £53 million has been provided for that in the next financial year, dependent on agreeing the drawdown of unspent funds from the Treasury. Given that the four-year period provided for the Department of Justice to carry forward underspends is due to come to an end on 31 March 2015, it would be helpful if the Minister could provide an update on the position regarding discussions with the Treasury in relation to the underspend and end-year flexibility arrangements.

I finish by saying that I support the 2014-15 spring Supplementary Estimates and the 2015-16 Vote on Account.

Mr D Bradley: Go raibh míle maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle, as an deis cainte sa díospóireacht seo. Beidh mise ag díriú le linn m'óráide ar an tionchur a bhéas ag na moltaí seo ar rialtas áitiúil. Ní bheidh mé ag tabhairt tacaíochta don leasú ar an phríomh-rún, agus déarfaidh mé a thuilleadh faoi sin ar ball. At the outset, I want to say that we will not support Mr Allister's amendment. I will deal with that later. I want initially to outline the very challenging financial position that local government faces at a time when the sector is expected to deliver major reform.

The reform of local government is one of the flagship commitments in the Executive's Programme for Government. The vision that the Executive set for local government is:

"a strong, dynamic local government creating communities that are vibrant, healthy, prosperous, safe, sustainable and have the needs of all citizens at their core."

A key element of local government reform is the transfer of a number of functions to local government. To ensure that that transfer was effective and sustainable and would not increase the burden on ratepayers, the Executive made a commitment that it would be rates-neutral at the point of transfer.

The Minister, Mr Durkan, is responsible for, among other things, planning, which is the largest single area of work that will transfer to councils in April. He has ensured that that commitment has been adhered to with respect to the costs that are associated with that function. That has meant excluding those costs from the effects of the substantial across-the-board reductions that have been applied to the Department's budget by the Executive, thereby creating even greater pressures on the remaining areas of DOE expenditure. However, not all Ministers have felt able to do that, which has left the new councils with the challenge of either having to find additional funding from within their budgets or to cut services to achieve savings from the outset. That has not fulfilled the collective commitment to local government on rates neutrality at the point of transfer. To compound the issue, the Executive's final Budget also applied significant reductions to the DOE baseline provision for a range of local government grant programmes.

Throughout the consultations that led to the draft Budget and the final Budget, the Minister pressed for grant programmes to be protected from across-the-board cuts and the amounts to be ring-fenced so that they could only be used to support local government at this time of great change for the sector. Unfortunately, the Minister's proposals were ignored, which left local councils in a position in which they did not have their funding protected at the point of transfer but, instead, face cuts to their central government funding at a time of significant upheaval.

There is particular concern about the implications of the final Budget on the rates support grant. Reductions to that grant will impact directly on those less well-off councils that have access to those grant payments to help make good the difference between their rates income and the money that they need to maintain parity of service provision with more wealthy councils. That would be a particularly unfair and unwelcome outcome at a time when councils are seeking to make the major organisational changes that are associated with local government reform and reorganisation. Indeed, whilst the additional £1.9 million allocation to the derating grant was welcome, it will not meet the expected pressure on that budget, which, even with that additional allocation, is anticipated to be in the region of £3 million.

Furthermore, a number of other grant programmes that were previously supported by DOE have been subject to across-the-board cuts in the final Budget, including grants that are provided by the Department to local government to carry out statutory obligations or important services on behalf of central government. Those include the emergency planning grant, which is used by councils to support their capacity to provide much-needed support to other agencies at times of emergencies, and we have all witnessed the valuable contribution that councils make in emergency situations, including localised flooding events.

Unfortunately, the decision to apply an arbitrary and substantial cut to what was already a relatively small grant sends the wrong message to the new councils about the value that the Executive place on their previous efforts in emergency situations.

In 2013, the Executive agreed to provide councils with a reform funding package of £17.8 million for 2013-15, with a further commitment of up to £30 million for rates convergence beyond 2015. Mr Speaker, as you will be aware, the £17.8 million commitment for 2013-15 covered only part of the bid for £38 million in costs, and local government has had to meet the balance. That has placed, as you would expect, significant pressure on councils to fund the shortfall of an estimated £20 million, during a time of challenging economic circumstances, in order to cover the costs of the work streams relating to reform that are inescapable and provide no cash-releasing benefit to the sector.

In addition, councils have identified a further £13 million of transition and transformation costs that will, potentially, be incurred over this and the next two financial years. That is adding to the financial pressures in local government created by the final Budget and the reductions in funding transferring with some functions. Those pressures would be difficult at any time, but, coming in the early years of operation of the new councils, the challenge is even greater. Some local government representatives have articulated the view that the Executive are less than committed to making local government reform work and are not providing councils with adequate resources to be able to fulfil the expectations that citizens have of the reform process. Indeed, they believe that the cumulative effect of all these cuts will be an increase in district rates or cuts to key services.

The Executive need to allocate an additional one-off sum to be paid to councils to mitigate the dual impacts of the one-off costs of reorganisation and the final Budget on Executive funding available for local government next year. In particular, the Executive need to allocate additional funding to support local government at this critical time: for example, £3 million to plug the gap in the derating grant for 2015-16; £2.77 million to restore the rate support grant to its current level of £18.32 million; and a contribution of a further £10 million towards the additional transition costs not covered by the Executive's local government reform funding package. Such sums would be allocated for the exclusive benefit of the new councils.

I do not think that it is any surprise that the SDLP will oppose the amendment proposed by Mr Allister, since we signed the petition of concern. I think that the amendment is a worrying interference in the work of the Equality Commission. The implication of it is that, if we disagree with the direction that the Equality Commission takes on a particular issue, we simply cut its budget. We should allow the Equality Commission to continue to do its legitimate work without such interference.

Mr Speaker, I will leave it at that. Go raibh míle maith agat, mar a dúirt mé cheana féin, as an deis cainte. Ní bheimid ag tacú leis an leasú ar an rún. As I said, we will not support the amendment.

Mr Cree: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the two Supply resolutions that are being debated together today.

As usual, the spring Supplementary Estimates contain a lot of figures, and I appreciate that it was no easy task to collate the information. It is three years since Mr Bradley, as Deputy Chairperson of the Committee, brought a motion to the House that gave effect to approving the Committee's report on implementing a review of the financial process in Northern Ireland. The report was adopted and supported by all. It called on the then Minister of Finance and Personnel, in conjunction with relevant Executive colleagues, to implement the report's recommendations. It is a shame that nothing has moved on since then and that we are still labouring with a system that has long since passed its sell-by date. We will shortly enter the last year of the mandate of this Assembly, and I urge the Executive to press on with a proper system, despite the intransigence of the Education Minister.

The Finance Committee has taken evidence from departmental officials in the last few weeks. The Chairman has spoken about this, so I will not go into specifics on the work of the Committee in that regard. The Supply resolution seeks the Assembly's approval of the Executive's final spending plans for 2014-15, as detailed in the spring Supplementary Estimates. At this stage of the year, the Estimates have included all the changes from the monitoring rounds and are largely technical in nature. They require Assembly approval and are the final spending plans for this year.

For a variety of reasons, the Departments struggle throughout the year to spend their capital budgets. It seems prudent that some capital has been built into the Estimates by way of headroom to allow for flexibility at the year end. The return of capital to the Treasury would be most regrettable, bearing in mind the pressing needs in Northern Ireland at this time. DRD would receive £3 million for further investment for road structural maintenance, and DSD could receive £12 million for further investment in housing stock.

I also welcome DFP's condition that, should the spending not materialise, the Department's virement approval would not be given later to cover excess spending in other areas. The figures in the Supply resolution and the Budget Bill are the same as those in the corresponding spring Supplementary Estimates. They are both routine requirements at this stage of the financial year to obtain legislative Assembly authority for spending for the resources and associated cash requirements for the revised 2014-15 position. However, I ask the Minister for an assurance, which I am sure he will give me, that no unspent resources and capital, both conventional and financial transactions, will be returned to the Treasury this year.

The Vote on Account today is needed to ensure that the flow of cash continues to Departments, and it authorises spending of around 45% of the Budget, as the Minister confirmed. I have said before that it is not ideal to vote through an authorisation to spend almost half the Budget when we do not have the necessary details of that Budget to scrutinise. Until we have a better financial process, we have to use the existing system, poor as it is.

Mr Allister has tabled an amendment to change the Vote on Account so that the Equality Commission will have its budget reduced by £250,000, and this will presumably extend for the full year. I understand why the Equality Commission has been targeted as some of its decisions are, to say the least, bizarre. The Ashers bakery case is a classic example of Christian values being regarded by the commission as a bias, and the bakery has been prosecuted. On the other hand, I acknowledge that some of the commission's decisions are common sense — if sense be common — and the wearing of poppies was such a case. However, a petition of concern has been tabled so that the amendment will not be allowed, which, I have to say, is another decision that is a major concern to me. We hope to recognise that everyone in the Equality Commission is not guilty of illogical decisions, and many are hard-working. I believe that 10 members of staff were released only last week.

Another area that remains vague is the target for asset realisation. We started off the Budget with an expectation of £100 million for the four years. Perhaps the Minister will clarify what the current situation is. Anticipating a satisfactory response from him, I will be prepared to support the two resolutions today on behalf of the Ulster Unionist Party.

I turn now to the Main Estimate for the Northern Ireland judicial pension scheme. It is proposed to have the scheme in place by 1 April this year, and the secondary legislation is under way. Authority to spend under the scheme must be in place before that date, and we have little choice other than to approve the expenditure provision. The Supply resolution has allowed resources not exceeding £50,000 for the year ending 31 March 2016.

Mrs Cochrane: I should like to start by saying that Alliance opposed the 2015-16 Budget at the relevant time, both at the Executive and here in the Assembly, as we do not believe that it is sufficiently strategic. However, the Budget has now been agreed by a majority and we do not believe that we should seek to undermine it at this stage.

Alliance will, however, oppose Mr Allister's amendment to remove money allocated to the Equality Commission. It is clear from his comments that he tabled that not to talk about the Budget but simply as an opportunity to give his twopence worth about the fact that they have taken a case against Ashers bakery. Whether or not you agree with the Equality Commission taking that case, it does have an important role here in Northern Ireland, and to seek to punish it because you do not agree with it could undermine its important work on equality issues. Of course, there are other court cases that are taken with public funding, such as on the gay blood ban, and there is no suggestion from Mr Allister that funding should be removed from the Department of Health for that. Ultimately the courts will decide if they got it wrong, and lessons will hopefully be learned on all sides of each argument. Of course, Mr Speaker, as you said, today is not the day to debate that, nor the electioneering clause — sorry, the conscience clause — so I will move on.

Today's Supply resolution and Vote on Account motions authorise the use of that money by the various Northern Ireland Departments and public bodies. They do not, however, lay any groundwork for the radical reform that is required to deliver better outcomes for everyone in Northern Ireland. I ask the Minister how the proposed spending in front of us today will begin the process of making our public finances any more sustainable. We know that the forthcoming Budget for 2016-2020 is likely to see an even smaller block grant in the UK as the Government continue to cut public spending. At the same time, we have the potential added pressure of locally funding a lower level of corporation tax. Of course, we want the anticipated benefits of devolved corporation tax, but our Budget prioritises health and education at the expense of the economy. How we are going to be able to fund the change in corporation tax if we do not reform the most glaringly obvious area remains to be seen.

There is still no real challenge towards reforming inefficiencies in the areas of health and education. We know that those areas are inefficient, even just through high-level benchmarking of costs compared to other jurisdictions, yet the large degree of protection that they have been given creates less incentive for reform. As I said before, Alliance would not have given the degree of protection to the Department of Education, although we do support investing more resources directly into schools, but we think that that can be achieved by better use of the Department's budget in the first place. More money is already spent on education in Northern Ireland than in neighbouring jurisdictions, but less money is invested directly in the pupils. Part of that is due to the divided system that we have, as well as the administration.

The focus for the Department of Health also needs to be on reform, not just simply using resources to cover over gaps here and there in a sticking-plaster approach. The numerous reports that have already shown where there is significant scope for reform in the health sector now need to be driven forward through investing in rationalising the way services are provided and in further prevention measures. Reforms to the estate are also required, but there needs to be serious political commitment to do that. We cannot expect people to come forward with ideas for savings and then respond with political outrage because it has happened on our doorstep.

Tomorrow we will also debate welfare reform. Notwithstanding the fact that we have already lost millions of pounds in penalties due to the impasse, there will no doubt be a number of issues raised about what more can be done to support our most vulnerable and the money that is required to do that — things like funding an independent advice sector for those seeking to claim benefits, or the need for resources for skills development for those who are trying to move into work. We cannot fund things like that until we take the tough decisions needed for radical reform. That includes things like revenue raising and tackling the costs of division, for example, in our teacher training, an area where, when proposals are made to reform, the bigger parties retreat into their trenches and seek to continue segregation. We have no prospect of funding adequate front-line services, addressing the building pressures or funding a lower rate of corporation tax until we face up to those challenges.

Mr Campbell: I begin by apologising for the lateness of my arrival today, the reason for which can be found on the Order Paper under question 10 to the Department for Employment and Learning. It indicates a jobs fair, which I helped to announce in Limavady at 10.00 am this morning. However, I will not go down that route.

I want to concentrate the majority of my remarks on the amendment proposed by Mr Allister. It concentrates of course on the Equality Commission. Members and the general public will be aware that the Equality Commission has been remiss in carrying out its tasks for a number of years. There are a number of questions, one of which is this: why should politicians have to negotiate with, expose in the glare of publicity or meet the Equality Commission to get it to do its job properly? The answer is of course that we should not have to do that, but we do.

The question that Mr Allister poses is one of whether this is the way to get the Equality Commission to do its job properly. I would contend that it is not. The Equality Commission and indeed its predecessors were engaged in a number of failings between 1985 and 2003, when Mr Allister had walked away from confronting both the commission and its predecessors. In that 18-year period, he left confrontation not just with Sinn Féin but with equality bodies. Of course, some of the rest of us kept on and did not walk away. I am sure that we will come back to that at a future date.

The amendment gets down to a cash transaction; a punishment for the Equality Commission through OFMDFM. Yet Mr Allister does not allude to the fact that, in the Finance Minister's statement, there is already a reduction in the money that is going to the Equality Commission. Hopefully when we get the vote through and get this done, that reduction will be a factual one. It is a reality of a reduction; not a press release or a headline, but a real reduction. Mr Allister preferred to go down the press release route to get a headline that he knew could not achieve anything. He knew when he tabled this that there would automatically be a petition of concern. He knew that, but he went ahead anyway.

I have no objection to a proposition being put, even in the knowledge of a petition of concern, because sometimes you have to do what is right whether or not the objective will be achieved. If Mr Allister was saying that, then fine, we could live with that, but that would bring us on to another contention —

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Campbell: Yes, I will indeed.

Mr Allister: I do not quite understand why the Member is smarting. He talks about the fact that there is a reduction in the Equality Commission's budget. That is true of a number of bodies. It is not specific to the issue that I have been seeking to focus on. The purpose of my amendment is to give a platform for people to focus on that specific issue and to have a tangible impact on that. I must say that I am surprised that the Member takes objection to that. I would have thought that he was onside with that issue. It leaves me wondering why he is smarting about it.

Mr Campbell: Well, if exposing Mr Allister's proposition to the wider public is "smarting", I am happy to be smarting.

This is what we have today: a proposition that cannot be passed. He knew when he tabled it that it could not be passed. I am glad that he concedes now that there is a reduction in the Equality Commission's budget. There is one; a factual one, not a press release or anticipated one that can never become a reality.

Mr Allister arrived in the Assembly some four years ago, immediately on the heels of 10 years of 50:50 recruitment in the police, which the Equality Commission supported every single year. I have checked to see if there was an amendment. No, there was not an amendment because it could not achieve its objective, just as today's cannot achieve its objective. Mr Allister came into the Assembly and there was an Equality Commission-supported act of discrimination against my community and his. It did not provoke an amendment then or the year after. Mr Allister mentioned in his speech the staffing of the Equality Commission, and he was quite right. Some of us have raised that issue year on year, both when Mr Allister was here and in the years when he was not, when he had gone off and walked away from the confrontation. Yes, we raised those issues and will continue so to do. Was there an amendment then? Was there an amendment last year that, on the basis of the imbalance of staff in the Equality Commission, there should be a reduction? No, there was not. Was there one the year before? No, there was not. Was there one the first year Mr Allister appeared back from the wilderness? No, there was not. Nothing. The man was silent.

The proposition here is that we have to deal with the Equality Commission, and, thankfully, OFMDFM and the Finance Minister have looked at the general Budget and concluded that there is, as has been alluded to, a need for a general reduction and that the Equality Commission should not be excluded from that general reduction. Therefore, we must turn our minds to what action needs to be taken post the vote today and post the Vote on Account and beyond the headlines and the press releases to get a public body to do its duty and to get it to stop doing what it should not be doing. It should not be doing what Mr

Allister, myself and others have talked about. It should not have been doing those things down through the years. This is not the way to deal with the Equality Commission. That body is wrong, and it needs to be confronted about the wrong and its error. It needs to be met and rationalised with and needs to have its budget reduced, as the Finance Minister has succeeded in achieving.

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Mo bhuíochas as an deis cainte inniu. Tempting as it is to get between Mr Campbell and Mr Allister, I think that I will resist that and focus on the Budget, except to say that we are perhaps gilding the lily to refer to the Equality Commission as anti-Christian. The bits of the Bible that I read are very strong on equality. Of course, I could be reading the wrong parts, but, for now, I think that we can stand over the work that the Equality Commission is doing.

I have three quick points on the spring Supplementary Estimates that are before us today, as well as the 2015-16 Budget and Vote on Account. The Minister only referred to the past briefly. Sometimes the past gets us in trouble in here, but he referred to the so-called welfare reform fine from London of £100 million as a loss to public services. It is important to put on record that not all of us agree with that, because we do not think that it is a straight equation that that £100 million would have, in particular, gone to those in need, would have been spent on the economy and would have built up lives, families and communities. It is not a straight equation. I mention that because I hope that we are united in the Chamber against the ideology of austerity and that there is no hankering after that. We have decided to mitigate the worst effects of the so-called welfare reform that is coming down the tracks so that we can ensure that we eschew, rebut and refute the philosophy and ideology of austerity.

I want to focus on the Budget and the figures in front of us. I commend the Ministers on the efforts made in very challenging times when, as the Minister said, London has cut the Budget by £1.5 billion since 2011. Efforts were made by all Departments to focus our funding on growing the economy, creating jobs and trying to move the community confidently forward, and I think that we will see the rewards of that.

I am of the opinion that we are in recovery. I see, this morning, that Ulster Bank economists are saying that the economy is stumbling, so it is clearly not a self-assured recovery; but I believe that we are in economic recovery. The big challenge for us, as a Chamber, an Executive and an Assembly, is to ensure that the steps we take in the time ahead push us farther into recovery, build the economy and create jobs. There is a danger, and I know that the Minister is aware of it, that when you introduce cuts in such an atmosphere you may damage confidence. I disagree with my colleague Mr Ó Brollacháin in that regard: these cuts are imposed on us by London.

That is the last point I wish to make, and it is well made by greater economic authorities than me. It is the opinion of Wolf, the opinion of Stiglitz, the opinion of Krugman and the opinion of Piketty that austerity, and the ideology of austerity, actually damages an economy.

To build confidence in the time ahead, we need to make sure that the moneys we have allocated in this 2015-16

Monday 9 February 2015

Budget, in particular regarding the Committee that I am on, the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, gets down to our businesses and attracts investment as quickly as possible. I think we have done that.

My final point is that Minister Foster will brief the Finance Committee on Wednesday, but I think that there has been a real effort, within that, to give comfort to the tourism sector. Those of us who were briefed on it know that NI tourism, in particular, was very worried. We managed to work hard, I presume, around the Executive table, to negotiate a much better deal for tourism, and I think that that has to be at the heart of the economic recovery of which I spoke.

Mr McCausland (The Chairperson of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure): I welcome the opportunity to speak on the motion. While the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure has one of the smallest departmental budgets in the Assembly, it has an important remit nevertheless, which covers a range of activities that impact on the daily lives and social and economic well-being of everyone living in Northern Ireland.

The Committee has actively scrutinised the changes in the DCAL budget position throughout the year, subsequent to the monitoring rounds. I have to say that the Committee has experienced some difficulty in so doing, and in having access to monitoring round papers in a timely fashion. This is an issue that has been raised with the Minister and the Department. However, members have done their best in the circumstances.

The most significant change in the core departmental provision is the £62 million that was returned during the year because of issues around the stadium redevelopment programme. As Members are aware, there was an issue around perceived state aid, and then there was the situation around the recent judicial review of the Casement Park planning application, which saw the Environment Minister's planning approval overturned. It is good to see the work that has been done at Ravenhill and Windsor Park, but there has been a substantial delay to the commencement of the redevelopment project at Casement, and funding that should have been used has had to be returned. The Committee has been briefed on the issues involved, and the Department and the GAA are talking about a new planning application, although, as that involves an application, and the consultation around that, it will probably take most of this year.

Members expressed some concern regarding the absence of any anticipatory work that might have been carried forward to address the underspend, and there was also concern about the implications for the work on the subregional football stadia in due course, which may be put back a little because of that. The Committee also voiced its concern that the money for the project should not be wasted and that delay on Casement should not impact on the progress of the Executive-approved regional stadium development programme, which includes, as I said already, the football subregional stadium element.

During the year, the Department made a number of successful resource and capital bids through monitoring rounds for the UK City of Culture legacy. That refers to Londonderry's year as UK City of Culture in 2013.

The year was, indeed, a great success for the city, and the Committee was extremely supportive of the Department's work on the matter. The Department is keen to ensure that there is a lasting legacy from the events of 2013, as, indeed, is the Committee. However, the Committee has not always been clear about how those bids are part of a fully considered and planned legacy strategy. The bids have brought additional resources to the core departmental arts and cultural policy business areas. While that is to be welcomed, the Committee continues to scrutinise the use of those resources.

The Department has also made a number of successful monitoring round bids for resource and capital under the promotion of equality and tackling poverty and social exclusion (PETPSE) and Together: Building a United Community (T:BUC). The Committee is supportive of both bidding vehicles. However, again, the Committee has not always been clear that those bids are part of a clear, planned strategy. Members see the value of the individual bids, but they often seem to be spontaneous, rather than part of an overall strategic approach.

The Committee has considered the increased provision for National Museums Northern Ireland over the year and is supportive of bids that have been made through monitoring rounds for necessary work to maintain the NMNI estate. The Committee believes that it is important to ensure that the fabric of our museums is fit for purpose and provides an inviting environment for visitors. Recently, the Committee visited the Ulster Museum, and members were pleased to see how the facility is being developed as a cultural and educational resource.

The Committee remains very supportive of the departmental bids for resources through the monitoring rounds for libraries, and it supports the efforts that are being made to ensure that the library estate is well maintained and that libraries remain open against the current difficult financial backdrop. However, the Committee is keen to ensure that the value of libraries to our communities is not forgotten, and members support the Department and the Executive's work to make libraries a key element of any community renewal.

Members will also be aware that the Committee has been vocal in its support for the Ulster Orchestra. The Committee is particularly pleased that the orchestra has received half a million pounds through the recent January monitoring round. That alleviates its immediate financial difficulties. However, the Committee appreciates that that is a short-term measure and that work must be done to secure a long-term and sustainable future for the orchestra. The Committee is keen that this issue should continue to receive the Department and the Executive's attention. Members of the Committee right across the board place a considerable value on the Ulster Orchestra as one of the core elements in our cultural infrastructure as a region within the United Kingdom, and it is important that the support is there for the Ulster Orchestra.

The Committee is also supportive of the additional funding flowing from the recent January monitoring round for NI Screen and Cinemagic. Members are aware of the important work on skills development that that funding will support, and it is clear that the creative industries, including film and television production and digital technologies, will be vital to the transformation of our economy.

Sport NI has also received additional funding of over £4 million from the original planned Budget position. That change reflects successful bids in monitoring rounds over the year for resource and capital, including sports-related bids under PETPSE and T:BUC, as well as for the UK City of Culture legacy for the greater north-west. The legacy bids include resource and capital, one example being the north-west sports village. However, a significant proportion of the figure — over £1.5 million — is in the form of accruals from the previous financial year.

In conclusion, the Committee has been largely supportive of DCAL bids during the past year. In considering the way forward, members stress the importance of making sure that the necessary funds continue to be made available to DCAL so that it can continue to deliver its programmes and to conduct its functions effectively. On behalf of the Committee, I support the motion.

Ms Boyle: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I apologise in advance of speaking to the House today; I am in the process of losing my voice. Some Members might be glad to hear that.

By agreeing the Supply, Estimates and Vote on Account, we are focused on building a just, fair and equal economy for people of the North and the island. Like all of you, I am committed to building a society and economy of opportunity, prosperity and fairness. We are at an economic crossroads, and it is time to choose what we want our future to be; whether we want to remain wedded to the Westminster austerity experiment or whether we want to carve out our own economic future, building our strength as an island economy. British control of our economy has ensured that it is our people who have the lowest household income in comparison with Britain and the highest rates of unemployment and emigration. Currently, emigration is at its highest since the 1950s. Our people deserve better.

We are caught in an austerity trap, and our people are caught in a poverty trap. Gone are the days when poverty was about scarcity; today, poverty is a direct result of economic policy and inequality. In our case, it is poverty driven by decisions made in Westminster. As I have said in the House before, the good news is that there is a way out of the austerity trap, the cuts agenda and the obscenity of child poverty and food banks. We can, together, secure the full financial powers to tackle inequality, promote competitiveness and allow businesses to thrive. We can take control of our welfare budget and policy, which is a powerful tool to support jobs and reduce inequality. With the powers over our economy, we can ensure that we use that wealth to boost the economy, create jobs and support public spending whilst reducing the deficit through faster economic growth and increased revenues, not spending cuts.

Westminster promises only continued poverty and austerity, but, locally, we can seize the opportunity to do things differently. In an overall commitment to fiscal responsibility, we could collectively provide a credible and sustainable alternative to the current British Government's fiscal plan and place a greater focus on supporting growth and tackling inequality. We can prioritise our choices in many ways. For example, by removing constraints imposed on us, we could increase our investment in infrastructure. Every £100 million in capital investment supports thousands of local jobs. Westminster's austerity policies are harming our people, economy and public services and they have put them under intense pressure. We are not, as the Tories say, all in this together. It is the most vulnerable and disadvantaged — those who need the most support — who are hit the hardest. We, in Sinn Féin, stood firm, and we can be proud that we have protected our most vulnerable and disadvantaged people from Westminster's attack on the welfare state. We will stand in opposition to the brutal spending cuts and assault on pay and conditions, which is harming families, particularly the most vulnerable. We will stand firm against the cost of living squeeze in our commitment to protect front-line services and to a living wage. We will stand firm in our commitment to building a better business climate.

Politics, North and South, is undergoing the biggest shake-up since partition. In the interests of all our citizens, we must seize the historic opportunity that exists now for change. We need to grow our way to recovery. Any recovery must be a recovery for all, not merely those at the top. To develop a prosperous society, we must sustain decent public services that are accessible to all, including rural Ireland. To protect vulnerable citizens, we need a good, strong economy. There now exists an unprecedented opportunity to transform the political landscape on the island, North and South. Collectively, we can achieve by making progressive policy changes, mapping a way forward and taking power back from Westminster.

Our focus must be on building and rebuilding our public health service, eradicating housing waiting lists and creating meaningful jobs with decent terms and conditions. There is no greater obstacle to progressive change than austerity. Sinn Féin believes that the North must have secure economic power from Westminster to steer a different course from Tory-driven ideology, to leave behind austerity policies and to actively work to revive the island's recovery and economy.

Mr McKinney: I welcome the opportunity to contribute to today's debate. I will focus on health, social services and public safety. As the Minister and all of us are aware, there are genuine and many pressures on the health service. Throughout the past number of months, I have expressed the SDLP's concern about the financial allocation given to the health service. Emanating from those fiscal shortfalls is the fact that severe and intolerable pressures are being witnessed in the provision of health and social care here. Once again, we only have to look at the recent cases, less reported, but still existing, of pressure in our emergency departments. That reflects the fact that they are not sufficient to maintain a high quality of patient care in order to deal with patient flow and provide that high-quality care. I will deal with some of the patient flow issues later.

In the past few months, we have also seen further evidence of consistent breaches of performance targets in A&E with regard to four and 12-hour waiting times. We have the worst record in all of the UK for meeting four-hour targets. We have seen the direct consequences of that with the curtailment of elective care provision, which still has to play itself out, which has caused delays in surgery and treatment and, in turn, left many patients needlessly suffering. We cannot continue to ignore the issues involving our accident and emergency provision that have surfaced during the past number of years. They are all too commonplace in a health and social care system that is buckling at its knees.

I reiterate, once again, that the invest-to-save plan of reform at the heart of the health-care system, Transforming Your Care, has not, by any stretch of the imagination, been properly funded. There has been a lack of shift left in expenditure into the community. That has resulted in very little meaningful outcome. I have been saying that, the SDLP has been saying that and it is becoming increasingly clear that more people are beginning to accept that narrative, none more so than Liam Donaldson, who conducted his most recent review into the health and social care system here. He said that the work of TYC is not properly planned or funded and that it has led GPs to take matters into their own hands by way of GP federations. He also said that the review team heard TYC referred to as "Transferring Your Care", "Postponing Your Care" and even "Taking Your Chances". His report states:

"Carers see it as a euphemism for dumping work onto them; general practitioners likewise."

Sir Liam Donaldson concludes:

"Transforming Your Care is simply not being implemented."

He goes on to say, and I think it is worth reading these issues into the record, that commissioning is underpowered and, effectively, not working. We will vote for money for the health service today, but unless there is some sort of radical change in the system, we will not be spending money wisely; we will not be spending money well; and we will not be spending money consistent with patient need. I want to conclude on Mr Donaldson's report on the issue. I think the health system here should be embarrassed that this point could ever be asked or raised as an issue in a report by someone as eminent as Sir Liam Donaldson. The report asks, "Who runs the health and social care system in Northern Ireland?"

"The lack of clarity about who is in charge is a major problem for Northern Ireland's care system. The difficulty is not that there is no figurehead, but that strategic leadership does not have the visibility of other systems. Without a clear leader, progress is piecemeal and change is hesitant and not driven through".

Once again, we can vote money through today, but is there a guarantee that it will be spent well?

Two other reports have come out in the last few weeks. Some people here say, "Sure it is happening over in England", almost as if we should blame it on a general failing here and in England. The reason why it is happening here is that we have adopted some of the same policy considerations. That is why it is happening here and in England. The Westminster Public Accounts Committee has done some significant examination of the issues, and it says that radical change is needed in its system to the way health care is provided, including:

"making better use of community and primary care services to reduce pressure on hospitals."

Where have we heard that before? We heard it here about Transforming Your Care, but there is no money available to make it happen.

The Committee said that the health service:

"was 'out of balance' ... because community and primary care services were not working well which places pressure on hospitals."

Where have we heard that before? We have heard it here before and experience it here every day. Once again, we will vote through money today for the health service, but we cannot guarantee that it will be spent well, certainly not on the basis of policy provisions copied from the rest of the country.

Finally, an additional external reference is that the King's Fund think tank referred to the fact that NHS organisation was disastrous:

"Radical changes to the way the NHS in England is organised have been disastrous and distracted from patient care ... People in the NHS focused on rearranging the deckchairs rather than the core business of improving patient care."

That is slightly different language, but, once again, the direction of travel is the same. We have not invested in the community side, which is the side that can take the weight off less expensively and make provision for people closer to their home, yet we have stripped out on the hospital side, leading to two pressures there.

All say the same thing, which is that the community side of health care is not being properly funded. We must reject the Minister's claims that the crisis that we face is not unique to here. In essence, it is, because we have followed the UK path. We must also look at whether the projected £113 million in trusts' efficiency savings are counterstrategic to the TYC plan. Even DUP Members have joined campaigns on, for example, Dalriada Hospital and the Bangor minor injuries unit, although they managed to overturn that decision, and in other areas. We have seen consistency among political opinion here on the need for funding in the community side.

It is pivotal that we examine whether decisions made by the trusts to save money will have further negative consequences down the line. We must get assurances that any decision taken complies with section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 to ensure that proper consultations and screenings are implemented and that patient needs are fully appreciated and taken on board.

We have talked before here about the opportunities for efficiency savings in the service. There is significant wastage. Some £50 million was spent on bank and agency staff. There were 360,000 cancellations of hospital appointments by patients and the hospital system itself, and we have seen how we had to reach out to the private sector to perform operations as a result, which is funding them twice. However, we have now run out of road even in that context, as I reflected earlier; we have simply had to cancel elective operations in circumstances of extreme stress.

One of the other issues is patient flow. The Health Committee is examining workforce planning and, even at this very early stage, has discovered that the hospital health system does not know how many people are employed in GP surgeries. It does not do a real-time analysis of the number of people waiting each day for particular surgeries. If the system does not understand the flow through the system, how can it run a business at all? You need, fundamentally, to understand the flows in any organisation to be able to cope, particularly in the health system.

Most concerning is the fact that the block grant from Westminster is continuously being constrained, and, as we go into the next Budget, that will ultimately limit the possibility of doing something proactive to deal with the pressures facing the system. Ultimately, it is imperative that we begin to realise the root causes of the pressure on our health service and that we have a properly financed, measured and strategically focused reform plan in place that will facilitate meaningful outcomes to ensure that we have a health and social care system that is fit for the 21st century.

As we make decisions today, I reiterate that we can allocate money, but we will not know that it will fundamentally put the patient first. We need to have assurances in that regard.

Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister):

First, I will make some comments in my capacity as Chairman of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister.

In-year, the Committee was briefed by the Department on its monitoring round returns before they were submitted to the Department of Finance and Personnel. We also received written and oral updates on the outcome of the monitoring rounds, but, unfortunately, the papers for the briefings for the June and October monitoring rounds were received just a short time in advance of the start of the relevant Committee meetings. That is a trend and an unwelcome one at that. The late provision of papers does not allow members time to consider them fully in preparation for the briefing, and it could impede our ability to fulfil our statutory role effectively, not least that of scrutiny. It was good to see an improvement for the January monitoring round when the papers were provided early. I hope that that continues during 2015.

It must be noted that the Executive applied a 2.1% reduction in resource budgets in June and, at that point, signalled that a further 2.3% would be required in October. That equated to an in-year reduction of £3 million to the Department's budget.

A key focus area for the Committee was funding for victims. There appears to have been a lack of clarity on the actual baseline for the Victims and Survivors Service for 2014-15. The service told the Committee that it had received a letter in May 2014 advising of an opening budget of £11.685 million. However, OFMDFM officials advised that the opening allocation was £10 million, with the intention of restoring the baseline to £11.3 million through in-year monitoring. An inescapable bid of £1.3 million was not met in June monitoring, which raised concerns about the ability of the Victims and Survivors Service to deliver its programmes. The allocations of £1.3 million subsequently made in each of the October and January monitoring rounds were, therefore, welcome. In addition, although the Victims and Survivors Service will still be required to deliver savings in the coming year, the extra £3 million allocation in the 2015-16 Budget and the confirmation that the baseline for the service will be above that for 2014-15 are also welcome. The Committee notes that the Victims and Survivors Service will take measures, such as moving premises, to save money. I hope that that will help to maximise the funding available for programmes.

Members will be aware that funding for the historical institutional abuse inquiry had been done via the in-year monitoring rounds. In that regard, £4.3 million was allocated to the HIA inquiry in June. While the Executive had committed to providing funding for the HIA inquiry, the allocation of £5 million in the 2015-16 Budget was, nevertheless, welcome.

Other allocations to OFMDFM within the year included £3.5 million for Together: Building a United Community in June. The Committee heard that that would be used in a number of ways, including central good relations funding, urban villages and race hate interventions. In addition, £3.2 million was allocated to Delivering Social Change in January, which, together with £2.1 million identified by OFMDFM, enabled transfers to be made to the Health, Education, Social Development and Environment Departments to help to deliver the signature projects.

The vast majority of easements declared by the Department related to capital funding for the Maze/Long Kesh site, Ebrington Barracks and Crumlin Road Gaol, with some £8 million being returned to the centre. The Department did not return any non-ring-fenced resource funding.

1.45 pm

At this point, I will make some comments in a personal capacity, perhaps beginning with the easements and the Maze/Long Kesh. As we know, there is no activity on that development site beyond health and safety and the barest activity that is required. The development of the site appears to remain at risk because of an ideological issue over a party that has failed to persuade the people of Northern Ireland that it is a good idea to build a peace-building centre at the Maze. Let me make a distinction between supporting the concept of a peace centre, which the Ulster Unionists do, and locating it at the Maze, which we believe is the most toxic piece of land you can imagine for such a project.

No activity means we are not delivering the promised 5,000 jobs — 5,000 jobs. We are not delivering the hundreds of millions of pounds of investment because of this ideological hang-up over a peace centre. Yet, for three months in the tail end of last year at Stormont House we talked and negotiated about how to deal with the past, and we came to an agreement in the Stormont House Agreement on dealing with the past. It has many elements. A peace-building and conflict resolution centre is not one of them, so why are we not going ahead with the development of this strategic site called Maze/Long Kesh, with the hundreds of millions of pounds to be invested and the 5,000 jobs to be delivered for our people?

I mentioned at some length the Victims and Survivors Service. It is a matter of deep regret that there was not enough funding for the service in the last financial year. It is a matter of further regret that those who suffered most were the bereaved, because they have a particular desire for two programmes, neither of which was adequately funded over the last financial year. One is respite breaks. The bereaved like to get away; indeed, to maintain good mental health and well-being, the bereaved need to get away. Yet, despite having a reasonable expectation that they could avail themselves of a short break — based on years of delivery, not necessarily from the victims service but, before that, from the Northern Ireland Memorial Fund — they were denied through a lack of funding, as was education and training, the other programme that is of particular appeal to the bereaved of our Troubles.

Also, victims' groups found themselves disadvantaged through a lack of funding — for example Phoenix, which looks after those who put on a uniform and put themselves in harm's way to protect their families, communities and, indeed, this entire country from the threat of terrorist violence. Phoenix in Armagh. Phoenix in the Minister's own constituency of Strangford. Phoenix in Newtownards, which had, you might argue, the cruel and unusual punishment of finding that it ticked all the boxes to qualify for funding only to be told there was no money in the bank account and funding could not be made available, even though the rules said it qualified, was entitled and was due the money.

It is good that the historical institutional abuse inquiry survived. I know that many victims were very upset when the First Minister warned at the time of June monitoring that, if money was not found, the inquiry might need to be wound up. That was not a message that victims who have waited decades for the inquiry needed to hear, but the Budget line is there for 2015-16, so let us welcome that. I do not want to get into the judicial review of the inquiry and whether or not it makes sufficient legal advice available to victims, because I understand that the Department is appealing that decision, but I note the words of the junior Minister in the House some weeks ago. He warned that that could quadruple the costs of the inquiry and, once again, threatened that it might not even see itself through to its conclusion. That must not be allowed to happen. The historical institutional abuse inquiry must be allowed to finish its work.

I note the words from the Sinn Féin Benches about opposing austerity. It is a fact that every party that has a reasonable chance of occupying 10 Downing Street on 8 May says austerity will continue through the remaining years of this decade, so it is a fact that we will have to face up to.

Whether it is Labour, the Liberal Democrats or some combination of the three main parties —

Mr Hazzard: That is right.

Mr Nesbitt: — austerity will continue. I give way to Mr Hazzard.

Mr Hazzard: I thank the Member for giving way. I was not actually asking for you to give way. I was just saying that you are right that we should be breaking the link with Westminster because austerity is always going to be the dish of the day.

Mr Nesbitt: I thank the Member. I did not realise that he was speaking from a sedentary position. I thought that he actually wanted me to give way. I say this to the Member: if we break with Westminster, we lose £10 billion in a block grant. You want to protect the most vulnerable by taking £10 billion off them. It is nonsense economics.

Let us also keep a focus on debt. Mr Hazzard may not be aware of this, but Her Majesty's United Kingdom Government currently spend more on servicing debt — not paying back the debt, but paying the interest on debt —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Nesbitt: — than they spend on services in both Wales and Northern Ireland.

Miss M McIlveen (The Chairperson of the Committee for Education): I will speak on behalf of the Education Committee. The Committee has endeavoured to track the changes in departmental spending that have manifested themselves in the 2014-15 spring Supplementary Estimates. As we are at the end of a Budget cycle, there is now quite a large deviation between the original planned Department of Education spending and the projected final outcome. The deviations, in the case of Education, are largely owing to significant allocations of additional resource, which, of course, is welcome.

It is a useful exercise to do an analysis of what Departments have achieved against what was promised. I note that the 2015-16 Budget document set out, in the case of many Departments, how resource reductions will affect core departmental staffing levels. The Department of Education did not include this information. I suggest that, in future, Estimates and Budget documents should set out staffing levels in all Departments in a consistent way. That would allow the House to compare actual performance with the promises made. The lack of consistency is counterproductive to effective scrutiny.

In the present financial year, the Committee has reviewed the monitoring round information and questioned the Department on its spending. On resources, there have been only a small number of changes. I understand that the Department expects to spend close to 100% of its resource allocation by the end of the year, which, on the face of it, is good news. The Department had a large capital budget in 2014-15 of around £182 million, which is about £70 million more than in previous years. There were some limited adjustments in-year owing to asset sales. The Committee has noted increases in end-year capital spending surges in recent years. As with resource, I understand that the Department expects to spend close to its full capital budget in 2014-15.

In addition to how much money is being spent, the Committee's concern in respect of capital has also focused on what money is being spent on. During the year, the Committee saw quite significant changes in the capital plan. Although members welcomed increased spending on minor works, the Committee was concerned to note continuing delays with major works; that is, new school builds. The House has greatly welcomed a number of announcements regarding the advancement in planning of new school builds. However, Members would be surprised by how few of these announcements have turned into spades-in-the-ground projects. This is of concern to the Committee and, of course, to school communities anticipating movement on projects. It is incredibly frustrating. Members also noted with concern delays in the Lisanelly project, with spending being somewhat reduced or deferred and a completion date of 2020 now being indicated.

On the savings delivery plan, yet again I have to report that the Committee is not able to comment on 2013-14 performance let alone provide any update on 2014-15. In 2012-13, the Education Department's savings achievement was the same as the average for other Departments. I should point out, however, that, unlike most other Departments, the Department of Education also altered its savings delivery plan targets in 2012-13. As Members are also well aware, DE, uniquely, does not participate in the DFP monitoring of savings delivery plans, and I, again, record the Committee's dissatisfaction about that.

Turning to the pensions issue, the House is aware that an actuarial revaluation of teachers' pensions liabilities has identified an additional recurrent cost of around £38 million in 2015-16. I understand that that will be met from a central fund in that year but will also have to be met for a further three years, possibly from the Department of Education's budget. Obviously, clarification of that would be welcomed.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair)

That brings us to the Vote on Account for the 2015-16 Budget. On behalf of the Committee, I will mention one key issue, the funding for schools. The Committee was pleased to learn that the anticipated reduction in the aggregated schools budget of £78.7 million is to be offset by an increase of £80 million in 2015-16. That news is welcome, and it appears to mean that the projected spending reductions of hundreds of thousands of pounds in some schools seems to have been avoided, if not partially, at least for now. I have written to the Education Minister to urge him to put the record straight in respect of school budgets and to provide clarity for schools as matter of urgency.

I hope that the greatly increased funding for the voluntary exit scheme in the public sector, negotiated in the Stormont House Agreement, will allow some breathing space for schools and will result in a period during which principals can plan sensibly and arrange changes in resources and staffing in line with school GCSE and A-level cycles. A key point to consider in all of this is that the financial year does not align with the academic year, causing uncertainty when budgets fluctuate.

The 2015-16 budget was always going to be difficult. It is, perhaps, not quite yet the sea change in education in Northern Ireland that was initially proposed. It is clear, however, that in the medium, if not the very short, term hard decisions will be required in education. The Committee holds the view that if changes are to be transparent and sensible, it is vital that all relevant information is made available to stakeholders, particularly schools, and to the Committee for Education in a manner that allows analysis and time for consideration and amendment, and that has certainly not been the case to date.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: As Question Time begins at 2.00 pm, I suggest that the House take its ease until then. The debate will continue after Question Time, when the next Member to speak will be Chris Hazzard.

The debate stood suspended.

Transfer Tests: Warning Letters

1. Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Education why his Department sent warning letters to eleven primary schools that allegedly provided tuition for transfer tests. (AQO 7505/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The Department has written to a number of primary schools following reports that schools may have been involved in coaching pupils for unregulated tests during core teaching time. It is not accurate to describe the letters as "warning letters", as their purpose was to provide school principals with an opportunity to comment and confirm that the boards of governors had complied with their legal duty to have regard to the Department's guidance on post-primary transfer. The guidance states that primary schools:

"should not facilitate unregulated entrance test arrangements in any way".

That includes carrying out preparation for unregulated tests during core teaching times.

In writing to the eleven schools, the Department was also enabling principals to provide confirmation that their schools were meeting their statutory obligation to deliver the curriculum to all pupils. The fact that a school was written to in these terms does not indicate that it has been engaging in preparing children for unregulated tests or, indeed, that it is failing to deliver the statutory curriculum. It merely indicates that a concern has been raised about possible coaching at the school.

The Department's overriding priority is to ensure that the educational needs of pupils are being met. The Department cannot stand by and fail to act when concerns are raised that coaching for unregulated tests may be affecting the delivery of the curriculum and therefore the educational development of all children.

Mr Buchanan: I thank the Minister for his response. Will he confirm that the boards of governors have supremacy in this matter? As Minister, does he recognise their independence?

Mr O'Dowd: The boards of governors do not have supremacy in this matter. A board of governors is there to ensure that the statutory curriculum is being delivered and has to have regard to the guidance issued by the Department of Education in relation to unregulated tests. They most certainly have a statutory duty to ensure that the curriculum is being delivered to all children.

The concerns raised with me and my Department vary in degrees of seriousness. However, is the Member seriously suggesting that my Department should ignore the fact that a parent, or someone else in the public, raises concerns that all children in a school are not receiving access to the full curriculum or that their education and learning is being fettered by the fact that some pupils are receiving preferential treatment over others? I think that I would be failing in my duty if I did not raise those concerns.

Mr Kinahan: Does the Minister agree with his party colleague Mr Hazzard, who has accused the primary schools that are coaching as misappropriating public funds, or does he agree with me that those are outrageous remarks that should be withdrawn immediately?

Mr O'Dowd: It depends on the level at which coaching is taking place, the time involved, and how much public funds schools are directing towards that. Public funds are given to schools for the teaching of all pupils and not just some pupils. It depends on the varying degrees to which it takes place.

The Member is vice-chair of the Education Committee. The Education Committee's role is to hold my Department, and me as Minister, to account. If I had failed in my duty to write to a school that concerns were raised about, a school that has been accused of coaching for tests or of not living up to its statutory obligation — its legal obligation to teach the curriculum — then the Committee would be justified in challenging me as Minister for not carrying out my duties. Here, I have the vice-chair of a Committee criticising me as Minister for ensuring that the statutory curriculum of our education system is being delivered. That seems to me to be somewhat ridiculous.

Mr Rogers: Minister, what evidence have you to suggest that some schools are failing in their duty to deliver the Key Stage 2 curriculum?

Mr O'Dowd: As I said in my response, we have written to schools and asked them to confirm their position with regard to this matter, and they will respond in due course. We received letters of complaint or complaints from parents and other members of the public. Therefore, we followed them up, as is my duty as Minister, to ensure that the legal obligations of my Department are being carried out.

Mrs Cochrane: Does the Minister agree that some preparation should be given to primary-school children in how to deal with exams? For many, within three months of starting secondary education, they are expected to sit a range of exams in numerous subjects. If primary schools do not do some of that prep, who will?

Mr O'Dowd: I am surprised that the Member is not aware that pupils sit various tests throughout their primary-school life.

Mrs Cochrane: [Interruption.]

Mr O'Dowd: I assure you that they do. They may sit weekly or monthly tests so that the teacher can assess how they are progressing in the curriculum.

These tests are not for the benefit of the primary school or all the children in the classroom; they are for the benefit of a selected number of schools that select and reject 10- and 11-year-old children. They have nothing whatsoever to do with the primary curriculum, which our schools are tasked and given public money to deliver.

People need to get their priorities right. My job as Education Minister is to ensure that all young people, not just some of them, have an opportunity in life. The worst-case examples that have been given to me over the years show that some children are being coached for a test while others are sent to the back of the classroom with colouring pencils. Is that the education system that Members want to see delivered in our classrooms? It is not the education system that I am prepared to see delivered in our classrooms. I expect all schools to teach all children to ensure that they have an opportunity in life.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answers thus far. What is the Minister's view of the educational disadvantage in those incidences where children are sent to the back of the classroom with colouring pencils while others are at the front being coached for an exam?

Mr O'Dowd: Any corruption of the curriculum is bad for education. Our primary-school curriculum is broad based, and we allow our teachers and schools to choose the tools, equipment and material that they need to deliver that curriculum to all the children in the schools.

Primary schools have a role in education. It is not simply to prepare young people and children for post-primary education; it is to prepare them for primary-school education. We have a specific primary-school curriculum to ensure that young people develop and are enriched in their educational outcomes.

Some in the Chamber seem to have the view that primary schools are there to corral children for a number of years and then to select the few — the chosen ones — and send them off to voluntary grammar schools and grammar schools while the rest of them can do whatever they want. That seems to be the mood of some in the Chamber. [Interruption.] That appears to be the mood of some in the Chamber, whereas I believe that it is fair, equitable and just that the taxpayers' money that is given to schools is used to ensure that all the young children in our schools, not just the chosen few, receive an education.

Teacher Training Places

2. Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education to outline the annual number of teacher training places allocated to St Mary's University College and Stranmillis University College since 2012-13. (AQO 7506/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The total number of teacher training places that were allocated to St Mary's University College in 2012-13 was 165, while 160 places were allocated to Stranmillis University College. The allocations remained unchanged in the 2013-14 and 2014-15 years. I am considering the allocations for the 2015-16 academic year.

Mr Lunn: I thank the Minister for his answer. Given that, on the last available figures, only 18% of teachers found a job one year after graduation, the signature project is about to finish and the teachers' pension scheme is being extended to make teachers work for much longer, how in the world can he justify putting through teacher training places for probably more than 50% of the teachers that we need?

Mr O'Dowd: How the numbers are chosen goes through a number of assessments. The Member appears to be supporting his colleague's assertion that we should close our local teacher training colleges.

We are at a very critical stage with our teacher training colleges. If I was to reduce the number significantly, or if we had slightly fewer teacher training places, we would lose our teacher training colleges. It is for others to make that decision, but I believe that that would be a huge mistake. I believe that it would be a huge mistake to lose that economic driver in our communities.

One of the most important statistics about teacher training is that there are eight applicants for every one place in a teacher training college. It is still a very popular career choice for our young people. Those young people have to make this decision: if I take on teacher training and qualify as a teacher, will I have an opportunity to fulfil my career pathway and become a full-time teacher? There is a serious question mark over that for many of them. What we can do instead is to close down our teacher training colleges and send all those young people over to England. I, personally, think that that would be a huge mistake.

Mr McCausland: In view of the number of places to which trained teachers can apply, and if the Minister has the number who are being trained, will he tell us whether he would support the removal of the requirement that to teach in Roman Catholic maintained schools requires a special certificate, which is viewed by many people as a discriminatory practice?

Mr O'Dowd: That is a matter for the First Minister and the deputy First Minister to take on board. I have written to the First Minister and the deputy First Minister on several occasions, and I am awaiting a response. Personally, I believe that it should be removed. However, it is up to the First Minister and the deputy First Minister to carry that matter forward.

Mr Sheehan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagra. What impact might any further reductions in the initial teacher training intake numbers have on students who see teaching as a vocation and will not be deterred by limited places in local universities?

Mr O'Dowd: As I said in response to Mr Lunn, I believe that we are now at a situation where, if I were to reduce teacher training places even slightly, we would see the closure of our teacher training colleges. That damages our education system and our economy, and all that we would be doing would be shipping more young people over to England or Wales, wherever they wish to do their teacher training, and then they would return here anyhow. Let us produce high-quality trainee teachers; let us ensure that it happens here; let our teaching institutions become the envy of these islands instead of closing them down and sending our young trainee teachers elsewhere.

Mr Swann: Minister, are you aware that, at last week's Employment and Learning Committee, the Minister for Employment and Learning accused you and your predecessor of being involved in a racket and of being involved in a model that artificially topped up the number of places in teacher training? Has the Minister for Employment and Learning ever asked you to reduce the number of teacher places?

Mr O'Dowd: I am not aware of exactly what was or was not said at last week's Employment and Learning Committee. We will have discussions in regard to teacher training numbers in the time ahead with the Minister for Employment and Learning. We have reduced teacher training places over the last number of years by 30%. The Minister for Employment and Learning has asked for those numbers to be reduced. I believe that the numbers that we bring forward are reasonable; they think beyond the current economic climate and into the future. We are about ensuring that we have a good cohort of freshly trained teachers coming through the system. I think that the decisions that we have made thus far are justified, and I emphasise again that we have reduced teacher training numbers by 30% in the last number of years.

Mr Attwood: Minister, given that you said that it would be a huge mistake to close our teacher training colleges, given that we are in a critical stage in respect of Stranmillis and St Mary's, and given that there may be as little as 40 days and nights between now and purdah in the middle of March, will you indicate whether you believe that this issue, given last week's view of the premia for St Mary's and Stranmillis, will be resolved, because, if it is not resolved by 20 March, the finances of those two colleges will be in jeopardy?

Mr O'Dowd: I am not sure that purdah rules over Executive Ministers; I know that it relates to the Westminster election etc. I think that it can be resolved very quickly, and I understand that the First Minister and the deputy First Minister are seeking for that matter to be brought to the Executive, and it may well be resolved there. I would like to see it resolved before that, but it is a matter for the Minister for Employment and Learning unless the First Minister and the deputy First Minister call it into the Executive again, and then it is a matter for the Executive.

Shared and Integrated Education

3. Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to outline the impact on departmental functions of Her Majesty's Government having a role in respect of the £500 million of capital funding to support shared and integrated education (AQO 7507/11-15)

2.15 pm

Mr O'Dowd: The Stormont House Agreement included a reference to additional capital funding for education as follows:

"a contribution of up to £500m over 10 years of new capital funding to support shared and integrated education subject to individual projects being agreed between the Executive and the Government".

Department of Education officials are engaging with the Treasury and the NIO to agree the shared campus and integrated school building projects that this funding is deemed applicable for. When agreement has been reached, the Department will bring forward the potential school build projects that qualify for the funding. The Department will submit these projects to the Executive and to the Treasury in accordance with the Stormont House Agreement. It is not anticipated that this potential funding for shared and integrated education will have any impact on my departmental functions.

Mr Allister: If each project has to be agreed, does the Minister anticipate the business plans for each having to be agreed by Her Majesty's Treasury as well as his Department? Does he look forward to that unique form of power-sharing with Her Majesty's Government? That might diminish him as a Minister. I would not object to that, but he might.

Mr O'Dowd: The fact of the matter is that you objected to the Stormont House Agreement and the £500 million investment in our education system that goes with it. You would not find yourself in this position because you would have said, in your traditional format, "No". You would not have to query any of those questions, because no is a very easy word. If you want to invest in education and build a better society, a new society that is different from the one that you and I grew up in, sometimes, you have to say yes. When you say yes, you have to work your way through those processes.

On business cases etc, I hope that the Treasury, like me, wishes to avoid duplication of bureaucracy rather than increasing that bureaucracy. Discussions are ongoing, and I hope that we will make this process as simple and effective as possible, that we deliver new builds in our communities and that we strengthen shared and integrated education in our society.

Mr Wilson: As well as accepting advice from Her Majesty's Treasury on his capital spend for integrated education, will the Minister give assurances that, with any capital spend that impacts on other schools in a locality, consideration will be given to the views of other education providers and that we will not have a situation where, for example, an integrated school is allowed to expand at the expense of schools that exist in the area and may well be operating under capacity anyway?

Mr O'Dowd: I will take advice from all quarters and then make decisions. That is the role often. Any project being brought forward will have to be area-plan proofed, so it will have to take into account its impact, positive or negative, on other schools in its locality.

Mr Dallat: I do not want to get caught in any controversy involving Mrs Windsor. Can the Minister tell us whether this money is about shared education projects rather than about shared education, which already exists in many schools? Those schools may not benefit from this bounty, whoever it comes from.

Mr O'Dowd: It is capital funding, so it is for infrastructure. It is for physical developments. I do not rule anyone in or out at this stage. We are still working our way through the finer detail of it, and I accept what I think the Member is trying to suggest, which is that, in many instances, schools have led the agenda in regard to shared education and that many have been years ahead of politicians on shared education. I fully accept that, and significant good work goes on quietly behind the scenes on shared education. As I said, I am not ruling anyone in or out of benefiting from this money, which is not revenue-led or project-led but infrastructure-led.

Mr Milne: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagraí go dtí seo. What shared campus integrated projects are being taken forward in planning?

Mr O'Dowd: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Chomhalta. Six primary schools and one post-primary school have integrated projects being taken forward in planning. Those are, in the primary sector, Braidside, Portadown Integrated Primary School, Drumlins, Roe Valley, Omagh and Corran, and, in the post-primary sector, Parkhall Integrated College.

Schools: Budget Cuts

4. Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Education how his Department will work to negate the long-term damage that budget cuts will have on the future for schools, particularly in the delivery of front-line services. (AQO 7508/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As part of the 2015-16 final Budget outcome, my Department received an additional £64.9 million of funding in recognition of the inescapable pressures facing education and the overwhelming response to the consultation. However, I must emphasise that there remains a significant pressure on the education budget.

Throughout the Budget process, my aim was to protect, as far as possible, the funding to front-line services. Therefore, following the final Budget allocation and my wider education budget review, I immediately allocated £80 million to the aggregated schools budget. That allocation means that there has been no reduction in cash terms to school delegated budgets, although, in real terms, schools will face pay and inflationary pressures in 2015-16.

My focus remains on raising standards and closing the achievement gap. That continuous improvement will best be achieved when schools are supported and trusted to develop their own school improvement strategies. Also, by working with the boards, CCMS and others, my objective, through the area planning process, is to develop a network of sustainable and financially viable schools of the right size, in the right places and able to maximise the use of available resources so that they can focus on providing the quality of education that pupils deserve.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for his answer. Can he give an assurance to the boards of governors of schools, including the board of Holywood Primary, which meets later this week, that, following the budget allocation that you just mentioned, there will be no reductions as such and it will be business as usual for our schools?

Mr O'Dowd: I am very reluctant to comment on any individual school, but it has to be recognised that, despite the very welcome contribution of £64-odd million to the education budget as part of the final Budget and my allocation of £80 million to the aggregated schools budget, there remain wage pressures and inflationary pressures on schools. Schools will make decisions on how to manage those pressures, and they are best placed to do so. I am continuing to analyse the remainder of my budget and budget lines, and I am attempting to ensure that I provide more funding to front-line education services. I will make announcements on that in the weeks ahead.

School Pupils: Skills

5. Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Education to outline how he is enhancing pupils' ability to meet the needs of an increasingly competitive global market place. (AQO 7509/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As Minister of Education, one of my key priorities has been ensuring that our children and young people have the knowledge, skills and attitudes to succeed and do well in work and in life. I am confident that the curriculum allows schools the flexibility necessary for students to build the skills, attitudes and understanding that they need to be global citizens, connected and able to contribute to the global economy.

The curriculum ensures that all our students are educated in the changing concept of a career and the various types of job in the local area, as well as opportunities to explore enterprise and entrepreneurship. Those opportunities allow our young people to investigate the need for creativity and enterprise, whether as an employer or employee, to identify and practise skills and to develop the attributes associated with being enterprising.

The flexibility offered by the curriculum framework and the curriculum means that schools can respond fully to meet the needs of the economy. Taking account of up-to-date labour market information on skills shortages and priority skills areas as they emerge allows schools to widen and review their curricular offer for pupils.

Mr F McCann: Go raibh míle maith agat. I thank the Minister for his response. Will ICT subjects such as computer coding be streamlined in schools?

Mr O'Dowd: Computer coding is already available to our schools, and many primary schools in particular have taken advantage of bringing in outside clubs to add to their skills and resources in order to provide computer coding. Members will be aware that I commissioned a fundamental review of GCSEs and A levels in 2012. That work is in train, and, consequently, new and more challenging A levels and GCSEs will be put in place, including a computer science GCSE.

Miss M McIlveen: The Member referred to coding in primary schools. The Minister will be aware of lobbying by the digital industries for the introduction of coding into the curriculum from the age of eight. Is he giving that consideration?

Mr O'Dowd: The curriculum is broad-based. On occasion, there are demands for a variety of subjects or materials to be defined in the curriculum and to ensure that a certain time is allocated to the teaching of these subjects. I am reluctant to go down that road at this stage. I believe that the curriculum serves its purpose. It allows for flexibility in the system, although I am also conscious that, by 2016, the curriculum will be approximately 10 years old and will be subject to review. At that stage, it would be useful for the Minister, whoever that is, to conduct a review of the curriculum and make decisions on whether aspects of learning, including computer coding, should become compulsory.

Mr Cree: What action is the Minister taking to concentrate on non-academic skills, such as confidence, resilience, trustworthiness and other essential life skills?

Mr O'Dowd: That question relates to the first question that I was asked during Question Time: education is much broader than a simple analysis of the behaviour and performance of 10- and 11-year-old children.

The curriculum allows and is built around learning and skill-based education. It ensures that young people can avail themselves of a wide spread of topics and subjects. Indeed, when they progress through their learning in post-primary school to GCSE level, they now must have a choice of up to 24 subjects and, when moving towards A level, a minimum of 27 subjects. So the curriculum is built on a strong basis of academic, vocational and general subjects.

When I engage with employers — some are significant employers — they ask not only for young people who are academically well qualified but for young people who are well rounded, confident citizens who are able to be team players and team builders when they go into the workplace. The curriculum allows for that, and schools can and should be encouraged to continue down that pathway without distractions.

GCSE: New Subjects

6. Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Education if he has any plans to introduce any new subjects at GCSE level. (AQO 7510/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: A review of GCSE provision is being undertaken here and in England and Wales. Since we have, in the main, an open market for qualifications, that will mean that revised specifications will become available to schools over the next three years.

Responsibility for introducing new subjects at GCSE rests with an individual awarding organisation. Decisions by awarding organisations, including CCEA, on the nature and scope of their GCSE offer will reflect demand from schools. In response to the requirements of the entitlement framework, for example, CCEA has, in recent years, introduced new GCSE titles, including contemporary crafts and agriculture and land use. In addition, in responding to discussions with key stakeholders, including employers, CCEA has, as part of its GCSE provision, plans to provide a GCSE in software development for first teaching from September 2017.

In considering the development of new titles, all awarding organisations will need to take account of the accreditation criteria requirements for GCSE qualifications, which are set by the regulator here.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin: Go raibh míle maith agat. I thank the Minister for his answer thus far. Given that some schools want to opt for subjects such as politics at an earlier stage, is there room to do that and what options are available?

Mr O'Dowd: There are opportunities, particularly through Learning for Life and Work. This qualification provides an introduction to government and politics and reflects the curriculum requirements for local and global citizenship at Key Stages 3 and 4. From foundation stage to Key Stage 2, all pupils study personal development and mutual understanding, which encompasses two strands, one of which is mutual understanding in the local and wider community, which can have a broad interpretation for teachers in the classroom. As I said in responses to earlier questions, they can use whatever material and tools they choose. I welcome the fact that, on Mondays and Tuesdays, you will often see primary-school children in and around the Assembly, involved in and learning about how the Assembly works and engaging at a very early age. I do not know whether they are impressed, but I know that they are here.

2.30 pm

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We will move on to topical questions.

Malvern Primary School: Closure

T1. Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Education what his view is of the recent sad decision made by the Belfast Education and Library Board to close Malvern Primary School in west Belfast, given that he has been very supportive of the children and young people zone for the greater Shankill. (AQT 2061/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My view on that development proposal will be based on the submissions that I receive during the consultation period, whether those be from elected representatives, school pupils or the broader community. I have no view established yet in regard to the matter and will only make a decision when all the facts are before me.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Minister for his answer. On Friday, the Member of Parliament for North Belfast, Nigel Dodds, and I met the principal of Glenwood Primary School. That school is due a new school and will be an educational hub for the mid-Shankill. When will the work begin on that development?

Mr O'Dowd: Two questions for the price of one. Apologies to the Member, but I do not have that information in front of me. I am more than happy to supply him with the information in due course.

Teachers: Unionist Community

T2. Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Education what action he is taking to free up the pathway for teachers from within the Unionist community to access employment in schools in the maintained sector. (AQT 2062/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I assume that the Member's question refers to the Catholic certificate for teaching purposes, which was raised during Question Time. The Member may be aware that the certificate is available to non-Catholic members of the community through distance learning courses at, I think, the University of Glasgow and perhaps also through Stranmillis, so there are a number of opportunities for non-Catholic teachers to achieve that certificate and teach in the maintained sector.

Mr Buchanan: Does the Minister not accept that it is a barrier, and that the barrier is discrimination against teachers from the Unionist community?

Mr O'Dowd: I accept that it is certainly a perceived barrier. My personal view is that it should be done away with. In the teaching of the sacraments, I believe that there are other ways of achieving that objective and goal for the Catholic sector rather than every teacher having a certificate. The Member will also be aware that any change to equality legislation is the responsibility of OFMDFM.

Schools: Capital/Resource Funding

T3. Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Education for an update on the capital and resource funding that will be available to schools in the foreseeable future and to state how he is facilitating agreed amalgamations, such as the new school project for Islandmagee, which can improve educational outcomes and result in reduced running costs. (AQT 2063/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The education budget was being discussed as I entered the Chamber just before Question Time, and, as I said, while I welcome the fact that we have received £64 million as a result of the final Budget, there are still significant revenue pressures in regard to education. I will make further decisions in due course as to how we deal with those revenue pressures and if and where we can inject more revenue into front-line services.

There is a significant dip in the capital budget for education moving forward. I believe that all the major projects that I have announced will continue to move forward. However, there may be some delay in some of the school enhancement programmes, and there will be less money for minor works programmes moving forward as well.

I have no details in front of me on the specific school that the Member mentions, but I am more than happy to share any information on that or give an update to the Member in due course.

Mr Beggs: Will the Minister acknowledge that the pupils, the parents and, indeed, the community in Islandmagee feel that they are being discriminated against given that they agreed the amalgamation of Ballypriorsmore, Kilcoan and Mullaghduh primary schools over 10 years ago but, as yet, no school has been built? Yet the Minister has been able to find perhaps over £2 million for his own pet project school, an Irish language school, which will operate at a projected running cost —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Can we have a question?

Mr Beggs: Local children in my community feel that they are being discriminated against. Will the Minister ensure that he deals with all members —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr Beggs: — of the community equally?

Mr O'Dowd: One of the downsides of topical questions is that a Member can stand up and ask a constituency-specific question and I, as Minister, am supposed to have details on the 18 constituencies and all the projects.

It is simply impossible for me to have that. I am only in post four years, so whatever happened before I came into post I know nothing about. I have made announcements about capital projects moving forward. A number of them required development proposals, and I think that there may have been changes, sponsored by the board, around development proposals in the area that the Member referred to. Then there was a change of heart, and that caused delay as well. When I make an announcement about a new capital build, I make it on the basis of consultation with the sponsoring management body, whether it be CCMS or the education board. If there is a change after that, it will inevitably cause delay.

I assure you that there is no element of discrimination in regard to these matters. I have not directed any capital funding towards Coláiste Dhoire, and I will ensure that I continue to lobby for more money for capital and drive forward the capital building programme. I noted, as I came into the Chamber, that the Chair of the Education Committee was able to report that the Department of Education had spent all its capital funds over this last number of years, and I intend to make that the case this year as well.

Social Media: Misuse in Schools

T4. Mr Hilditch asked the Minister of Education for details on the extent of misuse and problems with social media in schools. (AQT 2064/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Social media have a positive element, without doubt, and are used by pupils and teachers in schools in a positive way and to meet learning criteria. However, they are also used in bullying and the viewing and spreading of inappropriate information, whether it be about individuals or made-up information about individuals, referred to as cyberbullying. Currently, I have out to consultation an anti-bullying strategy. As part of that, we are looking at cyberbullying, and it will involve collaboration with the Department of Health, which is taking the lead on a broader element in relation to cyberbullying.

Mr Hilditch: I thank the Minister for his answer. There are indeed pilot schemes and programmes about at the moment, and I know that Mr Simpson has been involved in one in your constituency. Have you had a chance to study any of those? Could they be used across the education sector?

Mr O'Dowd: I was recently in a primary school in Pomeroy, County Tyrone, which, along with an outside arts company, has produced a very informative film. It was put together by the young people of the school and involved them. In that, they set out their relationship with and reaction to social media. I thought that it was very informative and succinct in the messages that it sent out. The simple message was this: if you would not trust a stranger on the street, why would you trust one online? The young people put the message across very well. I am familiar with the projects being run by individual schools and communities in relation to cyberbullying and other such matters.

Youth Centres: Budgetary Support

T5. Mr Frew asked the Minister of Education for an assurance that the youth centres will be sufficiently supported in budgetary terms in the coming year, given the restoration of some £2 million in the Budget to the education and library boards. (AQT 2065/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have restored approximately £2 million to ELB youth. How that money is distributed across the youth sector is a matter for the education and library boards.

Mr Frew: Given the fact that the youth centres do a tremendous body of work with young people, acting as a diversion from involvement in crime and teaching young people other things socially outside the school setting, is the Minister supportive of enhanced funding for those youth centres?

Mr O'Dowd: There are different challenges and demands in education. It is worth reminding the Member that his party brought a motion to the House only a few weeks ago calling on me to protect front-line education as in "schools only". There was an amendment tabled by my party colleagues about youth work and other factors, but it was rejected by the House. You cannot have it both ways. You cannot call for funding one day and then reject a proposal for it on another. I fully support youth work. It is an integral part of our education system. Over my period in office, I have increased funding for it. I was keen to announce funding for the ELB youth sector at the same time as I announced funding for schools. I will do my best to enhance youth funding in what is a very difficult climate for the education budget.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr Ross Hussey is not in his place. I therefore call Mr Sammy Wilson — Sorry, Mr Sammy Douglas. [Laughter.]

Mr Douglas: I thought the Principal Deputy Speaker was a good friend of mine.

Dundonald High School: Progress

T7. Mr Douglas asked the Minister of Education whether he agrees that Dundonald High School is making very good progress following the stay of execution that he ordered last year. (AQT 2067/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I would go further: there are to be no changes to Dundonald High School. The decision has been made: it is staying open. It is an integral part of the education framework in that area. I take the opportunity to congratulate the pupils, the parents, the community, the teaching staff and senior management at the school for their excellent work since a decision was made on the future of the school.

Mr Douglas: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. He did not include politicians — the MLAs who lobbied him — in his congratulations. Would the Minister continue to encourage his officials and others to work with the school and parents to ensure success for this major school in east Belfast?

Mr O'Dowd: I have no difficulties with congratulating the local MLAs on that matter, despite the hard time you continually give me. You and your colleagues worked well with me and my Department, the community and the school to ensure sustainable education provision.

Schools: Budget

T8. Mr Poots asked the Minister of Education, while declaring an interest as a school governor, when he will inform boards of governors about the readjusted budget, given the additional finance he has received in the Budget. (AQT 2068/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: We are finalising preparations for letters to all schools, which will, hopefully, issue by the end of this month. The Member will appreciate that we have to run quite a complicated formula, taking into account any changes to the schools' pupil intake etc. Then we will notify schools of their exact budget for the coming financial year.

Mr Poots: Does the Minister recognise the stresses that school governors and management teams have been under? Given the significant rise that he received following approval by the Executive of the Department of Finance and Personnel's proposal, will he adjust school budgets significantly upwards from the original proposal?

Mr O'Dowd: The Member is aware that I announced £80 million for the aggregated schools budget — the global amount — which is an increase of about 0.2% in funding for the next financial year. However, each school's budget is based on a much more complicated formula that has to be run for 1,138 schools before they can all be informed in due course. I remind the Member and the House that the year ahead for education is still a very difficult one. Difficult decisions have yet to be made. It will prove to be a very difficult year for schools, the Education Authority and any other body attached to education. I welcome very much the decision by the Executive to increase funding to education, but all Departments are dealing with a uniquely difficult financial environment.

Schools: Craigavon Development Proposals

T9. Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education to outline the number and progress of development proposals submitted to his Department by schools in the Craigavon area. (AQT 2069/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I think we have four currently in the Craigavon area. We have one for St Mary's in Derrymore, out at Aghagallon — now, you have caught me. Just give me one second; I think we have an answer here on something similar. There are two development proposals for schools in the upper Bann area: one for St Mary's Primary School in Derrymore and another for St Patrick's Primary School in Magheralin.

Mr Moutray: I thank the Minister for his answer. What does he intend to do for the pupils of Lurgan College, Portadown College and the Lurgan campus of Craigavon Senior High School, who for years have been in outdated accommodation that is not fit for purpose?

Mr O'Dowd: There is a difference between a development proposal relating to school enrolment or to a change of character of a school and one requiring capital investment, as in the second question asked by the Member. Both of them are, however, connected here. There needs to be a change of direction in education in that area that takes into account the needs of all the young people and not just two of the schools. If we get into a mindset where we are dealing with all the young people in the post-primary controlled sector in Craigavon, we can come forward with a proposal that will receive financial support and support from the Department of Education. At the minute, however, many people are focused on two schools rather than on them all.

Employment and Learning

Homophobic Bullying

1. Ms Ruane asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the action further and higher education colleges are taking to eradicate homophobic bullying. (AQO 7520/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): Each further education (FE) college and higher education (HE) institution is required, as a public authority, to have in place an equality scheme and to report to the Equality Commission on steps taken to promote equality of opportunity for categories listed in section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

During 2013, I asked my officials to conduct an audit of how our colleges and universities were taking forward policies to combat homophobia. The results of the audit confirmed that all our institutions engaged in a range of positive practices in that area. In the FE sector, all colleges have in place a range of pastoral care arrangements aimed at promoting the health and well-being of students by providing them with access to appropriate guidance and support, including personal safety and protection, anti-bullying, harassment, self-harm and suicide. Initiatives in place include running awareness and promotional events, training staff in combating bullying, providing support to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) groups in college campuses, engaging with the Rainbow Project and working with college student unions. In the higher education sector, institutions engage in a range of positive practices. All higher education institutions have anti-bullying policies and procedures in place that cover homophobic bullying. Those policies and procedures continue to be monitored, reviewed and updated when necessary.

Ms Ruane: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an fhreagra sin. I acknowledge and welcome the measures, but students in colleges continue to experience homophobic, bi-phobic and transphobic bullying. Does the Minister agree that more needs to be done to ensure that LGBT students feel safe while they study? What further measures will the Department implement?

Dr Farry: Obviously, colleges and universities are taking measures forward, and those measures are constantly reviewed. Indeed, we seek updates from the colleges to that end. I am stunned — indeed, I am shocked — that the Member, given that she is a former Education Minister, is challenging what happens in the FE and HE sector, where good practice is in place. In the wider community, there have been demands for successive Education Ministers, including the Member, to ensure that we have proper effective measures in our school setting to deal with, specifically, homophobic bullying and not just bullying in general. That has been a major gap in provision over the past number of years. In that context, I am somewhat surprised that the Member is challenging the good practice that happens in the FE and HE sectors, compared with what has not happened in our schools.

Mrs Overend: I thank the Minister for his answer. Will he outline the steps he has taken with regard to sectarian intimidation in colleges? Some find that certain colleges are a cold house for unionists.

Dr Farry: Our colleges and universities are very mindful to ensure that we have a neutral environment where people can learn together. A neutral environment does not need to be a homogenised environment where expression of culture is removed from that situation. Clearly, where complaints are made in that regard, whether to student unions or the authorities, you need to take those comments extremely seriously.

Mr Dallat: I feel the need to pay tribute to the people in colleges of further and higher education who have tackled the problem. I ask the Minister whether there is anything that we can learn from their endeavours and successes that could be used in the wider battle against homophobia.

Dr Farry: I thank the Member for his comment. I join him in paying tribute to the leadership across the third-level education sector in ensuring that we have a welcoming environment.

My specific points in response to his question relate to how colleges can engage with the wider community through, for example, local policing and community safety structures and how they can engage with the community and voluntary sector, particularly the organisations that lobby, campaign and provide welfare in relation to different section 75 categories, including, for example, the LGBT sector.

Colleges should also look at how, in general, they can ensure that they have good, efficient practices in place that will robustly challenge in those situations where there is a clear breach of equality duties, including intimidation and bullying.

Mr McCallister: In his reply, the Minister quite rightly mentioned the importance of ensuring that through the main education system and into the FE sector. Will he comment on what measures are in place in colleges and through his Department? What support is there for young people on government-supported work schemes to make sure that they too are protected from any form of bullying or harassment, including homophobic bullying?

Dr Farry: The Member makes a very valid point. To that end, as we have sought to design our different apprenticeship and youth training programmes looking to the future, as well as our provision under Pathways to Success for our NEETs strategy, we have been very mindful of ensuring that those involved in the provision of training are alert to the risks of bullying, including homophobic bullying, and on how to ensure that there is proper pastoral support. Indeed, one of the key design features of the new youth training system, the public consultation of which is closing, is a much stronger focus on pastoral care than has been the case up until now.

Job Fairs

2. Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of jobs fairs being held in local communities. (AQO 7521/11-15)

10. Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps his Department will take to ensure significant numbers of jobseekers will attend future jobs fairs and advice forum events, such as the one scheduled for Limavady today. (AQO 7529/11-15)

Dr Farry: Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, with your permission, I wish to group questions 2 and 10 together and to request an additional minute for the answer.

Bringing job fairs and information days into the heart of local communities has proven to be a very successful way of helping people into employment. In 2014, job fairs were held in Belfast, Derry, Ballymoney and Newry, and one was recently held in Craigavon. I am pleased that feedback from employers, support organisations and local clients has been encouraging.

Those who attend can be interviewed for a job. Additional services are available on those days, including online job searches and participation in a job club workshop, where those who attend create their own CV. They also get tips and techniques about interviews.

The Department has also held a number of local community events where attendees have been offered full-time employment, while others progressed into a work placement opportunity. After the recent event in Kilcooley in Bangor, eight clients progressed into work, 45 were offered a work placement opportunity and three commenced the skills development programme.

Importantly, following on from those events, many employers have requested my Department's assistance with bespoke recruitment events, therefore providing further opportunities for local clients and communities.

Job fairs are promoted actively to unemployed clients visiting local jobs and benefits offices and job centres. They are also advertised through local media, press releases, social media sites, my Department's website, JobCentre Online and through sending leaflets to local community groups, libraries and colleges.

My officials also take local geographical considerations into account and organise a community bus facility for rural areas, if required, to afford clients in those areas an opportunity to participate. In the lead-up to job fair events, my officials work with clients locally to remove any barriers to attendance and to ensure that every possible effort is made to allow clients to attend. That approach was successfully used during the recent job fair in Ballymoney, where community buses transported clients from Ballycastle and the surrounding areas to Ballymoney. The same practice was used for last week's job fair in Craigavon. That ensured that clients from Lurgan, Portadown and surrounding areas could participate.

I am pleased that there has been a steady rise in the attendance at job fairs due to the measures put in place.

Mr Easton: I thank the Minister for his answer. Does the Minister agree with me that, considering the bad weather, the Kilcooley event was very well attended, with over 100 young people going to it? Does he feel that the partnership approach not just between his Department and me for setting it up but with the local community organisations, particularly the Bangor chamber of trade, is the type of model that we want to roll out across Northern Ireland?

Dr Farry: First of all, for the benefit of the press release for this week's 'County Down Spectator': yes, the Member did a good job in helping to organise the event.

The partnership between the community and voluntary sector and the local business community is very important. Those work most effectively when they are from the bottom up and respond to local demand. Where we can see clear evidence that there is a critical mass of people in the community sector or in local businesses who wish to take the opportunity, as a Department, we are more than happy to facilitate that.

Mr Campbell: First, I congratulate all the Departments involved in a similar event this morning that I left about four hours ago in Limavady, County Londonderry. I will ask the Minister the same question that I asked some of the organisers of that event: what emphasis is put on the evaluation after the events? This morning's event seemed to be exceptionally successful from the numbers that I could see. What lessons are learned once the evaluations have been received from the event?

Dr Farry: The Member is right to stress the importance of evaluation and constant learning as we go. I am pleased to hear the very positive feedback received from Limavady. Some 1,700 people came through the doors at an event in Craigavon last Thursday; those are considerable numbers. We can evaluate success through a number of different outcomes, one of which is the number of those who progress into work or into further training places. However, we can also get feedback from those who attend events as to whether they found them useful and that they were being matched with potential employers according to their interests. Again, that feedback tends to be very positive.

Mr Ramsey: Like other Members, there is no doubting the value, the contribution and the success of these fairs. There was one in the Millennium Forum in Derry last year where hundreds of young people were queuing for jobs. It is a success story. Is there any way that you could look at incentivising small and medium-sized businesses to participate in and contribute to these fairs?

Dr Farry: The point is how we can look to do better in promotional work with SMEs to make them aware of the opportunities. It would be a much more efficient way, at times, for people to see the potential talent in communities than maybe some of the more traditional recruitment techniques. It may be viewed in the short run as a barrier or an inconvenience for businesses, but we have a message to communicate that this is something that is very much in the interests of businesses of all sizes but in particular SMEs.

Mr Lunn: Will the Minister acknowledge the role played by the local business education partnerships in this area, particularly, if I may say so, the Lisburn one, which is very active and had a careers convention just last week that attracted over 1,000 young people?

Dr Farry: Very much so, and I welcome that engagement. I recently hosted a dinner for the incoming chief executives of the new super-councils and the chief executives of our local FE colleges. The FE colleges have a very important role in business support, particularly around matching skills with the emerging needs of the new council areas, which are taking on additional economic development powers. Between the informal structures that we have at present and what we can do more formally through the statutory agencies, there is a real desire to focus on local solutions for these problems, recognising that Northern Ireland does not necessarily suit a one-size-fits-all solution. I was particularly pleased that we had representatives from Lisburn City and Castlereagh District Council, who were very proactive in seeking out new opportunities.

Employment Law Review

3. Mr Ross asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on his review of employment law. (AQO 7522/11-15)

Dr Farry: In September 2014, I provided the Employment and Learning Committee with an overview of the key policy proposals that have emerged from my Department's consultation on a range of measures designed to improve the effectiveness of our current employment relations system. Following that engagement, I secured the Executive's agreement for the drafting of an employment Bill that will give effect to the agreed policy proposals.

These include a new process of early conciliation to be delivered by the Labour Relations Agency; the drafting of appropriate enabling provisions that would allow for a neutral assessment service to be established; the conversion from confirmatory to affirmative procedure of the Department's power to amend the qualifying period for the right to claim unfair dismissal; and adjustment from 90 days to 45 days of the period of consultation in collective redundancy situations involving 100 or more employees.

My Department has recently undertaken further policy reviews dealing with zero-hours contracts and the rules that govern the operation of employment tribunals. A paper on legislative proposals on regulating zero-hours contracts is being prepared for the Executive. It is intended that a consultation on tribunal rules will be launched in early March 2015. It is my intention to secure Executive agreement to formally introduce the employment Bill to the Assembly before the summer recess.

Mr Ross: The Minister will know that, in order to be a business-friendly environment, we want to have a highly skilled workforce if we can get the lower rate of corporation tax and have flexible labour laws. Is he confident, given the fact that, in Great Britain, they have moved further on reforming employment law, particularly around the qualifying period for unfair dismissal, that after his employment law Bill goes through the House, we will not be at a disadvantage compared with other regions in the UK in being attractive to investors and job creators?

3.00 pm

Dr Farry: First, it is important that we approach employment law with a perspective of balance, ensuring that we meet the needs of business and give it sufficient flexibility. However, we must also ensure that we are giving protection to workers and that our law is keeping up to date in that regard. That is why we are looking at zero-hours contracts; not to rule them out but to ensure that there is adequate protection in an emerging area in how we are dealing with employees.

It is important that we recognise that employment law is devolved in Northern Ireland. We are the only part of the UK where that is the case. It is important that we are competitive, but there are different ways to ensure that. In particular, I highlight what we are trying to do about the routing of claims through the LRA and creating a much more holistic approach, based on the alternative dispute resolution techniques. Those things will put us at a considerable advantage compared with many of our neighbours. Unfair dismissal is a much more controversial issue, and the Member well knows that there is not an agreed approach on that issue within the structures of the Assembly.

Mr Kinahan: What does the Minister intend to do within law to make it easier for small and medium businesses to take on additional employees without putting their businesses at risk?

Dr Farry: We have a situation where businesses can take on employees. We are seeing, for example, a change to a much more casual approach to employment, which recognises how labour markets are evolving. In many respects, that is a natural progression, but it is important that, as government, we keep up to date with the changes in practice, that we ensure that our regulation is balanced and proportionate and that we are mindful of the interests of employees and ensure that their rights are appropriately balanced and protected.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a Príomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Given his comments on the casualisation of labour and my concerns about the casualisation of workers' rights, what legislative proposals are contained within the Executive paper that the Minister is drafting on zero-hours contracts? Specifically, how does his paper intend to further enhance and protect the rights of working people?

Dr Farry: I welcome the Member back to the Chamber with formal speaking rights. He would have picked up from the previous answers that we touched on the issue of zero-hours contracts. We are finalising proposals in the Department to take to the Executive. Also, the Committee is set to get a briefing on the issue either this week or next week. We are seeking to introduce some regulation in respect of zero-hours contracts, particularly around exclusivity and the conditions under which people would have the right to request or expect a different type of contractual situation.

The main issue around casualisation is the uncertainty around pay and the knock-on effects that that has for someone when it comes to planning family life, access to benefits or the ability to secure mortgages and other such financial instruments. So, there is a big debate there. The intention is, once we get Executive approval, which will hopefully be secured over the next few weeks, to go to the legislative draftspeople to get the clauses drafted. Those clauses will be included in the main employment Bill, which will hopefully be introduced to the Assembly before the summer recess.

FE Colleges: Budget Impact

4. Mr Elliott asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the impact of the Budget 2015-16 on employment levels in further education colleges. (AQO 7523/11-15)

Dr Farry: Although the final budget for my Department has somewhat improved since the draft Budget, with £20 million being restored from the initial cuts that were proposed, the Department still faces an unprecedented funding situation. That will impact across all areas of my Department's work, including further education. I have tried to protect front-line services, but there is no doubt that the cuts will have implications for staffing in the colleges and places in the colleges. Those are, however, matters for the colleges.

I met with the Employment and Learning Committee last week to apprise it of my thinking on the budget cuts, and I am in the process of finalising decisions. I am proposing a £12 million reduction for the further education sector, which may be partially mitigated by the proposed use of £6 million of end-year flexibility, subject to the agreement of the Executive. That is, in effect, the use of the reserves within the sector.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Minister for that update. I acknowledge what he says about it being up to the regional colleges how they decide their budget, but will he give us an example of the potential redundancies that that could create in, for example, the South West College? Will there be compulsory redundancies?

Dr Farry: With respect to the Member, I need to be very careful about speculating about places and jobs and what happens in individual colleges. Each will be in a different financial situation. The effects of the cuts will work out differently in each of those areas.

Without doubt, we still face a significant situation. It is worth noting that this is, perhaps, the first time in living memory that we are about to rationalise access to further education, which, hitherto, has always been open to the public across the board.

There is a coordinated approach in the sector to how the cuts can be managed. I am pleased that across Colleges NI, principals and chairs of boards, there is a common understanding of the different means by which the effect of the cuts may be mitigated in a manner that reduces the impact on the front line as best as possible.

Mr Hilditch: I thank the Minister for his answers. We learned at the Committee recently that there is a chance to try to offset the college budgets by equalising fees. Given the differential, how could that work?

Dr Farry: Our higher education institutions are entitled to charge a fee just short of £3,800. Our further education colleges are also providers of higher education. Two of the six colleges charge fees in the region of £2,500; the remaining four charge in the region of £1,500. So, across the sector — building on the point that I made to Mr Elliott — there is a view that those fees should be standardised at in the region of £2,500, which is still significantly less than tuition fees for a higher education qualification at a university.

Higher education within further education will still be an attractive option, in particular as foundation degree courses are designed with the needs of employers and the wider economy in mind. They are an attractive and lucrative way of achieving third-level qualifications that will stand someone in very good stead in their career.

Mr Byrne: I thank the Minister for his answers. Does he agree that the cutbacks in courses in some further education colleges could have a damaging effect on the local economy, particularly the cuts in enterprise training, STEM subjects and practical vocational courses? What advice is the Department giving to governors of colleges to ensure that there is no shortfall in the provision that will affect employment?

Dr Farry: I cannot give any assurances when dealing with cuts. They will have real impacts on front-line provision, and we will seek to mitigate those as far as we can. Nonetheless, there will be an impact on the front line. The scale of cuts that we are making means that that cannot be avoided.

All of that will have an impact to some extent on the economy in different parts of Northern Ireland and in our society as a whole. We have asked for protection for some areas: for example, what we are doing on apprenticeships and the new youth training system will be protected. We have also asked the universities and colleges to protect investment in STEM subjects, given their particular importance to the economy.

A strategic and planned approach is being adopted to how we find the savings. Nonetheless, it is a challenging situation.

Ms Lo: I thank the Minister for coming to the Committee last week specifically to brief us on the budget. I know that he is trying his best to mitigate the cuts, but I understand that Belfast Metropolitan College is seeking to cut English for speakers of other languages (ESOL) teaching quite drastically to meet its budget. What impact will that have on the new immigrant population?

Dr Farry: We take ESOL and access to it very seriously. What is happening at Belfast Met is just the standardisation of the approach taken in the other five colleges. This will remain a feature of all our colleges. As we continue to attract skills and people from overseas to work and invest in our society, it is important that we continue to provide them with access to ESOL-type courses.

JTI Gallaher: Redundancy Fund

5. Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the drawdown of funds to support workers facing redundancy at JTI Gallaher. (AQO 7524/11-15)

Dr Farry: Minister Foster and I have been working proactively with JTI Gallaher to discuss its plans and the needs of its workforce in an evolving situation. My officials are exploring the use of the European globalisation adjustment fund in these circumstances. This provides support to people losing their jobs as a result of major structural changes in world trade patterns due to globalisation — for example, when a large company shuts or production is moved outside the EU. The fund has strict eligibility criteria, and my officials are continuing to explore whether these would be met in this case. I plan to build on the work of my officials and to include this in discussions when I am in Brussels later this month for meetings with the European Commission.

The Department has a portfolio of services available to assist JTI Gallaher employees. The careers service and employment service offer advice and guidance. This includes the redundancy advice service, which, in partnership with other organisations, provides information and advice on available options and support. The Northern Regional College has liaised with JTI Gallaher on the help that it can provide. In addition to its ongoing programme, which is open to all, the college is offering a tailored approach of conducting skills audits of the workforce. This would help individuals to obtain relevant qualifications, either by accrediting their experience or providing the training necessary to gain relevant skills and qualifications.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answer. He referred to the globalisation fund. What is his assessment of the likelihood that we will qualify for the globalisation fund and that those funds will go to the workers?

Dr Farry: If the Member is asking me to be realistic, I would say that our prospects are narrow. Nonetheless, we will seek to explore all the options. It was interesting that, when the announcement of the redundancies was made last year, virtually every party, in some form or other, rushed to the media to say that the European globalisation fund will be the answer to our problems, without necessarily checking through the issues. We have to bear a few things in mind. One is that we have to ensure that the jobs actually qualify. If jobs in Ballymena are being relocated elsewhere within the European Union, those job losses will not count towards eligibility. It is jobs that are lost to outside the European Union that are eligible. On the other hand, we can also include the supply chain, so we may just make that threshold. We then have to ensure that any bid that we make is approved and processed by the Department for Work and Pensions in London. As the Member will appreciate, it has to be channelled through the national member state, which, in our case, is obviously the UK. To that end, the UK Government have not previously supported any application to the fund. We also have to ensure that what we put in place in Northern Ireland is additional to our existing provision. We will have to make sure that we match fund the European globalisation fund from local resources or the company itself.

Mr Swann: The Minister says that the opportunity is narrow. What additional work are he and the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Minister doing to make sure that it becomes a reality?

Dr Farry: We have had a number of discussions with the company and floated with it the potential of its making some contribution, in the event that a successful bid could be made. We have had discussions with the Commission about how best to make an application. I intend to take those forward further next week when I am in Brussels. We are not yet in the position whereby we would be expected to make any application. We have to wait until the job losses become a reality, which will not be until May 2016. However, if we feel that we have a reasonable prospect of a successful application, we will seek to proceed on a shadow basis and get a provisional indication of the likely success or otherwise of a bid so that we can process a bid very quickly when the timing allows us to make one, which is once the redundancies become a reality.

Mr Frew: If we put aside the discussions on a bid to the globalisation fund, what discussions has the Minister had with JTI Gallaher to ensure that it leaves a lasting legacy in north Antrim and Ballymena in particular? That would be cold consolation, but it would at least help the community and people there.

3.15 pm

Dr Farry: Speaking for Arlene Foster and myself, we have had full cooperation from the company. It has been accessible to us and is acutely aware of the impact of the loss of jobs on the lives of individual workers, their families and the wider community. The company is more than happy to facilitate the work that we do as a Department, and also that of other agencies and the Northern Regional College's skills audit and retraining. It is important that Members bear in mind the key issue of the timing around when this will take place, because production is continuing in the factory and, if anything, will increase as it works towards the change in directives, so it is important that we do not interrupt the company's natural flow of business. At the same time, though, we can move quickly to intervene at the appropriate time. We stand ready to go when the company deems it appropriate for us to do so.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends listed questions. We move now to topical questions.

St Mary's University College: Ministerial Crusade

T1. Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, given his continuing crusade against St Mary's University College, resulting in his cutting its premia, how he intends to protect its excellent work in promoting Irish-medium education. (AQT 2071/11-15)

Dr Farry: Let me be clear at the outset: there is no crusade against St Mary's University College, although, at times, if you listen to comments from the college and other political parties, there is perhaps a crusade against me in all of this. We have to recognise that the system we have at present is not working or delivering. It is very much an artificial system, where we subsidise our teacher training, whether through an artificial figure of teachers to be trained, the premia or the expansion into non-initial teacher education (ITE) subjects. We are doing more and more to prop up a system that is not sustainable in its own right.

That is why it is important that we consider reform, in the context of which we can put in place a range of models that can ensure that we protect issues around ethos, including how we can train teachers for the Irish-medium sector. We have seen how reforms have taken place successfully in Glasgow, and more recently — from September — in Dublin. In the case of Dublin, we see a Catholic institution, with a history longer than St Mary's, and a Church of Ireland institution with a history longer than either, coming together with Dublin City University to create a new approach to teacher training in the city. That is happening with the support of the Catholic hierarchy, and issues around ethos can be accommodated within a shared and inclusive environment. That applies to both the Church of Ireland and Catholic Church ethos in teacher training in the Catholic maintained system. That begs this question: if something can be done successfully in Glasgow and Dublin, why is Northern Ireland insisting that it is so different?

Mr Ó hOisín: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht an fhreagra sin. I thank the Minister for his answer. Can he assure me that, contrary to what he has intimated, should the Executive decide to reinstate the premia for St Mary's and Stranmillis, he will stand over and implement such a decision?

Dr Farry: The Member knows well that, as a Minister, I am bound by the ministerial code and that, where a decision is taken by the Executive, that decision will be respected. However, that is not going to prevent me from ensuring that I continue to highlight the importance of prioritising skills in our economy. It is not going to stop me from talking about and continuing to promote the importance of a shared future.

The Member talks about the importance of protecting the Irish culture. I took the opportunity to invite some of the protestors who were at Parliament Buildings a couple of weeks ago to talk to me about teacher education and what was so important about it that they were trying to protect. I was quite shocked by some of the things that I heard. First, people said that they did not feel safe celebrating their Irish culture outside the context of St Mary's. In terms of what we hear, particularly from unionist Benches, over our universities and the perception — false in my view — about the Gaelic culture in universities, I found that an incredibly strange and narrow approach to take.

I also heard people say that they did not see the need to engage in sharing. They were quite happy, having gone to a Catholic primary school and a Catholic secondary school, to go to a Catholic-based third-level education system, because they would be going on to teach in a Catholic secondary school or Catholic primary school when they qualify, so why did they need to mix with anyone else in society? In the 21st century, when we are trying to build a shared future, I find those attitudes to be utterly shocking.

NEETs: Budget Impact

T2. Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail any effect that the budgetary settlement will have on those in the NEETs category. (AQT 2072/11-15)

Dr Farry: Very clearly, there are some major challenges in relation to NEETs. We were lucky to have a very generous settlement from the Executive for our Pathways to Success strategy for the 2012-15 period. That funding package expires on 31 March. To be fair, that was always the understanding. Had the situation been different, I would have hoped that that funding package would be renewed. That has not been the case, so we have lost that money, in the same way that we have lost some of our jobs and economy initiative money. It then falls to us to see how we can best address those shortfalls.

We are looking at how we can continue the community family support programme, and I am optimistic that that will be the case. We are also trying to see how some existing good practice can be replicated in the forthcoming European social fund (ESF) round. Applications have gone in on the basis of how they can engage with young people who are disengaged from the labour market. Indeed, that is one key feature of the current ESF round, which is a bigger round than in previous years. It is a very challenging situation, but, nonetheless, the strategy stays in place, and we will continue to see how we can find alternative means to deliver for that important group of young people.

Mr Hilditch: I thank the Minister for his answer and acknowledge the challenges that he has ahead. There will be a knock-on effect from the loss of places at the higher education level, which will impact down through the colleges. Can we give any protection to the vulnerable in our communities, where the colleges do a lot of work and programmes?

Dr Farry: It is important that our colleges continue to outreach in the community. There are some good examples of students themselves, through community and voluntary work, working in disadvantaged communities on some of those issues. Indeed, students can get credit through the new higher education achievement report, which has been rolled out in our higher education sector for those non-curricular activities that are so important towards employability skills. It is a real benefit for students engaging in those types of activities. Without doubt, we are facing a potential loss of provision, and there is no plan B for how we can mop up. If we had additional resources, we would do what we would like to do in our existing plans.

European Social Fund: Disallowed Applications

T3. Mr Hazzard asked the Minister for Employment and Learning why a substantial number of applicant organisations to the European social fund were disallowed on the basis that they did not provide management accounts, despite having supplied audited accounts, which has always been the case to date. (AQT 2073/11-15)

Dr Farry: It is important to bear in mind that we are currently going through a live process. Where groups wish to make an appeal, they can do so. At this stage, I should say that the guidance notes that were sent out in relation to the ESF round were very clear on the need for both audited accounts and management accounts. People were advised to ensure that they provided all the information requested. Nonetheless, where a group wishes to challenge or appeal any decision that has been taken, it is free to do so. A number of organisations are taking up that opportunity.

Mr Hazzard: I thank the Minister. I am not surprised that a number of organisations are taking up the opportunity to challenge that. It has been brought to my attention that at least two organisations were contacted behind the scenes by your Department and it was requested that they resubmit their financial documents. In an effort to redress that particular wrong, and maybe avoid court cases that will do nothing to address the financial crisis that many of those organisations now find themselves in, what steps will you be taking to redress the situation?

Dr Farry: Let me be very clear: organisations can appeal and we will listen to all the evidence that is provided. I am not part of that process. Equally, the Member needs to be aware, as does every other Member, that we have to ensure that we have an objective standard by which we allocate funds from the European social fund. Were we to find ourselves in a situation where the guidance notes and rules had not been followed, and if we were to bend those for particular organisations, that would have a knock-on effect for the integrity of the process. We would end up in a situation where a group that would otherwise be funded, and had followed the rules, would then have an even bigger potential claim against the Department.

FE Colleges: Budgetary Deficit

T4. Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to confirm how many regional further education colleges have been in budgetary deficit in the past three years. (AQT 2074/11-15)

Mr McNarry: I must say, I liked the Minister's response to the first topical question. We will see how we go from here on.

Dr Farry: I cannot give the Member the complete figures. I will write to him in that regard.

The situation in the FE sector has meant that the colleges have faced declining financial support from government over the past seven or eight years and have not had any meaningful increases. At the same time, we have asked them to do a lot more, so they have been doing extremely well to maintain their level of activity on what is, in effect, a declining resource basis.

As the sponsoring body for the colleges, my Department keeps a close eye on their accounts. While deficits may occur from time to time, none of the colleges are causing us any concern with their direct financial management. As the Member may know, some colleges have been in a very worrying situation in the recent past.

Mr McNarry: I accept that the Minister will forward the information to me. I look forward to receiving that and thank him for what he said. Does he accept that part of the solution will be the replacement of the big-college model with expensive big bureaucracy with small, lightly managed, responsive colleges with minimal bureaucracies?

Dr Farry: If anything, we are probably likely to go in the opposite direction, given the real pressures with resources. One of the initiatives that we are seeking to take forward is the promotion of shared services across the six colleges to try to find efficiencies in provision.

One thing that is not on our agenda is any rationalisation of the six colleges down to five, four, three etc. On the other side, we are not seeking to devolve things any further. We have come from a position of having a larger number of colleges, and the decision to consolidate, quite rightly in my view, was taken about 10 years ago.

I also want to be clear that our colleges are incredibly responsive and have changed dramatically their engagement with their local businesses communities over the past number of years. They are increasingly seen as the first point of contact with businesses, particularly SMEs, that are looking for skills and, increasingly, for research and innovation solutions. Some of the things that we are doing to manage the current budget problems and address duplication between the Department and the colleges have been resolved in favour of the colleges. We are trying to give them more power at a local level to engage with their local business communities to create local economic solutions.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mrs Pam Cameron is not in her place.

Emma Rogers: Update

T6. Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the situation with regard to Emma Rogers who is working in Australia. (AQT 2076/11-15)

Dr Farry: I cannot give the Member a direct answer on that point, and it is probably not appropriate to discuss an individual case on the Floor of the Assembly. I am pretty certain that I cleared a response to the Member about that. Hopefully it has been received and a positive solution has been obtained.

Mr Nesbitt: I assure the Minister that Miss Rogers has no difficulty with the case being raised. She is a resident of Perth, Australia, although she is a native of Northern Ireland. She is working in a childcare centre and is under threat of losing her job because, although she is fully qualified — the Minister has the information to that effect — through no fault of her own, she does not have the certificate because of an error by City and Guilds. The Australian Children's Education and Care Quality Authority has said that she will have to leave her job if she does not get that certificate. What is the Minister doing to ensure that that person stays in employment?

Dr Farry: From recollection, I think that we cleared a response to the Member in that regard and the issue has been satisfactorily resolved. If the Member wishes to come back and feels that that is not the case, we are more than happy to entertain further representations. I think that the issue has been resolved. Hopefully the Member has received correspondence from the Department to that effect.

Northern Regional College: New Build

T7. Mr McQuillan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the Northern Regional College new build. (AQT 2077/11-15)

Dr Farry: Oh dear. Which campus?

Mr McQuillan: Coleraine.

Dr Farry: Let me be clear: the Northern Regional College will be a priority area of capital investment, albeit that our capital budgets are declining. We are looking for a new build in the northern part of the catchment area and a new build in the Ballymena area. We are still processing the business case. One particular issue that we need to bottom out relates to curriculum design and ensuring that what we are putting in place meets the needs of the future curriculum. Once that is in place, we will clear the business case and look to secure the resources to progress what are, hopefully, going to be two new builds in the area.

3.30 pm

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. Time is now up. That concludes Question Time. I invite Members to take their ease while we change the top Table.

Mr Moutray: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for a Member of the House, let alone a Deputy Speaker, to refer to Her Majesty The Queen as Mrs Windsor? Will you have that investigated, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker? My party and I find it grossly offensive.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: It is common courtesy to refer to any member mentioned on the Floor of the House by their official title. I ask that the Member reflects on that.

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Has the Deputy Speaker taken the advice of the Principal Deputy Speaker and reflected on the matter?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I believe that while I am in the Chair, I cannot offer political advice or thoughts, but I am sure that anyone who was listening to it might have had a sense of humour and I will go no further than that.

Executive Committee Business

Supply Resolution for the 2014-15 Spring Supplementary Estimates

Debate resumed on amendment to motion:

That this Assembly approves that a total sum, not exceeding £15,646,075,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 and that total resources, not exceeding £17,051,879,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(c) and 2(c) of table 1 in the volume of the Northern Ireland Spring Supplementary Estimates 2014-15 that was laid before the Assembly on 2 February 2015. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

That this Assembly approves that a sum, not exceeding £7,075,640,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund on account for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 and that resources, not exceeding £7,742,283,000, be authorised, on account, for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 4 and 6 of table 1 in the Vote on Account 2015-16 document that was laid before the Assembly on 2 February 2015. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

That this Assembly authorises resources, not exceeding £50,000, for use by the Department of Justice Northern Ireland Judicial Pensions Scheme for the year ending 31 March 2016, for the purposes specified in column 1 of the 2015-16 Main Estimate document that was laid before the Assembly on 2

February 2015. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Which amendment was:

Leave out all after "Assembly approves" and insert

"that a sum, not exceeding £7,075,390,000, reflecting a reduction in the cash grant from OFMDFM to the Equality Commission, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund on account for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 and that resources, not exceeding £7,742,033,000, reflecting a reduction in the cash grant from OFMDFM to the Equality Commission, be authorised, on account, for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 4 and 6 of table 1 in the Vote on Account 2015-16 document that was laid before the Assembly on 2 February 2015." — [Mr Allister.]

Mr Hazzard: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Supply resolution and the Estimates and the need to deliver a more prosperous and fair economy in the North of Ireland.

I want to pick up initially on a point raised by Mike Nesbitt regarding the Programme for Government commitment that was the Maze/Long Kesh. Indeed, it was a commitment, and it was voted through and endorsed by the parties before it was reneged on. I think that it is important to put that on the record, and that Sinn Féin stuck to its commitments and wants to see those types of projects going forward.

Sinn Féin is very proud that health and education will account for 65% of all resource expenditure in the North next year. The health of our population and the education of our young people are two of the most important responsibilities. Indeed, given the rising health and education inequalities at the core of services in Britain at the minute, the fact that 65% of our resources are used for health and education is, indeed, the right choice.

It is essential that our overall investment in health must be used to build a health service that is fit for the 21st century. Lately, we have heard plenty of talk about Transforming Your Care and the Donaldson report, but we must bear in mind that this is the North of Ireland; it is not England. We need to see local leadership, and we need to see equality of access. It does not matter whether it is for young or old, for rural or urban or for men or women.

The key focus of our work in tackling inequality is to ensure that Ireland, North and South, is one of the best countries in the world for children to grow and learn. When our youngest children enter school, they should have access to the best possible education. As a result of the wealth of consultation responses to the Executive's draft Budget, the engagement with the trade unions, the school community and the Education Minister, John O'Dowd, education has received an additional £64.6 million.

It is important to recognise the role that the Minister played in securing those additional funds. It is also important to recognise that, just a month ago, the House voted for a motion that called on the Minister to protect school classrooms alone, and that youth services and services such as Sure Start and free school meals were not as important as the classroom.

I am delighted that the Sinn Féin Minister was able to secure additional funds and that we will now see extra funds going into the Education budget. That sizeable additional allocation will permit much of the pressures facing classrooms across the North to be alleviated. The education of our children is the key to their future and to all of our futures, but too many of our young people have their life chances narrowed by circumstances that are out of their control. It will also help to protect anti-poverty measures that are vital in giving all of our children equal access to success.

Sinn Féin was also successful in negotiating £500 million over 10 years for the Education budget, to be spent on shared and integrated education capital projects as part of the Stormont House Agreement. As Mrs Cochrane touched on, that provides a unique opportunity to shape our schools estate going forward for the 21st century. Although the latest economic indicators are encouraging, we recognise that a strong economy is successful only if it is underpinned by a fair and equal society. To ensure that all our citizens have the opportunity to achieve their potential, we in Sinn Féin have stood firm in our objectives to protect vulnerable and disabled people, in direct contrast to the ideological war on welfare being waged by the Westminster elite.

We have ensured that vulnerable people, disadvantaged people and people with disabilities will not pay the costs of the economic crisis. We have agreed to provide over six years a package of almost £565 million to address the potential loss of benefits to individuals and families. That is complemented by anti-poverty measures and a supplementary payment fund that protects families with children, people with disabilities and those who are long-term sick. There are safeguards for those moving from disability living allowance (DLA) and for lone parents, and people will be comforted by the knowledge that the abhorrent bedroom tax will not be applicable here in the North. Those protections are unique to the North and are in sharp contrast to the cuts-driven onslaught in Britain, which has resulted in the most vulnerable and disadvantaged in Britain paying 80% of the cost of the crisis.

Whether delivered by neo-liberals in London, Dublin or Brussels, austerity is the wrong answer. Golden circles did not nationalise the wealth in the good times; they should not be allowed to nationalise the debt in the bad times. The key to economic growth is investment, not cuts. We need to stimulate equitable growth, not strangle hope and opportunity. Yet, as long as decisions regarding our economic future reside in Westminster, our local budgets will be slashed and burned. Westminster's relentless raiding of the block grant is stifling our capacity for economic growth. Collectively, we have had to make some difficult decisions to live within our Budget, which has been cut by well over £1 billion since 2011.

Austerity has become the price of the union with Britain. That price is borne out by the people who we represent here in the North of Ireland. For every £100 million cut by the Tories, we lose £3.45 million from our local Budget. The only way that we can reverse Westminster cuts is to take control of our economic future and to collectively carve out a progressive future for our local economy, one in which those who can pay do pay so that we can build a just, fair and equitable economy for all our people. For Cameron and Osborne, cuts work because they do not affect people who matter to them, but it is their decisions and their cuts that are blighting the lives of the people who matter to us.

Mr Irwin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development): As Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development, I will represent that Committee's views.

The Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development, like other Committees, takes regular briefings on financial and budgetary issues from the Department as part of its role to scrutinise it. The Committee, in its response to the Department of Finance and Personnel to the budget proposals, stated that any cuts and savings in the budget should have a minimal impact on the farmer and the wider rural community. The Committee is adamant that a reduced impact on front-line services to farmers and rural dwellers is given high priority and that those should not be affected to any great level, as that would be detrimental.

Bearing that in mind, the Committee was anxious to hear the budget proposals for the Department. Indeed, our most recent briefing was held on 27 January 2015, when the Minister and her officials briefed the Committee on the 2015-16 budget. The Minister outlined that savings of £29.9 million are required in one financial year, and taking that into consideration, she outlined her five key priorities. Those are the successful implementation of CAP reform; the implementation of the Going for Growth action plan; the HQ relocation programme; continued support for the tackling rural poverty and social isolation (TRPSI) programme; and continued investment in flood alleviation work.

The Committee noted that with CAP reform, there will be significant changes for farmers, some of which are causing anxiety and distress. Farmers are being encouraged to submit claims online, the intention of which is to process and pay out more efficiently and promptly. The Minister advised the Committee that, in recognition of the difficulties surrounding the payment process, she has allocated £6.3 million to support that work, in addition to £0.3 million capital investment in IT systems.

One of the concerns of the Committee is that, despite that investment in new IT systems, there may be a reduction in the number of staff available to process payments. Given that there are cuts proposed across the wider public sector and the impact that voluntary redundancies may have on staffing levels, the Committee seeks assurance that payments to farmers, which are a vital source of income for them in running their business, will not be affected by staffing issues. Indeed, the Committee will seek assurances that essential business across the Department as a whole will not be severely impacted. Given that staff who have a wealth of knowledge and years of experience are the people most likely to apply for redundancies, the Committee is keen to hear how that will be managed by the Department.

The Committee heard that there will be an additional £1 million of funding available to support farmers in order to assist in the implementation of the farm business improvement scheme. The funding aims to support farmers in the decision-making process and to help them to develop a business plan. The Minister advised that her Department was keen to get the scheme up and running very soon. The Committee is due to receive a briefing on that very soon, and we look forward to hearing the finer details and the outworking of the scheme.

The Committee noted that the Minister had allocated a further £1 million of resource funding to the HQ relocation project, bringing the total resource and capital funding budgets to £5.4 million in 2015-16. The Committee is keen to see the business case for that project sooner rather than later. There is also concern about whether, with many of the DARD functions moving to other locations — for example, fisheries to Downpatrick and forestry to Fermanagh — a move to Ballykelly, with the costs associated with that, is the most prudent thing to do. Given the recent announcement of the Executive decision to reduce the number of Departments, we query how the relocation plan will stack up, given the additional pressures that will now be placed on Departments and the current financial position.

We were glad to hear that the Minister has maintained the £4.7 million funding for the tackling rural poverty and social isolation (TRPSI) programme. The programme has been subject to a Committee review recently, and we heard about the effective impact that it has in rural and farming communities. However, as a Committee, we have expressed concern about why there has been provision for £1.7 million towards capital. Again, the Committee will be interested to hear what the proposals for the capital spend will be, especially when it has to be spent within the very tight timescale of one year.

Given the range of cuts outlined across Departments, the Committee is concerned that Departments will not be able to commit to their actions in the rural White Paper. The Committee seeks assurance from the Department that everything possible is being done to ensure that any rural-proofing decisions subject to budget constraints are made without any disadvantage to the rural community.

The Committee is pleased that the Minister has considered flood alleviation as one of her priorities. Everyone is all too aware of the devastation that flooding can cause; therefore, an allocation of £8.5 million of capital funding is to be welcomed.

Ms Lo (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment): I welcome the opportunity to outline the Environment Committee's views on the motion.

DOE's budget is one of the smallest in comparison with other Departments, so the Committee realises how difficult it has been for the Department to manage the 4.4% cuts that were required during the 2014-15 financial year. The Department has indicated that those savings were made by ceasing to fill vacant posts and by phasing out the use of temporary or contract workers, as well as carrying out a review of general administrative expenses across all business areas. While the Committee did not oppose those cost-saving measures during the 2014-15 year, members are apprehensive about how the proposed staff cuts can be realised over the forthcoming financial year. The closure of the DVA resulted in almost 300 job losses, and it appears that about 400 planning division staff are to move to local council offices as those powers transfer to local government. A further reduction of 500 staff — equivalent to one third of the current workforce — will be a severe blow to the Department. The Committee remains extremely concerned about how this could be managed without impacting significantly on service delivery.

The Committee welcomed the increased funding provided during the year for the Environment Agency. The Committee very strongly supports the role of the NIEA in fighting environmental crime and dealing with illegal waste, particularly when it is on the scale of the incident at Mobuoy, where more than half a million tons of illegal waste has been dumped and appropriate remedial action is still ongoing.

The Committee also supports the additional allocation of resources to local government. Members are very aware of the widespread changes to be introduced over the next year as the new 11 councils deliver not only the existing functions of local councils but a range of new functions that will transfer to them from central government. Adequate resourcing will be vital to ensure the success of the new roles and structures. The Committee welcomes the Department's focus on capacity building in councils. Nevertheless, the Committee would urge the Minister that this level of support for local government should be maintained over the next few years so that neither ratepayers nor local communities are financially disadvantaged by the process.

The Committee also places great emphasis on the provision of road safety services and will be concerned to note that this area has had a cut in its resources. During each week in 2014, the death toll on our roads increased, and, as the Committee continues its scrutiny of the Road Traffic (Amendment) Bill, departmental officials have reiterated the grim statistics regarding young people killed or seriously injured. The Committee is very conscious of the vital importance of road safety education and the need to support this work on an ongoing basis. Members have urged the Minister to prioritise this funding as he considers his budget for 2015-16.

The Committee has largely been supportive of DOE's bids during the past year and, in considering the Vote on Account, stresses the importance of making sure that the necessary funds continue to be made available to DOE so that it can continue to deliver its programmes and conduct its functions effectively. On behalf of the Environment Committee, I support the motion.

I now wish to make some comments on behalf of the Alliance Party. The first is that the Alliance Party opposes Mr Allister's amendment. It is tantamount to a threat to an independent organisation when it does something that some Members disagree with. It is almost an abuse of power.

Over the past few months, I have been inundated with correspondence from constituents who are deeply concerned about the future of the arts in Northern Ireland.

The 10% proposed cut to DCAL's budget equates to a loss of £10 million. Within the draft settlement for DCAL, the arts budget has been even further reduced by 11.2%, a loss of almost £1.38 million. The proposed cut comes on the back of six successive cuts to the arts since 2011 and would set the arts budget back a decade to below the level last received in 2005-06. This reduces investment in the arts from 13p to just over 11p per person per week. To put the cut in context, the total annual spending of this arts budget would not sustain the health service for a day. It would sustain education for less than two and a half days.

I appreciate that the serious Budget constraints demand tough decisions, but it troubles me that the voluntary and community sector is always the first to be cut. I worry that too many MLAs have a tendency to view the arts as trivial and that not everyone recognises that visual arts, drama and music all enrich our quality of life. It is not just that: the arts sector grows and supports our local creative industries, which are worth £740 million a year. Those industries not only bring tourism, further investment and a sense of national pride but provide 40,000 people with jobs. There are financial benefits, too. The Tourist Board calculated that the top five arts events of the Derry/Londonderry City of Culture 2013 generated a 20:1 return on the investment and attracted a third of a million visitors. In all, the City of Culture boosted tourism to Derry/Londonderry by 50%. The 2012 Ulster Bank Belfast Festival at Queen's created nearly £580,000 in tourism revenue, and local businesses benefited by approximately £1.95 million. The CEO of the Arts Council recently queried the logic of making the cut to a sector that helps to turn 0.1% of public investment into 4% of GDP

It is not just tourism and employment that benefit from the arts sector. Public spending on arts has a negligible impact on funding for other Departments and makes a very positive contribution to services such as health and education. Fifty-two per cent of the work undertaken by the Arts Council's regularly funded organisations takes place in hospitals, schools and communities. Given the collaborative nature of many arts groups, there is a real worry in the sector that, when one organisation goes, it will have a domino effect. You cannot just switch voluntary organisations on and off. When those organisations go, they are gone for good and to rebuild them will have significant costs.

A constituent sent me a letter asking:

"Who wants to live in a place where all the culture is based on sectarianism and backwardness? Shared events like Culture Night, the festival of food" —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Member's time is up.

Ms Lo: — "the Derry Jazz Festival and many others allowed us to come together for the love of something that has nothing to do with our divided religious and cultural paths."

Mr Wilson: In a former life, I would have upbraided Members for raising issues during this debate that should not properly be raised. Having listened to a good part of the debate, I have found that 95% of it falls into that category and that many people are treating this as if it were a Budget debate. Let us be quite clear what we are dealing with, and I will then try to stay within the limits of the debate. In fact, I sometimes wonder why the debate goes on for four hours, since it is a fairly simple matter of voting on the amount of money that the Minister will have to give to Departments to enable them to spend the money that was voted in the Budget a couple of weeks ago. That falls into two categories: the part in the Consolidated Fund and the part that is in the Consolidated Fund plus the receipts raised by Departments in Northern Ireland. This debate is not about — this is a very pertinent point, especially in relation to the amendment — discussing whether there is an adequate budget for one Department or another or whether more money should go into one Department's budget and less into another's. We have had that debate before.

That said, I will make two observations. First, if we look at the amount of money to be voted on to enable Departments to run budgets for the next six months, the £7,075 million is well above what would be raised by taxation in Northern Ireland. I will continue to repeat that in these types of debate. The Members opposite ought to remember that, when they talk about their green dream — I am not talking about the wee man in the corner either — of a republic and getting —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order, please. I am not sure in what context the Member used the words the “wee man”, but I assume that it was not the Member.

Mr Wilson: He is not there at the minute, so I do not think that I have insulted him.

When they talk about their vision of a united Ireland and breaking free from the United Kingdom, let them remember that the money that we vote on today, which is available in the Consolidated Fund for Departments to draw on, is there partly because we are members of the United Kingdom, and the United Kingdom Government allocate more money to Northern Ireland than would be raised locally. There is the case, and the Supply resolution hammers home the case for the Union and why we should be part of the United Kingdom.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to the Member for giving way, and, overall, I agree with the thrust of his point, which will be no surprise to him. I remember Michaela Boyle making a point in the Budget debate that austerity was somehow the price of being in the Union. I thought that it was an absolutely ridiculous point. However, I took issue with him when he was the Finance Minister, and I take issue with the current Minister, that the Assembly is somehow a low-tax Assembly. We are virtually a no-tax Assembly.

Mr Wilson: We would certainly be a higher-tax Assembly if that crowd over there had its way. The important thing is this: being part of the United Kingdom brings immense economic and fiscal benefits to this country, and we should never forget that.

My second point is that the draw on that sum would have been much higher. Tomorrow, hopefully, we will ensure that it is not much higher, because we will put through the welfare reform proposals. Some of that money would have been withdrawn to give back to Westminster unnecessarily.

I do not want to go into all the pet things that I would like more money or less money to be spent on. Some Members may do that out of ignorance. I would not do it out of ignorance but would do it deliberately. I would know that I was overstepping the mark, although, Mr Deputy Speaker, you may argue that that does not stop me on occasions. However, it will stop me on this occasion, because I want to deal with the amendment.

I support the sentiments behind the amendment. Indeed, long before Mr Allister talked about reducing the Equality Commission's budget, I had said that publicly in the Assembly and had written about it in the 'News Letter'. I believe that the Equality Commission is being used, as has been suggested by Members opposite, as a Trojan Horse to undermine many of the values that are dear to people whom Mr Allister and I represent. It is essential, therefore, that, when we see the Equality Commission squandering public money — Ashers bakery is a good example — we ought to try to find ways to reduce its ability to do so. I note that Mr Allister's press release states that what he wants to do through the amendment is: that many people across Northern Ireland have made. I want to give tangible effect to the denunciations that members of my party, thousands of my constituents and I have made about the Equality Commission.

4.00 pm

The amendment we have before us does not do that, for a number of reasons. First, this is not about the budget for individual Departments. Secondly, in law — I am sure that Mr Allister will make the point — the only amendments that can be made to this are by the Finance Minister. The Assembly cannot make amendments. Thirdly, as he knows, because of the route that he has taken, we now have a petition of concern against his amendment, so that it will not have any effect anyway. Some people may say, “That is just a message of despair. What can we do?” The question is not what can we do, but what have we done. Even if this amendment were to go through — if the petition of concern and legal impediment were not there, this was the time for reducing the available money and the amendment was not simply making a reduction in the money available to be drawn down generally — there is no guarantee where the axe would fall. It does not, therefore, have the effect it is designed to have, for all of the reasons which I have given. Indeed, had Mr Allister wanted some advice on this, I am sure that either the Finance Minister or I would have given him a quick tutorial on how to handle these particular issues.

The time to do it, of course, was when we were putting through the Budget, which, unfortunately, Mr Allister voted against. He may well say to me, “Well, why did you not do something about it at the Budget?” My answer is, “We did.” The Budget that went through, and which he, and, unfortunately, some others, voted against, contains a cut to the budget of the Equality Commission. It is a bigger cut than the £250,000 notional cut in this amendment. There is a real, effective cut that they will feel of £430,000 in the Budget. That was done by working and using negotiations to get a Budget agreed and to make sure that it was not stopped by petitions of concern or whatever. That is the way to give tangible effect to the anger of the public, but, as happens on so many occasions —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Wilson: — the DUP was ahead of the game. We put a Budget through. The Equality Commission will have less resources next year, and I believe that thousands of my constituents will cheer when they hear that news.

Mr Rogers: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the spring Supplementary Estimates. Mr Speaker, I direct my thoughts to education. Directing funds to the education of our children is a direct investment in society and the economy. Our schools are already struggling financially, but the cuts proposed will have a detrimental impact on the education of all our children. Even at this late stage, with fewer than eight weeks until the next financial year, schools have no idea of their budget. Northern Ireland is in the midst of a skills deficit, hampering our economy. Failing to invest in education exacerbates this situation. The thousands of jobs promised by the devolution of corporation tax mean nothing if we are not properly educating our children. For young people to be fully prepared to enter into the workforce, or to progress into further or higher education, as much money and resources as possible must go to the classroom.

I am disappointed that the SDLP amendment, which would have allocated an additional £1 million to the Department for Employment and Learning to maintain the special funding premium for St Mary's University College and Stranmillis, was not accepted.

I have stood in the Assembly before and voiced my extreme concern that the Minister of Education did not guarantee that the majority of additional funding would be allocated to the classroom. I find it shocking that, in one sense, he says that he is protecting front-line services but that, in the next breath, he is cutting £87 million out of the aggregated schools budget and cutting the entitlement framework by 29%. When you translate that into the real situation in schools, it is teachers facing redundancy, young people with special educational needs who may not get the support they need, and the thousands of our young people who leave school without basic qualifications. Schools have been pushed to the brink. They have reached their limit; they cannot make any more cuts without our education system suffering massively.

I take on board what the Member who spoke previously said about this not being a Budget debate. However, we have to be really strategic in our planning. We need to be strategic in terms of the educational future of our children. As I said, we are close to a new financial year, but when your child in school makes a choice to do a GCSE or A-level subject, that is a two-year commitment. You could have situations where students made that decision last September but the schools do not know whether they can afford the teacher for the rest of the financial year, never mind the next year. That is what I mean about being more strategic.

Education not only enhances the life of the individual and the community; it is absolutely critical for our economy. We have no hope whatsoever of developing a sustainable and balanced economy if we have our young people leaving school without the basic numeracy and literacy qualifications. We are not meeting the skills deficit in areas like computer coding. We cannot meet the skills deficit there at the minute, never mind two, three or five years down the road. Investing in DETI in the hope of employment stimulation needs to be supported by proper investment in the education of our children. We need to prepare them to develop the skills to progress to third-level education and take up employment, if we are going to have a strong and diverse workforce.

The education sector has spoken. Now is the time for a more strategic approach to spending, particularly in education. In the 21st century, we must provide the necessary foundation for a vibrant economy.

Mr Swann: I welcome the opportunity to outline the Committee for Employment and Learning's consideration and views on the Supply resolution and the Vote on Account 2015-16.

With regard to the spring Supplementary Estimates, the Committee received a number of briefings from officials from the Department for Employment and Learning on the in-year monitoring rounds in 2014-15. Over the past year, the Committee received briefings on the June, October and January monitoring rounds, and it discussed a range of issues with the officials. All three DEL monitoring rounds have been unremarkable for 2014-15, which caused the Committee members some concerns. During the briefings, given that there have been financial pressures on the Department due to an in-year cut of 4.4%, it was noted that it had not put in bids for any additional allocations over the year; it seemed that the Department just accepted its lot. Instead, the Department tried to manage the cuts by finding in-house efficiency savings. For instance, the Department reported to the Committee a number of pressures, such as £1.8 million for the youth employment scheme, which it was finding from other areas of the Department.

Over all three monitoring rounds, members asked a series of questions about the lack of bids. They listened to officials indicating that they were able to live within their means. Other Chairs referred to late papers being received from the Departments in regard to monitoring bids. We did not have that problem; we just had a lack of bids. The Committee has, however, been somewhat assured by the Minister that, in future, the bids process, and, in particular, the change fund, will feature more in the Department's thinking. The Minister outlined in his briefing on 3 February that he is receiving £13.2 million for the new change fund and that, in future, in-year bids will feature more.

I will now move on to the Vote on Account 2015-16 with regard to the Budget for 2015-16. The Committee for Employment and Learning consulted with the three Northern Ireland universities, Stranmillis University College, St Mary's University College, Colleges NI, the University and College Union (UCU) and the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action (NICVA). On 4 November, during an informal meeting with the heads of the three universities, the vice chancellor of Ulster University and the vice chancellor of Queen's University Belfast advised that the proposed cut could lead to a loss of 1,100 university places between them, and that that would have a damaging knock-on effect on the skills base for promoting inward investment and developing home-grown talent.

The universities also warned of an impending brain drain if the proposed cuts were initiated.

On 5 November, during an informal meeting with representatives of UCU on the effect of the cuts, the union was of the opinion that whole subjects and areas of study could be cut from both universities, which could result in the loss of student places and staff.

Minister Farry briefed the Committee on the budget on 26 November, 10 December and, again, on 3 February to provide details of the changing situation. From an unpromising starting position, the Committee was glad to see the additional money that came to the Department at the eleventh hour. However, the Committee realises and accepts that the budget cuts on the Department remain severe.

During his briefing on 3 February, the Minister informed the Committee that he has had to manage a £61.5 million cut, reduced from the original £82 million cut, thanks to the reallocation of £20 million to the Department from the Executive. The Committee is glad to see that the Executive have listened to its warnings about the short-sighted nature of cutting Employment and Learning spending. In addition, when the £13.2 million of change fund money is included, the Department's opening baseline budget cut is £48.3 million.

In dealing with the pressures on his Department, the Minister has outlined his way forward to the Committee. He has provided detail of the £33.2 million of reductions. They are made up of £18 million of cuts rolling forward from 2014-15, the removal of the £2.2 million premia to Stranmillis University College and St Mary's University College and £3.5 million of employment service efficiency savings.

The main issue exercising the minds of the Committee during those briefings with the Minister was the impact on student places in our universities and colleges and the knock-on impact on the Northern Ireland economy. In detailing what the impact will be, the Minister has outlined that, with the £20 million reallocation to the Department, a pressure of £30.1 million remains on his budget and that will be managed by a reduction to the universities of £14 million, a reduction to the further education colleges of £12 million and further departmental efficiencies of £4.1 million. The Minister also outlined how the institutions hoped to mitigate those cuts. He outlined that the colleges will use £6 million of reserves and are well placed to receive £7.5 million from the change fund. Between them, that will help them manage the cuts, although jobs and places will be impacted.

The Minister also indicated that it is less certain how the universities will manage the cuts but that they are looking to maximise efficiencies and cut core teaching and research provision. In addition, the Minister indicated that a change is being made to widening participation measures, and that will reduce to 10% the requirement for universities to spend a minimum of 20% of additional student fee income on widening participation. This could increase the universities' spending power by around £8 million, which could be used to mitigate the impact of cuts. Unfortunately, however, the Minister accepts that the remaining £6 million of savings to be found by the universities will most likely come from a cut in university places and jobs. The Minister also made the point that, even if there was no reduction in student places or jobs, in respect of education and training, a standstill is not a positive position.

The Minister also pointed out that there is a £1.8 million pressure on match funding for the European social fund and the community family support programme and outlined that if the Department is not able to attract the match funding, it will be unable to draw down the full programme and fail to meet targets. The Minister admitted that this was a difficult position to be in and advised that he would begin bidding in in-year monitoring rounds to ensure that the funds are maximised and that money is not lost to the block grant.

The Committee for Employment and Learning will continue its scrutiny of the Employment and Learning budget, especially the Minister's efforts to mitigate the impact of the cuts.

Mr Clarke (The Chairperson of the Committee for Regional Development): Thank you Mr Deputy Speaker. I welcome the opportunity to contribute to this debate in my capacity as Chair of the Committee for Regional Development.

It is important that we take the time to consider the implications and impact of the Estimates and, later today, the Vote on Account. Table 1, column 2(b) shows a reduction of just under £20 million in the departmental resources. We have had the departmental officials appear before the Committee to explain where the Minister and his officials have sought to apply that reduction. It is important to stress that it is the Minister and his officials who identify the Department's priorities. I stress again that it is the Minister for Regional Development and his officials who decide on which areas within the portfolio will face reductions.

It is disturbing and stressful that the Minister and his officials deliberately chose to target the most vulnerable of our citizens when they made these reductions. These were not, and are not, as the Minister and his officials continue to chant at every opportunity, Executive cuts. They were, and will continue to be, the responsibility of the Minister, his officials and the Department.

Page 226 of the 'Northern Ireland Spring Supplementary Estimates 2014-2015' sets out the actions that the Department will spend its budget on. It says that its budget will be used for the maintenance of roads, footpaths, street lighting and rural transport. Have the Minister and his officials achieved this? Most definitely not.

They cut budgets for the maintenance of roads, footpaths and rural transport. They allowed over 20,000 street lights to sit darkened before the Executive stepped in and provided additional funding for repairing those lights as part of the Budget settlement that the Minister for Regional Development delights in saying that he voted against.

They supported concessionary fares, again provided for through a Budget settlement that the Minister voted against, and they purchased buses for a company that is sitting with over £56 million in the bank. They talk in the Estimates of supporting regional planning and visioning when the reality is that they sought to switch lights off across Northern Ireland and attack the isolated and most vulnerable in Northern Ireland.

The Committee, unfortunately, does not have the greatest confidence in how the Department controls its budgets. This is evidenced in the debacle over phase 2 of the Coleraine to Londonderry train line, which has doubled in cost because of what the Minister himself described as "guesstimates" of budgets. Although the Committee inquiry is ongoing, there is an evident belief that the Minister and his Department cannot dissolve or dilute their responsibilities in this matter, both in accountability and in overall governance of the project.

They have failed to learn lessons from the past and have chosen to bury their heads in the sand when claiming that no additional money has been spent. Additional money has been spent on consultancy firms estimating a 25% increase in passenger numbers on the route when the reality is that they have increased by 185%. It has been spent on additional tendering processes and needs to be spent on an inflated project cost that has increased from £22 million to £40 million. The Minister has identified this as a priority, and the Committee is fully supportive of the rail track as a priority, but he needs to recognise his Department's failings in this process. He must recognise that actions need to be taken to ensure that budgets for major capital projects are on time and he needs to ensure that the appropriate governance and accountability processes are applied correctly in future.

I note that table 1, column 2(b), shows an allocation of £5 million with regard to high-quality water and this has to be welcomed. It is, however, worrying that the Department advised the Committee on 4 February that:

"It is unlikely DRD will be able to provide sufficient funding to NI Water for PC15 operating costs and capital".

Although it is probably more appropriate to discuss this in detail during the Budget debate next week, I would like to put on record our concern on this matter. The Department needs to ensure that it balances its decision to cut NI Water budgets with the increased potential and the very significant cost to the block of infraction proceedings in respect of the Ballycastle treatment plant and Belfast lough.

We have come through some very difficult times, not necessarily unscathed, and we are facing further difficult times ahead. It is imperative, therefore, that constrained budgets are utilised in the most efficient and effective way. The Department has been very successful in accessing European funding for a number of transport schemes, and the Committee continues to encourage this as an avenue for matching its limited budgets. Likewise, the Committee is very supportive of joined-up initiatives for cycling that can be used to offset costs to the wider Northern Ireland plc block through increased health and environmental savings, for example.

It is time for the Department to take the initiative within the confines of governance arrangements and use its budgets in new and innovative ways. I can assure the House that the Committee for Regional Development will continue to work with the Department to achieve the most effective and efficient use of its budgets. We will, however, continue to be effective in our scrutiny of the Department and its arm's-length bodies to ensure that the public purse is protected and that the objectives and actions listed in the Supplementary Estimates are achieved.

Mr McGlone (The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. There are a number of issues that I would like to raise on behalf of the Enterprise, Trade and Investment Committee. Since the draft Budget position, Invest NI's allocation has increased from £98 million to £132.5 million.

That includes £7.1 million from the change fund for a joint bid with DEL towards support for increases in the relevance and use of skills across all economic sectors. I will refer to that again, but where the voluntary exit scheme in particular and potential changes to corporation tax are concerned, that is especially relevant, as we will require the introduction of new, well-skilled people of whatever age. They may be people of experience, of little experience or of no experience, but they may be exiting the public sector to be reskilled for the new job creation that may arise as a consequence of a reduction in corporation tax rates.

During an oral briefing, DETI officials informed the Committee that the draft Budget's proposed Invest NI allocation would mean that the organisation would have to scale back its targets. That was considered a key concern for Invest NI and DETI, as around 93% of Invest NI's draft budget was already committed. That would have left little additional funding for attracting new investment. Again, if that pattern continued, it would be at the wrong time, in the wrong place and certainly out of sync with both those items that I mentioned — the voluntary exit scheme and the bids to lower corporation tax.

The Committee has been led to believe that there is a guarantee from the Executive — the industrial development guarantee — that no worthwhile proposal for eligible support for economic development or investment would be lost due to a lack of funding. Following a query from the Committee, the Department stated that the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment is firmly of the view that that commitment remains in place. It is important that we get clarity and maybe have that commitment repeated today by the Minister of Finance. I especially ask that the Minister provides firm assurances that the Budget allocation is sufficient to ensure that, first, Invest NI will not have to scale back its targets and that, secondly, the industrial development guarantee remains in place.

Another issue that manifested itself, particularly in public last week in some parts of the media, is farm safety. The Health and Safety Executive's budget has increased by £200,000 from the draft Budget position to £5.9 million. Whilst that might seem an insubstantial amount, the Committee had considerable concerns after officials informed it that, under draft Budget proposals, the Health and Safety Executive would have to suspend all farm safety campaigns. That is being announced at a time when farmers are getting back into the fields to spread slurry and are exposed to the dangers associated with slurry mixing. The media profile within the last week or so has encouraged farmers to be exceptionally careful around their farms. We are all very well aware of the serious and sad instances of people losing their life on farms as a result of those issues. I think that it is important that that matter is emphasised now so that it can be established whether the farm safety campaigning budgets at the HSENI can be secured.

A key question for the Committee and, undoubtedly, for the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development is this: what will the additional £200,000 allocation be used for? Will it be used to ensure that at least some, if not all, farm safety campaign activity can continue? That is very important.

There has been heavy emphasis in the Committee on R&D and innovation projects, which again ties in with economic development in the North. A key element of that has been the drawdown of EU funding, especially Horizon 2020 funding, which the rest of the island has been very successful in drawing down. Therefore, it is important that I emphasise both the role of InterTradeIreland and its budget in providing services and the need to make sure that it does not suffer disproportionately from separate reductions, North and South. InterTradeIreland has been instrumental in supporting and helping a lot of businesses, and its role in supporting and helping those businesses in their drawdown of EU funds has been emphasised to us. A small cutback there could result in not insubstantial amounts of funding being drawn down.

It is important that we, as an economy that is looking forward and that will hopefully be investing in its research, innovation and development, see the bigger picture and invest moneys where they are most required to draw down that funding and to help build a new 21st century economy in the North. There is an issue around the reinstatement of the events fund. It is one of the areas that the Committee will wish to cover and, indeed, raise with the Minister tomorrow when she attends.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Member for giving way. He raises a pertinent issue about the events fund. Is it the Member's understanding, as it is mine, that whilst we welcome the reinstatement of the events fund, it would appear to have been reduced from around £2.4 million to just £1 million, obviously a significant and disproportionate cut.

Mr McGlone: Any cut of that magnitude, which appears to be almost 50%, will have a significant import upon the activities carried out. It is an issue that I will undertake to raise tomorrow with the Minister and establish from her that if that funding is being cut back to that level, what substitute funding, streams of funding or other supports may be put in place to help with the events associated with and supported by the Events Company.

In conclusion, a LeasCheann Comhairle, thank you for your time, and I trust that those matters will be taken on board by the Minister. Go raibh maith agat.

Mr Lyttle: The Alliance Party opposed the Budget at the Executive and in the Assembly for what we believe is a lack of a long-term, strategic approach to serious social and economic challenges facing our society. We have made our concerns clear. I heed Mr Wilson's admonishment that this is no longer the Budget debate and that we have now to start accepting the democratic will of the Assembly in relation to the Budget.

I will, however, take this opportunity to continue to raise red-flag warnings in relation to aspects of the Budget that were brought to my attention as a member of the Committee for Regional Development.

The Minister of Finance says that the Budget is about tough choices, yet by deferring difficult decisions on many issues, for example our water services and other fair revenue raising and redistribution, the Executive are failing to adequately invest in our public services, including our water system and infrastructure, which is critical to the health, economic development and environmental well-being of the community.

It is time that the DUP Finance Minister, the Ulster Unionist Regional Development Minister, indeed all parties, were honest with the public on water. The DUP Finance Minister accuses Alliance of shirking tough choices in relation to the Budget yet resorts to short-sighted, populist political campaigning rather than fair and responsible Budget management.

The Minister for Regional Development has said that at least £750 million will be required from 2015 to 2021 for a water system upgrade for the Belfast water and sewerage system alone; yet the draft DRD budgets allocate around £450 million for capital investment for that period. That is approximately £300 million short and the Executive already subsidise the cost of water services by £250 to £300 million per year.

That is £300 million lost to other important public expenditure, such as health, education and independent advice services to assist the most vulnerable with welfare reform, so there is under-investment in water and other public services, and that subsidy.

We also have the risk of European infraction. The European Commission commenced infraction proceedings against the UK Government for Ballycastle waste water treatment works. The Minister for Regional Development says that Belfast harbour is now at risk of failing to meet required water-quality standards.

The European Commission water framework directive also requires states to recover the costs of water services and by 2010 to have introduced water-pricing policies that incentivise efficient water use. The Minister has made it clear that, whilst Northern Ireland charges for non-domestic water use, the absence of domestic water charges is another European Commission infraction risk.

The Committee for Regional Development has been told that it is unlikely that the Department for Regional Development will be able to provide adequate funding for Northern Ireland Water for operating and capital costs. It is my understanding that the Northern Ireland Water budget is short by around £14.7 million for 2015-16. Add to that the potential £13 million overspend by the Department for Regional Development for this year. We have also been told that waste water infrastructure is insufficient to meet the future requirements expected of it, with the problem most acute in Belfast. The Finance Minister says that the 2015-16 Budget is about tough choices, yet he and other parties have completely avoided the difficult decisions around water and other fair revenue raising and redistribution. My party believes that we have to be open and honest about the need for serious consideration of the introduction of fair domestic water pricing based on the ability to pay if we are to meet the demands on this and other vital public services, which I have set out today.

4.30 pm

It is my understanding that we have received no ministerial attendance at the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister, of which I am a member, in relation to the Budget and a complete lack of detail around some key Budget allocations, for example, £10 million towards the Together: Building a United Community strategy. This is of particular concern given OFMDFM's track record of gross underspend on other key areas of policy provision, such as the childcare budget and the social investment fund budget, dedicated to the tackling of deprivation in and the regeneration of our community.

On behalf of the Alliance Party, I oppose the disproportionate and targeted reduction of the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland proposed by Mr Allister. It is my understanding that the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland has already experienced a 10% reduction and staffing reductions over the last four years. It is there, as an independent body, to play a key role for equality in our community. It does essential work around the Fair Employment and Treatment Order, section 75 and disability discrimination, and it is a vital scrutiny body to ensure that equality and good relations are advanced in our community.

Those of us who support a shared and prosperous future for Northern Ireland clearly have our work cut out to ensure that the hard-earned public finances are spent in the best interests of everyone in this community.

Mr Attwood: I apologise to the House that I have not been in attendance for much of the debate. As the Minister will appreciate, it was my children's parental consultation this afternoon, so I am just back from their school. I will take an intervention on that matter if the Minister is minded to ask me any questions. If not, I will move on.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): If you hurry up, I will be able to make mine.

Mr Attwood: I will hurry up, but I will take 10 minutes.

There are four matters that I want to bring the Minister's attention to and ask him to deal with either in his response or subsequently. The Minister is aware that the SDLP tabled an amendment to adjust the top line Vote on Account by £1 million, which is in or around 45% of the premia that would otherwise go to Stranmillis University College and St Mary's University College, to take forward the intention and ambition of the Assembly, which it showed last week when it passed with an overwhelming number — and would have done even on a cross-community basis, even though it was not subject to that threshold — an amendment to put money into the Budget this week to rectify the issue of the premia at St Mary's. Mr Allister, like ourselves, was trying to do something innovative in the Assembly by amending the motion. Our amendment, unlike yours, Mr Allister, was not accepted, although it seems to me that the broad principles were the same. I accept the ruling of the Speaker in that regard.

As I indicated to the Minister of Education earlier, whilst purdah, which will kick in on perhaps 20 March, may not be applicable to the Assembly per se, the spirit of purdah may be applicable to the Assembly in that it should inform Ministers in the Executive about decisions that they might take that might otherwise have an impact on the forthcoming Westminster election.

Given that we have 40 days and nights until purdah or the spirit of purdah may kick in and that a paper on the matter is meant to go to the Executive this week, how does the Minister see that matter being resolved? It is a matter of resolving it now, given the ambition of last week's motion, the short time frame that we may be working within and the fact that the worst outcome would be for no decision to be taken before the spirit of purdah kicks in so that the two colleges had to face the music at the beginning of the next financial year. I ask the Minister to deal with that.

Mr Lyttle: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: Yes.

Mr Lyttle: From where did the amendment propose taking the £1 million?

Mr Attwood: There was no proposal to take the money from anywhere. There was a proposal — unlike that of Mr Allister, who tries to create a reduction in the Budget line — whereby we sought to increase the Budget line by £1 million, which I believe is within the Minister of Finance's competence to recommend to the House. However, that matter is now past because the amendment was not accepted by the Speaker.

My second point is this: I have chosen not to speak on environment issues to any great degree in the House since leaving my position as Environment Minister, because there is a new Minister. The new Minister has to find his feet and show his authority, both of which he has done over the last 18 months. However, now is the time to speak about issues that impact on the Ministry that I once held, the first of which is that people should read the Vote on Account and they read the headline purpose of the Department of the Environment:

"To protect, conserve and enhance the natural environment and built heritage and support ... sustainable development ... in a ... way which will contribute to a better environment and which is modern and responsive to the community ... to reduce road deaths and serious injuries and ... support a system of effective local government".

That is the character and content of the Department of the Environment. I have to say to the Minister that the consequence of the Vote on Account is to, in multiple ways, run the severe risk of undermining all of that.

Let me give you some examples. The Minister, when he was a Back-Bencher, tabled a motion in the Chamber about heritage-led developments. So, here we are, 'Waiting for Godot', waiting for corporation tax perhaps to be amended and for the jobs that may be created on the far side of that. Meanwhile, report after report in other jurisdictions, including ours, shows that the potential for heritage-led development in Northern Ireland is immense. If it were to go anywhere near creating the number of jobs that it has in Dublin or Scotland, we would create many, many thousands of jobs. That was a motion that the Minister proposed in the House some time ago. The consequence of the Budget and the Vote on Account is to undermine heritage-led development. I ask the Minister to advise us how he reconciles the present situation with what he said when he, rightly, proposed that motion and recently allocated moneys under monitoring rounds to DOE for that purpose.

Secondly, the DOE's environmental crime unit has around 30 staff. Nobody disputes that, while it has been enhanced since before I was Minister, it still needs more resources. How will the environmental crime unit deal with the huge threat of environmental crime, given that it is a lead policing agency, in effect, on environmental crime? How is it, Minister, meant to deal with what we discovered in Derry — I see that there are not that many Members from Derry in the House — a couple of years ago, when £50 million was taken by organised crime from an illegal waste dump two miles from Derry? Yet nobody — not planning, the Department of the Environment, the police, the Organised Crime Task Force or the Serious Organised Crime Agency — knew about it. Nobody knew about the biggest illegal waste dump ever found in these islands. The environmental crime unit is now tasked with going after those who are responsible for that immense and horrendous crime, whoever they are, and I have certain views on who they are. How can the environmental crime unit do all that when the consequence of the Vote on Account is that up to one third of DOE staff might lose their job, separate from the members of staff who are going to the councils?

We have a situation in which, as the Minister will recall, close to £50 million was given to councils, of which £30 million was negotiated to try to mitigate the consequences of government reorganisation, given that some parties imposed the model of 11 rather than 15 councils. How can it be that, on the one hand, we give to the councils to mitigate the costs of local government reform, yet, on the other hand, take away from them by not giving to those councils in areas of disadvantage all the rates support that they might otherwise have been entitled to? I ask the Minister this: given what is happening with budget lines on rates relief and general moneys going to the DOE for heritage-led development, how can that Department be expected to achieve the ambition of its mandate, which I read out earlier, when those are the consequences that it will have to live with next year?

Mr Byrne: Thanks for giving way. Does the Member accept that the whole reform of local government and the functions to be delegated are potentially severely impaired, given the cutbacks in the budgetary position?

Mr Attwood: In my view, the fact that we have 11 rather than 15 councils and that rates support is at risk in the way that it is and so on creates further difficulties for councils going forward; of that there is no doubt.

I have two final points for the Minister. The way in which you will deal with regional disadvantage should be tracked through the Vote on Account and the Budget. Look at what was said last week by one of our best entrepreneurs. He said that 35,000 jobs had been created in new industry and IT, but they have been created in Belfast. That situation will be compounded by corporation tax, unless it is done in a very discerning and regionally balanced way. How will we track through the Vote on Account and all the Budgets to come —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Attwood: — the issue of regional imbalance? The risk is that that imbalance will deepen on the far side of corporation tax being devolved.

Mr B McCrea: Part of the problem with the process is a lack of transparency. At the last meeting of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure, we were presented with tabled papers from the Clerk of the Committee for Finance and Personnel setting out some attempt at reconciling the Main Estimates with the spring Supplementary Estimates. I asked for an explanation of some of the numbers, and we tried to rush something through. However, it proved quite difficult to do the reconciliation at the time. I have questions for the Minister of Finance and Personnel that refer to the document. I note that, originally, in the Main Estimates, the proposed capital expenditure for DCAL was some £90 million, but, as we transit through the year, we manage to lose £63 million of capital expenditure. I went off and had a look at it. Obviously, some of that will be to do with the difficulties with Casement Park, but the response to the June monitoring round declares an easement for the stadiums amounting to £35 million, which is only half of the subsequent easement. The point that I am making is this: it seems difficult to hold an intelligent discussion on this when we cannot get proper information in a timely fashion.

I did not get a chance to talk about it in other debates, because time did not permit, but I will take the opportunity here as a member of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure to say that, when we talk about looking forward for money on account, I do not think that we have had the proper argument about the value that culture, arts and leisure have for our society. The proposed reductions in budgets or in the monitoring rounds do not reflect that point.

I am also struck by some of the things that have come through as capital bids. Capital bids for something called "City of Culture legacy" come up repeatedly in the Committee, and I had to ask for details on it. I am fully supportive of the City of Culture and all the good work that has gone on up there, but what exactly was the capital expenditure for, and how did we manage to roll in £2.8 million? It turns out that that will include the provision for the tales of the North Coast Sports Village, a boxing programme worth £2.14 million and other projects in the north-west that amount to £675,000. In other words, things get lumped together under a "legacy for the City of Culture" that, frankly, might bear a bit more investigation. So much of what is in the figures makes it difficult to work out what is going on.

I want to move off the specific issue of DCAL and look at a reconciliation between the Main Estimates and the spring Supplementary Estimates. A number of figures jump out. Well, actually, they do not really jump out. You have to look at them to see what they mean, because a number here and there does not seem to make that much difference, but it is actually quite large. Why, for example, did we start off in the Minister's Department — DFP — with the Main Estimates proposing capital expenditure of £21 million and end up spending £55 million, an uplift of some £30 million? Presumably that is part of the value-for-money purchasing of properties or some sort of thing. The Minister will have the opportunity to deal with that issue, but one could be forgiven for thinking that you said, "What are we going to do with £30 million? I know: we'll go and buy something". I am not sure that we are getting real value for money on this. This is my opportunity to ask about the reconciliation, and that is one question that I put to you.

Equally, I heard in the Minister's opening speech about the need to give extra funding to the Department of Health in comparison with the Main Estimates. I look at this starting with the easier bit about capital. Capital actually fell from a projected spend of £233 million to £220 million, a loss of £13 million. It seems strange that Health is unable to spend the capital that has been allocated to it, given that we put such a priority on it. I have no detail on this, because I am not in the Department, but, against that, the resource expenditure has increased from £4,660 million to £4,754 million. That is a really significant uplift. Is that part of the baseline figures, is that sustainable and is it part of the money that has been obtained from the Westminster Government as part of the Stormont House talks? Is that sustainable, or are we going to see draconian cuts in our health revenue budgets? There have been reports on this, and I wonder what it will mean for our baseline figures. We obviously have to do something with the reconciliation.

Whilst I am on the subject of figures that are circa £100 million here and £100 million there, as the saying goes, with £100 million here and £100 million there, when you add them up, pretty soon you are talking about real money. They are really significant sums of money. DRD has a capital reduction from £506 million to £401 million: that is draconian. I thought that DCAL had suffered a real shock when it lost £63 million, but it appears that DRD was able to better that.

The real issue is how we provide proper control if we are asked to reconcile those figures. Those are huge capital swings.

It may well be — the Minister will, no doubt, come back and tell me this — that all of this is taken care of in the Departments for which I am not on a scrutinising Committee and by the Committee for Finance and Personnel. Nevertheless, we seem, in this House, to focus on minutiae. The debate put forward about Ashers or the sums of money in that amendment actually pale into insignificance when you look at the amount of money that we are being asked to put aside. We do not, in this House, get into enough detail to really hold the Minister of Finance to account. I am not saying for one minute that he is not doing a good job; he set out in his opening statement how difficult the financial position has been and what he has had to do, but most of it has just passed us by, because it is far too easy to play the politics of optics. We want to go and fight on something that may be on 'The Stephen Nolan Show' or on the news or whatever. This is about reconciling the expenditure that we planned to make, not just one year ago, with where we have actually ended up. Frankly, the swings are really quite exceptional.

When it comes to having a look at this information, I do not know how many times we have had debates in the House, coming from the Committee for Finance and Personnel and from other Members here, saying that we need greater transparency, we need information in a timely fashion and we need to have a system where we can really understand what is going on, because, as the Minister said, the fiscal position is likely to tighten over the coming years, and one of the best predictors that we have about our future performance is how we performed in the past. Minister, on the basis of the information here, if we had had more time, I think that the questions would have been a lot harder. I really hope that you will treat my questions with respect and that you will try to answer them, because it will be to your advantage if we can explain to the electorate of Northern Ireland how we move money about for the betterment of all people.

Mr McCallister: I have been here for a good part of the debate. I listened to Mr Sammy Wilson's points, and it is important to remind Members and to remind the House that, if it were not for the subvention coming from Westminster, we would have real financial problems. The idea from Sinn Féin that somehow austerity is the price of being in the Union makes us all think what real austerity would have been like in the Republic of Ireland and what it has had to endure in the last number of years that we have been largely shielded from, at times when health spending has been protected and when, in UK terms, more money has been given to education, and we have had Barnett consequential out of that. That is a very different position to be in from that faced by our friends in the Republic of Ireland during the last seven or eight years.

Far from it being the price of being in the Union, it was a blessing to be in it and to have that tax base of £60 million, that population and that part in one of the largest economies in the world. I say to colleagues and to the Minister's party that, sometimes when they put pressure on and somehow think that more should be coming from Westminster or that with more money coming we should be spending more and then claiming that we are a low-tax Assembly, that that, somehow, is almost not being in the real world of recognising where the money is coming from.

Some of the points that I would like to raise in the debate are around how the Minister gets that collective response for the Executive and how they get that shared vision. We are effectively voting in money that will keep the wheels of government turning with no real Programme for Government or it being extended. What are our targets? Where are we going with any of this? We have money under the Stormont House Agreement coming for shared education with no great vision as to what exactly that will look like or be. We have a voluntary exit scheme, and the Minister will be aware that, at the last Budget debate, I proposed that the Minister should publish a plan on what he is going to do, and I would still like that. That would include what he is going to do if, in this Budget term, he does not achieve his target or does not draw down that entire £200 million in this period. There are all types of questions around this Budget and the direction and where we are going in collective Government.

I move to some of the other issues raised during the debate. Mr Lyttle talked extensively about almost a black hole in the Department for Regional Development with regard to water charging and how we might move forward. To be fair to the Alliance Party, the reality is that some of these issues, whether water, prescriptions or changes in tuition fees, should be on the table. I said at the last Budget debate that I would have no difficulty in considering issues like that but that I want to know and to have the confidence that this Administration has the ability to spend money wisely and has a coherent direction and purpose to use any additional money from taxes or charges on the ratepayers. There is one difficult decision that the Alliance Party has put off, and that is the decision on when to leave this Executive. It needs to face up to that, and only it can decide that for itself. I suspect that the Minister would happily help it to come to that decision, and others are in the same position.

I listened to Alex Attwood talk about the model of councils and the difficulty and pressures that that is putting on development. He explained why he disagrees with the model and why we should have gone for 15. Was he not the Minister when some of the legislation was starting to be brought in? Was it not his successor and party colleague who completed that task? Where is that collective responsibility? Until we get to some sort of united vision from this Executive, we will struggle to do any of the reforms that the Minister has talked about to make local government mean something and function. Two or three parties in the Executive are against this reform and that reform, and three parties are against the Budget. All of those things keep on repeating and making this place look like a dysfunctional Executive and Assembly.

That is the core of our problem. It is why this Minister will struggle to deliver. I believe the Minister and that he is genuine and sincere when he says that he wants to see public sector reform. Sometimes, I take issue with him in that he is maybe only doing it because of pressure from the UK Government, but, setting that aside, I think that he is sincere in wanting to change the way that public services are delivered. He will struggle, because every time that any Minister goes to do something, there is a sectoral interest or a party interest that gets in the way. Whether it is the St Mary's and Stranmillis debate, the building of the A5 or whatever it happens to be, there is not a collective will from this Executive to deliver on anything.

That is where the struggle is and where he comes into difficulty. That is where the First Minister is right when he says that this is dysfunctional. That is why you have the Alliance criticising but putting off its difficult decision to leave the Executive. It is why the SDLP criticises and stays in the Executive. It is why the UUP criticises and stays in the Executive. Until they all decide that we have had enough of this or that we can have an alternative vision, we will struggle on with that.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Member for giving way. I am listening respectfully to his contribution. In seven minutes of criticising everybody else, I think that I have yet to hear a single, solitary contribution on how he would do any of this differently. Will he use the next three minutes to make any such proposals?

Mr McCallister: I am happy to. I think that, on more than one occasion, he has heard me talking about this. I have said that you need to get to a collective Cabinet Government. You need a Cabinet and an Executive that actually stand for something and which have purpose, direction and meaning. Mr Lyttle is putting out suggestions. I have already accepted that I would agree with some of them, if the Executive could prove that they could use money wisely; but he is part of the problem as long as he sits in that Executive. He sits in it and votes against the Budget. You cannot do that. In trying to normalise democracy, you cannot take those two positions. You cannot ride two horses at once without getting a bad injury.

5.00 pm

On Mr Allister's amendment in relation to the Equality Commission, I would probably prefer to see us moving more like our colleagues across the water and have equality and human rights commissions merged into one entity. I know that junior Minister Bell may be bringing forward legislation about the good relations part of the Community Relations Council (CRC) moving into the Equality Commission. Although I disagree with the Equality Commission's decision on the Ashers bakery case, we start to move and change things like this at our peril or by acting on a whim. I remind Members that at times we have agreed. Others have agreed with the Equality Commission, perhaps on the wearing of the poppy, and certainly over the naming of the Raymond McCreesh park in Newry. The Equality Commission challenged that and forced the council to run a public consultation and vote on it again.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

Those are the challenges that face the Minister and the Executive. No matter how well-intentioned, the challenge is to get a coherent purpose and direction to the Executive while it continues in being for the next 14 or 15 months.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Will the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Allister: A number of things have struck me about the debate, but it was certainly a reminder that the Alliance Party does not do irony, because Ms Lo told us that the amendment was an abuse of power. If Ms Lo is looking for an abuse of power, I suggest that she looks at the most capricious, malevolent action taken by the Equality Commission against Ashers bakery. There, she will certainly find an abuse of power.

Then Mr McKay told us that the amendment was juvenile. There is nothing juvenile about speaking up against, and voting against, suppression of freedom of conscience.

Speaking of juvenile, what do I say of the contribution by Mr Gregory Campbell? I suggested in my intervention that his strange stance showed that he was smarting about something. The Member has a bit of conscience in there too. We had an outburst from him, largely, I think, against me personally. Indeed, he kept digging, to the point where he got down to the level of suggesting that he seemed to have an issue with me earning a living to raise my family. I cannot really help him on that, but I can say this: to talk about there being no point in doing it and how I always knew that there would be a petition of concern — [Interruption.] I thought the part-time Member had himself run away, but he has returned. [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order.

Mr Allister: I wonder has he told Mr Givan — [Interruption.] — that there is really no point in his conscience clause because there might be a petition of concern. If something is right and worth doing, you do it.

Mr Campbell: What about last year?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order, Members.

Mr Allister: Of course, he tells us that this is not the time and not the place. What a short memory he has. He was one of those on the DUP Benches who, back in the early days of the Assembly, in budgetary matters, tabled an amendment to reduce the funding to the North/South bodies, knowing that section 64 meant that it could not succeed and had to have cross-community support — but it was the right thing to do.

It was tabled, and he voted for it, as did Mr Wilson. I think Mr Campbell's problem is this: who proposed this move and who thought about it? I think that if it had come from a different source, he might have had a different attitude. [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order. I remind Members that all remarks should be made through the Chair. Mr Allister, continue.

Mr Allister: Then we had Mr Wilson, who, before the debate started, was able to indicate outside the House that he would vote for the amendment. That seems to have been before the thought police of his Benches got to him. He ended up making a cop-out speech, again about the petition of concern and all that business. He then told us, "But we have already done the job. We have reduced the Equality Commission's budget". Good, but is the Minister going to tell the House that he reduced the budget because of Ashers? Of course not. It was part of a generic reduction across a number of bodies.

Mr Campbell: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: I will give way when I have finished.

It was part of a generic reduction amongst a number of bodies. The truth is this: even with the reduction, it patently still has too much money, otherwise it would not be persecuting Ashers. I just do not understand the paper soldiers who are prepared to go round the country, quite properly, campaigning for a conscience clause but who are not prepared to walk through the Lobbies to attack the same Equality Commission.

Mr Campbell: I thank the Member for giving way. He alludes now, quite properly, to the reduction in the budget to various Departments, including the one that he intimated. Why did he not intimate that reduction in the press release at the weekend? Why was that accurate information about the reduction that the Minister already negotiated and agreed on not referred to in his original press release on Friday?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Allister: I am grateful.

With all due respect, I will not be taking advice on press releases from Mr Campbell. [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order.

Mr Allister: I think that his mention of the press release and that it made the front page of the 'News Letter' reveals what Mr Campbell's problem is. That is why he is smarting. The reason is that someone would dare to think of something that he belatedly wishes he had thought of and had taken action on. Now, with a churlish attitude to the matter, he will help Sinn Féin to ensure that this tangible effort against the Equality Commission fails.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Would the Member draw his remarks to a close?

Mr Allister: Well done, Sinn Féin. Well done, DUP.

Mr Lyttle: Will the Member give way?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order. The Member's time is up.

Mr Hamilton: I thank all Members, and I mean that, for their contributions to the debate, particularly those who spoke on behalf of their Committee. As Mr Wilson said, I am not sure that everybody adhered to the strictures of the debate. I am not sure whether I will in my response either, I have to say. I will, though, attempt to respond as fully as possible to as many of the relevant issues as possible in the time that is allocated to me for my winding-up speech.

At this stage, I acknowledge the confirmation by the Chair of the Committee for Finance and Personnel, Mr McKay, that there has been appropriate consultation with the Committee on the spending plans that are reflected in these motions and that it is content that the Budget Bill, which I plan to introduce immediately after this debate, may proceed by accelerated passage. I thank him and the Committee for all the work that they have done to scrutinise the progress of the Budget to date. I very much appreciate that assistance.

I will turn now, if I can, to issues that were raised. First of all, because it is fresh, I will address, if I can, the amendment that is tabled in the name of Mr Allister. I will begin by reiterating comments that Mr Campbell and, indeed, Mr Wilson made when they addressed Mr Allister's amendment. Those comments supported the general criticism that Mr Allister levelled in his remarks, whether they were made in the Chamber or, indeed, in press statements about the Equality Commission.

He will find no dispute from me or indeed any colleagues on this side of the House about the criticisms that he levels at the Equality Commission in respect of its size, the troubling community imbalance in its own employment or, indeed, the Ashers case. In fact, he will find common accord with many Members on this side of the House, elsewhere in the Chamber and outside in respect of those comments. It is interesting, though, as Mr Campbell said, that whilst many of those issues, particularly the size of the Equality Commission and its long-standing community employment imbalance, which Mr Campbell has highlighted continuously in the House down through the years, were the subject of Mr Allister's criticisms, they were never subject to the tactic that he deployed today, which is a tactic that he could have deployed in any previous debate.

In short, Mr Allister's amendment is the wrong amount, the wrong way at the wrong time. I will explain why. Mr Allister prides himself on his attention to detail. However, on this occasion, he is badly wrong. He proposes to reduce the budget of the Equality Commission — I will get to why he actually is not reducing the budget of the Equality Commission — by £250,000 and not by the £500,000 that he suggested in the aforementioned press statement.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Hamilton: I will give way, yes.

Mr Allister: The Member should know that I tabled two amendments. The first was to the Supplementary Estimates at £500,000, which the Speaker, in his wisdom, saw fit not to accept; and the other amendment, which the Speaker saw fit to accept. It is no fault of mine that both amendments are not before the House.

Mr Hamilton: Let me read from the statement that you issued to the press and which was covered by the press. You said that you had:

"tabled a proposal to remove £500,000".

That is not what you are doing today and not what you are able to achieve. The Member is not reducing the budget by £500,000; the Member has got his sums wrong. What he proposes is the wrong way of doing it. I have received legal advice that questions the ability of the Assembly to accept the amendment as it is potentially in breach of section 63 of the 1998 Act. I intend to take that issue up with the Speaker as I do not think that it should happen again. Regardless of that, had the amendment been competent, it would not have reduced the Equality Commission's budget.

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Is it in order to suggest that an amendment is not competent when it has been ruled competent by the Speaker? Is it possible to do that without challenging the authority of the Speaker?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I thank the Member for raising that point. His views have been recorded for the benefit of Hansard.

Mr Hamilton: I am quite happy to stand over the remarks that I made. I have great difficulty in taking lectures on questioning the Chair from Mr Allister. There are many things that I can be lectured on, but one of the lectures that I will not take in the House is being admonished by Mr Allister for questioning the Chair. How many times has he been silenced in the House?

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Can I encourage the Minister to come back to the debate in question?

Mr Hamilton: You can, Deputy Speaker.

Let us reiterate the point: had the amendment been competent, in my view, it could not have reduced the Equality Commission's budget anyway, which was Mr Allister's intention. The Vote on Account is a small document; it is not as bad as the Estimates in terms of its volume. It has one spending line for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister. The Member's amendment seeks to reduce its allocation to the Equality Commission; however, there are no specific allocations for OFMDFM, just as there are no specific allocations for any Department. The Vote on Account provides, in effect, a cash float for Departments to get through the early part of the financial year. It is about 45% of the spending that they will be permitted, but it does not have a specific Equality Commission line and so it would reduce the overall OFMDFM budget by £250,000. It does not specifically reduce the Budget —

5.15 pm

Mr Allister: Very good.

Mr Hamilton: The Member is saying, "good". He knows fine well that a substantial amount of the funding of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister goes to victims and survivors' services. That sort of reduction could have affected negatively also victims and survivors' services. He is sitting there shouting "good" from a sedentary position about a Budget cut to a Department that funds victims and survivors' services. That is well noted.

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: No, I am not going to give way. What the Member is doing, through the amendment that he has put forward, because of the £250,000 that would be taken off, is affecting our ability to draw down from the Consolidated Fund, which is, in effect, the bank account that we have that the block grant goes into. He would deprive the whole Executive of £250,000 as well. The Member is basically wanting to send £250,000 back to the Treasury, so he wants to deprive the people of Northern Ireland of money that they are owed.

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: I will give way.

Mr Allister: Would the Minister say the same, then, of when his party tried to do exactly the same, some years ago, in the days when it opposed the apparatus of the Belfast Agreement?

Mr Hamilton: That was long before my time, of course.

Mr Campbell: It was when he was away. He had walked away.

Mr Hamilton: Yes, that is right; he was still in the wilderness at that stage. He was on his hiatus.

Mr Allister: You were in a different party.

Mr Hamilton: Not at that stage; I was not in a different party. The Member was on his hiatus at that point in time. My understanding is that the attempt to reduce the Budget at that time was ruled out of order by the Speaker or the amendment was not taken.

Mr Allister: It was voted on.

Mr Hamilton: I am happy to go and look back at it.

The Member has also brought forward his amendment at the wrong time. That was a point made by Mr Campbell and Mr Wilson. If the Member had wished to do what he wanted to do — I am sure that there is a degree of sympathy, at least in terms of the intention of what he wishes to do — the time to have done it would have been a fortnight ago, when the Assembly was debating the Budget for next year. The 2015-16 Budget was before the House and amendments were put forward, for example, by the Ulster Unionist Party. I criticised those and voted against them, but at least an attempt was made to adjust the Budget in a particular way that that party wanted. I disagreed with that attempt, and the House disagreed with it, but at least an attempt was made by the Ulster Unionist Party, at the appropriate time, to adjust the Budget to withdraw expenditure, in that case, from the social investment fund and move it to a range of other areas, the likes of the Department for Regional Development and the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure. At least it specified, in its amendment, which failed, and which I disagreed with, where the money was coming from and going to. Had that been passed, it would have adjusted the Budget for next year. It would have been successful, and would have achieved that party's aim. Mr Allister, of course, did not take the opportunity at that time, which would have been the right time to do it. Instead, what did he actually do a fortnight ago? He voted against that Budget.

Mr Allister: I voted against the squander.

Mr Hamilton: He voted against a Budget —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order, Members. This is meant to be a debate; it is not a conversation. Could all remarks be made through the Chair, please?

Mr Hamilton: Whatever the Member thought he was voting against, he also actually voted against a 7% reduction in the budget of the Equality Commission. The 2015-16 Budget — significantly, agreed by the Executive, Sinn Féin, the DUP and subsequently agreed by this House — includes a 7% reduction, from the £427,000 in the expenditure for the Equality Commission. That is what the outworkings of that Budget are for the Equality Commission. So, Jim — Mr Allister — voted against a £427,000 reduction in the budget for the Equality Commission. He now comes forward and tries to reduce it by £250,000, after having voted to keep its budget increased by £427,000. Some of us are a bit confused as to why he would now wish to reduce its budget by only £250,000, when an opportunity was presented to him a fortnight ago to reduce it by £427,000.

I would have thought that, given his rallying cry against the Equality Commission in his contribution at the beginning of the debate, he would have been more than happy to vote for a reduction of £427,000 to its budget, but he voted against it. If the Member wanted, as he said in his opening remarks, to rebuke the Equality Commission, there was ample opportunity to do so by voting for a reduction of 7% or £427,000 in its budget a fortnight ago. Instead, Mr Allister trooped through the Lobby to keep the Equality Commission's budget in place. He wanted to keep that money there instead of voting against it.

Everybody knows that Mr Allister's amendment today is a stunt that was doomed to fail. There was always going to be a petition of concern against it. He does not care about that, of course. That does not bother him. He just wants to sit there beating his chest and styling himself as the man who tried to reduce the Equality Commission's budget, when he had not a chance of doing so.

Mr Allister: You are the man who will not support it.

Mr Hamilton: Let me tell you what I am, Mr Allister, and what everybody on these Benches is: we are the people who have reduced the budget of the Equality Commission by £427,000. You are the man who sits there unable to do anything because your stunt has been exposed for what it is. There is a petition of concern, and you are unable, Mr Allister, to reduce the budget of the Equality Commission by a penny. Yet we have reduced it in the only way that we can —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I ask the Minister to make his remarks through the Chair, please

Mr Hamilton: — through the proper Budget process and by getting agreement with Sinn Féin. We have reduced its budget by £427,000.

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Minister for giving way. Notwithstanding the possibility that I might agree with some of his earlier criticisms of the Equality Commission, will he add some common sense to his exchange with Mr Allister by acknowledging the work that the Equality Commission does in the areas of fair employment and disability-related discrimination in this community, rather than just fighting with him over who can reduce its budget by the most?

Mr Hamilton: I do not discount all the work done by the Equality Commission as meaningless. I agree with the concerns expressed by Mr Campbell, Mr Wilson and, indeed, Mr Allister about its size, the community imbalance in its workforce and, particularly, its recent overreach in the Ashers' case. If Mr Allister's intention, however — I draw this point to a close — was to offer a rebuke by reducing the budget of the Equality Commission, he would have done better to come through the Lobby with Members on this side of the House a fortnight ago and vote for the only proposition that was able to do so. Mr Allister is completely unable to achieve his aim and was always going to be unable to do so. He has failed in his objective, and he should have voted with those of us who reduced the Equality Commission's budget by £427,000. Mr Allister has been unable to reduce the budget of the Equality Commission by a penny.

I move on to comments made by the Chairs of Committees. On behalf of the Justice Committee, Alastair Ross raised concerns about the ongoing legal aid pressure faced by the Department of Justice. I understand that next year's pressure is over £20 million, and I agree with the Minister that there is a need for further reform. The Minister of Justice has put forward a range of proposals and written to Executive colleagues. He knows that he has my support and that of some colleagues, and I hope that the Executive will be able to agree the reforms in the weeks ahead. Whilst I think that the House would agree that the policing budget is the most significant front-line pressure facing the Department — it received an uplift of £20 million specifically to address policing pressures — legal aid is a pressure nonetheless. I support the Minister in putting forward those reforms.

Dominic Bradley laboured local government reform during his comments and reiterated his point that the transfer of functions should be rates-neutral. I have left it for each Minister to decide the amount to transfer to local government. There are individual issues in different parts of the country. There are issues in the north-west with Derry and Strabane council, and I am meeting members of that council tomorrow. I understand that reductions have now been communicated to local government in respect of the rate support grant, and it is entirely a matter for the Minister of the Environment what he wants to do with the grant.

The fundamental point that I would make to Mr Bradley if he were here — I hope that he picks up the point via Hansard — is this: he seemed to be arguing to the House that local government should be a protected species at a time when the public sector faces significant spending pressures. The Minister of the Environment's budget is being cut by over 10%; my Department's budget is being cut by 10%; the Minister for Social Development's budget is being cut by close to 10%; DCAL's budget is being cut by around 8%; and there are many more. At a time when those Departments face those pressures, his argument that local government should somehow be exempt from any spending reductions at all is simply not something that I agree with. Worryingly, the SDLP seems to want to give local government every penny it asks for. The Executive have been exceptionally generous to local government during the reform process. It has been a challenging and difficult time for local government, but the Executive have set aside close to £15 million to ease reform for local government. Stormont coffers have supported local government in that reform even though the benefits of the savings in the longer term will accrue not to Stormont but to local government. We have been incredibly generous to councils, which will benefit from the savings in the longer term.

Finally in respect of Mr Bradley's comments, it is the age-old comment that I feel that I have to make to the SDLP in the House. They ask for more money for this, that and the other but never come forward with a single proposition as to where that money should come from. At least others come forward with ideas, which, in many cases, I do not agree with, but they do come forward with a way to make the sums add up. The SDLP just seems to want more money for everything, whatever anybody asks for, and offers no way at all for that to be paid for.

Judith Cochrane from the Alliance Party talked about how reform in Northern Ireland was not radical. She was critical of the lack of reform in education and health. In many ways, what we have before us is the most ambitious and challenging set of reforms that we have had in the history of Northern Ireland. I do not want to labour too many of them, but look at the likes of the proposed reduction in corporation tax and the impact that that will have on and the reform that it will bring to the economy; the workforce restructuring that we are undergoing and our ambitious plans to reduce the size of the public sector and our dependency on it; and government reorganisation, such as a reduction from 12 Departments to nine, particularly creating a Department of the economy. For not just this place, where it is sometimes hard to agree radical reforms, but for any Administration, we have a set of —

Mr Lyttle: I thank the Minister for giving way. I take his point about reform. Will he support the proposed reforms by the Minister for Employment and Learning to teacher training? If not, why not?

Mr Hamilton: I accept that there are issues about teacher training and how it is done in Northern Ireland. It is an area of third-level education in which we produce many more graduates in a specialised field than we require as a Government. Our education system does not need that many, so there is certainly work to be done in that regard in reducing costs. That work needs to be done and reform is required, but I do not agree with the very blunt tool that the Minister seeks to use or the way in which he wishes to achieve it. I think that that is broadly the view around the House and outside. I am happy to work with the Minister for Employment and Learning on the issue, as I am in respect of the future funding of third-level education in Northern Ireland. I want to engage with the Minister on that in the longer term. However, you do not achieve the aims of properly reforming teacher training in Northern Ireland by using a blunt tool that, in effect, will put both colleges out of business in short order.

In closing that point, I think we have a set of radical reforms that we are taking forward. If you look at them collectively, you will see that they are ambitious and, indeed, challenging reforms that will transform positively our economy and our government into the future.

5.30 pm

Mr Ó Muilleoir, who has arrived back in the Chamber, talked about the possible impact on our economy and on the confidence in our economy and how, if cuts happen in public spending, they might impact on an economic recovery. Our economic recovery is still in its tentative, early stages. We have had over a year of growth in the economy. The unemployment claimant count has reduced for two years in a row and there are lots of positive signs in the economy, but I do not think anybody will be cheering just yet that it is embedded and secure. It is, in some parts, vulnerable. I appreciate fully that — particularly in an economy like ours, which is so dependent on public spending — when public spending is reduced or certain Departments see significant reductions, even if the total figure is not being reduced by that much, it can have an impact on confidence. That is why it is important that we set the right tone in everything that we say in this place or, indeed, outside this place. We need to be honest with people. We need to say to people very clearly that we have tough times now, next year and, indeed, in the years ahead but we are doing our best to ensure that the allocations that we make — I think that this is reflected in the 2015-16 Budget — will support and protect key public services like health and education and that, by investing in the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and significantly boosting the allocation to Employment and Learning, we are trying to underpin that economic growth. Even though there is less spending in some areas, the key areas that are there to drive our economy forward, to get people into work and to get investment flowing are being supported and protected by the Executive.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: Yes, very briefly.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Minister comment on the Ulster Bank survey that has just come out, which shows that there is pressure on a number of our industrial sectors, including manufacturing, construction and retail; that it is only in the service sector that are we showing any real growth; and that therefore we have to find ways to encourage the broad-based recovery of our economy?

Mr Hamilton: The Ulster Bank PMI is one of the indicators that had been viewed as a sign of how bad our economy was during the crisis, but about 18 months ago it started to move in the right direction. We have had about 18 months of good PMIs coming from the Ulster Bank survey. The last couple have shown some more worrying and troubling indications. It is interesting that the comments from the chief economist at the Ulster Bank are that this is more of a blip and the increase in activity across a range of sectors, indeed all sectors, had been so markedly upward that it was bound to go down a little bit at some stage. Clearly, if that develops in the wrong direction over a longer period, there will be more cause for concern. In some ways I am not surprised — maybe a little surprised that manufacturing has not done well this month or last month. As we know, construction and retail have been struggling throughout the crisis and still lag behind. Construction does so for obvious reasons around the property market and the availability of cheap or available finance. Retail has been affected both by the downturn and by changes in retail habits that, I think, are now probably having a bigger impact on retail than the crisis. It is certainly something worth monitoring, although I take some solace from the fact that Ulster Bank says that it does not see it as the beginning of a spiral downwards or anything like that.

In his capacity of Chair of the Culture Committee, Nelson McCausland talked about the reduced requirement in respect of regional stadia. Mr McCrea mentioned that as well. I will try my best to come to the specific points that he made. It is disappointing that that money was not able to be spent in-year. I have given the Minister an assurance that, should it be needed for the regional stadia programme, her Department will have the first call on capital in future monitoring rounds. Mr McCausland also mentioned the Ulster Orchestra. I am very, very pleased that we were able to make an allocation of £500,000 to the orchestra in the January monitoring round. That is reflected in the Estimates that are before us today. I appreciate and understand that, its immediate future having been secured, further work has to be done on securing the Ulster Orchestra's longer-term future. Work is ongoing between my Department's officials and, primarily, DCAL officials to do that.

Mr Fearghal McKinney talked, as he tends to do in these debates, rightly so, in respect of health spending.

It is spending close to half of our Budget, after all, and perhaps should be talked about a little bit more in these debates. Mr McKinney, not unusually, was not speaking glowingly about what the NHS in Northern Ireland is doing. In fact, he said that some £80 million that was additionally allocated to the Health Department in-year was not spent well.

I am not sure that I would share the conclusion that money spent on the NHS in Northern Ireland is not spent well. When I look at indicators suggesting that Northern Ireland has the best breast cancer survival rate in the whole of the UK, I come to the conclusion that that is money well spent. When I look at the respective reductions of 40% and 18% in MRSA and clostridium difficile infections, I think that that is money well spent. When I see the fall in the standardised death rate as a result of heart attacks down from 79 to 61 per 1,000, I think that that is money well spent. When I see the standardised death rate for people under the age of 75 suffering strokes falling from 14.4% to 12.6%, I think that that is money well spent. When I see employment of doctors up 20% and nurses up 4%, I tend to think that that is money well spent.

I would be the first person to say that not everything is perfect with our NHS in Northern Ireland. It is one of those areas that needs reform and change, but we should not come into this place and we certainly should not go on the airwaves and talk about money not being well spent on the NHS when we all have an understanding, either personally through our families, or our constituents, that there is money being well spent in the NHS in Northern Ireland. Does it get everything right? No, it does not, but it gets a lot right, and it is money well spent. The people who are working in our NHS are making a real difference in people's lives every single day in this country.

Michelle McIlveen, in her capacity as Chair of the Education Committee, raised several queries. The particular one that I can address is around pension revaluation. She is right that the revaluation in the education pension, and indeed other public service pensions, will last for four years. The first year cost in 2015-16 will be covered out of a centralised allocation that was covered in the Budget. She asked a question about future years. It is a matter for the Executive in the context of future Budgets as to how we want to deal with that. The decision will definitely be needed in the next Budget process, which will come post-CSR.

Chris Hazzard mentioned the fact that some 65% of our Budget was being spent on health and education. There are some people, and there may even be some in this place, who want to criticise just two Departments getting two thirds of the entire Budget, but I am not one of those people. It is right and proper that those two key public services, which people in Northern Ireland want their politicians to support, are being supported and are getting the lion's share of public spending in Northern Ireland at some 65%.

Mr Hazzard started well, and then it all went downhill from there. He talked about how austerity is the price of the Union. However, as Mr Wilson and Mr McCallister pointed out, when one looks at the complete collapse in the Southern economy since 2008-09 onwards — thankfully, it is recovering; we need it to recover because, as one of our biggest export markets, we need it to be doing well, and we are glad that it is — the experience over the last five years in the Irish Republic showed us that, while Sinn Féin may wish to argue that austerity is the price of the Union, economic and social collapse in Northern Ireland would be the price of a united Ireland.

While there are people who will argue that there should be more here and more there and that it is not enough overall, Sammy Wilson is absolutely right to point out that what we are able to allocate through these Estimates today as an Executive is greatly inflated because we are part of the United Kingdom. The fiscal transfer that we receive from the rest of the UK allows us to spend £9.6 billion annually more than we raise in tax revenue ourselves. The nature of any state like that is that you have to take the rough with the smooth, and there is undoubtedly some rough to take. However, £9.6 billion of an annual subvention is not a bad deal for the people of Northern Ireland.

Seán Rogers, who has persevered and stayed with us through most of this afternoon, spoke at length about economic development and the link between economic development and education. He is absolutely right: we need a good, strong education system not just at primary and secondary level but, obviously, at third level as well if we are to ensure that our economy continues to grow.

He also called for more investment in education. It is a pity that Mr Rogers's plea for more investment in education did not make its way to his party's Minister, Mr Durkan, who, in the Executive, of course, voted against an allocation of an extra £63 million for education. Perhaps Mr Rogers, instead of coming in here and making good speeches in this Chamber, would do well to convince his party colleague Mr Durkan of the need to support additional allocations for the Department of Education in the Budget.

Mr McGlone, in his capacity as Chair of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, raised many issues, obviously around the DETI budget. I want to point out to the House and to Mr McGlone that the Executive have shown their support for DETI, economic development, job creation and investment in our economy through increasing DETI's budget by 10.4% next year. That is to ensure that the good work in creating and promoting new jobs and attracting investment into Northern Ireland can continue.

At a time when our overall Budget is being reduced by 1.6% in real terms, the fact that we ensured that the DETI budget is up by over 10%, when there were competing concerns such as health, education and other public services looking for more money, shows our commitment to ensuring that that excellent track record continues.

The Estimates before us include a pertinent in-year example of that support. DETI's budget was protected from reductions. In fact, it was slightly increased in-year, again to ensure that Invest Northern Ireland and Arlene Foster are able to go around the world and attract those jobs to Northern Ireland. In fact, she was in Mr Bell's and my constituency just last week, announcing an investment in an agrifoods business to create 55 jobs, so it is not just foreign direct investment. Indigenous firms are growing as well, and that budget increase will help that to continue.

Mr McGlone asked about the industrial guarantee. There are no blank cheques, but I want that support to continue. No worthwhile proposal to create investment or jobs in Northern Ireland will be lost.

Most of Mr Lyttle's comments were about Northern Ireland Water. I am happy to take it up with him at a later stage, but he talked about, I think, projected capital investment in Northern Ireland Water and how it falls short in the run-up to 2021. There is no Budget in place up until 2021, so anything that is there is indicative or whatever it might be. In fact, there is nothing beyond 2016. The last Budget we have is for 2015-16. The CSR will dictate spend probably not even up to 2021.

Over the last four years, £660 million has been invested in our fresh and waste water infrastructure. I am sure we would all like to see that much higher, but the 2011-15 Budget was significant at its outset in hitting the capital budget. We have the flip side of that now, where our resource budget is under pressure. In fact, all projections would suggest that our capital position will improve.

I cannot guarantee that any of that, above and beyond what might be expected, will go to Northern Ireland Water, but in a situation where a marked improvement is projected by the Office for Budget Responsibility in capital investment, we would expect to see a significant volume of that investment go towards Northern Ireland Water.

I thank Mr Lyttle and welcome the fact that, once again, the Alliance Party is making it perfectly clear that it is in support of the introduction of water charges just as it is in support of significant increases in people's rates bills and doing away with free fares for pensioners. I thank the Member for once again putting on public record his party's support for higher water charges, higher rates and doing away with concessionary fares for pensioners.

I regret that Alex Attwood is not here, because he raised several points, and I wanted to respond to him directly. He is right: an amendment in the name of the SDLP was tabled but not accepted. The aforementioned section 63 means that a Budget cannot be amended without my approval. That works on the basis of the principle that only the Executive can ask the Assembly for more money.

5.45 pm

I am not unsympathetic to the thrust of the amendment that was being put forward. Indeed, Mr Attwood did me the courtesy of phoning me last week to talk to me about it. As I said to him when we spoke, which I will put on the record now, it is not that I am unsympathetic to the point that he is making. I will come to how it might be resolved by different means. Section 63 is there, particularly in respect of Assembly Members approving increases in the Budget, for very good safeguarding reasons. Although, Mr Allister's amendment was at least trying to reduce the Budget, Mr Attwood's amendment was trying to increase the Budget. Whether for good causes or not, we cannot have Members coming to the House and proposing increases in expenditure and Budget lines that the Executive cannot afford to meet. That is why that piece of legislation is there.

As I said, I am not unsympathetic to the point he was making around the teacher training colleges, Stranmillis and St Mary's. The First Minister and deputy First Minister have called that issue into the Executive, and I hope that that will deal with the substance of it. If additional funding is required as a result of whatever resolution the Executive agree in respect of all of this matter, that will be dealt with in the in-year monitoring round process.

The Member seemed to have a particular concern around purdah kicking in. I have to say that, over recent elections, I have not seen any Minister respect purdah; perhaps this election will be slightly different. However, I have received no advice that purdah will be an issue in dealing with this matter. If it is dealt with by the Executive in the next number of days, purdah will not be an issue to concern us.

He asked a few questions of me, and I want to address a couple of those. One was around heritage-led development and how I could reconcile the Vote on Account with my support for heritage-led development. The first point is that the Vote on Account does not have a particular line for heritage-led development. That is a point that was misunderstood throughout today's debate, but there is nothing new there in respect of Estimates and Vote on Account debates. Any allocation for heritage-led development is a matter for the Minister of the Environment to take forward. What I can say, to back up my support for heritage-led development, is that I have supported it through the capital reallocation exercise. That is reflected in this Budget to the tune of several million pounds. I think that there is an allocation of £3 million to heritage-led development in this financial year. The 2015-16 Budget also includes an allocation of £0.5 million of financial transactions capital for heritage-led development.

I am happy to check Hansard to correct what I am saying, but Mr Attwood made the point that rates support promised by the Executive to local government is under threat. I want to put on record that that is not the case. The only rates support that the Executive have promised to local government is being delivered. That is the £30 million rates convergence scheme that is there to iron out issues with rates and spikes in rates that there might be as a result of two or three councils with different rate levels coming together; that is proceeding.

I turn to Mr Basil McCrea's comments. I want to make a general point at the end, but I will try to deal with a few of the specifics. He asked quite a few questions. He is a member of the Committee for Culture, Arts and Leisure, as he pointed out, and he asked a lot of detailed questions about expenditure, where it went, where it did not go, what this is for, and what that was for. As much as, in some moments, I might like to do the job of everybody in the Executive, at the risk of becoming a megalomaniac, I am not going to do that. Those are questions better directed to the Culture, Arts and Leisure Minister, particularly those around the City of Culture legacy. I agree with him that that is something that we should have been supporting. It was not sufficient, in my view or the Executive's view, that we invest all of that money in securing the bid and developing the infrastructure and then just let it wither on the vine without further nurturing it over future years. However, where expenditure should go specifically is not information that I am necessarily privy to. That is a matter for DCAL.

The DFP capital increase is as the Member predicted. As part of our asset management strategy, over £20 million additional was allocated to DFP in-year to purchase what was previously leased property. It probably seemed a bit odd to some at the start. I took some persuasion from Executive colleagues to do this and that it was wise investment of capital money, which we had a little bit of, to purchase leased property so that, in future years, we would save money by not having to pay rent. We do this with PFIs as well. That has been moving forward, and we are in the process of purchasing several buildings before the year end that will realise significant savings and resource expenditure in future years.

He mentioned Health and its baseline next year.

Health is one of the Departments that is, I suppose, a winner in next year's Budget. It is up some £204 million on its 2014-15 baseline. The significant reduction that he pointed to in the DRD budget — I accept that he is right in saying that it is a significantly reduced requirement — flows primarily from the A5 and the inability to move that forward. We were able to reallocate that in year through the formal process, but the decisions about where that money would go were made in October 2013.

I accept that there are issues around the process, which is something that Mr Cree and I talk about regularly in this place. However, the general points in Mr McCrea's comments that I want to deal with are that he seemed to highlight and ask questions about the fact that we do not have the right process. It is out of date, and it needs to be changed. I hope that the reorganisation of Departments will necessitate some change in how we do our financial process. I also hope that that will be an opportunity to change and improve and to do what we have been trying to for the last number of years.

The general point is that Departments will always spend a bit less than you expected them to, even with the best of budget management. We have far better budget management now than we had in the past. Some will, therefore, get to spend a little bit more because some will spend a little bit less. That is all outlined in our monitoring rounds. In advance of the reform of our Budget process, I direct the Member to our monitoring rounds and particularly to the tables that are produced behind those monitoring rounds so that he can see where money is flowing from and going to. All that is explained there.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Hamilton: Yes.

Mr B McCrea: I take his point about it being for the Committee to scrutinise and ask specific questions. However, the City of Culture legacy capital bid of £2.8 million, which in DCAL's spend was quite significant, was nearly going through on the nod. It was just brought through as, "Yes, we have allocated some money here. It is capital, and a good thing for the City of Culture legacy". Only when you drilled down were you able to find out that it was for the purchase of minibuses and various other things. It was a catch-all, and I implore the Minister — he referred to Mr Cree in this matter — to recognise that it is quite difficult to be of help to him if we do not get information in full detail and on time. It is a Committee's role to scrutinise — he cannot be expected to do it all — but we can do that only if we get the information in a timely manner. That has not been happening to date.

Mr Hamilton: I know that the timeliness of the information that Departments provide to their Committees is of concern right across the House. It is something that I have no particular sway over. I encourage all Ministers, including myself, I suppose, to ensure that we provide timely information to our Committees to let them do their job. However, it is very much up to Committees to push their Ministers and Departments to get the information to them in a timely fashion so that they can do the job that we have tasked them to do.

The Member's broader points are best seen through the monitoring round process, which is what is regularised in the Estimates that are before us today. When he talked about getting more detailed information, if we were to put in every single line of expenditure, compared with this document, which shows quite a high level of detail, I shudder to think how many rooms the size of this place we would need. Perhaps he does not want us to go to that extreme.

In a very interesting contribution, Mr John McCallister made some points that I can do nothing other than agree with. In fact, based on some of his comments, I know that the Member has been listening to me. As we move forward, particularly as we are on the cusp of or are in the middle of very challenging times, we need more political consensus in this place on Northern Ireland's economic and social direction. There are many things in the House that we will disagree about, particularly on constitutional issues, but we agree on many economic and social policies, and the Programme for Government is a very good basis on which we can build.

We are facing a period of very challenging, ambitious reform that will change positively Northern Ireland for the good. Difficult decisions and tough choices will be required along the way, and that is going to require those of us who want to put our shoulder to the wheel to do so. Many in the House do not wish to put their shoulder to the wheel and make their contribution. That means that those of us who want to make a positive contribution must do so to reach a consensus. I believe that the Stormont House Agreement gives us a good kick-start and a good beginning for the organisation of government and the creation of an opposition.

In conclusion, as has been evident during the debate today, this has been a difficult and challenging year for our public finances. However, I am pleased that the Executive and Assembly have again delivered for the people of Northern Ireland. We have negotiated an excellent package of measures with our own Government to ensure sustained investment here: we have secured funding to restructure the public-sector workforce to deliver much needed reform of our public sector; additional funding has been made available to invest in shared schools infrastructure; we have taken steps to agree a way forward on welfare reform; only last month, I announced the Executive's 2015-16 Budget; we have also secured Her Majesty's Government's commitment to the devolution of corporation tax, which gives us control over that important fiscal lever to boost inward investment and to support economic growth.

Whilst there have been many positive developments during the year, no one should be in any doubt that the public expenditure environment is expected to remain challenging until the end of the decade. However, with progress on many fronts this year, I believe that we are now in a much better position to deal with difficult public expenditure decisions in the future.

To draw my remarks to a conclusion, Mr Deputy Speaker, I ask Members to support the three motions: on the 2014-15 spring Supplementary Estimates, the 2015-16 Vote on Account and the 2015-16 Main Estimate in relation to the new judiciary pension scheme.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Before we proceed to the Question, I remind everyone that the vote on the motion requires cross-community support.

Question accordingly agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That this Assembly approves that a total sum, not exceeding £15,646,075,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 and that total resources, not exceeding £17,051,879,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2015 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(c) and 2(c) of table 1 in the volume of the Northern Ireland Spring Supplementary Estimates 2014-15 that was laid before the Assembly on 2 February 2015. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the vote on the motion, whether or not amended, requires cross-community support. As a valid petition of concern was presented on Friday 6 February in relation to the amendment, the vote on the amendment will also be on a cross-community basis.

Question put, That the amendment be made.

Question accordingly negated (cross-community vote).

Main Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That this Assembly approves that a sum, not exceeding £7,075,640,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund on account for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 and that resources, not exceeding £7,742,283,000, be authorised, on account, for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 4 and 6 of table 1 in the Vote on Account 2015-16 document that was laid before the Assembly on 2 February 2015. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That this Assembly authorises resources, not exceeding £50,000, for use by the Department of Justice Northern Ireland Judicial Pensions Scheme for the year ending 31 March 2016, for the purposes specified in column 1 of the 2015-16 Main Estimate document that was laid before the Assembly on 2 February 2015. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Budget Bill: First Stage

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): I beg to introduce the Budget Bill, which is a Bill to authorise the issue out of the Consolidated Fund of certain sums for the service of the years ending 31 March 2015 and 2016; to appropriate those sums for specified purposes; to authorise the Department of Finance and Personnel to borrow on the credit of the appropriated sums; to authorise the use for the public service of certain resources for the years ending 31 March 2015 and 2016; and to revise the limits on the use of certain accruing resources in the year ending 31 March 2015.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Speaker is satisfied that the Bill is within the legislative competence of the Assembly. I can inform Members that confirmation has been received from the Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel, in accordance with Standing Order 42(2), that the Committee is satisfied that there has been appropriate consultation with it on the public expenditure proposals contained in the Bill and that the Bill can therefore proceed under the accelerated passage procedure.

Standing Orders 20A(4)/4/6: Amendments

Mr Speaker: As the next three motions relate to amendments to Standing Orders, I propose to conduct the debate as follows. I propose to group the three motions as detailed on the Order Paper and conduct a single debate. I will ask the Clerk to read the first motion in the group and then call the Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures to move it. Debate will then take place on all three motions in the group. When all who wish to speak have done so, I will put the Question on the motion relating to Standing Order 20A(4). I will then ask the Chairperson to move formally the motions relating to Standing Order 4 and Standing Order 6, and I will put the Question on each of those motions without further debate. I remind the House that cross-community support will be required. If that is clear, I shall proceed.

Mr G Kelly (The Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I beg to move

Leave out Standing Order 20A(4) and insert –

‘The Speaker shall determine, by means of a random selection, the order in which questions are taken. However, the first question may not be from a member of the same party as the Minister to whom it is addressed, unless all the Topical Questions are from members of that party.’

The following motions stood in the Order Paper:

In the title to Standing Order 4 at the end add “: New Assembly”

After Standing Order 4 insert –

“4A. Election of Speaker: Assembly term

(1) Where the Speaker gives notice in writing to the Clerk of his intention to resign from the Office of Speaker during an Assembly term, the Speaker shall continue to hold office until a new Speaker has been elected.

(2) A new Speaker shall be elected in the manner provided for by Standing

Order 4.

(3) If the Speaker cannot take the chair for the proceedings to elect a new Speaker, the chair shall be taken by an Acting Speaker, who shall be the oldest member present at the meeting who is not seeking election as Speaker.”

Leave out Standing Order 6 and insert –

“6. Procedure when Office of Speaker becomes vacant

(1) Where a vacancy in the Office of Speaker of the Assembly occurs during an Assembly term, a Deputy Speaker shall report the vacancy to the Assembly at the opening of its next meeting and the Assembly shall, as soon as may be, proceed to elect a Speaker in the manner provided by Standing Order 4.

(2) For the purposes of that election, the chair shall be taken by an Acting Speaker, who shall be the oldest member present at the meeting who is not seeking election as Speaker.

(3) Where there is no agreement on the election of a Speaker, meetings of the Assembly shall be chaired by the Deputy Speakers in weekly rotation in the order in which they were elected in so far as this is possible.”.

On behalf of the Committee on Procedures, I am pleased to bring these motions to amend Standing Orders to the House today. The first relates to topical questions; the other two relate to the election of a Speaker during a mandate. This may seem a strange combination, but it is purely for the sake of expediency, rather than any link between them.

The first motion relates to Standing Order 20A(4). On 9 December 2014, the Assembly approved the Committee's report on the review of topical questions. One of the recommendations in the report was that, as for listed oral questions, the first topical question may not be from a Member of the same party as the Minister. Today's motion will give effect to that recommendation by amending Standing Orders accordingly.

The other two motions relate to the election of a Speaker during a mandate. Standing Order 4 currently sets out the procedure for the election of a Speaker at a meeting of a new Assembly but is silent on the procedure to be followed if a Speaker indicates his intention to resign during an Assembly term. The proposed amendment will insert a new Standing Order 4A to address this, by describing how the Speaker resigns and clarifying the procedures for the election of a new Speaker during an Assembly term. The proposed amendment also commits the outgoing Speaker to take the Chair for the proceedings to elect a successor.

The final motion relates to Standing Order 6, which already sets out the procedure to be followed if the office of Speaker becomes vacant during an Assembly term, but does not specify who would take the Chair for the purposes of that election. The proposed amendment will insert additional text into Standing Order 6 to make it clear that an Acting Speaker takes the Chair in these circumstances. The amendments to Standing Orders 4 and 6 will address the gaps in Standing Orders and clarify the procedures for the election of a Speaker during a mandate.

In closing, a Cheann Comhairle, Mr Speaker, the three motions before the House are straightforward — famous last words — and on behalf of the Committee on Procedures, I commend them to the House.

Mr Clarke (The Deputy Chairperson of the Committee on Procedures): Given that there have been no other contributors, I see no need to wind on the debate.

Mr Speaker: Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the motions require cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

Leave out Standing Order 20A(4) and insert –

‘The Speaker shall determine, by means of a random selection, the order in which questions are taken. However, the first question may not be from a member of the same party as the Minister to whom it is addressed, unless all the Topical Questions are from members of that party.’

Resolved (with cross-community support):

In the title to Standing Order 4 at the end add ‘: New Assembly’

After Standing Order 4 insert –

‘4A. Election of Speaker: Assembly term

(1) Where the Speaker gives notice in writing to the Clerk of his intention to resign from the Office of Speaker during an Assembly term, the Speaker shall continue to hold office until a new Speaker has been elected.

(2) A new Speaker shall be elected in the manner provided for by Standing

Order 4.

(3) If the Speaker cannot take the chair for the proceedings to elect a new Speaker, the chair shall be taken by an Acting Speaker, who shall be the oldest member present at the meeting who is not seeking election as Speaker.’

Resolved (with cross-community support):

Leave out Standing Order 6 and insert –

‘6. Procedure when Office of Speaker becomes vacant

(1) Where a vacancy in the Office of Speaker of the Assembly occurs during an Assembly term, a Deputy Speaker shall report the vacancy to the Assembly at the opening of its next meeting and the Assembly shall, as soon as may be, proceed to elect a Speaker in the manner provided by Standing Order 4.

(2) For the purposes of that election, the chair shall be taken by an Acting Speaker, who shall be the oldest member present at the meeting who is not seeking election as Speaker.

(3) Where there is no agreement on the election of a Speaker, meetings of the Assembly shall be chaired by the Deputy Speakers in weekly rotation in the order in which they were elected in so far as this is possible.’

Regeneration Bill: Extension of Committee Stage

Mr Maskey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I beg to move

That, in accordance with Standing Order 33(4), the period referred to in Standing Order 33(2) be extended to 28 May 2015, in relation to the Committee Stage of the Regeneration Bill (NIA Bill 43/11-16).

The Committee Stage of the Regeneration Bill began on 24 January 2015 and is due to conclude on 3 March. The Committee issued a call for evidence on 23 January, and this is due to end on 16 February. The Committee received a pre-legislative briefing from the Department on 8 January, and issues were raised at an early stage. The Committee must give those issues closer scrutiny with the Department and the stakeholders. The Committee will endeavour, of course, to complete the Bill in as short a time frame as possible. However, an extension will allow for the possibility of any delays due to conflicting Committee business, such as the Pensions Bill and other ongoing work. The Committee expects a greater response to the call for evidence for the Bill, given the nature of the content. Building in some extra time would ensure that it can give due consideration to any evidence received. As the House will know, it is, of course, vital that the Committee scrutinise the Bill effectively to a standard that the House would consider adequate and the public would expect.

There is no way of knowing how many responses from stakeholders will be received before 16 February or how many sessions will be required to hear oral evidence from witnesses on the basis of that. With all that in mind, the Committee agreed that it was important to build in sufficient time to address those various unknowns. The Committee, therefore, agreed to ask the Assembly for an extension to the Committee Stage until 28 May 2015. On behalf of the Committee, I ask the House to support the motion. However, the Committee makes it clear to the House that we will endeavour to complete our work before that date. Go raibh maith agat.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That, in accordance with Standing Order 33(4), the period referred to in Standing Order 33(2) be extended to 28 May 2015, in relation to the Committee Stage of the Regeneration Bill (NIA Bill 43/11-16).

Mr Speaker: Members should briefly take their ease while we get the Bill's folder organised.

Welfare Reform Bill: Consideration Stage

Mr Speaker: I call the Minister for Social Development, Mr Mervyn Storey, to move the Consideration Stage of the Welfare Reform Bill.

Moved. — [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

Mr Speaker: Members will have a copy of the Marshalled List of amendments detailing the order for consideration. The amendments have been grouped for debate in the provisional grouping of amendments selected list. There are five groups of amendments, and we will debate the amendments in each group in turn.

The first debate will be on group 1, which contains 23 amendments and oppositions to two clauses stand part. The group deals with duties on the Department, administration and assessments. The second debate will be on group 2, which contains 14 amendments and oppositions to nine clauses stand part. The group deals with entitlements. The third debate will be on group 3, which contains seven amendments and oppositions to six clauses stand part. The group deals with sanctions. The fourth debate will be on group 4, which contains eight amendments. The group deals with reports, reviews, pilot schemes and information sharing. The fifth debate will be on group 5, which contains 26 amendments. The group deals with Assembly control, commencement and technical issues.

Valid petitions of concern have been tabled in relation to amendment Nos 1 to 13, 15 to 22, 24, 26 to 29, 36 to 45, 48 to 50, 53 to 57 and 73 to 75. Each will, therefore, require a cross-community vote. I remind Members intending to speak that, during the debates on the five groups of amendments, they should address all the amendments in each group on which they wish to comment. Once the debate on each group is completed, any further amendments in the group will be moved formally as we go through the Bill, and Questions on each will be put without further debate. The Questions on stand part will be taken at the appropriate points in the Bill. If that is clear, we shall proceed.

No amendments have been tabled to clauses 1 to 3. I propose, by leave of the Assembly, to group these clauses for the Question on stand part.

Clauses 1 to 3 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

10.45 am

Clause 4 (Basic conditions)

Mr Speaker: We now come to the first group of amendments for debate, which contains 23 amendments and opposition to two clauses. These amendments deal with duties on the Department, administration and assessments, and include amendments on matters such as the claimant commitment, frequency of payment and the taking account of relevant medical evidence.

Members will note that amendment No 1 is mutually exclusive with amendment No 3. Amendment No 13 is consequential to amendment No 12. Amendment Nos 18 and 19 are mutually exclusive. Amendment Nos 35 and 36 are also mutually exclusive. Amendment No 39 is consequential to amendment No 38. Amendment No 57 is consequential to amendment No 10 and amendment No 37.

Members will note that valid petitions of concern have been received in relation to amendment Nos 1, 3 and 4, 8 to 13, 17 to 19, 36 to 39, 43 to 45, 53, 57 and 74. Therefore, they will require cross-community support.

I call Mr Roy Beggs to move amendment No 1 and to address the other amendments in the group.

Mr Beggs: I beg to move amendment No 1: In page 3, line 5, at end insert

“(8) Regulations shall provide, in circumstances where one member of a couple does not accept a claimant commitment within a prescribed period, that the claim may be considered as a claim by the other member of the couple as a single person.”.

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 3: After clause 6 insert

“Joint claims where one party does not accept claimant commitment

6A. In a claim by members of a couple jointly, where one party does not accept a claimant commitment the claim shall proceed as if the party who has signed a claimant commitment had made a single person claim and payment shall be made to that party.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 4: After clause 6 insert

“Provision of Claimant Documentation

6B. Regulations must provide, if a claimant is unable to provide documentation required to process a claim, for the information to be provided by prescribed third parties to enable the claim to be processed.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 8: After clause 12 insert

Frequency of payment

12A. Universal credit shall be paid twice monthly unless a single claimant or the members of a couple jointly opt, in making a claim, to be paid on a monthly basis.”— [Mr Beggs.]

No 9: In clause 14, page 6, line 32, at end insert

“(a) in preparing, reviewing and updating a claimant commitment under subsection (2) the Department shall have due regard for the claimant’s skills, experience, caring responsibilities and physical and mental ill health.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 10: In clause 16, page 7, line 35, leave out “approved by the Department” and insert

No 11: In clause 16, page 7, line 41, at end insert

“(c) any decision taken under subsection (5) shall take account of relevant medical evidence including evidence of mental ill health.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 12: In clause 24, page 12, line 3, leave out “—” and insert

No 13: In clause 24, page 12, line 15, at end insert

“(9) For the purposes of subsection (7)—

(a) an ‘incident motivated by hate’ has such meaning as may be prescribed;

(b) a ‘victim of an incident motivated by hate’ means a person on or against whom an incident motivated by hate is inflicted or threatened (and regulations under subsection (7) may prescribe circumstances in which a person is to be treated as being or not being a victim of a serious incident motivated by hate);

(c) a person has recently been a victim of an incident motivated by hate if a prescribed period has not expired since the incident was inflicted or threatened.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 17: After clause 37 insert

“The Independent Living Fund

37A. The Department shall bring forward within 18 months of commencement of this Act a fund to replace the Independent Living Fund, following consultation with the Department for Employment and Learning and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 18: In clause 38, page 17, line 29, at end insert

No 19: In clause 38, page 17, line 29, at end insert

“and any such assessment shall take account of relevant medical evidence including evidence of mental ill health.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 35: In clause 79, page 60, line 27, at end insert

“(2A) Any person determining a question mentioned in subsection (1) or (2) shall take account of relevant medical evidence.”— [Mr Beggs.]

No 36: In clause 79, page 60, line 27, at end insert

“(2A) Any person determining a question mentioned in subsection (1) or (2) must take account of relevant medical evidence including evidence of mental ill health.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 37: In clause 79, page 60, line 31, at end insert

“() must provide that a person carrying out an assessment under paragraph (a) or determining a question under subsection (1) or (2) shall be a health care professional employed by a HSC Trust or a general practitioner;”— [Mr Agnew.]

No 38: In clause 80, page 61, line 19, leave out “9 months” and insert “6 months.”— [Mr Agnew.]

No 39: In clause 80, page 61, line 33, leave out “‘the next 9 months’ means the 9 months” and insert “‘the next 6 months’ means the 6 months.”— [Mr Agnew.]

No 43: After clause 100 insert

“Payment of awards in cash

100A. The Department shall ensure that a claimant under this Act who has no access to a bank account shall have access to any relevant award in cash.—
[Mr Agnew.]

No 44: After clause 101 insert

“Payments pending appeal

101A. In Section 5(1) of the Social Security Administration Act (NI) 1992 (regulations about claims and payments) after paragraph (r) insert—

“(s) for the making of a payment pending appeal.”—

No 45: In clause 103, page 71, line 30, at end insert

“(8) Subsection (1) does not apply unless it is determined that, whether fraudulently or otherwise, the claimant has misrepresented, or failed to disclose, any material fact.”— [Mr Agnew.]

No 53: After clause 130 insert

“Impact of Regulations on Victims and Survivors

130C. The Department must ensure that regulations under this Act are prepared with due regard for the impact on victims and survivors of the past in consultation with the Northern Ireland Commission for Victims and Survivors.— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 57: In clause 132, page 94, line 28, at end insert

““general practitioner” means a medical practitioner providing primary medical services;

“HSC Trust” means a Health and Social Care trust established under Article 10 of the Health and Personal Social Services (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 (NI 1);”— [Mr Agnew.]

No 74: In schedule 1, page 98, line 32, leave out paragraph 6.— [Mr Agnew.]

Mr Beggs: I welcome this long overdue opportunity to open the debate on this next stage of the Welfare Reform Bill. It has been the most contentious and drawn out yet probably the most important legislation that this Assembly has ever considered. To date, we have had about £100 million of fines imposed upon us in reductions in the block grant. That has meant £100 million of reductions in public services. There have been clawbacks during this financial year, mid-year. Indeed, I suspect that has contributed to the lack of funding that would have been available to health.

In 2015, £114 million would have been set aside in potential fines, again from the block grant. However, you would not think that today is as important as it really is by observing the shameful actions of the DUP last night in tabling multiple copies of their pre-prepared petitions of concern against every single amendment that has been put forward, other than by their Minister. They have effectively killed off discussion and the decision-making process in this Assembly. Disgraceful. They are attempting to steamroller the Bill through as they would wish it to be. They are attempting to prevent this Assembly from having its say. They have single-handedly potentially blocked almost 50 amendments, including well over 20 in this group alone.

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: I wish to continue; I may give way later on. There is nothing that can be argued about what I just said. It is very factual. They have displayed the undemocratic nature of their attitudes as MLAs and as a party, which, of course, has the word “democratic” in its name. The other country that springs to mind that has the word “democratic” in its name was the Democratic Republic of East Germany, as it was at one time. Of course, that was a totalitarian state. It would appear that the DUP are much more akin with that attitude than that of normal Western society. That, unfortunately, sums up how they approach the whole issue of welfare reform. It is embarrassing enough how they tried to bring a copy and paste of the GB Bill across to Northern Ireland. They now, apparently, have no shame in preventing what limited amendments could have been made to the Bill by this Assembly. Their mechanism is making it virtually impossible for amendments to succeed. I look forward to hearing a shameful explanation from DUP Members who, presumably, all signed it and all have a responsibility in how they have, effectively, removed the democratic and more normal working of this Assembly.

Why should we not have the ability to debate the Bill, its individual clauses, and make amendments?

It appears to be their way or no way.

After two years of sitting in an abyss, after months of detailed Committee scrutiny of the proposals and after a huge level of engagement by organisations that deal with welfare issues on a day-to-day basis, the DUP has decided that it knows best. It appears to have its ears closed, certainly to other Assembly Members here and to this debate. No amendment is seemingly good enough for it, as it thinks it has the right to step in and determine what can and cannot be changed in the Bill.

Mr P Robinson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: I wish to proceed.

Mr P Robinson: Is the Member afraid to give way?

Mr Beggs: I will give way later on.

Mr P Robinson: Is the Member so sure he is accurate in what he is saying that he will not give way?

Mr Beggs: Of course. However, I have to ask whether this petition — [Interruption.] I obviously have touched a raw nerve — [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order. All remarks should be addressed through the Speaker. If the Member wishes not to take interventions, that should be accepted by other Members because there are no restrictions on the debate at all. Everyone will have their opportunity to make a contribution.

Mr P Robinson: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Can we have some assistance from the Chair? When a person who is speaking in this House also has the title of being a Deputy Speaker, is it right that he shows such inane inability to understand the rules of this House that he would seek to mislead the House into believing that they do not have the right to put down amendments and to vote on those amendments and that anyone who puts down a petition of concern can decide which way they vote on any amendment?

Mr Nesbitt: On a point of order, Mr Speaker.

Mr Speaker: I have a point of order to respond to. The point that I made in my earlier intervention should provide the guidance. There is no restriction on debate, nor is there any restriction on people's ability to contribute to the debate. There were opportunities, quite clearly, for all parties and all Members to put down amendments if they so wished. Reference was made in some of the opening remarks about discussions on clauses being prevented. I make it clear that there are no such restrictions. If Members are prepared, they can wait their turn and they will be called if they so indicate. Let us have a measured debate. There is no point in starting cross-chatting; the election is not for several months, so let us deal with this very important piece of legislation.

I will take the second point of order.

Mr Nesbitt: Thank you, Mr Speaker. If I heard the Member for East Belfast correctly, there was an accusation that Mr Beggs was misleading the House. Will you review that, please?

Mr Speaker: My advice is this: let us not get into words. I could have challenged some of the earlier comments but decided not to. If someone is a Deputy Speaker they are still entitled to be a Member, to act like a Member and to contribute on behalf of themselves and their party, and that is exactly what is happening. Mr Roy Beggs will be a contributor to this debate and he will not preside over any aspect of it. Your point about the language that was used, I would give as a general health warning to every contributor, but some of the opening remarks could have had the effect of saying, perhaps completely unintended, that some aspects of the Bill are not up for discussion at all. Every aspect of it is, and every Member will have an equal opportunity if they so wish. If they decide not to, that is their decision. It will not be the Speaker who will prevent that level of contribution or discussion. Let us resume the debate.

Mr Beggs: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I obviously touched a very raw nerve there. I would have thought that what is happening is that rather than, perhaps, the normal warfare across the Benches there is a tag team happening. I would put that for others to consider. Is this tag team working in unison? Some put the petition of concern down and both will vote their separate ways, knowing the net result that will occur and knowing that some will be able to express their opinion and yet prevent the amendments going through. I simply ask Members to watch the rest of the debate, listen carefully to what everybody says, watch how people vote and watch the net effect of the petitions of concern which, I understand, have been signed by every member of the DUP Assembly party.

Given the amendments that have been presented in this group I am more surprised, perhaps, by the amendments that are not there. One would have thought that others who were very vocal in their comments some time ago might have put something down.

Mr Speaker: I have given you a considerable amount of laxity to set the context. You should not attempt to go back over the process. We are where we are; there is an Order Paper in front of us, and there is a Bill folder that we have all had access to. I am waiting on you to start to address the amendments that are down, not the ones that are not. Thank you.

Mr Beggs: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I was coming to that in the next section of my comments.

The Ulster Unionist Party tabled its initial set of amendments almost two years ago. This is not something that we have thought about lightly or suddenly determined that we will take action on. We saw difficulties in what was being proposed by the Minister some years ago, and in this particular group, we have tabled amendment Nos 1, 8, 18 and 35. Some of the initial points that we made two years ago remain to be addressed. Members will probably not be surprised to see us raising the issues in our amendments in this group, as we have been highlighting them for months and years as being of concern.

I will deal firstly with amendment No 1, which is on joint claims. The coalition Government's policy is that couples living in the same household will make a joint claim for their benefit. I accept the rationale of a claimant commitment. We agree that, in order to receive universal credit, a person should have to sign a pledge that lays out exactly what is expected of them and, in return, what benefits and support will be provided. However, it was a mistake in the draft policy to allow a situation where, if one member of a household failed, for whatever reason, to sign their commitment, the rest of the household would be penalised. Potentially, no benefits would go into a household as a result of a failure by one individual.

Why should a family, perhaps with a number of dependent children, be left without support just because one of the parents failed to meet their commitments? Unfortunately, there are households where that could happen. An adult, a parent or a partner who fails may put their own needs ahead of the needs of others, but surely their partner and children should not suffer. We must protect the most vulnerable from debt and the possibility of homelessness. Those are issues that would automatically follow if there was a complete end to the support and benefits available to a whole household. Debt would gather and housing costs would mount, with the possibility of landlords effecting eviction at some point in the future.

Mr Wilson: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he accept that, as the law stands, which the Bill supports, where someone is incapable of making that commitment, provision is made for them? Does he recognise that the difficulty with his amendment is that it opens the door for those who choose to not make any commitment to seek a job? Under the shelter of his amendment, they may hide behind their family or their family's vulnerability so that they do not have to live up to the requirements that anyone would expect of someone who is claiming benefits?

Mr Beggs: I thank the Member for his intervention. I do not want vulnerable children to suffer because of an irresponsible parent or guardian. There is the potential for that individual to suffer by removing benefits that are going to him until he meets his requirements under the agreement. So, there still is the potential under what we are proposing for that individual to suffer, but his family, his partner and his children would not suffer. Society would be much fairer if it was done on that basis.

Were families to be ultimately made homeless by this, it would probably result in significant additional costs to the public through emergency housing, because vulnerable children would need to be looked after. So, not ensuring that there is adequate protection for the family of the irresponsible parent, adds huge misery to those who should not face it and huge cost to the public purse from emergency housing.

It was because of the iniquitous implications of what was being proposed that the Ulster Unionist Party decided that that would be one of the areas that we wanted to change. Let us be clear: when you change an aspect of welfare reform, there are financial implications, and there will be costs to the block grant, but it is responsible that we discuss the issues and weigh up the costs and the benefits. There are areas in which costs may not be excessive but the benefits to members of our society may be considerable. Therefore, we should be open to amendments.

The Department had indicated that, in cases in which one claimant refused to sign a commitment and left the household, that person would be excluded from the claim and the household would have to submit a new claim. There are other issues around that. Will the benefit then start from the date of issue of the new claim? Will that leave a period in which no housing benefit will be paid into that household? There are grey areas that need clarifying.

The Bill also fails to address the fundamental problem of what happens if the stubborn party does not leave the household. There are complications on which I want to hear certainty that vulnerable members of our community will not face difficulties. Social security offices and independent advice centres up and down the country will agree that, although that may sound improbable, it does happen.

Mr Wilson: Will the Member give way on that point?

Mr Beggs: Certainly.

Mr Wilson: Is the Member not arguing against the point that he made earlier? He indicated that, if one partner was not prepared to give a commitment, the answer was to remove the benefit and punish that person rather than the rest of the family. Now he is telling us that the potential is for the non-committing partner to stay in the house and still benefit from the housing benefit that will be paid to keep a roof over the family's heads, so, according to the Member's logic, there is no punishment.

Mr Beggs: There will be punishment, because there will be a lack of funds to the household. The individual will face a degree of pressure.

The Member needs to reflect on whether he wants that individual's partner and vulnerable children out on the street. Is that the punishment that he wishes for? There needs to be balance and careful thought in all that we do. Whilst the numbers affected in that type of scenario may be relatively small, there will potentially be a huge impact on vulnerable individuals. Therefore, there is merit in what is being proposed in our amendment.

It is a sensible alternative. We are instructing the Department to allow certain cases to be considered carefully. In other words, assessors will have the flexibility to allow a claim to go ahead if it is for the benefit of the remaining members of the household, rather than it being rejected outright by another automated system or a computer. As it stands, staff do not have an ability to be flexible. They will be ticking boxes, and the system will tell them what is to happen, and, as a result, children will potentially be put out on the street.

Under our amendment, people refusing to sign the commitment will, of course, still not be entitled to support. Importantly, it means that their selfish, pig-headed approach will no longer prevent the rest of the household from receiving support. That line of thought complements what is already in paragraph 1 of schedule 1 to the Bill, but it makes it more explicit and clear, and removes any uncertainty that there may be.

The Department accepted my party's request for that in the Stormont House talks, so the amendment is simply reflecting that. I will listen carefully to what the Minister and others say. Can he assure me publicly in the House that he will honour, through guidance, what our amendment proposes? If he is able to do that, we will have to reflect further. It is important that this issue is aired and addressed, and it is for that reason that I moved the amendment. I remind him and the Department that my party has shown good faith by slightly revising the amendment from what was originally tabled to try to ensure the existence of something that is practicable and deliverable. I hope that he and his colleagues will not knock it out with one of their petitions of concern or allow anyone else to knock it out. Everyone in the House should be able to support this reasonable amendment.

I turn now to amendment No 8. The frequency of payments is another major touchstone issue that dominated the earlier Assembly discussion on welfare reform. I welcome the SDLP's decision to sign our amendment. As the Minister will be fully aware, his predecessor asked a number of voluntary organisations to investigate the proposal to move to monthly payments. They found that such a default system would have the potential to cause major difficulties for claimants, especially in being able to budget appropriately for their outgoings. Individuals already come to my office occasionally looking for emergency support and perhaps have to be referred to food banks.

There are good things happening in the community and voluntary sector. However, if we were to move to monthly payments flat out and with no variation, there would be a huge danger that the community and voluntary sector, given the good work that it is doing in assisting vulnerable people, would be absolutely swamped because many do not yet have the skills to budget beyond a relatively short period. We have to ensure that there is support to try to increase those skills. I particularly welcome the engagement in my area of Christians Against Poverty, which works with some of the food banks to try to empower people to live within their budget and avoid the necessity to seek emergency aid.

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: Yes, I will.

Mr Dickson: I am interested in his engagement with members of the community. Would Mr Beggs also tell them that his party's 2010 manifesto, which is identical to that of the Tories, is the unmitigated Bill that is presented to the House today and that it is the mitigations that are being presented to the House today that will actually deal with the issues that he is talking about?

Mr Beggs: I believe that the Member's sister party also had a hand in the origin of this Bill, so I find his comments very strange. Let me make it very clear that this is a devolved Assembly. We are Assembly Members, and we are accountable for our actions. I hoped — [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Order.

Mr Beggs: — that we would not have petitions of concern, in order that the Assembly can make its decisions in a responsible manner.

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: I wish to proceed.

Fortunately, Ministers, both past and present, appear now to have accepted the proposal for twice-monthly payments as the default position. I welcome that, but I want the Minister to give clarity on the issue. It is important that we avoid using a criterion-based approach. That would undoubtedly save on administration costs in the short and long term, but, as I said, there are dangers in just ticking boxes and someone potentially not seeing a common-sense approach. Importantly, I understand that some households may prefer monthly payments, which is why my party wants to allow that to be an option. Opting out of twice-monthly payments and moving to a single payment, if that is what individuals wish, would minimise administration costs.

In recent days, my party has received some assurances that we previously sought on this. In part, we welcome the offering of choice to claimants of how regularly they wish to receive payments. I simply ask the Minister to, in place of our putting the question, reaffirm his commitment to default to twice-monthly payments. Not only that, I expect him to show the Social Development Committee the respect that it is due as soon as possible as regards any future proposed policy changes, so that its views can be taken on board.

I turn now to amendment No 18, on medical evidence for work-related activity. As Members are only too well aware, at present there are major problems with the system of assessing those who have limited work capability and, therefore, their entitlement to employment and support allowance. I will go further and say that the system is not fit for purpose. I accept that assessing claims based on whether health conditions or disability restricts the applicant's ability to work is an enormous task for the Department and its agency. However, it is a system that unquestionably needs to be improved. The transition from incapacity benefit to employment and support allowance (ESA) was chaotic and simply did not work. Many problems arose.

I have heard the Department boast that 67% of all appeals heard on ESA decisions were upheld, but that misses the point, which is that a third of its decisions were wrong. I came from the world of industry, where you should try to get it right first time. The concept of being happy with making a third of decisions wrong is not what most normal businesses would operate under, and it clearly needs to be improved.

Of course, when incorrect decisions are made, additional costs are associated with appeals, and we also have to pay for those. We all have experiences, through our offices, of what looks like a rather rational claim being rejected. The problem is that a person can present a different image during a so-called medical assessment rather than the reality that we know from having spent time talking to and observing them, perhaps more time than is available in the assessment.

There are few more difficult cases to assess on the day than those involving claimants who present with mental health difficulties. The Northern Ireland epidemic of mental health problems is connected to the legacy of our Troubles, so there is a real issue in our community of presenting on this. Is it any wonder that we have the world's highest rate of post-traumatic stress disorder? Such facts, however, are not reflected in ESA assessments. The Ulster Unionist Party's concern is that that will continually fail to be reflected in future limited-capability assessments for universal credit.

The absence of medical records will inevitably lead to wrong decisions being made and too many appeals going against the Department. Why can medical evidence not be reviewed before the formal appeal? I believe that, were that medical evidence available earlier, the need for the applicant to present at the formal appeal process would be abated. Remember that an appeal does not benefit genuine claimants or the Department. The delay in receiving benefits and the huge administration costs involved with appeals can cause problems for both parties. I do not doubt that, on the day, the Department does its best to make a fully informed decision that accurately reflects a customer's circumstances. However, without crucial documents, such as psychology reports, it is well-nigh impossible to make accurate assessments.

There is a real problem in fresh evidence supporting an appeal being becoming available only on the day of appeal. The Department states that, in four out of five appeals that were upheld in favour of the customer, new supporting evidence is produced by the customer that was not available to inform the Department's original decision. It makes far more sense to have that evidence, usually medical reports, available at an earlier stage during an earlier assessment.

Our amendment No 18 would ensure that any assessment of a person's capability for work or work-related activity would take relevant medical evidence into account. Whilst the issue of medical evidence has been settled for personal independence payment (PIP), no such understanding has been found for the transition to universal credit. I accept that the financial implications of our amendment may be significant and, given the costs encountered with the rest of the mitigation measures in the Assembly, we need to reflect on whether we should pass those additional costs to the Department. As the Minister has been made aware, the amendment was designed so that we can have that debate.

I am sure that every other party has concerns with the current arrangements, so it is clearly something that needs to be addressed. I and my colleagues will listen carefully to the Minister's response. I hope that he accepts the problems attached to work capability assessments and that he will lay out exactly what we are likely to see in the future with the universal credit proposals.

Our amendment should be fairly self-explanatory, yet it is hugely important. I trust that it will be accepted. Not only does it make perfect sense to have the right medical reports but it also appears that it is an idea that each of the main parties have suggested they would support. I welcome that. The transition from disability living allowance (DLA) to PIP will be an enormous task, so I welcome the decision to set up a fund that will, hopefully, allow for the required medical reports without imposing huge additional costs on those with vulnerabilities who may have difficulties paying for them.

I also have concerns about the wider issue of having to pay several million pounds to GPs for what many people believe they should already be doing. When you think that the average GP is on £94,000, it would not be an unreasonable task for them to take part of that responsibility on board. I fully appreciate the issues that our GPs face at the moment and that they are under pressure. However, I ask the Minister to provide an update on the preliminary discussions between his Department and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety about the shaping of GP contracts in future to include medical reports. Of course, that would apply equally to work capability assessments and personal independent payments.

I now move on to a few of the other amendments that have been tabled. Amendment No 3 deals with joint claims and was tabled by the SDLP. I think that it is unnecessary given what we have proposed. There is a subtle but important difference between their amendment and ours. The Ulster Unionist Party amendment proposes to allow the Department to show some flexibility to assess those types of cases on an individual basis, whereas the SDLP's amendment is much wider. It was agreed by all parties, including the SDLP, that flexibility through guidance was the preferred way forward. I ask Members from all parties, irrespective of the petition of concern, to support the general intent of what is proposed in amendment No 1, which stands in the names of Robin Swann and me.

Mr Campbell: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: Yes, I will.

Mr P Robinson: Why did you not give way to me?

Mr Campbell: I do not know.

The Member is going through a series of amendments, not just his party's amendments but the SDLP's. Has he given any thought to the cost of the amendments if they were carried? Will he elaborate on those costs at some point in his speech?

Mr Beggs: I will listen very careful to the Minister. We have carefully calculated some areas as best we can, but, ultimately, the Minister and the Department will have much more accurate information. That is why we have built a degree of flexibility into our amendment. That will allow the Minister to use the information that he and others do not have to make adjustments and try to address real need without the need for potentially bureaucratic costs to be loaded in.

It is right that we consider how we can improve, and, as I said some time ago, it is also important that we have an understanding of any costs that may flow from amendments. Some of us will decide that some amendments are worth paying that money for; others may take a different approach, and that is their right. Certainly, it should be the decision, ultimately, of a vote in the Assembly to determine what goes on.

I wish to move on to amendment No 4 in relation to the documents through third parties. Again, we will listen with interest to how the Minister responds to the proposal.

Our opinion is that charities, social workers and housing associations would be in a trustworthy position to provide required documentation. I am, however, aware that the Department has already confirmed that guidance will cover the acceptance of documents from third parties, something that I believe is already accepted practice. Again, I look forward to hearing what the Minister will say on that issue.

In regard to amendment No 9, it makes sense on a practical level, so much so that I would be surprised if the Department did not already propose having due regard for them.

Mr Agnew's amendments, Nos 10, 37 and 57, are, no doubt, well intentioned, but, unfortunately, I believe they also undermine themselves. There has long been concern about the work-focused, health-related assessments and those coming down the line for the personal independence payments (PIP). In our amendment Nos 18 and 35, we are opening up the debate on medical evidence. However, I wonder whether we want to go down the road of having to direct so many of our already overstretched GPs or experienced nurses to carry out those tests. I am not opposed to health-care professionals approved by the Department carrying out assessments as long as they take into account available medical records and they are suitably qualified to make medical judgements. Making sure that we have the right competence of assessors should be an absolute priority right now; not necessarily who their employer is. Nevertheless, I will listen to what the Member has to say on that issue, not least in regard to how he believes his amendments would be delivered within the existing pressures facing our GPs and trust staff.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for giving way. In the past, such assessments were carried out by in-house medical professionals. One way or another, we have to pay for those professionals, and, one way or another, we have to train them through our universities. It is simply a question of oversight and accountability. The record of Atos in England suggests to me that that oversight and accountability was not sufficient.

Mr Beggs: I agree that they have to be paid, but why do they have to be employed by the trust? They could be employed by the Department or by an agent of the Department. The Member has been very prescriptive in what he proposes.

At face value, the Ulster Unionist Party agrees with amendment Nos 12 and 13. People subjected to domestic violence have rightly been given additional protection in the Bill, and now we are being asked to expand that to incidents motivated by hate. Of course, Northern Ireland is only too well versed, sadly, in such incidents, in terms of religion, sectarianism and race, so, yes, we are open for them to be included in the Bill. However, and it is a big however, as the Members who will later propose the amendment will likely be already aware, there is currently no formal definition of hate incidents; some will be easily understood, but very many others may not just be as clear. I suspect that that is why the Members have passed the responsibility for categorising such incidents to the Department under clause 24(9)(b) of their amendment. Our concern is that, without the definition, we are potentially opening up a can of worms that the Department will face constant challenge on; perhaps, again, legal costs and delays. I trust that the Minister has sought the advice of suitably qualified legal minds in this regard, so I look forward to hearing what he has to say on this issue.

On amendment No 17, I first ask for clarification from Mr Ramsey, perhaps later on, who I thought had been previously assured by the Health Minister that the independent living fund in Northern Ireland was going to be retained in some form after June 2015. If that is the case, I welcome it as it would allow some 600 disabled people here who are receiving support from it to continue to lead their own independent lives in the community. However, given the almost inevitable ending of the scheme across the water later this year, I understand that ours, even if it was retained, would probably undergo some reform. If we decide that it should be for the Social Development Minister supported by DEL and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, it is better to give them the 18-month time frame, as stated in the amendment. If, however, this amendment has been tabled without the knowledge of the Health Department, the Department for Social Development or DEL, I have to question whether it really was the most appropriate time to make the proposal, not least because I suspect that its more natural home would be in the Health Department. Again, I will listen to the contribution of others on this issue.

Amendment Nos 19 and 36 from the SDLP are fairly similar to those that we tabled previously and which also appear on today's Marshalled List. Even the most objective observer would struggle to see what the difference really is between them. I fully expect mental ill health to be covered by the reference to medical evidence that we make. They each propose doing exactly the same thing; the important thing is to make sure that the issue is addressed.

I turn to amendment Nos 38 and 39 from Mr Agnew, who moved the debate into something new. He is proposing changing the prospective test and the length of time for which the personal independence payment claims are likely to continue in the future to meet disability conditions from nine months to six months. We must be conscious that it would be a fairly fundamental breach of parity if we were to accept this, and there is grave uncertainty about what the cost would be. Again, this would be raising an issue of unfairness across the UK.

In some cases, no doubt, it is very difficult to predict whether a claimant's condition is likely to improve within nine months, so maybe six months would lead to more accurate assessments, but I do have to ask this: what will be the additional costs in administration? The Assembly is likely to bear those additional costs. Again, I look forward to what the Minister may have to say on the issue so that we may all come to a judgement on it. I go back to what I said early in my contribution: we have the responsibility to assess the need and the benefit that will come from change but also what the cost will be and whether that cost is proportionate to the issue? Regardless of the amendment, I welcome the fact that terminally ill claimants will be exempt from this test.

I turn to amendment No 43, which proposes ensuring that the Department will issue entitlements in cash in cases where the claimant has no access to a bank account. I have concerns about this, as I believe that, in such cases, the priority of the Department and the advice agencies should continue to be to encourage the claimant to open an account, whether that is through a Post Office card or, indeed, a bank account. Without one, how are they realistically expected to budget and manage their outgoings from one month to the other? There are also benefits in not having people being over-reliant on carrying all their earthly belongings, potentially, in their back pocket. It is much safer if people have an account and are able to draw off as they need.

Having a bank account, a building society account or a credit union account does provide some level of security. I am also aware that, at present, when claimants do not have any of those accounts, arrangements are made for them to be paid using a Post Office card account. If that is not possible, payments can be issued through the simple payment service, so there are mechanisms to deal with very difficult situations when immediate payment may be necessary. I will listen to Mr Agnew to hear his rationale for amendment No 43, but, at this stage, the Ulster Unionist Party is inclined to oppose it for some of the reasons that I have just mentioned.

11.30 am

We will oppose amendment No 44, which proposes to allow for payments in cases that are pending appeal. Were the amendment to go through, it would set quite a dangerous precedent and would also entail cost to the Executive. I have not heard any explanation as to why that additional cost should be borne. Many will be entitled to other benefits. Our intention is to oppose the amendment.

Mr Agnew: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: Certainly.

Mr Agnew: On a couple of occasions, the Member referred to cost — rightly so — and of course we have to take it into consideration. There is a top-up payment in the budget. My argument is that we should decide as an Assembly where those top-up payments should be in the legislation rather than relying on what comes from the Executive to decide how that money is spent. My proposal is that a top-up payment is budgeted for. I am putting forward amendments, some of which cost money, but the top-up payment should be used to cover them.

Mr Beggs: I look forward to hearing the Member's contribution, and I hope that he will also explain where the money to fund all his amendments will come from. Other public services will be cut to finance them. There are real choices that could impact the health of some of the same individuals whom the Member might be trying to assist. There are choices and difficult decisions. That is what politics and government should be about. I look forward to hearing the Member's contribution and the Minister outlining what the costs may be. [Interruption.] I wish to proceed.

We will oppose amendment No 45. I understand that the proposer is coming at it from the angle of a claimant who has been at the receiving end of a departmental error. While fraud is deliberate, error is not. Unfortunately, it is probably inevitable that, given the scale of our welfare system, mistakes are sometimes made, maybe still too often. Yes, that is the case, but that is the reality.

It is useful to remember that there is quite a difference between customer fraud, customer error and official error. Customer fraud makes up 0.5%, customer error makes up 0.2%, and staff error makes up 0.4%. I assume that Mr Agnew's amendment seeks to address the 0.4% of staff error and maybe some of the 0.2% of customer error. Given that our welfare system costs almost as much as our health service, even though that is a very small percentage, it may end up as a very significant number, perhaps north of £15 million. Again, where is the money coming from? Is Mr Agnew seriously suggesting that we simply forget about the amount of money each and every year? If we do not withdraw it from our block grant, we can be sure that fines or costs will be imposed. Again, what will be the cost to other public services like health and education?

In drawing back overpayment, it is important that the Department is very sensitive, takes individual household circumstances into consideration and does so over a lengthy period so that undue hardship is not caused by that departmental error, but, nevertheless, potentially significant amounts may have been given to a household that was not entitled to it. I ask the Minister to address that issue. Regardless of whose fault it may be, it is public money, and I would expect nothing but the utmost caution and due regard to be shown by the Department. However, if a mistake has been made, it should be rectified, or other public services will suffer.

I believe that there is generally a strong emphasis on accuracy. However, in cases where there is not and people receive more money than they are entitled to, they should reasonably expect to pay it back.

If someone who is working receives an overpayment, you can be sure that, in subsequent weeks, their employer will point out the mistake and draw the money back. Equally, if someone in receipt of benefits receives an overpayment, discussions should occur and it should be paid back. Again, I urge the Department to not go immediately to legal action in the first instance. A range of options is open, not least that to draw back any overpayment through a deduction in future benefits.

I note the Minister's opposition to clause 129. I believe that last year's National Insurance Contributions Act has already restored what was being proposed. So, we, too, believe that the clause is unnecessary.

Amendment No 53 from the SDLP is sensible, and the Ulster Unionist Party will be happy to support it. That issue has always been one of our concerns, not least since the end of 2012 when the then Minister shamefully tried to steamroller the GB Bill through the Assembly. Thankfully, his attempts at scaremongering were ignored, and we now have the potential of a much improved Bill that, to a greater extent, acknowledges and mitigates some of the worst aspects for the victims and survivors of the Troubles. However, we will just add some caution to the amendment. If, as we hope, it is made, we will request that the Department works as quickly and helpfully as possible with the Northern Ireland commission for victims.

Many of the regulations will be technical and often difficult to assess at first hand. Assessing every regulation, as the amendment suggests, will put major strain on the commission for victims. We trust that the Department will act constructively with the body and its staff, especially now as it continues to operate without a commissioner.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Member for giving way. I am sorry if I have interrupted his train of thought —

Mr Campbell: You did not.

Mr A Maginness: He is doing very well and making very valid points, and I hope that Members will listen to them. I believe that amendment No 53 is very important. It puts victims of the Troubles and people who have suffered grievously, through either physical or mental problems as a result of the Troubles, at the very centre of the welfare system. Does the Member agree with the general thrust of the amendment? Does he agree with me that it would be a terrible shame for the House to reject the amendment, particularly through a petition of concern? That would do a grave disservice to all those who have suffered as a result of the Troubles.

Mr Beggs: I agree with the Member. I am also very mindful that, when dealing with individuals in my constituency office, those victims who have been traumatised in the Troubles frequently feel that they almost have to relive some of their incidents and retell the horrors that they experienced to expose the damage that has been done physically and mentally to them so that they can receive the benefits that they are entitled to. That can set individuals back each time they relive that. We have been suggesting that there needs to be early engagement with the Northern Ireland commission for victims as soon as possible so that, where there is very clear documented evidence, the whole approach can be looked at to try to mitigate and minimise the impact on victims of the Troubles in the assessment process, which they may be required to participate in to gain their benefits.

Finally, the last amendment in the group is amendment No 74, again from Mr Agnew. It proposes removing the power from the Department to issue payment in the form of vouchers. I have to say that vouchers may play a role, as they could assist someone who has an addiction. At this stage, we have not heard any compelling argument either politically or in public which makes us believe that this clause deserves to be taken out. Surely that option should remain. If it is enacted and used in regulations, it is an area that needs to be carefully monitored and reviewed. At this stage, we are minded to oppose the amendment from the Member because we recognise that potentially this may have merits.

Again, I go back to the situation of vulnerable children in households where someone has an addiction. A voucher system could actually be beneficial to that family, ensuring that vulnerable individuals are not put excessively at risk. It is very complicated for social services to look at every case, to be there all the time and to try to look out for those in need. I certainly believe that vouchers ought to be considered as a tool. That may be reviewed with experience as time goes along, but I certainly think that it would be wrong to rule it out at this stage.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for giving way. I understand his argument. I have worked with people with addictions, so I know the problems. The problem is when we license supermarkets to sell alcohol. You give people food vouchers, but they can still use them on premises that sell alcohol.

Mr Beggs: The Member has highlighted a problem. That is a problem which, in turn, passes to the Minister and the Department to get round. It is not a reason why vouchers should be excluded. You are talking about addiction to alcohol in particular — there are many supermarkets and mini-markets that do not sell alcohol. There are ways and means. Again, I say that it is wrong to exclude this as an option at this stage. I would much prefer that this be held to be considered as a tool in the departmental arsenal.

Ultimately, it needs to be scrutinised and its outworkings followed, but I would much prefer that that option would remain to be considered by the Department and officials as a useful tool in dealing with some of the most vulnerable members of the community in order that some of the rest of their households, and maybe even they themselves, may be helped. I have certainly come across some constituents who have alcoholism and, I would say, are not making the best use of the support that is available to them and perhaps contributing to their addictions. I think that this should be left as an option for the Department to determine and for ourselves to scrutinise further down the line.

Mr Maskey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle.

The Assembly will be aware that the Committee for Social Development produced a report on the Welfare Reform Bill two years ago in February 2013. The Committee held 22 meetings to consider the Bill. We received written submissions from 55 organisations and individuals and took oral evidence from 31 of those organisations. The Committee therefore gave the Bill extensive consideration and made a number of recommendations on foot of the evidence that it received. In doing so, it also opposed a number of clauses, one of which, clause 99, is in this group. I will come to that in just a moment.

It is fair to say that during the Committee Stage, the Committee was unanimous in its views regarding the potential impact of the Bill. It is important to restate that obviously these concerns about the impact were shared across the political spectrum. There was deep concern across the parties in the Committee for Social Development at the time. That concern, which was shared by the wide range of stakeholders who gave evidence to the Committee, was that this radical reform of the welfare system, if left unchecked, could seriously impact on the most vulnerable groups in society: children, the sick, lone parents, persons with a disability and so on. The Committee was also very sympathetic to the arguments that were made around access by claimants to independent advice.

Indeed, Members may recall that the Committee was sufficiently concerned that it agreed a motion under Standing Order 35 to refer the Bill to an Ad Hoc Committee on conformity with human rights and equality requirements. However, the Committee was also acutely aware of the potential cost implications of making changes to the Bill, although it must be said that Committee members were never truly convinced that they had received definitive figures from the Department. It is important to note that the Committee adopted a flexible position, if you like, on the best approach to address the financial cost of possible mitigation measures.

The Committee recognised the fact that the Department for Social Development could not fund those measures from its own budget. The Committee therefore agreed that any recommendations that had costs associated with them would have to be discussed and agreed by the Executive and all the parties represented on it. Therefore, where the Committee made recommendations that had associated costs, members agreed to oppose those related clauses, without prejudice to the outcome of the Minister's discussions and individual positions that may be taken by members at a later stage of the Bill process. The Committee felt that that allowed the Minister the flexibility to engage with his Executive colleagues on the potential to fund its recommendations and, therefore, offered the best possibility for adoption of a range of mitigation measures to address the Committee's concerns and those of stakeholders.

I do not think that any of us would have guessed that those discussions would only be finalised two years after the Committee published its report, but I believe that the outcome of the Stormont House negotiations has in many ways superseded the concerns highlighted by the Committee in its report. Indeed, the Committee met yesterday and was briefed by the Department on the Minister's amendments. The Committee noted those. The Committee agreed yesterday that, given the time that has elapsed since the publication of its report and, more importantly, the fact that we have the five-party Stormont House Agreement, which has addressed many of the concerns relating to welfare reform, the Committee is content that it is for individual members to consider their position in relation to the Committee's opposition to clauses, referred to in the Marshalled List of amendments.

I highlight to the House that the Committee opposed 10 clauses in total. In this group of amendments, the Committee opposes clause 99, which deals with payments to joint claimants. There will, obviously, be more detailed discussion of all those matters in the course of the debate. The Committee's concern at the time related to the flexibility that could be applied to payments in terms of the regularity of payments and the splitting of payments. It favoured an approach where the payment would be made twice a month, with an option for a payment to be split between claimants in a household, rather than a single payment per household. In that latter instance, the Committee shared the concerns of stakeholders that having to nominate a member of the household to receive the payment could have a negative impact on the financial independence of women in particular and, therefore, a potentially negative impact on children, given that, in our society, it is still largely the case that women tend to be the main carer and/or the second earner in the family. However, there has undoubtedly been significant progress on this matter and others relating to the Committee's opposition to clauses, which I will come to as the debate develops.

Therefore, as I noted, I leave Committee members to decide for themselves regarding the current position vis à vis that taken by the Committee two years ago. In other words, and very simply, given the fact that the Committee expressed opposition to a number of the Bill's clauses, it took the view that, in the light of the Stormont House Agreement, most — if not all — of those concerns have been addressed in one way or another. Whatever about the precise arguments around the legislation, either by way of legislation and amendments tabled by the Minister and/or the mitigation measures, most of the concerns of members have been met. On that basis, the Committee has mandated me, as Chair, to record to the House that it will not be formally recording opposition to any of the clauses during today's debate.

Let me place on record my thanks to the Committee for the very extensive deliberation it gave to the Bill at that time. An exhaustive amount of work was carried out to make sure that all aspects of the Bill were considered and appropriate recommendations made to the Minister on the basis of those discussions. I thank in particular all the stakeholders who came and gave evidence. I remind Members that that included people from the church and faith-based organisations, the community and voluntary sector, the advice sector, ethnic minority organisations, the Human Rights Commission, the Equality Commission and trade unions. A whole range of organisations made considered submissions, written and oral, to the Committee. It is important to record that the members unanimously agreed a report, which I have addressed in the last few minutes. Therefore, I thank all the people who participated and, in my view, helped to shape the debate from that time. Even though two years have elapsed, all of us will be very pleased to acknowledge that there has been considerable progress made against all the concerns expressed by the stakeholders and the Committee. There is no doubt that much work yet needs to be done.

The Committee and others will remain vigilant as to the effects of welfare reform as it progresses through the Assembly in the time ahead, after the Bill is dealt with and disposed of.

Mr Speaker, with your indulgence, I would also like to make a few remarks as an individual MLA on behalf of my party. Go raibh maith agat for that. I will be brief. I want to make a couple of points in relation to the remarks made by Mr Roy Beggs of the Ulster Unionist Party, who was the first to speak on this group. The remarks of the Member in the House this morning beggar belief. He is a Member representing a party that was joined at the hip with the Tory Government in London as UCUNF (Ulster Conservatives and Unionists - New Force), which promoted the policy and the pledge that has had the effect of imposing swingeing cuts, not only in terms of welfare but to public services, that people right across our community have had to endure. I am delighted to be able to say that other parties, standing against Ulster Unionist commitments at that time, addressed a lot of those concerns.

I want to place something on the record because it is important that the public are aware of all this. During the Committee deliberations on the matter, I conducted a number of bilaterals with all the parties represented in the House, including the Ulster Unionist Party. During those bilaterals, the Ulster Unionist Party never made one single commitment to address any of those issues. I personally had to go to Mr Mike Nesbitt and ask him to give support to his party colleague Michael Copeland, the Member on the Social Development Committee, who told us in the Committee that he was not allowed by the party to make any commitment in relation to the Welfare Reform Bill.

I stand and accuse the Ulster Unionist leader and his party of an absolute abject failure of integrity on that matter. That party stood on a pledge to slash public funding and slash welfare benefits to the most vulnerable people out there and was not prepared to make one single commitment to address it. In fact, only in the last number of weeks, the leader of the Ulster Unionist Party was telling everybody, "We could not get any more money. There was nothing more that we could do. We had a good deal as it was".

Unfortunately for the Ulster Unionist Party, which, in grandstanding —

Mr Beggs: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. The Member is factually incorrect in what he is saying. I ask the Speaker to judge whether or not it is appropriate to say that the Ulster Unionist Party did nothing when, almost two years ago, amendments to the Bill were placed.

Mr Speaker: It is a question of the cut and thrust of debate. The Member may well, in his remarks, simply be reflecting frustration at the lack of progress at particular times. That is his entitlement, as you were quite forthright in some of your commentary. It is cut and thrust. This is meant to be a debate. I think that we should try to avoid the practice of naming Members across the Floor because it is not conducive to good temper and moderate discussion.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I concur with your remarks. I had wanted to come here this morning in a position to welcome the fact that an agreement was reached by all the parties, in the days before Christmas, that represents a far better deal for the people who we collectively, as parties, represent. That deal allows an awful lot more money to be retained by the people who we represent, and that would not otherwise have been available except for the hard work that was carried out. I would have much preferred to have been coming into the Chamber this morning to give a very clear, positive and constructive message to the wider public that we collectively represent that we have managed to broker a deal that is far above anything anywhere else on these islands and that I am glad that we have been a very important part of that. Unfortunately, because others want to grandstand and, rather than look after the most vulnerable, want to promote themselves, I have departed from what I had wanted to do. As I say, all Members will have the opportunity to address all the issues today. I wanted to place on record the behaviour, attitude of and role that was played by the Ulster Unionist Party, which is leading the debate on this group this morning.

Ms P Bradley: I, too, welcome the opportunity to speak on the group 1 amendments at Consideration Stage. I join the Chair in thanking the Committee staff, departmental officials and all those who gave written responses and oral evidence.

Throughout the many hours of the Committee scrutiny of the Welfare Reform Bill, there was, as the Chair said, a consensus across all parties that the Bill required certain changes to meet the needs of our constituents in Northern Ireland. I also recall the many events and panel debates I attended, some of which I would like to forget, usually alongside those sitting opposite. At those debates we heard genuine concerns, not only from voluntary and community groups, but from individuals and the public across Northern Ireland.

Mr Speaker, in this group we address the duties of the Department, administration and assessments. Having studied the fairly lengthy list of amendments, I am drawn to the conclusion that many are either not required or will be dealt with in the regulations. Indeed, Mr Speaker, if some proposers of the amendments had been members of the Committee for Social Development when we were scrutinising the Bill, they would have known that much of the detail will be dealt with in regulations rather than through amendments to the Bill. You will be glad to hear that I do not intend to speak on all the amendments — and I will keep the rest of my speech brief — but I want to address two of them.

First, I draw your attention to amendment No 4, tabled by members of the SDLP, which sets out a new clause where a claimant is unable to provide the documentation required to progress a claim. This was a concern raised in the Committee during initial scrutiny, particularly how it might affect the vulnerable and claimants who were homeless or living in temporary accommodation. As most of us know, from dealing with benefit claimants through our constituency offices, third-party verification is accepted under current claims and payment regulations. As we also know, this is being transferred over to universal credit claims and payment regulations, and it will allow for third-party verification to continue as it is at present. Mr Speaker, this is just one example of an amendment in group 1 that is not required.

I now turn to amendment No 8. This is another new clause, put forward this time by the Ulster Unionist Party, and relates to the frequency of payment of universal credit. Again, this was an issue about which there was great concern in the Committee and in both written and oral responses. There was grave concern that under the proposed monthly payments claimants would face financial hardship, which would ultimately be borne by the children in those families. It was also well-documented in the written submissions that, instead of having enforced frequency of payment, claimants should have the freedom to choose. Notably, Advice NI commented that the frequency of payment, whether weekly, fortnightly or monthly, should be geared towards meeting the needs of the person and not the system.

As most of us should be aware — and I do find it rather strange that the Ulster Unionist Party is not aware of this — payment frequency was agreed as one of the package of measures by the previous Minister, Nelson McCausland, with the Department for Work and Pensions some time ago. The current Minister went one step further last October by proposing that the default position be twice-monthly.

This is just one of the many amendments that should be dealt with in regulations rather than through amendments to the Bill. As we know, regulations will allow for greater flexibility and, therefore, the right place for much of what is listed in these amendments is in the regulations. Mr Speaker, these are just two examples —

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Ms P Bradley: Yes.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member explain why flexibility over payment is needed? Why not put it in the Bill that the default position is twice-monthly? Why would you want to have flexibility to amend this at some point? Why would you not wish the option to go for the monthly basis to be nailed down in the Bill? Will the Member explain?

Ms P Bradley: I thank the Member for his intervention. Flexibility allows us to make changes, as we all know and as you have also stated. For some people, two-weekly payments may not be what is required: we may want to change that, but we cannot do so if it is under primary legislation. It is therefore better to deal with it in regulations in case we need to make changes.

Mr Speaker, I look forward to hearing the rationale for the tabled amendments from all the proposers and, of course, how they propose to pay for some of the changes.

I am happy to support amendment No 35 and the opposition to clause 129 standing part, but I will not be supporting any other amendments in group 1.

12.00 noon

Mrs D Kelly: I am pleased to speak on behalf of the SDLP in relation to the amendments that our party has tabled. Members are, quite rightly, outraged at the petitions of concern against all the amendments. It is an attack on democracy; it is an attack on the House's opportunity to scrutinise fully the implications of the Bill. It is certainly not the reason for which petitions of concern were intended. We all know that petitions of concern were to be deployed only if it was felt that one community would suffer an adverse impact over another.

We all know that the sufferers under welfare reform as proposed by the Tories will be the poorest and most vulnerable in our society. In that regard, one part of our community is going to suffer more of an adverse impact than those who are relatively well off, but, of course, they will be right across the community. It appears that there are now more Tories in the DUP ranks than ever before. I know that a number of them were previously card-carrying members of the Tory party. I deplore the use of petitions of concern in relation to this matter. One might make the reasonable assumption that the late notice of petitions of concern was to save the blushes of the party to my right, which claims that it was stalling on welfare reform in order to get more money from the British Treasury. That money did not come; it is going to come from the other public sectors.

It is ironic that, on the day that we are discussing the Welfare Reform Bill, the media are full of stories about the tax avoidance used by the world's wealthiest companies and individuals in GB society. Last night, we saw the sorry spectacle of many of the wealthiest people tripping into one of the big Tory dinner dances. The Tories have looked after their interests, but they have failed to look after the interests of the poorest. Only four or five weeks ago Oxfam, in preparing for a summit of world leaders, made the case that over 50% of the world's wealth is now held by 1% of the world's population. Many commentators, including, more recently, Pope Francis, have stated that growing wealth inequality is bad for economic development and bad for good governance and is surely morally wrong.

With that backdrop, the SDLP has not been shy about the necessity of welfare reform and improvements to how the system operates; we have put forward amendments in the various groups with the intent of improving the lot of the people who require help through the welfare system. There is no shame in that; it is our responsibility. It has always been our stated intention in relation to the Welfare Reform Bill.

I also note that some Members' remarks and contributions referred to the Stormont House Agreement. The Stormont House Agreement contains no more than six lines on welfare reform, the introduction of the legislation and the flexibilities. At yesterday's Committee meeting, when officials explained the Minister's amendments, we learnt that agreement on how some of the mitigating measures are to be introduced has not yet been reached by the Executive, so we are operating in somewhat of a vacuum in relation to the Bill. It would have been much more useful, and we probably would not have been so sceptical, if we had the two in tandem before the House today. We could have spoken with greater information before us.

We are going to listen carefully to the Minister's commitments in relation to some of the amendments that we have tabled. We will see whether or not he will commit to bring forward regulations that will allay some of our concerns in relation to the new clauses that we are tabling today.

I will address our party's proposed clauses. Mr Beggs quite rightly said, in relation to amendment No 1 to clause 4, that the SDLP had a similar amendment. We are happy to support that amendment, which will help when there is a breakdown in a family relationship or a lack of cooperation so that one family member will not suffer.

I will move to amendment No 3, which proposes a new clause after clause 6. It is similar to the amendment that Roy Beggs proposed. We just felt that ours was in a different place in the Bill; it is more just a question of where it is positioned rather than any of the policy intention.

Amendment No 4 proposes a new clause that would allow third parties to obtain documents necessary for a claim where claimants cannot obtain it themselves. I think that is fairly self-explanatory. I note that there is also a petition of concern on that; you would have to ask why that is, other than that regulations might deal with it. We will wait to hear what the Minister has to say. Amendment No 4 inserts a new clause on the provision of claimant documentation when making a claim for universal credit. It provides that, where a person cannot provide all the required documentation to make a claim, there is provision made for third-party verification in lieu of required documentation, including identity documents, so that the claim can be made. As Ms Bradley said, this was something that the Committee had similar concerns about when it, some two years ago, scrutinised the Bill. Again, we will wait to hear how the Minister is going to deal with that issue.

We think that it is important to table amendments so that we can hear from the Minister and get commitments on the Floor of the House in relation to how we move forward.

Amendment No 9 relates to preparing claimant commitments and states that the Department must have due regard for the claimant's skills, experience, caring responsibilities and physical and mental ill health. This is important because we all, across our constituency offices, have concerns in relation to the types of jobs that people are being expected to undertake, where the skills and experience do not match the work that people are being asked to take up. I do not think that there are many people who would not express some difficulty and require retraining. We are seeing this against a backdrop of savage cuts to the DEL budget and to employment and training. Of course, given the number of redundancies that some people are experiencing, not least in north Antrim, where 800 people are set to lose their jobs, there is an obvious need to spend money on retraining. We have concerns that opportunities are not going to be there for people. We also have concerns about zero-hours contracts, which are on the increase. I think that they are totally immoral. We see an increase in temporary, part-time, low-paid jobs.

I think that the vast majority of people who find themselves unemployed want to get back into the workplace but for some who are in their 40s or 50s, it is difficult. I believe that there should be greater opportunities and that cognisance should be given to their life experience and job experience. The Government and Departments should be in a position to help people to retrain and prepare themselves for a different workplace.

I just want to make one other general point. We do not yet have a robust childcare strategy in place. Over recent weeks, we have heard about the soaring costs of childcare. It is all right for people who have never experienced unemployment to make assumptions about people being work-shy, but that is not so in the vast majority of cases. The majority of people want to get out to work because they think that it is better for their self-esteem and self-confidence, and it provides a better role model for their family. If family income is reduced to such a level that there are increasing levels of poverty and more children in the North of Ireland living in poverty, I can understand why people have to make the choice about whether or not they take up a job and how that impacts on their family.

The Tories' agenda of making work pay has not been accompanied by more robust measures for tackling some of the loopholes that employers use in the provision of terms and conditions for such employment. It is a matter of regret that the Executive have not yet got their head around providing good, affordable childcare to enable people to go back into the workplace.

I will now turn my attention to amendment No 8, which introduces the default position of an award of universal credit being paid twice monthly unless a claimant or joint claimants opt to be paid monthly. I heard what Ms Bradley said, and I hope that the Minister will address this. We will listen carefully to that and make a judgement later in the day as the debate continues.

Amendment No 9 is about the Department's regard for a claimant's skills when completing a claimant commitment. We need to be assured that people have the right help at the right time, because we all know how complicated many of these forms are. In our constituency offices, we can hardly keep up because of the changing nature of such forms. It is true to say that, while a lot of welfare reform has to be agreed by the House, it is also the case that other welfare reform comes from Westminster. Some childcare and tax vouchers, for example, are non-devolved matters, so there is already a very changed landscape, and it is difficult for professionals to keep up, never mind people who find themselves being in circumstances in which they first have to enter that system and have never been unemployed before.

In amendment No 11, we ask the Department to:

"take account of relevant medical evidence including evidence of mental ill health".

I heard what others said about how that is currently the case, but, given the track record of Atos in particular, it is very clear to me in my constituency work and representational role that quite a bit of evidence is set aside. There are different interpretations by a number of health-care professionals who have medical evidence before them but disregard it.

I will give you one particular example as to why I am concerned. I represent a lady who has an arthritic condition called ankylosing spondylitis, which is a degenerative chronic condition. It means that she was not able to continue in her job as a home help, as it used to be known. The health-care professional who made the assessment was a qualified nurse, but she turned the lady down and gave her nil points for that disability. When I represented the lady at appeal, the GP on the panel was disgusted and absolutely shocked and could not believe that this level of medical evidence and knowledge was set aside. It would seem that some of the very energetic members of Atos, in their attempts to refuse people —

Mr F McCann: Will the Member give way?

Mrs D Kelly: I will, yes.

Mr F McCann: I understand what you are saying, but I find it rather strange, given that it was your Minister who introduced the legislation that brought Atos into power. When it was appointed, there was the privatisation of medical support services, and, in the first year, from June 2011 to 2012, 13,740 claimants were removed by Atos. It was your Minister who brought it in, yet you are standing here today crying crocodile tears over it.

Mrs D Kelly: I do not see any crocodile tears in evidence. I am merely stating fact. I do not think that my colleague sent out a job description that asked all those healthcare professionals who would disregard the evidence and turn people down to apply. We certainly acknowledge that a job of work is required to be done, and we expect the highest professional standards in carrying it out.

The SDLP has not, in any shape or form, defended Atos's track record. I believe that the contract has now been awarded to Capita. Mr McCann's blushes will be saved somewhat later today by the DUP's petition of concern when he goes through whatever Lobby he chooses. So, I think that you have more questions to ask of your party colleagues.

The system has always been that people put forward medical evidence. We are asking that there is acknowledgement of evidence of mental ill health. I have represented people at appeal who have chronic and enduring mental health conditions for which there is no cure. Those people have management regimes that usually involve medication. I believe that there should be greater cognisance of that and that a greater onus of responsibility should be placed on the assessors. Some of them behave as though they are the red coats who run around doing parking tickets as though there is some sort of reward voucher scheme for turning people down.

I think that over 40% of appeals have been won. People are talking about the cost, but if we get it right and put the right people in to do the right assessments to get the right outcomes, costs can be reduced for appeals. More importantly, the people who are at the other end of those appeals will not have to suffer the stress and anxiety that goes with them. The number of people who I have had to take aside so that they can dry their tears before they even go in to the appeal is very humbling. Those are not occasions that anyone looks forward to, and we should not be robbing people of their basic human dignity. We should be there to support them. That is what the welfare state was created for. It was created to give human dignity to people and to put people at the centre of a society where they are treated more fairly and equally. It was not created to reduce them to snivelling wrecks as they go to an appeal to get what they are rightly due. That is why we are looking for tighter regulations, but if the Minister has something to say, we will listen carefully.

Amendment No 12 looks at, as Mr Beggs referred to, victims of hate incidents and at allowing some leeway in observing claimant commitment. We looked particularly at domestic violence in that context. Only yesterday, I had a victim of domestic violence having to go for repeat ESA interviews. I advised them that, as I understand, there is a commitment from Minister Storey's predecessor to victims of domestic violence. Given the huge rise in the number of domestic violence incidents that are coming to our police service's attention, the House should address and take seriously that vulnerable group's needs. I ask Members to think carefully about that.

I also ask that this amendment not be subject to a petition of concern. I think that that would be a very good statement from the House about our commitment to those people who suffer from such attacks. I remind Members that a person who comes forward to the police for help or to make a complaint will usually have suffered a minimum of 35 incidents of attack or assault. So, we are talking about people who are in crisis and at a very vulnerable time in their life. I ask Members to reflect carefully on that.

Amendment No 13 deals with similar issues.

In amendment No 17, we are asking the Department to bring in a replacement to the independent living fund within 18 months of the Bill's commencement. I note Mr Beggs's comments about commitments that my colleague Mr Ramsey got. Mr Ramsey will address that amendment later. I think that he had some discussions with the Health Minister about that. We will check that out, and Mr Ramsey will hopefully inform the House of where that commitment is and of how satisfied he was by what the Minister said.

Amendment No 19 deals with evidence of mental ill health. In a society coming out of conflict, there has to be recognition that instances of mental ill health are on the rise. People are suffering. A lot of workplace absenteeism is now noted as being as a result of stress and anxiety, so mental ill health is a cause for concern to me and, hopefully, to the House.

I have touched on victims in another amendment. A difficulty for some families who were victims of the conflict and who I have represented is having to relive and open their wounds again as they have to tell another person why they should get support. It really is opening up that emotive, raw state for them. That is one of the reasons why we want sensitivity in the Department in relation to these amendments. As a former occupational therapist who worked in a psychiatric unit about 14 years ago, I recall vividly a senior psychiatrist remarking on the numbers who were presenting at that time with mental ill health as a consequence of the Troubles, so we are only starting to see that pattern emerging. Her words were prophetic, and I think that has been on the increase.

You have to look to young people in particular and the level of suicides, so we have to take proper recognition of mental ill health. It is not something that someone glibly puts down who wants to be pigeonholed. I hope that the Department takes greater awareness and cognisance of any medical evidence in relation to mental ill health.

Amendment No 36 is similar and deals with the same subject as amendment No 19. We will listen carefully to what Mr Agnew says about amendment Nos 37, 38 and 39 in relation to the assessments and why he believes they should be carried out by a trust or GP. Some Members said that they already will be and that it might be some sort of agreement with the various trusts in relation to the release of health-care professionals. After speaking to Mr Agnew yesterday, I believe that some of the intent of the amendments was around accountability. I look forward to hearing further from him during the course of today's debate.

I met Mr Agnew also in relation to amendment Nos 43 and 44. Amendment No 43 is "cash" in its broadest terms. It is around the bank Giro cheque and the Post Office account. We all know that there has been a crackdown by the banks on people opening accounts and moving money about. They have to give greater explanation to their bank, and a minimum requirement is two utility bills. For people who find themselves homeless or in sheltered or hostel-type accommodation, that proves to be an onerous task. I believe that Mr Agnew will refer further to that. It is an amendment that we are minded to support in relation to the difficulties that people find themselves in when opening bank accounts. Again, we will listen carefully to Mr Agnew's contribution on amendment Nos 44 and 45 and the policy intent behind them.

Amendment No 53 is the one that I referred to a few moments ago in relation to taking account of victims and survivors. We have, over many years, given various commitments as a society to the victims of the conflict. Sadly, not very many of them have materialised. This would be an important statement by the House that special recognition is given by the Assembly to people who continue to suffer the trauma of the past. I ask the DUP not to deploy the petition of concern on this clause. I ask it not to deploy a petition of concern against any of the clauses, but, in particular, I ask for some recognition to be given to the sensitivities of this clause.

Amendment Nos 57 and 74 are from Mr Agnew, and we, as a party, give a commitment to hear him on the matter.

That ends my contribution on the first group of amendments. We, as a party, have shown responsibility and concern for the most vulnerable. We have done what we said we would do in the tabling of these amendments.

Mr Dickson: I will just take some time to welcome the long-awaited return of the Welfare Reform Bill to the House, two long years after its original introduction. In that intervening period, we have had nothing but crisis and deep anxiety across the community over this key piece of legislation: crisis from an Executive seemingly failing to reach agreement and putting the power-sharing institutions at risk of collapse, at not insubstantial cost to the community and certainly in excess of £100 million; and, as a result of scaremongering, a pervasive and unwarranted anxiety amongst the people who we represent, many of whom are the most vulnerable in our society.

It is for those two reasons that I commend the agreement reached at Stormont Castle and Stormont House to move this key piece of legislation forward. It is time to end the crisis and anxiety and to implement welfare reform alongside the concessions and the mitigation measures that were won and agreed. Those are agreed mitigation measures, yet, listening to some of the debate today, one would wonder whether anybody was ever at the game when the agreement was being made.

These concessions will protect the most vulnerable from the most unjust and harshest measures passed by a Conservative-led Westminster Government. For the record and for Mr Nesbitt, I am not, nor have I ever been, a member of the Liberal Democrat party. I am a proud member of the Alliance Party. Those are the two feet that I am standing on in the Chamber. I also wish to state for the record that our Member of Parliament sits in opposition to that Conservative Government at Westminster. She voted in opposition to that legislation.

The Alliance Party considers that the Stormont House Agreement was a reasonable and honourable attempt to reach compromise. It was a five-party agreement, unless I hear disagreement in the Chamber today. We expect to see the whole agreement put in place. It is an entire process, and it is important that it is put back on track. I accept and understand that some of the agreement was made behind closed doors. The exceptional nature of the problems that are faced required exceptional responses. However, I have to call out the cynical attempts today of those using this legislation to do nothing but electioneer. Some who nodded this compromise through when the agreement was made have now decided to play politics in order to gain what they see as an electoral advantage or perhaps a chance to launch personal political ambitions; maybe there are a few leadership bids under way in the Chamber.

I wish to place on record my and my party's dislike of the unilateral use of petitions of concern, particularly by the DUP. Use of a petition of concern as a negotiating tactic is not what they were intended for, and I consider it unacceptable. Such actions could ultimately unravel the agreement and the hard-won concessions that neither Scotland or Wales have been able to secure. Nevertheless, I recognise the contribution of others in the debate and those who were not party to the Stormont Castle or Stormont House agreements. I have some sympathy for the proposals made by Mr Agnew, and I will listen to what he has to say. I think that a great many of the amendments proposed today can and will be dealt with by the Minister in his response to the House, but it is important that every one of them is costed.

12.30 pm

On the amendments, the Alliance Party will honour the Stormont House Agreement. We made an agreement. We are an honourable party and will stick to our agreements. We can and will today support those amendments that are agreed, because to do otherwise would be to undermine an agreement that all party leaders accepted and signed up to. We also point out that many of the amendments relate to making regulatory powers for things that are already done or will soon be done. We are sympathetic to many of those amendments, but we expect the Minister to allow all-party input to them through regulations that will come to the Committee. We will listen to what he has to say. For Alliance, implementing this legislation in a way that protects the vulnerable, without stopping the legislation, will be done when the regulations are produced.

I turn to the group 1 amendments, specifically, the proposed amendments pertaining to the Department, the administration and assessments. During the Committee Stage of the Bill, the frequency of payments was often cited by those in the social sector as a serious cause of concern. It was stated that the proposed monthly payment arrangements, as implemented in the rest of the UK, would likely cause undue budgeting pressures on society's most vulnerable. The Department has taken that on board, and will apply a default fortnightly payment schedule for welfare recipients. A requirement, therefore, is not a necessary part of the Bill and contradicts the mechanisms agreed by the Executive parties. I am satisfied that progress has been made on this issue.

With regard to amendment No 12, the Alliance Party has been one of the stronger proponents of the more comprehensive support for people affected by hate crime. Sadly, hate crime is on the rise in Northern Ireland and has a serious and pervasive effect on the lives and families of those affected, many of whom require rehousing and a period of recovery. Therefore, not only are measures in our welfare system to accommodate hate-crime victims appropriate and just, it is important that we avoid inflicting further trauma as a result of welfare sanctions. The Department has indicated that such mechanisms will exist through good cause, a clause contained in the Bill. I am content to support this; however, it is only appropriate that we keep the operation of this under close scrutiny to ensure that it functions as intended and supports victims through their period of recovery.

Another issue that was highlighted repeatedly in welfare reform in the rest of the UK is the need for a solid medical basis on which to make assessments. We will therefore support the amendment No 35 proposed by the Ulster Unionists in that regard. This will ensure that the relevant medical evidence is taken into account when assessing a person's ability to carry out daily living or mobility activities. However, that raises the question of how the medical evidence is obtained, at what cost and how qualified is the assessor in interpreting the medical documentation. I believe that these questions are yet to be fully answered, but I think those matters will be dealt with through regulation.

To ensure a system that is fit for purpose, I call upon the Minister and the Committee to investigate these issues in depth and establish that appropriate and fair measures are put in place. In concluding on this section, it is vital that I highlight the mitigating measures in regard to such issues that have been agreed with Treasury. Anything else that is uncostered is not likely to proceed in the House today and would cause a further burden on an already over-stressed and stretched Budget. Furthermore, the terms of agreement are much more favourable than those presented in the rest of the United Kingdom. We must support the structures as agreed or face losing these concessions and returning to the crises, anxiety and inaction of the previous two years.

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has arranged to immediately after the lunchtime suspension. I propose, by leave of the Assembly, to suspend the sitting until 2.00 pm. The first item of business when we return will be Question Time.

The debate stood suspended.

The sitting was suspended at 12.34 pm.

On resuming (Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair) —

Oral Answers to Questions

Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): We will start with listed questions.

Air Carriers: Incentives

1. Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how her Department intends to incentivise transatlantic carriers to introduce new routes to Belfast International Airport. (AQO 7534/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): My Department works closely with Belfast International Airport to encourage new transatlantic routes with business and inbound tourism potential. That support is provided in a number of ways. For example, Tourism Ireland cooperative marketing support is available for transatlantic services. We also provide practical support for Belfast International Airport and our other airports by taking a stand at the annual World Routes conference. Another important factor in encouraging transatlantic connectivity has been the decisive action by the Executive to eliminate air passenger duty (APD) on direct long-haul flights.

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Go raibh maith agat a Aire. Thank you, Minister. I recently spoke to the chief executive of Belfast International Airport. I also met the owners of the airport in Toronto and I met Massport, which owns Logan Airport in Boston. There is definitely interest in a transatlantic flight, but we are falling down at the minute because there are none out of Belfast.

Does the Minister agree that now is the time for a concerted and united push by the new owners of the airport, Tourism Ireland, Belfast International Airport and our many ambassadors to try to bring in the number of transatlantic visitors that we would like? That is especially the case given the success of Dublin Airport. As the Minister knows, the road is a big help, but it goes both ways.

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his question. In his supplementary question, he acknowledged the importance of connectivity for us in Northern Ireland and the fact that we need more international flights. We are pleased that the Newark flight continues to be a success, although we were disappointed last year, when the flight was dropped to 10 months a year from 12.

I acknowledge that much work needs to be done, and I hope to meet representatives of some Canadian airlines again later this year. However, we are in direct competition with Dublin Airport. It now has four direct flights to Canada, and that is causing us difficulties in trying to achieve more connectivity, particularly with North America.

I welcome the increased connectivity with Europe and, if things go according to plan, that will increase again this year. I am very pleased about that, but we need to increase the connectivity with North America, in particular, and I would welcome any offers of help that would help us try to achieve that.

Mr Kinahan: When will the Minister, or will she, use her influence in the Executive to help create the enterprise zone at the international airport, with the tax incentives and infrastructure, and help make that airport not just the lead airport in Northern Ireland but possibly, one day, the lead airport in the whole of Ireland?

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his question. Of course, he is referring to the new chief executive's ambitious plans, which I welcome, for the land in and around the international airport. He has talked about creating an enterprise zone, but, as yet, only one area here has been designated by Her Majesty's Treasury as an enterprise zone and that, of course, is in Coleraine. No other areas have been designated as enterprise zones yet. We are very happy to work with Graham and his team at the international airport to market the opportunities for having such close proximity to an international airport, and we will continue to do that.

We will also continue to work with Graham and the other airports to look at the opportunities that have been presented by the Department for Transport fund that has been made available for regional connectivity throughout Europe. The House will know that there have been quite stringent guidelines in relation to helping airports develop their routes. This has been slightly relaxed, and we are looking forward to encouraging the airports and airlines to bid into that Department for Transport fund and try to bring some of that money to Northern Ireland.

Mr D McIlveen: I thank the Minister for her answers so far. She will, of course, not be surprised that I entirely support the Member of South Belfast's sentiments and his call for greater transatlantic connectivity. However, we would perhaps struggle to encourage direct connectivity to areas like China, India and Russia that we are seeking to do business with. Would the Minister support the proposed expansion of Heathrow Airport, and would she see it as having a long-term benefit to Northern Ireland's economy, as well as to the south-east of England?

Mrs Foster: I do think that the expansion of Heathrow will bring greater benefits for Northern Ireland because it is the hub for us in the UK; it is important for us. I welcome the fact that the British Airways flight from Belfast goes into terminal 5, because that allows easier connectivity for travellers. Indeed, I flew into terminal 5 for the first time last week since the changeover, and it was very smooth and easy, even if it was a point-to-point access to London. I have written to the airport's commission. Sir Howard Davies came over and met the Minister for Regional Development and me in 2013. I have written to him again to stress the importance of Northern Ireland's connectivity into that UK hub, because, of course, he is absolutely right to stress that we will not have a direct link into those onward international travel destinations, so we need to be able to access those in as easy a way as possible.

Dr McDonnell: I thank the Minister for her comments so far. I, too, recognise the importance of transatlantic flights. What recent discussions has she had, if any, with the British Government in London on reducing APD rates on short-haul flights? While long-haul flights are important, short-haul flights are doubly so, as a lot more people use them, and the cost of those flights is prohibitive in some cases.

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his question. He will, of course, know that the Executive were successful in devolving APD for long-haul flights. We have a zero rate for long-haul flights, so the flight to America does not attract any air passenger duty. I have had meetings with two airlines in the past two days, and each of them raised the issue of APD and the fact that it is a barrier to growth in UK markets. I say to them, as I say to you, that I absolutely support them in their campaign to have air passenger duty abolished across the United Kingdom, because it is having a disproportionate impact on regional airports outside London. London will always have the throughput of traffic, regardless of air passenger duty. However, it presents a problem for those of us in regional airports, and, therefore, we need to continue to push. I welcome the Member's support to continue to push against air passenger duty, and I will certainly raise it with the Government in future.

Corporation Tax: Block Grant Cost

2. Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline any recent discussions she has had with her Executive colleagues and others on the cost to the block grant of reducing the rate of corporation tax in Northern Ireland to 10%. (AQO 7535/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Ultimately, it will be for the Northern Ireland Executive to agree on what any new rate should be set at. The push for the devolution of corporation tax powers has tended to be viewed with a perceived move to a rate of 12.5%. As a result, discussions on the block grant adjustment for a reduced rate have also tended to focus on the public finance consequences of moving to a 12.5% rate. An even lower rate of corporation tax would require a bigger adjustment to public finances but would also be more attractive to investors.

Mr McGlone: Mo bhuíochas leis an Aire chomh maith. My thanks to the Minister as well. Given that the Minister had introduced the notion of the reduction to 10%, what costing was made around that as to what the further reduction might cost in monetary terms and its potential impact on the block grant as a consequence?

Mrs Foster: I am very pleased to hear that the Member thinks that I introduced the concept of a 10% rate. It was not me; I would like to take the credit for that, but it was not me who introduced it. That has been DUP party policy on the rate of corporation tax for quite some time, because we believe that we should undercut our nearest competitor instead of going to the same level as it. However, I am a realist, and I understand that the Executive take the decision on corporate tax. If you were to ask me where I think it will settle, I understand that it will settle in and around 12.5%. The lower rate, of course, would bring us more potential for jobs, but it would cost more to the public finances; there is no point in saying otherwise. That has to be taken into consideration as well. I believe that we will settle in and around 12.5%, but, of course, that is a matter for the Executive.

Mr Dunne: I think that it is right that we welcome the Minister back from her travels, where she was selling Northern Ireland to Dubai. I think that we all recognise the excellent work that she does and the energy and commitment that she puts into it. As there is no doubt that the rate of corporation tax will be an added incentive to attract new companies into Northern Ireland, does the Minister believe that companies will be attracted in advance of the rate being reduced?

Mrs Foster: Some of the work that has been carried out by the Northern Ireland Centre for Economic Policy points to the fact that we will see a benefit, albeit a small benefit, before the rate is reduced. That is because, once the rate has been settled by the Northern Ireland Executive and the date for implementation has been settled, Invest Northern Ireland will start competing for those new types of jobs. It may be the case that some of those companies might like to relocate or set up a new business in Northern Ireland before the rate kicks in. That is because business plans and investments are normally set two to three years in advance. We should have a clear view on which companies will come in that first year if we get out and start selling the rate and the date in the near future.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as ucht a freagraí go dtí seo. Is the Minister advocating a proposition similar to that of the Smith commission in Scotland, which talks about the local retention of any increased tax take as a result of a change in local policy on corporation tax?

Mrs Foster: Of course we are going to gain from the corporate tax take because we are paying for it through our block grant. We will gain the benefit from whatever increase in corporation tax we get. Obviously, there will be a cost initially, and that will not come all in one year. That cost will be tapered up to 2020. That is why we need to get out and start getting the benefits of a lower rate of corporation tax as soon as possible.

Mrs Overend: Does the Minister recognise that the issue is not just about matching or undercutting the Republic's rate? Rather, does the Minister agree that there is a need to ensure that Northern Ireland has a full basket of measures to accompany the lower rate of corporation tax, including a super-skilled workforce and a major expansion of A-grade office accommodation?

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for her question. I have never indicated that it is corporate tax alone that will bring a more sustainable economy and give us the growth of 10% to 12% that we will believe will happen if we have a lower rate of corporation tax. That will only happen if we have the correct infrastructure in place, be that telecoms, hard infrastructure — road infrastructure, in other words — or the softer infrastructure that we need, by which I mean skills. We also need to have the appropriate messaging going out as well because we want to send out a very positive message about Northern Ireland as a place to invest in and to do business in. Whilst we have always had a very talented workforce here in Northern Ireland, as I said on many occasions, we now have the tax proposition as well, so we have tax and talent. We must concentrate on that messaging and get it out across the world.

Corporation Tax: FDI Impact

3. Mr Attwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the impact on foreign direct investment of reducing the rate of corporation tax in Northern Ireland to 10%. (AQO 7536/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Ultimately, it will be for the Northern Ireland Executive to agree on what any new rate should be set at. Research to date has focused on moving to a reduced rate of 12.5% and demonstrates the significant economic benefits that this can bring, not just in encouraging foreign investment but investment from local firms. An even lower rate of corporation tax would likely be more attractive to investors but would also require a bigger adjustment to the public finances.

Mr Attwood: In answer to the previous question, you rightly referred to the talent of our people in terms of their skills. That point was recognised last week by one of our entrepreneurs, who acknowledged that, because of the skills in Belfast, it has now become a digital capital. Does the Minister recognise that, on the far side of any reduction in corporation tax, there is a risk that regional imbalance will be compounded as businesses are attracted to Belfast because of the cluster of talent in Belfast, which may not exist in other parts of Northern Ireland? Do you recognise that as a risk that is proven by international experience, and will you outline how that risk might be mitigated?

2.15 pm

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for raising that issue. He will know that capital cities are always different to the regions. That is recognised in the Republic of Ireland and in the rest of the United Kingdom as well. He mentioned the risks about skills, which is why we must have strong further and higher education colleges across Northern Ireland and for them to be aware of their skills base, what they need to grow their skills base and how they can develop a unique selling point for their regional area.

I do not think that every regional area should go after the same types of job, because it will then become a race to the bottom. It is important, therefore, that everybody identifies their unique selling point. We are starting to have that discussion in the Executive subcommittee on regional opportunities, which has met for the first time. Since that meeting, I have had a very good engagement with Londonderry Chamber of Commerce and many other players in the north-west to try to find out what they feel their unique selling point is. I hope that that will be replicated around Northern Ireland so that we can have differences across Northern Ireland but strongly send out a message of talent and tax.

Mr G Robinson: I thank the Minister for her answers so far. Does she believe that we have sufficient skills in the Northern Ireland workforce, especially in my East Londonderry constituency, to attract more foreign direct investment into Northern Ireland?

Mrs Foster: Skills are vital to attracting high-value foreign direct investment. Our workforce is a key part of that and is what makes us a very successful story for foreign direct investment in the United Kingdom. Now that we have, or will have, corporation tax as a tool in our box, we need to further implement that tax and talent message. That will happen not just in East Londonderry but right across Northern Ireland.

It is a collaborative effort that needs to be taken on not just by Invest Northern Ireland but by other members of the Executive to look at the whole picture of what a constituency has to offer and to work with the super-councils. Invest Northern Ireland is now working more proactively with the new chief executives of the super-councils. It is certainly down to the fact that, for example, regional support initiatives are being devolved to the councils, so there will also be more economic powers for the councils. It is a collaborative effort, and I look forward to working with councils across Northern Ireland.

Ms Sugden: I did not intend to quote the Minister's response, but here goes. Does she agree that, along with corporation tax, Project Kelvin and the imminent enterprise zone will create a global unique selling point for Northern Ireland, which happens to be in my constituency in Coleraine?

Mrs Foster: Yes, and I hope that the lower rate of corporation tax will make local areas look at what they have to offer, how they can package that together and market it, and how they can make it better. The Member is right to mention Project Kelvin, because it is an absolutely fabulous story to tell, particularly to our American counterparts, so that they know that information can leave Northern Ireland and get to the east coast of America more quickly than it can go from the east coast to the west coast of America. That is a fabulous story, so I hope that that is the sort of collaborative thinking that will go on across Northern Ireland.

Jobs: North Antrim

4. Mr McKay asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on her efforts to secure additional jobs in North Antrim. (AQO 7537/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Invest Northern Ireland continues to support job creation, business growth and investment in North Antrim. Between 1 April 2011 and 30 March 2013, it made 661 offers of support to companies in North Antrim, offering £14 million of assistance, which contributed to total investment in the constituency of over £70 million. That has led to the promotion of 848 new jobs in the area. Invest collaborates with local stakeholders to review the features and benefits of North Antrim to maximise opportunities to secure additional jobs.

Mr McKay: I thank the Minister for her answer. Does she agree that Invest NI could do a lot better for North Antrim, especially in comparison with constituencies around Belfast? Will she also agree that, to arrest the decline, North Antrim and, indeed, Ballymena should be prioritised, given the jobs that have gone at the Patton Group and the jobs that will go at Gallaher. Does she agree that North Antrim needs to be a priority area for investment?

Mrs Foster: I hope that every area is a priority area for Invest Northern Ireland. Indeed, when the Member and other colleagues look at the figures for economic activity in their area, I implore them to look not just at the jobs created through foreign direct investment but at those created through local indigenous companies and, indeed, at start-ups in their own area. North Antrim has had a huge number of start-ups — 1,554 — over time. That is 178 indigenous start-ups per 10,000 of the population. That shows a very entrepreneurial spirit in North Antrim. The unemployment rate is one of the lower rates in Northern Ireland, sitting at 3.6%, as opposed to the Northern Ireland rate of 5.7%. So, I am sure that the Member will want to be positive about his constituency and what it has to offer.

Mr Allister: Can I quote the Minister some other figures that came from her in answer to Assembly questions? In the last five years, North Antrim has had eight foreign direct investment visits. In the latest figures, which are for 2014, North Antrim had one of the lowest levels of Invest NI contribution, at 1.9% of the whole of what was invested in Northern Ireland. In the last three years, North Antrim has had —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Sorry, can the Member please come to a question?

Mr Allister: — 574 new jobs compared with 1,310 in the Minister's constituency. Why is she not playing fair by North Antrim?

Mrs Foster: Again, I say to you, Mr Deputy Speaker, that Members need to look at the whole picture when they are looking at their own areas and should not pick out statistics that suit their negative agenda. It is disappointing that Members do not want to be positive about their own area, because when foreign direct investors look at an area, they look at what its representatives are saying about it. That is true not just for North Antrim but, indeed, for other areas in Northern Ireland. So, if a negativity is coming out of that particular area, they will know that the people are not pro-business, that they do not want to move ahead and that they are looking at the negative points in their constituency. The Member needs to look at all the statistics on North Antrim, not just some.

Mr Allister: Eight visits.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order, please. I remind Members on both sides and at the back of the House not to make remarks from a sedentary position.

Mr Frew: Whilst other representatives of North Antrim play the area down, I most certainly will play the area up. We have some great indigenous companies in North Antrim and throughout County Antrim, which benefits all our constituents. What is the Minister doing to help those companies to grow and to find new export markets?

Mrs Foster: I think that the emphasis should be on looking to those new export markets for our indigenous companies. That is why we spend a lot of our time looking for new markets and bringing companies through to new markets. Just today, SDC Trailers announced that it was doing significant business in Saudi Arabia. Whilst that is not a company from County Antrim, it is from not too far away. That is a very good pointer to other firms that they need to get out and to sell into those markets, because that brings jobs to the local area. I have seen that happen with Wrightbus, obviously, which is a stellar company in the Member's constituency. I have also seen it with Randox next door in South Antrim, which recently announced 540 new jobs for the area. That is not just for the town of Antrim, of course, although it will very much welcome it; it is for the wider area as well. So, there is some very good news about indigenous companies in Northern Ireland.

Tourism: Visitor Numbers

5. Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, following the staging of several high-profile international events, to outline how Tourism Northern Ireland plans to build on visitor numbers. (AQO 7538/11-15)

Mrs Foster: International events such as the Irish Open and Giro d'Italia attract large numbers of visitors, showcase Northern Ireland on a global stage and give us the opportunity to drive further visitor numbers through the positive perception that they create. Tourism Northern Ireland has successfully used major events to profile Northern Ireland as a visitor destination through award-winning marketing campaigns.

However, marketing and promotion is just one aspect. To grow visitor numbers and, more importantly, visitor spend, we need to ensure that we invest in the product offering, develop visitor-inspired experiences and increase the capacity and competitiveness of our tourism industry. These are key work streams for Tourism Northern Ireland, which will continue to successfully use global iconic events as a catalyst for tourism development and growth.

Mr Campbell: There is nothing like being prepared. The Minister will be aware that the Open is due to come to Royal Portrush in the next few years. Hopefully it will be a very successful event for all of Northern Ireland. Will she plan not just for the preparation for the Open, which I know is well under way, but for the success that would follow such a magnificent event?

Mrs Foster: Yes, absolutely. It is appropriate, when the Member asks me a question, that I mark today the passing of one of tourism's great ambassadors in Northern Ireland, Martin McCrossan. Let me pass on my deepest sympathy to Martin's wife Sharon and his family. He was a great ambassador in the Member's city and brought many tours around the city's walls. We will miss him dreadfully from tourism in Northern Ireland.

Work has already begun on the infrastructure for the Open. Indeed, some money is set aside in the budget this year for infrastructure works. That will continue, and then we will look to build on that. I hope that it is not a one-off, Mr Campbell. I hope that it is the start of our being on the rota for a good number of years. I have every confidence that Royal Portrush will be able to deliver that.

Mrs McKeivitt: As the Minister well knows, when you are trying on an all-island basis to attract the likes of sporting tourism etc into areas, particularly around south Down, where a fine example will happen now in May, the lack of available bed space to attract major events is a huge problem. What will Invest NI do to try to open up investment to those who are looking to bring extra bed space to the likes of south Down in particular?

Mrs Foster: As the Member knows, Invest Northern Ireland deals with tourist accommodation grants. Of course, it is ready and willing to work with any private sector company that comes forward with a tourist accommodation programme. Unfortunately, there have not been any to date. I did notice that my ministerial colleague has been doing some work in and around Portrush on tourist accommodation. I have not had the opportunity to speak to him on whether he intends to look elsewhere as well. Maybe that is something that the Member would like to follow up with him.

G8: Economic Legacy

6. Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the economic legacy of hosting the G8 summit held on 17-18 June 2013 at the Lough Erne Resort, County Fermanagh. (AQO 7539/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The G8 summit provided Northern Ireland with the opportunity to reach a new and diverse global audience with an entirely new message about Northern Ireland and its people, landscape and economy. The benefits associated with an event such as the G8 summit are focused on the increased investment, tourism and trade opportunities that the global exposure might present.

Northern Ireland immediately capitalised on the exposure generated by the G8 summit by hosting a very successful investment conference in October 2013. I was also encouraged to note in the final evaluation report that 71% of the Northern Ireland tourism industry believe that the G8 will impact positively on the future growth of tourism in Northern Ireland.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Minister for that update. Prior to the G8's coming to Fermanagh, was the Minister given any assurances about improvements to mobile telecommunications? If so, was that borne out after the G8 was over?

Mrs Foster: We were given the assurance during the event that there would be the appropriate telecoms in place to deal with such a major event, because one thing that we wanted to ensure was that people did not leave the event feeling that they were in a backwater and were not able to use the telecoms there. That worked very well indeed, through BT and other providers. I have been somewhat disappointed by the level of infrastructure that was left after the G8 summit. I am hoping that the mobile infrastructure project, which of course is a national project, will enhance that coverage again. We will keep a very close eye on that project to ensure that it delivers for us.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): That ends the period for listed questions. We will now move on to topical questions.

Broadband: Northern Ireland Roll-out

T1. Mr Craig asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the increased roll-out of high-speed broadband in Northern Ireland, which makes rural businesses competitive on the national and international stage, meaning that the Minister should be congratulated on the broadband roll-out in Lagan Valley, where 400 homes have received the service in Annahilt, with a further 200 homes benefitting in the Temple area and, more importantly, 20 businesses now able to compete internationally. (AQT 2081/11-15)

2.30 pm

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his question and for letting me know that he wanted to address this issue. It is important that I give the House an update on the broadband improvement project. The project is being delivered in eight phases with the objective of providing basic fixed-line broadband services of at least 2 megabits per second, in areas that previously have had no service, and improvements in the availability of superfast fixed-line broadband as well. By 31 December 2014, over 17,500 premises had benefited from the improvements being delivered. The project is on track to deliver benefits for 30,000 premises by 31 March this year, and we anticipate that in excess of 45,000 premises will have benefited by the completion, as of 31 December 2015. It has been a good intervention to try to help those people who have not, to date, been able to access the appropriate level of broadband support.

Mr Craig: I thank the Minister very much for that answer. The project has been very successful. I can testify that I have had a 148 fourfold increase in my own internet speed, so thank you Minister.

What impact does the Minister believe that this will have on rural businesses in particular?

Mr Wilson: We still use pigeons in east Antrim. [Laughter.]

Mr Craig: I am aware of five businesses in my locality that are now doing international business because of that connection. Do you feel that this will have a benefit for other businesses in other rural localities?

Mrs Foster: Such as east Antrim? Yes. Obviously, we pride ourselves on being able to do business across the world, but to be able to do that we have to have a presence online. I have been to many small businesses that are growing at a very fast rate and that is down to their telecoms infrastructure. When I talk about infrastructure and the need for good infrastructure across Northern Ireland, I do not just talk about roads infrastructure, although that is of course critical; I talk also about telecoms infrastructure, because it is important that we communicate with the rest of the world, and we are hoping that this will enable many businesses to do so.

Creative Industries: Congratulations

T2. Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to move from pigeons to the creative industries and join him in congratulating the creative industries in Northern Ireland, particularly those that have had major success in recent days. (AQT 2082/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Let me send my congratulations, first of all, to those behind 'Boogaloo and Graham'. From what I have seen of the two chickens, I very much want to see the rest of the film, which had such success at the BAFTA awards for best short film on Sunday. It was a tremendous endorsement of the creative industries here in Northern Ireland, and I understand that the short film has also been nominated for an Oscar at the Academy awards. Just today, we learn that Sixteen South, which is a Belfast-based animation company, has won a television award as well for its preschool children's series, 'Lily's Driftwood Bay'. It took the best preschool programme category in the American broadcast awards this week. So there has been a tremendous international endorsement of our creative industries in Northern Ireland.

Mr Spratt: I thank the Minister for that answer. Will you continue to work with the industry to make sure that there is continued success in that area?

Mrs Foster: Absolutely, because, of course, 'Boogaloo and Graham' was funded by Northern Ireland Screen. Invest Northern Ireland is the single largest funder of Northern Ireland Screen. The Member is probably aware of the fact that, last March, we launched the Opening Doors strategy for Northern Ireland Screen, and, through that, we intend to continue to grow our creative industries, for the sector itself and also for the tourism benefits that we receive from the creative sector. I will, of course, mention the impact of 'Game of Thrones' on the tourism sector. That continues to grow month on month, and I very much welcome that.

Broadband: BT Funding

T3. Mr Wilson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what money her Department has made available to BT to improve broadband and fibre-optic cables across Northern Ireland, given that, unlike in Lagan Valley, which was praised by Mr Craig, in parts of East Antrim, broadband is unheard of to the extent that, rather than using broadband, people would be better sending messages by shooting them using an elastic band. (AQT 2083/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I am sorry to tell the Member that I do not have the total amount here, but I will, of course, write to him with the total amount that we have funded because, over my time, we have made a number of interventions in the telecoms infrastructure and the broadband infrastructure. I know that he is frustrated about some of the areas in East Antrim, but the Northern Ireland broadband infrastructure project will roll out across East Antrim as well. It may not be in the early stages of the project, but, as I indicated, there are eight phases to the project and, therefore, his area may be in a later stage.

Mr Wilson: When she is looking at how the programme will roll out in the future, will the Minister be cognisant that there are eight industrial areas in Northern Ireland — enterprise estates etc — that do not have access to fibre-optic broadband and, indeed, many rural industries and firms that do not have access and that that prevents their expansion? Will she ensure that BT gives some priority to those kinds of areas and activities?

Mrs Foster: I cannot force BT to acknowledge that because it is a commercial organisation, but, in the contract under which it operates for government funding, yes, we can certainly encourage it to look at those areas. The Member is right to mention the industrial parks, because we need to look at our industrial parks to make sure that we have the correct telecoms and roads infrastructure. Electricity infrastructure in our industrial parks is another area that I think we very much need to look at because — this is a big issue — if an area does not have the appropriate level of electricity supply, that can very much put somebody off investing in that area. We need to look at that, and I have been talking to Invest Northern Ireland about how we can bring all those issues together and try to address them.

Broadband: Customer Satisfaction

T4. Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how customer satisfaction with the supply of rural broadband is measured, albeit that she hates to labour the issue of rural broadband but it is a big issue in her area, part of which — Aghalee — is shared with the Member for Lagan Valley who will be well aware that, in Aghalee, Aghagallon, the Birches, Maghery and many other rural areas, broadband continues to be very poor. (AQT 2084/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Often through Members addressing me in the House in relation to their constituents reflecting that they do not have the appropriate level. We have come a long way with broadband in Northern Ireland. We are often held out as an exemplar region in the UK for how broadband has been rolled out. As we reach those harder-to-reach areas, it will become more and more difficult to provide the service that those people want. I had an instance in my constituency where a business was located very close to the motorway but, because it was attached to a different cabinet than the cabinet just up the road, it was not getting the appropriate speed. A re-engineering solution is often needed, specifically to ask BT which cabinet the customer is connected to. Again, I am happy to have any conversations or receive any representations in respect of that.

Mrs D Kelly: I welcome the Minister's commitment to hearing our concerns. Could she outline how the contract is monitored and whether or not any penalties are to be incurred by the successful contractor, which I believe is BT?

Mrs Foster: It has to provide the appropriate level of Internet speed to a certain number of houses. It is a black-and-white issue. It has to supply Internet speeds at that level. That is why I talked about figures in my answer to Mr Craig and outlined the number of houses and businesses that will be connected. That is how it is monitored. I can accept that the Member is frustrated about pockets in her constituency, but, as I say, I am happy to discuss those with her.

Hotels: Belfast Area

T5. Mr Newton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether she believes that there is still room for additional hotel space in the Belfast area, given that the number and quality of hotels in Northern Ireland has seen a significant increase in what is offered to tourists and the business community. (AQT 2085/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I believe that there is still room, as does the market. A number of developers are looking at hotel opportunities in the Belfast area. There are currently 29 hotels in the Belfast City Council area — there are probably more in greater Belfast — providing over 6,500 rooms. We would like to encourage more hotel space. Obviously, we have benefited from not having the over-provision that there was in the Republic of Ireland. That is good, because, now that we are in a more stable environment, we can have sustainable growth. I certainly hope that that is what is happening.

Mr Newton: Will the Minister confirm whether there is still general interest in the iconic building in which the Titanic was designed, known as the Harland and Wolff drawing offices, and whether there is potential to convert it into a hotel?

Mrs Foster: I understand that there is still potential and that an application has been made to the Heritage Lottery Fund for £5 million towards the restoration of the historic building and its conversion into a boutique hotel. Negotiations are under way with the private sector regarding the remainder of the money. That would really open up the building, because, unfortunately, it is accessible at the moment only as part of a walking tour or organised event. It would be marvellous to see that building opened up to the public so that we could benefit from the fabulous heritage and, indeed, architecture.

Derry: Corporate Plan

T6. Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how she believes subregional business development and job creation will inform the corporate plan, about which the chief executive of INI had a very constructive meeting in Derry last Friday, which included a wide-ranging discussion about the corporate plan going forward. (AQT 2086/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The chief executive was following up on a very successful visit that I made to the city a couple of weeks beforehand, when I met with business leaders. I was very impressed with their very positive approach to developing the region. They, of course, welcomed the fact that we had set up an Executive subcommittee to look at regional opportunities. It is going to be a good vehicle, not just for Invest Northern Ireland and my Department but for a number of other Departments, particularly when it comes to infrastructure and skills.

Mr McCartney: Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as an fhreagra sin. I thank the Minister for her answer. We all recognise the importance of the ministerial subgroup. Does she believe that a subregional approach is the best way in which to tackle regional disparity?

Mrs Foster: The super-councils will provide us with an opportunity to look at the 11 parts of Northern Ireland and their plans. Obviously, how they wish to see their area develop economically will be part of their new community plans, and, because of that, there will be more collaboration with Invest Northern Ireland. I plead again with Members to work proactively with their council and Invest Northern Ireland to find a unique selling point for their area, which we can then sell across the world and use to bring in inward investors.

Trade Mission: Middle East

T7. Mr Ross asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on her recent trade mission to the Middle East. (AQT 2087/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The trade mission was a hugely successful one. We had a number of companies out with us for Arab Health, which is a very large trade promotion from the health industry. We were also with Queen's University when it signed an important contract with Dubai Healthcare City that allows Queen's to develop the Dubai Healthcare City campus. That is going to be really fundamental for that area. We also took the opportunity to work with some other sectors, such as food and, as I already indicated, manufacturing, through SDC Trailers. It was a hugely successful trip, and I was very pleased with the number of people on it.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I am afraid that time is up. We must now move on to questions to the Minister of the Environment.

2.45 pm

Environment

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Questions 4, 10 and 15 have been withdrawn.

Water Quality: East Belfast

1. Mr Douglas asked the Minister of the Environment, following the work being undertaken through the Connswater Community Greenway project in East Belfast, how he plans to assist the efforts of local communities to achieve good water quality outcomes for the Connswater, Knock and Loop rivers. (AQO 7548/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): In December 2009, DOE published the 2009-15 'North Eastern River Basin Management Plan', which identifies where the water environment needs to be protected or improved, the time frame to make those improvements and how that can be achieved. As the first 2009-15 cycle is drawing to a close, a second cycle management plan will be published in December this year, and the draft is available on the DOE website.

The plan is implemented at a local level through a Lagan local management area action plan, which covers the Connswater, Knock and Loop rivers. Those rivers are contained in the Connswater river water body, which has been modified due to extensive flood-risk management. The water quality is classified as poor, and the objective is to improve it to moderate by 2021.

The Belfast and Lagan catchment stakeholder group provides a public forum for stakeholders, such as the East Belfast Partnership, to discuss water management issues and work in partnership with government agencies to address them. My officials have been involved with the partnership, Rivers Agency and Belfast City Council on improvements in the Victoria and Orangefield parks and on the Knock river, such as the realignment of the river channel, introducing natural meanders, bank projection and marginal planting to help to improve water quality. My Department is also working with Rivers Agency to help to ensure that the Connswater Community Greenway flood-alleviation scheme delivers maximum benefits to water quality.

I am pleased that, through my Department's challenge fund and support, the Connswater Community Greenway team and the Field Studies Council have been able to develop outdoor classroom materials for schools and community groups to access.

Mr Douglas: I thank the Minister for his answer and extend to him an invitation to visit the Connswater Community Greenway. I know that he tried to get there before, but there was bad weather. Does the Minister have any other measures planned to improve the water quality of the three rivers that he outlined?

Mr Durkan: I thank Mr Douglas for his question and supplementary. He is quite right: I intended to visit Mrs Wendy Langham, the programme manager of the East Belfast Partnership, last month, but the visit was cancelled due to snow. However, I will endeavour to get back out there as soon as it warms up a bit.

As for other measures that we have planned to improve water quality, my officials will continue to support the local communities by following up on and investigating pollution problems in the area. My officials will continue to liaise with the East Belfast Partnership to include the pollution hotline number on interpretive signage in the area. River catchment investigations will continue to be carried out by my officials to monitor the impact of agricultural practices and industrial discharges. Information leaflets have been distributed at events in East Belfast to help householders to improve the water quality in their area.

Solar Farms: Planning

2. Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment how current planning provision allows for the evaluation of large-scale solar farm applications. (AQO 7549/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department determines planning applications for all renewable energy developments on a case-by-case basis against the provisions of planning policy statement 18 on renewable energy, its supplementary best practice guidance and all other material considerations. PPS 18 provides for the evaluation of all development that seeks to harness energy from renewables, including energy derived from solar. It aims to facilitate the siting of renewable energy generating facilities in appropriate locations in the built and natural environment.

The best practice guidance for PPS 18 also provides background information and guidance on active and thermal solar technology. I am aware of the benefits of solar energy. The sun is a natural energy source; it does not require the burning of fossil fuels and the associated air emissions. The energy produced from the sun does not deplete any natural resources. Therefore, it is considered to be environmentally friendly. Active solar photovoltaic technology can generate electricity from daylight. It can be freestanding, roof-mounted or used as a building material in its own right. My Department's policy and guidance ensures that, while the wider environmental, economic and social benefits of renewable energy developments will be given significant weight in determining whether planning permission should be granted, the environmental, landscape, visual and amenity impacts associated with such developments also need to be assessed.

I am aware that large-scale solar energy development is a matter of growing concern and it is my intention to ensure that the final strategic planning policy statement (SPPS) provides an appropriate level of strategic direction in relation to solar energy development.

I have also recently instructed officials to prepare practice notes for planning staff in relation to the handling of renewable energy proposals, including wind and solar developments. That will greatly assist in dealing with these proposals.

Mr Allister: Does the Minister, therefore, accept that PPS 18 is not fit for purpose when it comes to dealing with large-scale solar farm applications such as the intended 250-acre application at Kells? In light of that, and the fact that he speaks of the need for further guidance, would it not be appropriate now to impose a moratorium on considering such applications until an adequate policy is in place?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for the question and the supplementary. The application to which he refers is, to my knowledge, not yet an application. We have, however, received indications of a forthcoming application. When or if it arrives, it will be assessed by my Department using PPS 18 or its successor in the SPPS. My Department is currently finalising the strategic planning policy statement for Northern Ireland, which seeks to shape clear and concise planning policy, setting out the purpose of planning and core principles for the new two-tier reformed planning system.

As I said in my initial answer, large-scale solar energy development is a matter of growing concern, and I intend to provide an appropriate level of strategic direction for solar energy in the final SPPS. Hopefully, that will be published within the next six weeks. It remains my intention to finalise the SPPS, as I said, in the very near future. As I have also previously indicated, I have instructed officials to prepare practice notes for planning staff in relation to the handling of solar energy proposals.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh math agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Mo bhuíochas leis an Aire chomh maith as a fhreagraí go dtí seo. Can the Minister give us any indication as to the time frame for the Minister's review and the production of the SPPS? Can he also tell us if measures are going to be built into it around renewables and the context of how policy may apply in protected areas or areas of outstanding natural beauty?

Mr Durkan: As I already outlined, it is my intention to finalise the SPPS prior to the transfer of functions in April. We have most of the work done. There are still bits of it that need tweaked — in my opinion, improved — and one of those areas is around PPS 18. Of course, the issues that the Member raises around sensitive and special landscapes are taken very seriously by my Department. That will be reflected in the final SPPS in how we deal with current applications on renewable energy and how councils will be expected to deal with renewable energy applications in the future.

Ms Lo: As the Minister knows, most renewable energy comes from wind turbines. What measures is he taking to encourage alternative sources so that there is a mix of different renewable energy potentials?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Chair of the Committee for her question. She is quite right to identify that the majority of our renewable energy comes from wind. Currently, of the energy produced in Northern Ireland, 19.6% comes from renewable sources, and the vast majority of that is from wind. As for what I am doing as Minister of the Environment to encourage alternative sources, I believe that I can do that through planning policy and guidance. While we encourage, and we all should embrace, renewable technology, it is vital that, in planning policy statements and guidance issued by my officials and me, we protect the natural environment as well as recognising the wider environmental and economic benefits of renewable energy.

Incentives are offered by another Department for various renewable energy initiatives, and questions as to exactly how that is done would probably be better directed towards Minister Foster.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I speak as a supporter of solar energy; however, there is a remarkable lack of regulation for these applications. There are applications in the system for Rasharkin, and there is a forthcoming application for Kells as well. Can the Minister give an assurance that they will not be considered under PPS 18 alone, and will the views of the residents in those areas be fed into the publications that you will put out in the next six weeks?

Mr Durkan: I would like to think that the views of residents, objectors and stakeholders across the North have already been factored into the SPPS; it was subject to extensive consultation and attracted over 700 responses. Of the applications to which the Member refers, one has been made, and the other is yet to arrive. I know that the Member had sought a meeting with me on that project, which I was not able to grant, given that there is no existing application. However, if an application comes in I will be more than happy to meet the Member and, indeed, the local people whose concerns he believes should be taken on board. As well as visual amenity impacts and landscape issues, the views of objectors and supporters are all material considerations when dealing with any planning application. Planning applications for renewable energy are no different in that regard.

Mr Frew: As one who sees the potential of solar farms, particularly on an industrial scale, I want to know whether the Minister is assured that there is expertise in his Department and the Planning Service to deal with these applications. Can he tell the House that there will be specific measures in the new SPPS on proximity to homes and a measurement for that? In addition, has he done any calculations on what large-scale solar farms will mean for the bills that industry has to pay?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his questions and welcome his support for solar energy. The issues that he raises, such as separation distances and so forth will, obviously, be incorporated as they are currently for wind energy. People in the Chamber and outside it have different views on whether the separation distances enshrined in that policy are sufficient. However, the SPPS has given us an opportunity to review those matters, and we will have to wait and see what the outcome of those deliberations is in the next six weeks. I am hopeful that my answers on this subject have shed some light on the issue, and I look forward to discussing it further upon the publication of the SPPS. The issues raised by Members today will be taken on board in the finalisation of that document.

Councillors: Training

3. Ms Boyle asked the Minister of the Environment how councillors in the shadow councils are being trained ahead of assuming greater planning responsibilities. (AQO 7550/11-15)

Mr Durkan: A series of training events was rolled out across councils from early September 2014 to late January 2015. The sessions covered an overview of planning for councillors; development plans and working with the community; practical planning and propriety; and outcomes for the code of conduct. The training was facilitated and delivered by senior planning staff, staff from other Departments and outside bodies, including the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, and representatives from other jurisdictions with knowledge and experience of similar planning systems. The training programme was developed to help to prepare those attending to understand the new planning system, the processes involved in making planning decisions, and the need to comply with ethical standards.

At a local level, the Department continues to work closely with the new councils to provide training and guidance through, for example, working with the shadow planning committees or facilitating mock planning committee meetings, which planning staff and councillors have attended.

3.00 pm

The area planning managers are also taking responsibility for preparing, training and educating their staff for the change. Ongoing training for planners on the new two-tier planning system will continue to be delivered over the coming months to ensure that all involved in the new system have the necessary skills and competence to ensure the system is delivered effectively from day 1. Locally, each new council has developed a training plan and has been allocated £100,000 to meet the needs identified in that plan. That will provide training to cover new councillor induction and governance arrangements as well as organisational design.

As well as the training given by councils and planning headquarters, regional training continues, covering areas such as community planning, via a contract with Community Places, and the new councillor code of conduct. Funding has also supported community planning workshops for all stakeholders involved in the process. Added to that, funding has been made available for developing a communications strategy in preparation for the transfer.

Ms Boyle: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for his answer. Can he outline how councillors are being trained and skilled to specifically address issues of flexibility that may or will affect rural councillors and will apply to rural councils when adjudicating on applications from non-farming dwellers?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for the question and the supplementary. Obviously, there will be different needs in different council areas and for different councillors. Until now, the training has focused on the core ethics of planning and the basic knowledge that councillors, particularly those on the planning committees, will require to discharge their new responsibilities.

I am very aware of the issue that Ms Boyle raised. I notice that Mr McElduff is sat beside her; he probably gave her a kick to ask about non-farming dwellers. Flexibility will be afforded to councils in the formation and formulation of their new local development plans so that they can reflect very specific local needs in those final plans.

Mr Campbell: How confident is the Minister that a level of maturity exists within the local councils to reach planning decisions that will affect the entire community? I ask that, given the level of immaturity that has been displayed in some councils in trying to arrive at the name of the council. I am particularly thinking of the nationalist councillors who seem to 100% oppose unionism in Londonderry and Strabane, and in one or two other councils.

Mr Durkan: I very much welcome a question on immaturity from an expert on it. [Laughter.] I am confident that, through the guidance issued by my Department, the ongoing training — training that I am sure councils will be willing to continue after the transfer of functions — and through the establishment of and adherence to the code of conduct, the councillors will adhere to that and make their planning judgements based on planning policy and planning guidance. Should they not, they will be leaving themselves open to legal challenge.

I do not anticipate the transition being easy. As someone who has recently enough made the transition from lobbying on planning issues to making planning decisions, I recognise that a huge degree of growing up is required.

Mr Kinahan: I thank the Minister for his answers so far. I imagine that he is not satisfied with how all the training is going, because in the comments we are getting from councillors, particularly about DETI and DSD, there is concern that little powers are being transferred because there is little contact between those Departments and the councillors. Will the Minister work with his Executive colleagues to make sure that more training happens and that it is all up to scratch?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for the question, which is very pertinent. A lot of focus has been on planning as a transferring function, but there are other functions that are transferring. Last week, I chaired the second meeting of the partnership panel, which allows for political discussion between elected members of the 11 new councils and Ministers.

They had and will continue to have a lot of questions on other transferring functions, one of which is the transfer of off-street car parking. In a lot of instances, the councils are not overly enamoured with the funding that comes with that function. From a DOE perspective, however, I have ring-fenced the planning budget to transfer with that function, so it has not been subject to the cuts imposed throughout the year in monitoring rounds and budgetary cuts and has actually had a detrimental effect on the rest of my departmental spend.

DRD is transferring. DETI is transferring an important function in local economic development and tourism, and I believe that councillors also require further training in that field. However, the best training that anyone can get for any job is to do it. I have every confidence that what councillors do not know on 1 April, they will not be long finding out.

Rates: DFP Discussions

5. Mr Elliott asked the Minister of the Environment what discussions he has held with the Minister of Finance and Personnel in relation to ratepayers who are facing increased rate bills because of the amalgamation of council areas and the redrawing of local government boundaries. (AQO 7552/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As Members will be aware, my predecessor secured a commitment from the Executive of £30 million for a rates convergence scheme specifically to alleviate the impact on ratepayers who would have experienced a sudden increase in their rates as a result of the formation of the 11 new councils. In addition, my officials have been working closely with colleagues in DFP and local government to ensure that the immediate impact on ratepayers as a result of reform will be minimised. Last November, the Minister of Finance and Personnel announced the details of the scheme, which will provide direct support to domestic and non-domestic ratepayers who would otherwise have faced sudden and excessive increases in their rates bills because of the current differences between the rates set by the existing councils. It will be phased in over the next four-year term of the councils, with an 80% reduction in the increased portion of the next year's bills, followed by subsidies of 60%, 40% and 20% in the remaining years of the scheme. Upwards of 200,000 ratepayers will benefit, with discounts automatically applied.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Minister for that update. Has he any recent information or has he received an update on the difference between Fermanagh and Omagh councils? If so, does he have any idea how much finance will go into that area out of the £30 million this year?

Mr Durkan: I wonder did the Member wonder whether I had any further information since he asked me that during my last Question Time.

The rates convergence scheme will address only the increases in rates bills that are a direct result of the creation of the new, larger councils. Over the years, differences have built up in the district rates chargeable by Fermanagh District Council and Omagh District Council. The district rates chargeable by Omagh District Council have, as the Member is well aware, been higher than for Fermanagh District Council.

By the use of the funding increments that I outlined of 80%, 60%, 40% and 20% over the next four financial years, the rates convergence scheme is expected to benefit 30,000 Fermanagh ratepayers whose bills may experience a slight increase as a result of merging with Omagh council. In real terms, that will translate into a discount of £40 or £50 off their rates bills.

Mr Flanagan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagra. I thank the Minister for his answers. Will he indicate when ratepayers in Fermanagh will know their final rates bill, given that the district rate has not yet been set and the Executive have not set their regional rate, so ratepayers will have to wait for the convergence fund to be rolled out? Does he have any indicative time when people will know exactly how much they will pay?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. I am not sure when the councils intend to strike their rate. However, I have furnished them with any information that I can to allow them to do so before the 15 February deadline that is statutorily imposed on and expected from all councils. I have, therefore, told them what they will get from my Department by way of the rates support grant. It is regrettable that that has had to be cut by 15·1% this year. Again, that is an issue that quite a few council representatives on the partnership panel raised.

The striking of the regional rate is clearly an issue for the Minister of Finance and Personnel, but it is vital that we move quickly so that people can have that certainty as early as possible.

Mr A Maginness: Will the Minister indicate the impact of rates convergence and reductions in rates support for Derry City and Strabane District Council, given the brutal reduction in the Department of the Environment's funding?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. I recently met and, indeed, regularly meet representatives of that immaturely named council. At my most recent meeting with them, they raised the impact of the revaluation of non-domestic properties, as well as rates convergence and the rates support grant that will be payable to Derry and Strabane in the next financial year. Subsequently, at my request, the council sent me a detailed case study setting out the specific details. There is a real anomaly in that area due to the rates revaluation that has seen a huge hike in Strabane's non-residential rates. That matter was also raised with the Finance Minister at the partnership panel meeting last week, and I believe that he is meeting a deputation from that council this afternoon.

As the revaluation of non-domestic properties and rates convergence are rating policy issues, I have written to the Finance Minister asking him to consider the details that the council has raised. I indicated to him that I would be receptive to any constructive proposals that he may have to resolve the matter.

Given the financial pressures that my Department faces — I know that, as a member of the Environment Committee, the Member is well aware of them — including a pressure of an estimated £3 million in payment of the de-rating grant, it has not been possible to protect the rates support grant from cuts. Therefore, the budget for rates support has been reduced to £15·5 million this year. That means that Derry and Strabane will be getting just over £3 million in real terms, but that is a reduction of over half a million pounds from what they were getting last year.

Motorcyclists: Safety

6. Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment what measures he is taking to improve road safety for motorcyclists. (AQO 7553/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department has lead responsibility, working with our road safety partners, including the Department for Regional Development and the PSNI, for Northern Ireland's road safety strategy to 2020. Action measures in the strategy for motorcyclist safety include establishing a motorcycle safety forum comprising representatives of relevant public-sector organisations and groups representing motorcyclists; researching the conspicuity and visibility of motorcyclists; improvements to training and awareness techniques; and consideration of technology to help improve safety.

I can report that my Department has convened the motorcycle safety forum, which is now working on the development of a motorcycling safety strategy. I am confident that, working with other statutory agencies and the motorcycling groups, we can make significant progress to address this important road safety issue. Action measures relevant to motorcycle safety that have already been implemented include compulsory basic training for new riders. Staged testing for new motorcycle riders dependent on their age was also implemented as part of the third EU directive on driver licences.

My Department is acutely aware of the rise in motorcyclist fatalities in recent years. There were four motorcyclist deaths in 2012, which is the lowest figure on record. Since then, there has been an increase, with 10 motorcyclists killed in 2013, rising to 13 riders and one pillion passenger last year. In the light of that increase, I commissioned a statistical review to determine early areas of intervention to address casualty levels. In addition, my Department commissioned research to support decisions on early interventions to improve motorcyclist safety. A range of possible interventions was explored. The outcome of the research was that campaign advertising, as an early intervention, was the best way to address the issue. I have therefore commissioned a new motorcyclists' safety campaign.

3.15 pm

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I am afraid, Mrs Cochrane, that we do not have time for a supplementary. We need to move on to topical questions.

Beaches: South Down

T1. Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of the Environment why all the beaches on the north Down coastline have been granted EU bathing status, while only one beach from the dozens of beaches on the Lecale coastline in south Down has been granted such a status. (AQT 2091/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his question. We are blessed across the North to have so many beautiful beaches, and it is incumbent on us all to do what we can to keep them beautiful and, in many cases, make them more beautiful. Regarding the designation to which the Member referred, I am not sure why that is the case. I am personally familiar with the beautiful beaches of the Member's constituency, and I will establish the rationale behind those designations and why more awards have not been made in south Down. I am happy to meet the Member at a later date — or a sooner date — to discuss that with relevant officials.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his response. Of course, one reason why bathing status has not been granted is the unacceptable situation that raw sewage is still being pumped into some of the waters, especially around Ballyhornan. It is an indictment of the Department of the Environment that, in 2015, in a tourism-heavy area such as south Down, only one beach out of dozens on the Lecale coastline has that EU status. I would like to see a project of work from the Department of the Environment to bring this subject forward. Will the Minister be willing to do that?

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that supplementary. I am certainly prepared to do anything, as I said, to improve the standard of beaches and bathing water, not only in south Down but across the North. I am, indeed, aware of the issues regarding water quality to which the Member referred. My Department has been working on the issue. We have been working with many other partners, not least DRD and Northern Ireland Water, which have quite a bit to answer for regarding water quality or lack thereof in some of the areas to which the Member referred.

Social Housing: West Belfast

T2. Mr F McCann asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the extent of any discussions between his Department and the Department for Social Development on the need to zone additional land in west Belfast for social housing. (AQT 2092/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his question. Having sat on the Social Development Committee with the Member for a couple of years, I am sure that he will be aware that I share his passion for social housing provision. The planning system, as the Member is aware, does not deliver social housing, which is largely a matter for DSD, the Housing Executive, the various housing associations and others. However, the planning system can assist by allocating land for social housing and development plans and by taking decisions on planning applications having regard to existing planning policy, such as Planning Policy Statement 12, 'Housing in Settlements'.

The Member has raised before the fact that he would like to have seen in, for example, the Belfast metropolitan area plan (BMAP), more land zoned for social housing. At that time, I referred to the fact that just because land is not specifically zoned for social housing but is zoned for general housing does not mean that it cannot or will not be used, ultimately, for social housing. If an application for social housing were to come forward on any of those zoned areas, it would be treated just the same as an application for general housing on those areas. It is our belief that, in BMAP, there is sufficient zoning for social housing, albeit that I am well aware of the demand for social housing, not least in the Member's constituency. It is a demand that is shared by my constituency.

Mr F McCann: I thank the Minister for his response. He will know that my constituency has the worst housing waiting list: over 3,000 people are waiting for housing. Hostels in and around the general Belfast area are packed with people from that constituency. It has the highest number of pensioners and young people waiting for houses, but it is continually squeezed by the lack of land.

It is a matter of urgency that the Minister and the Minister for Social Development sit down and look at ways —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Will the Member come to a question?

Mr F McCann: — of bringing more land into use in that constituency. The Matthew stopline that was drawn up 30 years ago has been moved and no longer exists. I ask the Minister to consider that and move towards doing something about it.

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for the supplementary question. I am well aware of the demand for social housing and the needs of those who require it. The Member referred to the need for more land to be zoned to address the problem. However, given that, in the Department's opinion, sufficient land is zoned, we would very much welcome and love to see further housing applications for the land that is already zoned.

Given the huge demand and need in the Member's area, I am sure that he will be pleased to know that, this morning, I issued an approval for a social housing scheme on the Glen Road in west Belfast. That scheme had been held up due to technical difficulties in the planning system.

Listed Places of Worship: Roof Repair Fund

T3. Mr Moutray asked the Minister of the Environment to outline what efforts his Department has made to promote the listed places of worship: roof repair fund, which is a grant scheme administered by the National Heritage Memorial Fund on behalf of the Department of Culture, Media and Sport at Westminster. (AQT 2093/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for that question. I was delighted to be made aware of that fund, which is being run through the Heritage Lottery Fund (HLF). I directed that a press release go out from me, as Environment Minister, to encourage people to take it up and at least to make them aware that the fund existed, particularly given the constraints on my budget and the fact that, in the last few months, I have been able to do so little on built heritage and its preservation, protection and promotion. I very much value all our built heritage, and we are blessed, if you pardon the terminology, to have so many places of worship that tick those heritage boxes. If the Member feels that we could or should do more to promote the scheme and encourage more applicants, I would be happy to hear his suggestions for how we should do that.

Mr Moutray: I thank the Minister for his response and appreciate that he has sent out a press release to encourage places of worship to avail themselves of the fund. Through his Department, will he look at ways of being more proactive so that churches can avail themselves of the fund, especially as many churches do not want to take money directly from the lottery fund?

Mr Durkan: I will certainly explore the options that are open to me and my Department to maximise the drawdown from the fund. I have alluded to the constraints on my budget and what we can do on built heritage, so I very much see that grant as an opportunity to supplement what we are doing, what we are trying to do and what we want to do. If the Member has any specific churches in mind, I would be happy to meet them to see what we can facilitate, even if that means the funding going through my Department to the church or churches in question.

Narrow Water Keep/Dundrum Castle

T4. Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of the Environment to outline how his Department will work to maintain and develop the heritage tourism potential of the Narrow Water Keep and Dundrum Castle, in light of budget constraints. (AQT 2094/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Narrow Water Keep and, indeed, Dundrum Castle are two of over 190 monuments in state care that are managed by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) on behalf of my Department. My Department has spent over £45,000 on the maintenance of the historic fabric of Narrow Water Keep since 2012, and I am committed to improving the presentation of the structure for its many visitors. That will not be easy as that particular building suffers from water ingress, possibly as the result of bomb damage in the past. My officials are investigating that issue and have been trialling solutions. The NIEA craft workforce plans to undertake a comprehensive grouting regime to the core of the walls, should the trials prove that that is required.

It will be a challenge to retain the opening of both those buildings and, indeed, other sites in the area, as it is challenging at present. NIEA officers met local councillors and council officials from Newry and Mourne District Council in December to discuss the opening of Narrow Water Keep in particular. The meeting considered the potential for working in partnership to open the site. My officials are continuing that positive dialogue with the aim of a proactive arrangement for opening and improved access in 2015 and beyond.

Mrs McKeivitt: Will the Minister give his commitment to engage with the local stakeholders and the council on this?

Mr Durkan: I believe that local engagement is vital. To that effect, I have instructed my officials to explore new and different ways to develop increased access opportunities at all of our heritage sites. As I said, I believe that local engagement is the key to the partnerships that we require for the future at sites like Narrow Water Keep, Dundrum Castle and so many others across the North. Officials are keen to work with local stakeholders and community groups and to enlist support from local authorities in particular. Current partnerships with other local authorities, such as Derry, Fermanagh and Cookstown, exemplify how positive and beneficial for the local heritage that can be. I have asked the agency to progress with urgency the positive steps that it has begun with Newry and Mourne to deliver a secure and sustainable future for Narrow Water Keep and other sites in the area to increase its contribution to the area's heritage tourism potential.

Road Safety: Budget Impact

T5. Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment to outline what effect the Budget will have on his Department's ability to send out the road safety message; to acknowledge that the TV adverts, which can be most traumatic, are the most effective mechanism in to ensure that we send out a good road safety message; and to state what other creative ways there are to get that road safety message out. (AQT 2095/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for his question. I am aware of the Member's keen interest in road safety. I know that we will be debating his private Member's Bill next week on 20 mph speed limits in residential areas.

The Member quite rightly identifies the effectiveness of television advertising in promoting road safety and driving down the number of collisions that result in fatalities and serious injuries on our roads. However, it is with great regret that, due to budgetary constraints, the amount that we will be able to spend on that will be dramatically reduced this year.

Last year, £1.8 million was spent on television advertising. All the evidence is there to show that television advertising has proved to be very effective and has a huge impact on the viewer. However, this year, my discretionary spend across the Department is somewhere in the region of £1.5 million, which is less than we actually spent on road safety advertising last year. Therefore, it is imperative that we look at more creative ways of spending that money. I certainly will not be forgoing the television route altogether, but it is important that we are more creative in how we use that money and we continue to support television advertising with enhanced education programmes, better use of social media and enhanced work with our road safety partners, both in other statutory agencies and in the PSNI, and also in the voluntary and community sector, where we have very good working relationships with the likes of the GAA and the Ulster Farmers' Union.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I call Mr Ramsey for a very quick supplementary question.

Mr Ramsey: Given that there has been a low level of deaths on our roads this year, what other efforts is your Department making to try to reduce speed in residential areas and city centres where there are fatalities and serious injuries?

Mr Durkan: Last year actually saw an increase in road deaths. Fortunately, although it is very early this year, the awful start that we had to last year has not been mirrored. However, from the fatalities last year, we can see that speed remains the biggest single causation factor of fatalities on our roads, and, therefore, it is often at the centre of our advertising and information campaigns reminding people of the need to kill their speed before they kill someone.

3.30 pm

Dr McDonnell: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Is it in order for me to make a profound apology for my absence last week when I had a question down? I got tied up in an earlier meeting. I was not attentive enough to the clock and did not realise. I offer my profound apologies to you and the rest of the House.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Member's apology is noted, and I thank him for it.

Mrs Cameron: Further to that point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker, it must be the time for apologies. May I apologise through you for missing my question yesterday to the Minister for Employment and Learning? I had taken ill yesterday afternoon.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Again, The Member's apology is on the record and is very much appreciated. Members will take their ease while we change the Table.

No 74: In schedule 1, page 98, line 32, leave out paragraph 6.— [Mr Agnew.]

Mr P Robinson: At the beginning, I should point out that I speak as leader of the party, as opposed to speaking in my capacity as First Minister. My colleague and good friend the Minister for Social Development will deal with all the Executive’s issues relating to the Bill.

It is important at this stage to register the fact that the Assembly has much to be thankful for, in that we have reached the point at which this Bill can be brought before Members, hopefully for approval. Since the Ulster Unionist Party and the Conservative Party went forward in the 2010 election on a policy of cutting expenditure in Northern Ireland as elsewhere, and as they jointly went forward with a manifesto commitment that they would take an axe to welfare in the United Kingdom as a whole, it left those of us in government here and those of us in the Assembly with a conundrum: the desire to ensure that we did the very best that we could for those who are in need and genuinely require support on welfare issues and, at the same time, being able to provide the public services that are necessary in the context of the Budget that was constrained by the Ulster Unionist Party and Tory commitment to cut public spending.

That was the conundrum that we faced, and it was recognised, I think at an early stage, that, if we were to go off and set up our own welfare system, that would be massively costly and would take money away from areas in which it really could be beneficial. I do not want to go into what happened over that two-year period, although, if I were to do so, it would be much to the praise of my colleagues on how they handled the matter. It is sufficient to say that, when we got to the tail end of last year, some serious negotiations took place on how we would take this matter forward. In that context, it is worth pointing out that, at the end of last year, there were two agreements.

There is the one that is publicly known and that people can go back to and find if they google it, and that is the Stormont House Agreement. However, there was a second agreement, and that agreement was the Stormont Castle agreement. That was an agreement reached by the five Executive parties, dealing with a wide range of financial issues, including a commitment to agree a Budget and issues relating to the reduction in the size of the public-service payroll. It dealt with matters such as corporation tax and, importantly, issues relating to welfare reform.

All five parties signed up to that. Not only did they sign up to the Stormont Castle agreement but the party leaders went down to meet the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland and sold it to her as the way forward. That included, incidentally, a pitch for further funds and more flexibility.

After the Stormont House Agreement, some parties reserved their position in some way, but there was no reserving of position on the Stormont Castle agreement amongst the five Executive parties. All agreed to the specifics of welfare reform. We did that after very detailed discussions about how each element of change would be made and how much it would cost.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr P Robinson: I will, yes, happily.

Mr Allister: Will the Member clarify something? He refers to the Stormont Castle agreement. How does that compare on welfare with the agreement that the First Minister told us several months ago that he had previously reached with the deputy First Minister? Will he shed some light on that? Will he also shed some light on the claim from Sinn Féin that the agreement now reached amounts to £565 million over six years? Is that correct?

Mr P Robinson: Uncharacteristically, the Member is being mischievous. I am not in the business of rubbing anybody's nose in it or scoring party points on those issues. The architecture is exactly the same: it is the GB system plus enhancements. That is what we proposed 18 months to two years ago, and that is the outcome of the agreement that we now have. In the agreement that we offered 18 months to two years ago, we had a sum of money in addition to removing bedroom tax that we were prepared to look at in terms of how we could have enhancements. The Stormont Castle agreement defined how that money should be spent and looked at the individual areas where improvements could be made.

I do not have the paper with the overall figure in front of me, but there is no particular secrecy about the amounts, although anybody looking at the figures should be cautious, in that, unlike many other areas of government spending, welfare payments depend on those who apply. It is a demand-led cost, and, therefore, you can never be too accurate about what the cost may be.

DSD previously indicated that the cost would go up from £13 million to £87 million to £114 million in the next financial year. It then moved to £250 million and to over £370 million in the following year. Those would have been our penalties for moving away from the GB system. We have what roughly comes out as an average cost of £90 million a year over that six-year period, but many of us are hopeful that that will be reduced to an average of £70 million because, in my view, the bedroom tax issue will have to be resolved at a UK level, and there would be a saving of over £20 million to Northern Ireland if that came about.

I offer those figures only for openness. They do not particularly relate to the issue that I want to address, which arises out of the comments made by Mr Beggs. Regrettably, the Member obviously thought that he was on such weak ground that he was not prepared to give way. There are conventions, which are generally recognised in debating Chambers, that a Member should give way to someone on the Front Bench, but he chose not to because he recognised that he would have difficulty responding to any point made to him. It was noticeable that, when my friend, the Member for East Antrim Mr Wilson, asked him to give way on a different issue later, he was happy to do so, but he was not willing to give way on this issue because he recognised the weakness of his case.

It is particularly disturbing that someone who has responsibility as a Deputy Speaker in the House clearly does not understand — that is the best interpretation that I can put on it — the rules of the House on petitions of concern. I will come to that in a moment, but I think it is perhaps important, in the context of this group of amendments, that we understand the nature of the issues discussed yesterday at the implementation leaders group about the outcome of today's debate.

When we agreed at Stormont Castle a range of issues in relation to welfare and the cost that would be imposed, the Finance Minister, quite rightly, went off and prepared his Budget based on that. It was a Budget that was accepted by the Executive and which is now going through its various processes in the House. So, we have now set in stone, as it were, what the expenditure will be on each area of government.

For welfare issues, the cost for us in the next financial year is already set up in the Budget. Therefore, any changes that any Member brings forward by way of an amendment that have a cost attached to them will either not be fully implemented because of the lack of funds to do so or they will take money away from welfare payments elsewhere — or maybe somebody wants to take money out of the health service, the education service or elsewhere.

If Members stand up and put forward an amendment that costs money, as some of these amendments in this set do, they have a duty to tell us how much it is going to cost, because, presumably, nobody would be so rash as to bring forward an amendment on an issue like this without having it costed. I am sure that they have gone to officials in the Department and said, "Look, here is the amendment that we want to push. What will the cost be if that were to be implemented and how would it be paid for?" I hope that someone from the Ulster Unionist Benches or the SDLP Benches —

Mr Agnew: Will the Member give way?

Mr P Robinson: I will give way; just let me finish this sentence. I hope that someone from the Ulster Unionist Benches or the SDLP Benches who have put down these amendments will be able to tell us, at a later stage, precisely how much their amendments are going to cost and how they are going to be paid for.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for giving way. The Member outlined that the Stormont Castle agreement detailed how the top-up payments would be spent and what areas of welfare they would cover. To the best of my knowledge, that has not been made public. When Members come forward with amendments, we may well come forward with the top-ups proposed in the Stormont Castle agreement, but without sight of them, we cannot make that judgement. Will the Stormont Castle agreement be published?

Mr P Robinson: I completely forgive the Member. I do not expect him to be held by any of the agreements reached by five parties around the table that he was not a party to. He and other Members who were not party to that agreement will want to put forward amendments and improve the agreement.

I am not simply saying that we did an agreement at the end of last year and that, therefore, nothing but that agreement can go through this House. If there were improvements to be made, it was up to each of the parties to bring whatever improvements they thought could be made to the implementation body that was set up with all the leaders present in it and see whether they could get agreement from the other leaders around the table.

That was done, and, surprisingly, it was done by the Ulster Unionist Party. It had six amendments that it wanted to make to the Bill. Regarding the remarks made by the Member for East Antrim Mr Beggs, I will give him the benefit of the doubt and say that perhaps somebody wrote his speech. I noticed that he was reading, so I suspect that somebody wrote his speech and that he was reading out the research of somebody else. If he had actually read what he was going to say beforehand, he would know that it was inaccurate. I am sure that he, as a Deputy Speaker, read the petition of concern that went into the Speaker's Office, and I am sure that he saw that the two Ulster Unionist amendments — amendment Nos 34 and 35 — were not included in the petition of concern, yet he told the House that we had a petition of concern to block all amendments, which was not the case. We had agreed at the —

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr P Robinson: I will give the Member a bit more to answer to and then I will give way to him.

The leader of his party came forward with six amendments that were agreed during yesterday's meeting of the implementation group, in the full spirit of what I would have expected from him and from the Ulster Unionist Party that they would have the two amendments brought forward, which the rest of the group — the other four parties — agreed with and agreed that we would go through the Lobbies in support of, if it is necessary to do so if they are not agreed on a voice call, and that we would support those two amendments.

3.45 pm

He considered the other four amendments that they had put down to be probing amendments, and I think that he is right. It is a strategy that is often used in other debating chambers where Members want to pin the Minister down to putting something in Hansard on how an issue will be handled. These were probing amendments on which the Minister was quite happy to give a satisfactory explanation, and he made that clear at yesterday's meeting. On that basis, the leader of the Ulster Unionist Party indicated that the party would withdraw or not move its amendment depending on where it was situated in a group.

All the issues raised by the Ulster Unionist Party were dealt with. I just cannot understand how a petition of concern affects that in any way, because a petition of concern that included an amendment that was going to be withdrawn or not moved would have no impact. If you do not have a vote on it, the petition of concern is not relevant. The two issues on which there was five-party agreement on the change are not included in the petition of concern, and therefore the comments that he made were totally inaccurate. I will give way to the honourable Member.

Mr Beggs: The Member seems to be making it a big issue that instead of making 50 petitions of concern and blocking them into the Business Office, he actually made only 48. The point that I was making was that it is a ridiculous number of petitions of concern, which is preventing the House from coming to a decision and a conclusion. Had he been in and been listening to what I was saying, he would know that I always balanced that there is a cost and a benefit and pointed out that we cannot deliver everything that some people would wish. Does the Member not accept that?

Mr P Robinson: No: I would not accept that that is what the Member was doing. I was here listening to the Member berate these Benches for being undemocratic and putting down a petition of concern against all the amendments. If the Member reads Hansard, he will see it.

Let us explore his argument that somehow each Member should be free to decide for himself what the outcome of any amendment should be. If we carried that to its logical conclusion, we would not have an agreement. My colleagues are asked to go through the Lobbies on things that, in short, they would prefer not to go through the Lobbies on — not on this Bill so much, but on other aspects of the Stormont House Agreement. The whole thing about an agreement is that you agree to give a bit in one area to take a lot in another. That is what agreement is about. If you put forward a proposition that somehow you have a Stormont House Agreement and then you have a free-for-all in the Assembly, you will not have an agreement. Who told us that best of all? Who was the one who spelled that out for us all? It was none other than the leader of his party.

He will remember — if he does not remember, I will remind him — that his leader berated Sinn Féin, the SDLP and everybody else and said that this is not a case of renegotiating these matters: if you try to renegotiate, it will unravel. Does the Member remember what his leader said? That is exactly what would happen if we put the agreement out for a free-for-all in the Assembly. What we are here to do is to honour the agreement that we reached with the other parties at Stormont Castle and later endorsed at Stormont House. I trust that the Member will be man enough to admit that his remarks were inaccurate and that it was nonsensical of him to put forward the free-for-all argument because you simply would not have an agreement.

I remind him that the consequences of not having this agreement are twofold. Number one is that it was tied in directly to the devolution of corporation tax. We had to get the Budget and welfare reform resolved. If one were to listen to the Member and some of his party on television, one would hear them claim to be in the vanguard and the promoters of corporation tax. Mind you, I can recall the leader of their party telling us that we had to move on to plan B and that corporation tax power was not coming to the devolved institution. That is what we were told. Here, very clearly, anybody who would vote against the Budget or welfare reform is voting against the introduction of corporation tax-setting powers for Northern Ireland.

The second impact that it would have is this: if Members cast their mind back to the period before the Stormont House negotiations, they will recall that this Assembly was going down. Make no mistake about it: the disagreements were such that they could not be resolved, and the financial cost of welfare would have been at such a level that we could not have sustained an Executive because such a significant sum of money would be being taken away from key front-line services.

Some Members might want to sit back — I perhaps direct this more at the SDLP than I do at others — and, à la carte, go through the Stormont House Agreement, saying, “We will have a bit of that, not so much of that and maybe a bit more of that would be nice”. However, that is not the way that you honourably implement an agreement. Of course, if you are a smaller party and your votes are not required to get a majority from both sections of our community in the Lobbies, you can have that luxury of pretending to be in opposition when you know that nothing will come from your words. The truth of it is this: if people genuinely want to move forward in Northern Ireland, it is important that this legislation goes through; that parties uphold the agreements that all of us reached at Stormont Castle; and that we move forward on that basis, because, if I ever have to sit down to negotiate again, I will look at the people I am negotiating with on the basis of whether they delivered on the last occasion and whether they were prepared to implement the last agreement that we reached. I trust that Members take that seriously, even if they have their fling today by putting forward amendments. I hope that, when the final votes are taken, we will have all Members going through the Lobbies in support of this legislation and, hopefully, therefore, bolstering the position that we have with this Assembly.

I say to the SDLP that, for this set of amendments, I think that the Minister made a very powerful argument yesterday that, in terms of data protection and the flexibility that departmental guidance gives, it is a much better to go forward rather than the Minister having to work around rigid legislation. It does not obviate the need for them to stand up, argue their case and press the Minister as to whether he is going to deal with various issues.

I say to the Member who is now talking to his colleague that I have no difficulty in supporting that kind of Committee, though it is not a matter for this legislation. You do not set up an Assembly Committee through DSD legislation. I have no difficulty in having continual monitoring and observation of how the welfare reform proposals are working out, and that will inform any future decisions that we have to take. However, that is a matter for the Assembly, not one for this debate or legislation.

I hope that, when my colleague indicates, as he no doubt will, that the various amendments that are down in this category can be better dealt with in a different manner, Members will accept that, keep to the agreements that they reached, be honourable Members of the Assembly and stick to the deal that they have done.

Mr Attwood: I will start by touching on the last point of the DUP leader’s contribution; it will be the first point in mine. We have had this conversation with the Minister, and it remains our approach that, based upon some of that conversation, and subject to him saying what I think he is minded to say in respect of some of the amendments, it may be that my party will not move some of them. There may be a second category of amendments that — if the Minister shows some better authority over the next number of hours, either to accept our amendments or indicate what might come forward at Further Consideration Stage or otherwise — we might not move.

However, there will be a third category of amendments, Mr Speaker. In passing, I congratulate you on your elevation. I am probably the last Member in the House to do so. However, I congratulate you, despite my concerns about how all that happened. Putting that aside, I think that, thus far, you have demonstrated good authority in your role and in your commitment to upholding the standards of the previous Speaker.

There will be a third category of amendments that I anticipate that we will not agree on, regardless of the Minister’s words or reassurances, if any are forthcoming. We will adopt that approach, and we will do so because we are paid and elected to be Members of a legislative Assembly. That was denied to many generations of democrats in this part of Ireland over many’s a long year, and we are all the worse because of the fact that a democratic Chamber did not exist here to answer the needs of our people.

Today, we are Members of a legislative Assembly. We are not Members of a limp Assembly, and that difference has to inform the debate. We are MLAs, and I hope that all of us in the Chamber live up to that standard today. We need to guard it jealously because what we secured in the institutions of the Good Friday Agreement and other agreements were won through hard democratic struggle and negotiation. We should value them at all times, not least given the circumstances around welfare and the ambitions of this Tory Government and the next Tory Government, if they are re-elected. We have to send out a message today to our people that this is not a theatre, a talking shop or a limp Assembly; it is a legislative Assembly, and nobody has the right to usurp the authority of any party or any Member.

Mr Speaker, when I heard that the DUP had tabled the petitions of concerns, I wondered whether it was Northern Ireland’s GUBU moment. You and other Members will remember that acronym from politics elsewhere on this island. I concluded that it was not a GUBU moment but that what the DUP had chosen to do was just unbelievable and unprecedented. Whilst the First Minister — the DUP leader — is correct to say that not every amendment was petitioned, virtually every amendment was petitioned. It is unprecedented in the life of the Assembly for that sort of weapon to be deployed against that scale and volume of amendments.

A Member: Thanks for giving it to us.

Mr Attwood: From the Back Benches and from a sedentary position, the Member says, “Thanks for giving it to us.” That is how they view the legislative authority of the Assembly. They think, “Thanks for giving Back-Bench DUP Members the power to block not just one or two amendments but to block virtually all the amendments”. What state is Northern Ireland regional democracy in when a party thinks, “Thanks for giving it to us” about the power to ride a coach and horses through amendment after amendment? That is why it is unprecedented, although I note what the DUP leader said in his last remarks about where the debate might yet go and, as a consequence, I travel with a little bit more hope. Never before in the life of the Chamber has there been such a swingeing attempt through petitions of concern to shut down what might be good law for the people of this part of the world.

Mr Agnew: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will.

Mr Agnew: Does the Member agree that the measure of a party is not the power that it has but how it uses it?

4.00 pm

Mr Attwood: Even if the likes of us are reduced, First Minister and DUP leader, to what you indicated was — how did you refer to it? — a free-for-all or something of that nature, we are at least trying to live up to the democratic authority that the people gave to the Assembly when it was endorsed in the Good Friday Agreement, rather than deploying a weapon relentlessly against amendment after amendment after amendment.

Mr McKinney: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: Yes.

Mr McKinney: Given the DUP’s propensity for dotting i’s and crossing t’s, will the Member care to speculate what would have happened had the shoe been on the other foot?

Mr Attwood: I would like to think that it would have been different.

Some Members: Driving licences.

Mr Attwood: Let me confirm, because it seems to have been missed, that the decision on the driving licence was mine. I know that you have visited all that misery on my successor, but it was my decision. I did not believe that, in the context we were in at that time in this part of the world, a flag that size on a UK named driving licence was a proportionate response in the difficult politics that we would have expected.

Putting that aside, the unbelievable part of what the DUP has done in respect of the petitions of concern is that we have spent two years — all Members are right about this — getting to this point, and we owe it to those who have made representations to us, lobbied us, argued for mitigation and travelled this long journey with us. I think that it is unbelievable to them that petitions of concern would be deployed in this swingeing way. I normally do not play the man; I normally try to play the ball. I see that the DUP leader’s speech was very much about playing the man, but, if I were to make a comment in that regard, it would be that, around 6.00 pm or 7.00 pm last night, Peter Robinson threw his toys out of the pram and did not even keep hold of his rattle. Let me make this absolutely clear. Although he might not agree with this, it seems to me that, even in his comments, the DUP leader is beginning to pull back from some of the contentions that he has made heretofore. He said:

“After the Stormont House Agreement, some parties reserved their position in some way”.

I think he is right. Let me make this absolutely clear on behalf of the SDLP: the notion that the only amendments that can be moved on this Floor are those agreed as part of the Stormont negotiations in Room 106 in a corner of the Building is ludicrous and unacceptable. We will not live by that principle — I am coming to the Bill.

Mr Speaker: I am sure you are. I recognise and you will recognise that I have given you some latitude. You were responding to previous comments, which is fair enough. Today in the Assembly, we have certain agreed procedures. That may change in the future, but every petition of concern and every amendment was legitimate. They were compatible and in compliance with the arrangements that we have agreed at this time. It is time that we discussed the detail of the Bill, and that, for me, is about the present and the future. Possibly enough has been said about the past.

Mr Attwood: Can I just make this closing remark on that contribution? It is on the past. Members will know that one of our many points of dispute with the outcomes of the Stormont negotiations was the proposals on the past. The most acute of those was the proposal on how we should deal with themes, policies and practices of the past. We do not agree with the Stormont House Agreement on that. In our view, the vested interests in terror organisations and state organisations prevailed at Stormont House, ensuring that very little will happen on a proper interrogation of themes, policies and practices from the past, which are part of the narrative of the present and the future. That is our view.

The notion is that we can say to victims and survivors, individually or organisationally, that, if we cannot get a group of four people up in that room to agree to amendments in respect of that issue before it comes to the Chamber, we will just have to swallow it. We will not say that to victims and survivors, individually or organisationally.

Mr Humphrey: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. Having listened intently to what the leader of my party said and to what he has just said — his leader is sitting behind him — I ask the Member whether he is in the business of implementing the Stormont House Agreement. Does he distance himself from what my leader said about what his leader agreed to in relation to the Stormont Castle proposals?

Mr Attwood: The answer to that is the answer that we have given every time: we will implement, as fully and faithfully as we can, that which is strong in the Stormont negotiations. We will try to correct and rectify that which is less strong.

Mr Speaker: On that basis, can we return, please, to the Consideration Stage of the Welfare Reform Bill?

Mr Attwood: Somebody once demanded the right to dissent because there was much to dissent from. It seems that that maxim has been forgotten in our politics, even though generations who served this community well demanded the right to dissent because there was much to dissent from and were far the better for it.

In response to the comments made by the representative of the Alliance Party — this takes us back to the amendments, Mr Speaker —

Mr Speaker: I have already invited you twice to move on. I do not want to have to do it for a third time.

Mr Attwood: I am coming back to the core of the amendments. It is probably best to explain to the House that our amendments try to develop thinking and practice around three themes, some of which were touched on by the leader of the DUP in his concluding remarks. People in the welfare world — I concur with many of them — believe that, if the Tories are re-elected, universal credit will fall flat on its face. George Osborne, as Chancellor, will say, “Why have we spent all this time and money on failed IT in order to deliver a universal credit system that doesn’t do what it’s meant to do?”. For the Tories and the high Tories in government in London, it is meant to reduce welfare baselines and increase penalties. That informs our amendments. They are about trying to protect the claimant on their journey through the system so that they are maxed out in terms of their benefit entitlement and so that, when it comes to penalties, they are minimised in that journey and all that is subject to appropriate oversight. Those are the themes that run through all of this.

We should caution ourselves when it comes to the amendments in group 1 and thereafter — this is where I am now going to talk directly to those amendments. Mr Dickson’s opening remarks were that this was all scaremongering — he referred to much of this as scaremongering. I recommend that Mr Dickson and anybody else who has the time spends a little time reviewing the evidence that has emerged in respect of the roll-out of universal credit over not the last two years, 18 months or 12 months but the last five weeks. A Select Committee of the House of Commons has been taking evidence in respect of what is happening with welfare reform. Anybody who reads any of that would have to conclude that those who say to the House, to welfare claimants and to welfare organisations that this is scaremongering should hang their head in shame. They should read the Hansard record of what is happening at the Select Committee in London.

Matthew Oakley is the independent reviewer for sanctions appointed by DWP; he is DWP’s man. He said to the Select Committee in the opening week of January this year that it would be wise for the Government to undertake a general stocktake of the system in view of the extent to which it has changed over the past two Parliaments. Their own insider is telling people, “Would you go off and have another look at it?”. The weight of evidence is coming from people working in welfare offices, who are beginning to talk about how pressure is being applied to them to reach targets in order to impose penalties. Consider the fallout in terms of people who are disappearing out of the welfare system because the journey is too difficult for them and the penalties are too harsh, to the point that no one knows where they are going and so on. That is not scaremongering; that, Mr Dickson, is evidence to the House of Commons Select Committee, not just from individuals within the welfare system or from an insider who is employed by DWP to give best advice but even from those who are managing people in work programmes. They are all saying it.

Mr Wilson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will in a second, Mr Wilson.

The point is that, if that is what a Select Committee has been hearing at Westminster every week over the last number of weeks, should we not take time this week to apply our minds to anticipate the harshness of what will follow if the Tories are re-elected in further penalties, further punitive measures, further collapse of the benefit cap and so on?

Mr Wilson: Will the Member also accept that the other side of that evidence is that 50% of people who had languished on long-term unemployment, with all the consequences that that has for their income, families and everything else, are now being placed in work? That is the positive side of the changes.

Mr Attwood: I do not dispute that. I was implicitly criticised by one of the Sinn Féin Members this morning for being the Minister who brought in some welfare reform.

Mr F McCann: Sanctions.

Mr Attwood: Yes, that is right. I went off and read the debate over lunchtime. I urge you to read that debate as well and see everything that I put down in my commentary both on that welfare Bill in June 2010 and in the statement that I made to the House in November 2010 in respect — [Interruption.] Let me deal with it. We do not dispute, Mr Wilson, that there is a need to simplify the welfare system and to intensify working with claimants in order to maximise their skills and job opportunities. You do not get any dispute on that, but do not pretend to me that that is what London is doing.

Six years on, the reputation of universal credit is in tatters. The integration of the six working-age benefits into universal credit is far behind schedule, with tens of millions of pounds of IT investment already written off and much more to come. The National Audit Office verdict has been damning, describing:

“weak management, ineffective control and poor governance.”

Ministers and civil servants have come in for severe criticism. External experts, many of whom supported the principles behind universal credit, are unsure whether the system can ever be made to work, even several years later. That is one commentary from an expert in welfare reform. I could read out — I will not — multiple ones, because you want me to get back to the Bill. The question is this: if that is the narrative and if this is a crash that the Tories fail to recognise — except, I think, the Chancellor — do we not owe it to everybody to take time today to get some more of this right? If we do not, we will repent at leisure as we see the full scale of what London intends to propose.

I turn to the amendments. I do not intend to make many comments about them, except to highlight a number of themes. I say to the Minister — I have had the conversation with him already — and to Mr Robinson that, if it had been left to me, you would not have known the scale of amendments that we would have had on the Table this morning and this afternoon. We were actually quite measured in that we recognised that there were cost consequences of amendments from us and other people to the point that, if you actually look at our amendments, you will see that very few of them have significant cost consequences. That is our view.

We tried to craft them in a different way, based on maximising support for the claimant, minimising penalties and maximising oversight on the far side of the claimant journey.

4.15 pm

If we could just go to that point, that is why —

Mr Givan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will give way in a second. That is why we have put in a reference to the Department having:

“due regard for the claimant’s skills, experience, caring responsibilities and physical and mental ill health.”

The issue of mental ill health is a theme that is tracked through three or four of our amendments. We would say to the Minister that if he accepts that the profile of mental health in the North is as acute as it is — one in 10 of our people are on disability benefit and it is one in five in Britain — and if you are going to protect those people and those in the welfare system who are conducting the interviews and making the assessments, then one way of protecting everybody is to say to them, “You have a statutory responsibility to look at the issues of skills, experience, caring responsibilities and physical and mental ill health” and to say it to your own staff and for Mr O’Reilly to say it to his staff.

I know a lot of those staff. I apologise; I should not have mentioned an official, although I mentioned him positively. I apologise and withdraw that name. I was in the Minister’s seat once, although only for a year. When I heard about people beating up on Social Security Agency (SSA) staff because they were off sick with stress, I remember what I said to some of the people who came out with that claim at that time. These people were on the front line with people in need, some of whom were going to be belligerent, and they needed our protection. They need to be protected, and if DWP starts looking over here to set targets and impose penalties and punishments on claimants, we need to protect our staff from the heavy hand from London.

If you want evidence to corroborate that argument, who would have thought a number of years ago that, when it came to welfare reform, London would suddenly decide that it was going to impose all these penalties to the point that Theresa Villiers was unable to answer the question as to why the penalties were £87 million at that time? If you want corroboration, look at the questions that Mark Durkan MP offered last week in London to a Treasury Minister at the Committee that is dealing with the Corporation Tax Bill. The Minister would not commit himself to say that he would not use the heavy hand of London again in order to ensure that, in the context of the devolution of corporation tax, we had a balanced Budget and a sustainable basis for the Budget. Go and read what a London Treasury Minister said or did not say to Mark Durkan MP in a House Committee just a week ago.

Let us not be naive. If London can, London will try to impose its will on our system. The best way of ensuring that it does not is to put into our law the protections for our staff and for our claimants that, in our view, would arise from having due regard for the claimant’s skills, experience, caring responsibilities and physical and mental ill health.

It seems a long time ago now, but when we were negotiating the issue of the Police Ombudsman and trying to convince Maurice Hayes to go for a maximum position in relation to that post, Seamus Mallon made the point — it was not me, I was just in the margins — at a meeting in Cambridge, in September of whatever year it was, at the British-Irish Association conference, that a good system of police complaints was a sword against those who were on the wrong side of good practice and a shield for those who were on the right side of good practice. It is the exact same now. We can protect our claimants and our staff in the event that London should come seeking —

Mr P Robinson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will in a second.

Over and above all that, in the roll-out of universal credit, when it comes to assessments, including those of mental health, without giving any increased priority to due regard of mental health, there should be recognition of it as an issue that affects a lot of our claimants, in order to ensure that our staff in the SSA do all that they can when it comes to the assessments to make sure that that matter is taken into account.

Mr P Robinson: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. Will he explain to the House the narrative that us placing something in legislation puts some onus, responsibility or obligation on the United Kingdom Government not to touch us? It is a nonsense. If we put something in legislation, the only people who will be under an obligation will be those on the Executive here in Northern Ireland. Nobody else.

Mr Attwood: How do you send, Mr Robinson, a message to London that says, “Hands off our welfare system”?

Mr P Robinson: Pick up the telephone.

Mr Attwood: Oh, right. I was in the Social Security Agency — sorry, DSD — and one of my observations from my one year there was that, too often, DSD was more an outreach for DWP than it was the Department for Social Development of the Northern Ireland Executive. Let us not be naive about this: DWP is the shadow over all of DSD and the SSA. Although I have immense respect for our staff, the leadership and the management, including in children’s services, where there are some extremely committed people, let us be very clear: we know to our cost how London tries to impose its will and will not face up to the particular circumstances in Northern Ireland. Is that not what the penalties are about? Is that not what London’s failure to enter into negotiations in Stormont was about? The message was, “You will stand and deliver”, and on the far side of the election there will be more “stand and deliver” if the Tories get re-elected. Why do we build maximum protections into our law? We do so because we need to legislate to ensure that we do it right here and to send a message to London that we are not going to do it in the way that it might choose.

If you accept the logic of Mr Robinson’s argument, we should just put everything in guidance. Any advice that we are giving to the Social Security Agency, the child support sector and all the rest should just be put in guidance by that logic. We put it in the place of maximum protection, which is in primary law, not the primary law in the regulations. If the Minister can reassure on some of that later, we may be minded to not move some of our amendments.

I also want to deal with the thinking behind amendment No 13, which tries to broaden the provisions for domestic violence and incidents motivated by hate. The issue of incidents motivated by hate has an immense public profile, and it has had it over the past number of days. Look at the disgraceful attack on the Kingsmills memorial and other incidents. It has been a narrative over the past period. I say this without trying to open up another debate, but if you speak to people from the Rainbow Project, they will say that, because of recent publicity around certain issues of discrimination or alleged discrimination, there has been increased instances of attacks on people from the LGBT community.

Hate in our society is something that we need to try to broaden our thinking on, and that is the purpose of the amendment. We tried to draft a form of words, and I know that, at one stage, Sinn Féin tried to draft a form of words for how that provision might work, and it is very difficult. That is why we asked the Minister to put forward regulations to capture more than domestic violence and to be informed by the police and prosecuting authorities on what is the right shape in regulations for the issue of hate and how that is managed through the welfare system.

I move on to deal with amendment No 53. This is a moment in our history when we can send out messages of deep authority to sectors of our community that, for various reasons, are vulnerable. That is true of the provision that we proposed on hate and the provisions in new clause 130C, "Impact of Regulations on Victims and Survivors". This is another clause that we struggled to define in the best possible way because this is a contentious issue, and there are matters of dispute with definition. That is why we left it in the way that it is drafted so that, in consultation with the Victims' Commission, provisions could be put forward.

I believe that there is no dispute in the Chamber on the requirement to try to legislate or provide for victims and survivors in the best possible way. Let us take the opportunity to do that in the Bill and in that way send out a message to all sectors that, for whatever reasons, feel or are vulnerable, we will provide welfare protections.

I understand that Mr Ramsey will speak on amendment No 17, which is about bringing forward an independent living fund structure. The Minister will know that Scotland has an equivalent fund. On a cross-departmental basis, Scotland gathered £5.5 million of its devolved moneys, in addition to any moneys from London, to try to shape and work up an equivalent of an independent living fund. I ask the Minister to confirm whether the current provisions run out in 18 months. If so, what will happen, on the far side of that, to the independent living fund?

Mr Allister: This debate, particularly the spectrum that it has taken since 2012-13 to get to this point, is commentary in itself on the dysfunctional arrangements of this place. That a matter such as this, costing us money in the meantime, should and could have been dragged out in all those ways surprises even me.

Then we come to today's debate. From the First Minister's intervention, we discover that the House is being asked to debate at Consideration Stage a Bill that is far from the whole story. There are other, secret aspects, it seems, yet to be revealed. How and when? Further Consideration Stage? Regulations further down the road? Who knows?

4.30 pm

The one thing that we now know — and others may well have known it more fully than me — is that there was the Stormont Castle agreement. Mr Agnew asked the First Minister if he would now publish the Stormont Castle agreement. He did not get an answer. Here we are debating the minutiae of the Welfare Reform Bill —

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair)

Mr P Robinson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Certainly.

Mr P Robinson: The only reason that the Member did not get an answer is that, if you have an agreement that is a five-party agreement, no one party can decide for itself that it is going to publish it. I am very happy that it is published, but you need the agreement of all five parties.

Mr Allister: The import of that is that it was a secret agreement between the parties that they were going to keep secret and that, to break the secrecy, we now have to get the consent of all the participants to the secret pact. There is the challenge to each of the five parties. I will give way to each one of them in turn if they wish to say on the public record to the First Minister that they have no objection to the publication of the secret Stormont Castle deal. I wait. I am inferring — perhaps I infer too much — that the First Minister was giving his consent to the publication.

Mr P Robinson: Yes.

Mr Allister: Right, so there is one. Four —

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Yes.

Mr Beggs: I am all for open and transparent government.

Mr Allister: That is two. I am listening. I would like this on the record if it were possible.

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Yes.

Mr Dickson: The Alliance Party is delighted to do so. We are fully supportive of open and transparent government.

Mr Allister: Three. We are doing very well.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: Yes, I will certainly give way.

Mr Dickson: Will the Member give way before Mrs Kelly intervenes?

Mr Allister: Yes.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I remind Members to address their remarks through the Chair.

Mr Dickson: While I appreciate the point that is being made, which was helpfully led off by the First Minister, we are tempting to run into a farce here again. This is a serious Bill that requires a serious debate.

Mr Allister: I agree entirely. I started on this point: how can we have serious debate if there is secrecy around some overarching deal that impacts on the Bill itself? I think that Mrs Kelly wanted to come in.

Mrs D Kelly: Our party has no difficulty. We are struggling to understand what was the secret deal. One secret deal that we are interested in, Mr Allister, is the one between Sinn Féin and the DUP, which has led to the departure of several senior members of Sinn Féin.

Mr Allister: Perhaps we will come to that. I must say that I am pleased that we have got to the point of four of the secret conspirators in the Stormont Castle deal agreeing to lift the veil of secrecy. It is noticeable that all that I am getting from the Sinn Féin Benches are blank stares. It seems that there is a reticence about taking off the wrappers from the secret deal. I wait, and I think that the silence is compelling.

Mr O'Dowd: There it is.

Mr Allister: I will give way to Mr O'Dowd if that is his request.

Mr O'Dowd: Mr Allister is looking for secret documents. Here it is here; there it is there. Read it, discuss it, debate it. That is your secret deal there.

Mr Allister: I think that what Mr O'Dowd was holding up was the Bill. Is he saying that the Welfare Reform Bill is the secret deal? Is this not the Welfare Reform Bill that was published two-and-a-half years ago? How could it be the secret deal to which the First Minister was referring? Perhaps the First Minister needs to explain to the House something more about the secret deal, or is Mr O'Dowd simply trying to avoid the issue? He certainly cannot say that the Bill is the secret deal.

If the Bill is what he calls the secret deal, there was no deal, because it predates the so-called Stormont Castle agreement by years. What is one to make of this? What is the public to make of it? What are we, as MLAs, to make of it? Four parties say that there was a secret deal that they are happy now to make unsecret, and one party says that there was not even a deal. Is that the truth, is there the hope and expectation, but, really, in truth, welfare reform is not sorted at all? Is that why it is cloaked in such mystery? Is that why it is information tomorrow, down the road in regulation? Is that because, in truth, there is not a deal? Is that why the First Minister was not really able to deal with the question of whether or not Sinn Féin is right when it says that the cheque that will have to be written out of the block grant is £565 million over six years? Is that why the First Minister was not able to be explicit and say whether that is right or not? Is it because this deal has not, even yet, been pulled together? It really is very discomfiting to find the First Minister, supported by three other parties, agreeing that there was a deal called the Stormont Castle agreement, while one of the supposedly participating parties apparently denies that.

Where do we stand on the Bill? Why is the House being asked to legislate in the dark? Are those unreasonable questions? I would have thought not. Is that the reason why we had the petitions of concern? I read amendment No 1 again this morning, which states:

"Regulations shall provide, in circumstances where one member of a couple does not accept a claimant commitment within a prescribed period, that the claim may be considered as a claim by the other member of the couple as a single person."

I must say that I had the mischievous thought that maybe the petition of concern was all about one member of a couple giving cover to the other because they could not quite agree. The more this debate has unfolded, the more startling it appears to be in that regard.

There are then multiple issues on which any light has yet be shed. We have been told by some in the media about this £565 million. We have been told that no cap is to be applied to large numbers of people on benefits, and we know that 6,600 people get in excess of £26,000 a year in benefits. We know that that is a bill of £203.5 million: these are the Minister's figures. We know that the average received by families in excess of a cap is £30,500, which equates to a working person earning something like £40,000/£45,000. Yet 6,600 families in Northern Ireland receive, on average, benefits of that magnitude.

One of the motivations of welfare reform, regardless of what one thinks about it — whether good, bad or indifferent — was to encourage people into work, and one has to ask, if we are in a society and a situation where we are paying thousands of families in excess of an average of more than £30,000 a year in benefits, how do we ever hope to rebalance our economy? Yet, it seems that there are those in the House whose primary goal is to sustain that, to keep those people at the level to which they have become accustomed, and to do it out of the block grant. That is the really concerning part of where this welfare reform is going.

Mr Wilson: Will you give way?

Mr Allister: When I finish this point. Apparently, out of the money for schools, health and all that, we will sustain something that Sinn Féin boasts will be £565 million over the next few years. They seem to be saying that we will do that in perpetuity and for new claimants as well as old claimants. Yet, time and again, we are told that the Executive has an economically driven vision to rebalance the economy. There is a collision course there that has not been reconciled. I will give way.

Mr Wilson: Does the Member accept that, even in the GB legislation, there are exemptions from the cap; for example, for those who have severe disabilities etc. So, the idea that, somehow or other, people in Northern Ireland should be beyond the cap is not a defect in the Bill. It partly reflects what is happening in the legislation for the United Kingdom as a whole.

Mr Allister: I accept that entirely. In GB, not everyone will be capped at £26,000, because there are component benefits that do not count towards the cap. However, while there are 6,600 families in Northern Ireland who are above the present cap — there will be 12,000 if it drops to £23,000 — we have yet to hear the detail of the number of those families who will and will not be subject to a cap. One thing that is certain is that — it is not in the Bill; the cap is in the Bill — it appears that the agreement is that a number of those people will be exempted from the cap. That must be coming in regulations, but the House is not being told about that. Will the Minister tell us that the cap will apply per se in Northern Ireland? I do not think that he will.

Mr Wilson: Will you give way again?

Mr Allister: Yes.

Mr Wilson: As he always does, the Member is trying to build a case that there is something wrong with everything that goes through the House. Would he accept that, on most occasions, primary legislation goes through the House and regulations follow? That is the normal process of legislation here or, indeed, at Westminster.

Mr Allister: The difference is that we are at Consideration Stage and no light has been shed upon what the regulations will contain. I sit on the Committee for Social Development, and the officials were before us no later than yesterday. They told us that none of it had yet been agreed and that it has all still to be thrashed out and agreed at Executive level. We are going into a Consideration Stage and the officials nor no one else, least of all the MLAs, have any notion of what the regulations will contain.

Yes, it is a natural process to have subordinate legislation under primary legislation, but I suggest that it is unnatural that, when you are legislating through the primary legislation, there is such a blank canvas about what will be in the regulations. It takes one back to the question and the burning issue of just what is being put upon the Northern Ireland taxpayer and the Northern Ireland that is dependent on the block grant, and how much of the block grant will be soaked up in meeting what were the demands of Sinn Féin.

It is not so very long ago that the First Minister and other Ministers told us that there was no more money and that they had done the best that they could. It now seems that there is an unspecified amount of money in the future, and the only thing that we know about it is where it will come from. It will come from where it can least afford to come from: the block grant. That is what is frightening about those unspecified welfare reform arrangements.

In that context, it is interesting to debate all the amendments, but we are doing so largely in the dark. I think that the House is owed a more straightforward approach.

I trust that, when the Minister comes to speak, he will do that. I suspect that he will not because he cannot, given that, in truth, nothing has been agreed with Sinn Féin, who say that there is not even a Stormont Castle agreement.

4.45 pm

Mr O'Dowd: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, for the opportunity to speak on the Welfare Reform Bill. When the Assembly was reconstituted in May 2007, I doubt whether many could have forecast that, with all the pressures that may have been bearing down on the political agreement at that time from various forces, including armed forces on the outside of the agreement and political division within certain political elements, inside and outside the Assembly, the one matter that would bring the Assembly to the verge of collapse would be welfare reform. I doubt whether any Member or political observer at the time would have forecast that, but that is the case. Coupled with British Government economic policy, the matter that brought the Executive and the Assembly closest to collapse was welfare reform. That is the context in which this debate is taking place: the Stormont House Agreement that led to today's debate and to the continuation of the elected institutions.

Members should not forget that the agreement that was reached in Stormont House and the political agreement that flowed from it covers a number of areas, but the most important element is this: after two years of a breakdown of political relationships across the Chamber, across the Executive table and, indeed, in society, trust was reformed among the political parties. Political parties reached a position whereby, through word and deed, they were going to ensure that the matters of concern to them and to society would be dealt with in a mature political fashion through agreement, legislation and a commitment to work more closely together than they had previously. It is quite clear that the reputation of the Assembly pre-Christmas 2014 was in tatters in our ability to work together, to bring forward legislation and, most importantly of all, to deliver on the ground and to make positive changes in people's lives, which is the primary reason why this institution was established. That is why, therefore, it is vital that the political parties that signed up to the five-party agreement honour that agreement. They need to reflect on why they entered into those negotiations and why they were necessary in the first place. Today, we are debating the Bill's Consideration Stage, and the first group of amendments, which I am speaking to, all flow from that. You cannot draw the curtain on your mind on 23 December and say, "The negotiations that led up to the agreement are all history and have nothing to do with the implementation of the agreement".

Ms Ruane: I thank the Member for taking my intervention. I will deal with the issue raised by Mr Allister. Our party is quite happy for the five-party agreement made on 19 December to be made public. Furthermore, the agreement that was signed by four parties, which did not include Sinn Féin, was deficient in a number of areas, and we also believe that it should be published.

Mr O'Dowd: I thank the Member for that intervention, and I —

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr O'Dowd: Yes.

Mr Allister: I welcome the clearance from wherever it came. I notice that Ms Ruane pulled rank on Mr O'Dowd, but one welcomes that. One now looks forward to the agreement that, a few minutes ago, was supposed to be this, which it patently was not, and seeing what it actually is.

Mr O'Dowd: I do not mind rank being pulled on me at all.

Ms Ruane: We believe in equality.

Mr O'Dowd: Yes. Towards the end of my contribution, I will return to your comments. Nothing that Ms Ruane has said contradicts what I have said, and I will elaborate on that towards the end of my contribution.

I return to where I am in my contribution. There are three stages of an agreement. There is the negotiation, the agreement and the implementation of the agreement, all of which are vital for success. We are now at the implementation stage of the agreement, and, as part of the implementation stage of the agreement, it was agreed among all political parties to work together to bring forward a Welfare Reform Bill that was built on the Stormont House/Stormont Castle agreement, Mr Allister. It was agreed to work together through the party leaders meetings and to bring amendments to that agreement. What the 2012 draft Bill will be built upon and the final Act will be built upon will be that agreement, so it is somewhat disingenuous for political parties to circumvent that process —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I have afforded some latitude to the Member, but I ask him to address the amendments.

Mr O'Dowd: I will, Principal Deputy Speaker, address the amendments. I am principally talking around a number of the SDLP amendments and, indeed, the UUP amendments, particularly those that would have been clarified through the group leaders meetings. For instance, I refer to amendment No 4 and also to amendment No 17, which I will talk to in more detail as we go forward.

To the parties that have tabled the amendments, I ask this: is the intent of the amendments, whether it is amendment No 4, amendment No 17, amendment No 8 or whichever it may be, to improve the Bill and the final Act? Or, is the intention of the amendments to take part in grandstanding and raise expectations or attempt to get political capital on political opponents? As Ms Ruane said, during the negotiations, political parties, particularly those that have tabled amendments today, signed up to a lesser Bill than that which we have before us.

There were a number of secret agreements during the Stormont House and Stormont Castle discussions, and I particularly refer to the agreement that was signed up to by four of the parties on 17 December, because, when I read through that agreement, I see that none of amendment No 17, amendment No 12, amendment No 13, amendment No 11, amendment No 9 or amendment No 4 are reflected in the four-party agreement that was signed up to. None of those amendments are reflected in that agreement, and none of those amendments appear to have been of such importance that, when the four parties signed up to that agreement and insisted that that was the final deal, any of them were there. I am left asking this question: why are those amendments of such vital importance to the sponsoring parties? I have to say that some of them carry significant merit, but, when political parties enter into an agreement on the way forward for this Assembly, the Executive and our society, I have to expect them to live up to it. We have to ensure that the Assembly delivers for the most vulnerable in our society. We have to ensure that the final Welfare Act and the regulations that flow from that Act and the regulations and the Act that will give body to the Stormont House/Stormont Castle agreement will all be there. When parties divert from that, I think that there is a significant danger in a lack of trust flowing forward.

I will refer to some of the comments made during earlier parts of the debate. One of the comments that Mr Attwood made stuck with me. He was talking about the relationship between the Executive, the Westminster Government and future welfare reform legislation. He stated, "You will be asked to stand and deliver". Surely that is the purpose of ensuring that the regulations that are coming from the Minister for Social Development are scrutinised. I note the comments of the Chair of the Social Development Committee, who stated during his contribution that the Committee stands ready to continue its scrutiny of this entire matter. This is not the final act in this saga. It is not the final part of the play. The curtain is not about to fall once this piece of legislation is passed. There is a further role for the Assembly, for the Social Development Committee and for the Executive. Many of the amendments, particularly in group 1, which may be commendable, do not require to be placed in legislation. Primary legislation is not the answer to all ailments in society. We can deal with any of those matters through regulations.

Indeed, some of the amendments, if passed, would actually make it more difficult to make changes in the future. I refer to placing bimonthly payments in legislation. In principle, they are a very good thing, but if you place them in legislation and then you want to move to weekly payments, you have to bring legislation back to the House to get it changed. That is just one example of where the intent may be good but the outworkings of it actually make it more difficult for the Department for Social Development and those delivering welfare to the most vulnerable to make the changes required.

I said that I would return to amendment No 17, because that is where the leaders' working group comes into play. That is where the agreement and the agreement on the implementation of the agreement were vital. Amendment No 17 again refers to a worthy issue. It states:

"within 18 months of commencement of this Act a fund to replace the Independent Living Fund, following consultation with the Department for Employment and Learning and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety."

will come into play.

It appeared to me, during contributions from Mr Beggs and interjections from Mrs Kelly, that there has been no discussion with either DSD or the Department of Health in relation to that matter, whereas, if the amendment had been brought to the group leaders' meeting for agreement, that would have been the ideal place for such discussions to take place and for the various elements to bring forward an amendment that actually delivers positive outcomes for people on the ground rather than an amendment that may be well intentioned but, I suspect, also has a political intention. People are seen to go further than others were prepared to go. The fact of the matter is that, if the proper mechanisms, which were agreed as part of the Stormont House Agreement, had been used, that issue could have been resolved, in my opinion, not to satisfy the need for amendments but to satisfy the need to ensure that people in need receive the benefits that they deserve.

In conclusion — well, I do not want Mr Allister thinking that he has got one over on me. I would not sleep easy tonight with that thought in my mind. Mr Allister said that we are making legislation in the dark. The only legislation before the House today is the Bill and amendments that have either been brought forward by private Members or are sponsored by the Minister, so we are not making anything in the dark. The regulations that will flow from this matter, which will also be scrutinised by the Assembly and its bodies, will not be made in the dark.

What we have agreed to in a five-party agreement, which we have all been open about, is that we have ensured that the most vulnerable in our society will be protected. What we have agreed to is that we have a different welfare Bill from that passed at Westminster two or three years ago. As I said in my opening comments, the Stormont House Agreement was about political parties agreeing to work with each other in deed and word. I think that some of the amendments brought forward today break that deed and word.

In conclusion, Dolores Kelly said at the end of her speech that the SDLP have done what they said they would do. They have not. They have done the exact opposite of what they said they would do. They have failed to live up to the five-party agreement. They have failed to faithfully implement the Stormont House Agreement, and I think that, by doing so, they have ignored the facts that brought us to those negotiations. Party politics have their place, but, when it comes to destabilising the institutions, you have gone too far.

5.00 pm

Mr Ramsey: I support amendment No 17. I hope that the Minister can give us some clarity on the independent living fund at some stage. I will go into a bit of detail, but, before I do, I want to declare that I chair the all-party group on learning disability and the all-party group on disability.

This is an issue that has been affecting so many families and carers in Northern Ireland for some time now. We know that, in Britain, the UK Government have brought to a closure the independent living fund and devolved it to some of the regional councils. As Alex Attwood said, the Scottish Parliament last year agreed to work on a new autonomy for the independent living fund to ensure that more people have access to it. I make the point that we tabled amendment No 17, because, later this year, the independent living fund as we know it will come to a close.

Many hundreds of people, families and carers in Northern Ireland have disabled children, many of whom have complex and profound disabilities, and, because of the independent living fund and direct payments, those children have a choice to remain at home and a lifestyle to be able to do so. That is fundamental in going forward. The independent living fund gives that sense of independence, as it says on the tin, to enable people to employ a personal assistant, for example. It enables people to employ carers in cases in which clearly more profound needs are involved, and it enables parents or carers to employ people to take the disabled person to their home, thus giving those parents or carers some respite. Therefore, we need to know.

We had a number of events highlighting and promoting the independent living fund. The Health Minister, Jim Wells, is not here, but I met him a number of weeks ago along with a number of parents and carers, and it was a very good meeting. We wish Jim and his wife, Grace, very well. I know that she is on the road to recovery, and we hope that that continues. Unfortunately, at the same time, a gentleman from our own city, Martin McCrossan, died very suddenly, and I was at his funeral this morning. He had been on the same ward as Grace. We extend our sympathies to Sharon and her daughters Charlene and Christina at such a traumatic time. Martin was the epitome of a decent person and what every person could be in the city. He provided tours in the city with positivity and cheer. I just wanted to use the occasion when it was there to say that.

We want to see progress made, and we want to hear what the Minister for Social Development is going to tell us today about access to direct payments to enable those families. At present, just over 660 families and carers receive money from the independent living fund, and that enables them to have some type of lifestyle to bring in carers. The reason that we are bringing the amendment forward, and I say this directly to the Minister, is that we want to know what is happening. We want to know whether there is going to be direct contact with the Department of Health. I know that the transfer of powers from DSD will take place to ensure that DHSSPS will use those powers, but many hundreds of others across Northern Ireland cannot access those moneys, because they do not have the capacity or skills to deal with direct payments. They do not have the skills to employ people, while others are using accountancy firms to help them process payments, National Insurance and tax, that is crucial for families across Northern Ireland.

Amendment No 17 is a very important amendment, because it reflects what is happening across Northern Ireland. It is the duty of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister to monitor the inclusion of disabled people across Northern Ireland. I am sorry that the First Minister is not here now, but that is a key principle in order to give a bit of peace of mind, comfort and reassurance to families. I will tell you what would happen if we did not do it: if those families were not receiving the payments, they would put their children or family members into care, a residential home or hospital, and the health budget would reach crisis point. You can imagine the cost to hospitals if we did not provide that level of support to families who are in crisis at the best of times. There but for the grace of God.

We talk about our families and bringing them up. In some families, a number of people in the household have disabilities or learning disabilities — they depend on this. I have talked to people who are absolutely stressed out, worrying about what is happening and the outcome of the independent living fund. They know that it will place them under so much pressure that they might have no alternative but to consider the option of placing their loved one in a care home or residential home.

Reflecting on all of that, I say to the Minister that we have come a long way from a period when disabled people had to live, segregated, in institutions. That is important. We are modernising and doing things much better. We cannot go back to that situation by not having clear plans and definitive time frames for the independent living fund.

I met Jim Wells. I have to say that, as Health Minister, he was very encouraging to the families whom we met. He hopes to make some determination on the four available options that were subject to consultation. One option must be to enable an increase in those who can access these moneys. Some Members are shaking their heads. They are probably dealing with many such people in their communities and constituencies and realise that they are struggling to come to terms with the multitude of problems. The impact on family life and the disabled person is immense.

Earlier, somebody used the word “shame”. We would be shameless if we did not, under this legislation, look at, explore and take the opportunity to try to devise a method to ensure that, as a result of the discussion over the next few days, Minister Storey will say to me, “Pat, you are absolutely right, and these are the actions that we will take”. If those actions are definitive and clear, there will be no need for us to press the issue at all.

Mr Storey (Minister for Social Development): I thank the Member for giving way. I deliberately wanted to intervene at this stage, given what the Member has said. I could have done so on many other occasions, but I think that it is better to wait until I respond at the end of the debate. Many, if not all, of the issues that the Member brings to the House, he brings with a sense of conviction and understanding of what the issues are.

We concur with the Member's comments and pass on our best wishes to Minister Wells and his good wife, Grace. We are glad of the progress that she has made. We also send our sympathy to the McCrossan family on the very sad and tragic death. I know that it is a loss felt by many across the city.

I will give a commitment in the House. The public consultation ended on 30 November, and the Health Minister, I understand, is to announce his way forward early in 2015. Following today's debate, I will undertake to have urgent discussions with the Health Minister. I will convey the concerns relayed by the Member. I give an assurance on record to the House that I will make that a priority.

Mr Ramsey: I thank the Minister for his intervention. He and other Members will now appreciate why we tabled this amendment: to get clarity and definitive commitments, as the Minister, very kindly, has given. I make the point again that I am reflecting only the opinions, concerns, worries, fears and trepidation of many parents and carers across Northern Ireland. With a sense of relief, I hope that Minister Storey and Minister Wells can, within a very short time frame, give some clarity on the options available. If one option is to set up another trust fund with fewer overhead costs to administer the money, that is fine. That is what disabled families want as well. They do not want a heavy burden of secretarial administration costs. They want the money available to go directly to those people who need it.

So, I am content at present with the Minister's response. We have to look after the people in our community who are less well off — the marginalised, the most vulnerable — and if we cannot do that, we should forget about entering politics. We are about trying to change and improve the quality of life, and give peace of mind to many carers and parents across Northern Ireland.

Mr Agnew: The Democratic People's Republic of Korea, otherwise known as North Korea; the Democratic Republic of Congo; the Democratic Unionist Party. Why is it that those who are least democratic feel the need to shout their democratic principles most loudly? Forty-nine petitions of concern are binding the hands and feet of the Assembly today on this Bill. The Assembly is the body charged with legislating in Northern Ireland, and the Members democratically elected to it have been bound by those petitions of concern and, indeed, bound by the Stormont House Agreement which was made behind closed doors and without public scrutiny.

I am an MLA, a Member of the Legislative Assembly. This is the body that should be legislating for welfare reform in Northern Ireland, in full public view and with democratic accountability.

I have to question the Stormont House Agreement. We have seen some detail of it, but have we seen the full agreement? Do we know what was agreed behind closed doors? For example, is it a coincidence that, on the day that Sinn Féin signed up to the Tory welfare cuts, it launched the Irish language consultation? Is that a coincidence, or is it part of the Stormont House Agreement? Only time will tell on that front.

In his contribution, John O'Dowd said that this is not the final act, not the final curtain — I thought he was going to sing 'My Way'. Thankfully, for us all, he did not, and he could not, because this is not his way: it is not the way of Sinn Féin. This is the Tory way. This is the Tory welfare Bill translated into Northern Ireland legislation. It is the mirror image of that legislation and of the principles of the Tory Party, which set out at the beginning of its term in government to make £18 billion worth of welfare cuts. That is what we are proposing to translate into legislation today, if we do not amend it. As we know, the vast majority of amendments brought forward by Members have been subjected to petitions of concern. There are no amendments from the DUP, Sinn Féin or Alliance, which suggests to me that those parties are happy to implement the welfare cuts as laid out by the British Government.

Mr Campbell: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: I will.

Mr Campbell: Just now, the Member said that the other parties which have not tabled amendments seem content to implement the welfare cuts as rolled out by the Conservative/Lib Dem Government. That is essentially what he said. Does he then dismiss all the concessions and flexibilities that my honourable friend the former Minister negotiated over the course of the past two-and-a-half years?

Mr Agnew: I am talking about the Bill that is before us. I have read the agreements in the press. I have been assured, and heard assurances from the Minister's predecessor, who is now referred to. I have been told that, in the Stormont House Agreement, one of the agreements is that no one in Northern Ireland will be worse off but, at the same time, I hear parties saying: "We will implement the cap on benefits." You cannot have it both ways. Either 6,600 people will be worse off or they will not; but I am being told both by different parties to the Stormont House Agreement. What I am being asked to do is trust the parties that are signatories to the Stormont House Agreement that either there will be a cap on benefits or that no one will be worse off.

I am not sure who I am supposed to trust in that scenario. All that I can really make a decision on and table amendments to, as I have sought to do today, is the Welfare Reform Bill that has been brought to the Northern Ireland Assembly.

5.15 pm

Mr Maskey: I thank the Member for giving way. Does he recall that, when he held bilaterals with my party during the Social Development Committee's deliberations on the Bill, he was prepared to sign the petition of concern against the bedroom tax but was not prepared to agree to any other mitigating measure? In fact, since that time, which is two years ago, you have not brought forward a single amendment. It seems to be a bit of a contradiction. Has it taken you two years to get a conscience on some of these matters?

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for his intervention. There is a certain amount of revisionism, but that should not be surprising. Yes, I would be willing to sign a petition of concern to block something that will harm the most vulnerable in our society. What has happened since those conversations was that we were told that the Welfare Reform Bill was not coming back to the Assembly, so I did not, when I had so many other issues as leader and sole Member of my party, spend time on a Welfare Reform Bill that, I was told by Sinn Féin, would never see the light of day because it would not implement Tory cuts. Maybe I should not have trusted them, but I took them at their word. Then the Stormont House Agreement happened, and the Welfare Reform Bill was to be back on the table virtually immediately. Yes, I had prepared amendments. I have 26 amendments tabled today, and I have been genuine in seeking to amend the Welfare Reform Bill to make it better than the current draft.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: Yes.

Mrs D Kelly: Is the Member surprised to learn that, at Sinn Féin's ard fheis in 2013, Martin McGuinness said:

"Let me be clear, Sinn Féin will resist this onslaught on the most vulnerable. We will not tolerate the introduction of a 'bedroom tax'. We will deploy a petition of concern on this clause if it is brought to the floor of the assembly."

Therefore, are you surprised to learn that Sinn Féin has not signed the petition of concern that we have tabled and that you signed last night?

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for her intervention. I will trust her on this occasion that that is indeed a quote from the Sinn Féin ard fheis. I thank her for reading it into the record.

Today, we have introduced the Stormont Castle agreement to the public. I put it to the leader of the DUP that there should be full public scrutiny of how the welfare reform proposals will be topped up and what they would look like. I am pleased that we have been given that commitment by various parties. I think that each of the five parties has now given a commitment to publish that, and I look forward to seeing the detail because I am left in a situation again where I face contradictions but am being asked to trust.

The top-up in the Budget was £70 million. In various estimates of what the welfare cuts would mean for Northern Ireland, each figure has been above that. NICVA's estimate was that welfare reform cuts would result in a £250 million loss of benefits to the people of Northern Ireland. Some people did not accept that figure. I believe that the last Minister told me that it would be £115 million a year, which is still some way above £70 million. The First Minister, when he was speaking as First Minister and not as DUP leader, said that, eventually, the cost of not implementing welfare reform — in other words, the additional benefit that we would have to pay out — would come to £1 billion a year. Today, as DUP leader, he said that the average would be £70 million a year and that that is exactly what we have budgeted for so nobody need worry. I have heard so many different figures. I look forward to seeing the detail of the Stormont Castle agreement on what figures have been used, how they have been calculated and how this top-up system will work.

I come back to what I said earlier: these things should go through the Assembly. Whether we are being asked to trust the Minister for Social Development and his officials to get it right through legislation or to trust the parties who are party to the Stormont Castle agreement, this is too big an issue of public importance for it not to be put through the democratic processes of the Assembly.

With that in mind, I come to the amendments that I tabled today, every one of which has been subject to a petition of concern. I assume the intent of the DUP is to block them. For the benefit of those who observe the Chamber, and want to see what their MLAs are proposing, I will go through why I have tabled each of the amendments.

Through amendment Nos 10, 37 and 57, I propose that work capability assessments should be provided by GPs or those employed by the health and social care trusts. This is about learning from the mistakes of others. We have seen this outsourced in GB with disastrous results. Atos has relinquished the contract due to its poor record. It had to pay compensation to the Government after it was accused of failures in quality. Indeed, of 600,000 appeals at a cost of £600 million a year, 40% were successful. That was 40% of people put through the added trauma of appealing their assessment relating to benefits to which they were later deemed entitled. If my son in school gets four out of 10 of his questions wrong, I am disappointed. When it is a company paid such exorbitant sums of money to administer work capability assessments, I am more than disappointed; I am horrified at the trauma that people have been put through due to the failures of this company.

Previously, the assessments were undertaken by internal departmental medical staff, and, as I said when, I think, Mr Beggs raised the question of cost, one way or another we pay for those medical experts, if that term can be used. Whether they are employed by public agencies or privately, we, the taxpayers, bear the cost. We have seen the record of outsourcing in GB. With outsourcing, you lose control and accountability. The public have already lost trust in the processes. We need to take action to restore that trust.

Amendment No 44 is about payments pending appeal. I just outlined the number of successful appeals and, therefore, the number of initial decisions that were wrong. My argument is that we should not make people, in some cases, destitute or, certainly, struggle financially while awaiting an appeal, especially when we know that in many cases they will be entitled to the benefits when their appeals succeed. I will read out the details of one case study of somebody whose benefits were stopped pending appeal after such an assessment. Jessica is a 23-year-old woman with mental health problems who was 22 weeks pregnant.

"Jessica, who had walked two miles to the food bank, reported that since her benefits were stopped she had not eaten 'a proper cooked meal' for two weeks and was reliant on 'her sister's children's leftovers'."

That is what we condemn people to if we do not give them the benefit of the doubt during the appeal process rather than giving the system the benefit of the doubt. It is certainly my contention that, when people apply for benefits, the vast majority do so genuinely. We know that 40% of assessments are wrong, and we should not punish the people on the end of those mistakes.

I do not propose to move amendment No 45. It may require some thought in advance of Further Consideration Stage. Amendment Nos 38 and 39 —

Mr Givan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: Certainly.

Mr Givan: On amendment No 45, I am interested to know why the Member needs to give it further thought. I am interested in exploring it, but I appreciate that he does not plan to move it.

Mr Agnew: That is fair. I cannot recall who outlined it earlier — it may have been Mr Beggs — but the intent is to prevent a blunt clawback when there is an overpayment, with the Department simply extracting money from people who are on a very low income after an overpayment that was the fault of the system rather than the individual and when it is clearly not a fraudulent claim but an overpayment by the Social Security Agency. I have come across circumstances — I go back to my time working with the homeless — where mistakes were made and the clawback was quite excessive and led to significant financial difficulties for those on the receiving end. People should not be punished for the mistakes of the Social Security Agency, but, equally, I accept the point that was made earlier: should a significant overpayment be made, it is unreasonable that the public purse be out of money.

Mr Givan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: Sure.

Mr Givan: I appreciate the Member elaborating on that point. It is more about the principle. People can have sympathy when an overpayment has been made and it is not the fault of the individual, but, if you are not entitled to a benefit, you should not receive it. If you were to apply that principle to the payment of income tax or corporation tax, would the argument still prevail that, because you did not take enough income tax off an individual, they should be given a bye ball? That is when we need to be careful about compromising on the principle of the issue.

Mr Agnew: I suspect that we are in agreement. It is not so much the principle of whether the money should be paid back but how it should be paid back. I would be concerned if the Department had the power simply to withdraw money from people's accounts. It is about how rather than whether money should be paid back, but, as I said, the amendment may need further thought.

Amendment Nos 38 and 39 very much concern disability. They are about how long someone's disability should persist before a payment is made. The principle of personal independence payments or disability allowance is about providing support for the extra costs of living with a disability. The proposal in the Bill is for 12 months: three months prior to a claim and nine months afterwards. My proposal is to reduce the nine months to six months, which is the current situation.

I do not understand the rationale for increasing that timeline. The extra costs of disability are virtually immediate, so why would we ask someone to shoulder the burden of those costs without support from the state for a full year? Why would we ask them to demonstrate beyond a year that they are disabled before they get any support? I fail to understand that, and I think that retention of the current system would be preferable in that regard.

5.30 pm

Amendment No 43 deals with payments in cash. Again, with a petition of concern not tabled and the Assembly minded to support it, this amendment may need some further definition. This goes back to my time working with the homeless. I will give the example of someone on benefits receiving their payment. It has become increasingly onerous to get a bank account because of the burden of proof of address and identity. There may be good reasons for that, but for someone who does not have a driver's licence or a passport, and certainly for someone who lives in a homeless hostel and does not have utility bills, it can be quite difficult. Mr Beggs made a point about why it is preferable to have a bank account, and I completely agree with him, but for some people that is very difficult. Despite, in the circumstances I referred to, letters from the hostel or the organisation that I worked for or letters from social workers, many of our residents were unable to get a bank account. Their situation was one where they got their cheque — in some cases that was an amount of £45 a week paid in a single £90 payment — and then went to "Cash a Cheque" or something of that nature, where they paid a premium to receive their money. The intention of the amendment is to ensure that no one should be paying to receive their benefits. No one who is on the lowest incomes in our society should have to pay a premium to receive that money. We each get our pay paid into our bank account, I am sure, and there is no charge for that. There should not be a charge for those on such low incomes to receive their benefit payment. The figures I have suggest that 5% of people on the lowest incomes have no access to a bank account. It is a real problem; it does exist, and we need a solution to it.

Amendment No 74 is about opposition to payment in vouchers. I understand that the wording is that payment "may" be made in vouchers. Again, Mr Beggs laid out some of the reasons why it might be preferable to make payment in vouchers, and the Minister may come back on this in his contribution, but without any assurances as to how and when that would be used, I would be very concerned about that proposal. For example, if you are a parent with children in school, you cannot use vouchers to pay for school trips. There is the potential that the very narrow view of what people need their benefits for, which is that it is needed for food and clothing and that is all, fails to reflect the realities of the lives and financial pressures of people on benefits. Without assurances as to how it would be used, I fear that vouchers are used almost as a penalty and a restriction of freedom on those who are on benefits. I do not believe that people should be punished for being unemployed or disabled or for the many other reasons for having mental ill health. For that reason, I oppose payment in vouchers.

Mr Wilson: Can I, first of all, just make a couple of general points about the importance of the Bill? This issue has disabled this Assembly for quite some time because of the financial constraints it put on it and the concerns that there then were around the budgetary implications. It is important that we now have the Bill on the Floor of the House, and, hopefully, we will get it through this evening, though I notice that it is still being used to score political points and make bogus points against other parties by those who, in the past, complained about the impasse in the Assembly. That is despite the fact that, when you examine their role in these issues, you will see that it hardly stands a great deal of scrutiny.

I noticed the pseudo-anger that we had from the SDLP on this issue. For example, they upbraided Sinn Féin on their refusal to sign a petition of concern on the spare-room subsidy, ignoring the fact that the spare-room subsidy was introduced into Northern Ireland by the SDLP. Indeed, it was introduced for those tenants in the most expensive housing sector, namely the private sector. There were no concerns then, of course; no petitions of concern; no amendments being put down. Their Minister simply introduced it. Now, they try to score political points. It is this cheap political point-scoring that makes the public cynical about the approach that parties have to certain issues.

They talked about sanctions. Sanctions were introduced by an SDLP Minister. We had the pseudo-rage from Mrs Kelly about Atos and the independent bodies that make assessments. Indeed, when she was moving her amendment, she talked about it, despite the fact that that privatisation of the assessments, if you want to call it that, was introduced by an SDLP Minister.

When we listen to the criticisms that the SDLP level and direct mostly in that direction — and I am not here to defend Sinn Féin, by the way, just in case anyone thinks that I am — one has to bear in mind their own record on this, and then ask how sincere are they really about the things that they said about it.

Of course, we had Mr Beggs who, in the other direction, I suppose, tried to poke at the DUP, as if, somehow or other, the Ulster Unionist Party was totally divorced from all this stuff about welfare reform, despite the fact, as was pointed out to him ad nauseam by Members, that his own party stood in the last election under the banner of the party that has introduced it. Indeed, his own party leader stood as a candidate in that election.

Mr Nesbitt: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: I will give way, certainly.

Mr Nesbitt: Yes, I did stand as a candidate, and I did not get elected, and Mr Wilson did get elected. When was the last time he had coffee or a diet Coke with the Prime Minister?

Mr Wilson: I have never had coffee or a diet Coke with the Prime Minister. Do I look like the kind of person who drinks diet Coke, for a start? All I am saying is that we actually support a lot of the welfare reform proposals anyway. We are supporting this Bill because we support a lot of the elements in welfare reform.

When it counted and when there were things that we disagreed with, first of all we went to Westminster and voted against those parts of the Bill. When that did not succeed, our Minister here in Northern Ireland sought to get changes made in the Bill, some of which are reflected and some of which reflect the concerns that have been expressed by parties all around here.

Our record on the Bill is consistent. Where there are good aspects to it, we have supported them. Where there are aspects that we believe are disadvantageous, we have opposed them. Where we have had the ability to do something about it, we have done something about it. That is as good a record as anyone can have on the issue.

On applying standards, Mr Beggs, when he was talking about amendment No 1, which would mean significant costs to the Executive, he would not or could not give us the costings. Indeed, his argument was that it is up to the Minister and the Department to give us some of the costings. However, when challenged by Mr Agnew to support some of his amendments, he said that he could not do it unless the Member could give him costings. It is another example of parties wanting to have it both ways. Where there are costs applied to their amendments, they say that somebody else should tell you what the costs are. However, they will not support other people's amendments unless they can be told what the costs are, saying that the obligation to give the cost is on the person moving the amendment.

Mr Beggs: I thank the Member for giving way. Will the Member not acknowledge that this is an important area and that there will be occasions on which vulnerable individuals could be caught out if there is not such a flexibility built in? Furthermore, has there not been some flexibility built in through split universal credit payments? Therefore, what we are asking for, which we asked for before it was granted, has been built into the proposals. Will he not acknowledge that? We would like to have it in the Bill. What is wrong with that?

Mr Wilson: I will come to putting that kind of issue in the Bill. Yes, there are financial consequences attached to some of the changes that have been made. Where we have already had them costed, we have not sought to make them secret, despite what Mr Allister said. In fact, we have been quite open about the costs. Some will require changes in regulations, and we know the areas that those lie in. I suspect that the regulations may even be drafted with a mind to the amount of money that is available. That will show the kind of flexibility that you can then attach to those regulations. The idea that, somehow or other, you simply put forward amendments willy-nilly without attaching costs to them is totally irresponsible.

That brings me to the issue of the petitions of concern. Somehow or other, Members have tried to portray the use of the petition of concern as undemocratic and seeking to railroad things through, and so on. First, we are having a debate on the Bill. The public will be able to hear the arguments that people are putting forward for their amendments. There is transparency there. A petition of concern does not stop there being a vote on the Bill, so the public will know who voted for it and who did not vote for it.

Use of a petition of concern is especially relevant in cases such as this, in which there are significant costs attached to some of the amendments that are being proposed, and where some of those amendments are being proposed because parties can behave irresponsibly when they are in the position that they are in. They might be able to behave irresponsibly individually, but, if they were to behave irresponsibly collectively to score the points that they wish to score, there would be implications. A petition of concern is used in a situation like that to safeguard against the kind of irresponsibility that, unfortunately, we have heard even today. Some of the parties that signed up to an agreement at Stormont House now seem prepared to ignore what they signed up to by putting down some of the amendments that they have — amendments that they never raised with the other party leaders. I suppose that they thought that it was a good way of poking their opponents by putting them down now.

5.45 pm

The petition of concern is a perfectly relevant means to use, and I will tell you one thing: it is far more relevant in a situation such as this than in the situations in which the SDLP used it in recent weeks: to protect the postman from sanctions for letters to get murderers off the consequences of their crime; to ensure that money is irresponsibly spent on an Irish-medium school in Dungiven; or to ensure that there cannot be a Union flag placed on the driving licence of people in this part of the United Kingdom. If you are looking for frivolous uses of the petition of concern, look in that direction, not this direction. At least we have some rationale behind it, and it does not stop —

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: I will, yes.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member explain the language used in amendment No 1, which states:

“the claim may be considered as a claim by the other member of the couple as a single person.”

The word used is “may”, so flexibility is built in. Why is there a need for a petition of concern? This is an area that has been of concern to Ulster Unionists for some time, and we tabled an amendment on it. It was not particularly new, so why does he use a petition of concern in an area that we have shown an interest in for some time and into which we have built the flexibility to enable something practicable to be delivered to meet people’s needs?

Mr Wilson: Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, you have been a bit tolerant with me anyway. I had tried to keep, at least loosely, to the amendments before us. Let me come to those now. I will not speak on all of them, by the way, but I want to take up some of them.

Amendment No 1 is a very good example of where there is a cost attached, and I suspect that a great deal of thought did not go into the amendment. The consequences, of course, of allowing one individual in a family to decide that they do not want to make a commitment, therefore allowing the other member of the family to make a commitment, can, I think — in fact I know — have significant cost and lead to irresponsible behaviour. That is because the claims have always been joint. It has been done that way for one simple reason, which is that when someone makes a claim, there is also a necessity with income-based benefit to look at the total income of the family.

If we were to run with the amendment, we could find that one of the two people in a family, because of their savings or other income, could simply say that they do not want to make a commitment. Under the amendment, the other person could then make the claim. So, people who abide by the rules are excluded from benefit and disadvantaged by an amendment such as this, which allows those who want to use the system and the amendment that the Member has put forward to have the best of both worlds: one partner drops out; the other person gets the benefit. That is an additional cost. Indeed, were that to be widespread across Northern Ireland — if people cottoned on, why would they not do it? — the cost would be quite significant.

Had the Member thought a wee bit about his amendment, he might have seen its implications. He pulled at the heartstrings, of course, asking, “What about irresponsible partners who decide that they do not want to make a commitment, which, in turn, affects the benefit that is available and means that children suffer as a result?” However, there is a provision there: the cooling-off period. There are seven days for all of the implications to be explained. During that period, there may or may not be a change of mind, but at least there is an opportunity to steer people towards the right decision. Anyhow, the irresponsible person who does not want to make the commitment and allows the benefit to go to their partner would still receive housing benefit, would keep a roof over their head and everything else, and would be encouraged in their irresponsibility. The whole point of welfare reform was to try to make people be more responsible. Is he really saying that he wants to introduce easements that pander to those who are either workers of the system or want to abuse the system?

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: I will, yes.

Mr Beggs: I go back to the wording in the amendment. It states that the claim “may be considered”. There will be an opportunity for regulations to stipulate when it may be considered. The Member is painting a very black and white picture, when the wording of the amendment is “may”.

Mr Wilson: While he has used the term “may”, I would love to hear from the Member — and I did not hear it during the debate — the circumstances he would stipulate in regulations under which you could not do it. How can you make a judgement about a person’s motivation? Do not forget: it is one thing to say “may” when you can measure where the problem lies. It is another in a case like this, in which, I suspect, it is what the person’s motivation happens to be. In the way in which it is dealt with at present, there is a chance for people to understand the implications of what they will do, what will happen to their benefits and what impact that will have. This will give them a chance. With the cooling-off period, they have that chance.

A number of other amendments were tabled by the Ulster Unionist Party. I will maybe deal with them later as they overlap with some of the amendments tabled by the SDLP.

When Mr Attwood was speaking, there was a sense that the SDLP wants to be the champion of the poor and that anybody who supports the Bill wants to trample the poor into the ground. That was the implication, despite the work that has gone into trying to make the changes more palatable. At one point, I thought he was going to break into what he would describe as a sectarian tune. He spoke about hand on heart. He got so passionate that I thought he was going to talk about guarding old Derry’s walls as well. He said that the purpose of the SDLP amendments is to protect the claimant on their journey through the new welfare changes.

Let us look at some of the amendments. It is as if the SDLP are the only ones who want to protect people. Some of the amendments certainly do not show that. Take amendment No 8, for example, which deals with the frequency of payments. The frequency of payment has already been established. As a result of listening, and our concerns about people on low incomes being paid once a month — where the difficulty would have been that they would have spent it all by the end of the month because they were under such great pressure — it is now down to every two weeks. Indeed, it has been left open.

Mr O'Dowd made a very important point when he said that if we put the frequency into the Bill we would have cut out the opportunity for further flexibility. For example, for some people in certain circumstances, a weekly payment might be necessary. To say that that is an amendment to ease people's journey through the changes is incorrect. If anything, it probably makes it more difficult to have flexibility, and that flexibility has already been considered.

Another amendment, amendment No 9, dealt with the claimant commitment. That amendment states:

"in preparing, reviewing and updating a claimant commitment...the Department shall have...regard for the claimant's skills, experience, caring responsibilities and physical ".

It is as if that was something new that was invented by the SDLP. The truth of the matter is that when somebody goes for a work-focused interview, the things they look at are what kind of work you have done in the past, what skills you have, what caring responsibilities you have and what training you need. This is nothing new, yet it has been presented by the SDLP as, "This is our amendment, because we are more concerned about the people who might be affected by welfare reform." That is already there.

I could go through some of the other amendments. Amendment No 11 on mental health says that mental health reports should be considered. That already happens not only with reports but the assessment of capability that is based on those reports. A lot of the amendments really do not add anything to the Bill. Indeed, I asked myself, as I was listening to the SDLP's case, what those amendments add. If the purpose and the objective are to make it easier for people, what amendments have I heard from the SDLP that actually improve the lot of people who will be affected by welfare reform? The answer is that they do not add anything, because a lot of what the SDLP is proposing is already there. The changes are already made, and therefore the working that has been done by the parties and Ministers etc has been dealt with.

I was not too sure whether Mr Allister supported the Bill or opposed it; he just always likes to take a swipe at the dysfunctionality of this place. It actually might be more functional if we could get a constructive attitude from him on some of these things, but, of course, the problem is that we do not. We have had "secret deals" and "secret agreements", and "we do not know what has been done." We now have the "conspiracy" of the Stormont House Agreement. I do now know what people were conspiring to do in the Stormont House Agreement other than to find a way forward with a Bill whose absence had crippled this Assembly, to find additional money, to alleviate some of the impacts of it, and to look for the longer term at how that money might be spent.

Some might argue — I suspect that they will — that there is not enough money in it. However, the important thing is that we have tried to deal with it. Not all of it is secret, because the Minister, over time, has already revealed where some of it is going anyway. Some of it will be spent on avoiding, until we get our housing balance and our housing stock right, the impact of the spare-room subsidy or bedroom tax.

Some of it will be spent on the very thing that Members have raised here today: what happens when people go for their assessments as to whether they can work or not. Six million pounds will go towards helping people to get medical reports that they will be able to use at those assessments. Some of it will be used to replace the social fund, and sums have already been attached to that. As the First Minister pointed out, some of it has not been allocated yet because, until we know the exact form of the regulations, we will not know what the additional costs might be. It is not unusual, despite what the Member said, for regulations to follow a Bill rather than be published before a Bill goes through. We examine those quite frequently in the Committee.

Lastly, then, I come to some of Mr Agnew's comments. I know that we will have even more of this when we come to the second round of amendments. We know, because we have recently seen its manifesto, that the Green Party lives in cloud cuckoo land.

It says things like, "No bacon on a Monday", or, "No advertising for holidays in the sun" and, "Be able to join a terrorist organisation without it being illegal". So it goes on. I suppose some of his amendments reflect that sense of being out of touch with the real world and reality.

6.00 pm

In fact, I will ask him for a loan, because if this is the way that he operates publicly, I would love to know what he does privately. Do not forget that we are talking about people who do not have a great deal of money and who have more of a chance of having their appeal turned down than approved, but I think that it is amendment No 44 that says that, where an appeal is pending, we should continue to pay those people as though they had won the appeal. Presumably, at the end of the period, if they have lost the appeal, we have to get the money back off them. I am sure that the business of recouping that money will be extremely easy. Maybe the Member for North Down is flush, so I can imagine somebody coming up to him and saying, "I think my auntie is going to die in about a year's time. I may have a legacy from her, so you wouldn't lend me 20 grand on the strength of it?" He would not do it, yet I suppose because it is populist, he expects that we should behave that way with state money.

A lot of the Member's other amendments are the same, including the one on vouchers. It is made quite clear that vouchers are used in a case where someone is dysfunctional and is not spending their money where they should. His argument was that, if you give people vouchers, they cannot pay for their children to go on a school trip. If they were paying for their children to go on a school trip, they would not need vouchers in the first place. The vouchers are provided if there is maybe an alcohol or a gambling problem or whatever; they are not even meant for providing for the person's family.

Mr Agnew: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: Yes, I will.

Mr Agnew: The Member is talking about living in the real world, so will he show me where in the Bill those assurances are made? Will he show me where that is laid out in the Bill and the parts that say that that can happen only in those specific circumstances? Will he provide me with that information? He is asserting it with certainty, but it is not in the Bill.

Mr Wilson: Again, this is where the Member strains on these points. The default position is that people get their benefits paid in cash, by cheque or into their bank accounts. However, neither the default position nor the normal position is that people get paid in vouchers. If that was the case, benefits would generally be paid in vouchers. Throughout the rest of the welfare system, payments are made in cash or into bank accounts, but the very fact that this is regarded as an additional way of making payments is indicative of the fact that vouchers are for exceptional circumstances. We know the kind of exceptional circumstances in which they would apply.

I accept that the voucher system will not be immune to abuse. You may find that people will be prepared to buy vouchers at a discount from somebody who has an alcohol problem. The Member mentioned that those people might go to Tesco to get their messages, and when they go in, they buy alcohol. That is probably easy to deal with: you simply make the voucher not redeemable for alcohol. I accept that there are other ways in which that system can be abused, but I think that it is irresponsible to say that, in circumstances like that, people should be paid in cash.

I am not going to deal with a lot of the Member's other amendments. I have tried to go through some of the amendments, and if you look at them, Mr Speaker, you will see that their purpose is quite clear. Their purpose is not to improve the situation, because some refer to what is already the practice or in the Bill. The purpose is to be able to say, "We put an amendment down; we are good. You lot did not put an amendment down; you are bad". That kind of cheap point-scoring does not do anybody any good. It confirms, in my eyes anyway, why we can have a debate and a vote, but sometimes you have to have a petition of concern because you will still have people who are totally irresponsible on the issue.

Mr McCallister: Most of us could sign up to the broad principles of welfare reform, which are that work should always pay. No family or couple should be disadvantaged by going into the employment market and back into work only to find that they are worse off. On that basis, I welcome the fact that, after almost two years, the Bill is now back, and we are debating the amendments today. It is, however, unfortunate that, while we are debating the amendments, there is not much chance of a different outcome for the Bill. We can engage and be well intentioned in tabling the amendments and debating them, but the petition of concern has effectively killed off any prospect of any change. It points to something important for the Executive.

I said before in the Chamber that people who signed up for things at Stormont House, whether it is an agreement on the Budget or on welfare reform at the castle, and then go round to Stormont House to present a united front as the Government of Northern Ireland, suddenly find themselves in the new year, and the shine has gone off it, and they think that maybe they should not have signed up for that and should have held out for a better deal. That is not how the Executive should work, because that does not provide for good or stable government.

We have an Executive without a Programme for Government or any meaningful policy ideas beyond corporation tax. They have no sense of direction, and that is deeply regrettable. So many amendments in this group have petitions of concern. Just when I thought that the Assembly or the Executive could not get any worse than the debate on the Education Bill when we had 10 petitions of concern, or when we had some 50 petitions of concerns from unionism, if you like, from 1998, we now have almost 50 in the one day. That is outdoing even yourselves.

To cap it all off, we have Mr Wilson telling us, effectively, that he has done us all a great favour; he has saved the Executive and the Assembly from the arduous task of sorting out what they might want to do: "We will save you all that bother; we will do the petitions of concern on your behalf". What it points to is the dysfunctionality of the Executive. The First Minister is absolutely right, and every day the Assembly proves just how right he is: an Executive and an Assembly that are dysfunctional. That is why they need to change.

No meaningful ideas are coming through here, apart from what Westminster are making the Executive do. They are making them do welfare reform, which they would not do without Westminster pushing them into it. They would not do public-sector reform in any guise without Westminster pushing them down that road. I have no idea what the Executive would do, what they stand for or what direction they will take, so they are not fit for purpose. You have an Executive in which two parties now agree on welfare reform, but the other three parties are out there voting against the Budget. I will say this to the Alliance Party today: well done on acting like part of the Government for today. I am not sure how long it will last, but well done today on acting as part of the Government. To the other parties that are in the Government, I say this: why are you still there? Why are you tabling amendments? Why are you voting against something?

Why are there so many petitions of concern if the DUP has the confidence of its other Executive partners, particularly Sinn Féin? You have the numbers. You have the majority in the House. Therefore, in all of these amendments, you do not need a petition of concern. We had a petition of concern from Sinn Féin and the SDLP yesterday against Mr Allister's amendment when the amendment was voted down by something like 96 to two. Why oh why are we using petitions of concern in this instance? With the Education Bill, we had 10 of them against even Mr Agnew when the Assembly naturally found its place after debate. There is no need to go about our business in that way. Even if you were to table petitions of concern on these amendments against your other government colleagues, why, when the Government of Northern Ireland has an in-built majority of 102, do you necessarily pick on Steven Agnew, one lowly independent Member, and his amendments? Mr Wilson gave us a brief glimpse of the Green Party manifesto, but I suspect that the Speaker would rule me out of order if I were to listen to too much of Mr Wilson.

This makes our Executive look like a pinball machine, with nobody quite sure what direction it is going in or what direction it is going to fire off into next. That is why we cannot allow this to continue. Using the petition of concern is an anti-democratic measure. It was built in to give protection while we built up a process and moved from conflict to consensus, and it is a clear abuse of that and the workings of this Assembly. It reflects badly not only on the Executive but on each and every one of us in here.

I want to speak about some of the issues around the amendments. If we were to believe the rhetoric of Sinn Féin, we would say that we are going to spend some £565 million over the next five to six years. Of course, that is a huge financial burden that we are looking at taking on. We listened in the Budget debate to the Finance Minister, who constantly warns us that we are entering a very difficult budgetary period. Not only this year but right the way down the line up to at least 2020, we will be in difficult times. We are now taking this on with some debate on how it will be paid for, where it is coming from, where it is going to be targeted and how it will be used. Will it mean less money for health services, for education, for employment and learning and all the Departments that were working tirelessly to provide the services to try to get people off welfare and into work? Are we diverging away from the GB model? Can we afford to do this? Where will this end after five or six years, and where will that leave people? Will it leave people more trapped in our benefits system than in other parts of the UK?

We also have to look at this. The amendments to this Bill tie in to what is an agreed Executive policy on corporation tax. The Executive aim to get control of corporation tax and to move to cut it to maybe 12.5%, which is the same as the rate in the Republic of Ireland, or, indeed, maybe below that, as in the DUP manifesto. The cost to the Executive could be some £325 million a year. Where does the £325 million for corporation tax and the £565 million for welfare reform fit in with an ever-tightening budgetary position? That will cause real strain on the Executive and how they manage that. We have been told about the costs of not doing welfare reform. We have looked at the fines and penalties that could have been imposed by the Treasury, and, quite rightly, we are doing welfare reform because the reality of us not moving to do it is a nonsense.

To continue down the road of fines, penalties or whatever you want to call them would just be madness. You cannot continue to do that.

The figures used were that, if we put welfare reform through, we would have one third of people better off, one third of people the same and one third marginally worse off. Those are very rough figures, and I suppose it depends where everybody falls and where you are fighting through.

6.15 pm

I will turn to some of the amendments. While I will not speak to them all — it is probably slightly pointless, given the number of petitions of concern — I think that amendment No 1, standing in Roy Beggs's name, seems relatively sensible. Amendment No 2 from Mrs Kelly and Mr Attwood seems similar to the UUP amendment. Amendment No 8 seems sensible enough, although it gives rise to the question of what the administrative costs associated with it would be. I understood that the Executive had won some provision about fortnightly payments anyway when Mr McCausland was Minister. I wonder whether Mr Agnew's amendment No 10 would place an unnecessary burden on the health service by making sure that that person has to be from the Department of Health.

There are many amendments that we could have accepted the principles of and worked around. It would have been fair to debate and look at why we would want to develop those ideas and that thinking. The Chamber, at its best, would debate, listen to and work through amendments and vote accordingly when the arguments were won. Again, you come to the point of why so many are subject to petitions of concern. It does not seem a sensible move forward. Amendment No 19, an SDLP amendment, seems quite sensible. There are many amendments that it seems sensible and worthwhile to have a genuine debate about without, effectively, the axe of a petition of concern hanging over us.

Mr Wilson talked about the bedroom tax. I know that Minister Storey will be aware of this. I also have questions, not only around the bedroom tax issue but even around the lifetime tenure of people in social housing. If we are doing anything about the principles of welfare reform, it is about making sure that people are not trapped either in welfare or in social housing and even that our housing stock is not being inappropriately used. That is something that Mr Wilson touched on in his contribution, and it is something that we ought to look at.

My other comments on the amendments are about the rhetoric, mainly of the SDLP and Sinn Féin. The SDLP was largely founded on the principles of social democracy, social mobility and helping people to better themselves. I do not always see that in some of the opposition or some of the changes that you want to make to the Welfare Reform Bill. If anything, the basics of welfare reform are about not trapping people in poverty, worklessness or social housing. It is about social mobility, and I just think that some colleagues, mainly to the right of me, have lost their way on social mobility.

I have to say to colleagues in Sinn Féin that, if you look at some of the areas that they have represented for many years now, you can see that they are probably some of the least socially mobile constituencies in the UK. That is something that we need to change. I find it bizarre, when you set it in the context of supporting corporation tax devolution and then welfare reform, because you come to the point at which that is effectively supporting trickle-down economics, and it is a long way to trickle down. Corporation tax has a long way to trickle down to reach the very poorest and those most distant from the labour market. That is the basis of what welfare reform is and should be about. It is about protecting the vulnerable, but I do not think that, from the point of view of Sinn Féin and the SDLP, the two policies sit together.

Mr McGlone: I thank the Member for giving way. Will the Member accept the difference, which is that there are people who will never be able to enter the workforce because of their disabilities? That is why the SDLP is proposing amendments and why the SDLP and others, including Mr Agnew, are advocating and championing their cause. The link between corporation tax and those who are disabled, some of whom are so severely disabled as never to be able to enter the workforce, is an erroneous one.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to Mr McGlone. The links between reforming welfare and economic policy are well established. The work that the Conservative and Liberal Democrat coalition Government have done is about making work pay and driving a private sector that can create jobs to take people off welfare and get them into work. I entirely accept Mr McGlone's point that there are people who will never be able to work; there will be people with disabilities so profound that they will not be able to work. The liberating fact of getting people into a job and getting paid and off dependency is something that we as an Assembly and an Executive should encourage. Those are the more positive points about welfare reform. We do not want to trap people. We want social mobility —

Mr F McCann: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCallister: I will in a second. We want people who have some of the most difficult starts in life not to be trapped in welfare and worklessness for generations, with the cyclical effect that that brings.

Mr F McCann: I understand your politics in all of this. Having listened to your debates and arguments, I know you have always argued in and around support for welfare reform, regardless of the consequences.

I have also listened to the SDLP talk about the amendments. It is a party that entered into an agreement and then walked away from it when it got out the door. People talk about work capability assessments, but it is the party that initiated those and has been responsible for tens of thousands of people with physical and mental disabilities being taken off benefits, yet it stands here today saying that it is championing their cause.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to Mr McCann as well. On his initial point about supporting welfare reform, I think that most people support the broad principles that we cannot or should not trap people. I want to see people from his constituency of West Belfast, which is one of the most deprived constituencies in the United Kingdom, being socially mobile and being able to get a good education and a good, well-paid job. The point is about linking it with an economic strategy. Some people in his constituency will be a long way off benefiting from a cut in corporation tax. That is where the trickle-down economics comes in. It is a long way for it to trickle down to get to the very poorest in his constituency.

I have to say that I agree entirely with his point about agreeing to something before Christmas and then walking away from it. If you are going to do that, at least leave the Executive. I know that, if Mrs Kelly had her way, the SDLP may well have been out of the Executive by this stage, but that is — [Interruption.] She may be getting to her feet now. That is the reason why we need to reform the way in which we do our business here.

We cannot have an Executive who function like this. They agree a Budget, then three parties vote against it. They agree welfare reform, then two parties vote against it. You need either to agree —

Mr Givan: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCallister: I will give way to Mrs Kelly first.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for giving way. I want to clarify something for Members who do not appear to have read the Stormont House Agreement and are trying to throw in a number of red herrings about what was or was not agreed. There are six lines in the agreement, as I said earlier, on welfare reform and the Bill. If I may be permitted, they state:

“Legislation will be brought before the Assembly in January 2015 to give effect to welfare changes alongside further work to develop and implement flexibilities and top-ups from the block grant as part of a package of measures to address local need. Implementation of these welfare changes will begin to take place in the financial year 2015-16 and implementation will be complete by 2016-17.”

It appears that the Executive have already failed to implement the Stormont House Agreement, because this is the month of February. I do not see where there has been any walking away from the agreement. We are debating the Bill here. We did not give a veto to the dictatorship that runs in Sinn Féin and the DUP. I know that those two parties clamp down on dissidents and speakers who have a different view from the party leadership, but the House has a duty to scrutinise the Assembly, and it is the right of the legislative Assembly to scrutinise legislation. We are not giving up that right.

Mr McCallister: I welcome the right to champion that right to scrutinise, but you should be doing that from a position outside the Executive. That is what all three smaller parties should be doing: opposing, scrutinising and tabling amendments from outside the Executive.

Of course, I was not at the Stormont House Agreement discussions —

Mr Speaker: The longer you go on, the more tenuous your connection with the amendments. Will you please return to the subject matter?

Mr McCallister: I will. Thank you, Mr Speaker. I think that Mr Givan wanted to bring me straight back to the amendments, if he still wants in.

Mr Givan: If the Executive have handled this so badly, and the SDLP and Ulster Unionists are so vociferously opposed — whether they are happy to be subjected to a “dictatorship”, as Dolores Kelly said, is a matter for those parties to deal with — can Mr McCallister impart to us how the Executive could be more functional, if he believes that that needs to be the case? Maybe, if there is best practice from his experience of NI21, that could be shared with us to try to make us more functional.

Mr Speaker: I invite you not to follow that line of inquiry — [Laughter.] — and come back to the subject matter.

Mr McCallister: Mr Speaker, I am grateful for your guidance on that. I am sure that there is an amendment that I could try to link it to.

The issue of these amendments and their functionality does not reflect well on tabling amendments from various sides of government. My views on how we make this place better are very well known. In fact, the Member could come out and support my Bill on reforming the Assembly and Executive. That would make a huge difference to it.

One last point: at least when I was in something as dysfunctional as NI21, I knew to resign. [Laughter.]

Mr Speaker: I call the very patient Minister for Social Development, Mr Mervyn Storey.

Mr Storey: Thank you, Mr Speaker. After listening to all that since 10.50 am today, I wonder where to start, but I will try to make my way through this. Had I known on 24 September 2014 what awaited me, it might have coloured my answer to the question put to me by the First Minister about taking up this post. However, we are where we are, and we will endeavour now to work through the very important issues raised.

I want to say a word of thanks to all who worked on the Bill. In particular, I thank the Committee for the work that it carried out when focusing on the matters pertaining to it. Its sterling work on the consultation with organisations should be acknowledged.

6.30 pm

I also want to acknowledge the work of my colleague and friend, Nelson McCausland the previous Minister for Social Development, who did a huge amount of work. I do not think that we will underestimate the work that he did to bring the measures that he negotiated to the fore. I want to place that on record and say a word of thanks to him. I also thank my staff who have worked tirelessly over the last number of months and continue to work in relation to this. I want to pay tribute to them as well.

A comment was made earlier; I think it was by Mrs Kelly. It was a quote or summary of what it was that we should be about. It was about meeting the needs of people. As I listen to the contributions, I think that sometimes we lose sight of the reason why we are here. It is to ensure that we do what we were mandated to do for the people who sent us to this House. I have listened to cheap political points and nonsense spoken by Members who, I honestly believe, if they had the convictions they claim to have, would walk out of the Executive and the Assembly and would tell the people of Northern Ireland: "I do not want to be part of this dysfunctional process, this Assembly cannot make a decision."

It seems that when we do not make a decision it is a problem, and when we get an agreement, it is a problem and there are difficulties and issues. Clearly, I think that there are some people and parties in the Chamber for whom it is make-your-mind-up time. Surely, if you have the convictions that you claim you have, and if you are politically posturing in relation to these things, as we think you are, you will have an opportunity in a few months' time to put that to the test. Surely, that is the ultimate test that we all subject ourselves to.

However, I do not have that privilege or luxury. I have been given a task to do, one that is underscored in legislation: to ensure that I continue to deliver a safe and secure welfare system for the people of Northern Ireland. I can assure you that I will not deflect from that purpose or responsibility, even though it will be difficult and challenging. That is the purpose and goal that I have been set.

Mr Nesbitt: I am very grateful to the Minister for giving way. I acknowledge his opening remarks. I have just a couple of questions to put to him, if I may. Has he heard anything from the Ulster Unionists today that he did not hear in a three-hour meeting in this Building yesterday? Will he confirm what I believe I heard yesterday from the other parties that signed up to the Stormont House Agreement, that we were supposed to go forward as five parties agreeing together? Can he understand the shock of the Ulster Unionist Party to discover that the petitions of concern, which were not mentioned once in the three hours yesterday, were issued within minutes of the end of that meeting?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his intervention.

I have to say that we find ourselves in a position where we must get progress. Mrs Kelly made reference to the timeline and that already we are in default. Our party is a party to the Executive, their processes and the work that they do. I find it difficult, when we bring papers to the Executive and inform them of what we are doing, that that is taken and used against us, as though we are defaulting and not implementing what we agreed. I can understand the issues that the Member has raised but he, equally, has to understand the frustration that I have in trying to ensure that the issue of penalties is dealt with. Remember, that issue has not gone away. There is a requirement on us to make progress in relation to that, and I am trying to keep the focus in relation to that issue. I have given commitments to ensure that we will work our way through this process.

Let me make this point before I start into the comments that I want to make on the amendments: a lot of this was not about the Bill when it all started; it was about the regulations and about implementation. That is following on from, and trying to respond to, the point that was made by Mr Attwood earlier when he referred to the way in which this is chaotic in the rest of the United Kingdom. Members know that I have repeatedly said that it is vital that we get the legislation but that it is more important that we get the regulations and have the implementation in a way that avoids all the issues that have been to the fore in other parts of the United Kingdom. I will come back later to some of the comments that he made.

I want to move to the issues raised by Members. To encourage Members, you will be delighted to know that we have five groups and that we are just coming near the end of the first one. I will endeavour, as time permits, to work my way through the comments that I want to make.

I will begin by addressing amendment Nos 1 and 3, which relate to the basic conditions that must be met to be entitled to universal credit. It would perhaps assist the House if I explain, first, what universal credit is and, secondly, what the basic conditions are. Universal credit will be a single-household benefit that will replace a number of working-age benefits and is designed to simplify the existing complex benefits system, making it cheaper to administer whilst providing incentives to encourage individuals to find work or return to work and to ensure that work always pays. It is trying to address the issue that was referred to by my colleague. He makes many valid points about that incentive and that policy intent and ensuring that we have a system and a policy intent that is about taking people out of a very sad situation. We have to face up to that.

There sometimes seems to be a view in the House that there are difficulties only in certain communities and that it is only certain locations in this city that have problems and challenges. My constituency is deemed affluent by the Noble indices and all the other indicators by which an area is judged. However, there are people in those communities who are dependent upon ensuring that there is a welfare system that provides for their needs. Let us not lose sight of that, because we sometimes do ourselves a disservice by the cheap, trivial way that we approach problems faced by families, individuals, lone parents and a whole variety of people such as disabled people and people who have other challenges and difficulties. I come here today, I trust, with some heart for those issues because I know what it is like to have been there and to have seen some of the difficulties that families can face.

Clause 4 sets out the basic conditions that must be met in order to be entitled to universal credit. The five basic conditions that must be met for entitlement to universal credit, unless exceptions apply, are to be aged 18 or over; to be under the qualifying age for state pension credit; to be in Northern Ireland; to not be in education; and to have accepted a claimant commitment. Those requirements must be met and must continue to be met for entitlement to universal credit. In the case of joint claims, both eligible claimants in a household will be required to accept an individual claimant commitment. Amendment Nos 1 and 3 would allow, where one member of a couple does not accept their claimant commitment, the claim for benefit from the member of the couple who accepts a claimant commitment to be treated as a claim from a single person.

Clause 14 introduces the claimant commitment for universal credit. Clauses 45, 55 and 60 make accepting a claimant commitment a condition of entitlement for existing benefits such as jobseeker's allowance and income support and will be implemented at the same time as universal credit is implemented.

Therefore, should the amendment be accepted, amendments would also have to be made to clauses 45, 55 and 60.

The amendment raises significant issues that I want to address. A couple will be required to make a joint claim for universal credit to ensure that both take responsibility for the claim and obtain support to find work where appropriate. That is a principle already established in jobseeker's allowance for joint claims and is being extended to universal credit so that both members of a couple should have equal opportunity to access this support. In addition to work-related expectations, the claimant commitment includes responsibilities such as reporting a change of circumstances and is tailored to the individual circumstances of each member of the couple.

It is recognised that there will be circumstances where claimants will find it difficult to accept a claimant commitment. In cases where one member of a couple is incapable of claiming due to disability or a health condition and has an appointee acting on their behalf, the requirement to accept a claimant commitment will be waived. Also, if the claimant is in hospital and is likely to be there for weeks or if there is a domestic emergency preventing the claimant from accepting a claimant commitment, the claim can be made by the other member of the couple singly. However, such claims will be treated as joint claims, as that underpins the policy principles that universal credit is a household benefit and that the income and capital of both members of the couple will be treated as being available to the couple jointly.

In cases where the claimant is reluctant to accept the claimant commitment, a cooling-off period of a minimum of seven days will be allowed for claimants to reconsider the impact on the household and to sign the claimant commitment before any decision is taken to disallow. It is not anticipated that the clause will adversely affect any claimant. We believe that, once the position is explained to the claimant by their personal adviser, common sense will prevail.

Accepting amendment Nos 1 or 3 would also open the door to fraudulent behaviour. Take the scenario where a family consists of a mother, father and two children, where the mother is working and the father is not. If the mother decides not to sign a claimant commitment, removing the clause would mean that the father could claim as a single parent. This is not behaviour that we wish to encourage or condone. Personal responsibility is one of the basic principles of the wider reform agenda, and this is particularly relevant for universal credit, where claims are to be assessed on the basis of joint income and savings for all members in a household. Treating a couple as single claimants would be financially advantageous and, therefore, unfair to couples who both agree to sign their claimant commitments. To accept amendment Nos 1 and 3 would be a clear breach of parity. There would be potential implications for the Northern Ireland block grant, and it would result in claimants in Northern Ireland receiving preferential treatment over those in Great Britain.

Mr Beggs: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: The impact of this would be difficult to justify and would create the potential for wider and significant equality issues between claimants here in Northern Ireland and Great Britain. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment Nos 1 and 3. I give way to the Member.

Mr Beggs: Amendment No 1 states:

"(8) Regulations shall provide, in circumstances where one member of a couple does not accept a claimant commitment within a prescribed period, that the claim may be considered as a claim by the other member of the couple as a single person."

It empowers you to write regulations. Would the Minister not accept that it would be possible to write into those regulations guidance preventing what he just has reported as abuse?

Mr Storey: For the reasons I have set out, I am trying to safeguard the rationale that I believe exists because of the way we have constructed the elements of the Bill. I have set out why, in those circumstances, it is better not to accept amendment Nos 1 and 3.

Amendment No 4 inserts a new clause on the provision of claimant documentation when making a claim for universal credit. When a person cannot provide all the required documentation to make a claim, provision is made for third-party verification in lieu of required documentation, including identity documents, so that the claim can be made. Under the current claims and payment regulations, a person making a claim for benefit must provide certificates, documents, information and evidence as required. That provision is being carried forward into the proposed universal credit claims and payments regulations. I underscore "is being carried forward" so that Members are clear about that issue. How evidence is currently accepted is stipulated in guidance. While there is nothing specific on handling third-party evidence, in practice, if it is from a reputable source, such as social services, it is accepted to kick-start a claim from someone who is homeless or vulnerable.

Guidance will cover, as it does currently, the continued acceptance of third-party verification when appropriate. The IT identity security system — the integrated risk and intelligence service (IRIS) — will flag up a range of risks or concerns, including those originating from identity trust flags. In such cases, an identification task will be generated that will require resolution, including third-party verification. That would ordinarily happen through face-to-face contact with Social Security Agency staff in the office. There should be no difficulty for claimants without bank accounts; the simple payment service will enable such vulnerable claimants to access their money without conventional ID documents. I am providing an assurance that the current practice allowing third-party verification for vulnerable claimants will carry forward and that such claimants will still be able to make a claim and have their money paid via either a bank account, if held, or the simple payment service, which is aimed at claimants who do not have access to a bank account. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment No 4.

Amendment No 8 would insert a new clause 12A on the frequency of universal credit payments. The amendment introduces a default position of an award of universal credit being paid twice monthly unless a claimant opts or joint claimants opt to be paid monthly. I find it somewhat bizarre that Members today have claimed that we are working in the dark, as if, somehow, we are all living in a cauldron in which we do not know what is going on, and that this is all part of a secret deal that the public know nothing about. These things have been agreed and are now being brought forward. I will say more about that later; judging by the way things are going, it looks as though it will be much later.

Currently in Northern Ireland, the majority — over 99% — of social security claimants receive their payment fortnightly, with two thirds of tax credit recipients being paid weekly. Furthermore, in Northern Ireland, 32% of employees are paid more frequently than monthly, which compares with only 18% in GB. Concerns have been raised by many stakeholders, including the voluntary sector and the Executive subgroup on welfare reform, that the introduction of monthly payments will cause significant difficulties for some people, especially those on existing social security benefits. Twice-monthly payments is one of a package of measures that my predecessor agreed with the Department for Work and Pensions to shape how welfare reform could be implemented in Northern Ireland and to mitigate some of the negative aspects of welfare reform in Northern Ireland. My correspondence to the Church leaders in October 2014 is in the public domain. It was not secret. It was not done under some guise of secrecy. It was done very publicly and openly. I was very happy to do it, and I have continued to keep the Church leaders abreast and informed of what has been going on. In October 2014, in my correspondence, which is on the website and is available to Members to check, I informed the Church leaders that I was proposing:

“to introduce the default position in Northern Ireland that all claimants will receive twice monthly payments”.

This would more closely match the frequency of current benefit payments. I went on to say that claimants would have:

“the option of moving to monthly payments should they decide they wish to have this method of payment.”

Mr I McCrea: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: You scared me there, but I will give way, yes.

Mr I McCrea: I thank the Minister for giving way. Given that he has referred to the number of occasions that this has been put in the public domain, can he find any reasoning behind the amendment that is on the Order Paper? Does he believe that it is down to a lack of understanding, or is it just political grandstanding?

Mr Storey: Well, it is always difficult to ascertain what is behind amendments. I do not want in any way sound as though I am just being totally and absolutely dismissive of Members' motives when they come to this issue. I have already referred to the fact that a huge amount of concern was raised by stakeholders, including the voluntary sector, and it was all relayed through the Executive subgroup on welfare reform. Sometimes, however, you get to the point where it is difficult to come to any conclusion other than that politics is being played with these issues, and that is regrettable.

Mr Agnew: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: I will, but I want to make progress.

Mr Agnew: I will be very brief. As has been pointed out, it has been stated publicly many times that agreement has been secured to have bi-monthly payments here in respect of welfare reform. Why, then, has the Minister not tabled amendments for today to put that in the Bill?

Mr Storey: If the Member was listening to what I said earlier on, he would have heard that a lot of this was not about the difficulties in the Bill; the difficulties were in the regulations. I was going to say that I was relatively young to the House, but I came here in 2003 and maybe now I am beginning to realise how many years ago that was. I am still challenged and having difficulty in trying to get my head around all the mechanics of the legislation, but I think that the regulations will be the way in which we ensure that these things are handled and implemented.

Maybe this is putting it too simplistically, but the framework for the introduction of the policy intent is the Bill, and a huge amount of work will still have to be done over a period to bring forward the various regulations that will see enacted what we have agreed. For Members then to somehow think that that is all being done without them or because two parties have agreed it is an unfair reflection of how we propose to deal with these issues.

I would also say to Members that the Bill and the proposed relevant regulations already contain flexibility to accommodate a decision on any frequency of payment. That flexibility is required in the event that future policy dictates an alternative option for frequency of payments. To specify in the Bill that universal credit is to be paid twice monthly unless a claimant or joint claimants opt to be paid monthly would remove that flexibility. If that flexibility is removed and replaced by a specific twice-monthly provision, in the event of new developments or policy, any adjustment would have to be done by way of primary legislation. It is considered more appropriate for this to be done in regulations, so that the detail can be easily amended, rather than by way of primary legislation. I assure Members that the views of the Social Development Committee will be sought on all regulations. That point was maybe referred to by Mr Beggs, and I know it was referred to by Mr O'Dowd. I almost had a sense of déjà vu because I know the difficulties that I created for him when he was endeavouring to legislate to establish a single education authority. That was also referred to by Mr McCallister, as though somehow, despite the 10 petitions of concern and all the concerns he had around that and although it was difficult, challenging and we had to keep going back and many pressures were brought to bear on us all by organisations and interest groups, that process proved that, if we keep at it, we can find a way through these issues. I trust that that is the case in relation to the Bill. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment No 8.

Amendment No 9 relates to clause 14, and I will explain briefly what clause 14 does. It introduces the claimant commitment for universal credit. The claimant commitment is a record of a claimant's responsibilities in return for receiving benefit and will be tailored for the individual — I stress that it will be tailored for each individual — taking into account their individual capabilities and circumstances.

Clauses 45, 54 and 59 make accepting a claimant commitment a condition of entitlement to existing benefits and will be implemented at the same time as universal credit. The claimant commitment will determine exactly what work a person is looking for, when or if a work-focused interview should take place and the nature of any training that they will need to carry out.

Interviews will be used to develop an understanding of all factors relevant to job search: caring responsibilities, physical and mental health, skills and work history. In much the same way as already happens with jobseeker's allowance, it is expected that the discussion will be central to shaping the nature of the back-to-work effort. After consultation with the claimant, the claimant commitment will take account of the claimant's skills, qualifications and circumstances, including any caring responsibilities, physical or mental disability or ill health. In addition, that will be dealt with in regulations and guidance.

Requirements imposed on a claimant will take account of all relevant matters, not just at the beginning of a claim but throughout a claimant's time on benefit. The requirements will be reviewed following any change of circumstance, should a claimant raise a particular issue or if the nature of the job search changes. The claimant commitment is expected to be a living document. It will be personalised to the individual claimant and regularly revised to reflect the claimant's circumstances.

As the claimant will take part in discussing all the factors that need to be considered when drawing up their claimant commitment, it is not considered necessary to legislate for the Department to have due regard to the claimant's skills, experience, caring responsibilities and health matters in the Bill, as amendment No 9 suggests.

I want to pick up on a point raised by Mrs Kelly in relation to childcare and assure her that the provisions in JSA will be retained. In other words, where there is no affordable available childcare, no lone parent will be coerced into work or work-related activity. That should give the Member an assurance in relation to that issue.

It is for the reasons that I have outlined that I urge Members to reject amendment No 9.

Amendment Nos 10 and 11 relate to clause 16, which defines the work preparation requirement for universal credit. This is a requirement that a claimant takes actions that will increase the chances, now or in the future, that they will get work, get work that is better paid or increase the number of hours that they work.

All claimants who are able to prepare for work should be required to do so as a condition of receiving benefit. It is likely that all but the most work-ready jobseekers will have some kind of work-preparation requirement placed on them, even if it is just updating their CV.

Those people who have been found through the work-capability assessment to have limited capability for work but who are capable of work-related activity will also have work-preparation requirements placed on them. The Department is committed to increasing the number of disabled people in employment. We will provide better and more intensive support to help people off benefits and find sustainable work. In return, claimants who are capable of taking steps to prepare for work should do so. Advisers will devise a tailored work-preparation plan for each claimant. The details of that will be included in the claimant commitment. The nature and amount of work preparation required could vary from person to person but will always be reasonable in the claimant's circumstances. Examples might include skills training, confidence building or work experience.

Amendment No 10 changes the wording in the explanation of what a "work-focused health-related assessment" means. Instead of an assessment being conducted by a health-care professional approved by the Department, it would change to a health-care professional who is employed by a health and social care trust or who is a general practitioner. Health professionals undertaking work-focused health-related assessments will all be recruited and trained directly by the assessment provider appointed by the Department, which, for Northern Ireland, is Atos.

It is important that we read into the record the requirements that health professionals must meet, because this is a very important matter for many people. Health professionals must be an occupational therapist, nurse, psychiatrist, paramedic or doctor; be fully registered with the relevant licensing body, while doctors must have a licence to practise; have no sanctions attached to registration; have at least two years' post-full registration experience, except where individually agreed by exception with the Department; and have passed all Access NI checks.

Once health professionals are recruited by the assessment provider, they are required to undertake an accredited training programme and, on successful completion, are approved by the Social Security Agency's health assessment adviser. They will receive specialist training in assessing the impact of disability. Therefore, the role differs from the therapeutic role of health professionals in Health and Social Care trusts and of general practitioners, which is primarily to reach a diagnosis and/or plan treatment. Training will incorporate both e-learning and face-to-face modules and will be signed off by the agency's health assessment adviser.

Furthermore, health professionals do not need to be already employed by a health and social care trust, as they will all be employed directly by the assessment provider. Clearly, therefore, it would be inappropriate to place limitations on those who can undertake the assessments. On that basis, I urge Members to reject amendment No 10.

Amendment No 11 inserts an additional provision in clause 16 to ensure that any person who carries out a work-focused health-related assessment takes account of relevant medical evidence, including evidence of mental ill health. Medical evidence is reviewed as part of the work-capability assessment process. Medical evidence will also be taken into account as part of the mandatory reconsideration process of any claim in which an individual decided to take an appeal against a decision of the agency. That is a point that Mr Beggs raised.

Mr Beggs also raised the issue of the number of appeals. I will clarify that 67% of decisions made in ESA appeal cases are in favour of the Department's original decision; 30% are in favour of the claimant and are made for a range of factors, including fresh medical evidence presented on the day of the appeal; and 3% of decisions are in favour of the claimant because of incorrect decisions made by the Department. All of that can be verified by the annual report of the president of the Appeals Service.

The scope of the work-focused health-related assessment is the extent to which a person's capability for work may be improved by taking steps in relation to their physical or mental condition. The assessment aims to support people back to work. It enables claimants to explore, with a trained health-care professional, their aspirations for engaging in or returning to work, and their beliefs, perceptions and concerns about their particular condition. It is intended that a version of the work capability assessment will be used to decide the level of support that a disabled person receives under universal credit. The health-care professional will review all the evidence before them and provide advice to the decision-maker on the likely functional implications of any medical evidence provided. This advice helps the decision-maker to reach an appropriate decision on entitlement to benefit.

The proposed amendment seeks to make it a legislative requirement for health-care professionals to take account of relevant medical evidence when carrying out a work capability assessment. It is worth pointing out that the primary role of the GP or hospital doctor is to carry out a medical assessment. They do not, as a matter of course, always consider the disabling effects or restrictions of the claimant's medical condition. The assessment carried out by the health-care professional is a functional assessment. It is designed to assess the impact of the claimant's health condition or disability on their ability to provide for themselves through work.

Amendment No 11 is not required, as the role of the health-care professional is to take account of relevant medical evidence when carrying out an assessment. Specifying that in the Bill could suggest that this type of evidence is more important or carries more weight than other available evidence. This has been subject to review by Professor Harrington and Dr Paul Litchfield. Their independent reviews have come to an end, but I am conscious, on hearing concerns raised here today, that further work is needed, and I take this opportunity to assure the House that I will examine how we can best ensure that, going forward, this learning is built into the assessment process. That point was also referred to by, I think, Mr Beggs. It is important that, following the independent reviews, I take some time to look at these issues and ensure that we have covered this element in the best possible way, and I give that assurance to the House. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment No 11.

Amendment Nos 12 and 13 relate to clause 24. The Bill aims to give advisers broad discretion to impose requirements that they think give claimants the best chance of finding or preparing for work. However, there may be certain requirements or actions that are not and will never be appropriate. Clause 24 allows us to make regulations to put such matters beyond doubt, by setting out particular circumstances when requirements or specific actions must not be imposed. There may also be circumstances that justify claimants being exempt from having requirements imposed on them for short periods, such as a bereavement or a domestic emergency. A specific example of this is included to allow claimants who have been victims of, or threatened with, domestic violence to be given a 13-week exemption from any work-related requirements, and this is a carryover from existing social security legislation. Amendment No 12 proposes to include victims of an incident motivated by hate in the 13-week exemption from any work-related requirement, and proposed amendment No 13 defines the meaning of an "incident motivated by hate". Domestic violence and hate crime are very different. Domestic violence is caused by a member of the household, whereas hate crime is usually associated with strangers. The two are therefore, correctly in my view, treated differently in social security legislation.

The universal credit regulations, which will be subject to Assembly approval, will give work coaches the discretion not to impose or tailor a work search or work availability requirement temporarily for claimants who are dealing with a domestic emergency or temporary circumstances. Domestic emergencies or temporary circumstances are not prescribed in the guidance. This allows a work coach to make a decision based on an individual's circumstances and on whether a work search or work availability requirement would be reasonable in those circumstances. A work coach would be able to consider a racist attack under that regulation. I trust that this will be helpful to the Member who raised that issue. This approach will support better decision-making by allowing staff to consider the merits of each individual case. It also gives flexibility on the time during which the easement on work search and work availability applies and does not tie it to the 13 weeks for victims of hate crime.

In responding to the proposed amendment, I assure the House that legal advice was sought. It confirmed that there is no legal definition of hate crime that could be incorporated into social security legislation. I think that that issue was raised by a number of Members. For these reasons, I urge members to reject amendment Nos 12 and 13.

Amendment No 17 proposes that my Department is provided with powers to introduce a fund to replace the current independent living fund for Northern Ireland within 18 months of commencement of the Northern Ireland Welfare Reform Act. I appreciate that my colleague Mr Pat Ramsey referred to that issue earlier. I want to make a few more comments on that and underpin what I said to him.

It may be helpful if I provide some background to the independent living fund. It was created in 1988 as an executive non-departmental public body of the Department for Work and Pensions to provide financial support to disabled people throughout the United Kingdom. In Northern Ireland, my Department is only responsible for meeting the costs of Northern Ireland recipients of the fund and a share of the overall administration costs. However, the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety currently has a policy interest in the fund given that the people supported are those with severe disabilities, most of whom are in receipt of a substantial care package from their local health and care trust.

The fund makes direct cash payments to severely disabled people with intensive care needs across the UK. The money is used to pay for agency care staff or for the recipient to employ a personal assistant. The support enables disabled people to choose to live in the community rather than in a residential care setting.

Due to escalating costs, the decision was taken in GB to close the fund permanently with effect from 30 June 2015. Following that decision, the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in Northern Ireland published a consultation document on 4 August 2014 to seek views on how Northern Ireland users of the fund could be supported from 1 July 2015. As I said earlier, that public consultation ended on 30 November 2014, and I understand that the Health Minister plans to announce his decision in early 2015.

I gave an assurance — and I reiterate that assurance — that I will discuss this issue with the Minister of Health when he returns. Following on from the debate, I will ensure that Mr Ramsey's comments and concern about the issue are conveyed to the Health Minister.

I will, I trust, be in a better place to inform the House of progress on this when we come back for Further Consideration Stage in a couple of weeks' time. As the Department of Health will have responsibility for the independent living fund (ILF) users following the closure of the fund, it is for those reasons that I urge Members to reject the amendment.

I move on, Mr Speaker, to amendment Nos 18 and 19. They refer to clause 38, which allows us to continue to use the work capability assessment when determining whether a claimant has limited capability for work and, if so, whether they also have limited capability for work-related activity. Determination of a claimant's capability for work following a work capability assessment clarifies a claimant's work-related requirements and their eligibility, or not, for an additional element in a universal credit award. Those who are unable to work because of the effects of a disability or health condition will be entitled to a higher amount of universal credit based on their capability for work. As in the current system, they will be allocated either to the work-related activity group or the support group.

The work capability assessment assesses individuals' functional ability for work, rather than assuming that a health condition or disability is an automatic barrier to work. Many disabled people, and others with health conditions, play a full and active role in the labour market, and there is evidence that work is exceptionally beneficial for people's physical and mental well-being. Whilst we remain committed to supporting those who cannot work, we want to help as many people as possible to return to suitable work. No one should be written off or consigned to a life on benefits simply because of a disability.

It is intended that a version of the work capability assessment will be used to decide the level of support that a disabled person receives under universal credit. This will include a work preparation requirement, which may specifically include taking part in a work-focused health-related assessment. The scope of the work-focused health-related assessment is about the extent to which the person's capability for work may be improved by taking steps in relation to their physical or mental condition.

Amendment 18 seeks to make it a legislative requirement for health-care professionals to take account of relevant medical evidence when carrying out a work capability assessment. Amendment 19 mirrors this, but expands it to include "evidence of mental ill health". I have previously highlighted the role of the health-care professional, which includes considering the evidence when assessing the impact of the claimant's health condition or disability on their ability to provide for themselves through work. They also provide advice to the decision maker on the likely functional implications of any medical evidence provided to enable the decision maker to reach an informed, appropriate decision on entitlement to benefit. I have also highlighted the primary role of the GP or hospital doctor: to carry out a medical assessment. They do not as a matter of course always consider the disabling effects or the restrictions of the claimant's medical condition. Amendment Nos 18 and 19 are not required, as the role of the health-care professional is to take account of relevant medical evidence when carrying out an assessment, including any mental ill health.

Roy Beggs asked for an update on discussions between my Department and the Department of Health on medical evidence and GP contracts. The GP contract has been raised with Department of Health colleagues, but we have been unable to move the issue forward, due to a lack of agreement on the Welfare Reform Bill. Officials will now be taking forward this piece of work, and I trust that I will be in a position to give a more detailed assessment as to the outcome of that issue. The GP contract has also been tabled with Dr Litchfield, who referred to it in his most recent report on the operation of ESA in Northern Ireland. Mr Beggs referred to that.

Amending the Bill in this way could suggest that this type of evidence is more important or carries more weight than other available evidence. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment Nos 18 and 19.

We are making slow but, I trust, steady progress as we make our way through the amendments, so I will address my comments to amendment Nos 35, 36, 37 and 57. They all relate to the requirements for the assessment process for personal independence payment as set out in clause 79, so I will address them together. Amendment No 35 would insert a new provision to clause 79 that says that, when assessing an individual's ability to carry out daily living or mobility activities to determine entitlement to personal independence payment, the Department must:

“take account of all relevant medical evidence.”

This amendment and amendment No 36, which I will come to shortly, mirrors earlier amendments on assessments to determine entitlement to universal credit. I argued against accepting the earlier amendments on medical evidence, which was on the basis that one of a health-care professional's primary roles is to take account of the relevant medical evidence, including any mental ill health issues, when carrying out an assessment. Therefore, I did not think that that needed to be addressed in the Bill.

However, given that PIP's distinct purpose is to help with the extra costs of long-term illness or disability, I am content to accept amendment No 35. Indeed, to ensure that medical evidence is available when needed, the Executive have agreed to establish a fund to provide additional funding for medical reports. No claimant will have an adverse decision made against their claim for PIP without the decision maker considering a report from either the claimant's GP or consultant. That is another issue that is in the light, not in the dark. I know that it has taken a long time to get to the point where you wanted to hear me say that I was accepting something, but for those reasons, I urge Members to accept amendment No 35.

Amendment No 36 would make a similar provision to amendment No 35 but has a particular emphasis on taking evidence of mental ill health into account. Similar to my arguments on earlier amendments, accepting amendment No 36 would give a degree of prominence in the assessment process to evidence of mental ill health. Indeed, it could be argued that, by making such provision in the Bill, mental ill health could be given an elevated status over other medical conditions. That would go against the core principles that are the foundation of PIP. Entitlement is to be determined not by a specific disability or health condition but by the impact that that condition has on the individual's ability to carry out a number of key everyday activities. I have personal experience of attending many DLA appeals, and I think that that is an issue that Members repeatedly have to go back to. It is not about the person's condition; it is about the implications of how it affects them. I think that we need to emphasise that entitlement is to be determined not by the specific disability or health condition but by the impact of the condition on the individual's ability to carry out a number of key everyday activities.

The Department will set out in regulations and guidance the actual processes for how the assessment should operate in practice, including when and how additional information will be sought. Again, I remind Members that that will be for the Assembly to consider.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: I will give way to the Member.

Mrs D Kelly: I have concerns about guidance and regulations, in particular for people who have a learning disability, perhaps coupled with a severe physical disability. I have experience of representing constituents and their carers who are elderly and have repeat calls for review and appeal, which is traumatic and puts a lot of stress and anxiety on them. In bringing forward the guidance, Minister, I wonder whether you would look at the concerns raised. I will write to you if you wish about this case, because it is hugely traumatic for the carers in particular.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for raising that issue, and I assure her that I am quite happy for her to write to me or that we take up her comments. As we prepare the regulations and guidance, we need to be made aware of examples like that. This is always going to be the challenge for us. I have said a huge amount in the 23 pages that I have gone through, and I still go back to the point that I made at the very beginning, which is that this is about people. If we can incorporate those things in the regulations and guidance, I assure the Member that I will look at that and come back to her.

The intention behind the assessment is that it is more evidence-based, so additional evidence will cover a broad range of areas, including medical and other forms of evidence that may not be seen as medical — for example, a care plan or a report from any other professional involved in supporting the claimant, such as social workers, key workers, care coordinators or something else that would not be condition-specific but would provide relevant information to help the Department to determine whether the individual has a difficulty with daily living or mobility activities and to what extent.

Let us go back to the 30% that were successful on the basis of additional evidence, which is the issue that we need to underscore. We sometimes fail our constituents when we do not give them that piece of good advice. It is about ensuring that the evidence is there. It is not that someone is questioning an individual, but, when you are a decision maker and are going through this process, it is very good — in fact, I would say that it is essential — to ensure that that information is there and is given due regard.

The Department or the assessment providers on its behalf will seek further evidence by phone or by issuing one of the standard pro forma requests in cases in which they feel that it is appropriate — for example, when they feel that further evidence would allow them to offer robust advice without the need for a face-to-face consultation, or when they consider that a consultation is still likely to be needed but further evidence would improve the quality of the advice that they provide to the Department. It is important that the PIP functional assessment is carried out by a professional with the appropriate training to complete the assessment. I have a responsibility to ensure that the service is provided efficiently and to ensure proper use of public funds. It is my view that the identity of the employer is not the primary concern of the assessment.

Health professionals undertaking PIP assessments must also meet the same requirements for those undertaking the work capability assessment, which I highlighted earlier in the debate. They must, for example, be an occupational therapist, a nurse, a physiotherapist, a paramedic or a doctor, and they must be fully registered with the relevant licensing body. The health professionals have to complete an accredited training programme before being approved by the Social Security Agency's health assessment adviser and receive specialist training in assessing the impact of disability.

This role differs from the therapeutic role of health professionals in the health and social care trusts and general practitioners, whose primary role is to reach a diagnosis and/or plan treatment. Therefore, it clearly would be inappropriate to enable health professionals employed by the health and social care trusts or general practitioners to undertake assessment in respect of the personal independence payment as, for the most part, they will lack the necessary training and skills to undertake this specialised role. For these reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment Nos 36, 37 and 57.

7.30 pm

Mr Speaker, I am trying to work my way to a conclusion on these. Amendment Nos 38 and 39 relate to clause 80 and the prospective test for the personal independence payment. Perhaps this will assist the House, and I am sure that you all want to have this information imparted to you so that you will all be better informed on this issue. I will take a step back and reiterate what clause 80 does. Clause 80 is linked with clauses 77 to 79 and makes provision related to what constitutes “the required period condition” for entitlement to either component of the personal independence payment. To qualify for help, claimants must, first, have needed help for three months or more — this is known as the qualifying period — or, secondly, be likely to need help for the next nine months. This is known as the prospective test period. Amendment No 38 proposes changing the prospective test period to six months. Amendment No 39 is consequential on amendment No 38 and defines when the six-month period commences.

The current mechanisms in attendance allowance and DLA to establish that a condition is likely to be long term are through the operation of a qualifying period, during which no benefit can be paid, and a prospective test. For attendance allowance, a person needs to meet the six-month qualifying period. For DLA, a person must meet a three-month qualifying period and a six-month prospective test. The qualifying period is passed if someone has established that they would have met the conditions of entitlement to attendance allowance or either of the component parts of DLA in the previous three or six months. That is measured from when the benefit can first become payable, and this prospective period is passed if someone is likely to meet those conditions of entitlement for a further six months. Although the criteria for establishing that a disability is likely to be long term operate slightly differently for attendance allowance and DLA, they both serve the same purpose, which is to ensure that support is focused on those who face the greatest challenges to taking part in everyday life.

I underscore that key to the reform of DLA is that entitlement to the personal independence payment should be on an individual-based approach rather than by labelling people according to their disability or their particular impairment. The objective is to avoid the current situation where a specified impairment or diagnosis leads to automatic entitlement. In this way, we would endeavour to ensure that benefit is better targeted towards those with assessed long-term needs.

In the DLA reform consultation, the Government set out their proposals to restructure the existing qualifying period and prospective tests for PIP so that the overall period covered by the tests more closely aligns with the general definition of long-term disability used in the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and the associated guidance. It is felt that a three-month qualifying period and a nine-month prospective test offers the fairest solution, both to claimants and to the sound administration of the benefit.

Therefore, to ensure that support goes to those with the greatest need, the personal independence payment will be available only to those with a long-term health condition or impairment rather than short-term conditions, where other financial and in-kind support mechanisms already exist. The impact of most health conditions and disabilities can fluctuate over time. Taking a view of ability over a longer period helps to iron out fluctuations and presents a more coherent picture of disabling effects.

The consultation document also made clear that we will bring forward into personal independence payment the existing provisions that allow for exemption from the qualifying period and prospective test for people who are terminally ill. That will mean that terminally ill people will be able to get immediate payment of the enhanced rate of the daily living component without having to demonstrate that they have severely limited ability to carry out any daily living activities. Immediate entitlement to either rate of the mobility component will also be available, subject to someone having the necessary limitations on their ability to carry out the mobility activities.

To summarise, the combined effects of the three-month qualifying period and the nine-month prospective test in PIP will better align the definition of long-term disability with that generally used for the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 and its associated guidance. The required-period condition will therefore continue to establish long-term disability within the context of a cash benefit paid to contribute towards the extra costs of disability. For those reasons, Members, I urge the rejection of amendment Nos 38 and 39.

I now turn to opposition to clause 99. Clause 99 clarifies that the existing power in the Social Security Administration (Northern Ireland) Act 1992 to decide who should be paid benefits includes the power for the Department to determine which of the persons should be paid in a joint award situation. Currently, payments of benefits are normally made to the claimant. For couples, ordinarily only one partner will make the claim, with their partner's income and capital taken into account, and rates paid accordingly. The exception is joint claimants of jobseeker's allowance, where partners can decide between them who receives the payment.

Universal credit policy is that couples living in the same household will make a joint claim for benefit, with the universal credit payment normally paid into one bank account. That is the default position in the rest of Great Britain, with any different arrangement only available in exceptional circumstances. Flexibilities secured for Northern Ireland will mean that no default position will be applied here. There will be several options available, including split payments paid into separate bank accounts. That is something that is to be welcomed and something that had been raised as a concern.

Clause 99 as drafted ensures enough flexibility to pay as frequently as required. Opposition to clause 99 would remove the clause from the Bill, and that would limit any flexibility to determine which of the persons should be paid in a joint award situation. That would reverse the flexibilities in payment options that have been secured. I therefore urge Members to reject the opposition.

Amendment No 43 proposes to insert a new clause 100A on payment of awards in cash. I advise Members that the simple payment service, which I alluded to earlier, was introduced in October 2012 for those claimants who cannot get their benefit paid into a bank, building society, credit union or Post Office card account. It is provided by Citibank, working in partnership with PayPoint, and was a replacement for payment of benefits and pensions by cheque. The simple payment service can also be used to make emergency and one-off payments where necessary. That method of payment provides a safe, secure and efficient means of allowing people to access their payments at a convenient local outlet, without the need to use a PIN and PIN pads, and provides the flexibility required by those who rely on someone else to collect their money for them. Currently, almost 1,500 claimants are paid by that modern, secure and efficient method of payment. The new clause is therefore not required, and I urge Members to reject the proposed amendment.

Amendment No 44 would insert a new clause 101A on payments pending appeal. The amendment would add a provision to section 5 of the Social Security Administration (Northern Ireland) Act 1992 for regulations to provide for the making of a payment pending appeal.

Perhaps it will be helpful if I explain that section 5 of the Administration Act contains the enabling provisions for claims and payments of benefit that apply generally to the majority of social security benefits. Other than in certain employment and support allowance cases, it has never been the case that benefit is paid pending the outcome of an appeal.

The cost of paying benefit to all appellants during the appeal process would be hugely expensive and an additional burden on the Northern Ireland block grant. In addition, consideration would have to be given to recouping the amount paid during the appeal period where the tribunal upholds the original decision, thereby increasing my Department's administrative costs. That issue was raised by my colleague Mr Wilson. I wish to reassure Members that the provisions in the Bill do not alter the position on the payment of employment and support allowance at the assessment-phase rate, pending the outcome of an appeal of the work capability assessment.

For those claimants who will be in receipt of universal credit when it replaces income-related ESA, where similar circumstances apply, in that a claimant does not satisfy the work capability assessment, provision for payment of universal credit pending appeal is not required, as the claimant can continue to receive universal credit under one of the other conditionality provisions.

For those reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment No 44.

Amendment No 45 proposes to amend clause 103, which sets out when and how overpayments of benefit, payments on account and certain hardship payments can be recovered even where there has been no misrepresentation or failure to disclose on the part of the person from whom recovery is being sought. Where the Department makes a mistake, claimants should not expect to have the right to keep taxpayers' money to which they are not entitled. Although most overpayments of universal credit, jobseeker's allowance and employment and support allowance will be deemed recoverable in certain circumstances, the Department may decide that the overpayment, or part of it, does not have to be repaid. The circumstances in which action will be taken to recover overpayments will be governed by a code of practice in order to ensure consistent and considered decision-making. Members need to remember that the money being recovered is public money and a cost to the public purse, which the Department has a responsibility to protect. I therefore urge Members to reject amendment No 45.

The purpose of clause 129 was to amend section 165 of the Social Security Administration (Northern Ireland) Act 1992 to correct a flaw in the legislation. Owing to the delay in the progress of this Bill, the National Insurance Contributions Act 2014 carried the required amendment and corrected that flaw. Therefore, clause 129 is no longer required. I therefore urge Members to accept that position.

Amendment No 54 proposes to insert a new clause to provide that regulations under the Bill are prepared in consultation with the Northern Ireland Commission for Victims and Survivors to ensure that due regard is given to survivors of the past. When considering any new social security policy, or change in that policy, like any other Department or public body, the Department is mandated by section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998 to consider an equality impact assessment on the proposed policy.

Mr Speaker: Minister, for the record, did you say "54" when you meant "53"? It is for the benefit of the record.

Mr Storey: I apologise, Mr Speaker. It is amendment No 53. Thank you for paying due regard and diligence to that. Apologies for that.

Section 75 requires public authorities designated for the purposes of the Bill to comply with two statutory duties. One is the equality of opportunity duty, which requires public authorities, in carrying out their functions relating to Northern Ireland, to have due regard to the need to promote equality of opportunity between the nine equality categories, which are persons of different religious belief, political opinion, racial group, age, marital status or sexual orientation; men and women generally; persons with a disability and persons without; and persons with dependants and persons without. As you can see, all categories of persons accommodate not only victims and survivors but all particular groups of individuals, such as cancer patients.

Any proposed change in policy or new policy is subject to equality screening with the focus of identifying any adverse impact on the equality of opportunity of any section 75 group. The Department also considers any mitigating measures that may be necessary to alleviate that impact. In screening the proposed policy, account is taken of evidence and information obtained, where necessary, from relevant stakeholders, such as the Equality Commission, Citizens Advice and the Northern Ireland Commission for Victims and Survivors.

I am very aware of the particular sensitivities around the Northern Ireland Commission for Victims and Survivors. My Department is working with the commission, particularly on the impact that the introduction of PIP may have on the most seriously injured victims. I had what I would describe as a difficult meeting. It was not difficult in the sense that those who came to see me were in any way awkward or difficult to deal with; it was difficult in the sense that it was a reminder to us all of those in our society who still, to this day, bear scars that none of us can begin to comprehend. I recently met those victims to discuss the progress of work jointly commissioned by my predecessor and the Victims' Commissioner to avoid victims being further traumatised by the experience of being assessed for PIP.

Officials are also working with the commission on a range of issues including the PIP claimant journey. I will continue to ensure that the commission is consulted on a wide range of welfare issues. A number of Members raised that issue. I give a personal commitment to ensure that it is looked after and dealt with in a way that I believe reflects the point that was made to me. I will leave it here: there is a sense amongst that group that they have been forgotten; I want to ensure that they are not forgotten.

For those reasons, I ask Members to reject amendment No 53.

Mr Attwood: I thank the Minister for giving way. I also acknowledge his very comprehensive response to the debate, which is the right way to conduct the debate. Some of the answers — I will not put it any more strongly than that — have certainly been helpful to us.

Given what you have said in respect of victims and survivors; the sorry tale of how the VSS operated previously; the entitlement to name in legislation the categories of persons to be treated with due regard, as happens already for domestic violence victims; and given your powerful narrative just now about the experience of victims and how they should not be let down, does that not lend to the conclusion that a provision, even in simple terms in legislation, is the right response to the right needs that you have identified?

Mr Storey: I will reflect on the Member's comments in conjunction with comments that I made following my discussions with victims and survivors. I told them that it would not be a one-off meeting. I do not want to name the member of my staff who was there, but it was not the one who was named earlier. It is someone who is highly respected for the way in which they deal with these issues. I will consider the comments that the Member has made in the House tonight and reflect on what I have said in relation to how I will deal with issues in relation to victims and survivors.

Amendment No 74 relates to paragraph 6 of schedule 1, which gives the Department power to make regulations to pay all or part of an award by voucher. If a claimant finds that they are experiencing financial difficulties and have immediate needs as a result of a sanction, they can apply for a hardship payment. With the launch of universal credit, hardship payments will be paid as any other universal credit payments but, in the future, consideration will be given to alternative methods of payment, such as by voucher. That means of support will ensure that payment is spent on the needs of the family.

Work is ongoing on developing an approach to the use of vouchers. I recognise the sensitivities around the provision and the use of vouchers, and I would like to assure the House that, where vouchers or a voucher-type system are being considered, the focus will be very much on the dignity and choice of the claimant. The Department does not issue food vouchers and, I have to say, has no plans so to do. This was an issue raised by Mr Beggs and others. So, there is ongoing work in relation to the issue and I will be open to further discussion. It will be interesting to hear the comments of the Committee in relation to this particular issue as we do further work in regard to it.

To accept amendment No 74 would result in the Department being unable to make a hardship payment by voucher which, in some limited circumstances, may be the optimum way to meet the family's needs. For that reason, I urge Members to reject amendment No 74.

I want to conclude, and to dispel the myth and the mist that somehow there was something that took place prior to Christmas in the Stormont Castle agreement and Stormont House Agreement that was done behind closed doors and that people do not know all about it. I can assure you, as someone who was there for a considerable part of those discussions before Christmas and saw all the media out in the grounds of this estate, that it was not secretive. I have no intentions of joining any secret organisation.

There is an Executive paper that sets out the package of measures which was previously agreed, and you heard me refer to them. We referred to the following issues: the frequency of universal credit payment; split universal credit payment; direct payments; and we could go down a list of things that have been addressed and are in the public domain. There are, for example, issues in relation to the social sector size criteria. There is still further work to be done and further papers to be brought to the Executive, but I have to say that I was disappointed — and with this point I will conclude — to see headlines in the newspapers which read:

"No one will be out of pocket over a new welfare system, pledges ... Minister"

The article goes on to give a narrative based on one element of the welfare system, universal credit. What we are introducing here is, I believe, GB-plus, but remember that we, as an Executive, made the decision that to do so we would fund it out of the block grant and not use our annually managed expenditure. That is the decision that the Executive have made; it is the agreement that we have come to, and I think it is time that, collectively, we ensure that that agreement is implemented.

Remember, there are many people who are watching this debate and who simply want to know that we are making progress and that we do not have a situation which has been referred to. I take the Member's point on how it has been rolled out in the rest of the United Kingdom. I do not want to be the Minister who oversees something shambolic and dysfunctional. I give a commitment that I want to do it in a way that keeps people at the centre of what we are doing.

Mr Beggs: This is significant legislation that will affect individuals and families for perhaps decades to come, and so it is right that we have spent the time that we have on it, even on the first group of amendments. The abuse of the petition of concern, which was widely recognised by all Members — other than those from the DUP and Sinn Féin — should have not happened.

Alex Maskey, Chair of the Social Development Committee, referred to the Stormont House Agreement and a recent briefing to the Committee by the Department and explained that, as a result of time and recent agreements, the collective Committee opposition to many clauses no longer stood. He then wrongly accused the Ulster Unionist Party of failing to make any commitment to alter the Bill over two years ago. He did not acknowledge that the Ulster Unionist Party tabled several amendments over two years ago on issues such as joint claims, frequency of payments, bedroom tax and medical investigations. I refer him to the Assembly website and the section on primary legislation and current Bills, where he will see the clear evidence that that occurred.

Mr Swann: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: I certainly will.

Mr Swann: Will the Member agree that Mr Maskey did not acknowledge the commitment from the Ulster Unionist Party to creating the ad hoc Committee into the human rights and equality requirements for the Welfare Reform Bill? Had it not been for this party, it would not have passed through the House at that time. We played a role in bringing forward that report, and his party voted against it.

Mr Beggs: I thank the Member for reminding us all of that. It is right that that should be held on record.

Paula Bradley argued that amendments were not needed as change could be made through regulations. I am pleased that the Minister has accepted at least one amendment that has a constructive role, even though Ms Bradley appears to have disagreed. However, she indicated her support for twice-monthly payments as a default mechanism. She also pointed out that some individuals may require weekly payments because of personal circumstances. I have to admit that I was struck by that important point. I have to acknowledge that it is valid, and, as a result, I do not intend to move amendment No 8. I made that decision because of that and the Minister's commitment to go for twice-monthly payments but to leave open the option that some people may require more frequent payments.

Dolores Kelly explained her wish to deliver a wide range of additional proposals to augment the Bill. However, I did not hear how additional payments will be funded and what public services would have to be cut to fund them. When you change the legislation, there will be undoubted cuts. That concerns me.

Stewart Dickson criticised the delays of over two years, commented on the agreement made at Stormont House and suggested that welfare reform should be enacted with the mitigating proposals that have been included. I think that most people will agree that that is a sensible way forward.

Peter Robinson, who spoke as leader of the DUP, expressed opposition to almost any amendment that might cost any additional money. He was satisfied with the multiple misuse of the petition of concern. He did not seem to recognise that some of the amendments might have no or minimal cost implications or that costs have been built in for some of the amendments. He also seemed to take exception to me referring to almost 50 petitions of concern rather than saying 48, and that was somehow a very important issue.

I am afraid I failed to get it. Almost 50 petitions of concern are an abuse of this Assembly and its process, which was certainly not designed to operate like that.

8.00 pm

Mr Nesbitt: I thank the Member for giving way. Would he be surprised to hear that the First Minister gave me the very clear impression yesterday that he had no difficulty with how we intended to handle our amendments in the debate today, before he surprised us with the petitions of concern?

Mr Beggs: Nothing would surprise me. I almost thought he wanted me to thank him for permitting the Assembly to decide on the two issues on which he did not lodge a petition of concern. I detected arrogance from the leader of the DUP. What is wrong with the Assembly deciding on issues, especially when, as I said, some of the amendments have, I believe, no cost implications or none that have not already been catered for? I refer to amendment No 1, which I will come back to later, and to amendment No 35.

I am pleased that the Minister has indicated his support for amendment No 35. It is right that there should be a clear mechanism for providing medical evidence, and, as I said over two years ago, this is an issue that was flagged up. When it comes to personal independence payments, the bottom line is that clear medical evidence must be provided, and, when it is, it is usually the clinching factor in determining whether an application or appeal is won or lost. If we allow a process to continue where that medical evidence only comes in right at the very end, there is, of course, cost involved. It is right that the issue of medical evidence should be in the Bill, and I am pleased that others have seen fit to support that.

Alex Attwood said that he had never seen such abuse of petitions of concern before, rightly so. He highlighted that this is an abuse of the Assembly. He found it unacceptable that Peter Robinson expected that no amendments should be made unless approved in Room 106. This is a democratic Assembly. We all have responsibilities for what we do, but we all should have freedom of thought and be accountable for our actions. I concur with Mr Attwood.

Jim Allister criticised the secret agreement and the failure of the First Minister to publish the Stormont Castle agreement. He agreed with my view that the DUP petition of concern was actually designed to help its partners. There was a bit of joint working going on here, I suspect. He highlighted the importance of the welfare cap to encourage some back to work and to help energise the local economy. He also sought clarity on the forthcoming regulations. He said that all of us would have to scrutinise the issue. This is only the start of it; there will be much more work to be done. That aspect is right. There will be much detailed work to be done, and, as a recent appointee to the Social Development Committee, I hope to play my part in that.

John O'Dowd noted that welfare reform almost brought the Assembly down. That should not be forgotten.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: I certainly will.

Mrs D Kelly: Does the Member share my astonishment at the selective amnesia that seems to have befallen Mr O'Dowd, who failed to mention the 40,000 letters issued in east Belfast that led to flag protests, controversy and public disorder on the streets, causing strained relationships? Would he not also acknowledge — has Mr O'Dowd forgotten? — that the ongoing disgrace of the OTR letters of comfort also had a role to play in the “strained relationships”, to use Mr O'Dowd's words, between him and his partners in the DUP?

Mr Beggs: The Member has strayed far away from the legislation, and I do not wish to draw myself to the attention of the Deputy Speaker by following her lead. I will try to concentrate on the Bill.

Mr O'Dowd highlighted, like others, the continuing role of the Committee, the Assembly and the Executive; I certainly do not disagree with that.

Pat Ramsey spoke about the importance of the independent living fund, and there was good dialogue on that. The fund has enabled many to continue to live in their home. With that coming to an end, there is real concern among some individuals and families about what will become of them in the future. Unless something is put in its place, they may be forced to leave their home and go into a residential home or a nursing home. I am pleased that that dialogue occurred and will continue to occur to address the issue.

Whilst I referred to the former eastern European country of the German Democratic Republic, Steven Agnew added the Democratic People's Republic of Korea and the Democratic Republic of Congo on top of the Democratic Unionist Party. He agreed with my view that care should be taken when the word “democratic” comes first in any title because of what we have seen here today and the abuse of the petition of concern. He spoke against many of the welfare reform proposals and supported many proposals that I have concerns about as being costly. I remind the Member that there are choices to be made. If we add additional costs that are not built in, they will have to come out of the block grant and will result in further reduced public services. If it were simply top-sliced, perhaps half of that additional money would be taken from our Health Department, which is already struggling. I will have that at the back of my mind when deciding on some of his ideas, and I will not be able to support them.

Sammy Wilson highlighted the bedroom tax that was introduced several years ago, along with private sector involvement in assessment. He defended the DUP abuse of the petition of concern. He failed to acknowledge that, in the Ulster Unionists' amendment No 1, it would be possible —

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: I may, but I want to finish this.

It would be possible for the Department to determine the regulations. I noticed that, when I pressed the Minister, he used the word “preference” for it being dealt with in regulations. However, that did not preclude amendment No 1, which would empower him to make such regulations. Therefore, it is a difference of opinion about how it should arise. I refer to the important fact that, two years ago, the Ulster Unionists tabled an amendment on the issue. We have not come to the issue lately as a result of the Stormont Castle and Stormont House discussions; it was identified two years ago as a key issue in what was being worked on.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: Certainly.

Mrs D Kelly: In relation to Mr Wilson's contribution, was the Member also going to refer to his staunch defence of Sinn Féin's position? I know that love is in the air as Valentine's Day approaches, but it is a somewhat unusual courtship in the House today.

Mr Beggs: We will all await the votes on the amendments to see what way the petition of concern works. Everyone may have a better understanding of what is occurring at that point.

Mr Wilson also supported my view on amendment No 74: the voucher system should be retained as an option. Obviously, guidance and regulation will need to be developed, but it would be premature to exclude the possible use of a voucher system without at least investigating it further and considering it. I acknowledge that guidance will be required so that it is not abused. I definitely cannot support Mr Agnew's amendment No 79.

John McCallister supported the general principle that work should pay. I hope that all of us would agree with that and acknowledge that that is one of the factors that should come out of the welfare reform process. I hope that it does. He asked why the DUP and Sinn Féin, with their numbers, needed the petition of concern. I suspect that he just needs to watch what will perhaps unfold in the minutes following the closure of the debate when the votes occur.

Minister Storey indicated that he was tasked with delivering a safe and secure welfare system for Northern Ireland. It is important that we provide that. He also highlighted the still ongoing penalty that hangs over us if we fail to implement it and incur additional costs that are not being incurred elsewhere.

As I said earlier on amendment No 1, I picked up that the Minister seemed to express a preference for his way of doing it with his officials through regulation rather than making amendment No 1 to the Bill. However, having had an amendment for over two years, my colleagues and I would disagree. We believe that that could be implemented in a reasonable fashion. Let us just allow the democratic process to continue and to decide the issue.

There were accusations that Ulster Unionists were grandstanding. I remind Members that, on 10 April 2013, a wide range of amendments was tabled by my colleagues Robin Swann and Michael Copeland, covering split payments, frequency of payments, the relevance of medical evidence and bedroom tax, all of which have turned out to be the key issues. I have to give them credit for having the foresight to identify those issues two years ago. As an Assembly, if we look at how those issues are being dealt with, we see that they are being dealt with differently from what was originally proposed, and I am pleased with the progress that we are making.

I have indicated that I do not intend to move amendment No 8 in my name, which is to do with frequency of payments. We had an explanation from the Minister regarding amendment No 18. I would have viewed it as a probing amendment. It is worthwhile having openness and discussion around it. It is also my intention not to move amendment No 18. However, we will continue to support amendment Nos 1 and 35 in my name and that of Robin Swann. I hope that other Members will see the validity of the amendments and will support us in bringing about improvements to the Bill and ensuring that we deliver the best welfare reform legislation that we are able to within the financial means that are available to us.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Before I put the Question, I remind Members that amendment No 1 requires cross-community support due to a valid petition of concern.

Question put, That amendment No 1 be made.

The Assembly divided:

Question accordingly negatived (cross-community vote).

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): We now come to the second group of amendments for debate, which contains 14 amendments and opposition to nine clauses. The amendments deal with entitlement to benefit, including the housing and childcare components, the benefit cap and housing size criteria.

8.30 pm

Members will note that amendment No 48 is mutually exclusive with amendment No 50 and that amendment No 52 is consequential to amendment No 51. Members will also note that valid petitions of concern have been received in relation to amendment Nos 2, 5 to 7, 27 to 29, 42, 48, 50, 73 and 75. Therefore, they will require cross-community support.

I call the Chairperson of the Social Development Committee, Mr Alex Maskey, to address the Committee's opposition and to address the other amendments and oppositions in the group.

Question proposed, That the clause stand part of the Bill.

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 2: In page 3, line 28, leave out "7" and insert "3".—

No 5: In clause 10, page 4, line 36, at end insert

"(2A) Where an additional amount under subsection (2) can be awarded at two different rates, the lower rate shall be no less than two thirds of the higher rate."—

No 6: In clause 11, page 5, line 25, at end insert

"(4A) Regulations under subsection (4) shall provide that any calculation involving a reduction based on the age of the claimant shall not take effect for a period of 52 weeks in respect of any new claimant."—

No 7: In clause 11, page 5, line 31, at end insert

"(iii) to continue for a period of four weeks after a claimant is employed."—
[Mr Agnew.]

No 27: In clause 52, page 39, leave out lines 7 to 12.—

No 28: In clause 54, page 40, line 19, at end insert

"unless the claimant had made contributions before the commencement of this Act"—
[Mrs D Kelly.]

No 29: After clause 54 insert

"Condition relating to youth

54A.In paragraph 4 of Schedule 1 to the Welfare Reform Act 2007 (condition relating to youth) after sub-paragraph (1)(d) insert—

"(e) after the assessment phase has ended, the claimant has limited capacity for work-related activity".—

No 42: In clause 95, page 66, line 30, at end insert

"(5) Notwithstanding subsections (1) and (4) the benefit cap shall not be applied to child benefit or to any benefits a claimant receives for caring responsibilities, carer's allowance or additional amounts received within Universal Credit for claimants with regular and substantial caring responsibilities under section 10 or section 12."—

No 48: Page 90, after line 23 insert

“Duty to ensure access to advice

Duty to ensure access to advice

120B.It is the duty of the Department to ensure that all claimants have access to independent advice in relation to making a claim under this Act.”—

No 50: After clause 120 insert

“Duty to ensure access to independent advice

120D.—(1) The Department shall ensure that any person making a claim under this Act shall be entitled to have access to independent confidential advice and assistance provided free of charge in relation to making a claim under this Act.

(2) For the purposes of section (120) the Department must bring forward guidance on the independent confidential advice and assistance which is to be provided in consultation with the Northern Ireland Advice Services Consortium, within 3 months of the commencement of this section.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 51: After clause 130 insert

“Discretionary support

130A.—(1) The Department may, in accordance with regulations under this section—

(a) make payments by way of grant or loan to prescribed persons;

(b) provide, or arrange for the provision of, goods or services to prescribed persons.

(2) Anything done under subsection (1)(a) or (b) is referred to in this section as the provision of discretionary support.

(3) Regulations may make provision—

(a) for the Department to provide discretionary support only in prescribed circumstances;

(b) conferring a discretion on the Department (subject to any provision made by virtue of paragraph (c) or (d))—

(i) as to whether or not to provide discretionary support in a particular case; and

(ii) as to the nature of the discretionary support and (in the case of support by way of payments) as to the amount of the payments and the period for or in respect of which they are made;

(c) imposing a limit on the amount of the discretionary support that the Department may make in any particular case;

(d) restricting the period for or in respect of which the Department may provide discretionary support in any particular case;

(e) for claims for discretionary support to be made in the prescribed form and manner and for the procedure to be followed in dealing with and disposing of such claims;

(f) imposing conditions on persons claiming or receiving discretionary support requiring them to provide to the Department such information as may be prescribed;

(g) for the disclosure of information relating to discretionary support in prescribed circumstances or to prescribed persons;

(h) authorising the Department in prescribed circumstances to recover by prescribed means discretionary payments made under this section;

(i) requiring or authorising reviews (whether by the Department or a prescribed person) of decisions made by the Department with respect to the provision of discretionary support or the recovery of payments made under this section;

(j) for such other matters as appear to the Department to be necessary or expedient in connection with the provision of discretionary support, including provision creating criminal offences and provision amending or applying (with or without modification) any statutory provision.

(4) In this section “prescribed” means prescribed by, or determined in accordance with, regulations under this section.

(5) Discretionary support is not to be regarded as a social security benefit; but regulations under this section may provide for any statutory provision relating to a social security benefit (or to such benefits generally) to apply with prescribed modifications to discretionary support.

(6) Regulations shall not be made under this section unless a draft of the regulations has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, the Assembly.

(7) The Department shall, in respect of each financial year, prepare and lay before the Assembly a report on the operation of regulations made under this section.”— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 52: After clause 130 insert

130B.—(1) There shall be an officer known as “the discretionary support Commissioner”.

(2) The discretionary support Commissioner shall be appointed by the Department on such terms and conditions as the Department may determine.

(3) The discretionary support Commissioner—

(a) shall appoint such discretionary support inspectors; and

(b) may appoint such staff for the Commissioner and for discretionary support inspectors, as the Commissioner thinks fit but with the consent of the Department.

(4) Appointments under subsection (3) shall be made from persons made available to the Commissioner by the Department.

(5) Discretionary support inspectors have such functions as are conferred or imposed on them—

(a) by regulations under section 130A, or

(b) by any other statutory provision,

in relation to the review of decisions of the Department.

(6) It shall be the duty of the discretionary support Commissioner—

(a) to monitor the quality of decisions of discretionary support inspectors and give them such advice and assistance as the Commissioner thinks fit to improve the standard of their decisions;

(b) to arrange such training of discretionary support inspectors as the Commissioner considers necessary;

(c) to carry out such other functions in connection with the work of discretionary support inspectors as the Department may require;

(d) to report annually in writing to the Department on the standards of reviews by discretionary support inspectors.

(7) The Department shall publish any report made under subsection (6)(d).

(8) In Part 1 of Schedule 4 to the Administration Act after the entries under the heading "The social fund" there is inserted—

"Discretionary support officers

The discretionary support Commissioner.

A discretionary support inspector.

A member of any staff appointed under section 130B(3)(b) of the Welfare Reform Act (Northern Ireland) 2015."

(9) In the Freedom of Information Act 2000, in Part 7 of Schedule 1 after the entry relating to the social fund Commissioner there is inserted—

"The discretionary support Commissioner appointed under section 130B of the Welfare Reform Act (Northern Ireland) 2015.".— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 75: In schedule 1, page 99, line 5, leave out paragraph 7.— [Mr Agnew.]

Mr Maskey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I remind the House of the fact that the Committee expressed opposition to a number of clauses in this group. Those were clauses 4, 10, 12, 52, 54 and 69. I would like to outline — [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order. Those Members who are leaving should please do so quietly so that we can hear what the Chairperson is saying.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. As I said this morning, it is not my intention to oppose any of the clauses on behalf of the Committee, but I think that it is important to remind the House what the concerns were. That is in appreciation of all the Members who participated in the discussions and deliberations on the Bill and, of course, equally importantly, all the stakeholders who gave very generously of their time to contribute to the discussion and debate in the Chamber and the Committee's deliberations.

I want to place on record my thanks on behalf of the Committee to the staff, the Committee Clerks, the Committee members and all those who came to the Committee and expressed their concerns about and views on the Bill.

The Committee originally had serious concerns regarding clause 4. Those specifically related to the situation where one partner in a relationship was prepared to sign a claimant commitment but the other person was not, and that, as a result, neither would receive a payment. This was a result of the requirement for joint claims to be made, and the Committee believed that to be unfair. The Committee was also concerned about the removal of the severe disability premium under clause 12 and, therefore, sought to oppose it.

Clause 52 refers to the period of entitlement for contributory allowance. In its report, the Committee asked the Minister to explore the possibility of extending that period for more than 12 months. I note that, in recent discussions, it became clear that 80% of people return to work within a year of first making a claim, so the costs associated with a longer period would not be as great as first envisaged. This is good news.

In its report, the Committee also noted that, until clause 54 came into operation, there was provision under paragraph 4 of schedule 1 to the Welfare Reform Act 2007 for claimants to qualify for contributory ESA on the basis of youth without having to meet the paid National Insurance contributions condition. At the time, the Committee noted that no new claims would be allowed when that clause came into operation. The Committee was particularly concerned about the impact that this would have on young people with disabilities.

At the time, the Department noted that almost 97% of the people to whom that provision applies would not be affected by the change and that new claimants may qualify for income-related ESA. However, given the comparatively low cost of maintaining the current provision, with some groups estimating the cost at £390,000 per year at the time, the Committee recommended that the Minister should discuss the issue at the Executive Committee, with a view to making funds available to maintain the current arrangements.

Clause 69, titled "Housing benefit: determination of appropriate maximum", generated considerable debate at Committee during its consideration of the Bill and has often been in the media ever since. The terms "size criteria" and "underoccupancy" particularly raised serious concerns, and the issue has become better known as the bedroom tax. In a nutshell, when a property is deemed to have one extra bedroom, housing benefit will be reduced by 14%, and when there are two extra bedrooms, it will be reduced by 25%. The Committee heard that upwards of 32,500 tenants in the social housing sector will be deemed to be underoccupying and, therefore, subject to the reduction in benefit that I have outlined.

Again, thankfully, as a result of ongoing negotiations over the last couple of years, including in particular the Stormont House Agreement and within the new arrangements under that, we have been able to put in place arrangements that will ensure that no one will be subject to a reduction in their housing benefit.

Of course, as I said this morning, it will be a matter for each member of the Committee, and indeed their parties, to take their own view, or that of their party, on these matters, and I hope that I will be able to adequately reflect those views when I wind up the debate on the second group of amendments later this evening. I formally repeat that, as Chair of the Social Development Committee, I will not be expressing opposition to any of the above clauses.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I am reluctant to point out that there are Members who are engaged in continuous conversations, and that is discourteous to Members who are speaking. It also makes life difficult for me, because I may not hear what is being said. I appeal to those who want to have a long conversation: there are plenty of other places in the Building to do it.

Mrs D Kelly: In moving the amendments on behalf of the SDLP, we will take account of the Minister's contribution at the end of the debate. Some of them are, indeed, probing amendments, and we will look to see what assurances he can give in allaying some of the concerns that I will be raising on behalf of the party in relation to these amendments.

Amendment No 2 is a proposal to reduce the waiting day provision from a maximum of seven days to three days. We believe seven days is too long. Seven waiting days at the start of a claim is currently the practice with jobseeker's allowance and ESA, and this is an opportunity to rectify that. I also refer to amendment No 27, which was tabled by Mr Steven Agnew and signed by us. It deals with removing the time-limiting aspect for ESA youth claimants. We believe that we need to protect young people. Contribution-based ESA should be afforded to young people as well as to adults to ensure protection for them and their households. We are advised by DSD that the Department is to bring an amendment to afford that protection, but we do not see it here today. We will therefore await with interest what the Minister commits to this evening.

Amendment No 28 adds the words:

"unless the claimant had made contributions before the commencement of this Act".

The Department claims that this is unnecessary, but the intention is the same as the above: it is an attempt to find a workable solution to protect sick young persons. Again, we await the Minister's response.

There is opposition to clauses 61 and 63. This ensures that claimants can receive contributory JSA, ESA, maternity allowance or statutory payments only if they are entitled to employment. We have brought this forward because of concerns articulated to us and to others about the rights of migrant workers in particular. We believe that social security measures are coordinated by EU member states on the basis of established principles of EU law, including free movement of workers and equal treatment. During Committee Stage, there were concerns that these clauses might not comply with EU law. Again, we will be keen to hear what the Minister has to say and what assurances we can get on this aspect of the Bill.

I turn my attention to our opposition to clause 69, which is known as the bedroom tax or underoccupancy rule. Mr Deputy Speaker, you will know that we have signalled our opposition and, indeed, signed a petition, as has Steven Agnew — the SDLP petition of concern. It is regrettable that Sinn Féin can no longer support the view of its deputy First Minister when he gave a commitment at Sinn Féin's ard-fheis in April 2013 that it would deploy a petition of concern in relation to this.

I heard what the Committee Chair said about some of the assurances that we have been given about how some of the mitigating factors will provide comfort and no one will lose out on housing benefit over the next five years. We are concerned, however, about what will happen beyond that.

Other devolved Assemblies, most notably the Scottish Parliament, have also abolished the bedroom tax clause. We know that it was a model that the Tories put forward to deal with the south-east of England, but it has had severe repercussions right across GB. We also note that the Labour Party has given a commitment that, if it wins the election in May, it will also abolish the bedroom tax.

Mr Wilson: I thank the Member for giving way. I am sure that the many people — in fact, the thousands of people in the private sector — who do not get housing benefit for the additional room in their properties will be puzzled that the SDLP is the party that they have to thank for that reduction in their housing benefit but is now the champion of the public sector. Maybe the Member will explain to them why there has been this volte-face by the SDLP on this issue.

Mrs D Kelly: I believe that any volte-face, as Mr Wilson would say it, that there has been has been by none other than his good self. He voted against the Welfare Reform Bill in another place, yet he is its champion from the Back Benches here. I am sure that no Member needs spelt out to them Northern Ireland's particular needs and the difficulties that people in the communities that we serve have in finding alternative accommodation. First, it does not exist, and secondly, where it does exist, it is in areas where people do not feel safe to live. It is a sad reflection of the fact that we have not yet dealt with building reconciliation on this island and between our two communities, particularly here in Northern Ireland, that people cannot live where they wish because of the fear of intimidation and threat. So, the bedroom tax has a particular resonance for the public in Northern Ireland.

As Mr Wilson and others will know, many people are very concerned about that. People who own their home talk about downsizing when their family grows up and leaves the home, but for many, particularly as people are living longer and growing older, the support network of neighbours and friends is crucial. The health service and other public-sector services are arguably being saved a lot of money by the good neighbour support that we often find in our communities.

We know that the Stormont House Agreement brought forward commitments to mitigate the ravages of the bedroom tax, but we do not see anything about that here. Again, that is in the absence of final Executive approval for all the flexibilities and mitigating factors. A well-known phrase says, "Success has many fathers", and I note that many Members, particularly in the DUP, paid tribute to the previous Minister for his development and gaining of a number of mitigating factors and flexibilities. I think that it would be remiss of me not to pay tribute to my party colleagues, especially former Ministers Margaret Ritchie and Alex Attwood, who led the charge at DWP and secured those commitments and the ability to have the flexibilities. [Interruption.]

Mr F McCann: They brought in Atos.

Mrs D Kelly: I hear something from the Back Benches to my right. I am glad they have actually decided to say something and make a contribution to the debate.

Mr McCausland: Will the Member give way?

Mrs D Kelly: Yes, I will give way.

Mr McCausland: Could I suggest to the Member that if, come the elections next year, her political career comes to an end, she should certainly have a career in writing fiction? All the hard work with DWP was done by the Department, by me and by this party, and the input from her party was zero.

8.45 pm

Mrs D Kelly: Well, I heard what the Member said. He will forgive me for not accepting what he said, because that particular Member was too busy fighting fires created by himself and his party right across the Department and has enmeshed the Committee in having to complete inquiry report after inquiry report into allegations against his behaviour as Minister.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order, please. I hope that the Member has picked up that I need her to move back to the debate.

Once again, I have to appeal to a small number of Members who want to ignore me and who are continually in conversation. That is discourteous to the people who are making a contribution to the debate, and it is making life for me very difficult when the conversation that I hear is the one to my right, rather than Mrs Kelly.

Mrs D Kelly: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. We have, today, again honoured our commitment that we gave over two years ago to the people to stand against the bedroom tax, and we are pleased that the Green Party has stood with us. It is also a matter of regret that the Alliance Party, which has proved to be worthy poodles of the DUP/Sinn Féin diktat, have not submitted any amendments or spoken in relation to this —

Mr Maskey: Will the Member give way?

Mrs D Kelly: I want to move on, as the Deputy Speaker indicated, but I will give way, of course.

Mr Maskey: I thank the Member for giving way. I know that she has a lot to cover. The Member referred to the bedroom tax and seemed to suggest that she heard that it was dealt with in the Stormont House Agreement, but she does not see anything in front of us. Does the Member, who is the deputy leader of her own party, not accept that her party signed on to the Stormont House Agreement and, in particular, the first bullet point, which was that tenants in social housing will be protected from the bedroom tax? Does the Member, who is the deputy leader of the SDLP, not accept that her party leader, Alasdair McDonnell, signed on to that commitment? It is in black and white in the Stormont House Agreement. How can the Member suggest that she is not quite sure what was agreed?

Mrs D Kelly: I do not believe that I did suggest that. I have the Stormont House Agreement on the table before me and I read out the six lines within the agreement that deal with the Welfare Reform Bill. I do accept, and I did say, that there have been mitigating factors already agreed and flexibilities put into the Budget that will mitigate the bedroom tax. It is not abolished, and that is what we want to see from our party's perspective. We acknowledge that the agreement, as I understand it, is only for five years. We want to see it abolished forever.

I will move on to amendment No 42 and deal with the benefit cap. We are very concerned about this, and we know that, already, the benefit cap proposal is being capped at £26,000, but, only in the last few weeks, the Tories have said that their first action, if re-elected, would be to reduce that to £23,000, which would affect thousands of families in Northern Ireland. A £26,000 cap does not affect huge numbers; I understand that it affects about 600 families in Northern Ireland. People may be wondering who is getting £26,000. As Mr Allister said in his earlier contribution, that equates to a salary of about £33,000 before you would have that sort of take-home pay.

In my constituency, I have families who have four or more disabled children in the house, and they are providing care at home for their children. I think that there should be an acknowledgement that some people find themselves in exceptional circumstances, and some of that means that they have bigger homes, but that is usually because of the adaptations that are required for physical mobility and personal care assistance. I am very worried on behalf of those individuals, who are some of the most vulnerable. Again, those people are saving the state, if you like, huge sums of money because they choose to care for their children at home. Not only have the Tories said that they might go to a £23,000 cap, there is a suggestion that it might go down to £18,000. As I said in my earlier contribution, it is all right to talk about people going back to work and getting good contracts, but, as we know, a lot of the jobs on offer are low paid, have short hours, have temporary contracts and very little in the way of protections or rights, and many of them have zero-hours contracts. Set that against the backdrop of what the Tories are doing, who the Tories' friends are and what motivates the Tories. The motivation of the Tories is to attack the public sector, the welfare state and, indeed, many might say, the health service, so I think that this is a stand that we should make to take the opportunity to speak out against the worst ravages of a Tory-led Government.

I move on to amendment No 50 and amendment No 48, which relate to independent advice. Amendment No 48 has been tabled by the Ulster Unionist Party. Again, we will listen to what the Minister has to say about this amendment and the commitments given, but we do believe that there has to be strong, impartial and independent advice that puts the needs of the service user to the forefront. I was very encouraged by the humanity and compassion shown by the Minister, as he fully appreciates that, behind each of these measures, there are people, individuals and families who are suffering. I accept the good faith of the Minister in his commitment to putting people first and at the heart and centre of this legislation. However, there are stories emerging from GB, England in particular, that some Social Security Agency staff have been put under pressure by their Tory paymasters to take people off benefits. We do not want to have that sort of situation arising here, and we want to hear that good, solid advocacy services will be available to people who find themselves in the welfare system.

I will touch on some of Mr Agnew's amendments. We will also listen closely to what he has to say. In general, we welcome his amendments, which aim to provide the most protection possible for claimants, and that is what we hear is at the heart of his policy proposals in relation to these clauses. I understand that amendment No 5 seeks to maintain the current system that exists under tax credits in which the disabled child element of benefits equates to two thirds of the severely disabled child element. Amendment No 6 gives claimants a transition period of a year in which benefits for a young person that are supposed to be reduced because a young person has become too old are maintained at the current rate. This gives claimants better time for transition. Amendment No 7 is to have the housing cost element of universal credit continue for four weeks after the claimant starts employment. Again, that is to ease the transition period. People tend not to get a wage the moment they get a new job, and I am sure that some cognisance could be given to that. Some flexibilities could be made in the guidance or regulations around the imposition or withdrawal of entitlement. With that, I finish my contribution.

Mr Dickson: The amendments before us in regard to entitlements relate to some of the most contentious parts of the Welfare Reform Bill, notably the so-called bedroom tax. This is perhaps the most well known and, indeed, galvanising element of this Bill. The removal of the spare room subsidy is one of the most cynical reforms made by the Conservative-led Government. The policy, cited as a means of dealing with the under-occupation of social housing —

Mr Wilson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Dickson: I will.

Mr Wilson: First, all of us recognise the difficulties of the spare room subsidy being removed, but will he accept that it was not just a cynical exercise by the Conservative Government but that, indeed, an SDLP Minister has already imposed it on tens of thousands of tenants in the private sector, which is the most costly sector here in Northern Ireland? There has not been a word about that.

Mr Dickson: I agree. The policy, cited as a means of dealing with the under-occupation of social housing, has resulted in the demonisation of those in receipt of housing benefits, 500,000 of whom across the UK are actually in work. Perhaps unsurprisingly, the tax has been a failure in England, with only 6% of those affected moving to a smaller home. In the meantime, a huge amount of undue distress, debt and punitive measures have been levied on the most vulnerable in society, alongside the extra cost to local authorities charged with housing.

Rent arrears are up by 26% as a result of the policy, alongside fuel and food poverty. The policy also ignored the need of many people with disabilities to have that extra space or extra room to store medical equipment, for their carers to sleep or for households reduced in size as a result of separation.

Furthermore, housing associations in England have reported that many people wish to downsize, but, to put it simply, smaller homes are not there. To illustrate that, 180,000 tenants were judged to be underoccupying two-bedroom homes, yet in the rest of the UK, only 85,000 smaller houses were available. That reflects the very crux of the matter. For years, Governments have sold off social housing stock but failed to reinvest the revenue in the construction of new social housing to replace that moving into the private sector. To penalise the poorest in our society for the lack of long-term planning at the highest level of government is indeed perverse.

For Northern Ireland, however, the size, distribution and organisation of our housing stock only make that policy — which is designed for larger cities in the south of England — even more unworkable. It is therefore fortunate that we are able to implement meaningful mitigation measures in regard to that policy. We have agreed those special measures with Treasury, and we cannot and should not go back on those agreements, undermining concessions gained. In response to Mr Wilson, it is a pity that those concessions were not gained earlier on in all of those processes. That would be a betrayal of those who would otherwise be affected by those punitive measures.

It is important that we allow the Department the flexibility to alleviate the effects of the bedroom tax in the context of the wider departmental resources, as agreed by — it bears repeating again — all of the Executive parties. The one-size-fits-all implementation in Britain —

Mr Durkan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Dickson: I am nearly finished. The one-size-fits-all implementation in Britain is unsustainable, unjust and irrational. Therefore, I support the amendments brought forward by the Department with regard to the mitigation policy. Ultimately, the decision on the continuation or the abolition of the bedroom tax will be made at Westminster. That is where those decisions will be made, and I hope that a future Government will reverse that. The Alliance Party and our MP, Naomi Long, fought that unjust policy on the Floor of the House of Commons while others shirked their representative role and stood shouting from the sidelines.

Mr Wilson: Name them.

Mr Dickson: They are sitting to my right. In regard to the general issue of entitlements in the Bill, it is important that we have a clear vision of the Northern Ireland that we are seeking to build: a competitive Northern Ireland, less dependent on welfare, with investment in skills, education and infrastructure, and attraction for the jobs of the future; a more just Northern Ireland, where a fair day's work returns a fair day's pay, the state is no longer required to subsidise poverty wages and people are better off in work than they are on benefits; nevertheless, a Northern Ireland where the social security net supports victims of circumstances and, vitally, breaks the cycle of poverty in which so many find themselves trapped. That, crucially, involves the provision of good quality social housing.

In conclusion, I am content that the concessions that have been negotiated and agreed will ensure that Northern Ireland will not have the worst effects of that poorly thought-out and mean-spirited policy. I therefore support the amendments that have been agreed and brought forward by the Minister. I wish to place on record again my previous point with regard to skills, education and infrastructure. As representatives and legislators we must now get down to the job of building a united, shared and prosperous Northern Ireland fit for the 21st century that will deliver for everyone and protect the most vulnerable.

Mr Beggs: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the second group, despite the sheer arrogance demonstrated by the DUP in effectively potentially killing off 12 of the 14 possible amendments in the group. Amendment No 2 seeks to reduce the prescribed period from seven days to three. I am not convinced of the merits of such a change, not least because having a period of seven days will make sense in many circumstances. I understand that, for some claimants, the week-long hiatus may cause some difficulty, but wages and salaries are normally paid monthly or perhaps weekly, so there can be a delay when you work and when you receive payment. However, we must be conscious of the implications if we were to propose reducing it to only a few days.

There would be an immediate additional administrative burden on the Department, which is forced into the position of having to process a greater number of very short-term claims. It would also have financial implications for the Executive, as I very much doubt if DFP will simply foot the bill for our issuing additional short-term claims. What will be the additional administrative costs? What will be the additional cost in benefits? We could expect those additional costs to come off the block grant. What will be the cost of the services that will be lost in return?

In amendment No 5, Mr Agnew again touches on an issue that I feel the Social Development Committee has spent a great deal of time considering. By moving to a two-tier system as opposed to a three-tier system, it is likely that some families with a disabled child will see a reduction in their support. That is of concern. However, there are a number of points to make in respect of that. First, I expect that families will be fully protected within the transitional support for universal credit, so, in actual fact, they would see no reduction. I ask the Minister to confirm that that would be the case due to that protection.

Importantly, however, as has been said, whilst families, such as those with new claims, would be left worse off, many would also see an increase through the higher-rate child addition. I understand that universal credit rate payment to severely disabled children will be very slightly higher than the current child tax credit equivalent. That has to be welcomed. I am aware that the previous high-level exercises carried out by the Department have indicated that there have been more losers than winners, with 6,000 children likely to receive more but 7,500 who would have received less but for the built-in protection. If we take those 7,500 young people and carry them over to claims at some point in the future, I estimate that that might well be £7 million or £8 million. That is something that has to be calculated into any decision. It may well be more than that, and, again, it would be welcome if someone could put some estimate of costs on that. Of course there will be additional associated costs for administration, which will also have to be catered for. Subsequently, the Ulster Unionist Party will not be able to support the amendment. There is a huge unknown cost and a lack of clarity as to what will be lost as a result.

If we were to look at the overall budget and if top-slicing were to occur, we could expect half that cost to come off the health budget potentially. It has to come from somewhere. I believe that the battle for the issue should be at Westminster. If it were changed at a national UK level, there would not be corresponding implications for our limited budget here.

Moving on to amendment Nos 6 and 7 from Mr Agnew, which both relate to the housing element of universal credit, the first suggests that people be afforded a year's grace before any reduction. We will be opposing that, not least on the grounds that contributing to rent is appropriate when one can afford it. If someone finds new employment, it is appropriate that they should contribute. Amendment No 7 is the other housing-related amendment. It allows people to continue to claim their housing element for up to four weeks after they find employment. I will listen to what the Member has to say. However, I must tell him that, at the moment, it is my intention to oppose it. I note that he has passed the powers to the Department, and it is a "may" instead of a "shall". Nevertheless, if a claimant starts taking home an income that lifts him out of the category requiring support, I believe that the person will, in most circumstances, understand why they have had an element of support removed from them. Again, I highlight that this additional cost, were it to be borne, would have to come out of our limited funds. Is that really where we wish to spend some of our limited funds? We have choices to make. I question such a choice.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for giving way. I will give him credit: I think that he is giving each of the amendments the time that they deserve. He keeps coming back to where we would put our money. It just seems strange to me that a party that is willing to support proposals to reduce corporation tax at a cost of around £330 million per year is struggling over a measure that, in the case of the housing benefit grace period of four weeks, will help people to get back into work. It just seems incongruous that that small amount of money cannot be supported. We are talking about making work pay. This is an amendment to help do exactly that.

Mr Beggs: The Member raises an interesting dilemma, but the choice that we have today is whether to take money out of other Departments, the health budget or somewhere else in order to carry out his proposed amendments. Certainly, from my own perspective, I think that it is good if we can achieve the ability to determine corporation tax levels at some point in the future. That should be grasped and cherished because it could bring about significant benefit. However, as yet, I am not aware of discussions on timing, amounts and commitments. When it comes to that, equally, we will all have to carefully assess what the costs and benefits would be. At present, I am looking at this legislation, the amendments that the Member is proposing, what the costs would be and what the benefits would be. I am fearful, particularly as a former member of the Health Committee, of more and more additional costs, which would have to be held from our limited block grant and which would badly impinge on some of the most vulnerable in society, who are ill or need treatment from our health service.

Mr Wilson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: Yes, I will.

Mr Wilson: Would the Member also accept the principle that, once someone is in work, they should make a contribution to the rent on a property where they live, whether it be with their parents, a friend or whatever? If that principle is accepted, it has to be accepted across the range of everybody who is earning money. Therefore, this four-week period seems to be a rather odd proposal, because you would treat people who are in permanent employment or have been working for a longer time differently. Would he also accept that, if the argument is that you have got to make work pay, you would extend that forever? If that is the argument — that, by taking housing benefit off people, you are not making work pay — you would continue it indefinitely.

Mr Beggs: One of the core principles, I understand, of the universal credit process is that work will pay, so even someone who has just started work should immediately be financially better off than when they were receiving benefits. Even though they will be required to make a contribution towards their housing costs, they should nevertheless certainly still be better off than they would have been had they not commenced employment.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Member for giving way. I do not want to detain him, but this is an important point. The whole thrust of thinking on welfare reform is to get people back into work. If somebody is going back into work, but sees that part of the obstacle to that is, for example, waiting until the expiration of one month to get paid, in those circumstances is it not reasonable to allow a period of grace of four weeks so that that person can get to a position where he or she will be able to pay that additional burden in rent?

Mr Beggs: It would be very nice if we had a pot of funding that we could set aside to do that, but that is not my experience of how public service expenditure is currently operating. I understand that every Department is under severe pressure.

If additional money is to be made available for this, and I have sympathy and see the benefit of that, then money will have to be taken away from elsewhere. It would be very helpful if we could have some idea of what the cost would be so that we could put a number on it and then, perhaps, a more accurate assessment could be made of the cost in terms of the loss to other services.

As I said, I am so aware of how much our health service is struggling at the moment. I am fearful of some sort of top-slicing. Already, there are huge pressures, particularly in Health, but there are also pressures in a range of other Departments. Let us acknowledge that there is a wide range of pressures in virtually every Department where quite significant cuts have had to be implemented. The outworkings of that are yet to be fully seen. The challenge to the Members who wish to support this amendment is this: how much money will be required to fund this, and where will it come from?

Mr Agnew: I can give the “where?”: it is from the top-up fund that has been set aside for the amendments and proposed changes to the Welfare Reform Bill. That is £70 million; I propose that it is taken out of that.

Mr Beggs: The top-up fund is a wonderful line but you will find that there are many calls on it and I am fearful that there may not be enough money left. Probably, if you were to add up the cost of the Member’s individual amendments, it may well exceed the top-up fund; so, perhaps the Member should carry out that exercise.

Mr Durkan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: I wish to make some progress, please.

Will the Minister tell us what level of support will be offered to people affected by time-limiting ESA? Will support be offered to former claimants who then do not qualify for income-related ESA? What level of support will be available to them? Will it be 100%, 75% or 50%? Nevertheless, and even in the absence of this crucial information from the Department, the Ulster Unionist Party will not be in a position to support this amendment proposed by the SDLP. As I asked before: what will the cost be and where will the money come from?

There are other amendments. I turn to amendment No 28, which has regard to ESA youth claimants. It is certainly a much more affordable proposal, especially as the Department previously told the Assembly that a scan of ESA live loads two years ago revealed that, of the 28 contribution-based ESA cases, 16 were in support group and that, therefore, many would be unaffected by the changes. There is, however, a wider fairness issue, not least consideration of the fact that, so far as I know, no other contributory benefit forfeits its criteria based on the age of claimants.

Amendment No 29 requires clarification. I believe that limited capability for work is already a key criterion for ESA. I trust that Mr Agnew will detail exactly what his proposed amendment would do to either supplement or improve what is already the case.

Amendment No 42 from the SDLP is, I believe, a very genuine attempt to try to retain some influence on what we all accept is an important matter but to which, at present, we have limited local feed-in. The benefit cap was a key DFP policy and one which my party has, on the whole, generally supported. Nevertheless, I think that the SDLP means well with its proposal of exempting some key supports, especially child benefit and carer’s allowance. It is my opinion that carers are already facing financial hardship and difficulties, not least with what happens to them when they reach pension age and the caring component comes to an end.

However, this is not the place to try to make these changes, and I would argue that it should be done at Westminster. If we start moving benefits in or out of the overall cap, it will inevitably lead to an unequal system between us and the rest of the UK. If the cap needs to be changed, it should be changed for the entire UK. Again, the amendment would have a clear and not insignificant financial implication, that is, additional cost to our limited block grant and the additional loss of public services.

I am aware that amendment No 48, from the Ulster Unionist Party, has generated quite a bit of interest, not least in the independent advice sector. Let me make it clear that I understand that the Department, on the whole, provides support to the independent advice sector. However, that is because it is absolutely essential that it does. Without independent advice, fewer people would be claiming their fair entitlement. More people would be submitting inaccurate or erroneous claims. Many might be unable to claim their entitlement, and, quite possibly, there would be gridlock in the system and severe hardship for many.

9.15 pm

We can all think of our local offices in our towns, and I think of how the citizens advice bureaux in Carrickfergus, Larne and Newtownabbey contribute and help the system run smoothly. I certainly do not believe that they in any way undermine the work carried out by the Social Security Agency offices. They often complement them. Our amendment would simply give it a statutory footing. It would not necessarily mean more money; it may mean some. It would not mean more bureaucracy. In fact, I expect that, if our amendment is supported and approved, the only difference will be that it will help focus minds in the Department to ensure that there are no blind spots in terms of advice, either from it or from the independent sector across Northern Ireland. With that statutory requirement, it would have to do that.

Mr Wilson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: Yes.

Mr Wilson: He has accepted that considerable investment goes into advice-giving across the board, and a lot of it is very professional. Will he accept that, once you put anything on a statutory footing, it is not correct to say that there will be no costs involved because, once it is on a statutory footing, you have to make sure that it is done, you have to monitor how it is done and you have to ensure that, since there is a legal requirement that people get advice, they are getting advice? We all know that, once you put things on that kind of footing, a whole raft of bureaucracy builds around it, and, indeed, instead of money being spent on giving advice, money is spent on making sure that the statutory duty is met.

Mr Beggs: I think that it would be useful if there was a requirement for the Department to monitor what is being done and to ensure that that support is being delivered on a wide range of subjects, and, therefore, I believe that there is merit in the proposal. There need not necessarily be huge additional costs, but someone needs to spend some time looking very carefully at what level of advice and support is available to claimants and to ensure that all areas are covered. I am not entirely sure why the DUP is so threatened by that proposal that it felt it necessary to table a petition of concern to kill it. One thing that is for sure is that it is not the confident boost from the Department that many advice organisations were hoping to see today. I will stress again that the tabling of the petition of concern is particularly bad-mannered after what was discussed at yesterday's meeting of the five parties. Before determining whether we move amendment No 48, I will listen carefully to what the Minister has to say.

Mr Attwood: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: Yes, I will.

Mr Attwood: Is it not also the case that, in 2010, the Assembly put into law the statutory right to advice for people in situations where there is homelessness, or a risk of it? The Assembly has already, in particular circumstances — I am sure it was a Social Development Minister who did it — put into law a statutory requirement to receive advice in respect of homelessness. Under PACE law, every citizen in Northern Ireland is entitled to legal advice in the event that they are arrested further to a claim of criminal conduct. It is not a matter of principle in terms of the life of this part of the world, and it is not even a matter of principle when it comes to the law in respect of particular matters in this part of the world. Is that not a catalyst for the Minister to respond positively to these amendments?

Mr Beggs: I thank the Member for drawing that previous requirement to Members' attention. I think that has been very helpful.

Moving on, we are satisfied with amendment Nos 51 and 52 in which the Minister proposes to replace the old discretionary elements of the social fund, such as crisis loans and community care grants, with a new discretionary support scheme. It is essential that this new scheme works effectively and efficiently, and that the people it supports, who are likely to be some of the poorest and most vulnerable in our society, find that help and support in a timely fashion. Teething problems with the new system must be avoided as far as possible. People looking to avail themselves of this scheme will often not be able to wait around for a decision because their lives are in crisis. Prompt resolutions are absolutely essential, and we hope that the new commissioner will recognise the urgency of the environment in which the new scheme will be operating. We trust that this will be kept under review.

That brings us to the last two amendments in this group. We have no hesitation whatsoever in opposing amendment No 73. I wonder whether the full range of potential consequences of that amendment were considered before it was tabled. The strapline built up during the early discussions of welfare reform was that people should always be better off in work than on benefits. We agree with that as a broad policy priority. For too long, people were trapped in a system of welfare dependency that did not benefit them financially to go out and find a job. The danger, of course, is that a culture of worklessness can quickly build up in homes and be passed on from generation to generation. Universal credit is at least trying to rectify that. However, amendment No 73 would take away the incentive for people who are declaring themselves as self-employed to try to increase their paid income. I can see why, initially, there may be concerns about setting a minimum income floor, but we need to be pragmatic. Claimants should be encouraged to undertake work that makes them money, rather than only keeping them occupied from day to day.

Similarly, we oppose amendment No 75. This has been a live issue right from the moment when the Assembly started considering the first draft Bill in 2012. We have listened to the concerns that European Economic Area nationals, including those with disabilities, will be subject to work-related tests, when, in some circumstances, British nationals in the same situations will not. First, we need to remember that paragraph 7 in schedule 1 has been lifted entirely from the Bill that applies to the rest of the United Kingdom. It is, therefore, wrong in principle for anyone to claim that this Assembly is seeking a licence to discriminate. More importantly, however, we need to remember that our social security system is already not fully open to immigrants from other EU states. Instead, entitlement is very often based on whether the applicant has a right to reside here, and that is assessed through the habitual residency test.

I would be fearful of the consequences of the amendment were it to be accepted. Very quickly, we would put our entitlement for support on a different footing from the rest of the UK in the eyes of EU nationals. We all must welcome EU citizens who come to Northern Ireland to work, so long as they strive to provide for themselves and their families. They frequently contribute to the local economy by filling many jobs that might not otherwise be filled by locals. We do not, however, want to become a magnet for those who come to the UK not to work, but for benefits. If Northern Ireland had that variation, we would risk becoming a gateway to the United Kingdom for those who wish to enter the benefits system. Potentially, we would attract many more claimants to join the benefits system at the risk of incurring much of the cost that will flow from their living in Northern Ireland, not to mention the resulting pressures on housing and on a whole range of services.

It is for that reason that we need to think carefully. I argue that we should retain the same levels and guidance as elsewhere so that those who want to work are attracted to Northern Ireland, not those who may want to join the benefits system.

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I have sat here for nearly six hours. I have heard people preaching, pontificating and, in some cases, talking absolute nonsense. I am glad to see that Mrs Kelly has come back into the Chamber. I ask her and her colleagues to explain to me why, on 17 December 2014, they signed up to an agreement with three other parties — not including Sinn Féin, I might add. That agreement — I have it here — contained no protection for children with disabilities, no protection for adults with severe disabilities, a two-year loss-of-benefit sanction, and no supplementary payments fund.

Sinn Féin had a detailed negotiation with the DUP, and an agreement including five parties was signed on 19 December. Mr Attwood, Mrs Kelly and their party colleagues seem to have assumed the moral high ground. All I can say is that your view from it must be very blinkered. We would like an explanation. Maybe you can explain to the House why you were prepared to sign such an agreement. You talk about protecting the most vulnerable. Are children with disabilities, adults with severe disabilities and people who are going to be sanctioned for two years not vulnerable? Maybe, at some stage, we will get an answer to that question. We look forward to that. If you want to give it now, I am quite happy to give way.

Mrs D Kelly: No, go ahead.

Mr Brady: That is OK. Right. You obviously need to think about it, consult and discuss. I understand that.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order, please. I remind Members that the Chair is still here, despite the lateness of the night. All remarks will be through the Chair.

Mr Brady: Certainly, a LeasCheann Comhairle. As I said, that agreement contained very little protection for vulnerable people.

I will move on to talk about the particular clauses and amendments but, first of all, I will just mention another thing before I forget. There has been a lot of talk about petitions of concern. If my memory serves me right, Mark Durkan, who sat on the Social Development Committee with us, wanted to introduce a petition of concern a couple of years ago that would have killed the Bill. When we had bilateral meetings with his party, it — Mr Ramsey in particular — wanted to kill the Bill. What would that have meant? Direct rule, possibly? The introduction of the full implementation of welfare reform? Student fees? Water charges? Prescription charges and all the other ills and woes that come from a Tory Government? Those are the people who are pontificating and preaching to us today. The reality is that we would not have introduced a Bill like this. My colleague Fra McCann, who is sitting beside me, and I have been on the Social Development Committee since 2007. In our defence, we have stood resolute against the swingeing cuts of so-called welfare reform. We have been resolute; I challenge anybody to say that we have not.

Mr Durkan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Brady: No, you will have your chance. Obviously you are more prepared to talk than Mrs Kelly or Mr Attwood at the moment —

Mrs D Kelly: I will talk if you want, Mr Brady.

Mr Brady: No, the Member will not give way. You had your chance —

Mr Maskey: It is a bit late in the day.

Mr Brady: A bit late in the day is right.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order, please. The Member will resume his seat for a moment. I repeat what I said a few minutes ago: the Deputy Speaker is still here. All remarks will be through the Chair. Mr Brady, will you continue, please?

Mr Brady: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle.

Mr Wilson: Will he give way?

Mr Brady: Yes. [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order, please. I am going to insist that this is done properly. You do not address anyone as “you”; you address your remarks through the Chair.

Mr Wilson: I said, “Will he give way?”.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I hope that the Member is not challenging the Chair.

Mr Wilson: If you had listened, Mr Deputy Speaker, I said, “Will he give way?”.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I am sure that he is not. Continue.

Mr Wilson: Now that we think that Mrs Kelly has her story as to why they signed up to an agreement that does not offer the protections that the Bill and the arrangements do now, maybe he would be generous enough to let her give the explanation to the House. We are all waiting to hear it.

9.30 pm

Mr Brady: I thank the Member for his intervention. I think that Mrs Kelly had her chance, and I am sure that she will compose something. She will have a long night to think about it, and I am sure that she will come up with some sort of an answer. The reality is that the agreement that was signed by the party on our left did not protect vulnerable people. That message needs to go out, for all the preaching, pontificating and attacks by that party.

I will address some of the clauses. Clause 52 deals with contributory ESA. Initially, under the proposed Welfare Reform Bill, that was to last only a year. People who worked for 30, 35 or 40 years and who became ill, through no fault of their own, were going to lose by getting only one year's contributory benefit. My colleague the Chairperson of the Social Development Committee said that 80% of people return to work within a year, but, unfortunately, a lot of cancer patients who have been working become ill, again through no fault of their own, and have to give up work for a limited period. Obviously, they go through very traumatic treatment and may need extra time to get themselves back to a point at which they can return to work. That is essential.

It is interesting that none of the people who tabled amendments and criticised various aspects today was prepared to admit that some good was coming out of all this and that concessions and mitigations had been obtained. It is interesting that, in Mr Allister's weird world — in his utopia — nobody would be on benefits, and everybody would be out working, according to him. His attack on vulnerable families is an absolute disgrace, and he should be totally ashamed of himself.

In my experience of working with people on benefits for many years, nobody has ever come in on a Monday morning and said, "I love being on income support". It does not work like that. People do not want to be on benefits, and there are many reasons why they are on benefits. Even the inimitable Lord Freud, when he was here, agreed that we had higher rates of disability in the North and that we had a society that was coming out of conflict. There are many reasons why people are on benefits, and it is not incumbent on any of us to stand here and criticise them for no good reason. I argue that clause 52, which I think the Minister introduced, is a good clause, in the sense that it extends the period in which a person can get contributory ESA.

There has been much talk about the bedroom tax. It does not work; that has been proved in Scotland, where housing associations built loads of houses with three bedrooms. People would not move into them because of the bedroom tax. Housing associations cannot service their loans and are left with empty houses, and some of them will probably end up going to the wall. That is the reality of the bedroom tax.

Historically, we have had three- and four-bedroom houses built over many years. When the Housing Executive's representatives came in to brief the Committee initially about the bedroom tax, they admitted that, if it were to have been introduced the next day, it would take at least six years for the proper houses to be built.

We also live in a society that, unfortunately, has housing segregation. I am sure that there are people in north Belfast who could probably move into other areas of north Belfast, but, because of the society that we live in, it becomes next to impossible for them to do so. The mitigation of the bedroom tax has succeeded because there is the supplementary payment fund, which my friends on the left initially signed up not to have.

Mr Durkan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Brady: No, the Member will not give way. The bedroom tax has been neutralised and will continue to be neutralised, so that is a good thing for those vulnerable people whom we have all been talking about today.

I will move on to the discretionary payments in clauses 51 and 52. Basically, the social fund has been abolished in Britain and has gone to local authorities, some of which service it in a good way, and some of which do not bother. Some of the money that is set aside for that purpose goes to other things. It is good that we had an opportunity to be innovative and have a discretionary fund and a discretionary fund commissioner. That is a very good thing because it gives that independence, much the same as the social fund commissioner. When people actually started to take community care grant disallowances to the second and third stage with the social fund commissioner, up to 49% of decisions at local offices were overturned. That can only be a good thing.

This is not a Bill we would have taken, but there has been good progress in many areas. The other thing that has been looked at apart from people who are unemployed, because we mentioned contributory ESA, is those who are termed the working poor. There are approximately 90,000 here in the North. People on low incomes are going to be helped with the discretionary fund. There are no benefits that we are in control of where people will be worse off. That is true to say. There are other areas in HMRC control, like tax credits, child tax credits, child benefit and areas like that, but where we have control over benefits, nobody will lose out. I want to make that point. Go raibh míle maith agat.

Mr Wilson: Most of the amendments we have been dealing with have been put forward by the SDLP. As I think the last Member pointed out, there is a degree of grandstanding by the SDLP here, especially in relation to some of the issues that they have been responsible for themselves. Now, suddenly, they have had a conversion on them because of the opposition there has been or, maybe more, because there is simply the unprincipled stance that they have taken, namely they see a chance to have a poke at Sinn Féin on some of these issues, and are taking it now, despite the fact that it is totally irrational given their previous stance.

I want to start off with clause 69, because we did not get an explanation from the SDLP on this. Their desire to have it removed from the Bill has already been dealt with. It could not be clearer. There is a commitment from the Minister and the Executive. Furthermore, the Executive have already earmarked all the funds required to make sure that anyone in the public sector who falls foul of the loss of the spare room subsidy will be recompensed for that. They will not be forced to move.

Mr F McCann: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: I will give way, yes.

Mr F McCann: Those were interesting points. If you listened to Mrs Kelly earlier, it not only became a problem that it has not been removed, but even the mitigation has become the problem for her now also because it lasts only five or six years.

Mr Wilson: Of course, here is the point: there was no mitigation. Nor, I suspect, does Mrs Kelly want to remind the people who live in the private sector. Sure, there are no proposals from her to mitigate the effect of the introduction of the spare room subsidy by her colleague who is sitting beside her. He was quite happy to introduce it in this Assembly for a sector where the rents are higher and people are equally under pressure, yet the subsidy that they lose there is much bigger than the subsidy that will be lost in the public sector. But no call for mitigation there. In fact, let us quickly move on and forget about the SDLP's involvement in that sordid little exercise, where they claim the Tories have done this on the poor people of Northern Ireland. Well, the Green Tories did that on them some time ago in the private sector when they introduced that, and not a whimper about it now.

Indeed, when she was given the opportunity to explain it, she did not. If she wants me to give way now, I will, but I suspect that I will get no more of an explanation from her this time than last time.

Let us not have this nonsense peddled. The Member who spoke previously was right: we are preached at by the sanctimonious braggarts on the other side who say, "We would not have done that. You are the bad people". We have provided a way out. "It is only for five years", she says. It may well extend for more than five years; that will be a choice for a future Executive.

Mr Durkan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: I will give way, yes, because I know that he has been trying to get in for some time now, and I would love to hear his words of wisdom. Maybe we will now receive from Mr Durkan the explanation that we did not receive from Mrs Kelly.

Mr Durkan: Unlike the Members on my right, Mrs Kelly does not jump to DUP demands. The Member said that the issue on clause 69 could not be clearer. He refers to the mitigation measures that we have received commitments on, and I welcome them. However, they are not clear in what we are here to debate today. We are here to debate and shape legislation, and those mitigation measures are not clear in that.

Mr Wilson: How could they be any clearer? This is not a commitment that was whispered in some corner or was part of some secret talks between the five party leaders; this is a commitment that has been made time and time again on the Floor of the Assembly. Those who are affected by the removal of the spare bedroom subsidy will have the money paid to their housing benefit. Furthermore, it is not that we will do it if we can find the funds; a commitment has been made to provide, I think — I cannot remember the figure now — £17 million in the first year. That money has been committed and committed publicly here in the Assembly time and time again. The Finance Minister has said it, the Social Development Minister has said it, the First Minister has said it and the deputy First Minister has said it. It is a bit difficult to say that no commitment has been given on it.

Mr Durkan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: Let me just finish the point. There is no provision, but you would not expect provision in the Bill that makes a statement about it. The commitment has been given, the money has been given and the reason why it is for five years has been given. The reason is that the whole idea is to try, over that period, to build up a stock of houses that gives people the opportunity to move from properties that are perhaps larger than they need. That cannot be done at present, hence the reason why we had to mitigate a change in welfare reform that was going to have that impact.

Mr Durkan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: Given all that, I hope that we will get from the SDLP Members some explanation of why they still feel a necessity to remove clause 69 when that commitment has been given and, indeed, when they are making no effort and giving no indication of what they would do to help the people who are the victims of measures introduced by their Minister.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: I will give way, and then I will give way to the Member who asked previously.

Mr Storey: The Member who asked the question and who supports the removal of clause 69 will be aware that I have given a commitment to the Executive that we will bring forward the scheme and it will go to the Executive. However, listen to this: it will go further, because it will then go out to public consultation. It will not be done in the dark. It will not be, in some way, clouded in secrecy. The public will see that. There seems to be a failure in the House today to understand the reasons why we had to do things in the way that we are doing them. I go back to the point that I made earlier and to which I think the Member referred: there was an attempt to kill the Bill at the very start. If that had happened, this place would not be here, I think, and, secondly, you would have had welfare without any changes, any modifications or any help.

9.45 pm

Mr Wilson: I thank the Minister for that information. I will give way.

Mr Durkan: I thank the Member for giving way, and I again welcome the commitment from the Minister. However, will the Member accept that people have had commitments made and heard them before? He referred to commitments from his party colleagues on the bedroom tax and, indeed, to the commitment from the deputy First Minister on bedroom tax. Does the Member agree that this is not the first commitment that the deputy First Minister has given on bedroom tax? At his 2013 ard-fheis, he gave a commitment to deploy a petition of concern to block the bedroom tax.

Mr Wilson: I do not know when that meeting was, but, if there was such a commitment — he can answer for himself, rather than have me answer for him — the one point that I will make is this: there is no need for a petition of concern against this for the simple reason that the impact of it has been removed. It has been removed by the commitment of resources and the promise of the Minister and the fact that the Executive collectively and, indeed, the five party leaders have agreed the issue. Let me come to the —

Mr Attwood: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: I will give way on the understanding that Mr Attwood will now either repent of his former sins against tenants in the private sector or give us an explanation of why he believes that the treatment of private sector tenants should be different from that of tenants in the public sector. I give way on that basis, though I suspect that I am wasting my time.

Mr Attwood: I thank the Member for giving way. To prove his worst fears true, can he confirm something? You and I sat around the Executive table for a period, and you and some of your colleagues were the most insistent that the Welfare Reform Bill be brought through the Executive to the Chamber. I never once heard from you, Mr Wilson, in all —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order, please. Speak through the Chair and no finger-pointing.

Mr Attwood: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker.

I did not once hear from the Member opposite in endless meetings of the Executive, week after week, when he and his DUP colleagues were saying, "Get the Bill into the Chamber and through the legislative process". Not once did Mr Wilson say that there was any need, any reason or any money to mitigate the bedroom tax. Not once. Now he makes a virtue tonight, to quote the former Minister, of mitigating what was going to have that impact in his reference to the bedroom tax. Not once, Mr Wilson, did you make that argument in all your time as Finance and Personnel Minister —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order, please.

Mr Wilson: For the record: first, not only did I make the point here, I made the point during debates at Westminster. I signed early day motions to that effect at Westminster. Indeed, if the Member remembers rightly, I was Finance Minister when the £17 million was made available for the Executive for the mitigation of the bedroom tax, as he calls it. He is wrong on all of those counts, but we still have total silence from him on why he introduced this tax on the private rented sector tenants of Northern Ireland.

He has not repented of it. He has not explained it. He is not prepared to do anything about it. He has not tabled any amendments to alleviate it, and that is perhaps the more telling issue.

Mr Maskey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: I will give way, yes. I am sure that you want to have a wee go at him. [Laughter.]

Mr Maskey: Given the number of times that the Member has given way, I was fairly confident that he would give way once more, even though we are coming to the close of the debate for this evening. Does the Member agree with me that it is quite interesting, if not ludicrous, that we have listened to the SDLP talk about the need to have a debate? It is obviously very important to do that, but they have said that we need to tease this out and probe that. In actual fact, in June 2007, Ms Ritchie, the then Minister for Social Development, rushed the first Welfare Reform Bill through the House by way of accelerated passage on the basis of the need to protect parity. There were no mitigating measures with parity, no opportunity for anybody to table amendments or to seek clarification. The first Welfare Reform Bill, which is causing people to suffer as we speak, never mind the latest one, was introduced by an SDLP Minister by way of accelerated passage with no mitigation measures whatsoever.

Mr Wilson: I am glad that I gave way to the Member because I had not quite remembered that point. It is not very often that he and I do a double act; it is usually head-to-head stuff. He has made a very important point, which once again torpedoes under the waterline the case that the SDLP is making.

I want to deal with a couple of other amendments. Mrs Kelly introduced a number of amendments. She told us what the amendments said, which we could all have read anyway, but gave no explanation as to why she believed that they were justified. There was no mention of why she believed that the extension of three days to seven days was essential. As Mr Beggs pointed out, that is no different than people who go into work for the first week and sometimes have to do a lying week. She wants to introduce a costly measure that would add significantly to the bureaucracy and make benefits available to them after three days.

I also do not understand her thinking on amendment No 27. Why does she believe that young people should be treated differently than any other people? That is also true of some of Mr Agnew's amendments, which I am sure he will deal with later. I thought that the whole idea was to ensure that young people did not get into a culture of benefits at an early stage, which is where we get generational unemployment. It seems that there are a number of amendments that seek to see young people treated more generously in the benefits system than those who are older. I will not go through all Mr Agnew's amendments, but there is a common thread. We want to encourage people into work and it is easier to do that before they get into the inertia of long-term unemployment. Yet, it seems that a number of the amendments on entitlements are designed to encourage that inertia and to be more generous.

Mr Agnew: Will the Member give way?

Mr Wilson: I will not give way on those points. I think that we will finish fairly soon.

Again, no explanation was given by Mrs Kelly for the SDLP's opposition to clause 61. Of course, Mr Agnew is in the same boat. The clause gives the Department the ability to find out whether anyone has a right to residency because they are actively seeking work. That is a requirement for a citizen who is living in this country: if you are not actively seeking work, you will not be entitled to benefits. The effect of opposing the clause would be to remove the Department's ability to do that for people from outside the United Kingdom. We know about the anger that exists. In many cases, people are wrong, but some believe that people from outside Northern Ireland are treated differently and more generously than people who live in Northern Ireland. That amendment would have that effect and, again, no explanation was given. It was just introduced by Mrs Kelly.

Mr Attwood: Will the Member give way so that an explanation can be given?

Mr Wilson: Since the Member will, hopefully, have an opportunity later in the debate to give an explanation, and we will finish fairly soon, I do not want to give way on that one.

I do not have a great deal of sympathy for lifting the cap on benefits. If we are to encourage people into work, we must make work pay. In Westminster, the SDLP voted against tightening the cap. I did not understand its explanation then, and I do not understand it now. The removal, for example, of the carer's allowance and child benefit — they are really an additional source of income for people because they are caring for a child, a parent or whatever — from the benefit when the cap is being calculated removes a source of income. Many people query whether it is right that someone on benefits should have the possibility of getting more money than someone who is in a job and earning not even the average wage in Northern Ireland. Again, no explanation was given as to why those issues should be removed from benefits when the cap is being calculated. It is important that we get this in perspective. When there is genuine need and genuine disability, the Government's own proposals allow people to have benefits beyond the cap level. That is right, but it has to be in very specific and controlled circumstances.

Mr Beggs talked about amendment No 48, and he used rather dramatic words: why did we need to kill it? It was not a case of killing it, but it was simply that we made our position clear on amendment No 48. Of course there needs to be advice. The Department already spends a considerable amount of money on institutions that give advice, but I still maintain that, once you make something statutory, a whole industry grows around ensuring that it is in place, monitoring it, measuring it, ensuring the right quality and everything else. I believe in the independent way that it is done at present, but, once you make it statutory and the money comes from the Department, the real danger is that it is no longer seen as independent but as an extension of the Department. At least the advice that we have at the moment is seen as independent from the Department, albeit the money comes from the Department. However, since it is not a statutory obligation, there is no statutory link between the organisations that give advice and the Department, and they are seen as being more independent. For that reason, it is not a case of killing the amendment but simply using common sense. We have to give advice, but let us keep it that the money goes to organisations that give advice and not to setting up a new bureaucracy.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Business Committee agreed that the House would not sit later than 10.00 pm this evening and would resume at 10.30 am tomorrow. This seems to be a convenient moment at which to suspend.

The debate stood suspended.

The sitting was suspended at 9.58 pm.

No 51: After clause 130 insert

"Discretionary support

130A.—(1) The Department may, in accordance with regulations under this section—

(a) make payments by way of grant or loan to prescribed persons;

(b) provide, or arrange for the provision of, goods or services to prescribed persons.

(2) Anything done under subsection (1)(a) or (b) is referred to in this section as the provision of discretionary support.

(3) Regulations may make provision—

(a) for the Department to provide discretionary support only in prescribed circumstances;

(b) conferring a discretion on the Department (subject to any provision made by virtue of paragraph (c) or (d))—

(i) as to whether or not to provide discretionary support in a particular case; and

(ii) as to the nature of the discretionary support and (in the case of support by way of payments) as to the amount of the payments and the period for or in respect of which they are made;

(c) imposing a limit on the amount of the discretionary support that the Department may make in any particular case;

(d) restricting the period for or in respect of which the Department may provide discretionary support in any particular case;

(e) for claims for discretionary support to be made in the prescribed form and manner and for the procedure to be followed in dealing with and disposing of such claims;

(f) imposing conditions on persons claiming or receiving discretionary support requiring them to provide to the Department such information as may be prescribed;

(g) for the disclosure of information relating to discretionary support in prescribed circumstances or to prescribed persons;

(h) authorising the Department in prescribed circumstances to recover by prescribed means discretionary payments made under this section;

(i) requiring or authorising reviews (whether by the Department or a prescribed person) of decisions made by the Department with respect to the provision of discretionary support or the recovery of payments made under this section;

(j) for such other matters as appear to the Department to be necessary or expedient in connection with the provision of discretionary support, including provision creating criminal offences and provision amending or applying (with or without modification) any statutory provision.

(4) In this section “prescribed” means prescribed by, or determined in accordance with, regulations under this section.

(5) Discretionary support is not to be regarded as a social security benefit; but regulations under this section may provide for any statutory provision relating to a social security benefit (or to such benefits generally) to apply with prescribed modifications to discretionary support.

(6) Regulations shall not be made under this section unless a draft of the regulations has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, the Assembly.

(7) The Department shall, in respect of each financial year, prepare and lay before the Assembly a report on the operation of regulations made under this section.”— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 52: After clause 130 insert

130B.—(1) There shall be an officer known as ‘the discretionary support Commissioner’.

(2) The discretionary support Commissioner shall be appointed by the Department on such terms and conditions as the Department may determine.

(3) The discretionary support Commissioner—

(a) shall appoint such discretionary support inspectors; and

(b) may appoint such staff for the Commissioner and for discretionary support inspectors, as the Commissioner thinks fit but with the consent of the Department.

(4) Appointments under subsection (3) shall be made from persons made available to the Commissioner by the Department.

(5) Discretionary support inspectors have such functions as are conferred or imposed on them—

(a) by regulations under section 130A, or

(b) by any other statutory provision,

in relation to the review of decisions of the Department.

(6) It shall be the duty of the discretionary support Commissioner—

(a) to monitor the quality of decisions of discretionary support inspectors and give them such advice and assistance as the Commissioner thinks fit to improve the standard of their decisions;

(b) to arrange such training of discretionary support inspectors as the Commissioner considers necessary;

(c) to carry out such other functions in connection with the work of discretionary support inspectors as the Department may require;

(d) to report annually in writing to the Department on the standards of reviews by discretionary support inspectors.

(7) The Department shall publish any report made under subsection (6)(d).

(8) In Part 1 of Schedule 4 to the Administration Act after the entries under the heading ‘The social fund’ there is inserted—

‘Discretionary support officers

The discretionary support Commissioner.

A discretionary support inspector.

A member of any staff appointed under section 130B(3)(b) of the Welfare Reform Act (Northern Ireland) 2015.’

(9) In the Freedom of Information Act 2000, in Part 7 of Schedule 1 after the entry relating to the social fund Commissioner there is inserted—

‘The discretionary support Commissioner appointed under section 130B of the Welfare Reform Act (Northern Ireland) 2015.’.— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 75: In schedule 1, page 99, line 5, leave out paragraph 7.— [Mr Agnew.]

Mr Attwood: I am inclined to say that I am speaking to a packed and hushed Chamber surrounded by my party colleges, but, clearly the latter point is not correct. I think that the former point is more correct.

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): Where are your comrades?

Mr Attwood: I gave them the morning off, Minister, or they said that they did not want to listen to me any longer: you can make your choice.

One point that struck me yesterday was when the Minister said that this all came down to people. My variation on that story is that last month the 'Andersonstown News' reported that the first food bank in west Belfast was shortly to open. Those are the sorts of facts and experiences that should inform how we approach today. I say to the Minister that I am inclined to talk about Ministers who are in government and those who are in power. There is a big difference between the two. The Scottish Nationalist Ministers, together with my colleague to my left, demonstrate those who know the difference between being in government and being in power.

Everybody knows that there is a new broom in DSD. I am not going to say much about the previous incumbent, but everybody knows that there is a new broom in DSD, and I would like to see the fingerprints of all that in how you respond to the amendments today. It would be no mean achievement if, at the end of today, recognised in our law were victims and survivors, the need to give advice and assistance, what may be the case on the far side of the Westminster election with the benefit cap, which one of the amendments in the group deals with, and the idea that the issue was so important that the Assembly said to itself that it needed particular oversight measures for welfare now and in the future. I hope that that will inform how the Minister approaches the amendments that will be debated today that touch on those issues and many besides.

The reason why we have amendments such as that on the benefit cap in this group is that it is our view that we have not seen the half of it with welfare reform and what the ambitions of a future Tory Government might be when it comes to the benefit cap. It is now openly talked about that, on the far side of the election, the British Government will try to have further austerity, as they see it, of £30 billion. Indicatively, £12 billion would be the welfare contribution to that austerity budget. We are saying today in the context of all our amendments but particularly that on the benefit cap that we have to anticipate what will be the shape of things very soon from now.

If I were to put money on it — that is more my brother's inclination than mine — I would say that, at the moment, the Tories are planning their first strikes in the event that they are elected. We know that from, if nothing else, David Cameron's recent contribution about reducing the benefit cap to £23,000, but it will be more than that. Remember what happened after they were elected in May 2011. There was an emergency Budget in June 2011 where they made their first slash at welfare, followed by the November paper from the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions where the ambition of universal credit was outlined. We are heading, Minister, for a replay, because it is up in lights already from David Cameron's contribution of a few days ago. That is only the first part of the menu, because the tensions in the British Government between DWP, Treasury and the Cabinet Office mean that, without any doubt, the balance of power was always with the Treasury and the political strategy will now be defined by the Cabinet Office and Treasury, not by DWP. We need to anticipate what the shape of things will be on the far side of the election, in the first weeks after the election, including, potentially, what Labour might get up to on where welfare is going.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for giving way. In many respects, I share some of the concerns that he expresses, and those are the issues that I have been endeavouring to address. Indeed, when Ed Miliband was in Northern Ireland, I had the opportunity, along with the First Minister, to have a discussion with him around these issues. In fact, I also intend to be in London at the beginning of the week. These are issues that I take a keen interest in, but we have to face the reality, which is that, as all the pundits, including your brother, will probably say, we face the most intriguing election that the United Kingdom has had for many years. It is one of which we cannot determine the outcome. However, my focus has to be to ensure that I have had discussions with the Labour Party and with the current Government. Not that I would use betting parlance, but that is me hedging my bets.

Mr Attwood: As I said, there is a new broom in DSD, and that seems to me to indicate that you, at least, are thinking to the end of the next year, whereas maybe your predecessor was thinking about the last century. We will not go there for the moment.

Given that recognition, I come back to the group of amendments, which, I reassure you, I am talking to. It is about the benefit cap, and that is why, when I come to it in more detail, the amendment about the benefit cap is so important. If the analysis is right and there is bad news coming from the Tories if they win and, potentially, bad news from Labour if they win, we need to anticipate where all of that is going.

One of the reasons I say that is the exchange that I referred to yesterday between Mark Durkan and Mr Gauke, who is a Treasury Minister, at a Westminster Select Committee. I am sorry that Sammy Wilson is not here because he was at the hearing. He was remarkably quiet at the hearing, and I wanted him to be here so that I could enquire about that. This is the reply to Mark Durkan from Minister Gauke when he probed him on what might be the approach of London in relation to a heavy stick being used if our funding here in Northern Ireland was not on a sustainable basis. This is relevant to welfare and to the benefit cap. This is what Mark Durkan said:

"There is some concern, not just because of the experience on welfare reform, where the block grant was fined unless the Assembly passed a Bill that it otherwise would not have wanted to pass ... will the Minister assure us that the judgment that is made on budget sustainability in a couple of years' time will not hinge on the Treasury saying to the Executive, for instance, 'You do not have a sustainable budget unless you introduce water charges'" and so on. The Minister said to that:

"my approach to looking at the finances of the Northern Ireland Executive as a whole, in their totality, is that they need to be on a sustainable footing. When it comes to public finances, whether in Northern Ireland or in the United Kingdom—public finances are the sum of its parts—this is a matter of looking at the totality of the public finances".

He concluded:

“in terms of how the Treasury will view that in future, I would not go beyond the wording set out in the Stormont House agreement.”

He did not take the opportunity, Minister, to say that, in the future, be it on welfare, Budget or corporation tax, which is what he was talking about in the context of the Select Committee, he would rule out the fact that, if Northern Ireland’s public finances, in the view of the Tories, were not on a sustainable footing, there would be a big stick waved in our faces once again, as we have experienced over the last two years. We are getting an early warning from London about how they will look at this place when it comes to how we administer our business, be it the Budget, corporation tax or welfare, which is a reason why we should build into our primary legislation the protections that I urged on you earlier about independent advice, the benefit cap or other aspects referred to in the amendments, including naming the issue of victims and survivors in the Bill.

Let us be clear about it — this is the final general point that I want to make — universal credit is coming to a shuddering halt. Cabinet and Treasury know it, and they will now take control of it. The consequences of that, as we said yesterday, will be more penalties and more cuts to the welfare baseline, including the benefit cap. It will be more than £23,000, because that will not cut it for David Cameron if he is re-elected. It will certainly not cut it for George Osborne if he continues to be Chancellor. That is the context in which the matter has to be considered. As somebody wrote just a few months ago:

“So the next secretary of state will have a lot of problems on their plate. Cut your losses and cancel universal credit, or press ahead despite the risks? Even more difficult will be dealing with the administrative chaos in the disability benefit system: angry claimants, disgruntled staff, a contractor who wants to escape as quickly as possible, and mounting costs for taxpayers. And looming over the department is the post-election spending review — welfare will be firmly in the Treasury’s sights again.”

That is why we should put some of the amendments from Mr Agnew, from the Ulster Unionists and from us into the Bill.

I will also speak about a number of amendments that I urge the Minister to consider further. He is aware of the two amendments that have been tabled in relation to independent advice and independent advice and assistance. I think there is a difference, and, whilst we will work with the Ulster Unionists in that regard, we think that our amendment, because it refers to assistance, is also very important. Can I explain our thinking? I have a sense that the Minister’s mind is not as closed as a petition of concern might suggest. I will maybe put it that way, if that is not too cryptic or generous. Therefore, I encourage him, over the next while, in response to this matter to indicate where his thinking might be generally for Further Consideration Stage on this and other matters.

What is this about? I acknowledge that there are a lot of good people giving a lot of good advice in-house in the Social Security Agency, the Child Support Agency and so on. I am not denying that. Some people suggest that, when you gather together all of the money that goes into that pot, be it in-house or in the independent sector, it might be £4 million or £5 million. That is a very significant contribution. To be fair, it tracks back to the days of direct rule and worked itself through both SDLP and DUP Social Development Ministers, so, whatever the tensions may be in the Budget and even whatever the tensions may be within the independent advice sector — I will not go there — nonetheless the Government have shown some level of good authority when it comes to funding independent and in-house — more in-house than independent but nonetheless.

It comes back, Minister, to the fact that, if you give all the assistance to the claimant, you can maximise the benefit to the claimant, reduce the risk of a negative assessment, avoid going to an appeal, and, at the end of it, the quality and experience of the life of the claimant and their family is going to be that much more different. If we can front-load that in order to maximise that journey to the right outcome, we should take the opportunity to do so.

The briefing that I am going to borrow from is the Northern Ireland Advice Services Consortium briefing. This is not a stand-alone advice agency; this is the consortium of people who give independent advice. It referred to the fact that advisers interview people; help the person prioritise their problems; provide up-to-date advice about available benefits; help complete applications; advocate at appeals, if necessary; help people liaise with Departments; and refer externally to other forms of appropriate crisis intervention. I put it to the Minister that the scale of that is greater than the good work that is done within the welfare offices because, inevitably, they are more constrained than taking an expansive and inclusive approach to advice giving, as is outlined in those seven approaches. It empowers claimants to resolve their own issues and maximises income by promoting benefit uptake, which is currently one of Northern Ireland’s main priorities. Remember what your predecessor said, Minister, in October 2013:

“My vision is that every individual and household across Northern Ireland is receiving all social security benefits to which they and their families are entitled.”

What that will mean is that it will reduce poverty, benefit local communities and reduce social exclusion. Those are not just more meaningless words; they are proven in empirical evidence. That is the consequence of maximising benefit uptake and having a good customer journey through the benefits system. It improves the quality of decision-making, so there will be fewer complaints to our offices about what is going on in the various offices, and it helps clients avoid stressful crisis interviews. One estimate in a paper from the citizens advice bureau — I think that it is the citizens advice bureau in Britain and Northern Ireland, not just here in Northern Ireland — is that £1 invested in welfare advice has £8-80 potential savings to the state. You can imagine that, in terms of health, mental support and all the rest of it, that is the consequence of independent advice and assistance.

As I indicated yesterday to Mr Beggs in an intervention, we are already showing some good authority in that regard. Our own Chamber legislated in the Housing (Amendment)

Act (Northern Ireland) 2010 — I think that I put that through the House myself — that every person in Northern Ireland has the right to access free advice about homelessness and preventing homelessness, so we have already opened the door on statutory advice. The door is wide open, and rightly so, when it comes to other areas of public service.

When it comes to a person being questioned about a criminal offence, they have the right to free legal advice under PACE. A person who is detained under mental health powers can access legal advice further to a European Court decision, Winterwerp v Netherlands, which is further reflected in our draft mental health capacity Bill, which contains a specific right to independent advocacy.

My argument is that, in the backdrop of where we are on welfare reform and in the foreground of what might happen on the far side of the election, whoever is elected over there, and, as you indicated earlier, talking to everybody, I will just refer in passing to the fact that Channel 4 said two weeks ago that the balance of power could come down to the SDLP MPs, and put a big logo up to advertise the fact. That was a very shrewd political commentator on 'Channel 4 News', who is very familiar with this part of the world, so, in passing, I will make that point as well. What difference will a statutory right to advice make? This is what they conclude:

"We are mindful that accessing independent advice might become increasingly difficult in the future, not least in light of the Department of Justice's proposal to remove welfare benefits from the scope of legal aid. Therefore, by making a commitment now to ... creating a statutory right to advice, the Department for Social Development would be providing an assurance to all those who may be adversely affected by welfare reform: claimants will be supported in making decisions and choices about their benefits."

I urge the Minister to consider those matters in going forward.

I will return to our amendment on the benefit cap. What we are saying, at the heart of it — and this is probably, in terms of cost and of the principle of parity, which I always said that we should stretch the limits of and then, on occasions, went unilateral in breaking in respect of not tabling regulations, although I suspect that once I was out of office, someone somewhere in the Department rectified that. I have never been able to actually clarify who failed to follow my best advice, but, in any case, the point that we are trying to make is that, in the context of London's ambitions on welfare, how that might work itself through and how that might impact on the benefit cap, caring benefits should be exempt. We know that, of all our amendments, this one might have some consequences in terms of cost, but we ask that some minds be applied to the issue that the benefit cap should not apply to child benefit or carer's allowance and benefits, care and responsibilities because we do not think that, in any circumstances, vulnerable children and adults should be at the front line of what might happen next, and that we should anticipate and legislate accordingly against all that.

I will just refer to some other amendments. My colleague Mrs Kelly spoke to amendment No 2, which is a minimum change that has a good benefit in reducing waiting day provision from seven to three days. On amendment No 28, we have had some conversations with the Minister. If he says what I anticipate he will say, we will not be inclined to move that amendment.

In terms of our opposition to clauses 61 and 63, advice has been received in the past from the Law Centre and the Northern Ireland Council for Ethnic Minorities. I can give you an example of what the concern might be. If somebody in Northern Ireland has been given permission or leave to remain and is therefore entitled to work and is working, and the leave to remain is withdrawn, they will have contributed to the state, but they may not be able to access benefits. This is one of the issues that has been raised. In circumstances where there is a contributing person who has been entitled to work, but whose circumstances change and who is then not entitled to work, but is yet to leave the state, will the welfare system under clauses 61, 62 and 63 and the benefits named therein accommodate that person to get assistance? We think that there are some issues around social security law and European requirements in that regard.

I will move to the issue of the bedroom tax. I see that Mr Wilson is still not in the Chamber. With some encouragement from people to my right, he tried to sustain an argument in the House last night that the SDLP's opposition to the bedroom tax is somehow less than fulsome and honest because we were the people who brought the bedroom tax into Northern Ireland. I will find the words that were used by Mr Wilson last night. He said:

"I noticed the pseudo-anger that we had from the SDLP on this issue."

It may be from other people.

"For example, they upbraided Sinn Féin on their refusal to sign a petition of concern on the spare-room subsidy, ignoring the fact that the spare-room subsidy was introduced into Northern Ireland by the SDLP." — [Official Report, this Bound Volume, p441, col 1].

He was, of course, referring to legislation that the House passed in 2007, the Welfare Reform Act, which addressed the issue of local housing allowance, not for people in the Housing Executive sector, not for people in the housing association sector and not for people who were getting housing support from health and social services, from a charity or from a voluntary organisation. It was from none or any of those sectors. It was in respect of the local housing allowance for the private rented sector, and there is no provision for a bedroom tax in the law that was passed in 2007.

Mr F McCann: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Attwood: I will give way in a second.

What was that law meant to do? It was to regulate the private rented sector. Why should it not be regulated? If there were landlords profiteering, especially at the height of the property market, by increasing rents disproportionately to either the quality of the property or the rental market in that area, is it not right for us to legislate to put constraints on the private rented sector?

Mr Brady: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will.

Regulating the private rented sector to the benefit of the tenant and the state and not to the benefit of profiteering landlords is not a bedroom tax. The legislation, which has been updated regularly by the Housing Executive, put down established and identified rental market areas in Northern Ireland so that there was a template against which to judge market rental for private properties in each of those areas — clearly, rental properties and prices vary depending upon the section of the Northern Ireland — with the intention of delivering affordable social rents to make it fairer or less confusing and to remove unjustified differences between areas and within areas to have a rental regime that tried to create a similar rental for similar properties in similar areas. That is not a bedroom tax by any description. I will give way.

Mr F McCann: I thank the Member for giving way. When I got up, I asked if the “Minister” would give way, but Mickey reminded me that that was a while ago. I remember the debate on the introduction of local housing allowance very well. We raised a number of issues at Committee. I think that it might have been with Margaret Ritchie at the time. We said that quite a number of people would lose out and would have to pay more. A lot of them would be in the Member’s constituency of West Belfast, in some of the more impoverished areas. It meant that people were paying more money for poor conditions and had to borrow money to make a top-up. I think that you are picking nits when you talk about the difference between a bedroom tax and what people were forced to pay extra in terms of the local housing allowance.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair)

Mr Attwood: I am surprised by that contribution because, for the last two years, we have been talking about the bedroom tax. What is the bedroom tax? It is saying to somebody in a rental property, “You have to get out of it, and, if you are staying there, you will have to pay a punitive price for so doing”. That is the bedroom tax in law, and everybody knows what that means. Regulation of a previously not properly fully regulated market when it came to private property —

Mr Brady: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will. That is a far different creature from that.

If you were so concerned that this was the precursor to the bedroom tax, which you and Sammy Wilson now, in a pseudo way, pretend that it was, why did you not petition at that time to block it? If you thought that this was going to open the door to penalties for tenants across Northern Ireland in the private, Housing Executive and housing association sectors — indeed, in every sector — why did you not petition? You were right to raise concerns. [Interruption.] Did you even come and ask anybody? Mr Wilson now says that the precursor to the property tax was in 2007. You did not need our votes in 2007; all you needed was two or three Sammy Wilsons. [Interruption.] Did you go — [Interruption.]

11.00 am

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. I ask that all remarks be directed through the Chair and that no remarks be made from a sedentary position.

Mr Attwood: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. You did not call it the bedroom tax, nor did you try to lodge a petition against it or approach Sammy Wilson, who was so concerned about this precursor to the bedroom tax that he would willingly have joined you in opposition to what Margaret Ritchie was trying to do.

Mr Brady: I thank the Member for giving way. He is trying to defend the indefensible by giving the impression that the private rented sector is regulated: it is not. We have argued from 2007 for the regulation of the private rented sector. A private landlord can charge whatever he wants. The local housing allowance meant that people at subsistence-level on benefits paid £20, £25 and £30 out of their benefit. Do not try and defend the indefensible and put it out as something it simply is not.

Mr Attwood: I will make a number of comments. I notice that the Member does not now use the words, “bedroom tax”.

Mr Brady: I never used the words, “bedroom tax”.

Mr Attwood: You and your colleagues, and colleagues across the Chamber, used the words on multiple occasions last night. There was one precious moment when Sammy Wilson gave way to Mr Brady because they were making common cause and thought that this was their moment, and they nearly felt a wee bit embarrassed. As is so often the case with Mr Wilson’s contributions, his need for theatre gets in the way of the facts.

Last night, you were willing accomplices as you tried to pretend that action was taken with caution and mindful of the risks to create a proper regulatory regime. Does the law provide that, in every set of circumstances every tenant is protected from landlord excesses, when, as in other parts of these islands, people have to rely more on the private sector because of austerity budgets, of which one is about to be passed in this Chamber?

We were told that it is the best deal possible, and yet it will see people losing their houses. Why? Because they will not get wage increases. Why? Because they will not have enough childcare support. Why? All the reasons inherent in that Budget will see people losing their homes, resulting in them being thrown to the private sector and to some of the profiteers with whom you and I would rightly disagree. Do not pretend today that what happened in 2007 was the precursor to the bedroom tax and the cause of all the profiteering that goes on in the private rented sector. [Interruption.] It is you who has the responsibility to mitigate the impact of all that on our people and to vote through a Budget that is the best deal possible.

Mr Adams says that he wants to lead an anti-austerity Government in the South after 2016. He wants to lead an anti-austerity Government. Well, he should come North and see what it is like to lead an austerity Government. We will see what the Irish people have to say.

Mr Maskey: Your party will never be in any Government.

Mr Attwood: You see, that is what happens —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Order. The Member must be heard. There should be no comments from a sedentary position.

Mr Attwood: Comments from a sedentary position are always very revealing. What is revealing about that is how people to my right now rely on a democratic mandate, which we have never taken away from the people of Ireland, to beat up on other parties. They flouted a democratic mandate for 20, 30 and 40 years. Even in the last day, they continue to flout a democratic mandate by resisting the right of legislators to bring forward amendments to Bills and hiding behind petitions of concern to ensure that the will of the majority prevails come what may. Sinn Féin should look long and hard at its purported claims to want to lead anti-austerity Governments when it leads an austerity Government in the North. It claims a democratic mandate, which is its right to do because that is the will of the people of Ireland, but it flouts democratic practice in the Chamber, as, unfortunately, was done for decades on this island at a terrible cost to so many people on this island.

Mr Maskey: It was at a cost to ourselves. You remember that.

Mr Attwood: I did not hear that one; I wish I had.

Mr Maskey: It was at a cost to ourselves. You should remember that. We paid for our democratic mandate with our lives.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to address his comments through the Chair. There should be no remarks from a sedentary position.

Mr Attwood: My party leader issued a statement yesterday saying that the party to my right was rattled. When people hear — hopefully, it will be recorded in Hansard — that a member of Sinn Féin has said what he has just said about paying for their lives for a democratic mandate —

Mr F McCann: Paying with their lives.

Mr Attwood: With their lives. I recognise that. I am not somebody who denies the pain and grief of people in the republican family. I acknowledge that, as victims and survivors, they require support. I will finish this point very quickly. People on this island paid a hugely disproportionate price for those who took up arms and may have lost their lives when there was a democratic alternative and a mandate for democratic change. Violence was resisted in election after election by the people of the island. There was a constitutional alternative. The violence succeeded only in dividing our people more and more.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to come back to the amendments rather than addressing remarks that were made from a sedentary position.

Mr Attwood: The issue that I was going to talk about was the bedroom tax. It is not too late. Sinn Féin signed the petition of concern about the bedroom tax —

Mrs D Kelly: It did not.

Mr Attwood: It signed it way back.

Mrs D Kelly: It did not.

Mr Attwood: Sorry; it got that wrong as well.

Mr McCartney: Who is speaking here?

Mr Attwood: I was getting guidance. Anyway, it is not too late to sign the petition of concern. If you go out that Door, turn right and turn right again, there is an office called the Business Office. In there, a petition of concern is waiting. [Interruption.] You can sign it as well, Minister, if you are so inclined. A petition of concern would mean that that issue could be more conclusively addressed today. Why should it be done? London knows that the bedroom tax, a bit like universal credit, is dying a slow but painful death. It is painful for the people who suffer from it. It has cost too much. It has not had the outcome that London intended. It will be abandoned sooner or later. Labour has already said that. The Liberal Democrats are jumping ship, and the Tories know that the bedroom tax is not long for this world. We encourage people, at this late stage, to send out that message to London and to our people and to honour the words of people in the Ard Fheis and in statement after statement that the bedroom tax is not going to exist in practice or law in this part of the world.

I also want to comment on the claim that there is a four-party deal and a five-party deal. Last night, Mr Brady said that he had a document, and he was waving it. There were certainly documents in the talks at Stormont, but no document was signed off on until the five parties moved to that conclusion. I have checked because I was mystified by what was being claimed.

Mr F McCann: You did not need to check; you were there.

Mr Attwood: I checked with other parties. Yes, I was there.

Mr F McCann: You know what we are talking about.

Mr Attwood: I do not know what you are talking about, and nor do other parties in the Chamber. I do not understand what this document is. Documents were produced, discussed and interrogated, and options A, B, C and C+ for mitigation were looked at and so forth. I recall that, during one session on, I think, 17 December, our party said that, if there was a mitigation package of up to £100 million, we were prepared to look at it. We were raising the issue of the welfare cap, which I want to raise with the Minister in a moment. We began to flag up the point that I made earlier, which is whether London's practices on welfare of waving a stick and imposing penalties will be replicated when it comes to corporation tax.

Mr Brady: I thank the Member for giving way. When I raised the subject last night, you seemed to be very reluctant when you were given the opportunity to rebuff what I had said. You seem to have plenty of knowledge now and said that you were there. Did you not remember it from last night, or did it take you all night to think about what was actually happening?

Mr Attwood: To Mr Brady's embarrassment, Hansard will confirm that my colleagues the Minister of the Environment and the deputy leader of the SDLP asked you on a number of occasions to give way, but you declined. Then, all of a sudden, you gave way to your partner in crime — I am sorry; I will withdraw that remark because it might be inappropriate — your partner in petitions on the first occasion that he asked you to do so. Yet, when Mr Durkan and Mrs Kelly asked, you declined. I ask Members to reflect on any and all of that.

Is there another amendment that I want to speak to? Give me a second, please. I do not think there is, so I will conclude my remarks because I have probably gone on longer than I had anticipated.

I remind the Minister of the points in my opening remarks about naming in the Bill victims and survivors, independent advice and assistance and where we might go with the benefit cap and so on. As I said, I have a question for the Minister about the welfare cap. This became a major matter of discussion at the Stormont negotiations: was there some flexibility that London was giving to us with our notional welfare cap that might accommodate more flexibilities on the administration of universal credit, if it ever ends up being administered over here? You know my view on that. My question to the Minister is this: is there some indication of flexibility on the notional welfare cap that might enable things to be done below that notional threshold in a way that mitigates the impact of welfare reform beyond anything that is named in any documents that came out of the Stormont negotiations, including the five-party understanding? Is there anything in that regard?

I will conclude with this remark; I have probably referred to it in the House. When I was the Minister for Social Development, the then Minister for Employment and Learning, Lord Empey, and I had a meeting with Chris Grayling, who is now the Justice Secretary in London but was then a junior Minister in DWP. From what I understand, Mr Grayling is one of the more dogmatic of the Tory high command. He had a conversation with us that should echo in the ears of everybody in the Chamber when it comes to the bedroom tax. The conversation went like this: he said that, because of the recession, it was inevitable that people were losing their houses. People who had a big mortgage and lost their job had to give up their house. He said — this is nearly a quotation — that it was not fair that somebody living next door in a house of the same size and getting housing support should be allowed to live there, if the other person had lost their home. Think about that: because somebody suffers difficulty to the point of losing their home, the person next door should lose their home as well. I remember saying to him that, in my view, that indicated false values and a false approach to dealing with people in housing need or maintaining them in their accommodation. To be fair and accurate, he looked somewhat crestfallen and embarrassed, because in that moment the mask had slipped and the dogma of London on the bedroom tax was clear for all to see. It is not about what they claim it is about; at its heart, it is that they will penalise the social tenant because the private tenant falls on hard times.

Mr Lyttle: My Alliance Party colleague Stewart Dickson is setting out the general Alliance Party position on the Welfare Reform Bill. I accept that a rationale is being made for opposing amendments for which Members have been unable to provide costings at this stage of the Bill. I take the opportunity to speak to the amendments concerned with ensuring access to independent advice services.

It is my experience that independent advice services provide vital assistance to the Northern Ireland Executive to ensure that people in our community receive the social security assistance to which they are fully entitled. That means people in work, people out of work and some of the most vulnerable in our community. Those funds help people to access financial and social benefits for themselves and for the benefit of our wider community. They also help to deliver the Minister for Social Development's vision that every individual and household across Northern Ireland should receive all the social security benefits to which they and their families are entitled. The Child Poverty Alliance, which is an umbrella group of organisations such as Children in Northern Ireland, Save the Children, the Children's Law Centre, Queen's University and the University of Ulster, stated clearly in a recent report, 'Beneath the Surface: Child Poverty in Northern Ireland', that:

"The impact of independent advice services to families during these times cannot be overestimated."

We have heard from Mr Attwood how CAB figures from Great Britain show that, for every £1 invested in welfare advice, around £8.80 in potential savings are made to the state. I firmly believe that the Department needs to ensure that the advice sector is adequately resourced to provide the advice needed by people in our community. Some ask why that advice needs to be independent. Of course, the Social Security Agency does extremely important work. It has existing targets for benefit uptake, and it might be useful if the Minister advised the House today how he thinks the Social Security Agency is doing on that.

Independent advice is also crucial, and independent advice organisations are at the heart of our communities, which they serve. They can, at times, be more accessible than statutory agencies, and people can be more at ease in that location, leading to efficient assistance on entitlements. They can, at times, have more open conversations. The adviser is therefore better able to assess the claimant's entitlement and advise on the most appropriate course of action. The independent advice sector therefore complements the statutory services.

Whilst the Minister for Social Development has stated that the advice sector plays a vital role in supporting people through the changes arising from welfare reforms, I am increasingly hearing serious concerns from advice organisations that accessing independent advice might become increasingly difficult. I hear that message clearly in my constituency of East Belfast from the East Belfast Independent Advice Centre, which provides a vital service in our community. They provide drop-in advice clinics at the East Belfast Network Centre and outreach advice clinics in local primary schools, libraries and community centres; telephone advice; home visit services; and volunteer opportunities for local people, offering accredited training and work experience. They also offer specialist services in representation at social security tribunals and specialist advice on debt. They have therefore achieved significant outcomes on an annual basis. In the last year, they assisted the community in claiming around £2.8 million in social security assistance. They have assisted with around £3.3 million of debt arrears, dealt with somewhere in the region of 15,000 queries for local people and represented around 142 people at social security appeal tribunals. They have also engaged in an extremely beneficial project for east Belfast: the Community Advocacy Skills Training project. That advised around 20,000 people and assisted the community to access over £4.9 million in statutory entitlement to assistance. As well as achieving those quantitative outcomes, the independent qualitative evaluation report completed in 2013, the launch of which, I believe, the First Minister supported, found that the project had a positive impact on other outcomes, such as improved mental health, prevented family breakdown and tackled economic inactivity in our community. It also increased skills in our community and improved, therefore, the overall advice provision across the constituency.

The demand for these services is only likely to increase in the near future. Between the last two quarters of 2014, the number of people whom the service assisted increased by around 25%. In December alone, the organisation made 53 referrals to food banks, and it made 18 in January. There is a concern that welfare reform will see a spike in demand for those services. Modelling by the Social Security Agency showed that 50% of those claiming DLA could be impacted adversely by the move to PIP. I understand that there are around 9,500 people in receipt of DLA in East Belfast.

The Minister has said that there will be a package of mitigations, including hardship funds. People will need assistance to access those funds. Evidence from Scotland has shown that, without assistance, people struggle to access such emergency provision. Therefore, the independent advice centres providing a vital service to people in work and out of work and some of the most vulnerable people in our community need all the help they can get. They prevent homelessness; they tackle mental and physical ill health; and they keep families together as well as encouraging education and employment in our communities. That has benefits not just for the individual but for the whole community. Yet, it is my understanding that the East Belfast Independent Advice Centre, for example, receives around £40,000 per year from the Department for Social Development and £30,000 per year from Belfast City Council — £70,000 of public funds. We heard that, in total, it is estimated that around £4.5 million to £5 million goes into the advice sector, so it is startling that an organisation that achieves the outcomes for the wider community that it does receives only around £70,000 in public funds to do so. With those limited funds, that organisation and organisations like it generate millions of pounds each year in additional financial assistance for those most in need in our community. The evidence suggests that it is a sound use of public funds to invest in these services. I ask the Minister for Social Development how, in lieu of this statutory duty, he will ensure that our advice services have the funding that they need to achieve the outcomes that they are capable of and to which our people and our community are fully entitled.

I would also like to add that it is on the record that the Alliance Party MP for East Belfast, Naomi Long, voted against the benefits cap and the bedroom tax at Westminster for very good reasons. Indeed, there was cross-party opposition to the bedroom tax. We have heard that the hard-earned agreement between the UK Government and the Northern Ireland Executive will set out how that opposition will be implemented and realised in Northern Ireland through the mitigation funds. I ask the Minister to make clear in his comments how exactly that will be achieved. I also ask the Minister to make it clear how victims and survivors in our community and, indeed, the Commission for Victims and Survivors will be given due regard in relation to welfare reform. It is my understanding that there are legislative obligations already in place to ensure that that will be the case, but it is important that he makes that clear in his comments today.

Mr Agnew: I thought that my approach to the Bill, with my amendments, was clear from my speech yesterday, but I feel that I need to make it clearer, given some of the criticism of the amendments that I have tabled. There are different ways to approach the Bill, and each is legitimate. We should then argue the approach that each party has taken. The Ulster Unionist Party has taken the approach that it would amend the Bill but only where it deems that there are no costs, although Mr Wilson highlighted his belief that there were indeed costs to that party's amendments. However, what it sought to do with each of my amendments was criticise them because there were costs.

I make no apology for the fact that there are costs to my amendments for the simple fact that the two major signatories to the Stormont House Agreement on either side of the House have given commitments that no one will be worse off under the Bill. With my amendments I have sought to put it in legislation that no one will be worse off under the Bill or that, at worst, there will be mitigation of the impacts where I believe that people will be worse off. When I am asked where the money comes from, I say the top-up payment. I say that not in a glib way but because I have been given assurances by the Minister, his Department and those on the other side of the House that it is sufficient to maintain the payments that people already receive.

My amendments are largely to ensure that people continue to receive the payments that they receive, albeit, in some cases, through a different mechanism such as universal credit as opposed to existing benefits. In some cases, they do not even go that far and not as far as I would like — I will talk about the ESA, for example — but would extend the provision that exists for a temporary period.

I have not sought to say that the benefits system should be more generous, although, of course, I would love to be able to say that. I have taken a responsible approach, and I have said that if we are to have the top-up and are committed to ensuring that no one will be worse off, let us put it in the Bill and give that guarantee. It is one thing to say it, but it is another to do it.

Whilst we have heard a lot about the Stormont House Agreement and how no one will be worse off, we have not been given the details as to how. There has been some suggestion that the Stormont Castle agreement set out the how: where the money will go and what that will look like. Some commitments have been made to publish that, but I have yet to see it. I am debating the Welfare Reform Bill today, and I go forward on the basis of protecting those who, it would appear, will lose out under the Bill if the assurances that they have been given are not met.

I want to make it clear from the outset that that is the approach that I have taken. I believe that it is the right approach. I accept that other parties have taken a different approach. Some have tabled no amendments; some have tabled amendments that, they believe, will not have a cost; and others, like me, have tabled amendments that will have a cost. However, we have a top-up fund for a reason, and those are some of the areas in which, I believe, it should be used.

I now come to the bedroom tax and my proposal to oppose clause 69; to do what I have consistently said that I would do and seek to vote down the bedroom tax. Undoubtedly, there have been some mixed signals about the bedroom tax. I know that the Minister and others were at pains yesterday to point out that commitments have been given on the bedroom tax, and that would seem to suggest that there is a consensus that it was a bad idea. For that reason, I will not rehearse all the arguments. I certainly believe that it is a bad idea, and its application has been shown to be disastrous in GB. I believe that it was ill-conceived from the very start and that the very principles of the bedroom tax are wrong. As Mr Attwood alluded to, it was about punishing people who rely on support from the state. It was a punishment and, in my view, was never, in any way, about making things better.

We have been told about the flexibilities that have been agreed with the Government; the flexibilities that were negotiated two years ago or something to that extent. We have agreed it with the Government, so why can we not agree to put it into legislation? If we have that flexibility, why is it not in the Bill? It is not that I doubt the sincerity of the Minister when he says that the commitment is there or that of any other parties that have been privy to that agreement, but I fail to understand why we cannot give the security of putting it in legislation — or, to be more accurate, removing it from legislation.

Some of the clues were given. It would seem that it is a five-year deferral. It is not about it being that, as has been said, the bedroom tax is wrong in principle. It is about us having some practical problems with it — we do not have the housing stock or the one-bedroom houses. We have asked for five years to get a greater provision of one-bedroom houses, and we will then implement the bedroom tax. I am sorry to say this to Sinn Féin, but if that is what they signed up for, it is not what they committed to. Mr Maskey alluded to the previous petition of concern that three parties were going to sign and that would have stopped the bedroom tax. What we are being presented with is a five-year deferral. It is not the ending of the bedroom tax in Northern Ireland, but a deferral so that we can build more houses.

I have an example in my constituency. I have constituents who have been campaigning for years for multi-element improvements to their Housing Executive bungalows. Due to various reasons, which I will not go into, around the Housing Executive —

Mr Maskey: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. I just want to make sure that we are all on the same wavelength. We stated very clearly — our party and others, and you — from the outset that we were opposed to the bedroom tax. Our principle in all this is that we are opposed to people having to pay the bedroom tax. Yes, we want to abolish that tax and see it gone. We do not want to have it on any legislative or statutory basis, but we ended up with a five-party agreement.

Other Members have stood in this Chamber, lauding the good intentions and goodwill of Lord Freud, for example. I made it very clear, having met Lord Freud, that he basically said to all of us, “I feel your pain. I know your circumstances in the North are different. I know that there are worse levels of unemployment. I know that there are worse levels of sickness, including mental ill health, not only related to the conflict, but, obviously, that plays a big part.” He also repeated that he knows about the difficulties with the stresses in housing because we have a lot of segregated housing areas, and so on. However, at the end of the day, he felt our pain but said that we would have to pay for anything that we wanted to do differently, and that is what we are doing.

Whether we like the legislation or not — people all have their views, and so do we — what we have at this time is an agreement for the next number of years under which no one will have to pay the burden of that bedroom tax. That, I think, is one of the most important messages that should come from this Chamber yesterday and today. What we have is the result of a five-party agreement. We tried to extract money from the British Government, which had no intention of ever giving us any money. Therefore, we had to make choices. You are prepared to make that choice; all the parties around this Chamber have been prepared to make the choice that those who would have suffered the burden of a bedroom tax will not now have to do so. I think that that is a good-news story, rather than people having to squabble in what is really a party-political argument or political point-scoring. That is regrettable because this is a better deal for people. People out there who are suffering through wondering whether they are going to have to pay additional rent or move out of their house now know as a result of this five-party agreement that they will not have to suffer that.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I remind Members that interventions are to be short.

Mr Agnew: Thank you, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I will let Ms Kelly in in a second. To sum up Mr Maskey's point; are we better off with a five-year deferral than where we started? Yes, I accept that. Is it what was promised: to ensure that the bedroom tax did not apply in Northern Ireland? No, because, right now, the Department for Social Development is ensuring that more one-bedroom houses are being built. It would not be doing that were it not for the intention to introduce the bedroom tax at a later stage.

Mr Storey: Absolute nonsense.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for letting me in. Does he agree with me about this commitment and statement? I quote directly from Mickey Brady, who said on 30 July 2013:

“Martin McGuinness clearly stated that if the Bedroom Tax is brought before the Assembly, Sinn Féin will move to block its introduction in the North.”

What we have today falls far short of that.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for her intervention. Mr Storey said from a sedentary position that this is not what is happening in DSD.

Mr Humphrey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: I will in a second. I will give an example from my constituency. I started this point before the interventions and I would like to get through it.

Constituents required multi-element improvements to their bungalows. For various historical reasons, the Housing Executive could not do that. They have now been transferred to Oaklee Housing. They were promised two-bedroom refurbishments. Then, the bedroom tax came in in GB and they were told that they were getting one-bedroom bungalows. To be honest, the state of the bungalows that they were living in was so bad that they were grateful for anything, because they had waited for years while political wrangling around the funding of new builds, refurbishments etc was decided in this place, and they were left with the consequences. The outcome is that their bungalows are now to have one bedroom rather than two because we are preparing for the implementation of the bedroom tax. I give way to Mr Humphrey.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Member for giving way; I appreciate it. In terms of the point that the Member finished before he sat down, does he really believe it? Did he not listen to the debate yesterday at all? He heard about the concessions that Minister McCausland got from the mainland Department, the concessions built on and secured by the current Minister, and yet he comes off with a statement like that. It is about getting a mix. I have had constituents come into my office who want one-bedroom bungalows. I have to say to the Member that there is not a plot under every bed, as he seems to think.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for his intervention. Do I genuinely believe what I am saying? I absolutely do, because the policy was always for three- and two-bedroom build, because that is what met the needs, and that policy changed when the bedroom tax came in in GB. I have heard no other rationale for it. I do not believe for a second that it was coincidental that it kick-started when the bedroom tax was coming into place. I hear about the concessions, and Mr Maskey referred to the costs. The commitment, by taking the bedroom tax out of this Bill, is not just saying "We will not have it for the five-year period", which we have been told is the concession but saying that "Northern Ireland has decided that it will not have it at all."

Mr F McCann: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: I will.

Mr F McCann: I think that there are a couple of things in what you said. Maybe what you should do is go and listen to a replay of this debate. People have been at pains to point out, yesterday and today, that the whole institutions were in danger of collapse. Are you saying that that would have been much more beneficial than coming to an agreement that protects people, when we could have faced the full implementation of the Welfare Reform Act 2012?

I used to give Mrs Kelly credit for a bit of wit, but what Martin McGuinness said in June and today are two completely different things. They have negotiated.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to addresses his remarks through the Chair.

Mr F McCann: Pardon? Sorry, Chair. At that time, Martin McGuinness said what we all believed, but negotiations took place at the time which made life better for people in this place.

Mr Agnew: Principal Deputy Speaker, I really am confused. On the one hand, I am told that, had Sinn Féin stuck to its commitment on the bedroom tax, these institutions would have collapsed; on the other, that the deal ensures that the bedroom tax will not come into Northern Ireland. I am not sure which is true, but —

Mr Maskey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: I will, because I seek clarity from the Member.

Mr Maskey: I thank the Member, and the Principal Deputy Speaker for his indulgence. This is turning into a debate between you and Sinn Féin which we should probably have outside or somewhere else. You should be dealing with the Bill that is in front of us today, and the mitigation measures that have been agreed by all the parties. All the parties have decided that we will subsidise the bedroom tax to the point where no one who would fall foul of a bedroom tax, as a result of the London-based legislation, will have to pay that burden. As I have said before, I think it is a good thing.

You should not mistake the fact that people need to have one-bedroom accommodation. You will know that, if you check your figures. There are Ministers around here who can verify it. As we speak, there is a far greater demand for one-bedroom accommodation which cannot and will not be met by this Executive, or by the Housing Executive for that matter. There is a great demand for that type of accommodation, irrespective of the bedroom tax. You need to understand that. If you go through every single constituency, you will see that housing associations, the DSD and the Housing Executive are trying to get one-bedroom accommodation units built, in the whole range of constituencies, which are falling foul of objection after objection.

Just to make it very clear, our party is involved in no conspiracy to dicky-up the figures or force people into one-bedroom accommodation. I can tell you that — like yourself, I am sure — I represent a lot of single people who are looking for one-bedroom accommodation. It has nothing to do with housing benefit because they will be paying the rent themselves. They will not be in receipt of any benefit, so do not mix up the two.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for his intervention. I will try to move on from this point.

I am still unclear whether we are not going to have a bedroom tax in Northern Ireland or whether we are not going to have it for five years. With regard to the agreement to fund it, given that we have had no extra money from the UK Government, it is our decision how we spend our Budget, and we can decide whether that is something that we want to do for five years or do in the long term. Yes, we will have to fund it, but we are funding it out of our Budget already. There is no additional money coming from the Treasury. We have some loans to make people redundant, we have been allowed to move some money around, but the whole nonsense of a £2 billion fund was just that: absolute nonsense.

Mr Humphrey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: I will in a second.

Money has been moved around. There is no additional money for this provision or anything else for that matter. It comes out of our block grant. As I said, money is being moved around and loans have been given, but the money is not additional —

Mr F McCann: Is that your objection?

Mr Agnew: It is not my objection at all. I am quite happy that we fund this, but my point is that we decide how we spend our money. We have agreement from the Treasury; is it an agreement for five years on the bedroom tax, or is it the case that we are choosing to fund this for five years out of our block grant? I assumed that it was the latter; that seems to be the proposal in Budget.

Mr Humphrey: I thank the Member for giving way again. Over the last couple of days, the Member has expressed his disquiet over the Stormont House/Stormont Castle agreements and so on in terms of what he sees is the lack of information and detail that he has as a party that was not signatory to it. I appreciate that, and the First Minister conceded that yesterday. Would the Member have preferred the institutions here in Northern Ireland to have collapsed, because that is how we would have ensured that the Tory cuts would have been imposed? That is how we would have ensured that the bedroom tax would have been imposed, and we would have had no control over that and no opportunity to alleviate that with the concessions that the DUP Ministers have negotiated. Does the Member accept that point?

Mr Agnew: What I would say is that we need to be honest with people. When people are being told that we got £2 billion in extra money, we need to make it clear that that is not true. We need to be honest about what the agreement was and what it did. Part of the agreement said that the Treasury kindly, in its benevolence, said that you can take hundreds of millions of pounds from your infrastructure capital and you can transfer it to resource to make people redundant. It kindly let us do that. That is not extra money. That is money that we would have spent potentially on schools, roads and infrastructure. It was money that would have created employment in Northern Ireland, and we have moved it to a fund. The Treasury said, “We will let you do this on the condition that you use it to cut the size of your public sector” — a redundancy pot that will see 20,000 people added to the unemployment list over four years. That is what was in the Stormont House Agreement. That is honest. I argued all along that any agreement should have public input, and that never happened. It is up to people to decide whether that is a good deal or a bad deal, but we should be clear as to what the deal was. That is exactly what it was, and no one has disputed that, because they cannot dispute it.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way.

Mr Agnew: Yes.

Mr Allister: I understand the Member’s point that we are taking money from capital to fund the exit scheme. I understand that entirely, but are we not doing exactly the same in order to nullify welfare reform? Are we not passing a Welfare Reform Bill that, on the face of it, brings in reforms and then, with the other hand, we are dipping into the block grant — the very money for resource in schools and hospitals — to negate the welfare reform and make it of no effect other than to reduce the amount of money that we have for schools and hospitals? That seems to be something that the Member is happy with. Is that correct?

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for his intervention. I think that it is fair to say that we have very differing politics. I believe that spending public money on protecting the most vulnerable in our society is something worth doing, and I make no apology for saying that that should come out of our block grant and that that should come out of public funds. For me, the very essence of why we pay our taxes is to ensure that the most vulnerable in our society are protected and to ensure that when the economy collapses — while I would love to blame politicians in Northern Ireland, it was to a large extent through no fault of our own here — that people out of work have a safety net and can provide for themselves and their families, albeit at a very basic level, to ensure that they are not in destitution. We have seen the growth of food banks over the UK, so it is to ensure that the state provides rather than people having to rely on churches and charities providing handouts. That is why I pay my taxes.

“Taxes” is a big, ugly word, and we are told that we should reduce them all the time. We are told to lower taxes, and everything will be better, but we pay taxes for a reason. We pay taxes because we believe in society. We believe that we are better off collectively when we put money into a central pot to provide for all of us should we need it, whether for health, education or welfare. I believe in public services; I do not believe in rebalancing the economy, which is a nice slogan for cutting the public sector to shreds. I thank you for your comments, Mr Allister. I know that you will disagree with me, but you gave me an opportunity to make it very clear where I stand on this issue.

I move on to another area of housing, which is covered in amendment No 7. There has been some misunderstanding about what amendment No 7 does or what its rationale is. It is about the four-week transition payment for people who move off benefits and go into work. I have plenty of experience of the private rented sector. I have experience of housing benefit and know how these things work. I will lay it out as clearly as I can, because I feel that there were misunderstandings in some comments. When you are on housing benefit, your rent is paid in arrears at the end of the month for the month that has just passed. However, most private landlords expect rent to be paid up front. As Members will be aware, most employers do not pay in advance but after someone has worked for a month.

Amendment No 7 seeks to protect people who have been paying their rent through housing benefit and have sought work, as we want them to. The amendment is about not only ensuring that work pays but ensuring that people who might have been living on a very basic income on benefits and are unlikely to have savings do not fall into the trap of getting a job and having their housing benefit immediately stopped, with a landlord demanding rent. Who loses in that situation? The person who loses is the individual who has sought work, as we supposedly want them to do. That person gets a job and loses. Indeed, the landlord loses out because he or she cannot claim rent and is now in a position of having to penalise the person, potentially asking him or her to move out for breach of contract if he or she fails to pay the rent, or they will take a hit. One of those parties will lose out because someone has done what we want them to do and got a job. It is a reasonable proposal to allow a transition payment for the period that the person is working but not receiving income. Others may disagree, but, if they disagree, at least they understand it first.

Amendment No 6 is about the shared accommodation rate for young people. I think that the very premise of the proposal in the Bill is discriminatory. It treats young people differently, and the definition of young person has gone up to the age of 34. I turned 35 last year. I know that my young colleague Mr Lyttle is still 34. Sorry, Chris; I hope that is not personal information.

I will use myself as an example and go back to before my last birthday, when I was still 34. I had a job, I had two children, I had a partner and I had a house. These institutions were under threat, and there was the potential that I could lose my job. There was the potential that me losing my job, and the stress that that would create in my family, would put strain on my relationship and it might have broken down. So, I would have been unemployed, single, and have had two kids; and I would have been told, first by the Tory Government where this has come from, but now by this Northern Ireland Executive that proposes to pass the legislation, that, “We will only support you to live in shared accommodation, where you might not be able to bring your children and which might be completely unsuitable to your needs. We are immediately going to punish you for losing your job and for the breakdown in your relationship — because those were not bad enough — and we really do want to kick you when you are down”.

My amendment proposes not to scrap that proposal, although I would like to do so. It is a reasonable amendment, which gives a person one year to find a new job or a new home. Do not punish them from the day and hour they lose their job or when their relationship breaks down. I think this is reasonable. It would be the sign of a Government that understand the needs of people who find themselves unemployed. It would say that the Assembly does not follow the rationale of the Tory welfare cuts, which is to punish people for being unemployed. It would recognise the real-life stories of why people find themselves in those circumstances.

Amendment No 27, and, indeed, my opposition to clause 54, is around the youth provision of employment support allowance (ESA). As I understand it, this is a payment that is received by a very small number of disabled young people. It recognises that, due to age, contributory ESA would not be available to them other than for the provisions in our current welfare legislation. My proposal is that those should continue into the new legislation. My understanding is, and the Minister can clarify this, that the commitment is that those people will not lose out under the current proposals. My proposal, as it has been consistently, is to put that protection in the Bill, but I wait to hear the Minister's proposals in relation to the youth payment of ESA.

Amendment No 5 is around the disability addition, and, again, it comes back to putting the commitment in the Bill that no one will be worse off. As things stand, there would be a reduction in universal credit of £26 per week for families who receive the disability addition. Again, if we are committed to making sure that no one is worse off, we should give a commitment to ensure that the disability addition remains part of universal credit. My proposal is that it should be in the Bill. I wait to hear if the Minister, through the supplementary payments, is committed to ensuring that the families affected will not lose out.

12.00 noon

Amendment No 73 relates to the self-employed and the assumption made in benefit calculations that they receive minimum income. Again, the point was made yesterday evening about wanting to make work pay and incentivising people to work. I do not believe that people who set up their own business really believe, “I am only doing this because I cannot get enough benefits, and if you would just give me more benefits, I would not bother with this whole business stuff; it is quite hard”. I think that people who set up their own business are driven, but when the economy takes a downturn and they cannot receive a minimum income, never mind a living wage, from their business, I think that it is right that we do a proper assessment of need, rather than what we somehow think should be the case, which is that if you have a business, you should be earning a minimum income. It is not always the reality, and I think that we should protect those in small businesses and encourage them. When they are doing well, they should come off benefits, and an assessment should be done on that basis, but when things are not going so well, we should not simply say, “Well, we are not going to meet your needs because you are a business person, and we do not want you to become too reliant on benefits”, as was suggested yesterday. I do not believe that that is the ambition of anyone who establishes a business.

Amendment No 75, which is the last of the Green Party amendments, is around the full conditionality for work for EU nationals. I have been provided with evidence, I believe that the Committee has been provided with evidence, and I have no doubt that the Minister has been provided with evidence that this clause, as currently drafted, should it be unamended, would breach EU rules. If the Minister has counter-evidence, I would be interested to hear it, but the clause leaves us open to a situation in which two workers employed in the same job in the same company — one from Northern Ireland or elsewhere in the UK and one from outside the UK but still within the European Economic Area (EEA) — become unemployed at the same time, and we treat one differently from the other. It is a bit like what I said about young people in relation to shared accommodation. That is legislating for discrimination. I do not accept that as how I want to see our society.

I have to say that I am disappointed, as this amendment was originally proposed by Anna Lo, who probably could have spoken with much more conviction on this issue, given her experiences of working with ethnic minorities in Northern Ireland. I am disappointed that Alliance has withdrawn from its amendment. I do not believe that it would breach anything that I understand about the Stormont House Agreement, in that it would not incur significant cost, but part of that deal was that it appears that no amendment should be made. As I said, I think that it is regrettable in this case, because there is clearly a minority fighting this cause for minorities. I stand to do that, I believe, with the support of the SDLP, and I welcome that.

I have a few final points. I note with a wry smile the establishment of the discretionary support commissioner. The wry smile is because the party opposite is the champion of the bonfire of the quangos in Northern Ireland, but we see the creation of a new commissioner. I think that it is necessary. I personally believe that commissions and, indeed, commissioners are necessary, and I commend the work of the Children's Commissioner, the Human Rights Commission and the Equality Commission, unlike those opposite, but the next time that they stand up here and make a blanket dismissal of commissions, I will remind them that today they sought to establish the discretionary support commissioner.

Finally, amendment No 42 is on the benefit cap. There are two possibilities on the benefit cap. First, you either believe that benefits are paid on the basis of need. If you do, by proposing a benefit cap, you believe that we are overestimating the need, which is why some people go above that cap. In that case, you need to re-evaluate the whole benefits system. Or secondly, you disagree with the fundamental principle of benefits, which is to meet citizens' basic needs. If that is the case, I wonder why you support welfare at all. I find it hard to understand the rationale of the benefits cap other than that it is a kind of cheap political defence of the welfare system that says, “We cannot stand up and defend it passionately and with conviction, so we will put this artificial cap on, regardless of families' needs, and we will disadvantage people so that we face down some pressure”. I would not even say that it is public pressure; I would say that it is media pressure.

If you believe in the principle of benefits based on need, I think that the benefits cap is regrettable. I welcome the SDLP's amendment to the clause.

Mr Storey: We will return to the second group of amendments. I trust that we will try to make some progress on this as we move forward.

During yesterday's debate, I covered how clause 4 sets out the basic conditions that must be met for entitlement to universal credit. I am grateful that the Committee Chair indicated his intention not to move the opposition to different clauses in this group. Clause 4 specifies the basic conditions for entitlement to universal credit. Clause 3 states that a claimant must meet those basic conditions, as well as the financial conditions. Therefore, should the tabled amendment to clause 4 be accepted, an amendment would also have to be made to clause 3.

As is the case with social security benefits and tax credits, the claimant will have to meet basic conditions for entitlement to universal credit. Those basic conditions are relevant to the policy and are considered compatible with EU obligations. It would be highly unusual for there to be no basic conditions for entitlement to social security benefits or tax credits, as that would make the system unworkable.

Universal credit is primarily designed to support people of working age who are living in the United Kingdom. Therefore, the purpose of clause 4 is to ensure that people between 18 years of age and the qualifying age for state pension credit who are living in Northern Ireland will receive support appropriate to their circumstances.

Specifying the conditions for entitlement avoids duplication of provision such as the support for students and the state pension credit system. It also limits universal credit to EU nationals who attest a right to reside here and are habitually resident. In addition, acceptance of the claimant commitment will ensure that appropriate work-related requirements are placed on claimants to help them into work.

On amendment No 2, I want to briefly explain what clause 6 does. While I appreciate that it can sometimes be laborious and tedious, I think that, as we work our way through these provisions, it is important to put some factual comments on the record. I have to say that, if yesterday is anything to go by, there is a lot of inaccuracy. If you were to listen to some of the comments that were made in the media this morning, you would see that a lot of people really need to take a long, hard look at some of the things that they have been saying. I will say this: at least some of them had the courtesy to the House to make the comments in the House. Some of them never appeared in the House all day yesterday.

Mr Wilson: Name them.

Mr Storey: Well, Mr McNarry. He was quite capable of going to the media and grandstanding this morning. Where was he yesterday? He never appeared in the House all day. Where is the respect for the House? Where is the respect for the legislative process? That, I think, shows the political grandstanding.

Mr McNarry: Good morning, Minister.

Mr Storey: He was probably watching his monitor, and, as a result, we have at least had one success today in that he has now appeared in the Chamber.

Clause 6 provides regulation-making powers for restrictions on entitlement to universal credit even though the basic and financial conditions are met. Regulations under this clause may also be used to remove entitlement to universal credit where it would exist for only a short period. This avoids the administrative costs of processing an award that could result in only a very small payment.

Similarly, the clause provides for an award to begin only after a specified number of days have elapsed since the date of the claim. We intend to provide for a waiting-days rule, which is a feature of existing out-of-work benefits and operates to limit administrative costs. The clause limits any waiting-day provision to a maximum of seven days. Amendment No 2 seeks to reduce this to three days. The principle behind the waiting-days policy is that benefits are not intended to provide financial support for very brief breaks in employment or brief periods of sickness. Many people come to benefits directly from employment, and it is reasonable to expect them to use prior earnings to budget for an initial period of unemployment.

Jobseeker's allowance and employment and support allowance currently have seven waiting days at the start of a claim, and the intention is to carry that practice forward into universal credit, hence the necessity for the clause. Accepting amendment No 2 would have potential financial implications for the Northern Ireland block grant, as claimants in Northern Ireland would be receiving preferential treatment compared to those in Great Britain. The impact would be difficult to justify and would create the potential for wider and significant equality issues between claimants in Northern Ireland and in Great Britain. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment No 2.

Amendment No 5 relates to clause 10, which provides for an amount to be included in the calculation of a universal credit award for claimants who are responsible for children or qualifying young people. Under the provisions outlined in the Bill as drafted, an additional amount will be paid to universal credit claimants if the dependent child or qualifying young person is disabled. This is consistent with the objectives of universal credit of simplicity and affordability. This element of universal credit will replace child tax credit as the main source of extra support for children in low-income families in and out of work, as now child benefit will remain separate.

Universal credit is designed to simplify the current benefit systems and will therefore not replicate the range of complex premiums currently paid to disabled adults and children. Money saved from abolishing these premiums will be recycled and used to target support for disabled people with the greatest need. The universal credit rate payable to severely disabled children will be higher than the current child tax credit equivalent. However, the lower rate of universal credit disabled child entitlement will be less than the lower rate of child tax credits.

Let me provide assurance to Mr Beggs, who commented on this during his contribution. Families that migrate to universal credit, and those families whose children attract the lower rate of disability element, will receive transitional protection. I am happy to say that to the Member who raised the issue.

There are other provisions within universal credit that complement the policy of simplifying matters. For example, for working parents, there is a higher earnings disregard for those in receipt of a disabled child element, and any household in receipt of disability living allowance or working tax credits will be excluded from the benefit cap. In addition, existing claimants who migrate to universal credit through a managed process will have their award protected by transitional protection. That will ensure that current benefit claimants will not receive less as a result of their move to universal credit, where circumstances remain the same.

Amendment No 5 specifies that the lower rate should be no less than two thirds of the higher rate. This amendment would seek to retain the current position under tax credits where the disabled child element equates to two thirds of the severely disabled child element.

The stated policy intent for universal credit is to create a simple, streamlined benefits system and to realign arrangements for disabled children with those of disabled adults when they reach the age of 18. This is not a savings exercise but a recognition and refocusing of existing support. Money released as a result of those adjustments will be reinvested in support for the most severely disabled people.

It goes back to my earlier point. I do not want this to become a trite comment. We can have a lot of argy-bargy about the issue. Politics, unfortunately, brings to us all that element of confrontation and the argumentative spirit that seems to be inherent in it. Let us remember that we are talking about children and adults in our community who are disabled. I say this again: let us remember that this is about real people in our communities. In the comments this morning, it was as though we wanted to fight the orange and green battle all over again and, somehow, if you happen to be on the nationalist, republican or green side, you are not entitled to anything, and if you are in the loyalist, unionist or Protestant community, you get nothing. That would be an awful simplification of what we are trying to achieve and an awful disservice. When we focus on this issue, let us try to have some humanity and some sense of the impact that this has on families with disabled children and on disabled adults.

To accept the amendment that the lower rate should be no less than two thirds of the higher rate would reduce the amount of money available for more severely disabled people.

The GB Welfare Reform Act 2012 —

Mr Attwood: Will the Member give way?

Mr Storey: Yes.

Mr Attwood: The Minister has reiterated his commitment to people, and that is accepted. I refer you to your remarks on amendment No 2, when, subject to what Hansard says, you said of claimants that it is reasonable to expect people to carry their own costs for a week before accessing jobseeker's allowance or ESA. Is it reasonable to expect somebody with a lot of children or who is on low pay to carry those costs for a week? In those circumstances, is three days not better and, in any case, would a three-day flexibility not be covered by any headroom that exists or does not exist in the overall notional Northern Ireland welfare cap?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his intervention. To clarify, I said that many people come to benefits directly from employment and that it is reasonable to expect them to use prior earnings to budget for an initial period of unemployment. The clause, as I said, limits any waiting-day provision to a maximum of seven days, and amendment No 2 seeks to reduce this to three days. I made those comments in that context. That is not in any way to minimise the concern that the Member has and has raised on a number of occasions.

Mr Attwood: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Yes.

Mr Attwood: I will press you further. A lot of people get paid in arrears. You and I get paid in arrears — I think. They have spent the money in advance of receiving it. There might not be that much money left to cover the costs for a week, especially if you are low paid and if you have family needs.

Mr Storey: Again, the Member makes a point, but we still have to ensure that, when we put in place this framework, it is practical and deliverable. It is difficult — I think that this point was made even this morning by some — to have a situation where you will, in every eventuality, cover every circumstance.

Mr Wilson: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Yes.

Mr Wilson: Most people are paid in arrears. Therefore, when people get paid at the end of the week, that is normally the money that they set aside for the next week. The argument that he is making is perfectly valid: if people are coming from employment into unemployment, they have received their last week's wages. Their last week's wages are usually what they use to finance the coming week.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for those comments. I am sure that the Member opposite will be glad to see that Mr Wilson has now graced the Chamber with his presence. I felt earlier that some Members opposite had withdrawal symptoms because Mr Wilson was not here. I am glad that he is here, and I thank him for those comments.

I will conclude on clause 10. If clause 10 is not allowed to stand part of the Bill, it would mean that we in Northern Ireland would have to consider an alternative means of providing support for children, as the Tax Credits Act 2002 will be repealed when tax credits are fully subsumed into and replaced by universal credit. That will have the effect of disadvantaging people here from obtaining support for children, including those with disabilities. Accepting the amendment would clearly breach existing parity arrangements, and it could have implications for Northern Ireland in relation to the block grant and in relation to utilising the IT system that has been designed for universal credit and is provided through DWP.

Let us remember that the whole issue, a number of months ago was, "Oh, well, we'll just dump welfare reform and go it alone". Remember the costs associated with having a separate IT system. I am glad that we have moved well on. Mr Attwood always says that somewhere lurking in the shadows of all this are the long tentacles of DWP. I remind the Member that we are part of the United Kingdom. The Mother of Parliaments is Westminster. We are United Kingdom citizens, and there is a working relationship. I am very appreciative of the working relationship that we have with DWP. On this issue, and as we roll out the introduction of the changes to our welfare system, we will be very dependent on ensuring that that relationship is as has it has been in the past, given the IT issues and the challenges of changing from one system to another. As we have said, the notion of developing and financing a stand-alone system has long since been set to the side. We know that it was not possible. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject the amendment.

Amendment Nos 6 and 7 relate to clause 11, which provides for an amount to be included for the support of housing costs in universal credit. It enables the award of universal credit to include such an amount if the claimant is liable to make payments on their home in the form of rent, mortgage costs or other housing-related costs. The wider reform agenda will see housing benefit abolished, with the rent element of it being replaced by the housing cost element of the universal credit award. Clause 11 will provide for the continuing provision of housing support for eligible claimants. Clause 11(4) provides for regulations to set out the detailed rules for calculating the amount of housing support payable. As I have indicated, two amendments have been tabled for the clause. I think that it would be helpful to Members if I first explain how I intend to deal with amendment No 6. This amendment refers to:

There are two age bands in relation to the housing costs element of universal credit; those under 25 and those under 35. A tenant living with a young person aged over 25 will have their housing costs element reduced by £68 a month. This is known as the housing cost contribution. Given that the housing costs element is reduced for those tenants living with a young person aged over 25, I shall deal with the amendment in that context. It has long been a feature of the benefits system that someone living in a claimant's home should be expected to contribute towards the rent. Under universal credit, there will be a flat-rate deduction known as a housing cost contribution of £68 a month for most adults over 25 years of age. This housing cost contribution will not apply to tenants living with an out-of-work young person or a student aged under 25. Amendment No 6, as drafted, would provide for a 52-week exemption from the use of the housing cost contribution in the situation of a person under 25 who is in work. It is considered right that the entitlement to universal credit, which is an income-related household benefit, should be reduced where there is available income.

Amendment No 7 relates to a run-on in the housing costs element of four weeks after a claimant starts employment. While the housing costs element will continue in payment for those expected to remain in prison for up to six months, it is considered that where there is available income, a run-on would not be appropriate. There would be potential cost implications for the Northern Ireland block grant if these amendments were to be accepted. It would also result in claimants in Northern Ireland being subject to preferential treatment compared with claimants in Great Britain. The impact of this would be difficult to justify and would create the potential for wider and significant equality issues. For these reasons, I urge Members to reject the proposed amendment.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Minister for giving way. He said that citizens in Northern Ireland would be subject to preferential treatment compared with claimants in Great Britain. Surely everyone who receives a supplementary payment as part of a top-up will be in a preferential situation over claimants in Great Britain.

Mr Storey: Yes, but the Member fails to understand a fundamental difference. We are paying for it; it is not affecting what we are paying for. We have made decisions about additions to ensure that we have a Northern Ireland-plus or a GB-plus model, and we are paying for that out of the block grant. Therefore, that is accepted because it does not have an impact on our AME. That is the reason. Let us remember that the first package of measures was agreed by DWP and the Government at Westminster. This package of measures has been endorsed by the Government at Westminster as the outworkings of the agreements that we secured. There needs to be that understanding. When I make those comments about differential treatment, I make them in that context. That is where we can have the justification to do what we are doing, always mindful that we have endeavoured, in these proposals and what is contained in the Bill, to ensure that we retain parity with the rest of the United Kingdom. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject the proposed amendments.

I will move on to amendment No 27. It may be helpful if I summarise exactly what clause 52 does. Employment and support allowance is currently structured into contributory and income-related benefits. If a person does not satisfy the National Insurance conditions for the contributory allowance, they can claim the income-related allowance, provided they satisfy the eligibility criteria. Clause 52 introduces a time limit for the period in which a person in the work-related activity group is entitled to receive contributory ESA.

The proposal is for that limit to be 365 days. That change supports the move towards a simplification of contributory benefits and a fairer benefits system.

12.30 pm

The rates payable are the same for contributory and income-related benefits. ESA claimed on either basis can be paid until state pension age. At present, people can qualify for unlimited contributory ESA on the basis of a small amount of National Insurance paid. However, ESA was never intended to be a benefit for the long term except for the most severely ill or disabled, for whom work is not a viable option. In these cases — for example, those in the support group — ESA will not be time-limited. It will also reinforce the fact that, for the majority, ESA is a temporary benefit, and aligns the rules for the contributory allowance more closely with contributory jobseeker's allowance.

Amendment No 27 proposes the removal of the time-limiting aspect for ESA youth claimants. I reiterate that those in the support group will not be affected by time-limiting. Time-limiting will impact only those in the work-related activity group who are temporarily unable to work because of an illness or disability. There is no objective justification for treating young people any differently from others. Equal treatment should be applied to all claimants, irrespective of age.

As the House will be all too aware, the impact of this measure raised serious concern among a number of Members. However, in accordance with the terms of the Stormont House Agreement, my Department is developing proposals for the provision of additional financial support for those claimants who will be adversely impacted by the time-limiting restriction proposed for ESA. The support will be designed to supplement their incomes as they adjust to the new arrangements. It is my intention to table an amendment at Further Consideration Stage to facilitate that additional financial support. Removing clause 52 would undoubtedly lead to further fines on the Northern Ireland block grant. For these reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment No 27.

I now move to amendment Nos 28 and 29 to clause 54. Clause 54 abolishes the special concessions that allow certain young people to qualify for contributory employment and support allowance without meeting the usual paid National Insurance contribution conditions that apply to all others. This measure applies to new claims only; existing claimants will remain on contributory ESA. However, youth claimants who are in the work-related activity group will be subject to a time limit of 365 days. Those in the support group will be unaffected, as will anyone receiving income-related ESA, whichever group they are assigned to.

The normal rules are that a person must have paid or been credited with sufficient National Insurance contributions in the tax years that are relevant to the claim in order to qualify for contributory allowance. There are special conditions for young people who are exempt from meeting the usual paid National Insurance conditions. These provide that a person aged 16 to 19, or under 25 in certain prescribed circumstances, who is not in full-time education and has had limited capability for work for 196 consecutive days will be entitled to contributory ESA. Clause 54 repeals these provisions of the Welfare Reform Act (Northern Ireland) 2007 and prevents new claims for contributory allowance being made on the specific grounds of youth from the date the clause comes into operation. After that, people who would have benefited from the concession will be required to meet the usual contribution conditions that apply to all contributory ESA claims.

As I previously stated, there is no objective justification for treating young people any differently. No other age group can qualify for contributory ESA without having paid, or being treated as having paid, National Insurance contributions, nor does any other contributory benefit have similar arrangements. The vast majority of claimants who receive contributory ESA on the grounds of youth — around 90% — are expected to receive income-related ESA. Those who do not qualify for that are likely to have capital in excess of £16,000 or a partner in full-time work who may be entitled to working tax credit. This change is another step in simplifying the benefit system to facilitate the introduction of universal credit.

Clause 54 does not prevent claimants under 20 from making claims for ESA. The only change is that they will have to meet the same conditions as everyone else who applies. If they have not paid sufficient contributions, they will be assessed for income-related ESA rather than contribution-based ESA, both of which are paid at the same rate. Amendment No 28 adds the words:

Those words are not required as the claimant will qualify under the normal rules if he has paid sufficient National Insurance contributions. This clause only amends the special conditions for young people.

Amendment No 29 adds additional words to paragraph 4 of schedule 1 to the Welfare Reform Act (Northern Ireland) 2007, which would require the claimant to have limited capability for work after the assessment phase had ended. Limited capability for work is one of the conditions of entitlement a claimant must satisfy before he is eligible for an ESA award. Therefore, the additional words are unnecessary. The purpose of schedule 1 is to describe the conditions of entitlement to a contributory ESA award relating to National Insurance contributions, with the special conditions for youth being set out in paragraph 4.

The clause has also been opposed. Removing the clause would enable youth claimants to continue to be treated more beneficially than claimants of any other age, and I have already indicated that there is no objective justification for such treatment. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment Nos 28 and 29.

Clauses 61, 62 and 63 ensure that claimants can receive contributory jobseeker's allowance, contributory employment and support allowance, maternity allowance or statutory payments only if they are entitled to be in employment in the United Kingdom. There was never any policy intention for a person with no entitlement to work in the UK to receive out-of-work benefits, and this new condition of entitlement will ensure that that situation can no longer arise. It is important to protect the public purse by only paying benefits when and to whom it is appropriate to do so. I urge Members to reject the opposition to those three clauses.

Clause 69 introduces size criteria into the calculation of housing benefit for working age tenants in the social housing sector. I am well aware of all the discussion, debate and concern that there is around this particular clause. I will work my way through this and trust that this will be of benefit.

I recognise that what is proposed represents a major change for social sector tenants. However, I am also acutely aware that we, as a society, must act to reduce the spiralling costs of housing benefit and restore fairness to the system. It is manifestly unfair that the rate of housing benefit that tenants in the private rented sector receive is related to the size of dwelling the claimant needs when no restrictions are placed on those in the social housing sector. In considering how best to move forward, I have focused on balancing the need to protect people and communities from the worst aspects of the policy with the need to ensure that we make the best use of our limited social housing stock and do not implement measures that hinder, or even discourage, mobility.

Rather than removing the clause from the legislation, I have discussed with Executive colleagues if and how the discretionary housing payments budget can be further enhanced so that tenants will not be impacted until such times as the housing stock matches the need.

There are members of the Northern Ireland Executive in the House, and there is a five-party party agreement among the Executive. I say that just in case it has somehow been lost in the midst of all that has been said over the last 24 hours. The Executive have agreed to create a separate fund of £17 million per annum that will mitigate the impact of this measure by protecting existing and future tenants from any reduction in their housing benefit unless there is a significant change in their personal circumstances or they are offered suitable alternative accommodation. Officials are developing —

Mr Agnew: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Just let me conclude on this. It is important, because there was an accusation from some yesterday that there have been yet again very secret and suspicious discussions and that we are all in a big plot and plan somehow. Of course, I am the one who has to implement it. Let me be open and transparent and tell Members what has been agreed.

The Executive have agreed the fund, and officials in my Department are developing a scheme that will go to the Executive for agreement prior to public consultation. The outcomes of this consultation will form the basis for the subordinate legislation. In accordance with the terms of the Stormont House Agreement, my Department is developing its proposals for the provision of additional, enhanced DHP support for claimants who will be adversely impacted through the introduction of this measure. I advise Members that, at Further Consideration Stage, I will be bringing forward an amendment to facilitate this.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Minister for giving way. Obviously, when I discussed this issue, there was some confusion. I think that he has cleared it up, and I just want to confirm that. The policy is that a mitigation fund will be put in place until such time as the housing stock is suitable in order that we implement the bedroom tax. Is that what the Minister is saying? It is important that this matter is made clear.

Mr Storey: Let me repeat to the Member because maybe he did not hear. We have created a separate fund of £17 million per annum that will mitigate the impact of the measure by protecting existing and future tenants from any reduction in their housing benefit. There is no secret that we have to balance that against the reality, so it is unless there is a significant change in their personal circumstances or they are afforded suitable alternative accommodation. We will see that in developing the scheme, which will really be a replication of the discretionary housing payments that are in existence.

Let me come to a point that the Member made earlier. It was as though there is somehow no need for us to look at housing and single-bedroom properties in certain locations. If I look at his constituency, I see that the breakdown of applicants in housing stress in North Down is that 35% of those on the waiting list are looking for single-bedroom accommodation. There is a need. That is an issue that we will have to deal with.

If I can devote some more time to my other responsibilities, as I have been doing while waiting on getting agreement on bringing the Bill to the House, I will want to move on the issue of the long-term sustainable future of the Housing Executive. I want to address the nature of what we do and the way in which we do our business so that we can continue to build, to improve and to ensure that, as far as my responsibilities and those of my Department are concerned, we have good quality homes for people in Northern Ireland, irrespective of where they live. There will be mixed provision and not only one-, two- or three-bedroom properties. That is what we ought to be about. That is a long-term challenge and a long-term issue for the Executive.

Mr Agnew: I appreciate the Minister giving way again. I want to be clear about my objection. As far as I can tell, the Minister has laid out that there will be a discretionary payment for those who cannot find alternative suitable accommodation but who are in a house that is deemed to be greater than their needs. He has made it clear that he intends to improve the housing stock in its diversity and the number of bedrooms.

What I was trying to make clear in my submission was that there are those who, like the Minister, subscribe to the policy that if there is smaller accommodation for a person and their needs change, they should move. However, there are others who said that they disagreed with that policy, yet they have signed up to it. It is them who I am trying to expose when I seek to make it clear that this is essentially a phased introduction of the bedroom tax. That is what it is; plain and simple. It is a phased introduction, but it is still being introduced in Northern Ireland.

Mr Storey: The Member should ask others about that and not the Minister. There is another issue. One of the practical reasons why we need to retain clause 69 is so that the calculation can be made when we come to implement the scheme. If clause 69 was not in the Bill, I would have a huge difficulties in making that calculation.

Let us dispense with the myth that, somehow, we are, in some clandestine way, trying to introduce the bedroom tax. There are practical considerations. I know that the Member maybe struggles to get his head around the issue, but dealing with a five-party mandatory coalition ain't easy. There are also challenges and difficulties in trying to transcribe legislation from the House of Commons into Northern Ireland legislation. There are also the practical implications of how you want to get to a certain point. Sometimes, it is easier to allow something to remain in the primary legislation. That will allow us to work out the calculation for how we would use or pay for the fund that we will set out to the Executive and the House over the next number of weeks. For those reasons —

Mr Attwood: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: I will, but I want to make some progress. I will give way to the Member if he is brief, if that is possible.

Mr Attwood: The Minister was right to identify the long-term issue of the profile of the housing stock in Northern Ireland. In the short term, the critical question is this: if someone decides that there is a significant change in a tenant's personal circumstances and there is suitable alternative accommodation, and the tenant says that they do not wish to move from their three-bedroom house, will they be subject to the bedroom tax?

Mr Storey: That will be dependent on how we develop the scheme. I have heard a lot of comment in the last 24 hours that people want us to be definitive about every individual single issue. There is no doubt about what will happen. There will be those who, for their own political reasons — if they could recognise what a benefit claim form was, in some cases — will bring out examples and say, "You said there wasn't going to be this. Well, here is the evidence." Let us remember that we are dealing with a complex situation and with families who face a variety of challenging and complex circumstances. Not everybody's family is as unified as we would like them to be. Families today are more diverse. I say this on a personal basis: there are things that happen in our families that we would have preferred were not the case, but we have to deal with those circumstances and situations. If there were no protection and no structure for those circumstances to be dealt with, you would come to this House and say that we have no systems, safeguards or security.

I cannot give this House a blank cheque so that, in every set of circumstances in relation to all the issues that we are dealing with, every one of them will be dealt with in exactly the same way. Do you know the reason why? Every one of those circumstances will not be exactly the same. We have only just got through the issues in relation to ESA; it is complex. Those are things that we have to deal with. I ask the Member to give us the indulgence to ensure that we are in a position to develop the scheme. Officials are doing that, and I hope to be in a position to see the proposals relatively soon. That will go to the Executive and will, I trust, give some clarity.

I want to move on to amendment No 42. The amendment seeks to revise which benefits are included in the calculation of the benefit cap. The proposal is to remove child benefit, carer's allowance and any benefits or components of benefits received for caring responsibilities. The primary objective of the cap is to tackle the culture of welfare dependency by setting a clear limit on what people can expect to get from the benefits system. It is important that the benefits system is fair and seen to be fair, not just to benefit recipients but to the taxpayers who pay for our welfare system. It is neither reasonable nor fair that households in receipt of out-of-work benefits should receive a greater income from benefits than working households earning the average weekly wage.

This clause will allow us to prescribe in regulations how the benefits cap will operate. The cap will apply to the combined income from the main out-of-work benefits: jobseeker's allowance; income support; employment and support allowance; housing benefit; child benefit and child tax credit; and other benefits, such as carer's allowance. Households that include a member who is receiving disability living allowance will be exempt. This is in recognition that disability living allowance is paid to people to help with extra costs arising from their disability.

For carers, the benefits system is designed to provide financial support where caring responsibilities prevent carers from working full time. As such, it is only right that carer's allowance should be counted alongside other income-maintenance benefits. Child benefit is an allowance that is paid to help with the expense of raising a child. As such, it should also be counted alongside other income-maintenance benefits.

Initially, the benefit cap will be delivered through housing benefit payments, so households that are not getting housing benefit will not have the cap applied. Ultimately, it will be administered as part of the new universal credit system. To amend the list of benefits that are included in the calculation of the benefit cap would be a clear breach of parity and would result in a financial penalty to the Northern Ireland block grant.

However, as I have stated previously, in accordance with the terms of the Stormont House Agreement, my Department is developing proposals for the provision of additional financial support to claimants who will be adversely impacted by welfare reform, including the benefit cap. I will bring a paper to the Executive — I hope in the near future — setting out how far it is proposed to move forward with welfare reform, including the modalities of implementing the different schemes agreed in the Stormont House Agreement. I propose to bring forward an enabling clause for these schemes at Further Consideration Stage.

At this time, my Department is working through the various payment scenarios for assistance from the supplementary payment scheme. I accept that there are many families across Northern Ireland who have exceptional needs and require to be paid more benefit. However, my party voted for the benefit cap in the House of Commons, and we believe that families on benefits should not receive more than working families. The SDLP's proposal would only increase the number of benefits, which could lead to exclusions from the benefit cap, and that will lead to additional costs for the block grant because it will bring in a difference between the social security systems here and Great Britain. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject the amendment.

In amendment Nos 48 and 50, the proposal is to insert a new clause to impose a duty on the Department to ensure that all claimants have access to independent advice on making a claim under the Act. I know that this issue has had considerable debate and discussion. DSD has lead responsibility on behalf of government for voluntary information and advice services in Northern Ireland. Through 'Opening Doors: the Strategy for the Delivery of Voluntary Advice Services to the Community', the Department has already put in place arrangements to support a comprehensive, integrated, quality service across Northern Ireland within a framework to ensure that services are planned and delivered in a way that matches resources to need, focusing particularly on meeting the needs of the most disadvantaged. Through 'Opening Doors', the Department already invests a substantial amount of money — in the region of £4.5 million annually — in the issue, to maximise access to advice provision and ensure that independent advice is accessible and available to all, free at the point of need and targeted to support the most vulnerable in our society.

Over recent years, my Department has developed a new approach for our funding and business relationships with the advice sector, particularly organisations providing general voluntary advice, which includes benefit advice. The advice sector at local level, which provides general advice services, are moving to become the responsibility of local government. Therefore, that duty would eventually be on local councils. I have concerns that the current amendments will also place a statutory duty on councils, since they will have the responsibilities for those services. This is driven by the objectives outlined in 'Opening Doors' and is influenced by a number of factors: the need to maximise the impact of our funding investment and the need for a more structured and coordinated approach to supporting those who need to access advice services.

As a result, the main advice support organisations operating in Northern Ireland — Citizens Advice, Advice NI, the Law Centre (NI) — have been contracted to work in partnership arrangements known as the Northern Ireland Advice Services Consortium. I am conscious of the potential impact of welfare reform, and my officials are engaging with the consortium to discuss how we can work alongside the advice sector to best support customers through the implementation of welfare reform. Indeed, I met the consortium, and we had a very useful, cordial and constructive conversation on the issue. The advice consortium has a key role to play in building and supporting the capacity and capability of front-line advice providers; securing joined-up, targeted, service delivery; exploring alternative funding streams; and maximising the impact of the substantial resources that the Department has invested in advice.

1.00 pm

As an immediate priority, the consortium is working to develop an agreed methodology for monitoring and take-up of advice services. We are also working closely with the consortium and local councils to better understand the impact of our existing investment, bringing a more robust approach to the targeting and prioritisation of support. This will present a key opportunity to monitor the impact of the welfare reforms and other government changes on advice services, and it will allow government to respond in circumstances where specific need or changing demand has been identified and evidenced. This links closely with our commitment in the Opening Doors framework to work in partnership with the advice sector, maximising access to quality services and bringing a structured approach to resourcing the sector.

The Department has just completed a widespread consultation with the advice sector on a new strategy that details the priority for the immediate future. This is real partnership working together, rather than a relationship based on statute. It is important that the voluntary sector is not seen as part of government, and that is one of the issues that I have around placing it on a statutory basis, because it is vital for me and for the Administration that the voluntary sector is not seen to be part and parcel of government or that somehow we have a command-and-control mechanism in place. They need to retain their independence and be seen to be independent of the Executive. Placing them under a statutory provision would potentially compromise that position. I have taken on board the concerns that have been raised by Mr Attwood. We have had a discussion on it — it has also been raised by other Members — and I have given, I trust, a sufficient assurance that the needs, the structure and the delivery of independent advice are met and secured in a way that people have confidence in.

The question that is raised in my mind is this: what are the current problems that we have that are so pressing that they have led to a requirement for the demand for it to be placed on a statutory basis? Members could be coming to me and saying, "Here is the list of huge problems and huge difficulties, and your Department has not given us a penny". I listened to the comments made by the Member for East Belfast in relation to the amount of money that goes into that area, and I pay credit and commend in the House today the organisations in east Belfast that have drawn down huge amounts of money into their community. That can be replicated across many other parts of Northern Ireland.

I believe that the £4.5 million that my Department gives to the independent advice sector is having an effect. Can we do more? Can we do it better? That is why the work that we continue to do with the sector — I give a commitment to continue to work with that sector — will intensify, but I do not believe, at this minute in time, that we are in need of a legislative framework that could create difficulties and — this is another point — could lead to a significant increase in the costs of the provision of that service. We would have to be very careful about that. Let us remember that there are many out there who like to make industries of certain things. I think that that has not happened with the advice sector as it is currently constructed because it has been a voluntary partnership between government and those organisations.

I think that, if we place it on a statutory footing in legislation, we could get ourselves into more challenging times. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject the amendments.

Amendment No —

Mr Attwood: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Yes.

Mr Attwood: I suggest to the Minister that the argument that somehow creating a statutory right to advice captures the advice sector in government is not the best of arguments. Citizens have the right to independent legal advice if they are arrested. I am sure that nobody is suggesting that David Ford has somehow captured the legal profession when it comes to its actions, given the events of recent days and months.

Are you minded at all, Minister, given your forthright remarks on the matter, to consider a further amendment at Further Consideration Stage?

Mr Storey: I will give consideration to the comments that have already been made to me, and, between now and Further Consideration Stage, I will give further consideration to the particular issue. I have already mentioned the elements on which I will bring further amendments at Further Consideration Stage. I think that that will require us to have discussions in a way that tries to tease out not only the issue but the benefits of making a particular amendment. I take on board the comment that has been put to me, and I will reflect further on the issue over the next few weeks.

Amendment No 51 introduces proposed new clause 130A, which provides for discretionary support assistance replacing elements of what is currently the social fund.

Mr Brady: Thank you, Minister, for giving way. I want to clarify something that I said last night. Essentially, discretionary support assistance will replace the social fund, which, in Britain, has been abolished. It has gone to local councils, and there are all sorts of difficulties with that. I do not want to pre-empt your comments on amendment No 52, which is about the discretionary support commissioner, but Mr Agnew seemed to suggest that that was some sort of quango being set up. Perhaps he did not grasp the significance of it. The Social Fund Commissioner was independent and a very important part of the process of ensuring that the most vulnerable had access to community care grants and, in some cases, budget loans, and so on, where the local office had turned people down. The social fund inspectors did a very good job, and it seems to me that this particular role will replace a very important post and give an independent dimension to discretionary support. Moreover, and you can agree with this, Minister, if you want, discretionary support will also include people on low income. As far as we are concerned, that is an innovative step.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member. I was waiting for the opportunity to reply to Mr Agnew on the issue because he made some other comments that I am quite happy to address. The Member is absolutely right about the social fund and the Office of the Social Fund Commissioner. What we are doing is simply replacing what was already there; it is not the creation of a new position. I will deal with that issue because I want to make a few comments about some of the quangos that are acting disgracefully in Northern Ireland at the minute. Therefore, we will come to that.

I want to say a word of thanks and appreciation to the Member for the work that he has done. Depending on what happens on 7 May, he may be leaving this House and going to the House of Commons, I hope to take up his seat. That is an issue for him and his colleagues. He has made a contribution to the Committee through his knowledge of many of the things that we are discussing. Over many years, he knew what it was to work with people on a day-to-day basis. I think that that knowledge was clearly seen in the work that he carried out when the Committee was scrutinising my Department's policy. I would like to see it return to that as quickly as possible.

Moving on to the issues on amendment No 51, proposed new clause 130A would provide for the discretionary support assistance, replacing elements of what is currently the social fund. I will explain in a moment how that clause is intended to be used, but first I would like to set out some of the broader context and the rationale for those changes. Again, I know that this can become laborious, but I think that, when we have comment in the public domain that is sometimes ill-informed, ill-advised and inaccurate, it is important that we lay out the facts of those things in the House, which has the responsibility for the legislation. I know that that will not stop some people who never let truth get in the way of a good story, but that is an issue that they have to deal with.

In Northern Ireland, the need for immediate support to those facing emergency financial situations is already higher than in any other part of the UK. I know that from my constituency, where there are particular issues and times when you can see a rise in the demand for services that are provided for under the social fund as it exists. That is due to a combination of factors, but it is primarily because of the higher levels of people here who live in poverty. In comparison with the United Kingdom as a whole, Northern Ireland also has a persistently higher proportion of people who are concentrated just above the poverty line and at risk of falling into poverty.

It is not only those relying on benefits who find themselves needing help to relieve emergency situations. Figures show that, in Northern Ireland, over two fifths of individuals living in low-income households are part of a family where at least one adult is either in full-time or part-time work. For all those low-income groups, reliance on temporary support in emergency situations is expected to continue, if not to increase.

There are also serious consequences for greater and longer-term costs to the public service if an effective response to immediate need is not available. There are very real risks for long-term health and social care costs, and there are consequences where the interests of households with children are threatened or where individuals are left without the fundamentals such as food, clothing, heat and housing.

In the past, the greater element of discretionary support has been delivered through the social fund in the form of community care grants, crisis loans for living expenses and household items, and budgeting loans as part of the social security system. The proposed repeal of certain social fund services will mean the removal of community care grants and crisis loans for living expenses and household items from that system. That has prompted the Department to develop a new provision for Northern Ireland.

The objectives of the new provision are to alleviate the most exceptional, extreme or crisis situations that present significant risk to the health, safety or well-being of low-income and vulnerable households through the provision of practical support; to ensure that those facing the most extreme hardship as a result of the adjustment to the changes to the social security regime are supported in their efforts towards self-dependency where access to discretionary support would avoid or reduce major risk or life-threatening circumstances; to maximise the effectiveness of discretionary support by ensuring that people in such circumstances have timely and appropriate access to and support from the range of government-funded general and specialist information and advice services to minimise the risk of re-occurrence; to support greater self-reliance and independence; and to improve social and financial inclusion.

Responding to such need will require a new provision that is responsive and flexible and that ensures a rapid and effective response to the most immediate needs through the provision of a range of interventions to relieve immediate need, to support and facilitate greater self-reliance, and to promote and support personal responsibility. Collaboration with other statutory services to ensure a proper assessment of individual need will also be required.

1.15 pm

The new provision has been designed to ensure that support is properly targeted to address the highest-priority need of those on low income. It will not replicate the social fund, but it will reflect its strengths in ensuring a speedy response to emergency or crisis situations, including its local accessibility, its flexibility in meeting a wide variety of needs and its independent review mechanisms. The Social Security Agency, in designing the new provision, has used a number of key design principles that emerged from phase 1 of the social fund research study. Those have been endorsed by the Social Development Committee, and I know that it spent some time on that issue.

The new provision's response to immediate need, as experienced by low-income and vulnerable individuals and/or households, will also allow for a range of practical interventions. Those will include the direct provision of financial awards, primarily through interest-free repayable loans. However, the provision of non-repayable grants will remain as an important element of support in the most extreme cases. Other interventions may, however, include, either directly or through third parties, the provision of goods and services. That may include essential equipment to relieve immediate household needs.

An important aspect of the new provision is the recognition that those finding themselves in the most extreme financial emergencies can also benefit from readily available specialist advice and information provided by a range of government and community providers. Referral to such advice, with the customer's consent, will form an important element of the discretionary support provision.

Encouraging independence through effective use of discretionary support is an important part of the new provisions and is a vital element in building a stronger economy and tackling poverty and disadvantage. Discretionary support is about supporting people, protecting the vulnerable appropriately but also encouraging self-efficiency. I urge Members to accept amendment No 51.

I turn now to amendment No 52, which introduces new clause 130B, which defines the recruitment, role and responsibilities of the discretionary support commissioner and their staff. I trust that Mr Agnew is paying attention to this element, as it will rectify a comment that he made earlier. An important aspect of the discretionary support provision is the need for an independent review mechanism of decisions.

Under the social fund, the independent review service is provided by the Office of the Social Fund Commissioner for Northern Ireland. That will be replaced by the office of the discretionary support commissioner. The rules for the new independent external review will be similar to the current review process under the social fund. So, rather than us endorsing a new quango, we are replacing what is already there. Given what I have seen some of the quangos in Northern Ireland do recently, for example, the Equality Commission, I would love to be in a position to ensure that they are curtailed in the way in which they do their business. Of course, we had the charade in this House the other day when a Member tried to give the impression that he was taking the Equality Commission on, but we all know now that when the appropriate amendment should have been placed in the Budget process, that was not done. So, a lot of people want to seem to give the impression that they are really taking these things on, but, in reality, they are only trying to placate their own position and present a narrative that they know is not the case.

I notice that the Member said that he would remind us when we say that we want to reduce the overall number of quangos. He will come back to this point and tell the DUP and me that, "Well, you created a new quango". The reality is that we are replacing what is already there. You have heard from the Member opposite that, if we were not to do this, there would be a call from Members in the House — "How will we deal with the issue? How will we address these concerns?" — and rightly so.

Mr Agnew: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: I will give way when I am finished.

It is clear that what we are doing here is replacing what already exists; no more, no less.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Minister for giving way. I was clear that I have no problem with the proposed commission. It is not me or my party that is so critical of existing commissions. He said that this simply replaces what is already there. Is he therefore saying that it will exist within the same footprint — ie there will be no greater costs?

Mr Storey: Sometimes, you wonder where some Members come from on these things. The rules for the new independent external review will be similar to the current review process under the social fund. I assume that the issue will be the same when it comes to the way in which it is funded. What I will do, so that there is clarity for the Member, is give him further information on the costs. That will, I trust, be of help and benefit to him. I do not have that information in front of me, and there is no point in trying to bluff my way out of it. That is the reality, and that is where we are.

Amendment No 73 proposes the removal of the ability to treat a person as having a prescribed level of income. Let me explain why we would want to treat a person as having a prescribed level of income. Universal credit will provide support for people who are self-employed only where self-employment is the best route for them to become financially self-sufficient. A safeguard is being built in so that universal credit does not end up subsidising people undertaking unprofitable activities. The safeguard will be in the form of a minimum income floor.

The minimum income floor will set a minimum level of assumed income from self-employment. The minimum income floor is designed to provide a fair incentive for the self-employed to increase their earnings and productivity and realise their financial potential. The earnings expectations of self-employed claimants under universal credit mirror those expected of claimants of similar circumstances in employed work. For example, the minimum income floor for claimants expected to be able to work full-time will be equivalent to 35 hours per week at the national minimum wage.

It is right that universal credit should support people to be self-employed, but only in so far as self-employment is the best route for them to become financially self-sufficient. If claimants are within one year of starting out in self-employed activity, they will be eligible for a start-up period. This will mean that newly self-employed claimants will be exempt from reaching the minimum income floor for a period of one year, and their universal credit payments will be calculated according to their actual income rather than assumed income. This is one start-up period for self-employment of 12 months every five years where the claimant has ceased the previous activity and started a new business. Further, when we migrate people to universal credit who are already running their own business, we will provide a similar six-month grace period before they need to make any adjustments under universal credit.

If amendment No 73 were accepted, it would mean that there would be no incentive for those who are self-employed on a low income to increase their earnings through developing their self-employment. The minimum income floor will assume a level of income for the self-employed based on the earnings that we expect a claimant with similar circumstances in employment to achieve. For these reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment No 73.

Amendment No 75 removes paragraph 7 of schedule 1. The paragraph gives the Department the power to make regulations specifying the work-related requirements for claimants who are asserting a right to reside in the United Kingdom on the basis that they are EU jobseekers under EU treaties. By way of background, I should explain that people coming to the United Kingdom from EU countries do not have unrestricted access to UK social security benefits and tax credits. Since 2004, access to most benefits for EU nationals has depended on whether they have a right to reside here, and, for most benefits, the right-to-reside requirement is part of the habitual residence test.

Having a right to reside does not simply mean that a person can live in a particular country. Broadly speaking, a person who moves from one EU country to another has a right to reside if they are economically active or are able to support themselves. That means that not all EU nationals will have a right to reside even though they can exercise free movement rights, such as migrants moving from one country to another claiming benefits. Only certain categories of person moving within the EU will have certain guaranteed rights attached to their residence in the host country. That is what is meant by EU nationals having a right to reside.

Since 2006, all EU nationals have had a right to reside in the UK for three months without the requirement to be financially self-sufficient. However, access to benefits during that three-month period will not satisfy the right-to-reside test. Those who have a right of residence after the initial three-month period include workers or self-employed persons and their families and students and their families, provided that they can support themselves. EU nationals may also have a right to reside straight away as a jobseeker if they can show that they are looking for work and have a genuine chance of being engaged. Family members of jobseekers also have a right to reside. To have a right to reside as a jobseeker, a person needs to be registered with the jobs and benefits office/social security office and sign on as available for and seeking work. A person with a right to reside as a jobseeker may claim income-related jobseeker's allowance, which can give them entitlement to housing benefit.

Although the power under paragraph 7 is quite wide, we only wish to exercise it in relation to EU jobseekers. We do not intend to exercise the power in relation to EU self-employed, and, in relation to EU workers, we only intend to exercise it in relation to those who retain worker status because they become involuntarily unemployed and therefore need to seek employment to continue to retain their worker status. The regulations will enable us to check that an EU jobseeker is, in fact, searching for work and available for work and that they therefore continue to meet the right-to-reside test. If someone claims to be an EU jobseeker without actually searching for work, they will no longer satisfy the right-to-reside test. An EU claimant who does not have the right to reside will not be eligible for universal credit. That is because universal credit is treated as a social assistance and is not payable to EU nationals without a right to reside.

The crucial point is that we are only exercising the power to enable us to check whether an EU claimant continues to enjoy a right to reside as a jobseeker. Without the power to verify whether a claimant is seeking work, we would be unable to verify whether they continue to have a right to reside under EU law. While we have a legal duty to provide support to people who come to Northern Ireland in line with national and international obligations, it is also necessary to protect the taxpayer and the benefit system. There is a need to make sure that the rules that apply when people from outside come here do not allow them to take inappropriate advantage of the benefit system. Members will understand and appreciate that that is the issue. Without that provision in the Bill, the Department would be unable to check if an EU national with work status met the right-to-reside test. Accepting amendment No 75 would be a clear breach of parity. There would be potential implications for the Northern Ireland block grant, and it would result in EU claimants in Northern Ireland being subject to preferential treatment in comparison with EU claimants in Great Britain.

I have tried to cover most of the issues raised by Members. Mr Lyttle, who is not in his place, raised the issue of victims and survivors. I trust that, at some length in the House yesterday, I gave reassurances on that. The Member, when he hears of this being referred to in the debate, will be able to find my comments on the issue in Hansard. I draw my remarks on the group 2 amendments to a conclusion.

Mr Speaker: Thank you, Minister. As there was no formal suspension for lunch agreed by the Business Committee, I propose by leave of the House to suspend proceedings at this point. The sitting will be suspended until 2.00 pm, when the next Member to speak will be the Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development, Mr Alex Maskey, to make the winding-up speech.

The sitting was suspended at 1.31 pm.

The sitting resumed at 2.01 pm.

Mr Maskey (The Chairperson of the Committee for Social Development): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I have not always played to a packed House, but this probably beats the record.

I will wind up on the group 2 debate by restricting my comments to the comments made in respect of the, I think, 14 amendments in the group rather than the Committee's opposition to the clauses. I have already outlined the reasons for that. Of course, the Minister's remarks are well on the record for people to consider. A number of Members have sought clarity and some further information from the Minister. That is on the record for all those who sought it.

Dolores Kelly spoke about amendment No 2 to clause 6, which aims to reduce the number of waiting days for entitlement from seven days to three. That was supported by Mr Attwood. Roy Beggs, on the other hand, indicated that he was not convinced of the merits of such a change. He suggested that it would place an administrative and cost burden on the Department. Sammy Wilson made comparison with people who may have to work a lying week before they get their first week's wages. He was not in favour of the amendment. This is just to illustrate the variety of views. I point out that, when the Committee considered the issue, it had concerns that the clause might have an impact on passported benefits, but it was assured by the then Minister that the award notice would give claimants their underlying entitlement. The Committee was assured that those issues would also be addressed by way of regulations.

Mrs Kelly stated her party's support for amendment No 5 to clause 10. Mr Beggs, on the other hand, did not support the amendment and felt that there was a lack of clarity on the estimated costs associated with the amendment. He referred to transitional support that is already provided. Mr Agnew noted that there should be provision to protect families under the clause. He wanted to hear the Minister's views. Some of the comments that were made reflect the Committee's concerns about clause 10 when we considered it two years ago. The Committee, for example, had a particular concern about the child tax credit being reduced from £57 per week to £28 per week, which would impact on families with a disabled child. Of course, as we know, the Stormont House Agreement has made new arrangements. That concern, by and large, has been addressed by that agreement. The Minister also referred to aspects of that.

Mrs Kelly voiced her support for Mr Agnew's amendment Nos 6 and 7 to clause 11. Mr Beggs opposed those amendments and stated that there are choices to be made in respect of what issues are deemed to be priorities and that that needs to be taken into account. Mr Agnew's amendments in relation to clause 11, which relates to housing, refer to the periods within which payments should be made to a claimant. Mr Agnew said that amendment No 7 will protect people who have been paying rent through housing benefit, and he noted that this was about making work pay. He also said that he believed that it was reasonable to have a transitional payment. Furthermore, he said that clause 11 potentially discriminates against young people, and that young persons should be given one year to address their unfortunate circumstances.

Amendment No 27 would amend clause 52 in relation to the period of entitlement to contributory allowance. It was supported by Mr Agnew and Mrs Kelly. Mrs Kelly said that she awaited the Minister's response on the possibility of an extension to the period. I believe that Mr Beggs indicated that his party would not support the amendment. Mr Brady referred to the potential of ongoing discussions to extend the period and, again, noted that under the Stormont House Agreement the period of ESA would be extended. Mr Agnew said that he wanted to hear from the Minister on the matter. As I said in my opening remarks, the Committee, in its report, asked the then Minister to explore the possibility of extending the period to more than 12 months, and that has been done, secured and agreed.

Clause 54 concerns a condition relating to youth. The SDLP and Mr Agnew have tabled, respectively, amendment Nos 28 and 29 to clause 54. Mrs Kelly indicated that she awaited the Minister's response with interest; hopefully, the Minister's response has satisfied that. Mr Wilson asked why young people should be treated differently from anyone else. He noted that the age that was specified was to encourage young people into work as opposed to going into the benefits system. Again, I believe that Mr Beggs was not supportive of the amendments and felt that they needed clarification by Mr Agnew.

The Committee considered clause 54 and had a number of concerns. It noted that no new claims would be allowed when the clause came into operation and was particularly concerned, then, about the impact that that would have on young people with disabilities. I remind Members that the Department advised the Committee that almost 97% of the people to whom the provision currently applies would not be affected by the change and that new claimants may qualify for income-related ESA. This has also been dealt with, to a large extent, by way of the Stormont House Agreement arrangements.

Issues relating to housing are among the most contentious in the Bill, it would seem, and certainly have been some of the most talked about in the media. Mrs Kelly noted her party's opposition to clause 69 and welcomed the Green Party's support in opposing it. She also mentioned that the Labour Party in Britain had said that it would abolish it if it is in government after the May elections. She made a number of other comments of a political nature that I do not really want to go into.

Stewart Dickson focused most of his comments on this issue and suggested that people on housing benefit had been demonised. He referred to the nature of accommodation here and the problems that that throws up and to the fact that the evidence in Britain shows that the policy has led to an increase in rent arrears. Again, I note that a range of special measures agreed with the British Government in the Stormont House Agreement have been taken on board to deal with the matter.

Mr Attwood also mentioned clause 69. Whatever about people's views of how it has been addressed, Members nevertheless acknowledged that the matter has been addressed at least to the point where people who would have been subject to the bedroom tax burden will not have to endure that as a result of the Stormont House Agreement.

The SDLP proposed amendment No 42 in relation to a benefit cap. Mrs Kelly noted her party's concern that the cap of £26,000 was likely to be reduced further. That is speculative but probably well informed. If a Conservative Government is elected in May, that figure may be reduced to a figure as low as £18,000. She obviously knows that that could affect thousands of families here, and her particular concern was about the potential impact on children.

Roy Beggs noted that, while he believed that the SDLP meant well in proposing the amendment, he felt that any change to the benefit cap should be made in Westminster for all of what he described as the UK. Sammy Wilson noted that he did not have any great sympathy with the amendment to remove the benefit cap. He believed that it was necessary to make work pay and there was a need to get the issue into perspective. Mr Attwood and Mr Agnew also made further comments in a similar vein in their opposition to a benefit cap. Again, the Minister has addressed that in other commentary in the last day or so and has said that the Stormont House Agreement would seek to address that matter.

In relation to clause 95, the Committee was advised that the number of households affected amounted to around 620. It is fair to say that there were different views on the Committee on the issue, and it is still one of contention between various parties. That is an ongoing situation with regard to the outworking of the Stormont House Agreement.

Amendment Nos 48 and 50 would insert new clauses 120B and 120D. Those are in respect of claimants seeking independent advice on their claims. The SDLP has tabled an amendment, as has the Ulster Unionist Party. All those who commented valued the important role played by the independent advice sector and the support that it provides for claimants across the spectrum. The Minister has addressed that fully. It was an issue that the Committee was clear on when it deliberated on it. The Committee listened to the presentation by the people from the independent advice sector. Several MLAs had experience of the sector over a number of years and understood clearly the need for an independent advice sector. Let us hope that the commitments given by the Minister and others are pursued in a way that makes sure that people have proper access to a well-resourced service. That is important, but I am satisfied from what I have heard that that will be the outworking of the agreement that we have. Chris Lyttle acknowledged the vital work of the independent advice sector, and those views have been taken on board. The Committee was very supportive of the concept and would want to support any measure that enhanced the support for that sector and, more important, the rights of claimants to have access to that advice.

The Minister outlined the requirement for a new clause that relates to discretionary support. The Committee was informed on Monday that the social fund would continue until any discretionary support scheme came into operation. That is an important safeguard. Any draft regulation made under the new clause will have to be laid before the Assembly and approved by a resolution of it. I think that the Minister in his concluding remarks also referred to that in a satisfactory manner.

The Minister's amendment No 52, inserting new clause 130B, will establish an office known as a discretionary support commissioner; I will not elaborate on that because the Minister has dealt with it. It seemed to me from comments from a Member that he did not quite understand what the role of that person has been, which indicates to me that maybe he did not have a lot of experience dealing with cases. However, that is an opinion.

Amendment Nos 73 and 75, tabled by Mr Agnew, relate to calculating capital income and work-related requirements. Mr Beggs had no hesitation in opposing them. Mr Sammy Wilson noted that amendment No 75 would remove the ability of the Department to apply the right to reside condition on prospective claimants. Mr Beggs suggested that the amendment might amount to the Assembly seeking a right to discriminate and he was fearful of the consequences if it was accepted. Mr Agnew also addressed the matter.

I am giving a flavour to some extent of the diverse opinions expressed by Members. Even if they agreed on the sentiment of an amendment, there was clear disparity in some cases in some of the points and opinions expressed. I hope, a Cheann Comhairle, that I have done justice to the Members I have quoted. I am trying to give a flavour and a synopsis of their concerns. They are concerns that have been shared by all parties and particularly by a wide range of stakeholders who engaged with the Committee during the Committee Stage. I have tried to reflect the concerns of the Committee against the commentary of some Members, reflecting amendments tabled by Members and how those sit against the views of the Committee and, more important, how they sit against the arrangements being discussed and delivered through the Stormont House Agreement.

When the Committee deliberated on this, it set its opposition to a number of clauses, and concern was expressed about them. There was a range of measures that the Committee was advocating. A number of those asked the Minister to review, consider and discuss with Executive colleagues.

By any yardstick and in fairness to all the Members who have spoken since yesterday, every one of them, even though they might have fairly strong or passionate views on how certain aspects of how a matter was dealt with, whether it was dealt by legislation or mitigating measures, and I stand corrected if needs be —

2.15 pm

Mr Speaker: Excuse me, Alex. Could you point the mic towards you? Hansard, I think, is —

Mr Maskey: Sorry. Do you want me start again?

Mr Speaker: No.

Mr Maskey: OK. I am making my concluding remarks.

Without fear of contradiction, notwithstanding the views expressed across the Chamber since yesterday and the number of amendments that have been tabled and will be debated throughout the rest of the afternoon — I respect the right of everybody to table amendments, debate them and express their concerns — reflecting on the views of the Committee, as determined two years ago, I am very satisfied that, even with all the comments that have been made, which I take in good faith or otherwise, by any yardstick all of the concerns that were raised by the Social Development Committee have been addressed by the Stormont House Agreement. The Minister has continued to outline the ways in which that has been done.

We should remind ourselves that it is a five-party agreement, so the parties have all agreed to this. Even though there are different opinions on how you might continue to address some of these matters, I have not heard one Member — I am glad that this is the case — saying that people will be worse off as a result of the Stormont House Agreement and how it is unfolding. It will continue to be rolled out by way of regulations and further public consultation. The good thing is that, against a very difficult backdrop where we had legislation being imposed by London, whatever about the time it has taken to address this and the means by which we get there, people who would otherwise have been out of pocket — those who are described as “the most vulnerable” by all of us — due to a welfare reform Bill will have that problem addressed by the Stormont House Agreement. The Minister has addressed all the concerns that were raised by the Committee. The Committee will continue to have that important statutory role of scrutinising and working with the Department to ensure that the agreement continues to work out for the benefit of the people we collectively represent, including those who we tend to call “the most vulnerable”.

It is unfortunate that we have had a certain amount of acrimony in the last day or so. People have quoted cases in their constituencies: I was dealing with a cancer victim last evening who, in the fog of the debate, was very concerned about what was likely to happen to him and his family. Were they going to lose money? Did the DUP “strangle all the amendments” — his words, not mine? Are other parties not being allowed to change the Bill? Are we just going to have all of what was imposed from London imposed on us? I had to assure him last night that that was not the case and tell him what the intention of the Bill was, despite the politicking that is going on, some of which is fair enough and some of which is not. People are legitimately raising concerns, and it is our job as an Assembly to make sure we address all those concerns to the point where we resolve them satisfactorily.

This is the message that people should hear from the Chamber: from the evidence that we have heard so far, the welfare legislation is going through. It will take some time, not only for the completion of the Bill but for the secondary legislation to be processed and the various schemes to be devised, but this is a far, far better scheme than was ever envisaged by the Tory Government in London. I am not going to say we should be grateful for that, and it has come at a cost. It created a lot of political instability, and it will cost the block grant, but people make choices. Since yesterday, I have not heard one Member being critical in any way about the way in which this has been dealt with. I have not heard one Member saying anything other than that they are happy enough about having made the choice to protect the most vulnerable and, if that has to come out of the block grant, then that is what will happen. We had a bit of a political set-to yesterday and this morning, which is regrettable, because the news has to go out to the people out there who are most vulnerable and are more worried about where they get their rent or their disability premium from than whether there was a POC, an amendment or a four- or five-party agreement. The message has to go from the Chamber that we are delivering a better system than that envisaged by the Tories in London. For that, we are grateful.

Mr Speaker: I will not call amendment No 13, as it is consequential to amendment No 12, which was not made.

Clause 24 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 25 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 26 (Higher-level sanctions)

Mr Speaker: We now come to the third group of amendments for debate. The group contains seven amendments and opposition to six clauses. [Interruption.] Will Members leave quietly? This could be a long day of business, but it will be shorter if it is all done quietly and orderly.

The amendments relate to sanctions, levels of penalties and cautions. Members will note that amendment Nos 14 and 15 are mutually exclusive, that amendment Nos 23 and 24 are mutually exclusive and that amendment Nos 25 and 26 are mutually exclusive.

Members will also note that valid petitions of concern have been received for amendment Nos 15, 16, 24 and 26. Therefore, they will require cross-community support.

Mr Storey: I beg to move amendment No 14: In page 13, line 13, leave out “3 years” and insert “18 months”.

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 15: In page 13, line 13, leave out “3 years” and insert “26 weeks”.— [Mr Agnew.]

No 16: In clause 27, page 14, line 20, at end insert

“(10) A claimant shall be provided with at least fifteen days to provide a good reason under any such requirement in this section.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 23: In clause 47, page 25, line 29, leave out “3 years” and insert “18 months”.— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 24: In clause 47, page 25, line 29, leave out “3 years” and insert “26 weeks”.— [Mr Agnew.]

No 26: In clause 50, page 35, line 14, leave out “3 years” and insert “26 weeks”.— [Mr Agnew.]

Mr Storey: Amendment No 14 addresses the issue of higher-level sanctions as set out in clause 26. The clause provides for financial sanctions to be applied to those claimants who are subject to all work-related requirements and, without good reason, fail to meet their most important responsibilities. Most people want to find work and will never be in the position of facing a sanction. The vast majority of claimants comply with requirements. However, for a small minority of claimants who shirk their personal responsibilities — a minority that has no regard for their obligations — we need an effective sanctions system that encourages responsibility and deters non-compliance.

Currently, sanctions, especially for the most serious failures, are set at a low level. Claimants are not always clear about the consequences if they fail to meet their requirements. We want to create a clearer, stronger system that is easily understood by claimants and acts as a more effective deterrent to non-compliance.

The clause as drafted provides for sanctions of up to three years for the most serious failures. Those are: failing to apply for a vacancy; failing to accept an offer of work; failing to take part in certain work-placement schemes, such as work experience and mandatory work activity; and losing pay or employment voluntarily or by reason of misconduct. However, as a result of concerns raised by the Social Development Committee and others, I tabled an amendment to restrict the maximum sanction to 18 months.

Those failures clearly damage a claimant’s employment prospects, and it is only right that we have a sanctions system that effectively deters such behaviour. The amount of sanction will be set in regulations. We intend to set a sanctionable amount that is broadly in line with existing jobseeker’s allowance arrangements. The sanction periods will also be set in regulations. We expect those to be three months for a first failure, six months for a second and 18 months for the third and subsequent failures only. As an 18-month sanction will only ever be imposed where claimants fail to meet their most important requirements on at least three separate occasions, we expect it to be applied to very few.

There will be some circumstances in which shorter sanctions may apply; for example, when a claimant leaves a job voluntarily a week before his or her contract ends and then claims universal credit, but I suspect that such cases will be the exception.

I wonder if it might be helpful if I provided an example of how escalation up the higher-level sanctions ladder might work in practice. If a claimant refuses to participate in the Steps 2 Success programme and cannot show good reason, he will receive a three-month sanction. If, four months later, he is asked to apply for a job and refuses to do so, he will — again, so long as there is no good reason — be sanctioned for six months.

3.00 pm

These are clear sanctions that are critical to incentivise claimants to meet their responsibilities. Only in the most extreme cases of non-compliance will claimants face an 18-month sanction. In the example that I have given, the claimant would have to refuse another job or fail to meet another important requirement within 12 months of his second failure. Only then would an 18-month sanction be imposed. I believe that these are tough but fair sanctions and are necessary to deter the minority of claimants who might otherwise break the rules, and I therefore urge Members to accept amendment No 14.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

Amendment No 15 seeks to reduce the maximum sanction to 26 weeks. Perhaps Members did not realise that there is a sliding scale of three, six and 18 months, as I have just explained. As the claimant would have failed to comply on three separate occasions before an 18-month sanction could be considered, I think that 26 weeks as a maximum sanction is too lenient and urge Members to reject amendment No 15.

Amendment No 16 amends clause 27, which deals with other sanctions, and seeks to give a claimant a period of 15 days within which to provide good reason under any requirement within the clause. I should point out that there will be no specific time limit in universal credit regulations for good reason, therefore ensuring enough flexibility to adapt to the individual circumstances of a claimant. The key point, which will be reflected in guidance, is that the claimant always has a right amount of time. It is therefore anticipated that the current rule of five working days should be the default, but if, for example, the claimant is in attendance and has provided their evidence, there may be no need to wait a further five working days. Alternatively, if the claimant is waiting for evidence from a doctor or support worker, it is only reasonable to extend the five working days. In all circumstances, a sanction will not apply where good reason is demonstrated. In view of that, I urge Members to reject amendment No 16.

In relation to amendment No 23, clause 47 inserts legislative provision to provide for a reformed jobseeker’s allowance sanctions system. As was the case with clause

26, which we have already mentioned, we want to create a clearer, stronger system that is easily understood by claimants and acts as a more effective deterrent to non-compliance. Higher-level sanctions will be imposed on claimants who fail to comply with their most important labour market requirements, such as applying for jobs. There will be a three-month sanction for a first failure, six months for a second, and, with my tabled amendment, 18 months for a third failure, rather than the three years outlined in the Bill. We do not expect many claimants to be sanctioned for 18 months, but it is important to include that option to deter serial non-compliance. I believe that, when viewed in this light, these admittedly tough but fair sanctions are necessary to deter the minority of claimants who might wish to break the rules, and I urge Members to accept amendment No 23.

Amendment No 24 reduces the maximum sanction to 26 weeks. However, I previously mentioned that there is a sliding scale of three, six and 18 months, and the claimant would have failed to comply on three separate occasions before an 18-month sanction could even be considered. A maximum sanction of 26 weeks in these circumstances is too lenient. For this reason, I urge you to reject amendment No 24.

On amendment No 25; whilst income-based jobseeker's allowance will be replaced by universal credit, jobseeker's allowance will continue as a contributory benefit alongside universal credit. We therefore need to ensure that the rules on claimant responsibilities that apply to contributory jobseeker's allowance are aligned with those for universal credit as far as possible. This is necessary for three reasons: first, to ensure that all claimants who are subject to work search and work availability requirements, whether they receive jobseeker's allowance or universal credit, are treated in a similar way; secondly, to smooth the transition where a claimant's time-limited contributory benefit ends and they become entitled to universal credit; and, finally, to avoid unnecessary complexity for jobs and benefits office and social security office staff by ensuring they can apply the same rules to people in similar circumstances.

Clause 50 mirrors the work-related requirements and sanctions that apply to comparable claimants of universal credit. Amendment No 25 will therefore match the maximum sanction applicable under universal credit in clause 26 by reducing it from three years to 18 months. I therefore urge Members to accept amendment No 25.

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Yes.

Mr Allister: Can the Minister explain that? When the Bill was originally drafted and presented by his predecessor, a three-year sanction was obviously thought to be appropriate. Those are the terms in which the Department and the Minister drafted the Bill. What has changed the Minister's mind to halve the three years to 18 months?

Mr Storey: As a member of the Committee for Social Development, you will be well aware that a number of organisations expressed concerns about the three-year period. I listened to those concerns. I also think that it is a reality that came about as a result of the Stormont House Agreement. There is no point saying otherwise.

I want to make this point because it is something that I have heard others say about the Bill: I do not think that any of us would want to bring this Bill, as it was in its entirety, to the House. If we had the freedom to bring our own Bill in the way that we believe completely reflects the needs of citizens in Northern Ireland, and if I were in government where it was the decision of one party, I have no doubt that the Bill would be different. It would have a different emphasis and focus.

Many valid points were raised about people's concerns. On one hand, we are undoubtedly seen by some as being lenient. On the other hand, we are accused of being draconian. In fact, if I remember rightly, some of the comments made during the Committee for Social Development's inquiry into this, albeit that it was a long time in the distant past — maybe I am inaccurate, but the Member may not have been on the Committee at that time and came on to it only later — the phrase "draconian" was used by some.

The point I have been trying to make is that we still need to have tough, but fair, sanctions. That is what we need to try and reflect. The sanctions are still there, even though there has been an issue about moving from three years to 18 months. I think that that is the rationale that has been applied to try to get an agreed position that is not seen as being heavy-handed, but equally cannot be interpreted as a free-for-all with no penalties, and that you can do as you wish and no sanctions will follow.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Storey: I will in a moment. I will seek clarity from the Deputy Speaker on whether he wishes me to continue to go through the other amendments and conclude on those. I just have a couple more comments to make. I will give way to the Member.

Mr B McCrea: The Minister is very kind. I follow up on a point you made. You appeared to say to Mr Allister that you are minded to reduce the period from three years to 18 months because of the Stormont House Agreement. Are you therefore surprised that, certainly in the group that I am looking at, there is opposition to clause 26? I would have thought that, if there was general agreement, you would not expect that? Is that a surprise to you?

Mr Storey: I think it will come as no surprise to the Member that nothing is a surprise to me. I have learnt that more and more in the last number of weeks, since taking up office. I now waken, with God's help and God's grace, every morning, and nothing that is said or done, not only by my political opponents but sometimes by my colleagues, surprises me. That is really the nature —

Mr Allister: Is that Sammy Wilson?

Mr Storey: I was not referring to the honourable Member and my good friend, Mr Wilson. That is the nature of the job.

I come to amendment No 26. As has been the case for amendments Nos 15 and 24, which I have already addressed, amendment No 26 would reduce the maximum sanction to 26 weeks. Once again, I highlight the fact that the sanctions are applied on a sliding scale of three, six and 18 months, and a claimant has to have failed to comply with a requirement on three separate occasions before an 18-month sanction would apply. I consider that 26 weeks as a maximum sanction is too lenient and therefore urge you to reject amendment No 26.

Clause 111 amends sections 109A(5) and 109B(6) of the Social Security Administration (Northern Ireland) Act 1992 to reduce the period during which the customer can withdraw agreement to pay an administrative penalty from 28 to 14 days. Administrative penalties can only be offered in cases where there are grounds to bring proceedings, and acceptance is on the basis that, by agreeing to pay the penalty, there will be no prosecution. Withdrawal of agreement means that, while the penalty need not be paid, the Department's agreement not to prosecute will no longer stand. The repercussions of such a decision are important to the individual concerned, and we do not want people making the wrong decision because of the time factor. Where the penalty is offered, claimants will retain the right to seek independent legal advice and participate in a face-to-face interview. The offer of a penalty must be accepted in writing, and, once accepted, the additional cooling-off period applies, during which the person can reconsider their decision to accept the penalty and seek further independent legal advice.

As a result of concerns expressed as part of the Stormont House Agreement, I propose to remove the clause from the Bill. The outcome will be that there is no amendment to sections 109A and 109B of the Social Security Administration (Northern Ireland) Act 1992, meaning that the cooling-off period will remain at 28 days. I therefore urge Members to support my proposal to remove clause 111.

Clause 112 introduces a new civil penalty that can be imposed on those who negligently make incorrect statements or fail, without reasonable excuse, to advise the Department of a relevant change of circumstances, resulting in an overpayment. The motivation behind the measure is to change the behaviour of customers who do not give accurate information about their circumstances or report changes to those circumstances and carry on receiving benefit they are no longer entitled to. This is another area that concerns have been raised about. As part of the Stormont House Agreement, I propose to remove the clause from the Bill. In the event that the clause does not stand part of the Bill, as a consequence, amendment Nos 76 and 78 relating to repeals listed in schedule 12, which relate to clause 112, also need to be removed. Therefore, I urge Members to support my proposal to remove clause 112.

3.15 pm

It may be helpful if I start by explaining that clause 115 removes references to a caution in section 5B of the Social Security Fraud Act (Northern Ireland) 2001. The effect will be that any person cautioned for an offence will no longer incur a loss of benefit under the legislation. The wider policy intention is the Department's drive to deter the commission of fraud by either imposing its own financial penalties, which are known as administrative penalties, or by seeking a conviction through the courts. The clause, therefore, will provide the enabling power to no longer apply a loss of benefits to cautions, given the policy direction of moving away from cautions to financial penalties and/or convictions.

Whilst it is my Department's policy to move away from cautions in future, I should add that, in some instances, the Public Prosecution Service may direct the Department, in the public interest, to offer a caution as an alternative to prosecution. On the introduction of the provision, in instances where a caution for a minor offence is administered, there will be no further loss of benefit. The provision, therefore, will provide an easement for the claimant in those circumstances, so it is proportionate to the nature of the offence. Successful opposition would remove the clause from the Bill, which, in effect, would mean that those offered a caution on a direction from the prosecutor will incur a loss of benefit as well. Therefore, I urge Members to reject that opposition.

In conclusion, I add that the provision in the clause is subject to commencement by order. As a result, cautions will continue to trigger a potential loss of benefit until such time as my Department seeks commencement of the provision.

Mr Maskey: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Very briefly, the Committee considered clauses 26, 109 and 110. Resulting from discussions with a range of stakeholders, it was particularly concerned about the potential for a claimant to lose universal credit for up to three years. Again, the Minister has, I think, very eloquently and comprehensively dealt with that.

The Minister has just concluded his remarks on clauses 109 and 110. The Committee expressed particular concerns on those clauses. The Minister has addressed those in the last few minutes.

In my capacity as Chair of the Social Development Committee, I will not make any further remarks this afternoon in the debate after we close on group 3. Suffice it to say that I place on record my thanks to the Committee officials for helping me, as Chair, to do my best to reflect the Committee's views and concerns. In a special meeting on Monday, the Committee took a briefing from departmental officials to consider the Minister's amendments and other developments, particularly the Stormont House Agreement. In view of that, neither the Committee nor I, on behalf of the Committee, will press that opposition as we move to the votes later today. I thank all those who helped the Committee in its deliberations. I look forward to the time ahead. There is at least one new member: Roy Beggs has been appointed to the Committee. I look forward to the Committee diligently doing its work in the time ahead to reflect on the various pieces of secondary legislation, statutory rules and so on that will come forward to it. As has been said —

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Maskey: I will not give way, a LeasCheann Comhairle. The Member has had ample opportunity to contribute to the debate. It is my understanding that he has not made one scintilla of an intervention in the last 36 hours or whatever, except to intervene on the Minister and me. The short answer is that I am not giving way.

Mr B McCrea: On a point of order, Mr Deputy Speaker. Would you care to rule that the Member is speaking on behalf of the Committee? He mentioned certain issues relating to opposition to clause 26 and then said that he was going to talk no further about them. I would have thought that it was perfectly reasonable for me to ask for more explanation on the part of the Committee, not as a Member, and that it would be entirely in order to ask those questions.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I do not believe that that is a point of order, but the Member has succeeded in getting it on the record.

Mr Maskey: Thank you for that ruling, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I very much support, as I always will, your ruling on this matter. As the Committee Chair, I am not here to debate with the Member. He has had ample opportunity to say what he wants to say about the Bill. He made no interventions to the Committee when we were involved in the deliberations on the Bill, which he could have done at any time. He has not made any interventions since the debate started yesterday morning. I am not giving way to him because, in my opinion, he is just trying to make a point at somebody else's expense. I do not have the time to waste on his frivolous approach.

I want to thank all those who have worked for and with the members of the Committee, its officials and the stakeholders from wider civic society who gave their valuable time and experience. A lot of that has been reflected in the Committee's views. The Committee produced a unanimous report expressing a range of concerns, most of which have been addressed in the last day or two. From my experience and in the view of the Committee, whatever about the precise means of addressing the issues, they have all been addressed to some extent or another as a result of the discussions amongst the parties and the British Government and, more importantly, the Stormont House Agreement, which is a five-party agreement. On that basis, I conclude my remarks as the Chair of the Social Development Committee.

Ms P Bradley: I welcome the opportunity to speak, albeit briefly, on the third group of amendments, which deals with sanctions. As we heard many times yesterday, welfare reform was designed to make work pay, increase social mobility and engage people to take responsibility. Sanctions was another highly contested issue that resulted in lengthy written and oral responses.

There was particular concern for people with disabilities and claimants with children, especially lone parents, given the lack of affordable childcare. It was also highlighted that the current system was difficult to understand, with some people falling into the category of benefit fraud through no fault of their own. I know through experience of many cases in my office that this is especially true of people who have worked for an employer for many years and, through no fault of their own, found themselves unemployed and having to apply for benefits. Because of conflicting information and the difficulties in completing forms, some of those people have found themselves in extreme debt. They have faced court action and been labelled as benefit fraudsters.

I am not naive, and I recognise that there are those in our communities who set out with the clear intention of defrauding the system. That is something that, I believe, all Members here would find completely unacceptable. It is for those reasons that we need a clear, unambiguous policy direction that leaves people certain of the penalties for non-compliance and fraudulent activity. I welcome the amendments resulting from the Stormont House Agreement and thank the Minister for setting out reasons for those amendments. I believe that the Minister will respond later, and I look forward to that.

I also thank the Minister for bringing up the issue of just cause. We know or we all should know that, in our current benefits system, just cause can be used as a reason why some people fall into making claims that they should not have made or do not turn up for appointments that they should have turned up for. Just cause is a very relevant reason, and I am glad that the Minister brought it up and that we know that it will pass on into universal credit as well.

I would also like to highlight the issue of sanctions, and I will ask the Minister to comment on it later. When we look at housing benefit and child components, I hope that he will highlight that those are not affected under sanctions if someone is in full receipt of both.

I look forward to the course of the debate, what has to be said, and, of course, to the Minister's response.

Mrs D Kelly: Again, my remarks will be much briefer than before. My party tabled one amendment in group 3, which I will come to shortly.

We welcome the Minister's recognition that three years is too harsh a sanction. Nonetheless, we are disappointed that it is being reduced at this stage to only 18 months. We will listen closely to what Mr Agnew has to say and, at this stage, we are minded to support the 26-week sanction clause. We will see what the response is to that during the course of the day and wait to hear the Minister's rationale.

I will pick up on the Minister's earlier comments and his explanation about the removal of a caution. If I understand the Minister correctly, I am right to say that a caution will no longer have applied to it a financial penalty. That would be a welcome improvement to the legislation.

We all know that many of our jails are already full. There is a commitment by the Minister in GB to reduce the number of women in prison. I would like to think that, as a result of welfare reform, we are not introducing sanctions and going to end up with more and more vulnerable people having to suffer not only a financial loss but, potentially, imprisonment as a result of not being able to understand and work their way through the system.

I will turn to our own amendment, which is No 16. As the Bill —

Mr Wilson: Will the Member give way?

Mrs D Kelly: I will, yes.

Mr Wilson: Would the Member accept that if, by that stage, someone has reached the maximum penalty, it is not because they cannot work their way through the system? There would already have been two opportunities when the system could have been explained to them, and penalties for not operating the system would already have been invoked, so their ignorance could no longer be a reason at that stage. If you reach the stage of 18 months of a penalty, it is because you are wilfully breaking the rules. Most people would feel that it is reasonable to expect a severe penalty at that stage.

Mrs D Kelly: I will not deny that there will be some who wilfully fail to comply. Mr Wilson may know of many vulnerable people. I am quite sure he does within his community, particularly many people now living with long-term mental ill health. Huge numbers of vulnerable people living in our communities have difficulties with everyday life skills and coping. As a consequence of some of the reductions across the health and social care sector and to the support mechanisms, people are finding it tough to work their way through the system.

Mr Wilson: Will you give way on that point?

Mrs D Kelly: OK.

Mr Wilson: Would you not accept that, by the time they reach the maximum penalty stage, the individual has been through the system, knows what the penalties were imposed for and knows what they did wrong? If it is a problem that even they cannot overcome because of alcoholism, drug addiction or whatever, by that stage, other agencies will have picked up the fact that they have been penalised for not obeying the rules. If it is vulnerable people, they should have been picked up by the system anyway. By the time you get to the third set of sanctions, it is really probably those who are wilfully deciding, "I do not want to abide by the rules". If that is the case, of course a penalty should be involved.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for his intervention, but there are still huge numbers of people who slip through all sorts of nets. We have seen the outworking of some of the benefit reforms in GB, and some people have taken their own life because they have nowhere to turn in trying to pay some of the fines. Eighteen months is a long time to do without money. I know that Mr Wilson is making the point that potentially some of those have other sources of income, otherwise they would be complying with the legislation. I take that point on board, but 18 months remains too long a time to do without money. At this stage, we are very minded to support Mr Agnew's amendment in relation to the sanction at 26 weeks.

3.30 pm

I move on to amendment No 16, in relation to sanctions being imposed for not taking up an offer of paid work and for failing to provide a good reason for doing so. The term, "good reason" is not defined in the legislation, and we in the SDLP feel very strongly that the regulations or guidance must be based on real-life situations and must take account of the wide range of reasons why a claimant may not take up paid work, such as caring responsibilities, sickness, mental ill-health and so the list continues. Our amendment seeks to give claimants at least 15 days to provide that good reason, and we will listen carefully to what the Minister has to say on that point.

As it stands, there is no specific time limit in universal credit regulations by which claimants can provide that good reason. One argument that we have heard is that it provides flexibility for an individual claimant's particular circumstances, and our amendment does not contradict that. We want to see claimants being given at least 15 days. In theory, as the Bill stands, a claimant could be penalised for not providing good reason immediately.

Mr Wilson: Will she give way?

Mrs D Kelly: Go on.

Mr Wilson: She has accepted that there is not a specified time limit. She wants to introduce a time limit, albeit in the terms "at least 15 days". Does she accept that, in some cases, people will be able to provide evidence almost immediately, but at other times, if reports or something had to be received, it might take longer? The fact that there is no specified time limit allows that flexibility. In fact, it allows much more flexibility than she is suggesting, because once you say "at least 15 days" you implant in people's minds that that is a time they should be working towards. In some cases, that might be more than enough time, but, in a small number of cases, it might not be enough time.

Mrs D Kelly: I said at the outset that we would listen carefully to the commitment that the Minister would give on regulations.

When I was being brought up, I was always told that "she" was the cat's mother. If it happens once or twice, you would not mind, but to constantly be referred to as "she" across the Benches is a different matter.

I ask Members to reflect on the statement —

Mr Wilson: Will she give way on that point?

Mrs D Kelly: No, I think I have given — [Laughter.]

Mr Wilson: I was not suggesting she was the cat's mother or anything else. Mr Deputy Speaker, yesterday you upbraided me for supposedly — I maintain that I did not do it — referring to someone as "you". The alternative you have is "the Member", "he" or "she", and that was the terminology that I used under your guidance. If the Member thinks she is being referred to as the cat's mother, to a certain extent you bear some responsibility for that.

Mrs D Kelly: For the Member's benefit, my name is Dolores; Dolores Kelly. If the Member wishes to refer to me by name on some occasion, it would be most welcome. I go by either name.

That ends my contribution. We will listen carefully to what the Minister has said and what he will say. We will also listen to how Mr Agnew, who has a number of amendments tabled, explains his amendments.

Mr Swann: Much has been made of the petitions of concern that have been tabled in the other groups. Despite the tyrannical approach of others, I am not going to waste much time going over that. After today is done, the chests have been beaten and the votes have been cast, as the debate so far has proven, all Members and all parties are willing to work with the Minister to produce a better Welfare Bill.

This group concentrates on the sanctions. When I made a contribution yesterday, I referred to the Ad Hoc Committee that was established in regard to the Welfare Bill. I have not heard it referenced much by other Members in their contributions to this debate. An awful lot of work went through at that stage. The Ad Hoc Committee on Conformity with Equality Requirements in regard to the Welfare Bill is the only Committee that has ever been established in this Assembly in that form. It was established with the support of the Ulster Unionist Party, although it was opposed by the DUP, which I understand, and the Alliance Party. The report by that Committee made one recommendation — recommendation 4 — specifically in regard to sanctions.

The Committee recommended:

"the Department for Social Development should ensure that the provisions of the Welfare Reform Bill are appropriately amended to mitigate the impact of any sanctions imposed on lone parents, those with mental health issues and children, in order to minimise the potential for extreme hardship and avoid destitution for anyone."

— [Interruption.] Mr Deputy Speaker, I am willing to give way to Mrs Kelly or Mr Agnew.

Mr Humphrey: I am not sure they are listening to you.

Mr Swann: Are you finished, Mrs Kelly?

Mrs D Kelly: My apologies.

Mr Swann: When that report was published and debated in the House, it contained that specific recommendation and was opposed by Sinn Féin.

Before I move on to addressing each of the specific amendments, I take this opportunity to ask the Minister to give the House, maybe in his winding-up speech, his high-level assessment of how he feels the new sanctions regime in GB is working out. I have been made aware that, bizarrely, the Department for Work and Pensions has tried to claim that people enjoy being given a hard-hitting sanction as a jolt to get them into action. Surprisingly, like nearly every other impartial reporter or observer, we believe that using some vagaries to describe the real problems stemming from the legislation is quite unbecoming of a Department. I hope that the Minister shares our thoughts on that.

I ask him as well —

Mr Wilson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Swann: Yes.

Mr Wilson: Would he accept that the sanctions should be imposed not only for those who refuse to abide by the rules but to ensure that the system is not abused so that those who do play by the rules do not feel that they are being penalised for playing by the rules while other people just throw them out the window?

Mr Swann: I agree fully with the Member. However, the point that I am making is that DWP has said that it feels that a hard-hitting sanction gives people a jolt to get them into action. I do not think that that is how we should be looking at sanctions; it should be for exactly the point that the Member raises. It is to prevent those abusing the system from doing so and to make sure that penalties are in place.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Swann: Certainly, yes.

Mr B McCrea: This is on the issue that I wanted to develop earlier about whether sanctions are actually effective. The Member talked about DWP, the Oakley report, presumably, and all those issues. The most vulnerable in our society fall foul of sanctions because they do not know how to go through them, yet the most cute and clever people know how to get round them. I would have preferred to see a way of dealing with people other than taking money from them, because I do not know how you live for 18 months with no money.

Mr Swann: The Member makes a fair point. It is about those most vulnerable people. Again, I ask the Minister to address the concerns on that. I think that what has been proven in GB is that those most affected by sanctions are young people. What preparation is the Minister going to make to ensure that similar experiences are not repeated here in Northern Ireland?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for giving way. Let me try to deal with a number of those points in the context of this issue. This question could rightly be asked: do we have any evidence that the new sanction regime will be more effective? Herein is one of the conundrums of this place. On one hand, we are getting beaten up — metaphorically, thankfully — because we are giving too much money to people. On the other hand, we are getting beaten up, metaphorically, because we are not giving enough. So, it is almost as though you can never win.

Let me refer the Member to the research that the Joseph Rowntree Foundation did in 2014. That recognised that, while welfare recipients are usually aware that the penalties are part of the system, they also have little knowledge of when they could be imposed or how they could be avoided or reversed, implying that claimants are often punished for a lack of understanding, rather than deliberate non-compliance.

In September 2013, the Department for Work and Pensions appointed Matthew Oakley, to whom reference was made yesterday. Mr Oakley made a few other telling comments, as well as those that the Member referred to. In his report, which was subsequently published in July 2014, he recommended that the focus should be on:

“ensuring that claimants fully understand the system of benefit sanctions and, in particular, that claimants are always made aware when they are at risk of a sanction and what they need to do if they do not think they should be.”

The Government accepted all those recommendations.

The system for universal credit is clear. The claimants will be engaged from day one through the claimant interview and their claimant commitment, which will inform them about the sanction.

That is the important issue in relation to the experience that we have had following the Oakley report, and also in ensuring that claimants have the appropriate information.

Mr Swann: I thank the Minister for that contribution. I was really trying to garner from him whether, in putting forward his proposals on the sanctions, he had learned anything from the DWP stuff, and whether we will see the outworkings of that in the Bill. What DWP has actually proven is that young people are more affected, and I would like the Minister's assurance of more support there.

I suppose that it comes through to the Employment and Learning Committee. We are looking at budget cuts for 16,000 young people who are coming out of colleges, and we all know that those will be the more vulnerable and less able students. I think the Minister has also said that he is looking at reducing the amount of money that will go to essential skills. We are not preparing our young people to enter the world of work and employment, and then we will adversely affect them through these benefits and any sanctions as well. We need to make sure that we have a package in place so that we do not completely disaffect young people in Northern Ireland through what is coming forward.

I want to move on to the amendments. Amendment Nos 14, 23 and 25 have been tabled by the Minister. They reflect broadly what was put forward at the Stormont House Agreement and the movement from three years to 18 months. I am led to believe that, at one stage, Sinn

Féin said that any tightening up of sanctions would be unacceptable. I would be keen to see the move to 26 weeks, which it thought was preferable. We have reached an amicable agreement, and we are happy that 18 months is quite a good compromise. It is tougher than the current system, but it is not so hard-hitting that we do not have the opportunity to avoid the worst experiences witnessed in Great Britain.

Mr Agnew's amendment Nos 15, 24 and 26, if adopted, would actually serve to undermine the remainder of the new sanctioning powers. The sliding scale of penalties makes sense and, theoretically, if we changed them at the top, we would have to change the full range of sanctions. As the Minister and Mr Wilson pointed out, the easiest way to avoid being sanctioned is for claimants to honour their commitments to social welfare.

The other amendment in the group is amendment No 16, from the SDLP, and it raises a useful point. I am sure that we are all aware of cases in which claimants believe that they have been wrongly or unfairly sanctioned. I am sure that other Members deal with them day and daily through their offices, as I do. Sometimes that turns out to be the case, but on other occasions it turns out that the office was entirely justified in taking the actions that they did. Nevertheless, the proposal to allow claimants a period — in this case, 15 days — to provide good reason may bring some order to the condition issue. I would like an assurance: what would happen if the information was not available to the applicant within that 15-day period? Could the applicant be adversely affected? The thing that I am aware of, and which I am sure the Minister will refer to, is that there will be sufficient flexibility in the universal credit regulations, with no specific time limits for producing good reason. I would hate to see somebody timed out if that 15-day limit was put into the legislation. At this stage, the Ulster Unionist Party would be more inclined to opt for what has been proposed by the Department.

That concludes my contribution.

Mr Dickson: Members and the Minister have referred to the use of petitions of concern. Once again, I register my concern about that, but we shall move on.

This is about putting sanctions in place, and we cannot shy away from that. Sanctions for those who are in receipt of benefits are not something that I take satisfaction from, but they form a functional part of the Bill by helping to ensure that claimants meet their obligations. They also encourage and support people back into work. It is important that claimants understand why there are sanctions, what those sanctions are and how they can avoid them by following the appropriate guidance and rules.

Once again, we have gained favourable terms. For example, the CAB expressed its concern about the incorporation of civil penalties in the Bill. I understand those concerns, so their removal from the Bill is welcome and something that I support. During the Committee Stage of the Bill, stakeholders expressed serious concerns about the proposal for sanctions to cover a period of three years. Of course, such measures would cause, and have been documented as causing, unjust hardship and, indeed, breaches of human rights to some of the most vulnerable in our society. Therefore, instead of three years, as implemented at Westminster, I will be supporting the amendment to reduce the period to 18 months. That was agreed by the Executive parties as part of a compromise. Again, it represents more favourable treatment for Northern Ireland than for the other devolved regions.

3.45 pm

That is what was agreed but it seems that, in regard to much of this, as in many other areas of the Bill, there are those who are far more concerned about their popularity than their responsibilities. They, like the Alliance Party, agreed to bring forward the Welfare Reform Bill on the basis of Executive agreement. However, from those parties, we see a raft of amendments that contradicts that position. We intend to keep to our word; others appear to wish to do otherwise.

Finally, the welfare state as envisaged under Beveridge and that which I and many in this room have grown up under is perceived as a system of social insurance to guard against the social challenges that face us in life. That is unsustainable unless those who are fit actually work. For too long, Northern Ireland has failed people through a lack of jobs, education and skills. Now is the time to address that and to provide the safety net for those who need it but to encourage those who can work to do so and contribute economically. We must develop this society into a fair, free and open place where all should have the opportunity to work if that is what they wish to do, and where those who cannot work are supported by a welfare and benefits system that is there at the point of need.

Mr F McCann: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for answering some of the questions around sanctions and for putting people right. As Robin Swann said, it is no surprise that, for a long time, we have argued against the introduction of sanctions, especially in their most severe form of three years. We have been on record over many years in the House as saying that there needed to be a different approach taken. One of the reasons that we continually argued for that was to do with people who may be bipolar, people who suffer from other mental illnesses, the partially sighted and people with other disabilities, who sometimes may not understand the pages and pages that people get issued. When they go through them, all that there is on them is a date on which you have to turn up. We have to ensure that we get this right, certainly for the people who will be dealing with the information that is given out.

I noted what Robin said. I do not know whether he was criticising us for arguing at the recent talks for the cut to 18 months or criticising us for not saying that no sanctions at all should be applied. Perhaps he can tell us.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member take an intervention?

Mr F McCann: Not at the minute. I will take it in a minute. I want to deal with some stuff. I remember when sanctions were first introduced in the House. We put up arguments in all the debates and tabled amendments. I think that they became known as the "Attwood sanctions", because, as a result of those, between 1 May 2011 and November 2013, 81,180 people were reported for sanctions. Of those, almost 27,000 people were sanctioned, probably with the loss of benefit. That is why we have been so severe in our arguments and in debates around the implementation of any type of sanction.

We went into discussions pre-Christmas. Did we get all that we wanted? No, we did not. What we did get was a compromise to allow the Bill to go through and the institutions to stay up. What really concerns me is listening again to two Members — Dolores Kelly and Robin Swann — talk about what they would accept. They forget that, on 17 December, in the four-party discussions, they had accepted two years as the maximum, yet Dolores Kelly is saying today that she wants it to be reduced to 26 weeks. Maybe she can explain that. I do not want to labour the point. The facts are there, and they speak for themselves. Sinn Féin went into this trying, as much as we can, to argue the principles that we stand for. Others came in with theirs, and there was a compromise. A partnership was forged, but people sought to walk away from that partnership. They need to stand up and be truthful and honest about why they have done that and not try to pull the wool over people's eyes in the House today.

Mr Attwood: The Minister will be aware that I sometimes have a sense that DSD and the Social Security Agency can be perceived as being the outreach of DWP; there might have been echoes of that even in the last contribution. There were echoes of it in the Minister's opening remarks, when the words that he used for the overall sanctions regime were "tough but fair". If ever I heard DWP language, that was it. The regime that we should try to have and should have been trying harder over many years to have should be fair and reasonable and fair and proportionate. Those should be the standards against which to judge any sanctions regime. It should not be "tough but fair" but fair and reasonable. It may be a fine point, and I am sure that you want to correct the record.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will give way.

Mr Storey: I referred to this earlier, and, in fairness, the Member may not have been in the House. I want to dispense with the idea that I somehow constantly live in the shadow of DWP, but the reality for me, as Minister, is that I cannot ignore DWP or the House of Commons — nor would I want to — and the fact that we are part of the United Kingdom. I want to continue to have a working relationship with DWP, because it has had many good experiences. It has also had many difficulties and challenges. I also said that we need an effective sanctions system that encourages responsibility and deters non-compliance. I find myself in a situation in which there are those who make the allegation that, on one hand, we are going soft, but, on the other hand, we are then accused of not being compassionate enough; I made that reference earlier. The comments that he attributes to me — I did say those words — are not in any way a contradiction of my previous comments in the House over the last number of hours when I said that we must always remember that this is about people. We need a framework and a structure that tries, as well as it possibly can, to cover most of the eventualities that come as a result of having a system such as our current one.

Mr Attwood: At least we can agree on the word "fair". That is my conclusion from that contribution. To some degree, we are all talking in a vacuum, because universal credit has not been rolled out very far in Britain and has not been rolled out at all in the North. Given that and the fact that we are in a bit of a vacuum, I have tried, in any contributions that I have made over the last two days, to borrow from the narrative that is growing in Britain about what is happening as a consequence of welfare reform.

You referred earlier to a reference that I made to one of the in-house DWP people who was making assessments around how universal credit is operating. I think that there is much to learn from the growing narrative in Britain about what is actually happening in the real lives of people, and I have done that in this debate as best I can. For that reason, when it comes to this overall group of amendments on sanctions, it is important that we begin to acknowledge even what has been said in the last three weeks on how sanctions in Britain are working and what conclusions we might draw from that. The conclusion that I draw is that we should try to go for a lighter sanctions regime, one that is fair and reasonable, when we have the opportunity to go in that direction.

This is what has been in evidence to the Select Committee on Work and Pensions at Westminster in the last three weeks. The Minister referred to Matthew Oakley.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will in a second. Matthew Oakley might have said that the DWP needs to monitor and be careful how it manages its sanctions regime, but he went further and said that it would be wise for the Government to undertake a general stocktake of the system. He called for a much broader review of what is happening as well as making particular recommendations with respect to the sanctions regime.

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for giving way. This is where we all like to be selective when it suits us, depending on the argument that we are making. If you look at the entirety of what he went on to say, he acknowledged that sanctions have a vital role to play. He also made a series of recommendations that would help to encourage more claimants to do the right thing and help save taxpayers' money. Sanctions are applied as a last resort, when claimants fail to do enough to find work or attend appointments. Recent research shows that 72% of claimants say that they are more likely to follow the rules because of the threat of having payments stopped. That was the point that my colleague and good friend Mr Wilson was making.

The report also recognises that the vast majority of claimants do the right thing, with 95% of claimants not sanctioned. The Government already has a robust system in place, and only around 13% of sanction decisions are changed on reconsideration or appeal. That gives a broader explanation of what Mr Oakley was saying in his report. I trust that that is more balanced than the particular narrative that the Member would like to write.

Mr Attwood: I agree with much of that and disagree with some of it. That is the nature of life and of this Chamber, certainly. Given that you have clearly done the homework in relation to what Matthew Oakley might say, I also recommend to you what was said at the very same Select Committee hearing that Matthew Oakley attended in relation to the evidence of the Employment Related Services Association; the Trussell Trust which is one of the main providers of food banks; the mental health charity, Mind; and the Centre for Social and Economic Inclusion. In recent evidence to the Select Committee, during the two-and-a-half-hour session when Matthew Oakley gave his evidence, this is what they all said in respect of sanctions.

Tony Wilson of the Centre for Social and Economic Inclusion said that sanctions:

“are running so far ahead ... of what works ... we should suspend the applications of sanctions ... until we have a much clearer idea of what works ... and the impact of sanctions.”

I do not know that I would even go that far, because I am not calling for a sanctions-free welfare system. On the other hand, somebody with the authority of that organisation drew that conclusion.

Paul Farmer, the chief executive of the mental health charity Mind said that sanctions among those on employment support allowance had risen from 1,700 a month to 4,800 a month, adding that there had been a disproportional impact on people with mental health problems. Chris Mould, the chair of the Trussell Trust, said that there had been a radical change in the way very disproportionate decisions were being taken since the latter part of 2012, adding that it was clear that some job centres were being more punitive than others. He said that, in too many cases, it takes too long for claimants to secure redress if they have had their benefit withdrawn.

4.00 pm

Kirsty McHugh, the chief executive of the Employment Related Services Association, called for an overhaul, including the introduction of an early warning system, which could be used at first offence rather than imposing a sanction. Whilst I do not think that we will be able to convince the Minister about our amendment or other amendments, I think that there is a lot of good authority in what all those organisations are saying to the Select Committee in London. When it comes to the management and application of sanctions in the event that universal credit is rolled out — you know that I do not believe that it will be rolled out but that it will crash after the election should the Tories get re-elected, and, I suspect, sooner or later, should Labour gets elected — and all this happens, should we not be looking at the experience of Britain and how sanctions might or might not apply in Northern Ireland?

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will.

Mr Storey: Does the Member also accept that we have endeavoured to put in place a sanctions regime that reflects the situation in Northern Ireland? While I greatly respect the organisations and have met the Trussell Trust about food banks and the other organisations to which he referred, does he also accept — it follows on from Mr Swann's point about the committee that had been set up and the concerns that were raised by organisations in Northern Ireland that made representation to the all-party working group to the subcommittee that was established — that we have sought, specifically with reference to comments and concerns that were raised by organisations in Northern Ireland, which have helped to shape, reflect and mould what we have put into the Bill so that that gives us, yet again, a Northern Ireland version, which, for me, still remains, despite his concerns about the big hand of DWP controlling me from a distance. That is where I come from as the Minister with responsibility in Northern Ireland. That is not to minimise the experience of other organisations in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr Attwood: I never maintained that DWP had an undue influence on you. I am a bit more cautious about whether that is the case for others. However, putting that aside, I think that you can manage our benefits system in a way that suits our circumstances. Certainly, my experience when I was in your job was that there were many people, some of them not too far away from here, who applied their minds and their time to work to that outcome. I am just saying that, in addition to taking the knowledge of the many groups that are working with your Department on the management and roll-out of welfare reform — I know a bit about that from having spoken to the head of the Social Security Agency — there is stuff in London, in the Mother of Parliaments, as Mr Wilson referred to it this morning, that can inform the judgement of the Department as we move forward. In that regard, the Minister will be aware that one of the unions in Britain — the PCS — said that undue pressure had been put on its members to meet targets with the sanctions regime. I have absolutely no doubt that there will be no such pressure applied here if pressure was applied in Britain. However, we have to warn ourselves about that.

I will also refer to the conclusions of other people who made representations to the committee in Britain. I will not read it all into the record because I think that you are getting my drift, Minister — perhaps not, but I would like to think so. They said that sanctions were a postcode lottery; there was initial evidence that suggested that, for example, one in 10 benefit claimants in Derby, Southampton and Burnley was being sanctioned, but that, if you lived in Richmond, Ellbridge or Runnymede — are they in the south of England? — the chances of being sanctioned were one in 50. That comes from the University of Oxford, which is an authoritative source. You can speculate on all the reasons that that might be the case, and I think that people do not know why there is such a disproportionate difference, but we need to ensure that, as the regime rolls out through the social security offices, that sort of postcode lottery on an initial basis does not begin to be replicated here.

Moreover, the evidence has begun to emerge that people who are sanctioned disappear from the benefits regime. One person, Professor David Stuckler, again of Oxford University, gave evidence that 43% of people who are sanctioned leave the world of DWP and the welfare system. They are “disappearing from view”, he said in evidence. We note the Minister's amendments and welcome that that is certainly an advance. The point again, however, is that, even if the regime is a more moderate regime than might otherwise have been the case, there nonetheless seems to be a critical case developing in Britain, where up to 43% of people who are sanctioned in one area or another might end up disappearing from view.

In that regard, the final authority that I will rely on in this debate is the evidence that DWP had to undertake 49 peer reviews of claimant management cases because of the deaths of people, where those people had taken their own life. Perhaps the Minister will be able to indicate that. There is a wealth of knowledge across Northern Ireland on addressing the needs of people who are self-harming or at risk of suicide. There are indications from Britain through stories in the media, and through a level of evidence that is beginning to appear, that potentially one of the contributory factors to all of that was the benefits-sanction regime that was imposed on them. I do think that, in our situation, given the scale of suicides in Northern Ireland, we need to be particularly mindful of how we can manage that to ensure that the apparent evidence that is emerging in Britain will not be replicated here in the event that universal credit ever gets off the ground.

All of that informs the judgement of the party, both of the amendments proposed by Mr Agnew and the amendment proposed by us. It is to try to build into the body of legislation a regime that does protect the individual claimant and draws some conclusions, whether the application of those conclusions is fully justified or not, from the apparent evidence that is beginning to emerge in Britain about how the benefit-sanctions regime impacts on the lives of customers. That is why, at this stage, we suggest that you err on the side of those arguments rather than on the other side. In particular, I do not think that the SDLP amendment does any violence, Mr Wilson, to your argument or to what is in the Bill by stating "fifteen days", because it gives the person at least 15 days. It gives you the flexibility in the period thereafter, so you have both the flexibility and the certainty for the claimant in that regard.

In concluding, I will raise a point that Mrs Kelly raised and that, I think, is also in the mind of Mr Agnew. When it comes to opposition to clause 115, what precisely does that clause mean?

You did speak to it in your opening remarks, but will you confirm precisely — because there is a bit of a muddle in the minds of some — the consequence of what you are proposing in terms of caution and penalty or no caution and just penalty? If you could clarify that, it might clarify whether there will be opposition to clause 115 later in the debate.

Mr Allister: I will be brief. I want to address the issue of the Minister not pressing clause 112, the one that would have allowed a civil penalty. The Bill as originally drafted had various levels of procedures to deal with inappropriate claims. It had, of course, quite rightly, the option of prosecuting someone through the criminal courts for fraudulent claims. It then had the option of a penalty notice instead of a prosecution, and then it originally had clause 112, which would allow the civil penalty.

To prove fraud, of course, you have to prove the essential components of dishonesty and intention, or you will never prove, to the criminal level of satisfaction, the offence of anything touching upon fraud. As I read the Bill originally, for the many circumstances where you could probably not attain that high level of proof required and you could not, beyond all reasonable doubt, show the requisite dishonesty or intention, you had the sort of safety net of a civil penalty notice.

Of course, when many people are interviewed about alleged fraudulent claims for benefits they will say that they did not realise, they made a mistake or they did not intend, and that is how it is passed off. The prosecuting authorities have to defeat that proposition if they are going to succeed in a criminal prosecution, whereas the Bill originally left you with the option of at least serving a civil penalty notice on someone who was saying that it was a mistake or that they should have told you etc, which would allow them to escape prosecution. Therefore, to remove that civil penalty option entirely from the matrix of how you can deal with inappropriate claims seems to me to leave a gap and, indeed, create a charter for people to say, "I'm sorry; I just got it wrong. I made a mistake" etc. I think that that will perhaps be much exercised. That is why I am concerned that the Stormont House Agreement or Stormont Castle agreement includes the notion that you have to take away from the enforcement side of things that safety net, which was some comfort to enforcement. I would like the Minister to explain why he thinks that is a good thing. It seems to me to be a bad thing. That is the point that I wanted to make.

Mr Agnew: At the outset of my contribution on this group of amendments, I would like to pay tribute to the work of the Social Development Committee, particularly those who acted as advocates against the three-year maximum penalty. It is welcome that the Minister has put forward an amendment to bring that to 18 months. Clearly, as my amendments show, I do not think that it goes far enough, but I am pleased to see that there has been some move in that regard, in what I see as the right direction.

We have to put into context what that can mean for people. In these debates around welfare, I go back to my time working with the homeless. I know that I have referred to it a few times, but that direct experience served me well in understanding what we do here today, and indeed yesterday, when we discuss these issues.

4.15 pm

The Minister has suggested, for example, that 26 weeks is too lenient a sanction to impose on someone who has, as the current model proposes, failed to meet the requirements on three occasions. What that would actually mean for people is that, in some cases, for 26 weeks, which is my proposal, they would go without any income or would, at best, receive hardship payments at half the level of, say, current JSA to live on. We have heard references to organisations that provide food banks. It means that people will become reliant on handouts and food banks for six months.

Mr Wilson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: I will give way in a second. I had some reluctance in putting forward this amendment because I still find that incredibly punitive, but, reading the mood of the House, it seems that that would somehow describe me as a bleeding-heart liberal, as I am sure Mr Wilson will, or something to that effect. To me, it is still an incredible sanction to impose on someone.

Mr Wilson: I thank the Member for giving way. He states this as a certainty that means that somebody will be without money for 26 weeks. First, that is not actually what the Bill says. If he reads paragraph 9, he will see that regulations can be made for cases in which there is no reduction, revision of reductions and termination of reductions. There will be circumstances in which there is a way back. That is the first thing.

Of course, the other thing is that if someone finds that they have put themselves in a situation where they have sanctions, they always have the option of looking for work. This certainty that, somehow or other, once sanctions are imposed, people are left destitute for 26 weeks or 18 months is not a correct description of what will or could happen in reality. Surely it is the job of the Assembly, when making law, to inject some responsibility into those who get benefits from the state, especially when looking in on that are people who feel that the abusers are sometimes treated better than those who abide by the regulations.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for his intervention. He talks about responsibility. Of course, we each take responsibility for our actions. We are talking about cases of disability and the mentally unwell. In cases of severe disability or mental ill health, would these people pass the competency test? How can we apply that level of responsibility in a system where we recognise the level of disability and, indeed, seek to compensate for it, but, on the other hand, seek to punish people for actions that may be a result of disability, mental ill health etc?

Mr Wilson: I thank the Member for giving way. His concern is for people who have either got huge mental-health problems or disabilities. First of all, in the debate on the last bunch of amendments, we discussed the advice-giving opportunities that there are and the resources put into them. The people whom he describes will also have significant input from social services and other statutory bodies. Is he suggesting that they do not do their job in helping people through the network, as well of course as the help available through social security offices?

It is not that people are left without a safety net; that is the whole point. It is not that they are left without alternatives or, indeed, that the regulations are so draconian that there is no way back when somebody gets themselves into that position.

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member again for his intervention. I turn the question round: why, as it is in many cases, when this is someone's sole source of income, would they decide to persistently miss an appointment? Why would they make that choice, and we are assuming, following Mr Wilson's argument, that they are competent to choose, in the full knowledge — the Minister said that the person must be aware of the sanctions regime — that their primary or, perhaps, only source of income will be drastically cut or withdrawn? Why would someone choose not to go to that appointment or job interview? I know there is this great idea that a huge raft of people are just sitting gleefully at home thanks to the benefits system and saying, "I am not even going to attend my appointments, because I do not care". Why would people inflict that level of punishment on themselves? What possible motive could they have? Are they a society of anarchists, who really want to bring down the system, so that they are willing to suffer no food and an inability to pay for the basic necessities? Is it that they are so opposed to the system that they would do that? Why is that? I would argue that, if there is a high number of people being sanctioned in such a way, we have to look at why that might be.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: Certainly.

Mr Storey: Does the Member not accept that, when the decision maker seeks to establish whether a claimant had good reason to fail to meet the requirements — we need to keep going back to what the process is — they will take into account the customer's physical and mental health? Does that not give some reassurance — maybe it is even an incentive — that the concerns that are being raised are addressed in a way that is to the benefit of the individual?

Mr Agnew: It is my experience that sanctions are applied all too quickly and easily. When a claimant goes to an appointment, and the agency is behind schedule for whatever reason — it can happen — they are required to wait for 30 minutes, for example. If a claimant turns up five minutes late because of their childcare arrangements — there are many circumstances — their benefits can be stopped. You can then appeal and give your reasons for that, but the sanctions are applied too readily and, even under the Minister's proposals, improvement though they are on the Tories' proposals, all too harshly.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way on that point?

Mr Agnew: Yes.

Mr Storey: It is clear from the White Paper that the higher level of sanctions would apply only to claimants who are subject to all work-related requirements and have deliberately and repeatedly failed to meet them. The two key words in relation to avoidance are "deliberately and repeatedly". Obviously, I will set out in regulations where we are going with this, but I think that we need to keep those two words very clearly in our mind as we work through this.

Mr Agnew: Again, I thank the Minister for his intervention, because he brings me to another point that I think I am right in picking up from my reading of the proposals. The higher-level sanctions are imposed under what is essentially a three-strikes rule. The first act under this new sanctions regime, however, is to suspend someone's benefits for three months. Again, like others, I will wait on the feedback on my opposition to clause 115. My intention was to retain a system in which the first strike should be a caution. In my experience, in the vast majority of cases of people missing appointments or failing to attend interviews, and so on, it happens for genuine reasons, so give people the benefit of the doubt on their first instance. Yes, if persistent failure is shown, higher-level sanctions can be applied, but clause 115 means that we jump immediately to three months for people who could be a minute late to an appointment, and another person could then be in front of them. People would then have to challenge that decision, and they may or may not be successful in that. That is jumping too far. It is about intent.

What was the intention of the legislation in Westminster and what is the intention of the legislation here today? Members who spoke previously talked about some of the evidence from across the water. There was recently a programme on Radio 4, and, on the back of it, I questioned the Minister around targets and incentives for applying sanctions. He has given assurances that that is not the case in Northern Ireland, but, as I said to him at the time —

Mr Storey: On eight different occasions.

Mr Agnew: Absolutely. But, equally, those assurances were given in GB. A whistle-blower who was quoted in a 'Guardian' article certainly suggested that incentives for staff were being put in place. This is a direct quote from somebody working as a Jobcentre Plus adviser:

"Suddenly you're not helping somebody into sustainable employment, which is what you're employed to do. You're looking for ways to trick your customers into 'not looking for work'. You come up with many ways. I've seen dyslexic customers given written job searches, and when they don't produce them — what a surprise — they're sanctioned. The only target that anyone seems to care about is stopping people's money. 'Saving the public purse' is the catchphrase that is used in our office".

I go back to the intention of the Tory Government and, even with the Minister's amendment, what we are proposing to replicate here. They made it clear from the outset that their intention was to cut the welfare bill by £18 billion. The Minister was asked for evidence. Why this level of sanctions? Where is the evidence that this level of sanctions is the right one? I have no doubt that the evidence would show that this level of sanctions will save money through not paying out benefits, but I have not seen the evidence that it will mean more people getting into work. That is where my concern lies.

I have proposed an amendment for a 26-week sanction, which, of course, has been subject to a petition of concern. I will be opposing clause 26 altogether. The Committee originally proposed to do that, but it seems that that position has changed. I will be maintaining the position, because the new benefits regime being proposed is draconian. It is based on saving money, not on doing what is claimed, which is motivating — if I can use that term — people back into work.

Mr B McCrea: I wanted to speak to this set of amendments because I heard the same Radio 4 programme, and it prompted me to do a bit of investigation around whether sanctions actually work. I think that it was said in that programme that you were more likely to lose your benefits than you were to find a job. It revealed one telling thing, which I said already in response to Mr Swann: the most vulnerable in our society are the ones who fail a lot of the tests, because either they do not understand properly or they do not get the proper information. Those who are determined to take advantage of our good nature do so with a certain amount of imagination and innovation, and they are particularly difficult to deal with.

I would like to have seen whether there was a completely different way of approaching non-compliance to see whether taking people's money away actually does anything. This is the point that I wanted to make to the Chairperson, but he did not wish to engage with me. What is the difference between three years and 18 months? If you can make it for 18 months, you can make it for three years. There is something wrong in that logic.

The debate has been quite interesting in illuminating that there has been an agreement. I am in favour of the agreement that has been reached here. Mr Humphrey said that he has had to reach for his tablets because he has seen me in the Lobby with him several times. It is a genuine point. I am voting absolutely with the Executive on this because it is good that, when you tackle a serious issue such as this, there has been five-party agreement. I accept that I am not in it, but it is the right way to go forward.

Therefore, I was surprised that the number of amendments that came through seemed to undermine that. That is why I have not been supporting the amendments, even though I might have some belief in the points that people are trying to put forward.

Mr Humphrey: Will the Member give way?

Mr B McCrea: Of course.

Mr Humphrey: I am not sure whether the Member read 'The Guardian' as well as listening to Radio Four. I have sat here, as have many Members, through the vast bulk of this debate, but it strikes me that in some parties there is either very little or poor communication or, indeed, none. Does the Member agree?

Mr B McCrea: I will take the opportunity to make a comment that I was going to open with. The Chairperson, rather uncharitably, I feel, had a go at me. In answer to Mr Humphrey's question, I have been here for every vote in this debate and I stayed until 10.00 pm last night to watch it. I did not contribute to the debate because, frankly, there are some people, and we all know it, who think that the level of your contribution should be measured by the length of your speech or by the number of amendments as opposed to the quality of your argument. I chose to intervene where I thought I could make a difference, but I got the benefit of listening to the debate as others will have heard it.

I pay tribute to the fact that there is an agreement, but the debate became fractious and confusing. There was some miscommunication in parties about what they had agreed to the day before, and that was unhelpful. I will even say that some of the amendments that were put forward were rushed. I am voting consistently on the Bill because I think that there is a need for a five-party agreement and that whatever the agreement is, that is what we should go forward on with a united front.

Mr Fra McCann very kindly apologised for not allowing me an intervention, and I gratefully accepted his comments. I wanted to say that I found it useful to understand why there was a change in Sinn Féin and the Committee's position from three years to 18 months. Mr Agnew may be right that 18 months is not enough, but the really interesting thing is that there is agreement and that is why we have reached a compromise. That is the art of politics, and that is what we have to accept.

I have questions to ask, and this is going to sound a little strange, given that I am not sure that sanctions actually work. Let me say some things that, I think, people think but do not say. I fundamentally believe in the need for welfare reform. I look at certain areas of our society and am tired that they are subsisting; they are going through the motions of living, but they are not really living. I am frustrated by their lack of ambition. What about this idea of going out and getting a job? They have no notion of going out and getting a job.

I am also dismayed at the lack of opportunity for them to get a job. There has got to be something more that we can do. I am worried about the ever-increasing cost of benefits, the drain on our health and social services, and all the other issues, such as the incessant demand for more and more housing, "Just give it to me. I deserve it, but I am not able to make a contribution."

That is the image that many have about people who are on benefits. However, I then look at the evidence and ask whether it is right that we try to change and reform the welfare system so that we encourage and help people to get a job, and I think that is right. How do we break the cycle of dependency?

When I look at sanctions, I am not so sure that they work. Mr Attwood had obviously read Matthew Oakley's contribution and the minutes of the Work and Pensions Select Committee. I also had a look at some of those things, and here are the points that I took out of it.

I do not know if Mr Attwood said this already but Oakley, in July 2014, noted the problems and the lack of resources to fully explain sanctions in general and when someone was facing sanctions to their benefits. The problems with the IT resources represented a significant hurdle. They stopped people from getting the benefits that they were due. He pointed to a general lack of understanding around sanctions, both among people who had not noticed being sanctioned — so there is not much of a deterrent there if you do not notice — and those who felt they had been sanctioned when, in fact, their benefits had been changed because of a change in circumstances. In other words, nobody really understood what the sanctions network was doing.

He reported that there was little evidence to suggest that sanctions were effective in moving people into work. In fact, a strong relationship between the claimant and adviser was the most effective factor in getting people back into work. That is why I went to Ingeus, which is close by here, and looked at the efforts that people were making to get a strong bond between people that said, "Let's find a way of getting into work". I was Chair of the Committee for Employment and Learning when we were looking at this issue, and I think that that is the right way forward. That is how you get people back into work: quality intervention on a personal basis.

When Derbyshire County Council was looking at its emergency financial assistance, it had an average of 1,300 applications per month — up by 500 as a result of benefit sanctions. That shows that you are just transferring the problem. What it comes down to is that sanctions are not suitable for those with mental health issues, and Northern Ireland, as we all know, has the highest number of DLA claimants for mental health issues of any part of the United Kingdom.

I am sure that the Minister does not want to hear this, but I am going to pay him a compliment. I have been impressed by the way that he has engaged in this debate. It has taken a long time, and he has gone through points and tried to explain points of view. When you hear it, you have a different perception. His quote from the Joseph Rowntree Foundation's report was telling. That is the right way to go forward. That gives me confidence that the Minister is taking on board the various points raised, and, somewhere along the line, we will have to find a way to reach a compromise so that we can get legislation out.

At some stage, we will then need to review it. The report issue will come in the next group of amendments, and we will look at those, but we need to get something working now that is generally and broadly acceptable, see how it works and change it from there.

Mr Humphrey: Will the Member give way?

Mr B McCrea: I will indeed.

Mr Humphrey: Did the Member say he quoted from Derbyshire County Council?

Mr B McCrea: Yes.

Mr Humphrey: The Member, I think, was making the point in terms of the problem simply being shifted. When I was studying A-level economics at school, and I accept that there is someone in the Chamber who taught and marked it rather than just studied it, there was what was described as the unenthusiastic workforce. Given that the Member stated that that exists and that there are people who, I think he used the term, "haven't a notion of seeking employment", how would he deal with the issue from his perspective?

Mr B McCrea: I am sorry that I did not make it clear earlier, but I did mention the example of Ingeus and the other tier-1 providers that are working on a one-to-one basis with people who are looking to get back into work. What I have seen in the past is a tendency to skim the problem. We have tried to do it in large numbers, and you have people going through employment for 13 weeks and then back out again. That did not work. The answer is one-to-one, specific, personalised training. That is expensive, but it is the long-term solution.

I draw Mr Humphrey's attention to what Glenda Jackson MP said in the Work and Pensions Select Committee. She highlighted that when she said that the individual is not their individual.

It is about getting a personal relationship with people to say, "We will find you work; you can do it. We will build your confidence up. We are going to do it." That is the way forward.

Mrs D Kelly: The Member talks about getting people jobs. Does he not recognise that the evidence over the last couple of years is that there are more zero-hour contracts, more temporary jobs on offer, more part-time jobs and a lessening of terms and conditions for staff, many of whom are highly skilled?

Mr B McCrea: The Member raises a point, but I am sure that the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment would say, "The claimant count is falling; employment has never been better in the last two or three years." When I talk to people who look at the statistics, they say, "There are plenty of jobs out there, but there are not enough people with the right skills." I fully accept, if this is of any consolation to the Member, that one of the problems is that you cannot take people off benefits if you do not have some other place for them to get a job. They have to have the skills to do that, and the jobs have to be available. That is why I say you need the opportunity.

Mr Flanagan: I thank the Member for giving way. If he had been here yesterday for Question Time with the Employment and Learning Minister, and maybe he was, he would have heard Members from various constituencies talking about jobs fairs taking place across the North, with hundreds, even thousands, of people reported as being at them. The problem is not a lack of skills amongst people; it is a lack of opportunities. People are working for nothing, they are being forced to work a part-time job or two part-time jobs, and they are living in poverty. The problem is not a lack of willingness amongst people to work or a lack of skills; it is clearly a lack of proper job opportunities.

Mr B McCrea: I take issue with that. There is a mismatch between jobs in certain localities and the skills required, but there are plenty of opportunities. I rely, as the Member knows, on evidence. I rely on the fact that people say, "Look at all the vacancies."

There will be localised areas. I heard Mr McCann talking yesterday about the difficulties in his constituency, and I have no doubt that those difficulties exist in other areas. My understanding of the issue is that you resolve these things through personalised intervention to give people the confidence and skills to go out into the labour market. You need to give them the motivation and the ambition to say "We can go and do all of that." [Interruption.] You cannot sit in a circle of dependency. I am really sorry if people think that I have somehow lost the run of myself. [Interruption.] I am quite pleased to hear mutterings in front of me, because I will stand my ground as a liberal in this place against anybody. Every single person who comes around here says, "What I'm trying to do is for the best." I do not care if it does not fit into your political rhetoric or your party-political broadcast or your electioneering. Let me tell you: the facts are the facts.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order. I remind the Member to make his remarks through the Chair and not elsewhere. While the Member may be happy to hear mutterings, I am not a bit happy to hear them. [Laughter.]

4.45 pm

Mr B McCrea: I understand that, Mr Deputy Speaker. I can only presume that they did not travel as far as you, or no doubt you would have dealt with it.

I am not convinced that sanctions are the right way forward. I do not like the word "sanction". I do not think that it is appropriate. If you take money off people, all that happens is that they disappear off the radar. That is not what this should be about. We need to resource universal credit properly and put more investment into looking after people.

I will make a number of points that support that stance. In 2012-13, there was a 250% increase in sanctions on ESA claimants, according to Debbie Abrahams the Labour MP. Some 90% of those sanctions came from the work programme providers. That is not the right way in which to go forward. Those work programme providers have to find people jobs and give them the skills to take those jobs. Professor Dwyer, a professor of social policy at the University of York, said that jobcentre advisers are focusing too much on sanctions rather than providing support on the jobs side. That is not the right way forward.

People say that this will save money. Actually, in government terms, the sums of money are fairly paltry. In the UK, £275 million was withheld in sanctions from October 2012 until January 2015. If you translate that to Northern Ireland, you are talking about £1 million to £1.5 million a year. I fear that, if we go down the route of sanctions, what is happening over in Great Britain will happen here. The Government are leaving the voluntary sector to deal with the impact of only 20% to 25% of vulnerable people getting back into work. That is not the right way. The impact on poorly funded advisory bodies, such as Citizens Advice, is significant and a drain on their service. When we look to review the process, we need to find a way of asking whether sanctions contribute positively, and, if not, whether there is another way.

I will conclude by acknowledging what was said in other contributions. Mr Maskey, who is not in his place, said — I saw it on one of the monitors — that Northern Ireland is different. He said that he had talked to people and heard their pain and that we have higher levels of deprivation, higher levels of economic inactivity, higher levels of fuel poverty, higher levels of ill health, lower wages and less availability of suitable housing. Against that background, we have to tackle welfare reform in a different way. Incidentally, that is also why I am not convinced of the argument on corporation tax. I think that the money would be better spent on skills and on looking after those people.

I understand that we must reform welfare because of the financial constraints that are placed on us by Westminster. That is why we have a five-party agreement, and that is why I support reform. However, we should also be reforming welfare because we want to give our citizens dignity, opportunity and ambition. That is what will drive their lives and our society forward. On that basis, I fully support a five-party coalition tackling the issue. We will then review it properly and see how it is working.

Mr Storey: I have received messages from some of my colleagues to ensure that I do not stand for the next hour and a half answering the points raised. However, I am now on my feet.

I go back to the point that Mr McCrea made that the House needs to be assured that, in coming to the House as Minister, I feel the responsibility that I have been given, although I still have a lot of work to do to convince Mr Attwood that I am not an agent solely for DWP. It is not the case that I just blindly get up and say what has been given to me. That would be easy, but, as I said earlier, it is necessary to read into the record of the House things that I think are very important. That means that when Members want to rehearse something or see what things were said, it is on the record. It is important that I give some time to try to work through some of the comments.

I want to place on record a word of thanks to the Members who made comments. While other Members have not made comments, some comments have been made and I have had some discussions with other Members over the last number of weeks, as we have tried to work our way through the Bill. There were comments from Members of the Alliance Party today, which I welcome. It is also right of me to place on record the valuable contributions and constructive comments that were made by Mrs Cochrane about a number of things as we have sought to work our way through what is a complex and challenging piece of legislation.

I turn to some of the Members who made particular comments. My colleague and member of the Social Development Committee Paula Bradley raised a question about claimants, the sanction regime and the provision for children and housing. It is right to set that in some context. Clause 26(6)(a) sets out that we will set out the sanctionable amount in regulations. The amount that will be sanctioned under universal credit will be a fixed amount that is broadly relevant to the amount that is sanctioned under the current out-of-work benefit system. For example, when a single claimant who is subject to all work-related requirements fails, without good reason, to meet their requirement, their universal credit will be reduced by an amount that is broadly relevant to their standard allowance amount of around £9 per day for the duration of the sanction. That would mean that, where the maximum amount is in payment, sanctions will not reduce the universal credit payments to below the household amount for children and housing.

If a claimant finds that they are experiencing financial difficulties and have immediate needs as the result of a sanction, they can apply for the hardship payment. Access to recoverable hardship payments will only be available when the daily reduction rate is equal to 100% of the standard allowance and not when the 40% reduction rate applies. That means that claimants with a 40% reduction in place will not have access to recoverable hardship payments. That aligns with the position under income support, where claimants have an equivalent 40% reduction and are unable to apply for hardship payments. It is proposed that discretionary support will not be available to claimants who have been sanctioned.

I trust that that maybe convoluted answer gives some reassurance to the Member on that issue. I pay tribute to the Member for her work on the Social Development Committee. It has been helpful to have her experience there. While the Bill has gone through its various processes, it was valuable to have someone who has practical working experience as a constituent MLA. I can assure you that I found it a huge leap from the Back Benches to the Front Bench. However, the experience that we gain as MLAs in our constituencies stands us in good stead and allows us to be practical when we come to look at particular issues, especially those that are relevant to the introduction of welfare reform.

I now move on to the comments from Mr Attwood and his colleague Mrs Dolores Kelly, who raised an issue about the provision in clause 115. This clause removes references to a caution in section 5B of the Social Security Fraud Act (Northern Ireland) 2001. The effect will be that any person cautioned for an offence will no longer incur a loss of benefit under the legislation. The Department's response to the range of client behaviours is both proportionate and flexible. The scope goes from deciding that no formal sanction is appropriate to prosecution through the courts. On introduction of the provision, in an instance where a caution for a minor offence is administered, there will be no further loss of benefit. This is proportionate to the nature of the offence type. I hope that that gives some reassurance to the Member.

I also want to deal with the issue that the Member raised on amendment No 16. This, again, is an area where Members do not have to take me on trust, because they will see all of this as we roll it out. Be assured, Members, that today does not finish the welfare reform process. I think that there are some Members sitting in their office who believe that, if only the Minister would hurry up so we get to the other two groups of amendments and get this done, somehow welfare reform will disappear into the mist.

There is a long process ahead of us in terms of guidance and a lot more work that has to be done. I think that we all remain committed to ensuring that we get to the end point. As the Member said, here is the unknown in all this. We could speculate all day, but there is an election in our kingdom — not the kingdom of Kerry, just in case anyone wants to be mischievous — it is the United Kingdom. There will be elections to our national Parliament on 7 May. We do not know what the outcome of that will be. I will be waiting as eagerly as anyone else, not only as a member of my party, which I have no doubt will have a good and successful election, but as the Minister for Social Development so that I can see what the implications of the new Government will be. I have no doubt that my party, with its strength, when coming to determine who is the Government on 8 May, will keep very much in mind the issues —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I am tempted to ask the Minister whether he is winding, or winding up.

Mr Storey: Well, Mr Deputy Speaker, I suppose it is a combination of both. I want to make a serious point on the debate, discussion and negotiation on who will form the Government. My party will ensure that we play a full and very important role in the establishment of our national Government, should it come to that.

I will deal with amendment No 16. The key point, which will be reflected in guidance, is that the claimant always has the right amount of time. It is anticipated that the current rule of five working days should be the default but if, for example, the claimant is in attendance and has provided their evidence, there may be no need to wait a further five working days. Alternatively, if the claimant is waiting for evidence from a doctor or support worker, it is only reasonable to extend the period beyond five working days. I trust that that clarifies the issue. Maybe I did not make that clear. She also went on to talk about why "good reason" is not defined in the legislation and proposed a 15-day timescale to provide that good reason. In answer to that, the decision maker has the flexibility to consider all matters put forward by the claimant and decide, in light of all the evidence, whether or not the claimant has good reason. Examples of possible factors that might count as good reason are sincere religious or conscientious objection, travelling time, caring responsibilities, attendance at court, arranging or attending a funeral, domestic emergencies, emergency duties, or where continued participation would or was likely to have put their health and safety at risk.

5.00 pm

That list is not exhaustive. A good-reason decision is not directly appealable, but decisions to reduce benefit as a result of a sanction are subject to an appeal to an independent tribunal. Decisions will be overturned if the tribunal finds that the sanction should not have been imposed because the claimant had good reason for failing to meet the requirement. I trust that that helps with that issue.

Let me say that no one in this House should seek in any way to underestimate the seriousness of the point that Mr Attwood raised about the suicide rate in Northern Ireland. Some time ago, I visited a home in my constituency where that was the case, and I do not think that any of us realise where a family goes when they have had to deal with that issue. I, as Minister of this Department, do not want to have a situation where it can be said that something that we have done, or not done, has led to that.

I assure the House that a question could rightly be asked about the safeguards in the sanctioning process for vulnerable claimants. Claimants with both limited capability for work and limited capability for work-related activity, lone parents or lead nominated carers with a child under one year will not be subject to sanctions. Claimants with limited capability for work or work-related activity, lone parents or nominated carers with a child between one and five years will not be subjected to requirements that can lead to higher-level sanctions. Higher-level sanctions will be applied only for failures to meet the most important requirements by claimants who are subject to all work-related requirements, for example, jobseekers.

There will also be a range of safeguards to protect claimants. Requirements will be reasonable, taking into account the claimant's circumstances and capability, including health conditions, disability and caring responsibilities. For example, a lone parent or lead carer with a child under 13 may be able to restrict their availability for work to jobs that can fit around school hours. An adviser should require a claimant to apply for, or accept, a job only if it is in line with the type of work that the claimant must be available for, including any restrictions that have been applied. If the job was not in line with any work restrictions, the claimant would have good reason for any failure.

We will not impose a sanction if a claimant has good reason for failing to meet requirements. Claimants have five working days to provide evidence of good reason. Before imposing a sanction, we will continue to visit claimants with limited capability for work who have a mental-health condition or a learning disability to help us to understand why the claimant did not meet the requirement. That will inform the decision on whether there was a good reason for the failure. In addition to the general safeguard of good reason, decisions to reduce benefit as a result of a sanction are subject to an appeal to an independent tribunal. The decisions will be overturned if the tribunal finds that the sanction should not have been imposed because the claimant had good reason for failing to meet the requirement.

I am endeavouring to assure Members that there will be in place a structure that tries to deal with all those eventualities. I trust that that is helpful and that that is the way that it will be put into operation. I want to come to that point when I address the issues that were raised by Mr McCrea, but I also want to come to the point that was made by the Member for North Antrim Mr Allister when he referred to the issue of clause 112. He said that when that was originally in the Bill, it was a comfort to enforcement. I think that that was the point that the Member was making. By inference, we would then draw the conclusion that that comfort to enforcement is no longer there.

Mr Agnew, following the comments made by the Member for North Antrim, accused the Department of having sanctions that were incredibly punitive, and we found ourselves in a situation where we were endeavouring — despite using the words earlier on of being tough, which, I know caused some concern to Mr Attwood — to try to strike a balance. It is a very, very difficult balance to strike. I will come on to the point that Mr McCrea made about the issue of sanctions and how beneficial they are. I still believe that, although these measures are tough, the other issue is that they are fair and necessary if you take them in the round. When we pick out one particular element, whether it is the removal of clause 112 or any of the other elements in relation to the time of sanctions, I still believe that, in the round, they are necessary to deter the minority of claimants who might wish to break the rules —

Mr F McCann: Will the Minister give way?

Mr Storey: Yes, in a moment.

Therefore, I urge that that is the context in which we interpret the sanction regime as it is outlined in the Bill.

Mr F McCann: Thank you very much, Minister. I outlined today what my thoughts have always been on sanctions and how they should be dealt with. There was a five-party agreement before Christmas that some parties have opted to walk away with. Regardless of what you would have come up with here today or yesterday, Steven would have opposed every element of it, and it is his right to do so. Did it not concern you today that a Member of the SDLP supported Steven Agnew's stance on the 26-week thing, even though they had agreed on 17 December to a two-year sanction?

Mr Storey: I think that the Member is trying to draw me in to a debate and a discussion between his party and the SDLP. While I am very, very reluctant to get drawn in, there is a part of me that would be very tempted to. It is sometimes said that, as you go to certain meetings, you try to leave your other interests at the door. As I have come to the House as the Minister with responsibility, I have had to try to take on board the fact that, yes, there was a political process and that that political process has brought about an agreement, and I am glad. When I came into the Department on 24 September, I faced the situation where I had no prospect of getting a Regeneration Bill moving; deadlock. I had the situation where the Welfare Reform Bill was in deadlock. I am glad that, since then and until today, we have movement and an agreement as we move our way through the Regeneration Bill, and that we now have movement and progress on welfare.

Are they all perfect? No. Have we as a party got all that we want? No, but has everybody else? I still think that it goes back to that original point, which is that there was a five-party agreement. Others will have to explain why they felt that it was necessary not to carry it through in the spirit of the way that it was arranged.

Let me come to the issue that Mr McCrea raised. I find myself again in an unusual position, because it is not often that he says we are doing something that he is in favour of. As I said to my colleague, I do get a bit concerned about Members who listen to Radio 4 and read 'The Guardian'. Or, maybe we would be more informed if that were the case. I did listen to Radio 4 as well. As I have endeavoured to try to ensure that, in my attempts to get a grasp of all of this, I have had to read a considerable amount of material. Much has been made of the comments made by the independent expert Matthew Oakley, and I am sure that he would be delighted to know that his argument is being so well rehearsed and well used in the House. In the overview of that, the comment was still made that sanctions are applied as a last resort when claimants fail to do enough to find work and fail to attend appointments. Recent research shows that 72% of claimants say that they are more likely to follow the rules because of the threat of having payments stopped.

The Member did raise a serious point regarding whether "sanction regime" is the right name. Are people put off by the term "sanctions"? Is the language that we use on this the right language? A lot of concerns were raised about these measures being punitive and all of that. As I found coming into the Department, there is language that is used across a variety of responsibilities that I have. I know that Members have heard me say this, and I said it publicly at a conference recently in relation to housing: I think that we need to change the language that we use on the way that we provide housing, because people have a different view of housing depending on the way that you describe it. I think that, on this issue, we have, unfortunately, at this minute in time, the structure that we have, but it is something that I think merits some consideration in the future.

On the Member's point, I have sought a discussion with the Minister for Employment and Learning, and I trust that we will have that discussion in the next number of weeks, because here is where all of this, I believe, will face a particular challenge. I am very focused around this, and I think that, in fairness to the Minister, he understands the argument that I am trying to make, which is that, if we do not put the arrangements in place and the proper structures in place, we could easily find ourselves in a situation where some of the things that Mr Attwood referred to earlier would happen here. I think that, despite what the proposals might be concerning the reorganisation of the Departments post-2016, that is vital and will play a part. That is a debate or discussion that is ongoing. I want to make sure that the claimant's journey is one that is as seamless as it possibly can be and that the person makes a journey from one element of the jobs and benefits centre to another element of the jobs and benefits centre in a way that both are speaking the same language, both understand the needs of the individual and both can relate to the person as an individual, and that the person is not just a processed number on a page being put through the system. That is a huge amount of work, and I think that I have given myself enough commitment to that to say that that is where I want to work with the Minister for Employment and Learning.

5.15 pm

On the effectiveness of sanctions, and I think that the Member referred to this, he may be aware that, some time ago, I tabled an amendment, which we will debate shortly under the fourth group. I hope that we will get to that group in a minute or two. The amendment relates to my commitment to report to the Assembly on a range of issues including, but not exclusively, the operation of sanctions. I think that that will again give us a more evidence-based approach. We will continue the discussion on what we can do with that particular matter in the future.

Those are my concluding comments on the third group of amendments.

Amendment No 14 agreed to.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I will not call amendment No 15, as it is mutually exclusive with amendment No 14, which was made.

Question put, That the clause, as amended, stand part of the Bill.

Clause 42 (Pilot schemes)

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We now come to the fourth group of amendments for debate, which contains eight amendments. [Interruption.] I ask Members to leave the Chamber quietly.

The amendments deal with reports, reviews, pilot schemes and information sharing. Members will note that amendment Nos 49 and 54 are mutually exclusive. They will also note that a valid petition of concern has been received in relation to amendment Nos 20, 49 and 54 to 56. Therefore, they will require cross-community support. Mr Attwood had given notice of intention to move amendment No 20: In page 20, line 16, at end insert

“(7) Within six months of a pilot scheme being initiated under section 41 of the Welfare Reform Act 2012 the Department shall bring forward a similar pilot scheme in Northern Ireland under this section.”

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 34: After clause 76 insert

“Pilot scheme

76A. The Department shall arrange for the operation of at least one pilot scheme in relation to this Part for the purposes of testing the effectiveness of arrangements for making personal independence payments and the outcomes for claimants.”— [Mr Beggs.]

No 46: In clause 117, page 88, line 9, at end insert“() the Department of Justice;”— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 47: After clause 120 insert

“Reports by Department

120A. In Article 76 of the Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 (reports by Department) for paragraph (1) substitute—

“(1) The Department shall prepare, either annually or at such times or intervals as may be prescribed, a report on—

(a) the standards achieved by the Department in the making of decisions against which an appeal lies to an appeal tribunal constituted under Chapter 1 of Part 2; and

(b) the operation of sanctions.

(1A) For the purposes of paragraph (1)(b) a sanction is—

(a) the reduction in the amount of an award of universal credit, a jobseeker’s allowance, income support or an employment and support allowance on account of a failure by a person to comply with any requirement or any other conduct of a person;

(b) the loss of, or reduction in the amount of, any sanctionable benefit under the Social Security Fraud Act (Northern Ireland) 2001.

(1B) A report under paragraph (1)(b) must contain details of—

(a) the number of persons affected by sanctions;

(b) the periods for which such persons are affected;

(c) the reasons for which sanctions are imposed;

(d) the benefits or allowances which are reduced or lost.”.— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 49: After clause 120 insert

“Review of the Welfare Reform Act

120C. —(1) The Department must—

(a) not later than 3 years after the commencement of this Act, and

(b) at least once in every period of 5 years thereafter, publish an independent report on the operation and effectiveness of this Act and any regulations made under its provisions.

(2) Without prejudice to the generality of subsection (1), any report produced under that subsection shall include—

(a) an assessment of the impact of the Act on—

(i) the number of people with a disability living in poverty;

(ii) the number of children living in poverty;

(iii) the financial impact on woman claimants;

and

(b) recommendations for legislative change to remedy any negative impact of the Act on any of the categories of person listed in section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

(3) The Department shall lay before the Assembly as soon as is reasonably practical after publication any report produced under subsection (1) and shall propose a debate on the report in the Assembly not less than one week and no more than six weeks after the report is laid.”— [Mr Agnew.]

No 54: After clause 130 insert

“Annual Report by Department

130D.The Department shall be required to table a report in the Assembly on the implementation of this Act as it affects welfare provision in Northern Ireland and on the financial arrangements governing and applicable to welfare expenditure in Northern Ireland within six months of the commencement of this Act and on an annual basis thereafter.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 55: After clause 130 insert

“Welfare Reform Committee

130E.There shall be established a committee of the Assembly which shall monitor the implementation of this Act as it affects welfare provision in Northern Ireland and to consider relevant Northern Ireland legislation and other consequential arrangements.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

No 56: After clause 130 insert

“Review

130F.The Northern Ireland Joint Standards Committee for the Social Security Agency and Child Maintenance Service shall monitor the standards and quality of decision making with regards to the sanctions defined under this Act and report to the Social Security Agency and Child Maintenance Service on an annual basis.”— [Mrs D Kelly.]

Mr Attwood: Let me make it clear to the Minister, who said earlier that he was not an agent of the Department for Work and Pensions DWP, that I never made any argument that you were a covert human intelligence source for the security branch of DWP. Can we just clear that up?

Let me also say that I can feel it in my bones that we are going to get more from the Minister in this group of amendments than we have had heretofore. I hope that I am not jumping my fences.

I will indicate first of all that, whilst I will speak to amendment No 20 on the pilot schemes being brought forward within six months, we will not move that amendment and will be supporting that of the Ulster Unionists, if it is moved. In indicating that, I will make a small number of comments.

I think that the Minister appreciates that there is a data gap in Northern Ireland where the implementation and operation of welfare policy and law generally are concerned. There is a general issue that there is not a data profile for welfare. We need to recognise and acknowledge that by rolling out pilots as quickly as we can where we can in advance of any proposed welfare system going live. I accept that the time limit of six months that we put in our amendment is too prescriptive; therefore we will not be moving it.

However, I do not accept some of the other arguments that the Minister might be minded to make on pilot schemes in general in the North. For example, I do not believe that, given the population of Northern Ireland, the sample size is not sufficient to run pilot schemes. I do not accept that it is necessarily the case that information coming from Britain is sufficient for our purposes and that it would be a waste of resources to do otherwise. I also do not accept that there are instances where duplicating the GB pilot is acceptable. Whilst there is an issue with information technology, in that it is generic, if you like, and can therefore be applicable in any part of Northern Ireland or Britain, I am not necessarily convinced by the argument that the Minister might present. I may be anticipating all his arguments, so I apologise for that. In any case, I think that the Ulster Unionist amendment is more appropriate, and I hope that it will be accepted.

The purpose of the other amendments that have been tabled the SDLP is to ensure that there are appropriate thresholds of oversight and accountability when it comes to welfare reform and its implementation in Northern Ireland. Obviously, I will not rehearse the narrative that we outlined earlier about the scale of what is proposed, the risks of what might happen, the experience of Britain with the roll-out of the implementation of universal credit in the event that that happens in Northern Ireland and all the evidence that has gone to the Select Committee. That is all on the record, but all that which is on the record informs the comments and thinking of the SDLP when it comes to the amendments. We want to gear up the oversight and interrogation of what is happening with welfare reform and its operation in Northern Ireland in a way that guarantees, as best we can, that issues are identified, problems are rectified and the House is fully informed.

Minister, given the length of time that we have had to come to this point, the scale of universal credit and the ambitions that the Tories, in particular, might have on the far side of the election, we need to build into the architecture of welfare delivery in Northern Ireland and the architecture of the Assembly the means of oversight, accountability and interrogation that demonstrates to welfare claimants and your staff in the Social Security Agency and the Child Support Agency that the Assembly will be very attentive and vigilant as things are rolled out over the next number of years. That is what informs the three amendments from the SDLP: amendment Nos 54, 55 and 56.

Minister, if Mark Durkan MP was here, he would recount a true story to you of what transpired in the House of Commons some time ago. There was an exchange between, I think, the Prime Minister or the Chancellor and the Leader of the Opposition. In the course of the contribution by the Leader of the Opposition, Ed Miliband, when he was referring to the benefit cap, he said to the Chancellor of the Exchequer that what he really needed was a welfare cap. Mark Durkan would tell you that you could see the lights going on in the Chancellor's eyes. “I will have some of that”, he said to himself, and a short time later, that is what the Chancellor of the Exchequer did. He came to the House of Commons, and through whatever was the appropriate mechanism, he introduced a welfare cap and set a top line for the welfare budget. He also introduced mechanisms so that, if you transgressed that top line, you would have to come back to the House of Commons to get approval for any excesses. That has not been relied on to date, but, if the welfare cap was reduced, it would be very interesting to see how DWP and us in DSD and the SSA would operate under a lower radar. The point of that is that the issue of the welfare cap has become very critical. The Tories have set it at a certain level, introduced a legislative mechanism that has to be relied on to override it, and mischief can be made.

Minister, you will recall from the Stormont negotiations that advice was given to the parties that there is a notional welfare cap for Northern Ireland. It was Mark Durkan again who probed that issue, because he was not sure whether there was a welfare cap for Northern Ireland. He thought that there probably was because of the devolved arrangements for social security that mean that we live in a different character of a place when it comes to welfare. He thought that there might be a notional welfare cap, and it was the advice of people with knowledge that there is one.

The reason why I made that point is to justify the wording of the amendment, which, in our view, goes far beyond your amendment about reports to the Assembly. Our amendment states:

“The Department shall be required to table a report in the Assembly on the implementation of this Act as it affects welfare provision in Northern Ireland and on the financial arrangements governing and applicable to welfare expenditure in Northern Ireland within six months of the commencement of this Act and on an annual basis thereafter.”

Those are the critical additional words beyond your own amendment, Minister, on the financial arrangements governing and applicable to welfare expenditure. If there is a welfare cap of that character, a notional one for Northern Ireland, what is going to happen on the far side of this election when the Chancellor of the Exchequer, if he is still in place, says, “I am going to do more business around the welfare cap; I am going to reduce it.” What would be the consequences here? I give way to the Minister.

Mr Storey: Would the Member also accept that, as part of the five-party Stormont Castle agreement, we agreed that there was a need for greater clarity on the implications of further spending on social security in Northern Ireland following the introduction of the welfare spending cap by the Chancellor; and that we have agreed that, working in partnership with the Minister of Finance and Personnel — this covers the point that the Member makes in relation to the wording of the amendment — I would propose a commission to review the operation of the welfare cap? I have asked that officials develop draft terms of reference accordingly. So, in a sense, there is agreement to do that. My concern is that we do not need to have it in the legislation.

Mr Attwood: What happens after a couple of years when the commission reports? Are we then going to say that we are not going to have ongoing vigilance and monitoring of the welfare cap? What our amendment does is build into the life of the Department and Assembly an ongoing assessment of welfare expenditure in Northern Ireland in the context, among other things, of the welfare cap. So our process is a long-term one not a short-snap assessment by a commission. I do not say that there should not be a commission. Expert work needs to be done on this, and I am not going to be in denial. We need to keep our eyes wide open. The matters that I deliberately read into the record this morning, about the exchange between Mr Mark Durkan MP and the Treasury Minister in respect of the potential for more stick when it comes to corporation tax, all demonstrate that, when it comes to budgetary matters, including welfare, we need to be highly vigilant. So, without disagreeing with your last point about the commission, we think that this amendment builds into the architecture of this place a more ongoing, continuous model. I think that it will serve you well, Minister, because if there is bad news coming in terms of the welfare cap, you will want to be on this Floor in order to advise us what is coming and what can be done and put us all on red alert, because that would be the consequence of some of the ambitions of the current London Government.

The second amendment consistent with that oversight principle is amendment No 55, which proposes a dedicated welfare reform committee of the Assembly. In that regard, we are only following the example of the Scottish Government. They do not have devolved responsibility for social security, and I acknowledge that, so we are dealing with a different character of devolution. Nonetheless, I do not think that anyone disagrees about the scale of what is happening, if it happens. Given the scale of that, would it not be appropriate to build into the architecture of the Assembly a dedicated, stand-alone committee to do what the Welfare Reform Committee in the Scottish Assembly does?

Mr Humphrey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will, yes.

Mr Humphrey: Does the Member not accept the point that, if the Assembly were to do what he has said, it would completely undermine the credibility and standing of the Social Development Committee?

Mr Attwood: Far from it. You could make an argument that some of the stuff that is going on in the Social Development Committee undermines the Committee itself —

Mr Humphrey: Maybe you could. Who is involved in that stuntery?

Mr Attwood: No. I do not think so. We believe, for example, that there should be a dedicated Budget committee of the Assembly, separate from the Finance and Personnel Committee, in order to have ongoing oversight and monitoring of the Budget and Budget opportunities. It is not to undermine but to enhance Departments' accountability on issues to Members on behalf of the people of Northern Ireland. This is not either/or; this is raising the threshold of accountability. I would be a bit surprised if it looked as if the rug was being pulled from under the Social Development Committee and that its authority was being usurped.

The remit of the Scottish Welfare Reform Committee, and we have borrowed the words as accurately as we could, is this:

“To keep under review the passage of the UK Welfare Reform Bill and monitor its implementation as it affects welfare provision in Scotland and to consider relevant Scottish legislation and other consequential arrangements.”

Its reports demonstrate that there is a capacity for a Committee of a devolved institution to add qualitatively to the understanding of welfare reform. For example, in 2014, it published its fifth report, and that was a very detailed assessment, undertaken with Sheffield Hallam University, on the impact across the Scottish regions of welfare reform.

We need to be aware that there could be a differential impact of welfare reform in Northern Ireland. I do not intend to read it into the record, because time is rushing on, but it goes through to the point of looking at the electoral areas and wards that were hardest hit; at the impact on households and individuals; and at the loss to the overall Scottish economy by the reduction of spend due to welfare reductions. I think that that is important data to inform them in their business, and it would be important data to inform us in our business. I urge the Minister that the dedicated Committee would send out a clear, unambiguous signal that it will remain very attentive to the issue and look for further data, research and potential remedies in the event of the worst of welfare reform visiting our people.

The third amendment is to give an enhanced role to the joint standards committee. At the moment, as the Minister is aware, there is a joint standards committee that annually reviews the work of the Social Security Agency and child support. We are trying to give it a dedicated power to create certainty, avoid doubt and make sure that there is no breach in communication and understanding, and to give to the Northern Ireland joint standards committee for the Social Security Agency and Child Maintenance Service the dedicated ability to look at the standards and quality of decision-making with regard to sanctions. We have spent the last hour or two debating one group of amendments, the title of which was "Sanctions". We are arguing that if it was of such importance that there was a dedicated debate in the House for the last couple of hours on sanctions, then we need to have dedicated mechanisms to ensure that, when it comes to decision-making on sanctions, it is being interrogated by the appropriate bodies —

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: — and the appropriate body in this case, in our view, is the joint standards committee, which, as you know, is chaired by Eileen Evason.

Mr Storey: The Member will also be aware that the Northern Ireland joint standards committee reports to the chief executive of the Social Security Agency and the head of the division of the Child Maintenance Service, formerly the Child Support Agency, and it specifically includes the accuracy of decisions on sanctions. I wonder why there is a necessity to expand something that is already doing what the Member is requesting that it should do.

Mr Attwood: You can anticipate what I am going to say. We are not flying a kite here. We have reason to believe that certainty around this issue in terms of interrogation of the sanctions regime is something that the joint standards committee would like to be reassured on. I say that with knowledge, and therefore I say to the Minister, noting what you have just said, that there is a facility already under law to interrogate to confirm to the House that, when it comes to the work of the joint standards committee and when it comes to the quality of decision-making, it does extend to the sanctions, and not just the accuracy of them. "Accuracy" is a very precise term, and I am sure that, somewhere, some lawyer has defined it. We are saying that you have to look at the standards and quality of decision-making. If accuracy, in your view, extends to standards and quality of decision-making, that might be some reassurance, but we need to know that it is the standards and quality of decision-making, as opposed to this word "accuracy", which seems very precise. Is it precise for a purpose, and is the purpose to ensure that the interrogation of what is happening with sanctions goes so far or —

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Attwood: I will give way.

Mr Storey: Thank you. I take what the Member has said about this. Will he allow me the opportunity to take away those comments that he has made specifically on this issue and to give further thought to what he has said?

Mr Attwood: I hear that, and, consistent with the spirit of this debate from our point of view, we will not move that amendment in the event that you will consider to come back to this matter at Further Consideration Stage and without prejudice to the position that the SDLP might take. I think that our amendments create a triple lock. I think that that phrase is borrowed from some previous negotiation. I cannot remember which one it was, but there was certainly something about a triple lock. I should remember, and Mark Durkan would correct me.

Mrs D Kelly: The St Andrews Agreement.

Mr Attwood: St Andrews. In any case, we are looking for a triple lock. The triple lock is, first, the joint standards committee having the scale of oversight of the sanctions regime that we have referred to; secondly, we are looking for the committee in the House to have the oversight role that I referred to; and, thirdly, we are looking for, in addition to any commission in respect to the welfare cap, an annual reporting mechanism, starting with a six-monthly report from the commencement of the legislation that would make sure that we keep in the forefront of our minds this issue of the welfare cap as it rolls out over the next four or five years, the lifetime of the next Parliament, where it will be up for grabs in the minds of some who might be in Government not very far from now.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Before I call Ms Michaela Boyle, can I confirm with the Member that he did not move amendment No 20?

Mr Attwood: Sorry, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. I said that we would not be moving that amendment and that we would defer to the Ulster Unionists, subject also to what I anticipate the Minister saying in this regard. It will not be moved. That is correct.

Amendment No 20 not moved.

Ms Boyle: Go raibh maith agat. This group of amendments, whilst small in number, deals with the important issues of ensuring that we are doing things right as we move forward with the roll-out of welfare changes here. I thank the Minister for his acceptance of amendment No 34, which proposes a pilot scheme testing the roll-out of personal independence payments. I am sure that the Minister will have looked on this amendment with some irony, given that its proposers from the UUP had signed up to a four-party agreement that did not contain this proposal. Indeed, that party stood in the last Westminster election in partnership with the Tories, who are responsible for this attack on the most vulnerable and are the reason why we are here today seeking to mitigate such as an attack.

Amendment No 47, which is brought forward by the Minister, is a welcome step in allowing oversight of how welfare changes are impacting here.

Despite the petition of concern to amendment No 49, I ask the Minister to consider broadening the scope of any report. I am sure that he will acknowledge that the proposer of the amendment did not have the same opportunity that was afforded to the main parties in the Assembly to bring forward proposals through the party leaders' implementation group.

The same of course cannot be said of the SDLP and its amendments. I am at a particular loss with regard to amendment No 55, which seeks to set up another Committee to monitor the implementation of welfare provision here. I have just listened to Mr Attwood on that. This is simply duplication of the role of the Committee for Social Development. Perhaps, this desire by the SDLP for another Committee to be set up is an indictment of that party's representation on that very Committee. Indeed, does the party not have faith in its own deputy leader, who sits on the Committee?

I want to speak about sharing information, which is key and we need to look at it; that is why we are here today to debate it. In 2012, the Minister's predecessor dealt personally with a lady in my constituency, Mrs Burns, who was a cancer patient at the time. She had an ESA appeal. Atos Healthcare called her for a medical assessment. She was deemed fit for work while she was suffering from cancer and going through treatment. It was done in an arbitrary way because there was a lack of evidence in her case from her GP to Atos. While Atos does not make the decision, it is certainly meant to look at all the information before it. In a fair decision-making system, it is important that information from health professionals and GPs is shared and goes down the line. Dealing with the effects of illness and getting your benefits cut at the same time is very traumatic for anyone.

Mr Beggs: I am pleased to propose amendment No 34, which requires the Department to carry out a pilot scheme into personal independence payments; something that will be a first for any region in the United Kingdom. Hopefully, lessons can be learned before any wider roll-out. I am glad that this amendment appears to have had widespread support from a number of Members already. I think that there is a lot of logic to it.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: Certainly.

Mr Storey: On a point of accuracy: while I will accept the amendment on the pilot, my Department is in almost continual contact — I know that Mr Attwood will probably say that this just confirms all his fears — with DWP on pilots that are going on throughout the United Kingdom. We are endeavouring to learn. I think that this would not be the first pilot in the United Kingdom.

Mr Beggs: I certainly had not heard reports of any pilots. I thank the Minister for that information. It certainly would be the first pilot to occur in Northern Ireland. Hopefully, that will be a useful exercise, where, locally, lessons may be learned on top of lessons that have been learnt elsewhere.

That was one of the key Ulster Unionist requests during the Stormont House talks. I welcome the genuine commitment of the Minister and his Department to take this issue forward. Whilst the Bill, at present, does provide for universal credit pilots, no such provision exists for the transfer from DLA to PIP. That, in our opinion, was a major oversight in the original legislation. Unfortunately, Great Britain has seen the consequence of that as it has begun to implement the new policy.

The United Kingdom Government had previously made it clear that it would take time to get the delivery of personal independence payments (PIPs) right, by allowing a sufficient period for the processes to bed in. The theory was that they hoped to learn from the delivery of a limited number of new claims before increasing their volume and beginning to invite existing DLA claimants to claim PIP.

Unfortunately, trying to move even a limited number of people who have a change in their circumstances has been troubled with one problem after another. Many of these teething problems should now have been addressed, and the Department here should be in a position to learn from those when it comes to the task of assessing and transferring DLA claims to PIP.

In the meantime, I believe that the implementation of a targeted pilot scheme in Northern Ireland will play a crucial role in testing and implementing the policy here. Testing the training of our staff and the processes would be wise. Not only does our proposed pilot scheme allow for the Department to learn lessons and obtain early estimates of the likely outcomes for claimants, it will hopefully shape future roll-out plans.

Preparation will be absolutely essential, and the more issues that we can resolve now before the full roll-out, possibly later this year, the better. Because of time pressures and the eagerness to avoid any further financial penalties from Westminster, my party agrees that the pilot should not delay the overall proposed roll-out scheme. That is why the wording of our amendment is not overly prescriptive. I recognise the Minister's commitment to a pilot and, as far as the Ulster Unionist Party is concerned, we want to work productively with him and his Department and officials.

I understand that the Department has already provisionally put in place some preparations for a pilot and that the intention will be to run it from the end of the summer. That will focus on reviewing what the impacts would have been on recent DLA claimants. I ask the Minister to provide some details of what the Department is currently considering, in particular, what approach is the pilot likely to take, how many people is it likely to involve and whether it will be based on a particular area or demography or be more wide-ranging.

I now turn to amendment No 20, which, I hear is not going to be moved. I am pleased, because of the concern I had about how it would have delayed the whole scheme and the almost automatic penalties that would have removed further money from the block grant. I therefore thank the proposers for indicating that they do not intend to move the amendment and for their support for our own pilot.

For now, the Ulster Unionist Party is more inclined to go with what the Minister proposes on reporting following the Bill in amendment No 47. It appears to be sufficiently robust and wide-ranging and will include what we believe to be the key points. I believe that the Department already produces regular reports on the impact of welfare reform. It would be helpful if the Minister would highlight the merits of whatever additional reporting would flow from amendment No 47.

I now turn to amendment No 46, which would, I think, have been very uncontentious — adding the Minister of Justice to the list of qualifying persons. With policing, courts and probation coming under that Minister, clearly there will be relevant information that could affect aspects of an individual's welfare payments and therefore it is entirely appropriate to make that addition.

I turn to amendment No 55 and the idea of putting into primary legislation the establishment of another Committee, I point out that there are other mechanisms. The Assembly itself can decide to do that. Ad Hoc Committees can be established. As a recent addition to the membership of the Social Development Committee, I still have to find my way and get a sense of whether that is a role that the Committee itself should be carrying out. If it finds that that is too large a task, there are other mechanisms in the Assembly to create bodies, whether it is a subcommittee or an Ad Hoc Committee. I do not feel that there is a need to put that in primary legislation so I am unconvinced of the need for amendment No 55.

I welcome the discussion that there has been on amendment No 56. There needs to be clarity on that issue. Whether or not the amendment is needed, it is useful that there is dialogue and clarity. If that can be achieved without legislation, that is fine, but it is something that we may need to return to, and I welcome the discussion that has commenced.

Mr Agnew: I will speak on my own amendment and make brief comment on the others. It seems that I have been the least prescriptive in terms of a timeline for the various proposed reviews and reporting. Part of the rationale for that is what I sought to require in the reporting. I picked out three groups the impact on which any review and reporting should assess, specifically the number of people with a disability living in poverty, the number of children living in poverty, and the financial impact on women claimants.

Throughout GB and, indeed, here in Northern Ireland, there has been much commentary on the impact of welfare reform. Consistently, those are three groups deemed to be most vulnerable to the changes. While my proposal is not that any report or review should be exclusive to those groups, I think that it is reasonable to require that any review specifically addresses the impact of the changes on those groups.

Going back to some of what was said to the effect that no one will be worse off under this Bill etc, we need the data and measurements to show that. My proposal goes further in that it would require in any review proposals on where improvements could be made to the Bill. That is very much the rationale behind the three-year and five-year timeline. It is not just a report on welfare reform, but seeking to propose changes.

I am not proposing that we change the welfare legislation on an annual basis, and that is the rationale for the three-year timeline initially, and then the five-year timeline for my review. Again, a petition of concern has been tabled, so presumably the intention is for this not to pass. The Minister has proposed his own reporting mechanism. Should that pass, I may come back at Further Consideration Stage with a bit more detail on what should be required in that report because it is important that we keep an assessment of the impact on vulnerable groups, as laid out in my amendment.

Amendment No 34 on the pilot scheme is a sensible proposal.

Again, we have seen the difficulties in implementing welfare reform in GB. Taking a step back from the principles, the mere implementation, regardless of where you stand, has clearly caused problems, and I think a pilot scheme is a sensible way to proceed.

6.30 pm

I am sure the SDLP will come to this in its winding up: its proposal for a welfare reform Committee was suggested yesterday when the DUP leader spoke. This was something that was already agreed to. Perhaps the Minister can give more clarity. If this is something that is to happen through another mechanism, it will be up to the members of the SDLP whether they move their amendment. It would provide clarity for those of us who are seeking to vote if they would do so. Similarly, if and how would that relate to amendment No 56?

I do not wish to delay the House unnecessarily, Principal Deputy Speaker, so I will leave my remarks there.

Mr Dickson: This group, as Members know, largely concerns preparations for monitoring the implementation of the Bill. The Ulster Unionist amendment relating to the pilot scheme for the implementation of PIP has merit. As the administration of welfare reform in Northern Ireland is very different from that in the rest of the United Kingdom, and would be more so following the implementation of the mitigations agreed by the parties and the Government, a separate pilot scheme is needed to flesh out the problems that could arise, compared to those that will not arise in England. Crucially, as this amendment was agreed by the five parties, we will be supporting it.

We will also support the two ministerial amendments, because they are sensible amendments. Amendment No 46 is largely technical, and the addition of the Department of Justice to the list of qualifying persons with whom information can be shared is indeed eminently sensible. There is also adequate need to report on the impact of the implementation of welfare reform, as with all other legislation, and there are a number of competing amendments. Again, the group party agreements led to the monitoring regime which is laid out in amendment No 47. To me and to the Alliance Party, this represents a sensible way of monitoring the implementation, and we will be supporting that as well.

Mr Storey: I thank the Members who made a contribution on this group of amendments, and I will endeavour to be brief as we work our way through these. However, again, as I said earlier, it is also important that there are some things that I need to say. I trust that I will meet, or live up to, the expectation expressed by Mr Attwood, even though he does seem to think he has a fair idea as to what it is I am going to say.

Amendment 20 amends clause 42 to provide that where GB carries out a universal credit pilot, the Department will carry out a similar pilot within six months. I have listened to the concerns that the Member raised. As he would expect, and as I think he anticipated me to say, the reasons that we may give as to why we think that this is not something that we can consider at the moment obviously depend on what Great Britain is piloting. The sample size in Northern Ireland still gives us concern that it may be too small to give meaningful results. There may be further work to be done in relation to that. The GB pilot might give us the information required, without wasting resources repeating it in Northern Ireland. That could be an argument worth considering. If we do want to duplicate a GB pilot, we may want to pilot at the same time or wait until after their pilot has finished. Therefore, "within six months" could be too restrictive. That is another element that we need to take into consideration.

There are instances when we would not duplicate a pilot in the rest of Great Britain, such as when testing information technology where we use the GB IT system. The GB pilot would already have tested Northern Ireland aspects. I think that any pilot in Northern Ireland would obviously have to secure ministerial approval and funding before regulations for it are made, and it would have to be approved in the normal manner through the Social Development Committee. So, for those reasons, we are still of the view that amendment No 20 should be rejected. However, I trust that the Member will then be assured that we are content to support amendment No 34. Mr Beggs alluded to the fact that his party sought that provision as part of the Stormont House Agreement, and we were happy to do that.

Amendment No 34, which would introduce new clause 76A, would place a requirement on my Department to undertake at least one pilot scheme to test the effectiveness of arrangements for personal independence payment and outcomes for claimants. The Social Security Agency will develop a pilot scheme to test the implementation of PIP in Northern Ireland to better inform future roll-out plans and to obtain early estimates on outcomes. The agency is working on the detail for the PIP pilot scheme. However, DLA claimants who have had a successful DLA award in the six months prior to June 2015 will be invited to take part in the pilot. Planning assumptions are that the pilot will start in June this year. The pilot will be entirely voluntary and will not impact on the current DLA awards. Costs have not yet been assessed, but they are expected to be, I trust, minimal. For those reasons, and because we have an agreement that this is what we said we would do, I am happy to accept that amendment.

Turning to amendment No 46, clause 117 would replace the information-sharing gateway in section 39 of the Welfare Reform Act (Northern Ireland) 2007 and would broaden the scope of the data sharing that is provided for under the existing section. It would allow relevant information to be shared between the Department and relevant bodies such as the Housing Executive, Land and Property Services and other providers to help to make front-line public services more efficient. I think that that is probably about trying to get a grasp of the information gap that the Member commented on. There is an issue about the information that is supplied, because we need to be convinced and certain — I need to have due regard to my statutory responsibility, which is to continue to deliver a safe and secure social welfare system in Northern Ireland — that any information supplied under clause 117 will be subject to the offence provisions that are set out in clause 118. That makes it a criminal offence for a person to disclose information unlawfully, and it mirrors the provisions that already apply to social security information that is supplied to the Housing Executive and Land and Property Services for housing benefit. That is to give assurance that there will be protection for claimants. I think that that needs to be underscored.

Information can already be shared for the provision of a welfare service and for certain rates or housing benefit purposes. Widening the category of welfare services for which claimant information can be shared will make it easier for those with particular needs, such as elderly and disabled people, to receive the services they are entitled to. It will also provide the opportunity to reduce costs and make sure that limited funds are targeted appropriately. Current legislation allows social security information to be shared for housing benefit or certain welfare services purposes without requiring individual claimant consent. It is used to enable exchanges of information between and within authorities for the administration of a group of services commonly referred to as Supporting People. Clause 117 replaces that legislation and broadens the scope of information sharing that can take place. It will allow information to be shared for a wider group of welfare services, the details of which will be prescribed in regulations.

We intend to use that power to continue to allow data to be shared for housing benefit and Supporting People services. When the abolition of housing benefit commences, that power will also allow information to be supplied to the Department about a person's claim for housing costs within universal credit or the new housing credit for people of pension age. In addition, it is intended that information will be shared under that new power to help decide whether a person is eligible for a disabled person's parking permit or a disabled facilities grant towards the cost of providing adaptations and facilities to enable the disabled person to continue to live in their home. It will also allow claimant social security information to be supplied to social services staff so that they can decide whether a person should contribute towards the charges that are made for domiciliary services such as home helps and meals.

The clause provides the Department with the flexibility to add to the list of qualifying persons where there is good justification for doing so. That will allow the Department to respond to changes so that welfare services can be delivered promptly without the need for further primary legislation. In the future, that power could also be used for new schemes or services. The regulation-making power in clause 117 means that it would be a simple matter to prescribe additional welfare services where that is deemed necessary. That will provide the Department with a degree of flexibility that will be useful as and when new schemes or services are developed.

Introducing a legal gateway that will allow information to be shared in more circumstances will bring a number of advantages. By removing the need for claimants to repeatedly produce the same financial information to different parts of government, the clause will help to make it easier and, I trust, quicker for people to apply for and receive the services that they are entitled to. Where people have to pay towards a service, it will also ensure that social services are able to charge the right amount at the right time. That will reduce the amount of free care that many social services are obliged to provide and will potentially realise considerable savings. Removing the need for consent forms to be obtained, recorded and updated before information can be shared will allow administrative savings to be made by social services and the Department.

Amendment No 46 also adds the Department of Justice to the list of qualifying persons to whom information can be supplied. That will enable social security data to be shared for the purposes of the remission of transport charges for prison visits. I urge members to accept amendment No 46.

I turn to amendment No 47 and the issues that were raised by Mr Beggs. I want to make some comments on amendment No 47 and amendment No 49, which was tabled by Mr Agnew. Amendment No 47 introduces a new clause to provide for an annual report to be produced and laid before the Assembly to report information on sanctions. The intention is to provide transparency on the application of the sanctions regime. Currently, my Department produces an annual report on standards of decision-making within the Social Security Agency, and the decision-making report will be expanded to include information on sanctions.

I heard the comment that Mr Attwood made about quality, and I take on board what he said. The report will detail the type and numbers of sanctions that are imposed on claimants, either as a result of failure to fulfil their claimant commitment or fraud. The report will contain a number of details; I want to read those into the record and then make a further comment. It will include the number of persons who are affected by sanctions; the periods for which such persons are affected; the reasons for which sanctions are imposed; and the benefits or allowances that are reduced or lost.

However, I say to the Member that I will give consideration to this particular element. I think that a comment was also made by Michaela Boyle in relation to amendment No 49. I want to move on. Although we will not accept amendment No 47 for reasons which we all know in relation to the petition of concern, I want to take this element of the comments that have been made and look again at it before the Further Consideration Stage of the Bill.

This brings me to amendment No 49, and comments made by Mr Agnew. The amendment would introduce a new clause, clause 120C, which requests an independent report on the operation and effectiveness of this Act — including the numbers of people living in poverty and the financial impact on women — to be laid before the Assembly within three years of the commencement of the Act and every five years thereafter. As with amendment No 55, I advise Members, and the Assembly, that, in terms of social security legislation, this Bill does not exist in isolation. As the House will have noted, much of the content of the Bill amends an existing body of social security legislation.

The Department already produces reports on the impact of welfare reform, and those will continue to be produced on a regular basis. Our analytical services unit has just published the first research compendium which brings together a comprehensive selection of the information that we generate as a Department. Of particular importance is that the data and information presented reflects some of the most pressing problems that we face as a community — poverty, homelessness, disability and access, and take-up of social security benefits.

I say to Members — and sometimes it is not the most accepted of comments made in the House — that I would refer them to the Department's website because there is a wealth of information there currently. I also want to raise this issue before I leave the matter. It is the point raised by the Member about the triple lock. Here we are, back to the days of the triple lock. He talked about having the Northern Ireland joint standards committee, a Committee of the House and the welfare cap report.

I believe that primary responsibility for the scrutiny and interrogation of policy and policy-related practice is the Social Development Committee. As Minister, I am duty-bound to give the Committee its place, as the rules of the House dictate. It is not for me to set out terms and conditions and the way in which the Committee operates. I was Chair of the Education Committee — and I know that the Education Minister was only too glad when I was taken away from that post and sent to this one. On that Committee, we endeavoured to set out a work programme, and on a monthly basis we looked at specific issues which were of relevance to the Department. Consider the scale, size and complexity of this Act and the nature of the journey that we have now commenced. As I said earlier, this business is not concluded when we get to the end of proceedings tonight, nor indeed will it be concluded when we get Royal Assent in April this year, as I trust we will. It is an ongoing process or, dare I use the word, an evolutionary one, and some Members know the difficulty that I have in using that term. However, it is an ongoing process. My current thinking on the issue is that we should give due regard and place to the Committee to make its own decisions as to how to deal with these issues as we move forward. I must read into the record that I urge Members to reject amendment No 49.

However, I am willing to have a conversation with Mr Agnew on the issue before we come back for Further Consideration Stage. Despite the situation that we find ourselves in with the current petition of concern, we will make progress. I think that the tone and nature of the contributions that we have had in the House today have been helpful. There have been some good suggestions and there are some things that will give me food for thought as we prepare for Further Consideration Stage. I want that to continue as we try to make progress on the Bill.

I turn to amendment Nos 54 and 55. Amendment No 54 requests the Department to table a report on the implementation of the Act and on the financial arrangements applicable to welfare expenditure within six months, and annually thereafter. I indicated earlier a commitment to lay a report annually, and I made comments earlier in relation to amendment Nos 47 and 49.

In addition to those controls, I advise that routine checks and balances are built into public expenditure that ensures probity in governance. Given that those structures already exist, the need for an additional report may be deemed unnecessary, but I qualify what I have already said about those issues. It is also worth noting that, in terms of social security legislation, as we have already said, the Bill does not exist in isolation. Much of the mechanics and the outworkings of this fall within the scrutiny role of the Committee. I trust that I have already covered that. On that basis, our position is to reject amendment Nos 54 and 55.

Amendment No 56 requests that the standards and quality of decision-making with regard to sanctions will be monitored by the social security Joint Standards Committee on an annual basis. In response to Mr Attwood, I have outlined that the Northern Ireland Joint Standards Committee was set up in 1999 to report to the chief executive of the Social Security Agency and the head of the Child Maintenance Service in Northern Ireland on the standards of decision-making and payment accuracy within the two organisations. That includes the accuracy of decisions on sanctions. In April 2014, the chairperson, Professor Evason, observed that evidence from the DWP Select Committee suggested that inappropriate use is being made of sanctions in GB, raising concerns about the quality of decision-making, and I think that is the point that the Member referred to. On foot of that and other issues raised by the Committee, she requested that a standards assurance unit should undertake a special exercise to provide reassurance on the position in Northern Ireland currently and provide a benchmark for the future.

As the work on standards of decision-making in relation to sanctions is already being monitored by the Joint Standards Committee, we take the view that there is no need to legislate. The Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 requires the Department to prepare an annual report on the standards of decision-making, and a copy of every such report must be laid in the Assembly. I will take on board the comments that have been made and revisit the issue of the standards assurance unit to see what comment and decisions we could make before we come back at Further Consideration Stage. As I have offered to have a discussion with Mr Agnew on the concerns that he raised, I also undertake to have a discussion with Mr Attwood on that issue.

That brings me to the conclusion of my comments on the fourth group of amendments.

Mrs D Kelly: At the outset, I want to say that we are disappointed at the use of petitions of concern on these amendments. I do not think that there was any necessity for that. It will not disadvantage one side of the community over the other, and it is a very clear misuse of petitions of concern. As my colleague Mr Attwood outlined, we will not move amendment No 20, but we will support amendment No 34 from the Ulster Unionist Party. We welcome the Minister's acceptance of that amendment and the support from other parties, as indicated here this evening.

I believe that all parties that have made a contribution have recognised the importance of data sharing and the welfare policy, and, in particular, the Minister outlined the importance of and some of the rationale for that. I hope that, as a consequence of the sharing of the data, we will see more streamlined systems in place and quicker decisions being made, particularly for individuals who fall under the Supporting People scheme. I hope that that is a real consequence of that amendment as well as, if you like, a new enthusiasm for the sharing of that information and an obligation to carry that out.

I note, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, that you said that, if amendment No 47 is accepted, amendment No 49 will fall, although I did hear the Minister's commitment to speaking further to Mr Agnew to strengthen, perhaps, the format of the welfare reform report and about some of the timescales. Nonetheless, I am somewhat surprised, although, given Sinn Féin's servitude today, it believes that the mitigating factor is the combination of it. In essence, as the Minister outlined, it is a league table that decides who and what is sanctioned and why and how much is to be applied. I hope that Mr Agnew keeps his eyes wide open when he is having any discussions with the Minister about the report to the Assembly on the impact of welfare reform.

On our amendment in relation to the welfare reform Committee to be established, it should have been no surprise to any party in the House that our party has advocated this over the past two years. Contrary to the claims today by some in the media and elsewhere, the SDLP tabled numerous amendments two years ago and more recently to the Welfare Reform Bill. Indeed, we did not grant the power of veto at any time to any party at Stormont Castle, Stormont House or anywhere else that people would care to try to mischievously put on record.

The welfare reform Committee is not a new concept; it is currently working at the Scottish Parliament. So that Members are aware, the Scottish Parliament, to inform itself better, can find out about some of the reports that have already come before the Welfare Reform Committee of the Scottish Parliament. I ask the Minister to reflect on his party leader's contribution yesterday when he did not turn that down right away, although he tabled a petition of concern in relation to that. At Further Consideration Stage, he might give further thought to the outworkings of such a Committee.

So that Members know, the Scottish Government have set aside some £81 million for welfare mitigation measures. The Member Mr McNarry, who is not here at the moment, of course, was quite vociferous in his comments when he was on 'Nolan' early this morning talking about parity. In fact, the Scottish Parliament has already established mitigating measures in relation to the impact of welfare reform. It is doing what, in its view, is best for the Scottish people, so it is no different from what we are doing here. I think that it shows a more responsible attitude and is one of the benefits of devolution. It is unfortunate that Mr McNarry would not inform himself better before he goes on a rant on the radio about parity.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mrs D Kelly: I will indeed, Mr Beggs.

Mr Beggs: Will the Member agree with me that it is also unfortunate that he has not taken part in any of the extensive debate to share his views with other Members?

Mrs D Kelly: I had, one might say, the misfortune of having to listen to him on the radio this morning, as I was on the other end of the telephone myself. Otherwise, I would have missed anything that he had to say about welfare reform, because I would have been in my party group meeting.

It is very clear that the Scottish Executive recognise that there are a number of inequalities that are a consequence of welfare reform per se. That Committee has already gathered substantial evidence on the differential impact of welfare reform on women. As many Members know, the vast majority of lone parents are women. They also have to suffer from and experience the gender pay gap and are still the majority of care providers. The Scottish Committee is not just looking at the impact of welfare reform, but is actually challenging itself, its own Ministers and other Departments on how they have a contribution to make in the mitigation of some of those impacts. For example, housing policy in Scotland has now committed, as a consequence of the impact and cost of the bedroom tax, to actually build much greater numbers of social housing. That is something that, I am sure, the Minister would look forward to doing if the Executive's Budget would allow it. A very real and tangible way of militating against the bedroom tax is to build appropriate housing accommodation for people and greater numbers of public or social housing overall.

The Committee has also challenged the Scottish Executive's provision of childcare. We all know the important role that affordable and accessible childcare has in getting people out to work and allowing women returners, in particular, to enter the employment market. The Scottish are moving the debate on, not just around mitigation of the impact of welfare reform, but tackling inequalities as a whole.

I note, in particular, the slight, if you like, that Ms Boyle directed towards me about whether my party trusted me to be robust enough on the Committee for Social Development. I am sure that the record will show that I am quite robust, as will, I am sure, her party colleague the Chair of the Committee, on matters that come before that Committee. As the Chair of the Committee will know, many of its members do not show the objectivity that would be demanded in most other Houses in the examination and scrutiny of policy, particularly those who are champions of particular policy interventions.

I ask again that Sinn Féin reflects that the report to be laid before the Assembly is nothing more than a league table and that our proposal on a stand-alone Committee would be much more robust, give much more oversight on the inequalities that are being experienced by many people as a consequence of welfare reform and indeed look as it is rolled out across the PIP, for example, where many people on the lower scale of disability living allowance will lose out.

I think that I have covered most of the Members' contributions. At this stage, I will finish my contribution.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: As amendment No 20 has not been moved, I will move immediately to clause 42.

Clause 42 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 43 ordered to stand part of the Bill.

Clause 44 (Assembly control)

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We now move to the fifth group of amendments for debate, which contains 26 amendments. These amendments deal with Assembly control, commencement and technical issues. Members will note that amendment No 22 is consequential to amendment No 21 and amendment No 41 is consequential to amendment No 40. Members will also note that valid petitions of concern have been received to amendments Nos 21 and 22, 40 and 41; therefore they will require cross-community support. I call on Mr Stephen Agnew to move amendment No 21 and to address the other amendments in the group.

Mr Agnew had given notice of intention to move amendment No 21: In page 20, leave out from line 40 to line 6 on page 21 and insert

"shall not be made unless a draft of the regulations has been laid before and approved by a resolution of the Assembly."

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 22: In page 21, line 32, leave out subsection (6).—
[Mr Agnew.]

No 30: In clause 63, page 53, line 3, leave out "ordinary".—
[Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 31: In clause 63, page 53, line 10, leave out "ordinary".—
[Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 32: In clause 63, page 53, line 17, leave out subsections (6) and (7).—
[Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 33: After clause 63 insert

"Entitlement to work: statutory shared parental pay

63A.—(1) Part 12ZC of the Contributions and Benefits Act (inserted by section 5 of the Work and Families Act (Northern Ireland) 2015) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 167ZU(2) (entitlement: birth) after paragraph (c) there is inserted—

"(ca) that at the end of that prescribed week the claimant mother was entitled to be in that employment,".

(3) In section 167ZU(4) (entitlement: birth) after paragraph (d) there is inserted—

"(da) that at the end of that prescribed week the claimant was entitled to be in that employment,".

(4) In section 167ZW(2) (entitlement: adoption) after paragraph (c) there is inserted—

"(ca) that at the end of that prescribed week claimant A was entitled to be in that employment,".

(5) In section 167ZW(4) (entitlement: adoption) after paragraph (d) there is inserted—

"(da) that at the end of that prescribed week claimant B was entitled to be in that employment,".—

No 40: In clause 93, page 65, leave out lines 16 to 22 and insert

"shall not be made unless a draft of the regulations has been laid before and approved by a resolution of the Assembly."—
[Mr Agnew.]

No 41: In clause 93, page 65, line 33, leave out subsection (7).—
[Mr Agnew.]

No 58: In clause 133, page 95, line 1, leave out "46 to" and insert "section".—
[Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 67: In clause 133, page 95, line 31, leave out paragraph (q).— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 68: In clause 133, page 95, line 32, leave out paragraph (r).— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 69: In clause 133, page 95, line 32, at end insert“() sections 130A and 130B (discretionary support);”— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 70: In clause 133, page 95, leave out line 34 and insert“(t) in Schedule 7, paragraphs 2, 6, 8 and 13(1) and”.— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 71: In clause 133, page 95, leave out lines 39 and 40 and insert“(ii) in Part 3 the entries relating to paragraph 27(3)(b) of Schedule 8 to the Welfare Reform and Pensions (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 and to Part 3 of Schedule 4 to the Welfare Reform Act (Northern Ireland) 2010.”.— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 72: In clause 133, page 96, line 9, leave out subsection (5).— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 76: In schedule 12, page 134, leave out lines 31 to 40.— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

No 77: In schedule 12, page 139, line 20, column 2, at end insert

No 78: In schedule 12, page 153, leave out lines 4 to 8.— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

Mr Agnew: Of all the groups of amendments, certainly of my own, I find it strangest, but also, perhaps, most telling, that this should be subject to a petition of concern. My proposed amendments simply seek to give the Assembly greater oversight of the regulations that will come forward after the Bill. The Minister has made much of the fact that today is not the end of the journey for the Bill, but neither is Final Stage or even Royal Assent. Much of the Bill is an enabling power for the Department to put in place regulations on welfare.

I accept that I have chosen a somewhat crude approach by seeking to amend the Bill so that a draft affirmative resolution is required for any regulations. However, proposing an amendment to every regulation for which I believed a draft affirmative resolution was required would have meant many more amendments today. I am therefore putting forward a principle that the Assembly should have maximum oversight of the regulations. We cannot simply pass a Bill that, in much of what it will do, enables the Department to put in place regulations with little Assembly scrutiny. Those of us who sit on Committees know how quickly, and with how little scrutiny, negative resolutions, like the many under this Bill, and, indeed, affirmative resolutions, are passed. If you look at some of the enablements in the Bill and some of the areas that it covers, you will understand why I have such concern and, particularly, why I have concern that increased Assembly oversight is subject to a petition of concern.

Section 9 will decide through regulations the amount of universal credit to be awarded; the level at which universal credit is set will therefore be decided after we debate the Bill and it has received Royal Assent. The amount of children’s disability additions will go through under regulations, as will the amount to be awarded under the new employment support allowance components of universal credit. I could go on at length, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, but this stage has already gone on at length; therefore I do not intend to cite every regulation that causes me concern. My proposal is that draft regulations should be brought before the Assembly before being implemented. I think that that is good practice. I accept that my proposal would include all regulations, and perhaps some do not need that level of oversight.

As drafted, however, the Bill leaves too much responsibility to the Department and insufficient oversight by the Assembly. I ask the Minister to bear that in mind and to look at it in more detail. Indeed, I ask Members to insist today that the Assembly have full scrutiny of regulations under what is undoubtedly one of the most important pieces of legislation in the Assembly, certainly in my time, given the direct impact that it will have on the lives and well-being of many of our constituents. I will wait to hear the Minister’s rationale for the technical amendments, but, at this point, I do not have concerns about their content.

Amendment No 21 not moved.

Mrs O’Neill: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. This group of amendments mostly tidies up elements of the welfare Bill, reflecting what has been agreed by the parties and changes to other legislation or positions that have been agreed by the Executive.

The Executive paper provides a calling mechanism for forthcoming regulations. Given the sensitivities about the issue, I welcome the agreement that the Executive will have the facility to scrutinise fully and agree the regulations following on from the legislation.

In light of that, and given the time that Members have been in the Chamber debating the issues, I am content to indicate that we support the Minister’s amendment.

Mr Attwood: Michelle O'Neill knows, the Minister now knows, and I certainly knew that a big burden falls on Ministers in the passage of a Bill over a couple of days. I acknowledge that there has been no light touch from the Minister, and his responses have been comprehensive. Whilst those responses were manifestly lacking in multiple areas, I nonetheless acknowledge the Minister, his officials and others who had an input to his contributions. I also acknowledge all other Members because, whilst reckless approaches have been adopted to the management of business in the Chamber, which sent out an entirely negative and anti-democratic message to our people, the character of much of this debate might have sent out a slightly different message.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

More than anybody else, we should acknowledge Mr Agnew. He is a lone Member representing the Green Party, but a great burden of amendments and contributions fell to him. Of all MLAs, he should be acknowledged for that reason. Given that the SDLP is sympathetic to his proposals in amendment No 21 and in other amendments, can further consideration be given, over the next couple of weeks, as to how to manage the regulations to maximise the level of accountability in terms of what the Minister might want to say this evening or later?

The Committee of the Scottish Parliament that I referred to does not have only a general oversight role in the implementation of the Welfare Reform Bill. Unless I am wrong, it is also responsible for looking at the regulations, so, if you were minded to go in the direction of a Committee, there is an opportunity to enhance its role for the regulations.

I have no doubt that the Minister will shortly present an argument that you do not want to overload and put disproportionate demands on the Committee and the House —

Mr Storey: I would not be too sure of that.

Mr Attwood: I expected you to be inclined to make that argument, but one way to mitigate the situation would be to enhance the role of a new Committee for welfare reform, including welfare reform regulations. If the Minister is inclined to go in that direction, it could be a win-win situation.

Save for those matters, the substance of the rest of the amendments seems to be technical in nature, and we will support them.

7.15 pm

Mr Beggs: I welcome this opportunity to comment on the fifth and final group of amendments to the Bill. There have long been concerns about the scope of the Bill, not least because so much of it is simply enabling legislation. Much of the detail and the real policy changes are yet to be disclosed. That is why a number of amendments that could have been addressed in subordinate regulations were tabled at this stage. However, once the Bill passes Final Stage, the Assembly will have much less opportunity for direct input.

It is important that we recognise that the Committees have an important role to play in the process, and that the Social Development Committee, which I have recently been appointed to, will have a particularly important role. It is essential that the Minister and his Department adopt a cooperative attitude. There will be occasions when the Committee will seek further briefings or clarification from the Department and, as onerous as that may be, I hope that any requests will be met obligingly and in a spirit of cooperation.

I turn to some of the amendments in the group. Mr Agnew is, effectively, seeking to change the Assembly's control of all the subordinate legislation flowing from the Bill from confirmatory to affirmative resolution. I have to say that I have a degree of understanding and sympathy for that position. The problem with the confirmatory method is that the regulations can be brought into operation months before the Assembly formally confirms them. You could argue in such cases that this has been a deficit of democratic engagement with what are effectively new laws. The regulations will be just as strong, and will, in many cases, have a greater impact than anything that may have been written into the Bill itself.

I accept that the Committees normally have an important role to play in the process when it comes to correcting or changing any elements of what has been proposed, but we have to recognise that, ultimately, the power remains with the Departments. Amendments can be sought but they do not necessarily have to be adopted.

I would be concerned if Mr Agnew's amendments were made. Let us reflect on our experiences. Look at the recent experience of two years of deadlock and the financial penalties that preceded the Bill before it reached this stage. I have genuine concerns that we could reach similar stand-offs that could very easily build up regarding many of the key regulations. Such stalemates would only lead to further breaches of parity, further frustrations from the Treasury and further reductions of public expenditure in Northern Ireland. Again, fines — possibly tens of millions of pounds — could occur, with the likelihood of in-year budget clawbacks, as happened in the current financial year. Look at the emergency closures and reductions in public services that resulted. I do not think that I am stretching imagination too far; this could very easily happen again were we to adopt that approach. It is my natural inclination to go in that direction but I can see, given the experience of this Assembly in dealing with these difficult issues, very practical problems that might contribute to adverse relations within the Assembly once more, causing even greater problems than the possible financial difficulties.

The Ulster Unionist Party will not support amendment Nos 21 and 40 as long as the Minister gives a commitment in his comments that he will ensure that the relevant Committee, whether the Social Development Committee or some new Ad Hoc Committee, will be afforded whatever number of briefings by the Department is deemed necessary.

Mr Storey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Beggs: Certainly.

Mr Storey: I am quite happy to give that commitment now. I trust that that has been the case both previously and since I came to office. I have not at any time, nor will I, put any impediment before the Committee in ensuring that it has timely and appropriate information. I think that the Chair will bear record to the fact that the officials have been amenable and available for this, and I give the commitment that that will be the case. I take the Member's point, because it is vital that we do that — I will maybe cover some of this as I conclude — but it is also vital that I have confidence that the information that is necessary for the Committee to fulfil its role is placed before it in a way that means that it can carry out its function and statutory responsibility to the House.

Mr Beggs: I welcome that commitment, and it is equally important that there is sufficient time for the Committee to feed into and give feedback to what is being proposed. A responsibility will also fall on the Committee, which will have to demonstrate similar good faith in return by carefully avoiding putting any unnecessary delays or obstacles in place. If the Committee wishes to keep that positive working relationship, there will be a responsibility on it to do everything that is reasonable, and in a timely fashion. That will be a huge ask of the Committee. I suspect that there is much work ahead on this issue.

I do not intend to comment on the rest of the amendments in the group. I see them as largely technical in nature and reflecting the many changes that have occurred over the past two years during the very long period in which the Bill was sitting on the shelf. I am pleased that we seem to be moving forward constructively. I hope that the dialogue and cooperation will continue so that we can enable the legislation to go through its next stage and that, as a result, we in Northern Ireland will avoid potential fines costing hundreds of millions of pounds that will adversely affect our public services and our citizens.

Mr Storey: I am sure that there are many Members who are glad that we have, I trust, got to this stage and that we are now in group 5, which is the final group of amendments. As other Members have done, let me give a word of thanks to those who have contributed today and yesterday. Let me also give a word of appreciation to my staff, who have been and continue to be available. I appreciate all the work that they have done to ensure that I have the necessary information. I place on record my appreciation of all that hard work.

Let me move to the amendments. I again underscore the fact that some of them have a technical nature about them; they are about the procedures of the House. Sometimes it becomes a challenge for us all to ensure that we have got our head around all these things.

Amendment No 21 changes the Assembly control from confirmatory to affirmative, and amendment No 22 removes the explanation of the confirmatory procedure. Clause 44 provides for the procedure by which the Northern Ireland Assembly can control the making of regulations for universal credit. The Assembly controls for the universal credit regulations will, in the main, follow the more common form of control, ie the negative resolution procedure. That follows the conventional approach to delegated legislation in this area. However, regulations that introduce new concepts to the benefits system will be subject to the confirmatory procedure in the first instance. That will ensure a debate on any areas of concern. It will also maintain the flexibility to amend the legislation quickly in the future to respond to changes without making disproportionate demands on the legislature.

I am proposing that the form of Assembly control to be applied to regulations remains as it is in the Bill. That will enable the subordinate legislation to make timely progress. It means that the first set of regulations that introduce major policy changes will be made using the confirmatory procedure. The alternative approach suggested by these amendments is affirmative, which provides for consideration before the regulation comes into effect, and is rarely applied to social security legislation as it could lead to delays in implementation. On Mr Beggs's point, bearing in mind the need to implement welfare reform legislation as quickly as possible for the fines to the Northern Ireland block grant to cease, I urge Members to reject amendment Nos 21 and 22. I have considered and appreciate the comments that Mr Beggs made about that issue.

Amendment Nos 30, 31 and 32 all relate to clause 63. They are technical amendments that result from the Work and Families Act (Northern Ireland) 2015, which received Royal Assent on 8 January 2015. The Act provides a legislative framework that enables the modernisation of arrangements for statutory pay and leave following the birth or adoption of a child, and it renames what were previously known as ordinary statutory paternity pay and additional statutory paternity pay as statutory paternity pay. To take account of that, I have tabled amendment Nos 30, 31 and 32 to clause 63. These take account of the name change, and I urge Members to accept them.

The Work and Families Act (Northern Ireland) 2015 provides the basis for new rights to shared parental leave and pay in Northern Ireland. Those new rights will come into effect for babies that are due, or for children placed for adoption, on or after 5 April 2015. The Act provides for the introduction of shared parental leave and pay in Northern Ireland. It is anticipated that shared parental leave and pay will give families greater choice in how they arrange childcare in the first year by allowing working mothers the option of ending their maternity pay and maternity leave early, and to share untaken leave and pay with their partner. An adopter will similarly be able to bring their adoption leave and pay to an early end to opt into shared parental leave and pay with their partner. Amendment No 33 inserts clause 63A, which ensures that only parents entitled to work in the United Kingdom are entitled to shared parental pay. I urge Members to accept amendment No 33.

Amendment Nos 40 and 41 relate to the Assembly control for certain regulations that introduce aspects of the personal independence payment. Perhaps it would assist the House if I reiterated what clause 93 does. This provision, which is that the first set of regulations made in relation to the assessment criteria for both working-age adults and children, or for determining whether the claimant meets the required period condition, will be by confirmatory procedure. That means that the regulations are subject to debate and the agreement of the Assembly within six months of coming into operation. In all other cases, regulations made under this Part of the Bill will be subject to negative procedure. Amendment No 40 proposes to change the Assembly process for these regulations to the draft affirmative procedure. That means that the regulations would be laid in draft form and cannot be made and become operative unless approved by the Assembly. Amendment No 41 is a technical amendment that is consequential to amendment No 40 and would remove a reference to the definition of the confirmatory procedure.

The rationale for the form of Assembly control is that negative resolution is usually applied to non-controversial, minor and routine amendment regulations, whilst the confirmatory procedure, for the first detailed set, applies to regulations made using the affirmative procedure in Westminster. The confirmatory procedure is used to facilitate the need for parity of timing whilst safeguarding the Assembly's right to approve the regulations and have greater scrutiny of regulations that are either deemed controversial or have significant policy changes. That is important, and, in light of that detail, it is necessary that we have those procedures and assurance in place.

The confirmatory procedure is proposed for regulations that bring in any new scheme or benefit, or that are considered controversial, such as all of the universal credit regulations and the main PIP regulations.

7.30 pm

As proposed in the Bill, the procedure applies only to the first set of regulations to be made. Subsequent amendment regulations would usually be categorised as non-controversial and routine and would be made using the negative procedure. I have no doubt that Members followed all that and are clearly across the procedure, so that we ensure that we cover all these issues in a way that, I trust, satisfies the Assembly.

Affirmative procedure is almost never used in social security legislation. Currently, within the social security field, it is applied only to certain regulations for which DSD inherited responsibility from DEL. Instead, social security regulations are subject to the confirmatory procedure, where the Assembly votes on whether to approve the regulations after they are made. That is designed to facilitate parity of timing whilst ensuring that the Assembly has the opportunity to debate the regulations and to decide whether to approve them. As a general rule, the affirmative procedure would be applied to regulations that are unique to Northern Ireland, that is, they are not parity based, outside of social security, provide for something controversial or deal with financial assistance, such as the discretionary support scheme. This is the only set of regulations that will fall out of the Bill that the affirmative procedure will apply to.

It is important to highlight that, if the regulations falling under clause 93 were to be made using the affirmative procedure, there would inevitably be delays in introducing the personal independence payment to Northern Ireland. That, in turn, would increase the potential for a financial penalty to be incurred to the Northern Ireland block grant. I trust that that is what Members wish to avoid. It is important. I have given commitments on processing all this and will ensure that my Department works constantly to bring forward all these issues in a timely manner so that we can avoid any further penalties. For those reasons, I urge Members to reject amendment Nos 40 and 41.

I will turn to the last amendments, which are amendments Nos 58 to 72. Clause 133 would provide for provisions of the Bill to come into force. The provisions specified in subsection (1) come into force on Royal Assent, and the Act's remaining provisions will be brought into force by commencement orders. Clause 133(3) sets out how the commencement orders can be used, for example, to appoint different days for different purposes and for different areas in certain cases. Amendment Nos 58 to 72 are to clause 133(1) and result from the commencement date for the new sanctions regime being aligned with universal credit; the deferral of the commencement date for the rate relief scheme being deferred; and the inclusion of commencement dates, where appropriate, for provisions that have already commenced in Great Britain. I urge Members to accept amendment Nos 58 to 72.

Amendment Nos 76 and 78 would move repeals from schedule 12. The repeals were included in schedule 12 because of the changes being brought in by clause 112, which relates to civil penalties. As clause 112 no longer stands part of the Bill, those repeals are no longer required, so there is no need for them to be removed. I urge Members to accept amendment Nos 76 and 78.

Amendment No 77 would remove the need to report on income support sanctions when income support is abolished and replaced completely by universal credit. I urge Members to accept amendment No 77.

That brings my remarks on the Consideration Stage of the Welfare Reform Bill to a conclusion.

Mr Speaker: I call Mr Agnew to make his winding-up speech. I ask him, for my benefit, because I was not in the Chair when this session began, to clarify his position on the amendment.

Mr Agnew: To be clear, it is not my intention to move amendment No 21. It was very much a probing amendment that was designed to make the point that the Assembly should have maximum oversight.

When I introduced the group, I acknowledged that it was a blunt amendment. I had hoped, although I did not hear it from the Minister, that it may be a spur for him to come back, perhaps, with some amendments on specific aspects where the draft affirmative measure could, instead, apply. Mr Beggs referred to the oversight of the Committee. Some support has been given to the role of the Committee, but it is very much the role of the Chamber that I wish to highlight. I may come back at Further Consideration Stage with more specific amendments as to where I believe the Assembly should have maximum oversight on any proposed regulations.

I understand the point that Mr Beggs made, in that, should specific aspects of the Bill come back to the Assembly, there is the possibility of further disagreement. Equally, I do not think that we should live under threat of being unable to debate it for fear that the Assembly would collapse. We have shown the five-party group —

Mr Beggs: Will the Member give way?

Mr Agnew: Sure.

Mr Beggs: Does the Member accept that, under the confirmatory method, it will come back to the Assembly and there will be a requirement for debate and discussion, but at least that will happen without delays that bring about additional financial burdens?

Mr Agnew: I thank the Member for his intervention. The alternative side of that coin is that we give the Department the power to make the regulations and then, at the time of its choosing, we debate them. It is a bit cart before horse for me in terms of some of the provisions, although not the whole Bill. There are different levels of secondary legislation — subordinate legislation — for a reason. I think that, for some aspects of the Bill, confirmatory is appropriate, but I think that there are aspects of the Bill that are too important to be decided in advance of the Assembly seeing the draft.

It would be remiss of me not to pay credit, as others have done, to a few people, most notably my legislative team, such as Ross Brown is. Note has been made of the number of amendments that we have brought forward, and I should pay due regard to a member of my staff who has worked tirelessly on the Bill and also, as always, to the assistance of the Bill Office for helping us to bring forward legislatively competent amendments. I stand over our policy ideas, but we are not legal drafters, and its support and guidance on the amendments has been invaluable.

It is the closing of a long debate. I think that it has been largely temperate. We have disagreed, of course, but that is the essence of democracy — disagreement, but disagreement with respect — and I think that that has largely been carried through in the debate.

Mr Speaker: As amendment No 21 has not been moved, amendment No 22 will not be called, as it is consequential to amendment No 21.

120A.In Article 76 of the Social Security (Northern Ireland) Order 1998 (reports by Department) for paragraph (1) substitute—

"(1) The Department shall prepare, either annually or at such times or intervals as may be prescribed, a report on—

(a) the standards achieved by the Department in the making of decisions against which an appeal lies to an appeal tribunal constituted under Chapter 1 of Part 2; and

(b) the operation of sanctions.

(1A) For the purposes of paragraph (1)(b) a sanction is—

(a) the reduction in the amount of an award of universal credit, a jobseeker's allowance, income support or an employment and support allowance on account of a failure by a person to comply with any requirement or any other conduct of a person;

(b) the loss of, or reduction in the amount of, any sanctionable benefit under the Social Security Fraud Act (Northern Ireland) 2001.

(1B) A report under paragraph (1)(b) must contain details of—

- (a) the number of persons affected by sanctions;
- (b) the periods for which such persons are affected;
- (c) the reasons for which sanctions are imposed;
- (d) the benefits or allowances which are reduced or lost.”.— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

“Discretionary support

130A.—(1) The Department may, in accordance with regulations under this section—

- (a) make payments by way of grant or loan to prescribed persons;
 - (b) provide, or arrange for the provision of, goods or services to prescribed persons.
- (2) Anything done under subsection (1)(a) or (b) is referred to in this section as the provision of discretionary support.
- (3) Regulations may make provision—
- (a) for the Department to provide discretionary support only in prescribed circumstances;
 - (b) conferring a discretion on the Department (subject to any provision made by virtue of paragraph (c) or (d))—
 - (i) as to whether or not to provide discretionary support in a particular case; and
 - (ii) as to the nature of the discretionary support and (in the case of support by way of payments) as to the amount of the payments and the period for or in respect of which they are made;

(c) imposing a limit on the amount of the discretionary support that the Department may make in any particular case;

(d) restricting the period for or in respect of which the Department may provide discretionary support in any particular case;

(e) for claims for discretionary support to be made in the prescribed form and manner and for the procedure to be followed in dealing with and disposing of such claims;

(f) imposing conditions on persons claiming or receiving discretionary support requiring them to provide to the Department such information as may be prescribed;

(g) for the disclosure of information relating to discretionary support in prescribed circumstances or to prescribed persons;

(h) authorising the Department in prescribed circumstances to recover by prescribed means discretionary payments made under this section;

(i) requiring or authorising reviews (whether by the Department or a prescribed person) of decisions made by the Department with respect to the provision of discretionary support or the recovery of payments made under this section;

(j) for such other matters as appear to the Department to be necessary or expedient in connection with the provision of discretionary support, including provision creating criminal offences and provision amending or applying (with or without modification) any statutory provision.

(4) In this section “prescribed” means prescribed by, or determined in accordance with, regulations under this section.

(5) Discretionary support is not to be regarded as a social security benefit; but regulations under this section may provide for any statutory provision relating to a social security benefit (or to such benefits generally) to apply with prescribed modifications to discretionary support.

(6) Regulations shall not be made under this section unless a draft of the regulations has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, the Assembly.

(7) The Department shall, in respect of each financial year, prepare and lay before the Assembly a report on the operation of regulations made under this section.”.— [Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development).]

Mr Donald Starritt

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): I welcome the usual members of the team: Iain, Donald and Nicola. Do you want to brief us on this?

Mr Iain Greenway (Department of the Environment): Of course. Thank you, Chair and Committee. Following last Thursday's session, we spoke to the Minister on Monday about the three areas that the Committee had asked the Minister to consider. The area that we had most discussion with him about was clause 17 and the reduction of the minimum mandatory learning period from 12 months to six months. The Minister is broadly content that we can achieve much of the road safety benefit of the minimum mandatory learning period in that reduced period, and it will be reflected in the syllabus and logbook. As Peter indicated last week, it should enable a much more restricted exemption regime around the shorter period than around the 12 months. So, the Minister is broadly content and, at Consideration Stage, subject to Executive clearance, can explain that more fully to the House.

You had asked us to step through the three substantive amendments and a small number of technical amendments. If you are content, I will ask Donald to take you through those.

Mr Donald Starritt (Department of the Environment): As Iain said, there are basically two groups of amendments. There are the substantive policy amendments and a small number of technical amendments. There are three policy amendments, all of which are being brought forward by the Department at the request of the Committee. Clause 3, as it stands, applies the statutory option to the new lower limits. So, now that we are removing the statutory option, clause 3 will go from the Bill completely, and we will bring in a new clause simply to remove the statutory option from the statute books. That is fairly straightforward.

The second one is an amendment to retain the minimum age for a provisional licence at 17 rather than reducing it to 16, and that simply entails removing clause 16. It leaves things as they are.

The third amendment is reducing the minimum period for holding a provisional licence to six months rather than 12 months. That involves redrafting clause 17 to substitute "six-month period" for "12", and there are some consequential changes in schedule 1 simply to follow on from that. The precise wording of those will be down to the Office of the Legislative Counsel (OLC), but we anticipate no difficulty and that they will be very straightforward amendments.

The other group is the technical amendments. We discussed those with the Committee over the last two sessions. One of those is a minor numbering amendment in clause 18, and that simply entails the paragraph that is currently numbered "13A" becoming "13B". Again, it is a straightforward change.

The only technical changes are being made in response to the Examiner of Statutory Rules's request, and that provides that any subordinate legislation is subject to draft affirmative procedure rather than affirmative procedure. Again, it is a technical change and seems to be consistently requested by the Examiner.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): It seems that we are now going for draft affirmative resolution rather than affirmative.

Mr Starritt: That is right. It does not change the fundamentals, where there is provision for the debate in the Assembly. It does not alter Assembly control. It is basically more procedural for us as civil servants and affects how much of the process we go through before the debate.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Are members content? Are there any questions for the officials?

Mr Boylan: Thanks for the clarification. I am trying to think what the youth groups and all said about the original proposal. Clearly, there is no consultation period. Will you clarify exactly what they said? I think that the Committee indicated last week that it is happy enough to move to 17, which is grand. I know a number of young people who took their test two, three, four or five weeks after their seventeenth birthday. I have often said since the start of the process that it is about driver ability. The only difference is that we are adding on a period of six months before they can do that test. They should be fit to do the test. Can you remember the responses of the youth groups as part of the consultation? How many were in agreement with the 16-and-a-half proposal?

Mr Greenway: In the figures that the Research and Information Service (RaISe) presented last week for the Committee's engagement with children and young people, 67·7% of young people and 73·5% of youth organisations felt that it was a good idea to reduce the age of licensing to 16 and a half. In terms of the one-year minimum mandatory learning period, 36·6% of young people thought that that was a good idea, compared with 51·2% who thought that it was a bad idea. For youth organisations, 39·4% thought that it was a good idea, and 51·5% thought that it was a bad idea. That was reasonably evenly split. Indeed, I think that Nicola pointed out to me that it was much more so than when the Department consulted on it as part of the development of the policy in late 2011, when there was a stronger majority against a 12-month mandatory minimum learning period.

In effect, the two amendments to clauses 16 and 17 will retain the minimum age at which somebody can take a practical test at 17 and a half. The Bill still creates that arrangement and moves to it; it does it by making two changes that increase the minimum age to 17 to hold a provisional licence. It was reasonably broadly split on the minimum mandatory learning period of 12 months between being and not being a good idea. One anticipates that, if you had said, "What about six months?", the numbers probably would have changed in support, potentially to create a majority in support, but that is conjecture from the figures. A shorter period is more likely to have been positively received by more people.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The thing is that, if people need more than six months, they can take a year or two years —

Mr Greenway: That may be because they need longer to learn. It may be that they have to stop for a period and not proceed with their learning because of personal circumstance.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Or, if they fail, they have to do it all again. Sometimes, it takes a whole year.

Ms Nicola McEvoy (Department of the Environment): We want to promote the mandatory learning period as the minimum. Six months is the absolute minimum. We want to encourage people to take up as much practice as they can.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Absolutely. I am very pleased that the Minister and the Department are happy to go along with our suggestions to amend the three clauses. Members, are you content that the Department is going to make the amendment? Do you need to have sight of the wording of the amendment before we go on —

Mr Eastwood: I trust the Minister.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): — to the formal clause by clause? Are you happy?

Mr Weir: You would. I want it written in blood. [Laughter.]

Mr Boylan: Or carved in stone.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): OK. I wanted to ask just in case you said that I did not ask.

Mr Weir: To be fair, it is very publicly on the record.

Mr Greenway: As Donald indicated, these are, in drafting terms, straightforward amendments. We had hoped to be further on in the process, but the individual in OLC who drafted the Bill is off at the moment. Understandably, her colleagues would rather that she looked at it rather than them trying to understand the structure of the Bill. However, it is a mechanical piece rather than an operational difficulty.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): It is very straightforward.

Mr Starritt: The only thing, Chair, is that there is potential that the order and numbering of the clauses could change. However, that will be a minor change, nothing substantive.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Members, are you content with the consequential amendment proposed?

Members indicated assent.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Members, I just want to check whether you want any further amendments. No. OK. Members, you have indicated that you are content with the proposed amendments, including clause 3.

We can now proceed to formal clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill. I remind members that formal clause-by-clause consideration is your last opportunity to discuss the clauses, and any decisions will be final. I will read out the clauses, one by one.

Members, we previously indicated that we were broadly content with clauses 1 and 2.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 1 and 2, put and agreed to.

Clause 3 ("The prescribed limit": further provision)

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The Department proposes a small technical amendment to clause 3 to comply with the Examiner's recommendation that the regulation-making power shall be subject to draft affirmative resolution rather than affirmative resolution as presently drafted. We have previously indicated that we have no objection to the amendment. Members have asked the Department to bring forward an amendment to remove the statutory option, as discussed earlier in the meeting.

Question, That the Committee is content with the clause, subject to the proposed amendments, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): We previously indicated that we were broadly content with clauses 4 to 15.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 4 to 15, put and agreed to.

Clause 16 (Minimum age for licence: small vehicle)

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The Department has agreed now to remove the clause so that the minimum age remains at the current statutory age of 17.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 16, put and negated.

Clause 17 (Provisional licence to be held for minimum period in certain cases)

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The Department has agreed to bring forward an amendment to reduce the minimum required period of learning to six months.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 17, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Clause 18 (Approved programmes of training: category B motor vehicles and motor bicycles)

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The Committee proposes a technical amendment to clause 18. Members have already indicated that they have no objection to the amendment.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 18, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

Mr Boylan: Chair, you will now have to give some thought to clarification in relation to the programmes of training and guidance on it, because it was for over a period of 12 months and over different conditions and everything else. You will have to reconsider some of that, yes?

Mr Greenway: Yes, and we have previously made the commitment to give the Committee sight of that as early we can before we go through the formal regulation-making process.

Mr Boylan: No problem.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): We will put that in our report.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Members previously indicated that they were broadly content with clauses 19 to 22.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 19 to 22, put and agreed to.

New Clause

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Clause 22A is a further amendment to the Order of 1995. The Department proposes to insert a new clause to comply with the Examiner's recommendation that certain regulation-making powers should be subject to draft affirmative resolution. The proposed clause would read as follows:

"22A In Article 110 of the Order of 1995 (general provision as to orders and regulations) in paragraph (4) (regulations), for 'be subject to affirmative resolution' substitute 'not be made unless a draft has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, the Assembly'."

No issues were raised with officials on that clause during the initial consideration.

Question, That the Committee is content with the new clause, put and agreed to.

Clause 23 (Supplementary, incidental and consequential etc. provision)

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): Although no issues were previously raised with officials on clause 23, the Department now proposes to bring forward a consequential amendment, as discussed earlier in our meeting.

Question, That the Committee is content with clause 23, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): We previously indicated that we were broadly content with clauses 24 to 27.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 24 to 27, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedule 1, put and agreed to.

Schedule 2 (Repeals)

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): The Department is proposing a consequential amendment to part 2 of schedule 2.

Question, That the Committee is content with the schedule, subject to the proposed amendment, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): That concludes the formal clause-by-clause consideration of the Road Traffic (Amendment) Bill. Thank you very much to Iain, Donald and Nicola for working through that with us. A draft report of the Committee Stage will be produced for members' consideration as soon as possible.

Before you go, Pam Cameron, Deputy Chair, has brought to my attention —

Mr Greenway: Could I just talk about the Bill before you go on, Chair? The Department has found it a pleasure to work with the Committee on the Bill. We may have our differences on other matters, but we have been very happy with the engagement and the seriousness with which the Committee has taken what we, in the Department, feel is an important Bill to save lives on our roads. Particular thanks to the Committee for advancing its schedule beyond that which had been agreed by the Assembly of the end of March for the report. The Minister will seek to move forward through the Executive process to agree amendments at Consideration Stage sooner rather than later.

The Chairperson (Ms Lo): OK. Good.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): I welcome formally Gerry McCann, Seamus Cassidy and Doreen Roy. You are very welcome to the Committee again. The Department has provided clarification on a number of outstanding issues that we sought information on during the consideration process. They are contained at page 8 of members' tabled items. Additionally, Cruse has provided a follow-up paper to their briefing, which is included at page 10. This paper clarifies some of the issues that they raised in their briefing; you will remember there was a lack of certainty on one or two issues. The paper that they have very helpfully provided does not seek changes to the Pensions Bill, but it reflects ongoing issues that they have in relation to pensions. Obviously, that will help to inform our commentary through the clause-by-clause consideration. I invite Gerry to make any additional clarifications before we proceed with the clause-by-clause scrutiny.

Mr Gerry McCann (Department for Social Development):

Good morning, everybody. Does everyone have a copy of the paper from Cruse? I am going to speak to it. First, I repeat the point that what has been asked for in this paper is not actually part of the Bill. All that the clauses in the Bill do is to set out that there shall be a scheme, with the scheme itself to be set out in regulations. There are only four or five points in the Bill itself. Really, we are just talking about how this might work in practice.

Who will be worse off under the Bill? The Cruse paper provides a number of figures at paragraph 8. We accept that, overall, someone with a child, who can no longer receive payments for a period of 18 or 19 years, will obviously get less. However, under the new system, money will be aimed more at less well-off people who fall into the lower end of the income scale, and they will end up getting far more than they do under the existing system. On average, according to the figures that we have, there is a notional gain for the poorest income quartile of the order of about £17,000. Again, money has been taken from the pot and used differently from how it is used in the current system. Those who gain most will be the poorest. That is one of the underpinning issues. Those who lose will be the better off; they will lose if they have children. Anybody who has no children and is aged under 45 gets absolutely nothing at the moment, so they will gain from this as well. Are we happy enough that we have identified the losers and the winners?

I move on to paragraph 10, which is about the cost of funerals. The figure given for NI is £5,893. From what we have been able to find out from the reference, that figure has been issued by a company that advises people to take out some insurance to help cover the cost of a funeral. That also covers things like the wake, for example, which is part of the overall cost but is not something that the state has ever provided for. The last day, I mentioned some of the figures that we got from phoning around undertakers for the cost of a funeral, and they were quoting under half that figure. There is also the extra help available for those entitled under universal credit (UC). People will be able to get help with the costs of the burial etc. There will be extra help available.

Mr Brady: The non-discretionary social fund goes nowhere near to covering the cost of an average funeral. You get about £700 or £800, when the average funeral costs about £2,500. That is without wakes or flowers or anything like that. It is an expensive business.

Mr G McCann: As I understand it —

Mr Brady: On the issue of insurance, people are reluctant to take out insurance for something like that. If you are on benefits, you cannot afford it anyway.

Mr G McCann: I am not arguing that people should take out insurance. I am just saying as part of the background to the report that this is how they came up with the figures and costings. I was only saying that by way of background. I certainly am not saying that people should take out insurance cover for funeral costs; that is not what I mean. I was only saying that to explain the background to the report.

Mr Brady: The majority of people cannot afford to take out insurance.

Mr G McCann: As I understand it, you can get £700, plus the costs for the opening up of the grave etc. The burial costs are separate from that £700. I do accept that it may not cover the costs totally.

Mr Brady: It would probably cover about a third.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): These are important issues, but we are dealing with —

Mr Brady: I was just making a point.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): Fair enough, but we will be making points for the rest of the day. We need to stick to the clause-by-clause scrutiny.

Mr G McCann: After the meeting, when I was having a quick word with the people from Cruse and the Childhood Bereavement Network, it seemed to me that what they were looking to do was to change it for the whole of the UK; they were not looking for anything for Northern Ireland only. That seemed to be what they were saying to me.

Let us move on to paragraph 18 of their paper. What they say here is:

“It would be important that these three year instalments were still disregarded from Universal Credit, and not taxed.”

All their costings work on the basis that these two things would not happen. This week, I went back to our colleagues in Britain to check that nothing has changed and that our understanding is correct. What those colleagues said to us is that, if these were to be over a three-year period, and it were to be done for the whole of the UK, they would have to be taken into account for UC, and they expect that they would also end up having to be taxed. If they are taken into account for UC, the people who would lose out would be those at the very bottom of the income scale; people who need the income support aspect of it. So, to do this would take away from the poorest people.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): That is, if they accede to paragraph 18 of the recommendations from Cruse.

Mr G McCann: All of Cruse’s costings are based on these payments not being taken into account for UC and not being taxed. Having spoken to GB, our GB colleagues say that they would be. If they were to be extended in that way, they think that they would have to take them into account for UC and that they would be taxed.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): So what you are saying is that, if you were to get it changed in the way in which Cruse suggests or hopes for, it would actually be disadvantageous to the least well off.

Mr G McCann: Yes.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): OK, fair enough.

Mr Allister: In paragraph 19, however, Cruse challenges the suggestion that they would be seen as long-term benefits.

Mr G McCann: I was about to come to that. I do not think that an outside charity would dictate whether or not it is viewed as a long-term benefit. I may have my views on things, but, at the end of the day, these will be taken into account. All I am saying is in terms of what we are being told by Britain. Certainly, when the Bill was going through at Westminster, Lord Freud, who took the Bill through the House of Lords, was very explicit on these points. I note that Cruse also challenges on the point about EU law — we can talk about that when we come to it. Again, all I can say is that I do not think that the ruling on this issue would fall to an outside charity.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): However, the point has been made. Cruse made it here in a presentation, and it has reiterated it, so it would not be outside our gift to add that as a concern.

Mr G McCann: You could certainly say in the report that it was a concern. However, I come back to the point that these issues are not part of the Bill itself; they are to do with how the scheme itself would end up being developed. Certainly, if the Committee thought that it should be done that way, and if it wished to make a recommendation, we would take it back to GB and explore the issue further, if that is what the Committee wants.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): Obviously, members would be concerned if there was a disadvantageous consequence from that, be it part of the Bill or otherwise.

Mr Brady: I think that Cruse makes a valid point about the emerging costs for children. I have been in that position, prior to survivors or widowers benefit being payable. It is a valid enough point. Cruse argues for a three-year period. There is a technicality involved then in whether it is a benefit or a survivors benefit. I am not sure what the case law is. Survivors benefit in most European countries is a relatively recent development. It was only introduced in Britain because somebody was prepared to take the British Government to the European Court. Prior to that, a widower could not get benefit. I am not sure what the case law in Europe is.

Mr G McCann: I can ask Seamus to speak on that. Let me come back to the three years. Really, all that Cruse is doing is asking for the amount to be spread over the three years.

Mr Brady: That seems to be a reasonable request.

Mr G McCann: That is what Cruse is saying, which, in itself, implies that Cruse does not think that people who are being paid inside year 1 can budget. That is what you are saying: that these people are not fit to budget for themselves.

Mr Brady: The point that Cruse is making is that there may be costs that you are not aware of initially, but which may emerge. That seems to be a reasonable enough argument because that can happen.

Mr G McCann: I accept that, but it is all part of budgeting. Really, what we are saying is that, from our point of view as officials, we cannot see how it would be worth the risk of those other things happening — for example, for the benefit to end up being taxed — when we can pay those people the same amount of money inside year 1 and it is not taxed and it is not taken into account for UC. Surely, it is better to get all that money to them, as opposed to it being spread out over three years, being taken into account for UC and being taxed, which means that they end up losing.

Mr Brady: Yes, but if they invested that in the first year and there was interest or notional income, that would affect your benefit eventually.

Mr G McCann: For the amount of money that we are talking about and the level of interest rates at the moment, you would not —

Mr Brady: When you are on benefit, any amount of money —

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): With respect, I think that we need to make progress. Gerry, you are giving us clarification on some of the outstanding issues that we were not terribly sure about. That was one of the issues that members were concerned about; whether it would have a knock-on negative effect on people who are less well off. It may well; it may not, as you are saying. I ask that as we proceed — I need to be rigid on this — if you are giving us clarification, you need to say clearly that this will not be part of the Bill and will not be part of any one of these clauses. We are here to deal with the clause-by-clause scrutiny. All the other issues, which are important and which we will have views on, we will add on afterwards, after we complete the clause-by-clause scrutiny. Let us proceed on the basis that you are telling us what we need to hear by way of clarification, but you will say very clearly that we can set that to one side for the moment because it is not in a clause.

Mr G McCann: OK. Following those parameters, I do not have much more to say. Perhaps it might be helpful if I just clarify again for the members what the main planks of these are.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): It is important that people will want to comment on aspects of the Bill that they are concerned about or where they are worried about there being some inadvertent consequences or impacts. However, if they are not in the clauses, we have to separate them out.

Mr G McCann: I will do this very quickly. Let me just confirm again that we have been talking to colleagues in Britain this week and have clarified that the main planks are that this benefit shall only be paid for one year — it is a one-year benefit — and it will be split into two bits — one for people who have children, and one for people who do not. Last week, Mr Brady raised the case of people over pension age. Category B pensions are going; they are being axed, except for the one case, which is where the independent spouse, as it were, is over the state pension age prior to 2016, and the other spouse hits pension age after 2016. They shall still be paid an amount equal to the Cat B(L) or the Cat B rate, as appropriate. That summarises it for you.

The other issues are not inside the Bill.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): OK. I hope that the Committee Clerk and the other clerks present are in a position to capture some of the concerns that have been raised through the evidence sessions and this morning. We have to deal with the clause-by-clause scrutiny of the Bill and then come back with a draft report. We may well wish to make all that commentary.

Are members content? You heard the clarification we got there and have raised issues.

We move to the formal clause-by-clause scrutiny. Members know the procedure. I have to go through the routine of reading each clause, and members should indicate whether they are content or otherwise. Let me reiterate that, if members have other concerns, we can add them into the report as observations or recommendations.

Question, That the Committee is content with clauses 1 to 54, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with schedules 1 to 20, put and agreed to.

Question, That the Committee is content with the long title, put and agreed to.

The Chairperson (Mr Maskey): That concludes the Committee's clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill. As I noted at the beginning, the Committee may want to make further representation on a range of issues, a number of which we have already covered. The Committee Clerk has captured those, and the Committee will bring them forward in the draft report. The officials will draft a Bill report based on all the discussions and will include the Committee's concerns and how they may be addressed and any recommendations made by the Committee.

Gerry and colleagues, I thank you for your attention on this matter and your support for the Committee in addressing the Pensions Bill. Thank you very much for your very solid support to the Committee and the conduct of our business.

Mr G McCann: Thank you very much.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Mr Kinahan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when they will answer AQW 32083/11-15 which was tabled on 14 March 2014.

(AQW 35010/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): We would refer the member to the answer to AQW 32083/11-15 which was provided on 8 January.

Mr D Bradley asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they will continue to progress the Legislative Consent Motion on the Childcare Payments Bill, given the concerns that the ensuing parity may be detrimental to local recipients.

(AQO 6747/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: On 4 November 2014, the Assembly approved a Legislative Consent Motion to extend the Childcare Payments Bill to Northern Ireland. This will enable eligible working families who live here to claim support from government with their childcare costs in the same way as those living in England, Scotland and Wales. However we aim to look at the issue of affordability more generally with respect to childcare within any new childcare strategy.

Mrs Dobson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, in relation to the Social Investment Fund, for their assessment of the impact on social enterprises in Upper Bann of delays in providing funding.

(AQW 39962/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Social Investment Fund has committed funds to capital clusters, New Directions and Sustaining the Infrastructure, both of which contain projects in Upper Bann. Officials are working closely with the Lead Partners for these projects to ensure that they can start as soon as possible. Officials have also liaised closely with the Steering Groups throughout to ensure that all parties are aware of the status of their application.

The Community Sports Programme which contains an Upper Bann project is still in the SIF assessment process.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what are the definite dates for the winter grazing period which is mentioned on the departmental website but not defined.

(AQW 40303/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Single Farm Payments applications There are no definite dates in relation to winter grazing.

The reference to winter grazing on the DARD website is contained within the question and answer document for farmers and landowners, which provides information on the reformed CAP support measures.

Under Regulation (EU) 639/2014, to be allocated entitlements in 2015 under the new Basic Payment Scheme (BPS), a farmer must be able to demonstrate that he enjoys the decision making power, benefits and financial risks in relation to the agricultural activity on each parcel of land for which an allocation of entitlements is requested. This assessment is based on all agricultural activity carried out on the land parcel throughout 2015. All three elements - decision making power, benefits and financial risks - must be fulfilled by the applicant.

The effect of winter grazing on the ability to meet these requirements will depend on individual circumstances. For example, a dairy farmer who has the land at his disposal on 15 May, takes three cuts of silage from a field plus some aftermath grazing, and then allows another farmer to graze sheep on that field for a month or two over the winter, will be able to establish entitlements on that field. That is because the dairy farmer (who has the land at his disposal on 15 May) will be able to demonstrate that he enjoys the decision making power, benefits and financial risks for the majority of the agricultural activity being carried out in 2015.

However, where a landowner carries out very little or no agricultural activity on the land during 2015 and lets the field to another farmer for winter grazing by sheep, the only or primary agricultural activity undertaken on that land will have been by that farmer and so it will be extremely difficult for the landowner to demonstrate that he meets the requirements to be allocated entitlements.

In both these examples, precise dates of the winter grazing activity would not affect the outcome.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps she is taking to replicate the success her Department has had in processing Single Farm Payments applications through to payment, to that of Country Side Management applications.

(AQW 40427/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: In January and February 2015, farm businesses which declared their intention to claim for the NI Countryside Management Scheme (NICMS) on the 2014 Single Application Form (SAF), will receive a claim pack, including a pre-populated claim form and a guide on how to complete the form. Farmers will be encouraged to return the form within two weeks to allow DARD to begin processing of payments as early as possible. It is anticipated that payments will commence in May 2015, with 90% of claimants to be paid by the end of July 2015, in line with 2013 payments.

Legacy Countryside Management Payments, including the Countryside Management Scheme and the Environmentally Sensitive Areas Scheme are issued throughout the year, with claims being sent out to scheme participants four weeks before the relevant claim date. At present approximately 94% of 2014 legacy claims have been processed for payment.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) how many calls were made to the departmental public helpline for breaches of cross-compliance rules, in each of the last five years; (ii) to detail the nature of the reports or queries made; (iii) how many reports were inspected; and (iv) how many financial penalties were imposed.

Mrs O'Neill:

- (I) The Department does not record the nature of calls made to the public helpline. Breaches of Cross Compliance are reported through a variety of channels such as telephone to any of the DARD offices, face to face contact, by email and also by letter. These reports are commonly referred to as 'whistleblower' cases.
- (II) Cross Compliance whistleblower inspections cover two aspects. The first of these is compliance with specific articles contained within European regulatory requirements covering the environment, climate change, public health, animal health, plant health and animal welfare. These are known as the Statutory Management Requirements (SMRs). The second aspect of Cross Compliance is a requirement that all those in receipt of payments in respect of the schemes covered by Cross Compliance maintain all their land in Good Agricultural and Environmental Condition (GAEC). The GAEC Measures have been developed from a framework set out by the European Commission to address the following issues: Protection and management of water, Protection of soil and carbon stock and Minimum level of maintenance. Based on the total number of whistleblower inspections carried out over the last five years 52% of these inspections were in respect of the GAEC framework and the remaining 48% of inspections were carried out in association with the SMR's.
- (III, IV) The following table details the total number of whistleblower Cross Compliance Inspections carried out in each of last five years and the total businesses that have incurred a financial penalty in each year.

Year	Inspections	Penalties
2014	451	131
2013	526	146
2012	354	144
2011	328	186
2010	362	175

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for details of the business case used to support the relocation of her departmental headquarters to Ballykelly; and whether she will place a copy in the Assembly Library.

(AQW 40556/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: An Outline Business Case (OBC) has been completed for the relocation of my departmental headquarters to Ballykelly. Work is ongoing to address a number of assumptions within this document that will feed into a Full Business Case (FBC) which is due to be completed by end November 2015. I will then place a copy of this document in the Assembly Library.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether landowners were advised that the planting of native trees under the Countryside Management Scheme could result in the loss of Single Farm Payments; and what is being done to assist landowners who find themselves in this situation.

Mrs O'Neill: Under the Rural Development Programme 2007-2013, many farmers in agri-environment schemes received grant aid to plant small areas of their farms with native trees. These small areas, recommended to be no greater than 0.1ha, were often in field corners and awkward areas for farming. These native tree plantings were undertaken voluntarily by farmers who received grant aid for materials, fencing and gates as required, and an annual payment during the period of the scheme. Farmers were advised that any plantings made post 2008 on land on which Single Farm Payment (SFP) was paid in 2008 remained eligible for SFP and the successor Pillar 1 payments while the agri-environment scheme was still active.

As entitlements will be re-allocated in 2015, many farmers will find that they can retain, in these newly allocated entitlements, the value of the 2014 entitlements that were activated on the land that was planted with trees. This is because the total value of entitlements held by a farmer on 15 May 2014 will be divided by the eligible area declared by the farmer in 2015. In this way the value of the entitlements held on 15 May 2014 may be consolidated over the land that remains eligible provided the minimum claim size of 3 ha is met.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the success of her Department's policies to address the needs of ethnic minority groups in rural areas.

Mrs O'Neill: Whilst ethnic minority groups are employed across the whole economy of the north of Ireland, large numbers have secured gainful employment in the agri-food sector and continue to make a positive contribution both in economic and social terms to the fabric of our society. My Department supports these groups through sponsorship of the Agricultural Wages Board (AWB) and funding of Gangmasters Licensing Authority (GLA) enforcement activity. The AWB sets the rate of pay and some other conditions of employment for all agricultural workers, including ethnic minorities, which are published in Polish, Portuguese and Russian. In addition, the GLA operates a Britain and north of Ireland-wide licensing scheme for gangmasters (labour providers) with the primary objective of curbing the activities of those gangmasters who exploit their workers and/or act illegally, including ethnic minority workers.

As well as this specific support for workers an overarching budget of up to £623 million has been agreed with the Executive for the 2014-2020 Rural Development Programme. Up to £80m of this has been allocated to support a range of schemes that will help to develop the economic development of our rural areas. Support will be provided to improve or maintain the living conditions and welfare of those living in rural areas. An Equality Impact Assessment has been carried out on the Programme to ensure that it is as inclusive as possible to all rural dwellers including those from ethnic minority groups.

In addition, under my department's Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Inclusion Framework, a budget of around £20m from 2011-2016 is in place to support a wide range of initiatives aimed at improving the quality of life of all vulnerable rural dwellers, including those from ethnic minorities.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 34461/11-15, for an update on the number of participants in the Farm Safe Awareness programme.

Mrs O'Neill: Since my last reply, an additional 678 people have been trained and some 442 people have completed the FarmSafeNet online course.

To date 4,723 people have participated in the Farm Safe Awareness Programme since it started in December 2012.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what percentage of the Military Covenant her Department has adopted as policy; and what percentage has been implemented.

(AQW 40636/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: DARD has no specific policies in relation to the implementation of the Military Covenant. However, my Department is committed to ensuring that equality and good relations are central to our business and policy development processes. We are working hard to deliver better services for our customers; and where we can do so, to address inequalities where they continue to exist and to work to make a real difference for the whole rural community.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what funding streams are available within her Department for sports groups to apply for in 2015.

Mrs O'Neill: The Rural Development Programme does not provide core funding to sports clubs. Under the current programme where such organisations wished to promote a project of benefit to the wider rural community, and which was separate from their primary activity, they were considered for funding in competition with other applications received within a call.

However Axis 3 has now reached 100% commitment for this programme and as the programme enters its closure phase it is unlikely that there will be any further calls for applications for grant aid.

The 2014-2020 Rural Development Programme has been formally submitted to the EU Commission for consideration. Approval of the Programme is expected in mid 2015 and my officials are working to develop the schemes to enable programme implementation to commence following EU approval.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on progress on the proposed move of her departmental headquarters to Ballykelly.

Mrs O'Neill: An Outline Business Case (OBC) has now been completed that details the options for relocating my headquarters to Ballykelly. The preferred option points to a phased approach to construction with 400 workstations being completed in 2017 and a further phase of around 200 workstations being completed in 2020.

Discussions are ongoing with OFMDFM, as site owners, regarding the transfer of land that is required for the construction of the new headquarters. A Transportation Assessment is currently being undertaken which will inform the exact location of the proposed new access road. Negotiations are continuing with the private landowner, through Land and Property Services, to acquire the necessary land to enable this development.

A number of site clearance works are being taken forward on the area of land that is required for the new DARD HQ at Ballykelly. These works, which are required in order to achieve a successful planning application, commenced in October 2014 and will take around 6 months to complete.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for the net cost over the financial years 2015/16 to 2018/19 of the proposed move of her departmental headquarters to Ballykelly.

Mrs O'Neill: The estimated net costs over the financial years 2015/16 to 2018/19 are £21.2 million. These are made up of Capital costs of £15.3 million and Resource costs of £5.9 million. These costs have been inflated to recognise the spend in the year it incurs. The costs will continue to be refined and scrutinised as we move through the various stages of the project.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for the percentage of her Department's overall Current Resource Expenditure allocated to staff wages in (i) 2013/14; and (ii) the 2014/15 draft budget.

Mrs O'Neill: Core Department staff costs in 2013/14 were 51% of DARD's total 2013/14 Resource Expenditure, rising to 64% when AFBI staff costs were factored into the calculation.

The latest forecast Core Department staff costs in 2014/15 are 56% of DARD's closing 2014/15 Resource Expenditure budget, rising to 71% when AFBI is factored into the calculation

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in relation to her Department's commitment to inshore fisheries management, (i) how; and (ii) when the measures identified in the Sustainable Development Strategy for Northern Ireland's Inshore Fisheries will be implemented, particularly the setting up of a representative Inshore Fisheries Advisory Group.
(AQW 40698/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: One of the priorities within the Inshore Fisheries Strategy is the creation of a Partnership Group to inform future inshore fisheries policy. My officials are currently in the process of writing to industry stakeholders seeking nominations to serve as members of this Partnership. The first meeting of the Partnership will be held during March 2015.

One of the Group's early first tasks will be to consider how, and in which priority, other key measures within the strategy (such as improving data, increasing the use of technology, enhancing economic returns and safer fisheries) should be progressed.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what steps she is taking to prevent Porcine Epidemic Diarrhea virus affecting the pig industry.

Mrs O'Neill: While Porcine Epidemic Diarrhoea (PEDv) is regarded as a serious threat it is a production disease and is not notifiable here. It is not covered by any legislative requirement and no active surveillance in terms of testing is undertaken. Industry are aware of this and understand that they have the primary role in ensuring that biosecurity guidelines are met and that importers need to be mindful of the importance of responsible sourcing of replacement livestock.

Assessing epizootic disease threats is a key feature of my Department's ongoing animal disease surveillance programme. My Department's veterinary and epidemiology staff undertake this task in conjunction with colleagues in the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (Defra), the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI) and the broader scientific community through international Disease Monitoring, Emerging Threat Assessments and Veterinary Risk Assessments. Predicting epizootic threats through this continual surveillance is a key activity as it provides information to facilitate assessment of the level and nature of the government measures that are required to prevent, detect and respond to epizootic disease threats.

My Department considers PEDv to be one of the major threats to the pig industry here at the present time. While, as I have made clear, PEDv is not a statutory disease, many of the actions being taken to prevent the entry or spread of statutory diseases in the north are also useful with regard to PEDv, including things like:

- a) The application and enforcement of international Animal Health Certificate arrangements;
- b) Portal inspection of imported livestock and meat;
- c) Effective biosecurity measures during transport, at animal gatherings and at the farm gate;
- d) Pre and post import quarantine and testing;
- e) Investigation of any suspect disease case;
- f) Preparing contingency plans; and
- g) Testing and exercising contingency plans.

My officials met with Pig Industry representatives on 1 September 2014 to discuss a number of current pig disease threats including PEDv. At the meeting, officials reiterated advice that pig keepers remain vigilant for signs of disease, and maintain good biosecurity. Advice on this is also provided in the Biosecurity Code for NI Farms which is available on the DARD website.

My officials are also participating in a PEDv working group in conjunction with Defra, the Scottish and Welsh administrations and the pig industry on a regular basis to consider the threat posed by PEDv and the actions that can be taken to protect against disease or deal with an outbreak. My officials are also maintaining regular contact with the Department of Agriculture, Food and the Marine (DAFM) in Dublin to consider North/South aspects of this issue.

As regards future steps, my Department will continue to monitor the spread of PEDv, to liaise with DAFM and the three British jurisdictions and will take appropriate measures to support industry in proportion to the level of risk.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the figures supplied in her answer to AQW 31973/11-15.

Mrs O'Neill: Information on (a) stolen animals or (b) animals reported missing is kept on the Department's database the Animal and Public Health Information System (APHIS). APHIS does not differentiate between missing or stolen animals.

These two categories are recorded collectively on APHIS – see Table below for cattle. The figures for April 2014 until March 2015 are collated and presented up to 31/12/2014 in Table 1.

Table 1: Missing/stolen cattle

* Please note that in the table of data within AQW 31973/11-15, the data for Mallusk (56) and Derry (242) were transposed incorrectly. This administrative error has now been corrected and does not affect the overall total in 2012/2013.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many Single Farm Payments have yet to be paid to applicants; and to provide the reasons for the delay.

Mrs O'Neill: 926 claims remain to be finalised.

It is anticipated that all remaining inspection cases will be processed for payment by the end of March 2015. This will be earlier than in any previous scheme year. A number of claims are outstanding due to factors such as probate proceedings, disputes between farmers and information, such as bank account details, not being provided by farm businesses.

This is a record payment performance for the 2014 Single Farm Payment year. In December 2014, 95% of claims were finalised for payment, exceeding a target of 93%. A total of £234.6 million was paid to local farmers in December.

To date, 97% of claims have been finalised for payment and £241 million has been paid out. This is the lowest number ever at this stage in the year. Last year, 2,523 claims remained outstanding at this stage.

My Department will complete the remaining claims as quickly as possible.

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how her Department is reducing the flood risks in Lagan Valley.

(AQO 7293/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: As a general approach to flooding across the north, my Department focuses on 3 key areas, Prevention, Protection and Preparedness. Firstly, we aim to prevent damage from flooding by providing advice to the public and the planning authority to avoid inappropriate development in areas at risk from flooding. Secondly, we provide protection to existing property at flood risk through the ongoing maintenance of existing drainage, flood defence infrastructure and, where viable, the construction of new infrastructure. Thirdly, we prepare for flooding by working with key organisations to develop flood risk management plans and a coordinated response to flood emergencies.

In relation to the Lagan Valley, a study examining options to reduce the risk of flooding to a number of commercial properties at Knockmore, Lisburn, will be completed shortly, and subject to viability, will be included in Rivers Agency's capital works programme.

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the work of the Forest Service.

Mrs O'Neill: The Forest Service Business Plan for 2014/15 sets out the Agency's strategic objectives and associated targets for the 2014/15 business year. Policy aims for forestry and plant health are captured in 7 key targets and associated supporting targets.

In support of our aim to encourage forest expansion, and before schemes closed in December 2014, I am pleased to say that we authorised the planting of 195 hectares of new woodland involving expenditure of nearly £1.2 million of rural development funding.

Managing forests sustainably to produce an income, protect the environment and promote social use remains a priority. We have generated receipts of over £7 million, spent £900,000 on our forestry fund works to underpin forest recreation development, and continue our work to deliver recreation services with operating parties drawn from local government, charitable trusts and private sector interests.

I updated colleagues on implementation of the all island strategic plant health programme at NSMC meetings in April and October last. We have commissioned a scientific evidence review to appraise options to contain and eradicate ash dieback disease. We continue to identify and fell larch trees infected with P. ramorum disease on a prioritised basis.

Work is progressing well on taking forward a programme to exploit wind energy opportunities on the forest estate. I look forward to publishing a strategy this year.

Plans to relocate Forest Service Headquarters from the Stormont Estate to Co. Fermanagh in June of this year are also progressing well. The works to refurbish Inishkeen House to accommodate the Forest Service Headquarters will begin this month.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the redevelopment of Casement Park stadium.
(AQW 37734/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Ulster Council GAA have received funding of £62.5 million for the Casement Park Project which will involve the upgrade of venue from approximately 32,000 to a 38,000 capacity fully inclusive all seated stadium.

The Funding Agreement was issued to the Ulster Council GAA and the successful contractor (Heron Buckingham JV) was appointed in December 2013.

Design development and pre-construction works are complete.

The main construction work at Casement Park is currently delayed temporarily due to the Judicial Review against DOE's decision to grant planning approval for the Casement Park project.

A Judicial Review hearing against planning approval started on 9th September and completed on 13th October and is currently in the ruling period. A decision is expected in November 2014.

The Construction Notice will be held until the outcome of the Judicial Review is known in November 2014. If a start for construction is achieved in November/December 2014, planned completion of construction would be October 2016.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether a full equality impact assessment was carried out on the Sports Council capital build programme; and whether the budget will remain at £17.5m.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I can advise that Sport NI is currently finalising its Corporate Plan which will cover the period 2015 to 2020. The Plan, when completed, will be subject to a full Equality Impact Assessment. That assessment will cover all planned capital investment including Sport NI's new £17.5 million Lottery sports facility capital programme.

Sport NI has confirmed that this Lottery budget will be maintained at £17.5 million.

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of the Bille na dTeangacha Oifigiúla that she received recently.

(AQW 40252/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Thank you for sharing your Bille na dTeangacha Oifigiúla with me. I remain committed to an Irish Language Act and, as I announced in the Assembly on Tuesday 13 January, I will be putting proposals for an Irish Language Bill out to consultation in February.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how her Department intends to improve facilities for Gaelic Games in County Fermanagh.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Under the Recreation and Youth Services (NI) Order 1986, responsibility for the provision of sports and leisure facilities, including for Gaelic Games, rests in the first instance with District Councils. In addition, responsibility for improving existing facilities rests with the owners and operators of sports facilities.

My Department, through its arms-length body, Sport NI, has provided both financial and practical support to sport governing bodies, including the Gaelic Athletic Association (GAA), District Councils and sports facility owners/operators. Recent Sport NI investment in the area includes £245,000 Exchequer capital funding which was provided in 2013/14 to St Joseph's Gaelic Athletic Club in Ederney for Gaelic Games facilities. Sport NI has advised that one GAA Club in the County Fermanagh area has applied to the current round of Sport NI's Active Awards for Sport Programme. This application is currently being assessed by Sport NI and applicants will be advised of the outcome of their applications by the end of January 2015.

Looking ahead, Sport NI is working with the existing District Councils and the Shadow District Councils to develop a Sports Facilities Strategy and eleven District Council Area Reports, which will include County Fermanagh. This work will define existing sports facilities, and identify future needs, at both a regional and local level, and will take account of Gaelic Games within County Fermanagh.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what initiatives her Department is pursuing to increase cycling amongst females.

(AQW 40315/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Cycling Ireland, the sport's Governing Body, recently launched a Strategic Plan "A Pathway for Cycling Excellence 2015-2019". The plan sets a strategic objective to "develop women's cycling with specific focus on supporting an increase in women's participation levels." Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, will work with Cycling Ireland to explore how it can support the governing body achieve this objective.

In recent years, Sport NI has provided £646,590 Exchequer and Lottery funding to promote the sport of cycling, including female cycling. In addition, Sport NI plans to invest £120,000 up to March 2017 to Cycling Ireland through its PerformanceFocus programme.

Furthermore, the Sports Institute NI provides Performance analysis support to Cycling Ireland. This work has benefited the female Team Pursuit, which includes Lydia Boylan from the north of Ireland.

As part of the Giro d'Italia legacy work, Sport NI has recently identified opportunities to target women in cycling. These proposals are subject to funding availability and are being developed in partnership with NI Tourist Board and Sustrans.

As part of the legacy of the 2013 World Police and Fire Games, my Department provided funding of £10,000 to deliver a successful children's cycle training and participation programme, which included females, in the Shankill and Colin areas.

With regard to encouraging people to become more active particularly through cycling I can advise that my Department and Sport NI are both represented on the Department for Regional Development's Cross-sectoral Cycling Group and are contributing to the development of the draft Bicycle Strategy for Northern Ireland.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 39221/11-15, will she now publish the report.

(AQW 40382/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The report is now available on the DCAL website and I have arranged for a copy of the report to be sent to you.

Mr Milne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the steps her department is taking regarding the re-development of Casement Park
(AQO 7312/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL has been allocated One Hundred and Ten million pounds (£110m) by the Executive to deliver the Stadia projects which include the redevelopment of Casement Park. The Stadia Programme is part of the Programme for Government and is a priority for the NI Executive. The funding remains ring-fenced and cannot be used by the Department for other capital projects. It is part of a decision that was made by the Executive going back as far as March 2011 and I am committed to ensuring that this project becomes a reality.

There is a strong resolve within the Ulster GAA to submit a new planning application in 2015 to develop a regional stadium in Ulster at Casement Park.

Any new planning application will take account of the learning points raised in the judgment and I and my department will fully support them during the new planning process.

My Department and I remain committed to the re-development of Casement Park and we will work with all parties to facilitate this becoming a reality.

The spend profile against the Stadium Programme for 2014/15 was Twenty Eight Million, Two Hundred Thousand pounds (£28.2 million), which includes a figure of Seven Million, Nine Hundred Thousand pounds (£7.9 million) for the Casement Park project.

The assessment of this remaining spend of Seven Million, Nine Hundred Thousand (£7.9 million) on the Casement Park project assumed a successful outcome of the Judicial Review.

As a result of the quashing of the planning approval on the Casement Park project an easement of Six Million, Two Hundred and Fifty Thousand pounds (£6.25 million) has now been declared through January monitoring for 2014/15.

The impact of this on 2015/16 is that it will create a corresponding pressure across the remainder of the programme. Officials have and continue to liaise with DFP with regards to spend profile allocations.

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what impact the recent decision on the development of Casement Park will have on her Departmental spending plans in 2015/16.

Department of Education

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has carried out further analysis on conflict related costs with the education sector from the 2007 Deloitte 'Research into the Financial Cost of the Northern Ireland Divide'; and if not, whether he plans to do so.
(AQW 40342/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): An analysis of the report was undertaken at the time of its publication. The report itself accepted that comparative analysis of education expenditure is extremely complex and no reliable conclusions can be drawn as to the impact of the divide on education spend in the north of Ireland at a macro-level.

The report took a very simplistic approach to costing, using the management related costs across the various sectors, the Community Relations budget and an estimate of savings relating to unquantifiable costs. Little evidence was provided to support how the suggested costs had been calculated.

Given the number of significant changes since 2007 that relate to areas identified within the report, its conclusions are less relevant to the current educational structure and policy framework.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the staff costs (i) each Education and Library Board; and (ii) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, in each of the last five financial years.

(AQW 40379/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The staff costs in (i) each Education and Library Board; and (ii) the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools, in each of the last five financial years is as follows:

	2009/10	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
BELB	£17,803,286	£17,276,295	£15,948,939	£14,643,210	£15,200,775
WELB*	£22,681,903	£22,038,702	£20,585,446	£19,599,220	£19,493,602
NEELB	£18,506,956	£17,607,556	£15,453,060	£15,330,567	£15,146,521
SEELB	£16,158,354	£15,125,447	£14,359,648	£13,787,908	£14,492,677
SELB	£24,222,644	£23,795,721	£22,406,956	£22,057,625	£22,178,022
CCMS	£2,893,222	£1,538,005	£3,102,426	£1,955,510	£1,952,462

* WELB figures include costs relating to C2K. This is an earmarked initiative which is a regionalised service and where the staff costs are solely borne by the WELB. This would therefore make it difficult to draw comparisons with other ELB's.

The figures shown above include:

- costs for Headquarter staff, out centre and youth club staff. School based staff are not included.
- employers National Insurance and Pension Contribution costs.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what discussions he has had with his counterpart at Westminster to ensure that the reassessment of vocational courses in England will not devalue similar courses in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 40455/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I can confirm that while I have had no discussions with my counterpart at Westminster on this issue, my officials are in regular contact with their counterparts in England and Wales. In addition, formal meetings involving the respective government officials and regulators in these jurisdictions are held on a quarterly basis. These meetings provide a platform to discuss shared issues for GCSEs, A levels and vocational qualifications.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the criteria for a nursery school to qualify for integrated status.

Mr O'Dowd: Pre-school education is non-sectoral. All funded settings are open to children of all backgrounds and all follow the same curriculum guidance which helps children to learn to respect different cultures, beliefs and lifestyles.

Decisions on development proposals for new pre-school provision are made on a case by case basis. When a development proposal is published, it must be looked at in the context of the overall level of need in the local area.

Where a need for additional pre-school provision is established, in line with the Department's statutory duty to encourage and facilitate the development of integrated education, parents' wishes are taken into account where strong evidence is provided of parents' preference for formally integrated pre-school provision.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the date of the last (a) software; and (b) hardware upgrade of computers for pupils in post-primary schools; and (ii) the total cost of each upgrade, broken down by Education and Library Board.

Mr O'Dowd: As part of the C2k Education Network (ni) contract which commenced in April 2012 all post-primary schools have received various software and hardware upgrades as component parts of their C2k school transformation.

All pupils and staff now have personalised desktop software, MySchool, providing 24/7 access to a range of new local and cloud based services. There have been significant software upgrades deployed as part of EN (ni) transformation across a spectrum of C2k services such as Curriculum software, productivity tools, video conferencing and desktop operating systems..

In post-primary schools many significant hardware components were upgraded during transformation. These included replacement of school file servers and ICT infrastructure such as switches, routers and wireless access points. Prior to this upgrade, new C2k managed access devices (desktop and laptop equipment) were provided during 2009.

The software and hardware costs are not differentiated within the EN(ni) contract in terms of Education and Library Board areas. The total cost of the EN(ni) contract for all schools in the north of Ireland (primary, post primary and special) is £170 million over a 5 year period.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 40232/11-15, to detail how many pupils (i) entered ranganna 1 in each bunscoil; (ii) attended Irish-medium units in post-primary schools; (iii) entered ranganna 1 in each primary level Irish-medium unit; and (iv) entered ranganna 1 in each post-primary meánscoil and Irish-medium unit in the last five years. (AQW 40549/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The tables overleaf shows Irish medium enrolments from 2010/11 – 2014/15. Please note that the 2014/15 figures are provisional. Finalised figures will be available at the end of February 2015.

Notes:

- 1 The unfilled places figures exclude pupils in receipt of a statement of special educational needs, and pupils admitted on appeal or by direction (post-primary schools only) of the Exceptional Circumstances Body, as they are admitted over and above a school's approved enrolment number in the year of their admission to the school. Some of these pupils attend full and oversubscribed schools which have no unfilled places so subtracting the total number of these pupils from the total unfilled places figure will not give a new accurate surplus places figure. The figures therefore cannot be used in this way. They do however give more contextual information about further pupils who are attending school and who are not taken into account in the unfilled places figure.

- 2 If a school is operating at over-capacity then the number of unfilled places is taken to be zero, rather than as a negative number of unfilled places to be netted off in totalling (i.e. if a school has an approved enrolment capacity of 200 and an actual enrolment of 205, the difference is "minus" 5 but the number of unfilled places is taken as zero).
- 3 Unfilled places data is unavailable for prep schools.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education for an update on the progress of the roll out of the Together: Building a United Community buddy scheme in all publicly funded nursery and primary schools; and what date has been set for the completion of this target.

(AQW 40587/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Work is continuing to develop a buddy scheme in DE funded pre-school settings in line with the action in Together: Building a United Community.

My officials have engaged with colleagues in the statutory and community sectors to draw on best practice and are developing a business case. No additional funding has, however, been identified for this project and pending confirmation of the costs and the availability of funding, it is not possible to confirm a date for completion.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education how many Special Educational Needs assessments are carried out per hundred pupils in each Education and Library Board area.

(AQW 40590/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The number of statutory assessments of special educational needs, completed from 1 January 2014 – 31 December 2014, per hundred pupils of the total school population* in each Board area were as follows:

BELB	0.86
NEELB	0.59
SEELB	0.83
SELB	0.53
WELB	0.78

* School census 2014/15

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education how each Education and Library Board prioritises Special Educational Needs assessments.

(AQW 40591/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Education and Library Boards do not employ any method of prioritisation in the completion of the statutory assessment process. Requests are actioned upon receipt in line with the statutory timeframes outlined in the Education (NI) Order 1996 and the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of nursery school (i) applications; and (ii) places available in North Down, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 40616/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd:

(i) Number of applications to pre-school places

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools in each Education and Library Board which are (i) supported; and (ii) not supported by multi agency support teams in each year since their inception.

(AQW 40662/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The North Eastern and Southern Education and Library Boards have advised that the number of schools supported, and those not supported, by formal Multi Agency Support Teams for Schools (MASTS) in relation to special educational needs (SEN) since their inception is as follows:

NEELB

Academic Year	Total Number of Schools in Receipt of MASTS Support	Total Number of Schools who Applied for MASTS Support who were not Supported
2007 - 8	92	33
2008 - 9	92	20
2009 - 10	92	15
2010 - 11	92	11
2011 - 12	122	10
2012 - 13	131	3
2013 - 14	131	8
2014 - 15	141	4

SELB

Academic Year	Total Number of Schools in Receipt of MASTS Support	Total Number of Schools who Applied for MASTS Support who were not Supported
2007 - 8	11	4
2008 - 9	11	3
2009 - 10	11	0
2010 - 11	11	2
2011 - 12	15	0
2012 - 13	18	0
2013 - 14	18	0
2014 - 15	18	0

The BELB also operates a MASTS service but does not hold data in relation to their operation as these are funded by the local health trusts.

To date, the SEELB and WELB have not operated formal MASTS service. Both boards are however, as is the case across all boards, involved in multi agency collaboration at school level in relation to SEN including work in connection with the SEN capacity building programme.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the primary schools and post-primary schools, broken down by sector, with surplus places in the Belfast area since 2011.

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the tables below. The information provided is based on the 2011/12 – 2013/14 school censuses. Unfilled places data for 2014/15 will be available in April 2015. Data is based on schools in the Belfast Education and Library Board.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to detail the total cost of producing the Home to School Transport Review. (AQW 40672/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The total cost of the Home to School Transport Review (excluding Secretariat salary costs) was £151,077 ie £78,575 in 2013/14 and £72,502 in 2014/15.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education how many pupils in each Education and Library Board area are supported by the Middletown Centre.

(AQW 40678/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Middletown Centre for Autism has advised that the number of pupils who have received direct support from the Centre, following referral from the relevant Education and Library Board, from 1 April 2014 to 14 January 2015, was as follows:

BELB	12
NEELB	9
SEELB	9
SELB	10
WELB	9

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education what concerns have been raised in relation to software upgrade incapability with existing hardware in post-primary schools; and whether this is reflected across all Education and Library Boards.

(AQW 40695/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: C2k has advised that they are not aware of any significant hardware issues related to software upgrades to the C2k devices provided for all schools as part of the core C2k service.

All C2k-provided software is extensively tested for operation on managed-service computers and C2k has upgraded a number of software titles within the post-primary sector including Microsoft Office and Adobe Photoshop.

The Department is aware that over the years, schools have purchased additional equipment to enhance the core provision from C2k. The upgrade of such devices and any associated software would be a matter for the schools concerned.

Any concerns from schools relating to the operation of C2k-provided software should be logged with the Service Desk where they will be investigated.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of whether (i) all supply contracts released by his Department for tendering have strictly adhered to Government Public Procurement Policy; and (ii) this tendering process, including a current substantial tender process, has followed the procurement framework adopted in RM1599.

(AQW 40709/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education carries out its procurement activities by means of a documented Service Level Agreement with Central Procurement Directorate. Under this arrangement, I am satisfied that any procurement undertaken by my Department adheres to Public Procurement Policy.

The framework agreement RM1599 was commissioned by the Crown Commercial Service and is available for use by the public sector.

The Education and Library Boards are currently engaged in a tender exercise for the purchase / rental of photocopiers and this competition is being taken forward separately to the RM1599 framework. As such, it is open to all suppliers who can fulfil the requirements. As this is a live exercise I do not propose to comment any further.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of (i) primary school places available; and (ii) oversubscribed primary school places, in South Belfast, broken down by each primary school, over the last three years. (AQW 40739/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The admission numbers of schools in the South Belfast constituency, and the number of first preference Primary One applications received by each of those schools across the last three years, are set out in the table below:

School	Admission	1st Preference Applications
	Number	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15

Loughview Integrated Primary School	58	73	64	77

* The admissions number of St Ita's PS was permanently increased from 75 to 82 from the 2013/14 school year following approval of a Development Proposal

Notes:

1 The numbers do not include children with statements of special educational need (SEN) as such pupils are supernumerary;

- 2 Figures of first preference applicants are as at the conclusion of the admission process ie when placement letters were issued;
- 3 The Department will consider requests from schools for a temporary (ie for one year) increase of their admission number where there are no alternative schools available of the same management type within reasonable travelling distance of the applicant's home address.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Education to detail the action his Department is taking to alleviate the number of oversubscribed primary school places in South Belfast.

(AQW 40740/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In April 2013, I approved a development proposal to increase the enrolment and admissions numbers at St Ita's Primary School, Carryduff.

In May 2014, I also approved a development proposal to increase the enrolment and admissions numbers of Millennium Integrated Primary School, Carryduff to become a two stream entry school. A development proposal is also currently under consideration to increase the enrolment at Forge Integrated Primary School in South Belfast.

However, I am aware of the continued concerns in this area and I would want to see all the sectors working together to plan a sustainable schools estate in South Belfast. Responsibility to review demand for places is a matter for the planning authorities and I would expect them to carry out reviews on a regular basis as part of the area planning process. Therefore, I would expect that if the indications are that additional places are needed then Development Proposals will be brought forward for my consideration.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 39497/11-15, what support was given to the pupils at Ballee who were being supported by the Jigsaw worker after the school was closed on the 31 August 2014.

Mr O'Dowd: The North Eastern Education and Library Board have informed me that the post primary role within the Jigsaw project ended following the school closure on 31st August 2014.

The post primary schools that Ballee pupils moved to provided transition support packages for pupils and Board Services were also made available to the receiving schools including Education Psychology, Education Welfare Service, Behaviour Support and the Youth Service.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) primary; and (ii) post-primary schools in Carrickfergus with surplus places in each year since 2011, broken down by sector.

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the tables below. The information provided is based on the 2011/12 – 2013/14 school censuses. Unfilled places data for 2014/15 will be available in April 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 40541/11-15, as the information provided refers only to a Code of Practice, whether he will now provide, or place in the Assembly library, the policy or legally binding document as requested in the original question.

(AQW 40795/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Article 4 (1) of The Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1996 states that "The Department shall issue, and may from time to time amend, a code of practice giving practical guidance in respect of the discharge by boards and the Boards of Governors of grant-aided schools of their functions under this Part."

Article 4 (2) states that "It shall be the duty of –

- (a) boards and Boards of Governors of grant-aided schools exercising functions under this Part, and
- (b) any other person exercising any function for the purpose of the discharge by boards and Boards of Governors of grant-aided schools of functions under this Part, to have regard to the provisions of the code."

Copies of the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1996 and the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs are available in the Assembly library.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the percentage of pupils taking at least one STEM subject for GCSE at schools that are (i) single sex (a) male; and (b) female; and (ii) co-educational.

(AQW 40814/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The answer is contained in the table below;

Year 12 pupils with 1 or more examination entries in STEM subject GCSEs, 2012/13

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) primary; and (ii) post-primary schools in Newtownards with surplus places in each year since 2011, broken down by sector
(AQW 40832/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the tables below. The list of schools is based on those situated in Ards LGD. The information provided is based on the 2011/12 – 2013/14 school censuses. Unfilled places data for 2014/15 will be available in April 2015.

Notes:

- 1 The unfilled places figures exclude pupils in receipt of a statement of special educational needs, and pupils admitted on appeal or by direction (post-primary schools only) of the Exceptional Circumstances Body, as they are admitted over and above a school's approved enrolment number in the year of their admission to the school. Some of these pupils attend full and oversubscribed schools which have no unfilled places so subtracting the total number of these pupils from the total unfilled places figure will not give a new accurate surplus places figure. The figures therefore cannot be used in this way. They do however give more contextual information about further pupils who are attending school and who are not taken into account in the unfilled places figure.
- 2 If a school is operating at over-capacity then the number of unfilled places is taken to be zero, rather than as a negative number of unfilled places to be netted off in totalling (i.e. if a school has an approved enrolment capacity of 200 and an actual enrolment of 205, the difference is "minus" 5 but the number of unfilled places is taken as zero).
- 3 Unfilled places data is unavailable for prep schools.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 40276/11-15, to detail any plans his Department has to fulfil the priorities for Education, as outlined in the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety led draft Domestic Violence and Sexual Abuse Strategy, by introducing an awareness programme for use in post-primary schools.

(AQW 40855/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department is committed to fulfilling its priorities under the Domestic Violence and Sexual Abuse Strategy.

In respect of post-primary programmes, Relationships and Sexuality Education (RSE) is a statutory component of both the Personal Development and Home Economics statements of requirement for Key Stage 3. At Key Stage 4, RSE is a statutory component of the Personal Development strand of Learning for Life and Work. RSE provides the opportunity for specific attention to be given to a pupil's emotional wellbeing, health and safety, relationships and the development of a moral thinking and value system. The strand also offers a vehicle for exploring with children and young people sensitive issues such as domestic violence and sexual abuse in an age appropriate way.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the percentage of pupils taking at least one STEM subject for A-level at schools that are (i) single sex (a) male; and (b) female; and (ii) co-educational.

Mr O'Dowd: The answer is contained in the table below:

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) percentage; and (ii) number of children that achieved at least five GCSEs at grades A* - C in each year from 1990 to 1999, broken down by (a) gender; (b) religious background; and (c) socio-economic background.

Mr O'Dowd: The information contained in the following tables refers to the achievement of pupils leaving mainstream grant aided post-primary schools during the academic years 1989/90 to 1989/99. For some of the earlier years the religion and the socio-economic background of a pupil were not collected. In such instances the earliest year of available data is reported. A pupil's socio-economic background has been derived using free school meal entitlement.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education for an update on the implementation of recommendations contained in Kathleen Marshall's Inquiry Report into Child Sexual Exploitation in Northern Ireland.

Mr O'Dowd: I have already welcomed and broadly accepted the relevant recommendations from this important report and my Department is considering how best to take these forward. I expect to be able to set out in the coming weeks further detail on the actions that the education service will take in response to the report.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to detail the average length of his response time for making a decision to development proposals since May 2011, including the longest and shortest response time achieved.

Mr O'Dowd: I have taken decisions on 162 development proposals since 1 May 2011 to 16 January 2015.

The average time taken between the date the statutory objection period ended on each proposal and the date of my decision was 97 days. The longest and shortest response times were 352 days and 3 days from the end of the statutory objection period respectively.

While I endeavour to complete this process as quickly as possible the time taken can vary depending on the individual circumstances of each proposal.

A record of decisions made since May 2011 is available on my Departments website.

A summary of DP decisions for each complete calendar year is available to download. These excel documents contain details of the date each development proposal was published, the date the statutory objection period ended and the date of my decision. The table of decisions for the current calendar year also includes this information.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to detail the schools in which his Department has not filled its nominations to the Board of Governors, including the reasons for the delays.

Mr O'Dowd: My Department nominates governors to controlled and maintained schools under Schedules 4 and 5 to the Education & Libraries (NI) Order 1986. School Boards of Governors are reconstituted every 4 years and the process generally takes some 12 to 18 months to complete. Reconstitution was due to commence in early 2013 but was delayed for 6 months pending a decision on the establishment of the Education and Skills Authority.

Good progress has been made and the nomination process for controlled and maintained schools is substantially complete. My Department continues to consult a wide range of stakeholders in relation to nominations to the following controlled and maintained schools:

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Employment and Learning (i) how the number of places on courses in each of the two universities are determined; (ii) the extent to which the number of places on each course is demand led; and (iii) how the number of places on these courses reflects the qualifications required for the job vacancies in the economy.

(AQW 40162/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning):

- (i) The number of places on courses and the content of qualifications are influenced by a number of factors, including the needs of the economy, but they are largely determined by the universities.
- (ii) Some courses are quota controlled rather than demand led. For example the number of places available for courses such as Medicine, Dentistry, Nursing and Midwifery are determined by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in line with workforce plans. Similarly PGCE numbers are determined by the Department of Education.

The Universities have advised that subject intake targets are generally allocated to each subject area based on a number of factors – these include Student application data (using UCAS statistics) as an indicator of student demand; my Department's strategic priorities; employment statistics for those graduating from the course in recent years (as an indicator of current employer demand/labour market) discussions with Invest NI and Employer forums (as an indicator of employer demand); as well as the academic plans of the particular institution.

Additionally, post year one entry numbers at the University of Ulster are estimated using data from numbers on Foundation Degrees in their partner colleges. Places for non-EU students, who fall outside the MaSN, are determined by student demand.

- (iii) The universities have stated that qualifications required for the job vacancies in the economy are evolving to increasingly meet the needs of employers. The higher education sector works in partnership with industry to both reflect the qualifications required for the job vacancies and the skills required.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how much funding his Department provided to Trade Unions in the last financial year.

Dr Farry: The overall total funding provided to trade unions in the last financial year by the Department was £689,819.57.

This included funding of £596,952.33 allocated to trade unions via the Northern Ireland Union Learning Fund (NIULF) which is managed by the Northern Ireland Committee of the Irish Congress of Trade Unions (NICICTU) on behalf of the Department.

In addition the Department funds Civil Servants on secondment to NIPSA to carry out full-time trade union duties. In the financial year 2013/14, the total cost of funding the Civil Servants on secondment to Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA) was £92,867.24.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQO 6698/11-15, whether the joint report on cross-border student flows has been completed; and whether he will place a copy in the Assembly library.

Dr Farry: A draft version of the joint report on cross-border student flows has been completed and is scheduled to be considered at a high level meeting at the end of January between officials in the Department of Employment and Learning and their counterparts in the Department of Education and Skills in the Republic of Ireland. I have met with Minister O'Sullivan in order to maintain momentum in addressing the issue of student flows.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action is being taken to protect the value of vocational courses, particularly in terms of university admission criteria for the rest of the UK.

Dr Farry: I maintain regular and close contact with my counterparts in the rest of the UK, as do my officials, to ensure that the integrity of vocational qualifications delivered in Northern Ireland continue to be valued by learners, employers and universities. My department has been working to ensure Northern Ireland qualifications retain the rigour and robustness to guarantee parity with their counterparts across the UK.

Criteria have been developed to certify that the vocational qualifications available to 16-19 year olds in England and Northern Ireland are on a par with the academic qualifications that are also available. The Universities and Colleges Admissions System (UCAS) bases its university entrance tariff on the level and size of the qualification whether that be vocational or academic; indeed UCAS does not differentiate between academic and vocational.

However, universities are responsible for their own policies and procedures including admissions criteria. My department has no remit in this matter particularly in relation to universities in other UK jurisdictions.

What is vital is that the qualifications studied in Northern Ireland have integrity, are offered by recognised awarding organisations, properly regulated and are in line with the requirements for further study, training and/or employment. To this end my department is currently developing a professional and technical qualifications strategy which will take into account these complex and interconnected issues.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning (i) how WorldHost customer service training programmes are being promoted to businesses in the tourism, hospitality, trade and retail sectors; and (ii) how many businesses are currently engaged in these programmes.

(AQW 40450/11-15)

Dr Farry: These programmes are primarily promoted by NITB (Northern Ireland Tourist Board) and People 1st who have the UK licence for World Host. Promotion of programmes includes via their websites, social media, conferences, road shows, local council and tourism groups partnerships, sector employer groups and by the licensed World Host trainers who promote and deliver the actual training. The World Host programmes are also promoted by my Department's Skills Solutions Service when engaging with employers across the sectors, with a World Host section on the Departmental website.

To date, approximately 2000 businesses across Northern Ireland have participated in World Host.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on plans within his Department to carry out a review of the skills needs of the tourism sector.

(AQW 40453/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department is in discussions with the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board about the need to scope out the skills challenges facing the local tourism industry. These discussions are in the very early stages and I hope to be able to update you further in due course.

There is already a number of ways in which the Department for Employment and Learning supports the local tourism industry. For a number of years my Department has offered WorldHost training to build on the customer service skills of the people working in our hospitality and tourism industry.

To date, approximately 15,500 employees have received this training. In addition, our Further Education College network offers a range of courses in support of this sector with more than 8,600 enrolments in 2013/14.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what is the budget for the delivery of the Learning Access Engagement Programme.

(AQW 40458/11-15)

Dr Farry: The budget for the delivery of the Learning Access Engagement Programme is currently £498,000, up to 31 March 2015.

The Learner Access and Engagement programme is delivered by all six Further Education Colleges in collaboration with non-statutory organisations, including voluntary and community groups, to provide learner support for adults through contractual arrangements.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 40166/11-15, for his assessment of the Food Engineering Apprenticeship Programme delivered in Southern Regional College; and whether he has plans to introduce this programme in Northern and North Western Regional colleges to promote the food and drink industries in East Londonderry.

Dr Farry: The Department established a Future Skills Action Group for the Food and Drink Manufacturing and Processing sector in 2011 to help the industry identify and address the skills issues it faces.

The Group consists of a wide range of members from government, local employers and further and higher education providers who work collaboratively to develop and pilot interventions to ensure employers are getting people with the skills they need to grow this economically important sector.

One such intervention is the Food Engineering Apprenticeship which is currently being delivered by Southern Regional College. This initiative started as a Northern Ireland wide 'pilot' in January 2014 and will see seven apprentices acquire both Level 2 and Level 3 accreditation in Engineering. Southern Regional College were instrumental in working with employers to develop the frameworks. Feedback to date on this programme has been very positive.

This apprenticeship is a four year programme and it is planned to hold an interim review on its progress mid way through the programme. To date there has been no demand in the North and North West. If there was evidence of demand the Department could work with the colleges and local industry to extend the programme.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the Collaboration and Innovation Fund to support young people who are not in employment, education or training; and what plans he has to continue this Fund post March 2015.

Dr Farry: The Collaboration and Innovation Fund has achieved a number of key objectives. An evaluation of the programme which is close to completion indicates that the initiatives and activities adopted have been successful in identifying and working with marginalised and disadvantaged groups of young people who are not in employment, education or training. This has contributed to the number of young people in this category dropping from 1 in 5 to 1 in 7 in Northern Ireland according to the latest Labour Force Survey figures.

The programme has been effective in fostering a more collaborative and innovative approach that has enabled organisations to learn from each other, share good practices and establish what works best. Working together or working with partners has contributed to a more effective service and supported many young people who do not avail of mainstream education and training.

The programme has reinforced the use of evidence-based approaches around the action planning process, design of mentoring, joint working between agencies, and the forms of wider support being delivered. Mentoring in particular has proved very effective in providing support to the most disengaged young people who are experiencing extreme difficulties in their lives.

I am pleased with the outcomes achieved under the Collaboration and Innovation Fund which has provided support to over 5,200 young people to date. In addition to the positive outcomes into employment, education and training, projects report many cases where the programme has improved the motivation, confidence and social skills of participants and helped to move them closer to the labour market.

While the Collaboration and Innovation Fund programme will cease at the end of March 2015, as this was a DFP ring-fenced budget to explore new approaches to address the barriers experienced by young people not in employment, education or training (NEET), my Department will continue to support those young people. I have introduced a new investment priority under the European Social Fund (ESF) aimed at achieving sustainable integration of young people into the labour market with particular emphasis on those young people who are at risk of social exclusion or from marginalised communities. Meeting the specific needs of these young people will be a priority for my Department with a particular focus on increasing employability

The new provision will draw upon the good practices tested under the Collaboration and Innovation Fund and reflected in the current evaluation of the Pathways to Success Strategy. I am confident that this approach will provide the training and support required to address the barriers experienced by this group.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps his Department is taking to increase the number of people from North Down enrolling in further education.

Dr Farry: The Department is committed to widening access and promoting educational opportunities for all individuals across Northern Ireland. Further education colleges offer a variety of courses across their network of campuses.

My Department has put in place a number of initiatives delivered by the colleges to make education more accessible to all learners across Northern Ireland. These initiatives include the Care to Learn Scheme and the Additional Support Fund. Together, these funding programmes make FE more accessible to a range of learners with potential barriers to participation or who may have not previously considered a route to employment through further education.

South Eastern Regional College (SERC) has responsibility for delivering further education courses in the North Down area and has campuses based in Bangor and Newtownards. SERC employs a wide range of techniques to engage all potential learners. For example, the college has been focusing recently on increasing the number of science, technology, engineering and maths (STEM) and economically relevant enrolments through:

- securing DEL funding of £12m to establish the new Performing Arts and Technology Innovation Centre;
- visiting schools to promote STEM enrolments with an emphasis on increasing female enrolments;
- the continuation of the development of Entitlement Framework provision and the local Area Learning Community which is presently chaired by a manager from SERC;
- the promotion of SERC courses through local advertising, a new prospectus which includes student testimonials and the use of the College's local Radio Station Bangor FM;
- PR stories in the local press, promoting the benefits of carrying out a course at the College;
- engagement with industry including placements for students and industry projects which enhance the benefits of following a course at the College; and
- promotion of Level 3 Apprenticeships (there has been a 25% increase in the number of Level 3 Apprenticeships in 2014/15 over 2013/14)

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the proposed sites for teacher training facilities.

(AQW 40525/11-15)

Dr Farry: Following the publication of Aspiring to Excellence, the report produced by the International Review Panel under the stage 2 review of Initial Teacher Education infrastructure in Northern Ireland, I am continuing to engage with the Teacher Education Sector on options for future structures which could move us towards a world-class standard of teacher education. I have advised the sector that options that best achieve that criteria are Options B, a two-university approach with sites in Belfast and the North West, or Option D, a single institution.

The Review Panel acknowledged the importance of having third level education sited on the existing university college sites and I support that view. However, while discussions with the sector are underway, it would not be appropriate for me to comment further on this.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) the costs incurred by the change to the corporate brand of the University of Ulster to the Ulster University; (ii) the rationale for this decision; (iii) the process by which the decision was reached; and (iv) whether costs were attributed to each school or faculty.

Dr Farry: My Department provides funding to the Higher Education Institutions for teaching and learning and research purposes. The Universities are responsible for their own policies and procedures, including those relating to branding. As my Department does not hold the information you have requested you may wish to contact Ulster University directly on this matter.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the impact of the proposed cuts to the voluntary sector including to Action Mental Health and other agencies that provide employment opportunities for people in need.

Dr Farry: My Department will seek to act strategically in order to protect those areas that are most relevant to the economy, as well as looking to those services provided to those who are most vulnerable. The provision of such services is an area in which voluntary and community providers have particular expertise.

Through the Disability Employment Service, my Department offers specialist help and support through a range of specialist pre-employment and in-work programmes, some of which are delivered on behalf of the Department by organisations from the local disability sector. The Department has no plans to reduce this offer of specialist disability provision or the funding associated with these successful interventions.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on his plans for the Northern Ireland Science Festival.

Dr Farry: I would like to congratulate the organisers of first the Science Festival in Northern Ireland which will be held from 19th February to 1st March. It will provide an excellent opportunity to showcase science, technology, engineering and mathematics, or STEM. I am pleased that my Department and I have been able to give both financial and practical assistance

The Festival will provide young people, adults and families with a wide range of interactive workshops, inspirational talks and project displays.

In addition to helping implement the recommendations of the STEM Strategy, the festival aims to foster collaboration between science communicators and STEM activity; to promote and maintain science as a key part of our culture and society; and to provide a platform for STEM professionals to gain high-profile exposure.

I have arranged for speakers from the United States to participate in delivering an interactive 'Master-class', in Belfast and Derry. This invitation follows my visit to Massachusetts in March 2014, which also resulted in eight further education students attending a STEM summer camp in Worcester Polytechnic Institute.

Other festival highlights include the first Turing Lecture in Northern Ireland; the 'Celebrating Science' and 'Art and Science of Sound' events at Queens University; 'Engineering Futures' at Ulster University; 'How your Body Works' at W5; 'Lotions and Potions' at the Ulster Museum; 'Exploration of the Outer Fringes of Space' at the Black Box; and 'Astronaut Training' at the Armagh Planetarium.

Further details on all the scheduled events are available on the Festival website at www.nisciencefestival.com or my officials would be happy to provide further information.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the progress of the joint Economic Inactivity Strategy.

(AQO 7354/11-15)

Dr Farry: Following an extensive research, development and public consultation process, a draft strategy is currently being finalised by myself and the Minister for Enterprise, Trade and Investment and will shortly be circulated for Executive consideration.

My Department recently submitted three joint bids with DSD and DETI to the DFP Change Fund to resource several of the proposed key strategic early implementation actions. Only one of these bids was successful.

Therefore, once Executive agreement is secured on a final strategy, additional resources will be required to facilitate the successful implementation of the strategy.

If agreed and adequately resourced, this will be the only dedicated government strategy in the United Kingdom, targeted specifically at addressing the major socio-economic issue of economic inactivity. This is a reflection of the significance placed by myself and my Executive colleagues in seeking to tackle the issue on a sustainable basis across Northern Ireland.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the success of the Confucius Institute at the University of Ulster.

Dr Farry: I understand that the member has recently visited China and will have had the opportunity to observe at first hand, the positive impact of the Confucius Institute on the cultural relationship between Northern Ireland and China.

The Confucius Institute at the Ulster University was launched in April 2012 as a collaborative venture, in partnership with Zhejiang University of Media and Communications in Hangzhou, and supported by the Chinese government via Hanban - the Office of the Chinese Language Council International.

The Institute focuses on developing the teaching of the Chinese language at all levels and on outreach activities to familiarise the general public across Northern Ireland with Chinese culture and heritage.

The first classes in Chinese started in January 2013 and in order to meet high demand, the Institute submitted a proposal to develop, in partnership with Hubei Normal University in Huangshi, a network of Confucius Classroom Hubs. This was approved in July 2013, leading to the creation of 8 hubs, providing support for the teaching of Chinese in 121 schools and regional colleges across Northern Ireland.

The number of students registered with the Institute rose from 269 in 2013 to 6093 in 2014. The number of students who successfully passed the Chinese Proficiency Test or the Youth Chinese Test rose from 103 in 2013 to 1362 in 2014.

The Institute employs 28 teachers from China, organises cultural and educational visits to China for students, teachers, and school principals, supports the teaching of Chinese both as part of broader courses in the area of Modern Languages and in combined programmes and organises a variety of cultural events.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the number of student places that would be lost in Northern Ireland's two universities if the proposed budget is agreed.

Dr Farry: Based on proposed Departmental reduced allocation in the draft Budget for 15/16, the two universities advised that a 10.8% cut could lead to 1000 places being lost, with Queen's University reporting a potential reduction of 490 places whilst the University of Ulster reported a potential reduction of 500 places.

I have been in discussions over the past number of weeks on how to best mitigate the effects of any cuts in order to preserve as many front-line places as possible. These discussions will intensify in light of the Budget having now been agreed by the Executive.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on his Department's review of higher education funding.

Dr Farry: I had intended to issue a consultation on the review of higher education funding towards the end of last year, seeking views on various specific areas of funding, including student finance.

However, we are now operating in a much changed financial environment, with most Departments, including my own, facing challenging reductions to their budgets.

In Northern Ireland we have a very clear plan for rebuilding and rebalancing our economy, and it is crucially reliant on higher education – on the innovation and knowledge transfer generated through internationally excellent research and on the steady stock of high level skills which are so important for attracting potential investors to our shores.

Our universities in Northern Ireland are already underfunded to the tune of £1,000 to £2,500 per student compared to their counterparts in England, making it increasingly difficult for them to remain competitive nationally and internationally.

Reductions to my Department's budget will inevitably compound this issue and exacerbate the funding gap between ourselves and our nearest competitors. It will leave our higher education providers in a simply unsustainable financial position; and it will leave us the only region in the United Kingdom actively disinvesting in higher education.

Once a budget is settled we will need to have a wider debate with all our stakeholders about how we can support a financially sustainable and internationally competitive higher education sector in Northern Ireland. The work that had been undertaken in regard to the higher education funding review will be crucial in informing and facilitating this debate.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the expansion of the University of Ulster's Magee campus.

Dr Farry: The 'One Plan' has an aspiration for a university with 9,400 full-time equivalent students by 2020, including 6,000 full-time undergraduates. The Derry~Londonderry Strategy Board commissioned consultants to prepare a business case to support the expansion of the Magee campus. The first full draft of the business case was delivered to my Department on 19 December. The business case is now being scrutinised by officials. My Department does not have the funds to contemplate any further expansion of the higher education sector in the current financial climate. In the context of the restoration of sustainable funding of the existing higher education provision, I will make a bid to the Executive for the expansion of the Magee campus should the business case make the case that this represents good value for money from a Northern Ireland perspective.

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether local universities have attempted to increase the numbers of students from other jurisdictions to offset the proposed reductions in their 2015/16 budget allocations.

Dr Farry: All of our higher education institutions have developed international strategies to increase inward and outward mobility of students and staff and facilitate collaborative partnerships.

Queen's University, Belfast, the Ulster University and Stranmillis University College have indicated that these strategies have a focus on attracting international fee paying students and this will help them to offset some of the proposed reductions in their 2015/16 budget allocations.

However, as a small, specialist institution, St Mary's has advised that it is not positioned to take additional action to attract students from other jurisdictions.

In addition, the Ulster University has advised that it is seeking to increase the recruitment of students from other UK jurisdictions. In this context it should be noted that until recently such students counted against the MaSN and the University concentrated on students from Northern Ireland. Since the change in the regulations applications from GB students have increased.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of jobs created in each constituency in (i) 2012/13; and (ii) 2013/14.

(AQW 40239/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The table below details the number of jobs created by Invest NI assisted projects in each parliamentary constituency in (i) 2012-13; and (ii) 2013-14.

PCA	2012-13	2013-14
Belfast East	723	852
Belfast North	296	350
Belfast South	887	832
Belfast West	136	198
East Antrim	140	124
East Londonderry	141	201
Fermanagh & South Tyrone	408	637
Foyle	323	434
Lagan Valley	150	209
Mid Ulster	505	495
Newry & Armagh	732	371
North Antrim	154	272
North Down	63	128
South Antrim	737	413
South Down	167	288
Strangford	117	157
Upper Bann	254	482
West Tyrone	261	327

Note: Invest NI revises performance data on a regular basis to ensure that it reflects implemented projects; therefore, the data above may differ to previously published information.

It should be noted that there will be other jobs created in each constituency by businesses not directly supported by Invest NI.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much funding her Department provided to Trade Unions in the last financial year.

(AQW 40300/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In the 2013/14 financial year my Department did not provide funding directly to any Trade Union organisation. The Department did pay £25,729 in 2013/14 to meet the salary cost of 1 full-time member of staff who is seconded to a Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance role in the Department.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) who are the Licence Partners of Petroleum Licence PL1/10; (ii) whether full due diligence has been carried out with regard to the Licence Partners of PL1/10; (iii) whether her Department has received copies of the audited accounts of the Licence Partners, including that of the company with the largest interest, Larne Oil & Gas Ltd, as regulations require; and (iv) if the licence interest assignments have not been approved by her Department, as regulations require, why the licence has not been revoked.

(AQW 40329/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

- (i) Petroleum Licence PL1/10 is held by a consortium of companies as follows:
- InfraStrata plc (operator) 45%
 - Brigantes Energy Limited (40% owned by InfraStrata plc) 45%
 - Terrain Energy Limited 10%.
- (ii) Yes
- (iii) DETI has seen the audited accounts of each of the current Licence holders. Larne Oil and Gas Limited is not one of the Licence Holders of Petroleum Licence PL1/10.
- (iv) The interest share of each of the current Licence holders in PL1/10 was approved by DETI by means of a formal deed of assignment executed on 22 July 2014.

At time of writing DETI has not received nor processed any request to include Larne Oil and Gas Limited on Petroleum Licence PL1/10.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether she has any plans to review the number of local tourism organisations that exist.

Mrs Foster: I commissioned an independent review of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and wider tourism structures in 2014 and plan to make a statement to the Northern Ireland Assembly on the outcome of that Review on 20 January. I have no plans to review the number of local tourism organisations. The delivery of local tourism functions is principally a matter for Local Councils.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 39957/11-15, to list the groups or individuals who have funded the Gobbins project in Larne; and the financial package each funder delivered.

Mrs Foster: I refer the member to my answer to AQW 36309/11/15.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 35898/11-15, for a breakdown of the £509,144.00 spent by Invest NI on hospitality in 2013/14.

Mrs Foster: The cost of hospitality for Invest NI for 2013/14 was £509,144, detailed as follows: -

- £243,000 – This relates to the costs of business meetings and events held in Northern Ireland for a range of local companies and visiting foreign companies.
- £196,000 – This relates to the costs associated with executive dinners and round table events focused on specific industry sectors.
- £70,000 – This relates to the cost of overseas business networking events. These events are targeted at companies that are considering investment projects in Northern Ireland.

A number of networking and business events are organised as a key part of our sales and marketing activity. These events are a means of interacting with key global decision makers in order to attract inward investments. Corporate hospitality forms a very important element of the Invest NI's agreed sales strategy.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the potential economic benefits arising from the new service to Amsterdam from Belfast City Airport.

Mrs Foster: The announcement of KLM to commence a new service to Amsterdam from Belfast City Airport in May 2015 is very good news and I wish to congratulate the airport in securing this route. It will not only serve to strengthen business links between Northern Ireland and the Netherlands, but will improve Northern Ireland's access to important business and tourism markets in Europe, North America, Asia and the Middle East as Amsterdam is an important hub airport. Equally, the new service will also provide these markets with greater access to Northern Ireland for those who wish to visit or do business here.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what are the implications for rural areas of Phase 2 of the UK Superfast Rollout Programme; and whether match funding has been achieved.

Mrs Foster: My Department carried out a public consultation on a proposed intervention for superfast broadband last year and subsequently issued an Invitation to Tender seeking proposals for delivering a solution. The implications for which specific areas will be impacted will be dependent on the response to the Invitation to Tender.

DETI is continuing to secure the match funding which will be dependent on the outcome on the Executive's 2015/16 budget deliberations.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the plans to publish an updated Strategy for Tourism; and how an enforced strategy will contribute to continued growth in this sector.
(AQW 40449/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I commissioned an independent review of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and wider tourism structures in 2014 and plan to make a statement to the Northern Ireland Assembly on the outcome of that Review on 20 January. A key recommendation from the review was that the Northern Ireland Executive should publish an updated Strategy for Tourism at an early date.

The Hunter Review indicates that a new strategy would aid the development of collaborative partnerships across the industry, in government and beyond, which are the building blocks for future progress. An updated overarching tourism strategy would help tourism partners to work together and understand their role in the achievement of common goals and in the realisation of important synergies. A new strategy would set stretching targets and identify key priorities for action taking account of the emergence of new developments, initiatives and trends in tourism.

Continued growth in tourism is vital to the rebalancing of the local economy and I will ensure that the necessary action is taken to deliver on my and the industry's aspiration to make tourism a £1billion industry by 2020.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for a breakdown of the (i) overall annual; and (ii) individual unit cost implications for consumers of the additional 250MW of capacity margin of electricity capacity commissioned by SONI.

Mrs Foster: Provision of the additional 250MW capacity margin to be provided by AES Corporation will cost £8.9million per year over a 3 year period from 2016. The impact on electricity consumers is estimated at 0.1 pence per kWh. This and other information is set out in the joint DETI/Utility Regulator update paper on security of electricity supply which was published on 22 December 2014.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the appropriateness of the salary and performance related payments to Senior Executives within Mutual Energy, given the ongoing issues with the Moyle Interconnector and that all of these costs are covered by electricity customers.

Mrs Foster: Remuneration and bonuses are a matter for the Remuneration Committee within Mutual Energy, based on a remuneration policy which is approved annually by the Mutual Energy Members.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the involvement of the Health and Safety Executive in investigating the collapse of a wind turbine at the Screggagh Wind Farm site, County Tyrone on Friday 2 January 2015.
(AQW 40550/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I can confirm that HSENI was notified of the incident on Saturday 3 January and contact was made with the manufacturers of the wind turbine and owner of Screggagh Wind Farm.

Since the incident, I understand that the site has been secured and the other turbines have not been operational. Follow-up contact by HSENI Inspectors was made with the manufacturers on Monday 5 January and a site visit arranged for Thursday 8 January. The visit was organised to coincide with key personnel being on site; this included the manufacturers' technicians along with the relevant safety personnel. Discussions are ongoing with the manufacturers as part of the investigation.

Determining the reason for the collapse of the wind turbine is likely to be a technically complex matter and may take some time. HSENI's role is to carry out an independent investigation into the incident, to establish the facts of the incident and if there is any learning that could apply to this operation or to the operation of similar wind turbines in the future.

This is the first incident of its kind involving large scale wind turbines in Northern Ireland. Given the low frequency rates of failure in the United Kingdom, alongside the independent research undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive in Great Britain, I consider the risk of such incidents to the public to remain low, relative to other societal risks commonly experienced.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of jobs created in (i) 2012/13; and (ii) 2013/14; and of this number, how many were part-time positions.

Mrs Foster: Support offered by Invest NI has helped to create (i) 6,194 new jobs in 2012-13 and (ii) 6,785 new jobs in 2013-14. Invest NI offers of support towards job creation projects are calculated on a full-time equivalent basis therefore our systems do not hold the information requested.

Invest NI continues to promote new jobs across Northern Ireland with recent support in East Londonderry for S.J.C. Hutchinson (Engineering) Limited to promote 36 new jobs and Ballyrashane Co-Operative Agricultural and Dairy Society Limited to promote 20 new jobs.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the progress made on the Programme for Government 2011-15 target of 40 per cent of electricity consumption from renewable energies within five years,

Mrs Foster: The Programme for Government 2011-15 target is to "Encourage achievement of 20% of electricity consumption from renewable sources by 2015". The Executive's Strategic Energy Framework includes a target to achieve 40% of electricity consumption from renewable sources by 2020.

A new bi-annual statistical publication to aid reporting against the Programme for Government 2011-15 target was first published by DETI on 25th September 2014. This showed that for the 12 month period April 2013 to March 2014, 19.5% of total electricity consumption in Northern Ireland was generated from renewable sources located in Northern Ireland.

The next publications are due by March 2015 (covering the period January 2014 to December 2014) and June 2015 (covering the period April 2014 to March 2015).

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment when consultation responses on the proposed changes to the Northern Ireland renewables obligation will be available.
(AQW 40570/11-15)

Mrs Foster: We have been working through over 330 responses received as part of the consultation. I expect to issue a response in the next fortnight or so.

In recognition of the impact that any delay on confirming revised Renewables Obligation Certificate (ROC) levels might have on solar photovoltaic (PV) installers and prospective generators, consultees were informed in December of my decision to retain existing ROC levels until 1 October 2015 rather than the planned change on 1 April 2015.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the success of the BT Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement project in improving access to basic and superfast fixed-line broadband services for rural areas.

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project is being delivered in eight phases with an overall completion date of 31 December 2015. The project is progressing according to schedule and by 31 December 2014 almost 17,500 premises across Northern Ireland had benefitted from the improvements being delivered.

By project completion, it is anticipated that improvements will have been delivered for at least 45,000 premises resulting in the provision of basic wire-line broadband services of at least 2 Megabits per second in areas that previously had no service and improvements in the availability of superfast fixed-line broadband services (24 Megabits per second or higher) in areas where choice is poor or broadband speeds are low.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on a proposed intervention area for improvements to broadband provision through Phase 2 of the UK Superfast Rollout Programme; and whether she plans to award a supply contract.

Mrs Foster: The proposed intervention area for the Superfast Roll-out Programme Phase 2 in Northern Ireland was published by my Department on 26 August 2014 for full public consultation. The response to the consultation feedback is available on the Department's website at www.deti.gov.uk/index/what-we-do/deti-telecoms-index/telecoms-srp.htm.

An Invitation to Tender to find a suitable supplier was issued on 12 November 2014 with a closing date of 26 January 2015. The final intervention area is dependent on the response to the Invitation to Tender. Assuming that an acceptable bid is received, it is anticipated that contract award will be made towards the end of February 2015 with implementation commencing immediately thereafter.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 35358/11-15, how many premises have benefited from more choice and improved broadband speeds through the BT Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement project. (AQW 40718/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I can confirm that to 31 December 2014, the availability of broadband services has been improved to almost 17,500 premises through the implementation of the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project.

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what was the cost of the investigation into the Northern Ireland Events Company.

Mrs Foster: The total cost of the investigation was £1.24 million.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much of the £2.2m allocated to her Department to meet pressures in Invest NI and the Northern Ireland Tourist Board will be allocated for a Tourism Events Fund 2015-16.

(AQW 40969/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Events play a key role in driving tourism to Northern Ireland and therefore I am delighted to announce that I have secured £1million for the Northern Ireland Tourist Board's (NITB) Tourism Events Funding Programme in the final budget settlement for 2015/16.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how she is ensuring that the recently announced Enterprise Zone for Coleraine is being progressed as a matter of urgency.

Mrs Foster: My Department's role in establishing the pilot Enterprise Zone in Coleraine has been as a facilitator to ensure designation of the Enterprise Zone by Treasury once all negotiations have concluded between relevant stakeholders.

Those discussions have not yet concluded. However, both I and my officials have facilitated a number of meetings with the relevant parties in recent months to highlight the importance of resolving any outstanding issues quickly. My Department remains fully committed to seeing the pilot Enterprise Zone established as soon as possible.

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many jobs were created in the Derry City Council area in 2013/14.

Mrs Foster: During the 2013-14 financial year, Invest NI support has helped create almost four hundred and forty new jobs in the Londonderry Council area.

Invest NI continues to promote new jobs across Northern Ireland with recent support in Londonderry for Convergys to promote three hundred and thirty three new jobs and Fujitsu to promote one hundred and seventy seven new jobs.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the safety of wind turbines, following the recent incident at the Screggagh wind farm in County Tyrone.

Mrs Foster: No one was injured in this event, but naturally it has generated some concerns. I would like to assure you and members of the Assembly that an independent investigation is being undertaken by the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland.

The Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland's role will include monitoring and reviewing the investigation carried out by the company who operates the wind farm. However, it will also involve looking at the acceptable standards within the wind industry as a whole and current research on the safety of wind turbines.

The outcome of Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland's investigation will be to determine if the company has complied with appropriate standards of safety in its operation and should any additional safety measures be required, that these will be implemented. In addition, part of Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland's role will also involve determining if there are any wider consequences as a result of the incident itself and ensuring that all appropriate bodies are informed.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of a reduction in the level of VAT for the local hospitality sector.

Mrs Foster: VAT is not a devolved matter, and as such, it is for the Treasury to determine VAT rates. I will continue to lobby the Exchequer to reduce VAT rates.

Any reduction in the VAT rate for the accommodation and hospitality sectors, if passed on to consumers by way of reduced costs, could result in increased demand for our tourism offerings.

A report of the impact of the VAT rate reduction for the tourism sector in the Republic of Ireland indicated that the introduction of the reduced VAT rate appears to have met its original aims of driving employment and stimulating activity in the sector and has achieved this without placing a significant burden on the Irish exchequer.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Gas to the West project.
(AQO 7371/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In November 2014 the Utility Regulator confirmed Mutual Energy and Scotia Gas Networks as the 'preferred applicants' for new licences to develop natural gas infrastructure in the West. The Regulator is currently consulting on draft licences which are expected to be formally awarded next month. Initial works to provide the new gas networks could commence later in 2015 with the main network development beginning in 2016.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline any discussions she has had with the Minister for Jobs, Enterprise and Innovation in relation to the Irish Open 2015 to maximise the tourism boost not only for South Down, but also across the island.

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Tourist Board will be working with key partners to plan for and deliver the 2015 Irish Open event, including hosting an industry workshop to encourage the tourism businesses in South Down to maximise opportunities arising from The Irish Open.

Experience of the last Irish Open highlighted that the event will present an opportunity for the tourism sector not only in South Down, but Newry & Mourne, Belfast and further afield as visitors attending are unlikely to be troubled by a short journey time.

Tourism Ireland will be working in the important golf markets to capitalise on the potential of the Irish Open in showcasing Northern Ireland as a location for golfing breaks and holidays.

As regards engagement with the Irish Government on tourism issues, I engage with my counterpart through the mechanism of the North South Ministerial Council on the promotion and marketing of the island of Ireland and areas of mutual benefit and collaboration. I have had no specific discussion in relation to the Irish Open 2015.

Department of the Environment

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether he will release urgently the pre action protocol letter by Tamboran Resources, in accordance with the requirements under the Aarhus convention which sets out their case for judicial review, to those third party groups who have made requests for this information.

(AQW 38205/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): In so far as the Department has not disclosed the Pre action protocol letter from Tamboran to individuals or groups who have made requests for these documents, the Department did so in accordance with its legal obligations of disclosure under the Environmental Information Regulations 2004.

Tamboran UK Limited, the company which has challenged the decision of the Minister on 11 August 2014, has made disclosure of this pre action protocol letter to those who have requested it and who have made an application to the Court with a view to becoming parties to the proceedings in accordance with the directions of the Court.

In the case of any other interested party who wishes to understand the grounds on which Tamboran has challenged the decision of the Minister, these are fully set out in the judicial review papers which Tamboran has now filed in the High Court and which can be inspected through the High Court office in accordance with the Rules of Court.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment how much funding his Department provided to Trade Unions in the last financial year.

(AQW 40246/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department does not provide funding to Trade Unions.

However, it does pay the salary costs of one DOE full time employee seconded to the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance (NIPSA) in relation to the Assistant Departmental Trade Union Side Secretary position. The cost for this position in 2013-14 was £31,304.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment (i) for his assessment of the current requirement of Article 97a of the Road Traffic Order (Northern Ireland) 1981 which states that evidence of a valid insurance policy must be produced upon licensing a vehicle, given the success of the Motor Insurance Database; (ii) what impact the removal of Article 97a of the Road Traffic Order (Northern Ireland) 1981 would have on the process of online vehicle licensing; and (iii) whether he intends to amend Article 97a of the Road Traffic Order (Northern Ireland) 1981.

Mr Durkan: Advances in technology and the development of the Motor Insurance Database mean that, in many cases, a valid insurance policy certificate does not need to be physically presented upon licensing a vehicle. This is due to the computer checks which can take place by matching vehicle details to the Motor Insurance Database during the renewal process. This facility is not however available to those who renew their vehicle tax at the Post Office and as such is still a requirement under the cited Act.

The impact of the removal of provision on the process of online vehicle licensing will be minimal as the checks already happen seamlessly from the user perspective.

The removal of the provision is being taken forward in the context of the implementation of the Continuous Insurance Enforcement (CIE). In essence CIE continuously carries out checks on the validity of insurance policies of vehicles rather than solely at the time of vehicle licence renewal. The necessary legislative amendments to bring this forward are being progressed and will remove the anomaly whereby those renewing their vehicle tax in the Post Office have to present their insurance documents.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the leasing arrangements at Enniskillen Castle which relate to the Inniskillings Museum, including annual rent, the length of the lease and under what grounds one side can terminate the lease. (AQW 40283/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The rent for the lease to the Inniskillings Museum is £0.05 (if demanded by the Department). The lease is for a term of 25 years which commenced in 2007. There is no termination clause but the Department can re-enter the premises if lease covenants are broken. The covenants include: to keep the premises in good order, to pay taxes; and to use the premises as a Regimental Museum and associated offices. The lessee can terminate by applying to the Department for a formal termination.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the efficacy of the current legislation surrounding tachograph usage in preventing haulage vehicle drivers from breaking EU and UK drivers' hours rules. (AQW 40338/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The European Commission is responsible for developing regulations governing tachograph and drivers' hours requirements, which are enforced by Member States throughout the European Union. These are regularly reviewed by the Commission to ensure they can be easily interpreted and applied by the road transport industry and the enforcement authorities.

Vehicles that fall out of scope of EU drivers' hours requirements may be subject to Northern Ireland domestic rules which have been developed by my Department.

Responsibility for enforcement of the regulations rests with my Department and the PSNI and I am satisfied with the efficacy of the current legislation in this regard.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the work undertaken by haulage vehicle operators to ensure that their responsibilities with regard to tachograph and drivers' hours rules are met. (AQW 40339/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Section 12C (2) of the Goods Vehicles (Licensing of Operators) Act (NI) 2010 requires that goods vehicles operators must have satisfactory arrangements for securing that Article 56 of the Road Traffic (NI) Order 1981 (drivers hours) and the applicable community rules governing tachographs and drivers' hours are complied with.

The Driver and Vehicle Agency routinely carries out operator compliance audits and roadside checks to ensure haulage vehicle operators comply with tachograph and drivers' hours rules.

Where offences are detected, DVA can impose a range of sanctions including advice and warning, fixed penalty notices, prohibitions or may pursue matters through the Courts. Serious infringements relating to Northern Irish operators may also be referred to the Transport Regulation Unit for regulatory action to be considered.

Through these measures I am satisfied that there is a robust system in place for ensuring that haulage operators are complying with their responsibilities.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the work undertaken by his Department, in conjunction with the Department for Justice, to ensure that EU and UK haulage vehicle drivers' hours rules are enforced fully. (AQW 40340/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department in compliance with Directive 2006/22/EC organises a system of appropriate and regular checks on the correct and consistent implementation of the rules relating to tachographs and drivers' hours both at the roadside and at operators premises.

Through its enforcement activities, the Driver & Vehicle Agency has checked 3,532 of goods vehicles and 23,196 of tachograph records in 2013/14. The PSNI carry out similar activities.

In those instances where an offence is discovered a range of enforcement action may be taken that includes advice and warning, issuing fixed penalty notices, prohibitions or in some cases matters may be pursued through the Courts by the Public

Prosecution Service. Serious infringements relating to Northern Irish operators are also referred to the Transport Regulation Unit for regulatory action to be considered.

Information on relevant offences is also shared with other EU Member States to consider follow up action as required.

I am satisfied that this approach ensures that tachograph and drivers' hours rules and regulations are robustly enforced.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) the occasions on which NIEA monitored waste water treatment works discharges against the consented standards in Garrison; (ii) whether concerns were identified that adversely impacted the environment; and (iii) whether an enforcement notice was issued to NI Water on any of these occasions.

(AQW 40394/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The discharge from Garrison Wastewater Treatment Works (WWTW) is consented under the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999. Compliance with the requirements of the Consent is assessed by Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) based on self-monitoring data supplied by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) according to an agreed sampling programme. The effluent is sampled 12 times a year to assess compliance.

Annual inspections have been carried out at the works by NIEA since 2011 and there has been no visual impact of an adverse environmental impact at the discharge point into Lough Melvin.

Since 2007, this works has been compliant for seven years out of eight years. It was non-compliant in 2012, due to the failure of a sample lifted on 10 May 2012 exceeding the consent conditions for biochemical oxygen demand (BOD), suspended solids and phosphorus. For BOD and suspended solids, two exceedances are permitted within 12 samples but phosphorus compliance is assessed as an annual average and resulted in a failure of the sample.

NIW were cautioned as a result of the failure and this works has remained compliant since this date.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 38206/11-15, (i) whether inspections have taken place; (ii) if so, when they took place; (iii) whether the operations have now ceased; and (iv) if not, what action is to be taken by his Department.

(AQW 40435/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials have visited Lough Neagh on 20 March 2014, 26 June 2014 and 5 August 2014. Correspondence was subsequently issued to the operators.

Further visits will take place as soon as practically possible.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of the Environment, as part of his Department's responsibility to develop policy and legislation to facilitate the transition from 26 to 11 councils, what advice has been given to councils on what would be considered the legal status quo if a council should fail to adopt a policy on the flying of flags.

(AQW 40454/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department has provided no advice to councils, in the context of the local government reform programme.

The policy on the flying of flags on council property is a matter for each council as a local democratically elected body. This position was reinforced by the Assembly's rejection of proposals to legislate on the matter at the Consideration Stage of the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 2014.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 38711/11-15, why there has been a delay in answering this question; and when it will be answered.

Mr Durkan: AQW 38711/11-15 was answered on Friday 9 January 2015.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment what actions are in place to ensure that odour is not emitted from the Biffa Cottonmount site in Mallusk.

(AQW 40485/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Biffa Cottonmount landfill in Mallusk, Newtownabbey is regulated by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) under a waste permit. To meet the conditions of the permit, the operator has been required to develop and implement a Gas Management Plan and Odour Management Plan. The key actions to prevent odour emanating from the landfill are set out in these plans.

Odour from landfill gas is managed by a gas extraction system. Gas wells at various depths are used to extract gas to a central system where it is used to run 3 engines generating 3 MW of power. Areas of the site that have reached their final level are covered with a permanent impermeable cap designed to prevent gas escape. Other areas of the site that are below final level, and which will require further waste deposits in the future to achieve final level, are covered with a temporary cap to minimise gas release and enable gas extraction in these areas as well.

To minimise odours from fresh waste disposal, the disposal activities are confined to one active disposal area within the site at any one time. The disposal area is kept as small as practicable. At the end of the working day, this area is covered with 'daily cover' using inert materials designed to minimise odour escape.

The site operator conducts odour checks on a daily basis. If an odour problem is detected an odour suppression system may be utilised to combat odour while the issue is resolved. NIEA inspectors conduct sites inspections on a very regular basis. NIEA inspectors also respond to complaints from local residents. If a persistent odour likely to cause annoyance is detected outside the boundary, NIEA will take appropriate enforcement action.

It is recognised that odour management at a large landfill site is a complex and dynamic issue as the site is infilled. Changes to the disposal area, capping activities and installation of additional gas wells are ongoing on a very regular basis. NIEA are currently engaged with the operator in the implementation of a gas action plan and will continue to monitor activities at the Cottonmount landfill very closely to ensure compliance with the waste permit.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment how odours, flies and other matters affecting the residents close to the Biffa Cottonmount site in Mallusk are monitored.

(AQW 40487/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Biffa Cottonmount landfill in Mallusk, Newtownabbey is regulated by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) under a waste permit. To meet the conditions of the permit, the operator is required to develop and implement a Site Management Plan, which includes procedures to prevent and also monitor for these amenity issues.

The site operator is required to conduct checks on amenity issues that may affect residents around the site on a daily basis and these records are maintained for future inspection. If an issue is detected, this should be addressed by the operator following the procedures in the site management plan.

Specifically on the issue of flies, the operator employs a specialist company to regularly monitor flies at monitoring points around the site and maintain records. During Spring/Summer, regular treatment is employed to minimise the risk of any impact from flies.

NIEA inspectors conduct sites inspections on a very regular basis. NIEA inspectors also respond to complaints from local residents. If an amenity issue that is likely to cause annoyance is detected outside the site boundary, NIEA will take appropriate enforcement action.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment how many companies or organisations from Northern Ireland have taken advantage of the Energy Saving Opportunity Scheme.

Mr Durkan: The Energy Savings Opportunity Scheme (ESOS) is mandatory for large organisations which meet the required threshold of employing 250 or more people, or with an annual turnover in excess of €50 million (circa £39 million), and an annual balance sheet total in excess of €43 million (£33.5million). Those organisations must notify the Environment Agency (UK scheme administrator), that they have met the requirements of ESOS by 5 December 2015. It is anticipated that ESOS will apply to between 200-250 organisations in Northern Ireland. To date none of those organisations have notified the Environment Agency of their compliance.

My department has worked in conjunction the Department for Energy and Climate Change (DECC), the Environment Agency (EA) and Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment (DETI), who are the sponsoring department for this policy in NI, to develop the ESOS legislation and guidance.

A number of seminars to promote the scheme for the organisations affected have been held, and around 230 letters were sent to NI based organisations to explain the scheme. Details on the scheme and links to further information, including the notification page are available on the NIEA website, and to date the webpage has been accessed 367 times. NIEA officials have responded expeditiously to all requests for information on the scheme.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment how his Department, or the NIEA, advertise or promote the availability of the Energy Saving Opportunity Scheme in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 40519/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Energy Savings Opportunity Scheme (ESOS) is mandatory for large organisations which meet the required threshold of employing 250 or more people, or with an annual turnover in excess of €50 million (circa £39 million), and an annual balance sheet total in excess of €43 million (£33.5million). Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what actions have been taken to implement the Energy Savings Opportunity Scheme in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 40520/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Energy Savings Opportunity Scheme (ESOS) is mandatory for large organisations which meet the required threshold of employing 250 or more people, or with an annual turnover in excess of €50 million (circa £39 million), and an annual balance sheet total in excess of €43 million (£33.5million). Mr Dunne asked the Minister of the Environment what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Transport to help reduce the turnover time for the re-registration of Northern Ireland Vehicles through the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency in Swansea.

(AQW 40530/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Despite my appeals to the Secretary of State for Transport, vehicle registration and licensing services were centralised within the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) in Swansea on 21 July 2014. From that date, responsibility for the delivery of vehicle registration and vehicle excise duty in Northern Ireland transferred to DVLA.

The transfer of the function resulted in the closure of the local motor tax offices which effectively removed the over the counter services for those more complex transactions, such as vehicle re-registrations, which cannot be completed via the Post Office and have to be posted to the DVLA in Swansea for processing. From the date of transfer, access to DVLA's computer systems and the Northern Ireland records contained within it, was withdrawn from Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) staff removing any capacity for my Department to monitor any issues raised.

Whilst I am sympathetic to the issues now being faced by local motorists, I must refer you to DVLA to address any specific query in relation to the delivery of this service.

Should you need to highlight a particular issue on behalf of a constituent you can raise it directly with the DVLA at the address below:

Mr Oliver Morley
Chief Executive
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency
Swansea
SA6 7JL

There is also a dedicated telephone number and email address for MPs and other elected representatives, including MLAs, to contact DVLA on behalf of their constituents. Emails should be sent to dvlaministerials@dvla.gsi.gov.uk, or alternatively the telephone number is 01792 788585.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of the Environment why the decision was taken not to allow the option to display the Union Flag and the European Union Flag on new driving licences in Northern Ireland.

Mr Durkan: Driver licensing is a transferred matter under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. Under the provisions of the Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, my Department has responsibility for a broad range of matters relating to the licensing of vehicle drivers, including the form of the driving licence.

In 2012, when the UK Government announced its intention to include the Union flag on Great Britain driving licences, Department for Transport Minister Mike Penning wrote to my predecessor to advise him of this intention. Minister Penning's letter noted that driver licensing is a devolved matter but that DVLA prints our driving licences under contract. Minister Penning indicated his intention that DVLA would continue to print Northern Ireland driving licences without change to the existing design. He asked for a view on this.

Further to this correspondence, officials in my Department engaged with DVLA to ascertain whether it would be possible to provide individuals with an option to choose whether to include or exclude the flag. DVLA however indicated that this would not be possible, as the costs involved in making the system and associated changes required to offer such a choice were prohibitive. The same approach has, I note, been taken in Britain – the flag will be applied to all GB driving licences, with no ability for individuals to opt in or opt out.

Having considered the issue, a response was made to DfT, in December 2012, confirming agreement with DfT's intention to continue to print NI driving licences without any change to the existing design. Given that no change was brought forward, no further consultation occurred.

My Department heard no more of the UK Government's plans for GB driving licences until a letter from DfT Minister John Hayes to me dated 23 December 2014, indicating that the plans for GB licences would be announced over the Christmas period, and that Northern Ireland driving licences would continue to be issued without the Union flag.

The EU flag must, under Directive 2006/126/ EC (the Second European Union Directive on Driving Licences), be displayed on all driving licences issued by EU Member States.

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of the Environment why he has excluded drivers from Northern Ireland from receiving the new UK design of driving licences containing the Union Flag when renewing their licence.
(AQW 40554/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Driver licensing is a transferred matter under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. Under the provisions of the Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, my Department has responsibility for a broad range of matters relating to the licensing of vehicle drivers, including the form of the driving licence.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment how much extra, in comparison to other UK driving licences, Northern Ireland driving licences will cost to produce following the decision not to include the Union Flag.
(AQW 40588/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Northern Ireland driving licences are produced by the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) in Swansea, on behalf of the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA). The costs for producing licences, based on estimated volumes of licences issued annually, are contained within a Service Level Agreement (SLA) between DVA and DVLA. The SLA, which came into effect in June 2011 and is valid until 2016, is reviewed annually.

There is no proposal to amend the unit costs contained within the SLA arising from the GB decision to include the Union Flag on GB licences.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment why, under the proposed single tier taxi arrangements, private hire taxis are not required to use tested and sealed meters, whereas this is a requirement for all public hire taxis.
(AQW 40699/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I would refer the member to the answer I gave to AQW 40266/11-15, AQW 40267/11-15, AQW 40268/11-15, AQW 40269/11-15 and AQW 40270/11-15.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment why his Department has been unable to construct a template for approved taxi meter centres.
(AQW 40702/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I would refer the member to the answer I gave to AQW 40266/11-15, AQW 40267/11-15, AQW 40268/11-15, AQW 40269/11-15 and AQW 40270/11-15.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department will set the benchmark for taxi meters using the Measuring Instruments Directives specifications as a base line.

(AQW 40703/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I would refer the member to the answer I gave to AQW 40266/11-15, AQW 40267/11-15, AQW 40268/11-15, AQW 40269/11-15 and AQW 40270/11-15.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department will provide a list of approved meters for use in the taxi industry.

(AQW 40704/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I would refer the member to the answer I gave to AQW 40266/11-15, AQW 40267/11-15, AQW 40268/11-15, AQW 40269/11-15 and AQW 40270/11-15.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 39218/11-15, whether the processed aggregate required to be compliant was tested for compliance with the Waste and Resources Action Programme (WRAP) protocol prior to being deposited on site.

(AQW 40711/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As the material deposited was processed aggregate, and not waste, it was not subject to the Waste and Resources Action Programme (WRAP) compliance protocol prior to deposition.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide a timetable for the closure of the Minor Injury Unit at Bangor Hospital, including the length of time it is due to be closed.

(AQW 38133/11-15)

Mr Wells (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): A communication error with the Assembly Business Office has led to the delayed receipt of this question by my Private Office on 6 January 2015. The Member will be aware of my announcement on 28 November 2014 that the Bangor Minor Injuries Unit was to remain open.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide a timetable on the closure of the Bangor GP ward at Bangor Hospital, including the length of time it is due to be closed.

Mr Wells: A communication error with the Assembly Business Office has led to the delayed receipt of this question by my Private Office until 6 January 2015. The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust's contingency plan indicates that the temporary closure of the GP Ward at Bangor Community Hospital is intended to run until 31 March 2015, as one of several measures to achieve financial break-even in 2014/15. However, the Member will be aware of the ongoing Judicial Review regarding this decision. The Court's decision not to grant interim relief means that the Ward will remain closed at present. A substantive hearing is due to commence in late February.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the operational costs of Northfield House Residential Home in Donaghadee, in each of the last two years.

(AQW 38531/11-15)

Mr Wells: The South Eastern Trust have provided the operational costs of Northfield House in the last two years. The information is set out in the table below.

	2013/14 £	2012/13 £
Pay	489,540	519,845
Non-Pay	86,437	89,959
Total	575,976	609,804

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to the six public consultations entitled 'Delivering High Quality Congenital Cardiac Services', why it was decided that clinicians attending each venue would be chosen on the basis of proximity to their homes, rather than the contribution they might make; and whether this may have influenced the outcome of the consultation events.

(AQW 39141/11-15)

Mr Wells: It is not the case that clinicians have been invited to participate in the consultation meetings on this basis. The dates of the meetings were arranged primarily with a view to ensuring the availability of the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust's Consultant Paediatric Cardiologist. This Cardiologist has taken the time to attend all six events, four of which have now taken place.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what screening for disease or contamination is carried out on organs donated under the Organ Donor Scheme.

Mr Wells: NHS Blood and Transplant (NHSBT) is the organ donation organisation for the UK and is responsible for identifying and characterising deceased donors in the UK and offering organs for transplantation to surgeons in the designated transplant units, as well as matching and allocating donated organs.

Potential donors are screened for a number of infections, such as HIV, Hepatitis B and C, syphilis, human T-cell lymphotropic virus and cytomegalovirus. Furthermore, organs are routinely evaluated prior to retrieval, during retrieval and before implantation by both the retrieval team and the transplantation clinical team.

Trained Specialist Nurses in Organ Donation will review the donor's clinical notes and contact the GP or relevant health professional to obtain the medical history. In order to build an accurate background of the donor's social and medical history, the Specialist Nurse will approach the family to gather information about the potential donor, as records may not cover all lifestyle choices, travel history and other factors that may impact on whether or not a donor's organs are appropriate for transplantation, using a validated proforma to ensure that all relevant history is asked for.

The decision whether or not to accept an organ for a patient is ultimately made by the transplant surgeon, using their clinical expertise and the information collected to carefully weigh up the risks associated with an organ.

In line with NHSBT and British Transplant Society guidance, the transplant team should discuss with the potential recipient any known risks associated with the organ which could affect its function in the short and long term before obtaining consent.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what consideration was given to rurality and Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency statistics when the Western Health and Social Care Trust were asked to review their budget by his Department.

Mr Wells: The Western Health and Social Care Trust has advised that its Contingency Plan was based on those savings that could actually be delivered in the remaining months of the financial year, whilst also ensuring that the safety and integrity of services was safeguarded.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether consideration is being given to an allocation from the £8.9 bn annual allocation from the Barnett Formula to General Practice.

Mr Wells: In 2013/14, £234m was spend on General Medical Services in Northern Ireland as reported in the HSCB annual accounts and a similar amount is forecast to be spent in 2014/15.

The allocation of the funding allocated to Northern Ireland as a consequence of the Barnett Formula is a matter for the Executive to determine. Clearly, I will want to access as much funding as possible to help alleviate some of the difficult financial restraints being placed on the health service and to help meet the increasing demands on health and social care services.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what proportion of the 2015/16 health budget (i) is contractually committed; (ii) is legally committed; and (iii) remains unallocated for Ministerial discretion.

(AQW 40241/11-15)

Mr Wells: A significant proportion of the Department's revenue budget is subject to contractual/legal commitments (including salaries and wages). The latest available split of the Department's revenue expenditure is from the 2012/13 financial returns and is summarised in the table below.

Revenue Del (RDEL)	£m	% of total DHSSPS budget	Notes
Salaries and Wages	2,293	51%	Approx 2/3rds of trust expenditure is spent on salaries and wages
Demand led expenditure and utilities costs	1,467	33%	Independent Sector, drugs, utilities
Other contractual and legal commitments	549	12%	Family Health Services, Clinical Negligence

Revenue Del (RDEL)	£m	% of total DHSSPS budget	Notes

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 39524/11-15, and given that some Health and Social Care Trusts no longer held contracts with the Northern Trust for MS respite provision, how people from other Trust areas were allowed to make their personal choice if this facility was not made known to them.

(AQW 40251/11-15)

Mr Wells: I refer the member to the responses provided by the Health and Social Care Trusts at Annex A.

Annex A

Western HSC Trust

On completion of a service user and carer assessment and it has been identified that respite is required to meet that assessed need, the social worker involved will discuss a range of options available to meet this need. Those clients with Multiple Sclerosis will be informed of the respite service provided in Dalriada.

Southern HSC Trust

SHSCT reduced its contract with Dalriada over the last 10 years as the demand from service users reduced.

The Trust always had access criteria for Dalriada and it was offered to our MS service Users whose needs were most complex. Service Users and carers increasingly found the Journey to Dalriada, 90miles for some, challenging as the condition progressed and health deteriorated. Service users who availed of Dalriada Respite were fully engaged with and opted to have respite in facilities closer to where they lived or were supported through Direct Payment if they wished.

South Eastern HSC Trust

This specific information is not available as no one from this Trust has accessed Dalriada for at least 7 years

Prior to this very few people accessed the service given the distance the facility is away from the Trust area.

The Trust currently does not have a contract with Dalriada and should we wish to recommission a respite bed we would have to step down a respite bed in Thompson House Hospital to release the necessary funding.

Belfast HSC Trust

Belfast Trust has had a long standing contract with the MS Respite Centre at Dalriada and, until recent events, had a contract to provide 49 bed days per annum at a cost of £10,454.64. The Trust has reduced the number of bed days in recent years due to lack of demand for the service, despite social workers and care managers promoting the service.

A survey of MS service users undertaken by the Trust some time ago to assess the views of service users highlighted that younger people with MS want to source alternative respite provision options either through Direct Payments or other placements. A small number of service users, all over 65 years, who used the facility on a regular basis, expressed satisfaction with the service and requested ongoing use of the facility for respite. The Trust has endeavoured to meet the needs of this reducing cohort of regular users and also encourage new service users to utilise the facility.

Following a recent bereavement of one of the regular attendees and announcement of closure, one remaining regular service user was left, whose care manager is seeking alternative respite provision for them.

The Trust also has a recurrent contract totalling £103,532 with the MS Centre at Annadale to provide a range of day care services for adults with MS. All the service users attending Annadale are aware of the respite facility in Dalriada.

In line with other Trusts, the promotion of Self Directed Support, independence and choice, as outlined in Transforming Your Care as the future strategic direction for health and social care in Northern Ireland, has resulted in service users choosing to decline Trust contracted services in favour of seeking their own alternative respite options.

All Trust contracted services are monitored and promoted by Trust staff in order to meet contractual obligations and the Trust is confident that MS services users known to them have been made aware of the service and are able to make a personal choice about use of the service.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 35677/11-15, for a breakdown of the £5.67m spent in relation to Service Changes in respect of Transforming Your Care from 2012/13 to August 2014. (AQW 40290/11-15)

Mr Wells: A breakdown of the Service Change costs over the period 2012/13 - August 2014 is provided in the table below:

Analysis of TYC Service Change investment 2012/13 – August 2014	£'000	Notes:
Stroke Services	410	To secure the longer term benefits of increasing the numbers of patients admitted to a stroke unit as the ward of first admission. Includes recruitment costs.
Reablement	1,940	To recruit reablement teams, develop new single access point for clients and expand the capacity of the community and voluntary sectors
PCI/Cardiac Catheterisation Services	1,470	To expand cath lab capacity to address the growing demand and develop a regional primary PCI service model. Includes recruitment costs.
Self Directed Support	40	Initiative is for a number of posts in each of the 5 Trusts to develop and implement the Self Directed Support approach
Specialist Foster Carers	260	Initiative is for recruitment of additional foster carers and associated support staff
Telecare	60	Initiative is to increase the number of Managed Patient Days (MPD) in both the BHSCT and SEHSCT
ICT & Information Support	60	Improvements to Community Information Reporting systems
Increased Access to Renal Home Therapies	14	Additional patients availing of peritoneal dialysis as opposed to hospital based dialysis
Review of Current Mental Health Day Care	40	Review Adult Mental Health Day Care provision and recommend new service model for delivery
Respiratory Pathway Virtual Clinic	140	Initiative is to reduce outpatient appointments and unscheduled inpatient bed days for respiratory patients.
Elective Day of Surgery	440	Recruitment of staff including specialty doctors, nurses, nursing assistants, pharmacists, pharmacy technicians, porters, domestic and catering staff. To reduce GP surgical referral admissions and average length of stay for non-elective admissions
Reform of Dementia Services	440	To reform the challenging behaviour service with recruitment achieved for a number and range of posts
Sepsis Screening, Early Detection & Intervention	60	To improve outcomes for Sepsis patients
New Ambulance Response Models	60	Initiative is for temporary staff to work on new Ambulance response models and to ensure that paramedic training is in line with these new models
Early Intervention Transformation Programme	20	To benefit vulnerable children across NI
Marie Curie - Delivering Choices Programme	130	Initiative is for a Project Team consisting of Project Managers and a Coordinator to develop and implement service models for palliative care
Day Opportunities	50	To enable additional service users to avail of Day Opportunity placements
Review of Social Care Contracts	40	Review and streamlining of Domiciliary Care Procurement contracts
Total	5,674

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 37207/11-15, to detail the successful bids included in the £18m bid for pharmacy which were considered in the 2014 October Monitoring Round.
(AQW 40291/11-15)

Mr Wells: Unfortunately, none of the £18m bid for Pharmacy was met.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, considering the announcement in relation to establishing genomic medicine centres in England, whether he has considered the establishment of such a centre.
(AQW 40293/11-15)

Mr Wells: My Department is considering the possibility of establishing a regional Genomic Medicines Centre in Northern Ireland subject to available funding and business case approval.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his Department's definition of Front-line Services.
(AQW 40295/11-15)

Mr Wells: The 'front-line' in health, social care and public safety is a complex concept which comprises a closely integrated team of staff who have direct contact with patients, clients and families, together with other staff who provide a wide range of critical support activities to facilitate that direct.

I classify frontline care as the health and social care services provided directly to patients and clients.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what departmental projects will be submitted under the Change Fund.
(AQW 40296/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Department's Change Fund bids are set out in the table below:

Proposal	Description
Project ECHO NI (Extension for Community Healthcare Outcomes)	The mission of Project ECHO is to expand the capacity to provide best practice care for common and complex diseases in rural and underserved areas and to monitor outcomes.
Acute Hospital Outpatients Modernisation	The objectives of the project are to modernise outpatient service delivery models and pathways in order to e.g.:- <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Reduce waiting times for new and review appointments; ■ Reduce Hospital cancellations; ■ Reduce DNA rates; and ■ Reduce the number of face to face appointments required.
RAID (Rapid Assessment Interface Discharge)	With increasing societal levels of mental ill health, dementia and substance abuse, the RAID model provides the capacity to impact on all of these. It has been demonstrated that RAID can contribute to efficiency and cost avoidance in the context of growing pressures on health and social care budgets.
Diabetes Navigation System for Patient Self-Management	The service will reduce the occurrence of complications that diabetics experience such as ulcers and amputations
Liaison Psychiatry and Psychological Medicine Team (LPPMT)	The project is expected to deliver a reduction in the time patients spend in general hospital beds, optimising medical investigation and the more efficient use of medical and surgical facilities. This to be achieved by the reduction of inappropriate admissions to hospitals and reducing the length of time that a patient stays in a general hospital.
Supporting Medicines Optimisation	This includes a regional model for medicines optimisation in older people, progressing the SBRI initiative and development of a regional innovation hub.
Alcohol-Substance Misuse Liaison	By reducing in-patient length of stay/enabling earlier discharge, and also reducing the likelihood of future hospital admissions, this initiative provides a significant opportunity to improve the efficiency of acute hospitals. Alcohol/substance misuse 'Screening & Brief Intervention' programmes have been endorsed by the Government/NHS in England as a key initiative to improve public sector efficiency.
Communities Active Travel Programme	Active Travel is an easy way for people to build physical activity into their daily lives

Proposal	Description
Joint DHSSPS/DoJ care proceeding pilot	This project would contribute to a reduction in the number of court hearings held and the time spent on cases involved in care proceedings by a range of professionals including social workers, guardians and expert witnesses. It will also reduce time spent by the legal profession and the judiciary which will also lead to savings for the NICTS.
All Island Congenital Cardiac Service Model	This involves commissioning surgical services on the island rather than in GB. Longer term health benefits include improved waiting times, emergency transfers and patient experience.
Delivery Improvement Hub	The project aims to secure changes in waiting list management and staffing needs assessments. Longer term health benefits include improved waiting times and patient experience.
My Mobile Health	The project will create new and innovative solutions to solve the problem of transferring clinically useful information from the patient/ service user to their clinician/ practitioner to enable improved care, user empowerment and self-care.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what procedures are in place in Health and Social Care Trusts to manage an in-patient who becomes a threat to staff or other in-patients on a ward.

(AQW 40347/11-15)

Mr Wells: My Department takes the issue of staff and patient safety very seriously. Each HSC Trust operates a robust zero tolerance policy, overseen by a senior director. The policy requires the provision of a working environment where staff can undertake their duties without fear of abuse or violence from patients or visitors.

Each Trust must ensure that where staff are placed in imminent danger, immediate action is taken to minimise or remove the danger and provide timely and appropriate support, including counselling, to staff who have been victims of abuse/violence.

In-patients who become a threat to staff or other in-patients can be removed from the premises by hospital security staff or the PSNI, provided there is no medical reason not to do so. Such persons may be subject to prosecution under the Offences Against the Person Act 1861.

Perpetrators may be required to give a written undertaking as to their future behaviour, or they may be issued with a warning as to the consequences of any repetition of their unacceptable behaviour, or, in the final resort, they may be excluded for receipt of all non-emergency treatment.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, considering the implementation of the Transforming Cancer Follow Up Programme in relation to breast cancer, whether his Department has any immediate plans to open up such a process for other cancer types.

Mr Wells: The "Transforming Cancer Follow Up" project is being implemented in prostate and colorectal cancer follow up.

The Health and Social Care (HSC) Board and Public Health Agency are working with all HSC Trusts to ensure the principles are further extended to other cancer types, including Gynaecology, Dermatology, Head and Neck and Haematology, as well as to specialties other than cancer which involves the need for outpatient follow up.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the sick absence amongst staff in the Health Service as a result of mental health in the last three years.

Mr Wells: The information requested has been supplied by the HSC Organisations, and is presented in the tables below. It has not been possible for organisations to provide a figure for the 2013/14 year yet, so the preceding three years are included. Not every organisation was able to provide the number of working days lost; instead, the number of calendar days lost is shown for these cases. Please note that this prevents the summation of all organisations and also absence rates calculated on the basis of calendar days lost should not be directly compared with those calculated on the basis of working days lost. Trusts are shown separately in the tables below, and Regional Services relates to the separate organisations of NI Ambulance Service, HSC Board, Business Services Organisation, Public Health Agency, Patient Client Council, NI Blood Transfusion Service, NI Guardian Ad Litem Agency, NI Social Care Council, NI Practice & Education Council and the Regulation Quality Improvement Authority.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, considering the recent positive reports regarding a scheme whereby GPs offer health checks to patients with a learning disability in England, whether he has considered instigating such a scheme.

Mr Wells: Annual health checks for adult patients with severe learning difficulties are currently being provided by GPs in Northern Ireland as a primary medical care enhanced service. This service was initially introduced in 2008 as a Directed Enhanced Service; since 2010 it has been commissioned as a Departmental Clinical Priority.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the independent members of the Northern Commissioning Group; and (ii) the claims, per member, for locum cover less of earnings, broken down by (a) loss of earnings; and (b) travel and subsistence, in each year of the current term.

Mr Wells: As at January 2015, there are 2 General Medical Practitioners, 1 Community Pharmacy Member and 1 Dentist who are independent contractor members of the Northern Local Commissioning Group. The interim Chair of the Northern Local Commissioning Group is an independent contractor who took up this post in June 2013. In accordance with the HSCB recruitment process, appointments to 2 vacant General Medical Practitioner posts are currently being considered. Full details of membership of the Northern LCG are available on the HSCB website.

The total amount paid to independent members of LCGs for locum cover and for travel and subsistence is in each of the last four years is set out in the table below.

Year	Total Locum Cover and Travel Expense claims
2011/2012	£7756.00
2012/2013	£6648.00
2013/2014	£6925.00
2014/2015	£2908.50 (received end of December)

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of applications for adoption from same-sex couples; and (ii) the number of people adopted by same-sex couples, since December 2013.

(AQW 40378/11-15)

Mr Wells: The information requested is not routinely collected and has therefore been provided for the period 27 June 2013 (the date on which the judgement relating to existing adoption law and guidance was handed down by the Court of Appeal) to 31 December 2014. The Health and Social Care Trusts and voluntary adoption agencies in Northern Ireland have reported that, during that period, a total of 13 applications for adoption from same-sex couples have been received.

Of the applications received by HSC Trusts and voluntary adoption agencies to date, none have led to adoption orders being granted by a Northern Ireland court.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) what ST3-level resident cover in obstetrics, paediatrics and anaesthetics entails; (ii) the minimum medical staffing standard of at least ST3-level resident cover in obstetrics, paediatrics and anaesthetics in the consultant obstetric unit at South West Acute Hospital; (iii) the current staffing standard of ST3-level resident cover in this unit; and (iv) the efforts being made to increase the current staffing standard.

(AQW 40395/11-15)

Mr Wells: Staffing matters are the responsibility of individual Health and Social Care Trusts and, as such, the Western Health and Social Care Trust has provided the following response:

- i ST3 level resident cover requires that a member of medical staff at ST3 level or above must be on-site to provide resident on call cover for obstetrics, paediatrics and anaesthetics. ST3 level means that the individuals have completed their medical degree, 2 years foundation training (or equivalent) and at least two years specialist training in the relevant specialty.
- ii. Anaesthetics currently meets the standard of at least ST3 level cover.
Within Obstetrics and Paediatrics to provide ST3 level resident on call cover, a minimum of 8 staff is required for each specialty.
- iii. Currently within Obstetrics, there are 7 staff employed at ST3 level/equivalent or above who are on the resident on call rota. There is one vacant post which has been advertised on a number of occasions. Within Paediatrics, there are currently 2 members of staff at ST3 level or higher who are on the resident on call rota.

- iv. There has been ongoing discussion and communications between the Trust, Health and Social Care Board and Public Health Agency to work towards a long term solution to sustain consultant led services in South West Acute Hospital. The Trust is currently awaiting a response to its most recent submission to the Health and Social Care Board.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 38677/11-15, for an update on the provision of expertise in pain management at the South West Acute Hospital.

Mr Wells: The position set out in my answer to AQW 38677/11-15 has not changed.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 39123/11-15, whether he has considered the merits of an all-island approach to the delivery of robotic- assisted radical prostatectomy operations.
(AQW 40397/11-15)

Mr Wells: Whilst prostate cancer affects about 1000 men in Northern Ireland each year only around 50 may require radical prostatectomy. Currently therefore Northern Ireland does not have sufficient demand to meet nationally recommended activity for this procedure. Trusts currently refer men who need radical prostatectomy to a GB centre that has the facility to undertake robot assisted surgery and meets the recommended volume of activity. My Department has not considered whether the service could be provided on an all-island approach.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, following the decision to endorse the recommendations put forward in Dr. Mayers International Working Group report, to what extent have parents, charities and voluntary organisations been involved in the on-going inter-departmental discussions concerning the transfer of paediatric cardiac surgery to Dublin.

Mr Wells: Parents, charities and voluntary organisations are not involved in inter-departmental discussions about the proposed transfer of paediatric cardiac surgery to Dublin, as these discussions would be conducted between officials from my Department and the Department of Health in the Republic of Ireland. Patients, their families and the various organisations which represent them have, however, been actively involved in the seven public consultation meetings held by my Department around Northern Ireland. These meetings, as well as the written responses to the consultation, provide opportunities for their views, based on their first hand experiences, to be relayed directly to those officials and to help shape how both the surgical element and the wider congenital cardiac services will be delivered in future.

The International Working Group's recommendations include the establishment of a Family Advisory Group as "an essential feature of an all Island approach as it will give an on-going voice to patients and families with congenital heart disease and will serve to provide early warning of problems with how the system is functioning." It also recommends patient representation from Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland on a governance committee to oversee how the model would operate. The consultation process to date has echoed the importance of these recommendations, and I would wish to ensure that patients and their families have a continuing role to play in such a model through these means.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in light of the concerns over the mental health of students in other parts of the UK, what action his Department is taking to ensure that students receive the help and support they require.
(AQW 40407/11-15)

Mr Wells: There are currently a number of activities across DHSSPS, the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) and the Public Health Agency (PHA) aimed at promoting the mental health and wellbeing of students, including:

- the development of a new suicide prevention strategy, which will include the early intervention and promotion of mental health for students;
- the PHA's participation in the UK Healthy Universities Network which aims to offer a facilitative environment for the development of a whole university approach to health and wellbeing. Good practice from the network is shared with the universities in Northern Ireland;
- the distribution by the PHA of the 'Mind your Head' Student Book at Fresher's week in Northern Ireland universities;
- the "Lifeline" helpline, which is publicised in universities and further education colleges and is available 24/7 for any student in crisis;
- the "i-Matter" programme, led by the Department of Education and supported by my Department and other key stakeholders, which focuses on positive prevention by building coping skills in children and young people in schools, and which complements the personal development strand of the curriculum;
- the PHA's "Roots of Empathy" classroom programme which aims to foster the development of emotional resilience among school children; and
- the PHA / Irish Football Association (IFA) schools based programme, which involves the IFA going into schools to discuss mental health promotion, suicide prevention, drugs and alcohol, and healthy eating.

Students also have the same access to mental health services as the rest of the population. Mental health services are tailored to meet each individual's particular needs and are provided through a stepped care model in a variety of settings, depending on the nature and seriousness of the condition. Services range from support through GPs, to more specialist support from community mental health teams, to inpatient care. Services are also available through commissioned community and voluntary sector organisations.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in light of the recent reports of a record number of people living with cancer in Northern Ireland, for his assessment of the need for a cancer centre of excellence. (AQW 40408/11-15)

Mr Wells: The comprehensive programme for the improvement of cancer services in Northern Ireland has been recognised internationally and nationally for its excellence. The Northern Ireland Cancer Centre at the Belfast City Hospital provides specialist services for people with cancer and does so consistent with best practice and best available evidence. The Centre works in conjunction with the cancer units and acts as a regional centre of excellence in that respect. Where appropriate, patients with very rare or complex tumours who require highly specialised care may be referred to a GB centre for assessment and/or treatment.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many of the total number of Emergency Department attendances between 22 of December 2014 and 5 of January 2015 had to wait longer than 4 hours at (i) Antrim Hospital; and (ii) Causeway Hospital. (AQW 40426/11-15)

Mr Wells: Information provided by the Northern HSC Trust on the number of attendances at Antrim Area and Causeway emergency care departments between 22nd December 2014 and 5th January 2015 is detailed in the table below, including the number whose care in the EDs took longer than 4 hours to complete.

Emergency Department	Number whose care exceeded 4 hours	Total Number of Attendances
Antrim Area	1,267	3,056
Causeway	496	1,620

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his plans for the development of mental health services. (AQW 40445/11-15)

Mr Wells: Plans for the development of Mental Health Services in Northern Ireland are set out in the Mental Health section of the Bamford Action Plan, the HSC Board Commissioning Plan and the Department's Mental Health and Wellbeing Service Framework.

In addition, the following strategies detail plans for specific Mental Health issues and conditions:

- Protect Life-Suicide Prevention Strategy;
- Psychological Therapy Strategy;
- Personality Disorder Strategy;
- New Strategic Direction on Drugs and Alcohol; and
- Regional Mental Health Care Pathway-Promoting Recovery Approaches.

These policies and strategies aim to improve the mental health of people in Northern Ireland; reduce the impact of the condition on people with mental health problems; and reduce the stigma associated with mental health conditions.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the existing facilities available for mental health in (i) Belfast; and (ii) the rest of Northern Ireland. (AQW 40446/11-15)

Mr Wells: Health and Social Care Trusts provide a wide range of mental health services in a wide variety of settings and facilities, according to the individual's particular needs, including:

- Primary Care Talking Therapies Teams – accessed through GP;
- Community Mental Health Services – this involves care provided by one or more professionals such as social workers, psychiatrists, psychologists etc;
- Acute Mental Health Services – these services provide support at a time of crisis and can provide intensive home support and/or admission to hospital; and

- specific services - these usually involve receiving care from a specialist team such as Alcohol/Drug Addiction, Eating Disorders, Psychological Therapies or Trauma, Personality and Forensic Services.

The Belfast Trust also provides regional mental health facilities such as the Medium Secure Unit and the Child and Adolescent inpatient service.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what community funding exists to develop mental health projects.

(AQW 40447/11-15)

Mr Wells: The 2013/2014 recurrent investment in mental health community services was £138m. This recurrent investment is available in 2014/2015 subject to any efficiency savings or new investments yet to be agreed.

This recurrent investment is used to provide community services such as:

- multi-disciplinary teams of psychiatrists, community psychiatric nurses, social workers, occupational therapists etc.;
- day services - centres and treatment units;
- residential homes and supported living schemes;
- psychology services, for example, cognitive behaviour therapy, counselling etc.;
- domiciliary care; and
- grants to voluntary providers.

All new developments in 2015/2016 are dependent on the 2015/16 financial settlement and on the delivery of cash releasing schemes across Trusts.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 38493/11-15, when he will make public the options paper to ensure sustainable medical staffing of the obstetric and paediatric units at the South West Acute Hospital and the follow up paper of July 2014.

(AQW 40460/11-15)

Mr Wells: I understand that the Options Paper has been prepared by the Western Health and Social Care Trust and in the first instance it would be for the Trust to decide on making public this paper. The Health and Social Care Board is currently in ongoing discussion with the Western Trust regarding the papers.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 40215/11-15, other than community hospitals, whether there are any Northern Health and Social Care Trust facilities where a non-admission policy is currently in place.

Mr Wells: The Northern Trust currently has no non-admission policies anywhere in the Trust with the exception of the Statutory Residential Homes which continue to have a non-admissions policy for permanent admissions in place during the current review process by the Health and Social Care Board.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the type of admissions to Pinewood Home, Ballymena over the last 18 months.

Mr Wells: The Northern HSC Trust has advised me that admissions to Pinewood residential home in the last 18 months have been for intermediate care, respite and temporary placement.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of domiciliary care provision in relation to (i) the number of clients; (ii) number of client visits; (iii) contact hours; and (iv) the cost of this service annually, broken down by (a) Health and Social Care Trust; and (b) care provider in the last three years.

Mr Wells: (i), (ii) & (iii) Information is not available in the format requested.

(iv) Information on the annual cost of domiciliary care during each financial year is available and detailed in the table 3 below:

Table 3: Domiciliary Care Spend, by Sector and HSC Trust

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of hubs, and associated projects, in East Londonderry, as part of the Delivering Social Change Early Intervention Transformation Programme.
(AQW 40493/11-15)

Mr Wells: Family Support Hubs have not been developed under the Early Intervention Transformation Programme (EITP). They are supported under a separate Delivering Social Change Signature Programme. While not developed under the EITP they will be integral to it. In addition, under Workstream Two of the EITP, an Early Intervention Service aligned to Family Support Hubs will be established, which will provide one-to-one evidence-based support through a consistent regional model. It is important to note that Family Support Hubs are not organised on the basis of Parliamentary constituencies. Constituents within East Londonderry are served by four Family Support Hubs as follows:

- The Waterside Family Support Hub co-ordinated at the Ebrington Centre covers the Claudy Ward of the East Londonderry constituency;
- The Strabane Family Support Hub based at the Strabane Family Centre covers the Banagher Ward;
- The Dry Arch Family Support Hub, based in Dungiven, covers Greysteel, Ballykelly, Glack, Dungiven, Magilligan, Roeside, Greystone, Aghanloo, Forest, Upper Glenshane, Feeny, the Highlands, Enagh, Coolesan and Rathbrady; and
- The Coleraine, Ballymoney and Moyle Family Support Hub, based in Antrim, serves the Wards of Castlerock, Strand, Portstewart, Atlantic, Hopefield, Royal Portrush, Dundooan, Dunluce, Agivey, Kilrea, Garvagh, Ringsend, Macosquin, University, Ballysally, Cross Glebe, Central, Mountsandel, Knocklynn, The Cuts, Churchland, and Waterside.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any grants or financial support available to cancer patients to heat and adapt their homes.
(AQW 40503/11-15)

Mr Wells: There are no specific benefits for cancer patients, however there are a range of benefits available to patients and members of the public who experience financial difficulty through illness or disability; further information on these benefits is available from the NI Social Security Agency at the following link www.dsdni.gov.uk

The Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) has a grants scheme to help improve the heating systems and insulation for people who are disabled, on a low income, or over 60. Cancer patients may be eligible for this assistance if they meet the criteria and information is available from the NIHE at www.nihe.gov.uk.

The Northern Ireland Cancer Network (NICaN) website at www.cancerni.net contains a section which explains the benefits that are available to cancer patients and how they can get financial help.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the cost of the services inquiry that was to be launched following a judgement against his Department in favour of Community Pharmacy NI.

Mr Wells: My Department is currently working diligently to conclude the procurement process so that a suitable tenderer to complete the Cost of Service Investigation can be appointed at the earliest opportunity. It is anticipated that the information gathering phase of the exercise will commence in January 2015 and the exercise will take approximately five months to complete.

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many non-urgent operations of each type were cancelled, broken down by hospital, as a result of pressures affecting Emergency Departments.

Mr Wells: The number of 1 non-urgent operations postponed by each HSC Trust, between 1st and 9th January 2014, is provided in the table below.

HSC Trust	No. of Elective Patients Cancelled

It should be noted that to protect patient confidentiality, we are unable to provide a breakdown of postponements by procedure and hospital.

¹For the purpose of answering this question, it is assumed that 'non-urgent operations' means elective procedures.

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he was first informed, and how he was informed, that each Health and Social Care Trust had cancelled non-urgent operations as a result of pressures affecting Emergency Departments.

(AQW 40512/11-15)

Mr Wells: I have been kept fully informed of the developing situation in our Emergency Departments over the Christmas holiday period and into the early weeks of January.

A revised regional unscheduled care escalation plan was issued to Health and Social Care Trusts in November 2014. Each Trust subsequently developed its own escalation plan, which were tested prior to Christmas, taking a stepped approach to escalation during times of increasing demands. These plans were particularly important in responding to the pressures over the Christmas period.

Regrettably, this has meant the postponement of some non-urgent elective operations. Trusts have advised the Health and Social Care Board that they will be doing all they can to ensure that any procedures that have been postponed are rescheduled as soon as possible and those affected kept informed.

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average waiting time of each type of non-urgent surgery, in each of the last four years.

Mr Wells: Information in this answer relates to inpatient waiting times for non-urgent surgery, in each of the last four years in Northern Ireland. Inpatient waiting times commence on the date a decision is taken to admit a patient for surgery.

The average waiting time for inpatient admission for non-urgent surgery, by specialty, at the 30th September, in each of the last four years is shown in the table overleaf.

- No patients waiting during that particular quarter

Figures for non-urgent surgery are based on patients who have been given an urgency description of routine, non-urgent or other. Those with a blank urgency description have been counted as routine. There were 48 patients in September 2013 and 3 patients in September 2014 who had a blank urgency description code.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on plans to bring forward legislation banning smoking in private vehicles carrying children.

Mr Wells: Earlier plans to consult on options around banning smoking in private vehicles carrying children were put on hold as a result of a substantial programme of tobacco control which included progression of the Tobacco Retailers Act 2014 through the Assembly and proposals to prohibit the sale of e-cigarettes to persons under the age of eighteen.

There may now be an opportunity to include regulation-making powers to restrict smoking in private vehicles carrying children in the draft Health (Miscellaneous Provisions) Bill which is due to be introduced to the Assembly in coming months. I am considering this option at present.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will carry out an investigation into the reasons why East Antrim continues to have the highest rates of prostate cancer.

Mr Wells: I refer to the information previously provided to AQW 28422/11-15 which established at that time that the incidence of prostate cancer in East Antrim was within the range attributable to natural variation and did not meet the criteria to be considered a cancer cluster.

Updated data provided by the Northern Ireland Cancer Registry confirms no change in this position. In the East Antrim assembly area, the incidence of prostate cancer is the third highest in Northern Ireland when a rate per 100,000 is applied; the average number of cases for the region dropped from 138.3 to 134.3 per 100,000 from the period 2007-2011 to 2008-2012.

Incidence rates are monitored as more up to date data becomes available to highlight potential areas for investigation.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he can provide an assurance that upon the completion of the new Ballymena Health and Care Centre, patients attending GPs located in the new centre will continue to avail of free car parking.

(AQW 40538/11-15)

Mr Wells: The policy on car parking provision and management in the Health and Social Care (HSC) sector for Northern Ireland makes clear that decisions relating to specific HSC site car parking, including hospitals, rest with each Health and Social Care Trust.

However I can advise that the NHSCT has confirmed there are no current plans to introduce charges at the site of the new Ballymena Health and Social Care Centre and before any such decision could be made the Northern Health and Social Care Trust would clearly have to engage in a full consultation process.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to support or enhance the services provided by community pharmacists to alleviate the current pressures on Emergency Departments or GPs.

Mr Wells: Community pharmacies already help to alleviate pressures on Emergency Departments or GPs through the provision of commissioned services including the Minor Ailments Service, Manage Your Medicines Scheme and Medicines Use Reviews.

In the coming weeks I will be launching the implementation plan for the 'Making it Better through Pharmacy in the Community Strategy' which will set out the key actions needed over the next five years for pharmacy to help deliver improved health outcomes for patients.

Future service developments relating to alleviating pressures on acute HSC services will be considered during the implementation phase of the 'Making it Better through Pharmacy in the Community Strategy'.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will halt plans to reduce respite care services at The Cottages in Derry.

(AQW 40544/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Western HSC Trust is continuing to keep me and my officials updated regarding its plans to remodel respite provision across its catchment area. In addition, I hope to visit the Cottages in near future.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the progress on the College of Emergency Medicine recommendations on Emergency Departments.

(AQW 40546/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Unscheduled Care Task Group, chaired by the Chief Medical Officer and Chief Nursing Officer, continues to work closely with the College of Emergency Medicine (CEM) in taking forward the findings and recommendations of their report. Considerable progress has been made to date in addressing a number of the recommendations across the HSC, for example in expanding direct access to specialty wards, the development of a directory of services for primary care and particularly in the development of robust escalation procedures to address periods of peak demand. The College is represented on the workstreams of the Task Group.

On 3 December I met with local representatives of the college in which I reiterated my Department's commitment to driving forward improvements in urgent and emergency care. The recommendations of the CEM report are an important part of that process.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to introduce cervical cancer screening on request for people aged 25 and under.

Mr Wells: In January 2011, the age to start cervical screening in Northern Ireland was increased to 25. This policy is in line with recommendations made by the UK National Screening Committee following consideration of the best available scientific evidence. This is also the advice of the International Agency for Research on Cancer, part of the World Health Organisation, and is the policy adopted by the majority of EU member states.

In population screening programmes, benefits have to outweigh any potential harms and it is important to get this balance right.

Cervical cancer is rare in young women. Current evidence indicates that screening is not effective in women under the age of 25 because those who develop cervical cancer were as likely to be screened as unscreened.

Cervical abnormalities are common in women under the age of 25. This means screening would pick up a large number of abnormalities that are transient and that would never progress to cancer. However, detection of such abnormalities can cause unnecessary anxiety and lead to further investigations and in many cases to treatment that is not needed. Treating cervical abnormalities, particularly in young women, can also lead to premature births in subsequent pregnancies.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the policies developed or reviewed under the Directorate of Social Care and Children and Transforming Your Care of the Health and Social Care Board since its establishment; and (ii) how many of these have been subject to public consultation.

Mr Wells: As lead commissioner of health and social care services in Northern Ireland, the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) is not responsible for the development or review of policy. However, where the HSCB leads on the development of new services or undertakes significant service change, it will consult with a wide range of stakeholders, in line with its obligations under the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (Northern Ireland) 2009 and its consultation scheme.

The Board has advised that, within the Directorates of Social Care and Children and Transforming Your Care, the following have been developed and subject to public consultation since 2010.

- 2010 Delivery of Adult Mental Health Services
- 2011 Community Development Strategy
- 2011 Northern Ireland Children and Young People's Plan 2011-2014
- 2012 CYPSP - Regional Sub-Group Action Plans
- 2012 Improving Outcomes for children, young people and their families
- 2012-2013 Transforming Your Care Vision to Action
- 2013 Black and Minority Ethnic Children and Young People's Action Plan
- 2013 CYPSP Looked After Children -Youth Homelessness 16 plus
- 2013 Northern Ireland Adult Safeguarding Partnership Strategic Plan 2013-2018
- 2013-14 Tier 4 Addiction Services
- 2013-14 Day Opportunities for Adults with a Learning Disability
- 2013-14 Making Choices – Meeting the current and future accommodation needs of older people (Statutory Residential Homes)
- 2014-15 Social Work Research Strategy (current)

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of cases of (i) cervical cancer; (ii) oropharyngeal cancer; (iii) penile cancer; (iv) anal cancer; (v) vaginal cancer; (vi) vulval cancer; (vii) genital warts; and (viii) recurrent respiratory papillomatosis (RRP) in (a) men; and (b) women for the most recent year for which data is available.

(AQW 40589/11-15)

Mr Wells: The table below shows the number of new cases (incidences) of (i) cervical cancer; (ii) oropharyngeal cancer; (iii) penile cancer; (iv) anal cancer; (v) vaginal cancer; (vi) vulval cancer; diagnosed in Northern Ireland in 2012 by gender.

 - 2 includes the lip, tongue, mouth, oropharynx, piriform sinus, hypopharynx and other and ill-defined sites of the lip, oral cavity and pharynx.
- (vii) The number of new episodes of anogenital warts recorded for 2013 in Northern Ireland is detailed in the table below:

	Number of new episodes of anogenital warts
Male	1,173
Female	816
Total	1,989

Source: Public Health Agency

- (viii) Information on the number of cases of recurrent respiratory papillomatosis (RRP) is not available.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the increase in patients admitted to the Ulster Hospital during Christmas 2014 compared to 2013.

Mr Wells: Information on the number of admissions to the Ulster Hospital during the Christmas period in 2013 and 2014 is detailed below.

Time period	Admissions
Christmas 2013	2,542

Source: Hospital Inpatient System

Figures therefore indicate that there was a decrease of 78 admissions during Christmas 2014 compared with Christmas 2013.

Notes

¹ Data for Christmas 2014 are provisional and, as such, are subject to change.

The Christmas period has been defined as running from 22nd December to 4th January inclusive.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the attendances at Emergency Departments at the Ulster Hospital in (i) November; and (ii) December (a) 2013; and (b) 2014.

(AQW 40602/11-15)

Mr Wells: Information on new and unplanned attendances at emergency care departments is released on a monthly basis, with information for November and December 2013 and 2014 available to view or download from:

<http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/statistics/hospital/waitingtimes/waitingtimes-emergency.htm>

Please note that information for October, November and December 2014 are provisional and may be subject to change when validated information for the quarter ending December 2014 is published on Thursday 29th January 2015.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much has been invested in the Dementia Strategy in 2013/14.

Mr Wells: In 2013/2014 the HSC Board invested £1m recurrently across HSC Trusts to support implementation of recommendations in the Dementia Strategy. This funding has been used to develop and enhance memory services, and to increase professional staffing levels and services.

Additional investments have come from Atlantic Philanthropies, investing £300k in a 3 year period from 2014-2017 in the NI Hospice to support end of life care for people with dementia, and a joint investment with PHA of £194k as part of a £2m programme of research in dementia care.

DHSSPS, along with Atlantic Philanthropies has invested £400k over 3years (2011/14) in the Dementia Services Development Centre for the provision of training courses, advice on building design, library facilities and learning opportunities.

There have also been investments by Local Commissioning Groups in 2013/14 in older people's and mental health demography programmes that will have benefited people with dementia, including over £250k by the Western LCG and over £500k by the Northern LCG.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the actions taken forward as a result of the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority Review of Fostering.

Mr Wells: The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority Review of Fostering made 46 recommendations. Of the 7 recommendations directed to the Department, one was completed in March 2014 through an amendment to Kinship Care Standards. The remaining 6 are linked to the development of Fostering Service Standards. Work has commenced on the development of these standards and the membership of a stakeholder group is currently being confirmed. Further engagement is planned throughout the year to inform drafting of the standards and the draft standards will be subject to public consultation.

The Health & Social Care Board and Trusts were charged with the delivery of 39 recommendations. Sixteen of these have been achieved in full. Adherence to one recommendation is dependent on the development of Fostering Service Standards by the Department. A number of recommendations have been achieved in part. Of those remaining, work is on-going to develop regionally consistent approaches and systems in place of Trust-specific approaches.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the existing facilities available for mental health in (i) North Down; and (ii) the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 40615/11-15)

Mr Wells:

- (i) Mental health (MH) facilities available in North Down are as follows:
- Ulster Hospital – Mental Health inpatient admission wards, Mental Health at Night Service.
 - Ards Hospital – Community Addiction Team (Loch House), Mental Health Assessment Centre, Day Hospital, Home Treatment Team and Community MH Team.
 - Community Mental Health Teams at Comber Health Centre, Donaghadee Health Centre and Bangor Health Centre.
- (ii) Mental health facilities available in South Eastern HSC Trust include those listed at (i) as well as the following:
- Downshire Hospital - Psychiatric Inpatient Unit (Ward 27), Addictions Ward and Community Addiction Team (Shimna House), Mental Health Assessment Centre, Day Hospital and Home Treatment Team (Finneston House).
 - Downe Hospital – Mental Health inpatient admission wards, Community Mental Health Team.
 - Lagan Valley Hospital – Mental Health inpatient admission wards, Mental Health Assessment Centre, Day Hospital and Home Treatment Team.
 - TSL House, Lisburn - Community Addiction Team.
 - Slievegrane – Mental Health Rehabilitation Unit, Ardglass Road, Downpatrick.
 - INCH Homes and Stream Street Hostel – accommodation in Downpatrick for former Downshire patients.
 - 53 Ardglass Road – Supported Living unit for Mental Health patients discharged from Downshire Hospital.
 - Ballymacoss Hostel – Hostel for Mental Health patients in the Lisburn area.
 - Community Mental Health Teams at the following health centres: Newcastle, Ballynahinch, Crossgar, Hillsborough, Dunmurry, Lisburn, Stewartstown Road and Saintfield.
 - Conditions Management Programme at Moss Road, Ballygowan.
 - Derriaghy Day Care Centre.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Health and Social Care campus for Derry.

(AQW 40619/11-15)

Mr Wells: You are aware the Health and Social Care Cityside scheme in Londonderry is included within the Health and Social Care Board's Strategic Implementation Plan for future investment in primary care infrastructure.

The Plan remains under consideration alongside other capital investment priorities, and subject to the outcome of future budget exercises and confirmation of value for money and affordability.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the construction of the Supportive Living Units at the Rathmoyle Day Care site in Ballycastle will commence.

(AQW 40630/11-15)

Mr Wells: I am advised by the Northern Health and Social Care Trust that its aim is for construction to commence this autumn. However, this is dependent on technical assessments being carried out, which can only take place when the existing building is vacated and sealed, and on a number of other factors, including planning permission and disposal of the site.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of whether the Fire Service is a 'frontline service'.

Mr Wells: NIFRS would normally fall under the description of a "frontline service." However for the purposes of the draft Budget for 2015/16, endorsed by the NI Executive, the protection from reductions for frontline services relates solely to the Health and Social Care elements of the DHSSPS budget. The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS), similar to other frontline services such as the PSNI, is not afforded the same protection.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 39935/11-15, in regards to recruitment that was carried out on 5 October 2012, how long the reserve list remained open.

Mr Wells: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service has advised that the waiting list for the 5 October 2012 Paramedic recruitment exercise was active from 30 October 2012 to 31 May 2014.

The length of the contracts for the 8 paramedics appointed temporarily between November and December 2011 are set out in the table below:

Recruitment Date	Applicant	Contract accepted
04/11/2011	Applicant A	Fixed Term Contract 18 months: 03/01/12 – 02/07/13
	Applicant B	Fixed Term Contract 18 months: 03/01/12 – 02/07/13
	Applicant C	Refused offer
16/12/2011	Applicant D	1 year temporary contract: 01/06/12 – 31/05/13
	Applicant E	Bank Contract
	Applicant F	1 year temporary contract: 03/07/13 – 02/07/14
	Applicant G	Bank Contract from 26/03/12 – 31/06/12 1 year temporary contract: 01/07/12 – 30/06/13
	Applicant H	1 year temporary contract: 03/07/13 – 02/07/14

The recruitment which commenced on 5 October 2012 was for permanent, temporary & bank positions and was instigated to allow recent cohorts of Paramedics in training who had graduated, to apply for Paramedic positions within the Trust.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 39935/11-15, in relation to the 8 paramedics appointed temporarily between November and December 2011, to detail (i) the length of contracts; and (ii) why the process opened so soon after 5 October 2012.

Mr Wells: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service has advised that the waiting list for the 5 October 2012 Paramedic recruitment exercise was active from 30 October 2012 to 31 May 2014.

The length of the contracts for the 8 paramedics appointed temporarily between November and December 2011 are set out in the table below:

Recruitment Date	Applicant	Contract accepted
04/11/2011	Applicant A	Fixed Term Contract 18 months: 03/01/12 – 02/07/13

The recruitment which commenced on 5 October 2012 was for permanent, temporary & bank positions and was instigated to allow recent cohorts of Paramedics in training who had graduated, to apply for Paramedic positions within the Trust.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 39997/11-15, to detail specific public awareness campaigns by his Department to ensure that older people who fit the criteria of carer are identified.

Mr Wells: As I have previously advised, all Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts undertake a high level engagement process across all Programmes of Care (POC) to identify as many 'hidden' carers as possible. As part of this engagement process, HSC Trusts support and promote a range of public awareness campaigns, including the Carers Trust 'Mind the Gap' project, which specifically targets older carers. I refer you to my answer to AQW 39997/11-15, for detail on other ongoing awareness campaigns by individual HSC Trust.

HSC Trust Carer Co-ordinators have been in post since 2008 and drive the policy on support for carers of all ages. Carer Co-ordinators act as the main point of contact for those identified carers availing or looking to avail of the assessment process.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether a key point of contact exists within each Health and Social Care Trust to encourage and assist older carers with the carers assessment, review and reassessment.

(AQW 40655/11-15)

Mr Wells: As I have previously advised, all Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts undertake a high level engagement process across all Programmes of Care (POC) to identify as many 'hidden' carers as possible. As part of this engagement process, HSC Trusts support and promote a range of public awareness campaigns, including the Carers Trust 'Mind the Gap' project, which specifically targets older carers. Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department ensures that services and support identified in carers assessments for older carers are implemented.

(AQW 40656/11-15)

Mr Wells: All HSC Trusts use the Northern Ireland Single Assessment Tool (NISAT) Carers Support and Needs Assessment to assess the ability of carers to carry on caring. The aim of the assessment is to identify whether the impact of caring on the carer is putting their caring role at risk in the future, and to determine what supports could be put in place to support and sustain the carer in their caring role.

Following the assessment, support services can be offered in line with existing Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust priorities. However, it is important to recognise that a carers' assessment is also about a therapeutic engagement and a recognition of the carer's circumstances and the importance of their role – not only about facilitating the provision of practical supports

The NISAT Carers' Assessment component collects a record of unmet need experienced by carers. Trusts are required to log this information and report to the HSC Board in order to inform the commissioning and future planning of services. It is important that the needs of individual carers are properly understood and that HSC Board and Trusts use this information for service planning to support as many carers as possible.

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the total spend on translators to facilitate non-English speaking patients, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, in the last three years.

(AQW 40659/11-15)

Mr Wells: Expenditure by each Health & Social Care Trust on translation and interpreting services in each of the last three years is set out in the table below:

	2013/14 £	2012/13 £	2011/12 £
Belfast Health & Social Care Trust	755,307	717,799	536,462
Northern Health & Social Care Trust	435,605	364,641	309,832
South Eastern Health & Social Care Trust	158,931	119,151	115,391
Southern Health & Social Care Trust	1,309,514	1,358,177	924,136
Western Health & Social Care Trust	246,952	216,809	220,052

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of children on the child protection register in each year since 2011.

(AQW 40663/11-15)

Mr Wells: The number of children on the child protection register is published annually in 'Children's Social Care Statistics for Northern Ireland'. Quarterly figures on the number of children on the child protection register are also available in 'Quarterly Child Protection Statistics for Northern Ireland'. These publications can be found on the Department's website at the following link: <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/statistics/socialcare/child-protection-register.htm>

The table below contains the number of children on the child protection register at 31 March from 2011 to 2014.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what support is provided for sufferers of Huntington's Disease by the Southern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 40680/11-15)

Mr Wells: Those with Huntington's Disease can access the Southern Health and Social Care Trust's neurological service which is staffed by two Consultants and one Registrar. In addition, the Trust's physical disability teams have ongoing contact with the Huntington's Nurse Specialist from the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust who is regularly involved in clients' reviews and will carry out home visits when required.

Furthermore, if the client's treatment involves a psychiatric component, they can be referred through triage to the Trust's Support and Recovery teams. They would also have access to the Consultant and to the Community Mental Health service. Additionally, as appropriate, they can access the Home Treatment and Crisis Response team, domiciliary care, and residential care.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the reasons for the lack of MRI Scanning equipment in The Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children; and (ii) his plans for installing the equipment.

Mr Wells: The business case for a dedicated MRI scanner in the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children (RBHSC) was agreed in November 2012 in response to rising waiting times. It was anticipated then that the scanner would be operational in 2014. However, surveys have since identified the need for additional works including the removal of asbestos as well as complex site service alterations. I can now confirm that the scanner, which due to its complexities is built to order, is to be delivered to the RBHSC in Spring 2015 and commissioned for use shortly after that.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the dialogue between the expert panel established to oversee the Transforming Your Care review and the Health and Social Care Board staff who conducted the review.

Mr Wells: The then Minister for Health, Edwin Poots MLA, commissioned a review of health and social care provision in Northern Ireland in June 2011. Whilst the review was not to be fully independent, he wanted to have a strong independent overview to the process to provide challenge to any proposals. A Review Panel, comprising five external advisors, was therefore appointed to support this process.

The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) have reported that dialogue between the Review Panel and HSCB staff was on-going and regular throughout the review and included:

- A range of stakeholder engagements, including meetings with Trust, councils and the TUS Partnership Forum;
- Public meetings;
- Clinical Workshops;
- Panel meetings;
- Report planning meetings;
- Literature reviews, and review of evidence and documents;
- Review and challenge of report drafts; and
- Meetings with the Minister.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people over the age of 65 years who receive publicly funded care in their own homes.

(AQW 40782/11-15)

Mr Wells: The information requested is not currently available. However, information on clients receiving an intensive domiciliary care service is available.

During a survey week in 2013 6,664 clients aged 65 and over were receiving an intensive domiciliary care service.

Source: Domiciliary Care Services for Adults in Northern Ireland (2013) <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/statistics/socialcare/domiciliary-care.htm>

Domiciliary Care Services for Adults in Northern Ireland (2014) will be published on 12th February 2015 and will contain information on clients aged 65 and over who were receiving a domiciliary care service during the survey week in 2014.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Minor Ailments Schemes are operated by pharmacies in North Down.

(AQW 40802/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Minor Ailments Scheme was introduced in Northern Ireland in 2005. The Health and Social Care Board has confirmed that all 20 pharmacies in North Down provide treatment and advice under the provisions of the Minor Ailments Scheme.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people diagnosed with cancer in each of the last ten years, broken down by cancer type.

Mr Wells: The table below shows the number of people diagnosed with cancer in Northern Ireland in each of the last 10 years, for all cancers.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why AQW 39817/11-15 has not been answered. (AQW 40875/11-15)

Mr Wells: This question has now been answered.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of recipients of the Meals on Wheels service, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 40936/11-15)

Mr Wells: Information on the number of persons receiving a meals on wheels service in each Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust at 31 March 2014 is detailed in the table below.

HSC Trust	Persons Receiving Meals on Wheels Service at 31 March 2014 ^{1,2}

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many community meals are delivered daily to older people in North Down. (AQW 41042/11-15)

Mr Wells: Information on the number of community meals delivered daily is not available. However, information is available on the number of persons receiving a meals on wheels service in each Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust at 31 March each year.

At 31 March 2014, 408 persons were in receipt of a meals on wheels service in the South Eastern HSC Trust, 357 of which were aged 65 and over. A breakdown of this information by age group is detailed in the table below.

Department of Justice

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in light of a recent rape conviction in Lithuania, whether Paulius Liausas, under separate case number 14/104172 at Dungannon Magistrates Court, has been placed under sexual offences prevention order restrictions, or any other relevant safeguards which would be incurred following a similar conviction in Northern Ireland, since his re-entry to the jurisdiction; and if not, (i) why this is the case; and (ii) will he ensure such restrictions are in place prior to release from the current custodial sentence.

(AQW 40233/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): The nature of the offence committed outside the United Kingdom and the sentence imposed means that the individual is subject to the notification requirements of Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 for an indefinite period.

This means his case is subject to risk assessment under the public protection arrangements for Northern Ireland. A Local Area Public Protection Panel has completed an assessment and put in place appropriate multi-agency risk management plans for his release from custody. An application by police to the court for a civil Sexual Offences Prevention Order remains as an option which could be considered, if warranted, in light of ongoing risk management.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 39847/11-15, why no agency within his departmental remit will confirm in writing that this was mistaken identity.

Mr Ford: No specific instruction, guidance, directive or any other advice has been given to departmental agencies in relation to this matter. As outlined in my previous answers to AQW/38144/11-15, AQW/38779/11-15, AQW/39125/11-15 and AQW/39847/11-15 the Probation Board for Northern Ireland (PBNI) does not provide information on specific cases.

The agencies involved in public protection have offered to facilitate a meeting with public representatives to discuss local concerns raised. To date this offer has not been taken up.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how much funding his Department provided to Trade Unions in the last financial year.

(AQW 40287/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice, including its Agencies but not its arm's-length bodies, supplied no funding directly to Trade Unions in the 2013/14 financial year. However, the Department meets the salary and accommodation costs of union representatives and support staff. In addition, the Department provides:

- a £3,000 contribution to the centrally funded Association of First Division Civil Servants (FDA) trade union representative. The representative is an employee of DFP; and
- a £3,000 contribution to the costs of funding the post of trade Union Side Secretary to Whitley Council. The representative is an employee of DOE.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 39847/11-15, to provide the source and wording of the instruction, guidance, directive or any other advices issued to his departmental agencies indicating that no confirmation of mistaken identity was to be given in writing.

(AQW 40311/11-15)

Mr Ford: No specific instruction, guidance, directive or any other advice has been given to departmental agencies in relation to this matter. As outlined in my previous answers to AQW/38144/11-15, AQW/38779/11-15, AQW/39125/11-15 and AQW/39847/11-15 the Probation Board for Northern Ireland (PBNI) does not provide information on specific cases.

The agencies involved in public protection have offered to facilitate a meeting with public representatives to discuss local concerns raised. To date this offer has not been taken up.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the effectiveness of Belfast City Council's Tension Monitoring Model in addressing hate crime; and whether he plans to introduce similar models to other areas through Policing and Community Safety Partnerships and other structures.

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice is currently part funding the development of Belfast City Council's Tension Monitoring Model with a view to promoting its extension to other council areas, through PCSPs, to share learning to address local issues of tension and support building community cohesion.

Originally planned for completion by end 2015, I understand the project has been extended to end 2016. Belfast City Council held two workshops in 2014 with stakeholders to discuss the outputs expected, and work streams and timelines required, to deliver the project. A plan is in place to deliver project activities such as developing a manual to capture learning and case studies for addressing community tensions; provision of training and consideration of an IT solution to capture data.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice what support the Hate Incident Practical Action Scheme and the Hate Crime Advocacy Service have provided to, or in the vicinity of, the homes of hate crime victims, in the last twelve months.

(AQW 40318/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Hate Incident Practical Action Scheme (HIPA), part funded by the Department of Justice, the PSNI and the Northern Ireland Housing Executive, is aimed at providing personal and home protection measures for victims of hate incidents where the incident has occurred at, or in the vicinity of, their home. Examples of such measures include the provision of personal attack alarms; personal, home and vehicle safety advice; securing/replacing doors and windows; graffiti removal; and fitting external bulk lighting with sensors, intercoms to identify callers, secure letter boxes, door viewers and door chains.

For the period January to December 2014, there have been 63 HIPA applications involving 60 addresses forwarded to the Housing Executive by the PSNI.

The Hate Crime Advocacy Service, mainly funded by the PSNI and with funding support from the Department of Justice and Northern Ireland Housing Executive, currently support victims of crime during the reporting and pre and post investigative stages of a hate incident or crime. The advocates are a consistent point of contact for victims who wish to engage with them for practical and/or emotional advice and assistance. Practical advice can include the provision of information on the HIPA scheme; housing issues; and support with communicating with the Housing Executive.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Justice to list the community voluntary groups in Upper Bann that have received funding from his Department since 2011.

Mr Ford: The community voluntary groups in Upper Bann that have received funding from the Department of Justice, including its Agencies but not its arm's-length bodies, since 2011 are shown below:

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how much funding has been supplied by his Department to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender groups since May 2007.

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice, including its Agencies but not its arm's-length bodies, has supplied no funding to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender groups since its formation in April 2010.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the temporary parole granted to Samuel McKinley during which he travelled to England and was subjected to a serious assault, (i) whether leave was granted to travel to England as part of the temporary parole conditions; (ii) whether he was unlawfully at large when assaulted; and (iii) for a breakdown of the costs incurred in his return to custody in Northern Ireland.

Mr Ford: To release the information requested at (i) and (ii) would be a breach of the person's right under the Data Protection Act. A breakdown of the costs incurred in his return to custody in Northern Ireland is not available.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what other court houses or hearing centres are being investigated or earmarked for closure by the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service, aside from the original five already known; and which court houses are being concentrated on as the central hub in each court division or district.

Mr Ford: In response to significant budgetary pressures, the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service is reviewing the court estate to identify potential options for rationalisation. A public consultation exercise on the Rationalisation of the Court Estate will be launched shortly.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice in how many instances over the last five years have sexual convictions, committed outside Northern Ireland, become known to the local relevant agencies and resulted in notification orders or alternative restrictions being imposed, broken down by court division.

Mr Ford: The number of defendants who received at least one Sexual Offences Notification Order¹ in each of the last five calendar years is presented by court division in the table below.

Court Division	Year
	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014 ^P
Belfast	0	1	1	0	0
Londonderry	1	1	0	0	0
Antrim	0	0	1	0	0
Fermanagh and Tyrone	2	1	0	3	0
Armagh and South Down	1	2	0	0	0
Ards	1	0	0	0	0
Craigavon	0	0	1	0	0
Total	5	5	3	3	0

Source: Integrated Court Operations System (ICOS)

P Data are currently provisional and may be subject to change.

1 Data include Interim Sexual Offences Notification Orders that were not subsequently made Sexual Offences Notification Orders.

The identification of alternative restrictions imposed upon offenders who committed a sexual offence outside Northern Ireland would incur a disproportionate cost.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail the total spent on each of the (i) capital; and (ii) other projects which have not proceeded since May 2007, including the loss resulting from each project.

(AQW 40367/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice, including its Agencies but not its arm's-length bodies, has not identified any projects that have not proceeded since its formation in April 2010. This is based on the criteria that a project is considered as a one-off piece of work which had total planned expenditure in excess of £250k.

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prisoners who have been transferred to local prisons from other jurisdictions, in each of the last five years; and the cost to the departmental budget.

(AQW 40387/11-15)

Mr Ford: A total of 52 prisoners transferred to Northern Ireland prisons from other jurisdictions. Details are set out in the table below.

Calendar Year	Intra UK Transfers	Repatriations (from outside the UK)
2010	8	2
2011	8	0
2012	7	3
2013	12	3
2014	6	3
Totals:	41	11

Of the 11 prisoners repatriated to Northern Ireland 10 were from the Republic of Ireland and one from Spain.

It is not possible to quantify costs to the Northern Ireland Prison Service. There are reciprocal arrangements in place for United Kingdom intra-jurisdictional transfers. NIPS pays the transfer costs of prisoners leaving this jurisdiction while the National Offender Management Service (NOMS) and the Scottish Prison Service (SPS) meet costs associated with prisoners transferring to Northern Ireland.

Reciprocal arrangements are also in place with the Irish Prison Service (IPS) for north to south and south to north repatriations. Each service meets the transport costs within its own jurisdiction. Flight costs for the repatriation from Spain were met by the prisoner on his arrival in Northern Ireland.

In addition, the cost of keeping every prisoner in a prison in Northern Ireland is met by NIPS. NIPS does not calculate figures that detail the annual cost of keeping each additional prisoner in custody. Rather a 'cost per prisoner place' figure is published annually. It cannot be used to indicate the cost of keeping one additional prisoner as this must be met from within the existing budget, and the marginal cost will be less than the average cost.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 40181/11-15, what is meant by a reduction in the overheads incurred through ending rental contracts, including with whom, and for what purpose, these contracts exist.

Mr Ford: To date in 2014/15, the Probation Board for Northern Ireland (PBNI) has closed 7 offices. The rental agreements with the private landlords of these properties have now ended. Savings were made in rent, rates and utilities (phone, electricity, heat and cleaning). The offices and purpose of these offices are as follows:

- Learning & Development unit. This office was used to carry out internal training courses as well as housing PBNI Human Resource Department. These services are now being delivered from the PBNI Ballymena Area office and at PBNI Headquarters North Street respectively.
- Victims Unit. This office was used by PBNI Victim Liaison Officers to undertake work with victims. This service is now being delivered from the PBNI Lisburn office.
- 5 reporting centres: Glengormley, Limavady, Lurgan, Cookstown and Argyle. These offices were used to meet offenders. This service is now being delivered from PBNI local area offices.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 40015/11-15, how many of the individuals who received cautions for drugs offences (i) went on to commit similar offences; or (ii) are within the court system accused of committing similar offences.

Mr Ford: Of the 384 individuals specified in the answer to AQW/40015/11-15 who received cautions for drugs offences in the period 2011 - 2013, 31 received a subsequent conviction or out of court disposal in relation to an offence which fell into the drugs category. Of these, 30 were in relation to drug possession offences.

Five of the 384 individuals are currently within the court system accused of committing similar (i.e. drugs category) offences.

Note:

1 Information on subsequent convictions or out of court disposals relates to the period to the end of 2013.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, given the reported increase in domestic violence cases, whether there are plans to expand the listing arrangements in place at Londonderry Magistrates Court, even if only to divisions with noted higher instances of domestic violence cases.

Mr Ford: Specialist listing arrangements for domestic violence and abuse cases were introduced in Londonderry Magistrates' Court in November 2011. I note that a positive evaluation of these arrangements has recently been completed which recommends that these measures and initiatives are introduced in other courts.

Officials from the Department and the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service, therefore, will consider the potential for extending the use of these listing arrangements to other areas. I have also asked my officials to consider whether there is scope for further development of the Londonderry Magistrates' Court arrangements.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice to detail the travel and accommodation expenses claimed by the Director General of the Prison Service over the last three years.

(AQW 40431/11-15)

Mr Ford: The table below sets out the concessionary travel payments relating to (i) travel and accommodation and (ii) living expenses paid to the Director General and Directors of the Northern Ireland Prison Service from April 2011 to December 2014.

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15*
Travel/accommodation	18,692	33,666	49,232	41,654
Living Expenses	740	0	1,749	1,040

* invoices processed to end of December 2014.

For Data Protection reasons, the figures have not been broken down to an individual level.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice to detail the (i) travel and accommodation; and (ii) living expenses claimed by each Director of the Prison Service over the last three years.

(AQW 40432/11-15)

Mr Ford: The table below sets out the concessionary travel payments relating to (i) travel and accommodation and (ii) living expenses paid to the Director General and Directors of the Northern Ireland Prison Service from April 2011 to December 2014.

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15*
Travel/accommodation	18,692	33,666	49,232	41,654
Living Expenses	740	0	1,749	1,040

* invoices processed to end of December 2014.

For Data Protection reasons, the figures have not been broken down to an individual level.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to Access NI checks submitted in each of the most recent 12 months for which figures are available, (i) what percentage of checks have been processed within four weeks; and (ii) what is the longest time taken to process an application.

(AQW 40436/11-15)

Mr Ford: The four week target concerns enhanced checks. (Standard and basic checks are being processed within a week of receipt.)

In relation to (i), the table below sets out the percentage of enhanced checks issued by AccessNI within 4 weeks for the last 12 months.

In relation to (ii) the second line of the table shows the number of cases that remain outstanding received in each month since December 2013. These are cases where a certificate has not yet been issued and therefore are still being processed. As at 16 January 2015 the longest outstanding application is 410 days. During the 12 month period the longest time taken to clear an application was 402 days. This is due to PSNI experiencing delays in returning cases to AccessNI. AccessNI is working closely with PSNI to manage this backlog.

	Dec 2013	Jan 2014	Feb 2014	Mar 2014	Apr 2014	May 2014	Jun 2014	Jul 2014	Aug 2014	Sept 2014	Oct 2014	Nov 2014
Checks issued within 4 weeks (%)	72%	77%	94%	94%	93%	94%	96%	95%	95%	97%	97%	97%
Number of checks still outstanding	10	19	21	34	36	56	78	118	117	178	171	229

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Justice what are the contributory factors to delays in processing Access NI checks; and what is being done to mitigate these delays.

(AQW 40437/11-15)

Mr Ford: AccessNI is currently processing applications within a week of receipt. There are no delays in processing either basic or standard checks. The position on enhanced checks, in cases which have to be sent to PSNI for consideration, is more difficult.

In these instances, principally because of pressures on PSNI resources, there are currently around 27% of cases which are not being issued within the 4 week target.

PSNI have a recovery plan in place, agreed with Senior Officers, with steps being taken to reduce the number of outstanding cases over the next few months. AccessNI will continue to work with PSNI and to monitor the situation.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether he will establish an independent inquiry to examine the conduct of the Police Ombudsman for Northern Ireland in the manner in which he undertook his investigation into the referral by the PSNI Chief Constable into the John Downey case.

Mr Ford: I have no plans to establish such an inquiry.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to criminal convictions for sexual or violent offences, including murder and manslaughter, which have been committed outside Northern Ireland by non-residents, (i) whether offences can be discovered once the offender is within Northern Ireland and after an arrest on another matter; (ii) whether the offences can only be verified by authorities in the country in which the offences were committed; and (iii) whether there is an obligation on the part of the native country, or country where the offence was committed, to notify a central crime database in order to flag up warnings and to allow measures to reduce risk to be implemented.

(AQW 40470/11-15)

Mr Ford: There are established processes, underpinned by European Union legislation, which permit the exchange of criminal record information between EU Member States. The two applicable European Council Framework Decisions are 2009/315/JHA and 2009/316/JHA. For non-EU countries, bi-lateral arrangements exist between countries.

Articles 71-73 of the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 (as amended by Section 144 and Schedule 17 paragraphs 16 - 18 of the Coroners and Justice Act 2009) provide for the proving of convictions and acquittals in EU Member States before courts in Northern Ireland.

In Northern Ireland, when a non-resident comes to the attention of the PSNI on other matters, the PSNI can request a copy of the offender's criminal record from the offender's country of nationality. This request is forwarded via the UK Central Authority to the Central Authority for the requested country.

Requests can also be sent to, and verified by, authorities in the country in which offences were committed. Under the Framework, mechanisms are in place for conviction information to be shared between countries.

A central crime database for all countries is not maintained. However, there are mechanisms in place, under the two Framework Decisions, for each country to maintain its own criminal record system and for criminal record information to be updated and shared between countries.

Northern Ireland conviction information is shared to the UK Police National Computer.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether Michaela McCollum will be entitled to automatic 50 per cent remission on transfer to Hydebank Wood Women's Prison; and if so, when is she expected to be released, taking into account time served.

(AQW 40471/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am prevented by Data Protection constraints from disclosing details about an individual case. To release the information requested would be a breach of the person's right under the First Data Protection Principle.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice whether a special Youth Court is to be built in Laganside Court; and if so, at what cost.

(AQW 40475/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service will wish to consider the future provision of a Belfast Youth Court within the context of a consultation paper on the Rationalisation of the Court Estate which is due to be issued shortly.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice whether the closure of Townhall Street courts is still considered as temporary.

(AQW 40476/11-15)

Mr Ford: The closure of the Old Townhall building is still considered temporary. The future use of this building will be considered as part of a wider consultation on proposals for the rationalisation of the court estate which Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service plans to commence shortly.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice (i) whether legal aid has been (a) applied for; and (b) granted in relation to any matter pertaining to Michaela McCollum; (ii) if so, to provide the dates and amounts; and (iii) if not, whether applications are anticipated.

Mr Ford: Article 24 of the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (NI) Order 1981 precludes the release of information in respect of applications for legal aid under the civil legal aid scheme.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what meetings and discussions he, or his departmental officials, have held concerning Michaela McCollum's proposed transfer from Peru to Hydebank Wood Women's Prison, including the dates and purpose of each meeting.

(AQW 40523/11-15)

Mr Ford: Neither my officials nor I have had any meetings to discuss this matter. My officials have discussed by telephone the general repatriation process with the National Offender Management Service. In addition they have communicated by email with Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO) representatives in Peru following the FCO's direct liaison with the Peruvian authorities on the completion of paperwork concerning the application for repatriation. My officials have also spoken by telephone on one occasion with Michaela McCollum's legal representative about the repatriation process.

Mr Wilson asked the Minister of Justice when it is anticipated that Michaela McCollum will be transferred to a prison in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 40578/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am prevented by Data Protection constraints from disclosing details about individual cases. To release the information requested would be a breach of the person's rights under the First Data Protection Principle.

Mr Wilson asked the Minister of Justice for the approximate cost of the transfer of Michaela McCollum from prison in Peru.

(AQW 40579/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am unable to detail the cost of the transfer of Michaela McCollum from Peru to Northern Ireland given that no agreement has yet been reached with the sentencing state on repatriation and as a result no transport arrangements have been made. However, the Northern Ireland Prison Service does require transferring prisoners to sign an undertaking to repay expenses incurred in connection with their own travel to the UK.

Mr Wilson asked the Minister of Justice for the approximate annual cost of keeping Michaela McCollum in prison in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 40580/11-15)

Mr Ford: The approximate annual cost of keeping an individual prisoner, in prison within Northern Ireland, is known as the Cost per Prisoner Place (CPPP). This is calculated by dividing Operating Expenditure (excluding non-standard costs) by the average total available places defined as Certified Normal Accommodation, which represents the number of available staffed places during the same financial year. However, it cannot be used to indicate the cost of keeping one additional prisoner as this must be met from within existing budgets and the marginal cost will be less than the average cost.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what is the estimated annual cost to house Michaela McCollum in Hydebank Wood Women's Prison.

Mr Ford: The estimated annual cost of keeping an individual prisoner, in prison within Northern Ireland, is known as the Cost per Prisoner Place (CPPP). This is calculated by dividing Operating Expenditure (excluding non-standard costs) by the average total available places defined as Certified Normal Accommodation, which represents the number of available staffed places during the same financial year. However, it cannot be used to indicate the cost of keeping one additional prisoner as this must be met from within existing budgets and the marginal cost will be less than the average cost.

The CPPP is calculated for Northern Ireland Prison Service as a whole and is not broken down by establishment.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many parking spaces are in Dungannon Court House (i) upper; and (ii) lower carpark; and how many disabled bays are in each car park.

(AQW 40601/11-15)

Mr Ford: There are 50 parking spaces including two disabled parking bays in the upper car park at Dungannon Courthouse and 46 parking spaces including three disabled parking bays in the lower car park.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the amount claimed in taxi-expenses by Northern Ireland Prison Service Change Managers since they were appointed.

Mr Ford: The amount claimed by NIPS Change Managers between December 2011 and December 2014 is as follows:

- in relation to official travel, the total expenditure is £510.45. This is travel between office locations in relation to official business; and
- in relation to concessionary travel, the total expenditure is £7.35. This relates to travel between the home and office and is usually paid in relation to staff on detached duty who are working away from home and / or their normal place of work.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Justice to outline the amount of money seized by the Criminal Assets Bureau in each of the last five years; and to list the projects and organisations that this money has funded.

(AQW 40612/11-15)

Mr Ford: There is no Criminal Assets Bureau in Northern Ireland. Responsibility for criminal confiscation falls to the Public Prosecution Service.

2011/12 was the first year in which the full value of assets recovered through criminal confiscation was returned to Northern Ireland following the enactment of Section 94 of the Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 2011. Since then the amounts recovered by the courts have been:

- 2011/12 - £3.02 million
- 2012/13 - £2.16 million
- 2013/14 - £1.54 million
- 2014/15 to date - £2.56 million

Half of the criminal confiscation receipts are returned to the agencies involved in the cases and the other half retained by the Department of Justice and distributed through the Assets Recovery Community Scheme (ARCS). This funds projects aimed at fighting crime or the fear of crime.

There have been four rounds of ARCS funding – the lists of successful projects and the amounts awarded are available on the Departmental website at: <http://www.dojni.gov.uk/index/publications/publication-categories/pubs-policing-community-safety/community-safety/organised-crime.htm>

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the proposed new build for Magilligan Prison.

(AQW 40651/11-15)

Mr Ford: The outline business case for the Redevelopment of Magilligan Project was approved by DFP on 9 January 2015 and progress is dependent on securing the capital funding necessary.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 39847/11-15, to provide, or place in the Assembly library, the policy held by the Probation Board for Northern Ireland which precludes answering of questions on this matter.

Mr Ford: As outlined in my previous answers to AQW/38144/11-15, AQW/38779/11-15, AQW/39125/11-15 and AQW/39847/11-15, on this matter, the Probation Board for Northern Ireland (PBNI) does not provide information on specific cases.

The relevant policy is the 1998 Data Protection Act. PBNI considers it would be a breach of the individual's data protection rights under this act to comment on whether an offender does or does not live in a particular area.

The agencies involved in public protection have offered to facilitate a meeting with public representatives to discuss local concerns raised. To date this offer has not been taken up.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 37161/11-15 and AQW 38849/11-15 and the subsequent correspondence, to state the contents of the contract of conditions which the person in question signed prior to home leave release.

Mr Ford: I am unable to release the specific information requested as to do so would run contrary to the Data Protection Act 1998.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 37161/11-15 and AQW 38849/11-15, whether the establishment of the role of Reducing Reoffending Unit teams tasked with the monitoring of young people on unescorted home leave, is as a direct result of this particular case, or were there other cases of concern; and if so, to specify the number and nature of these cases.

(AQW 40749/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Youth Justice Agency's home leave and mobility policies were reviewed following this case and, given that the PSNI Reducing Offending Unit teams were already being established independently from this, it was deemed appropriate for them to undertake a monitoring role by formally visiting each young person during their period of unescorted home leave. The formalisation of this role will help mitigate the risk of reoffending whilst on home leave in the future.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Justice what percentage of the Military Covenant his Department has adopted as policy; and what percentage has been implemented.

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice has not adopted the Military Covenant.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice to detail the legislation governing private companies clamping vehicles.

(AQW 40863/11-15)

Mr Ford: My responsibility for vehicle immobilisation is limited to ensuring that those operators who carry out vehicle immobilisation on private land are properly licensed by the Security Industry Authority. The Private Security Act 2001 sets out the legislative requirements for individuals undertaking this activity.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice how many people have been convicted of fuel laundering related offences over the last ten years, detailing (i) the offences committed; (ii) the penalty imposed; (iii) any confirmed paramilitary involvement; (iv) the number of cases not prosecuted; and (v) the money paid back into the public purse as a result of such prosecutions.

Mr Ford: Fuel laundering is a reserved matter which falls within the remit of HM Revenue and Customs. They have provided the tables below. It is only possible for them to supply figures from 2010/11 onwards. Figures relate to offences involving excise evasion on fuel – this includes fuel laundering but it is not possible to separate that offence from other oil fraud.

In addition, it is not possible to provide information relating to paramilitary involvement. With regards to cases not prosecuted, HMRC will always attempt to prosecute wherever evidence is available to support a criminal prosecution. Criminal prosecution only forms part of HMRC's approach to tackling oil fraud. Other strategies include civil action (for example the seizure of fuel, pumps, vehicles and cash) combined with a strong regulatory control system and civil penalties regime.

Statistics relating to convictions, penalties and criminal confiscations are set out below.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 40694/11-15 and before any meeting can be agreed, whether he will request that the relevant agencies offer said meeting and the reasons thereof in writing on respective letterheading; and provide an assurance that all matters discussed or disclosed will be backed-up and clarified in writing.

Mr Ford: As outlined in my answers to the previous questions on this matter the agencies involved in public protection have offered to facilitate a meeting with public representatives to discuss any concerns and explain the work of the agencies in local communities. This meeting would be facilitated through the Public Protection Arrangements Northern Ireland (PPANI) co-ordinator. The agencies cannot discuss individual cases.

Should public representatives decide to avail of this meeting matters discussed or disclosed will be backed up and clarified to the extent possible taking into account the 1998 Data Protection Act.

Department for Regional Development

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Regional Development how much Translink spends on producing branded diaries and calendars each year; and (ii) for his assessment of this spend given the simultaneous increase in Translink fares.

(AQW 40257/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): The total cost for provision of diaries for 2015 was £29,746 and the amount for calendars for 2015 was £1,395.

Translink has historically produced branded diaries as a communications/ information aide for customers, business partners, elected representatives and other stakeholders. Translink argues that calendars are a vital part of its public safety communication strategy. The calendars carry important safety messages for those working near rail lines, principally farmers / agricultural workers and are distributed to farming entities.

The decision to provide diaries this year was taken before funding restrictions were advised to Translink by the Department. I can advise that Translink has confirmed that diaries for PR purposes will now be discontinued.

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total spend by Northern Ireland Water on consultants specific to leakages, in each of the last five financial years.

(AQW 40265/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Northern Ireland Water has a "Leakage Management Services" contract in place which provides the external resource to carry out a range of work relating to the reduction of leakage. This activity is classified as "Managed Services" and is not consultancy.

The total spend on this contract in each of the last five financial years, is as detailed in the table below:

Year	Total Spend
2009/10	£622k
2010/11	£725k

Year	Total Spend
2011/12	£533k
2012/13	£841k
2013/14	£886k

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what actions or strategies his Department is pursuing to encourage increased participation in cycling by female pupils.

(AQW 40289/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am committed to ensuring cycling is available to everyone irrespective of gender. To this end I have commissioned an Active School Travel programme to be delivered to 180 schools over the three year period 2013 – 16. This is a broadly based programme which seeks to create a culture of active travel within participating schools and to increase the skill and confidence levels of those pupils who wish to cycle to school on a regular basis.

The selection of schools was conducted to ensure participation on a province wide basis which involved all school types including co-educational and female only schools.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the introduction of residents' parking schemes.
(AQW 40313/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Legislation is currently being finalised for the first residents' parking schemes to be introduced into Northern Ireland.

The draft legislation for the residents' parking schemes in Antrim and the Rossville Street area of Londonderry is being finalised, prior to progressing to the consultation stage. The public consultation period is planned to commence in early 2015.

Officials were also engaged in formal consultation on the implementation of residents' parking schemes in the Lower Malone, and College Park Avenue/Rugby Road areas in South Belfast between 29 October 2014 and 19 November 2014. During this time they received a significant number of objections and representations on the two proposed schemes. Officials are currently considering and dealing with those objections and representations but they cannot complete the remaining part of the legislative process for either scheme until the issues raised have been fully considered and dealt with. I estimate the earliest a scheme could be implemented on the ground in this area would be within the 2015/2016 financial year, although this very much depends on a positive outcome to the consultation process.

Once these schemes are in place they will be reviewed to ensure the legislation fits the purpose of the schemes and that they are operating correctly.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 40156/11-15, to detail the corresponding figures for 19 December 2013.

(AQW 40314/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The corresponding figures for the number of street lights requiring repairs, as at 19 December 2013, were as follows:

- Ards Borough Council area: 98.
- North Down Council area: 192.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development how much Translink has spent on fuel in each of the last three years.
(AQW 40323/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The table below shows the total fuel costs for Translink for the last three financial years:

Financial Year	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
Total fuel costs	£34.448m	£37.148m	£37.498m

The above figures are shown before deducting Fuel Duty Rebate grant received from the Department. The net cost of fuel to Translink will be lower.

In 2013/14 Translink received £9.630m of Fuel Duty Rebate. The amount of Fuel Duty Rebate received in 2014/15 will be significantly reduced and may be cut further in 2015/16 because of the budgetary situation.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development what effect the recent fall in the price of oil will have on Translink's annual fuel bills.

(AQW 40324/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that Translink already has a 'fuel forward purchasing' arrangement in place for most of its required volume of fuel, for 2015/16 and 2016/17. The current fall in the cost of fuel will be reflected in fuel costs incurred by Translink beyond those timeframes.

Translink engages in fuel forward purchasing in order to provide certainty around its fuel costs, as part of its corporate planning process, and to prevent both it and its customers from being exposed to sudden significant increases in fuel prices.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development how many litres of fuel Translink has used in each of the last three years. (AQW 40325/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The table below shows how many litres of fuel Translink has used in each of the last three financial years:

Financial Year	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
Total number of litres used	36.918m	37.671m	37.580m

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development how much Translink has spent on translating English to Irish on buses; and to list the routes in which Irish is used.

(AQW 40326/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise that Translink have spent no money on translating English to Irish on buses since 2011.

The Metro 10 Falls Road corridor services, with the exception of 10H that travels down Blacks Road (including Suffolk Housing Estate), carry destinations in Irish.

On Ulsterbus services 274 and X4 (Londonderry – Dublin) destination signs on the buses are in English and Irish and alternate between the two languages. There is no translation charges associated with this.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development how many personal injury claims have been submitted to his Department citing defective street lighting as a contributory factor.

(AQW 40343/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's claims database holds information on personal injury claims involving street lighting, only where defective street lighting is alleged to be the main cause of the injury sustained. The table below details the numbers of such claims received in the financial years since 2009/10:

Financial Year	Number of claims received
2009/10	12
2010/11	9
2011/12	11
2012/13	11
2013/14	6
Total	49

There may be other personal injury claims where defective street lighting is a contributory factor, but it is not possible to identify these claims from the database.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what impact the cut to the Translink budget will have on service provision.

(AQW 40359/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In the current financial year there will be no impact on service provision as any pressures on Translink will be addressed by a reduction in Translink reserves and marginally through the fare increase to be implemented in February.

For 2015/16 the currently anticipated impact on service provision is as set out in my Department's budget consultation document available at www.drndi.gov.uk/spending-and-savings-proposals-draft-budget-2015-16.pdf. A detailed set of proposals, set out by Translink were sent to the Committee for Regional Development on 03 December 2014

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development how much has been cut from the NI Railways budget for the remainder of the financial year.

(AQW 40360/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that over the current financial year 2014-15 I have planned a reduction in resource funding to the NI Railways budget as originally set out of £6 million.

This is subject to the outcome of January monitoring.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what impact the cut to the NI Railways budget will have on service provision.

(AQW 40361/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that the reduction in funding from Government to the NI Railways budget 2014-15 is not expected to have an impact on services; rather the deficit is expected to be absorbed by the Translink group by increasing the level of expected trading loss for the current year.

However, my Department has issued a consultation paper in response to draft budgets which are proposed from 2015/16 onwards. Depending on the final budget provisions for 2015/16, Translink will then be in a position to firm up plans to meet the new funding landscape. It is possible that the frequency of some rail services will be impacted.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development how much has been cut from the TransportNI budget for the remainder of the financial year.

Mr Kennedy: A budget cut of £6.0m Resource DEL was applied to TransportNI's budget this year as part of my Department's £15 million budget cut to address the 4.4% reduction applied to my Department's budget baseline. In addition the baseline is £12 million less than the objective requirement for roads maintenance. This has been addressed through in-year monitoring in each of the last three years. I have detailed the impact of these budget reductions in my response to AQW 40363/11-15

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total spent on each of the (i) capital; and (ii) other projects which have not proceeded since May 2007, including the loss resulting from each project.

Mr Kennedy: No major road projects have been cancelled since May 2007 and consequently there have been no resultant losses.

The projects currently in the Major Works Programme emanated from the Regional Strategic Transport Network Transport Plan 2015 and Investment Delivery Plan for Roads (IDP) published in 2008.

With the exception of the A6 Randalstown to Castledawson Dual Carriageway, which is currently being progressed, all the schemes which had a specifically defined delivery timeframe in the IDP have been delivered. The remainder of the schemes included in the IDP are at varying stages of development. Their future progression will be determined by the levels of funding made available by the Executive.

Local Transport Safety Measures capital projects are discretionary spend and are prioritised locally. Projects will only proceed once the funding has been secured and allocated.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 40156/11-15, how many of the required repairs are in (i) Donaghadee; and (ii) Millisle.

(AQW 40385/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Of the 349 lights requiring repair in the Ards Borough Council area on 9 December 2014, 21 were in Donaghadee and 36 were in Millisle.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development what transport provision exists for people with visual impairment; and how cuts to his Department's budget will impact on this provision.

(AQW 40391/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise that Translink services are available to all members of the public including those with visual impairments. I understand that making these services as accessible as possible can play a vital role in enabling people with a disability to fully participate in the community. My Department will continue to provide revenue support to Translink and I have been successful in securing additional resource from the Executive which will allow Translink to continue to provide much needed town services.

Additionally the Disability Action Transport Scheme operated by Disability Action and Dial-A-Lift services provided by Rural Community Transport Partnerships, that my Department also funds, offers specialised public transport options for people with all disabilities including those with visual impairments. It is my intention that my Department continues to support these schemes subject to EU rules and licensing arrangements, next year and in later years.

Specifically in regard to people with a visual impairment, I announced in October 2014 my Department's plans to commence the installation of Audio Visual (AV) systems on the Metro bus network in early 2015. The project will involve the installation of AV equipment on 294 Metro buses, including 30 Park and Ride vehicles, and at 191 key bus stops at a total cost of £700k. The Audio Visual (AV) systems will provide all passengers with real time information relating to bus location via a speaking voice and visual display.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development what communication his Department has had with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to ensure that the provision of services for people with visual impairments is protected.

Mr Kennedy: My Department has not had any engagement with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (DHSSPS) dealing specifically with transport services for people with a visual impairment. I have, however, written to Executive colleagues asking them to outline their responsibilities in relation to transport and transport funding with a view to identifying those Government Departments that should sit on an inter-departmental steering group to shape the public consultation document for a new Accessible Transport Strategy. DHSSPS has indicated that it wants to participate in this steering group. The proposed Accessible Transport Strategy will take account of transport issues that impact on a range of users, including older people and people with disabilities. This will include people with visual impairments. I am also pleased to confirm that my Department, in conjunction with Translink and Guide Dogs, is currently planning the initial phase of the implementation of Audio Visual systems on the Metro bus network, including on all buses and at key bus stops. This project will commence in early 2015.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development whether it is compulsory for public transport drivers to undertake Disability Awareness Training in respect of service users who are visually impaired.

Mr Kennedy: Translink has confirmed that it continues to provide disability awareness training, which covers all forms of disability, to its driving staff as part of their induction process. Equality and diversity issues are also routinely covered in training modules to enable bus drivers to attain the Certificate of Professional Competence which is compulsory for all drivers.

All other customer-facing staff such as Conductors, station staff, customer service co-ordinators and Translink Rail Services staff also receive regular training in these areas and all Translink staff are bound by the company's Dignity at Work and Equal Opportunity policies.

Other transport providers such as the Rural Community Transport Partnerships and Disability Action which are funded by my Department have confirmed that they have provided disability awareness and equality training to all front line staff. Particular issues pertaining to the difficulties experienced by service users with visual impairment are included within this training.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the cost of a single ticket from (i) Enniskillen; (ii) Fivemiletown; and (iii) Ballygawley Park and Ride to Belfast on the 261 Service; and for his assessment of the value for money provided on each journey.

Mr Kennedy: Current fares between the various destinations are outlined below:

Belfast To	Cash Single	Cost if using Multi-Journey ticket
Enniskillen	£11.50	£7.60
Fivemiletown	£11.50	£7.60
Ballygawley P&R	£10.00	£6.70

I am satisfied that it remains the case that the cost of public transport in Northern Ireland compares favourably with that in the rest of the UK and the Republic of Ireland. I am clear that public transport provides a high standard of service and as far as practicably possible, meets the needs of all customers.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development whether any new road projects planned for the remainder of this financial year have been cancelled.

Mr Kennedy: I would advise the Member that no new road projects planned for this financial year have been cancelled.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development whether any new street lighting projects planned for the remainder of this financial year have been cancelled.

(AQW 40403/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can confirm that no new street lighting projects planned for the remainder of this financial year have been cancelled.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development what was the total estimated expenditure in repairing faulty street lighting between 1 October and 31 December in (i) 2013; and (ii) 2014.

(AQW 40416/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's estimated expenditure on repairing faulty street lighting, between 1 October and 31 December in each of the last two years, was as follows:

- (i) £1,464,000 for 2013; and.
- (ii) £729,000 for 2014.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Regional Development when the NI Water joint-agency appraisal study into flood alleviation for the Finaghy Road North and Orchardville area of South Belfast will be published.

(AQW 40483/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by NI Water that a final consultants' report which considers the viability of options to further enhance the sewer networks in the Finaghy Road North and Orchardville areas is expected in mid-February. NI Water will consider the options in terms of economic viability, priority and affordability in order to make an informed decision on any potential capital investment. It is anticipated that NI Water will present its findings to local elected representatives and residents in March 2015.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development how much revenue was raised by his Department in the last financial year.

Mr Kennedy: I refer you to my answer to AQW 37230/11-15.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the proposed start date of the new sewage pumping system for Millisle.

(AQW 40489/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The ownership of the site required for the new wastewater pumping station in Millisle is presently split between Ards Borough Council and the Crown Estate. Before NI Water can acquire the entire site, Ards Borough Council must first acquire a strip of land from the Crown Estate. Matters in relation to this initial acquisition are still ongoing and are outside of NI Water's direct control. NI Water's legal department have sought regular updates from the external parties and I understand that the legal processes are still progressing. The contract to construct the new pumping station is presently out to tender and the project will be brought to construction as soon as possible, following completion of the necessary land acquisitions.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Regional Development what criteria were used to assess the need for a traffic calming scheme on the Banbridge Road, Kinallen.

Mr Kennedy: My Department has developed assessment criteria which are used to assess all requests for traffic calming. I can confirm that Kinallen was assessed using this criteria. The assessment considers traffic speed and volume, injury collision history and the nature of the local environment which takes into account the presence of schools, housing etc.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what savings Translink expect to realise as a result of the falling cost of fuel; and how this will be reflected in the cost of travel.

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that Translink already has a 'fuel forward purchasing arrangement in place for most of its required volume of fuel, for 2015/16 and 2016/17. The current fall in the cost of fuel will be reflected in fuel costs incurred by Translink beyond those timeframes.

Translink engages in fuel forward purchasing in order to provide certainty around its fuel costs, as part of its corporate planning process, and to prevent both it and its customers from being exposed to sudden significant increases in fuel prices.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total cost of the installation of water meters in Upper Bann over the last three financial years.

(AQW 40666/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Northern Ireland Water holds water meter installation information according to the nature of the installation, the number of meters, and the type of property (domestic or non-domestic) it serves. It is not operationally practical for the company to hold the information according to geographical area or constituency boundary and it is therefore not in a position to provide the requested information.

Department for Social Development

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the equitable distribution of Neighbourhood Renewal Funds in terms of community backgrounds.

(AQW 40261/11-15)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): I am content that the process for distribution of funds across the Neighbourhood Renewal Areas is implemented fairly and reasonably to meet their community needs.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the total spent on each of the (i) capital; and (ii) other projects which have not proceeded since May 2007, including the loss resulting from each project.

(AQW 40349/11-15)

Mr Storey: The table below provides details of the projects closed early and the related costs as per the project closure documentation for the Department for Social Development since May 2007. While the projects did not proceed to full completion, it is not considered that the expenditure was lost, as benefits were achieved on each of the projects.

Project Title	Project Closure Date	Actual Project Costs
Sustainable Printing Services Project	31 July 2010	£610,845
Audit Trail Analysis Service Modernisation Project	31 March 2011	£257,720
Continuous Service Improvement Project	31 July 2011	£1,792,849
Bank Liaison Automation and Customer Contact Project	30 September 2011	£201,000
Jobs and Benefits Project (Final 10 Offices) (Capital project)	30 September 2011	£29,434,000 *
Digital Services Project – My Benefits Online	July 2014	£759,000
Financial Support Services Project	30 November 2014	£231,000
Melvin Bridge, Strabane (Capital Project)	31 May 2011	£200,000

* Two of the ten offices were built, i.e. Andersonstown and Ballymena

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the approximate number of people who would move from a mid-rate Disability Living Allowance to the higher rate Personal Independence Payment following its introduction assuming no change in medical conditions.

(AQW 40380/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department has published a document entitled 'Northern Ireland Personal Independence Payment Information Booklet' which was updated in November 2014. It reports on the potential impact on DLA claimants who will undergo reassessment between Autumn 2015 and September 2016 and of that total it is estimated that some 3,900 people will receive an increased award under Personal Independence Payment. The information booklet can be found at

<http://www.dsdni.gov.uk/ni-pip-information-booklet.pdf>

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development what is the highest level of benefit currently being paid to a family in Northern Ireland; and how many families receive benefits in excess of (a) £26,000; and (b) £23,000 per annum.

(AQW 40536/11-15)

Mr Storey: In accordance with the code of practice for Official Statistics from the UK Statistics Authority, official statistics must not reveal the identity of an individual or organisation, or any private information relating to them. As a result the highest level of benefit for an individual household in Northern Ireland cannot be provided.

At June/July 2014, it was identified that in Northern Ireland; (a) 6,600 households were receiving benefits in excess of £26,000 per annum and (b) 12,000 households were receiving benefits in excess of £23,000 per annum.

The Information provided is an Official Statistic. The Production and dissemination of all such Statistics is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development which area of Derry will be targeted for Public Realm works after the completion of the Strand Road improvement scheme.

(AQW 40577/11-15)

Mr Storey: Public Realm works have just commenced on Foyle Road and will shortly begin on Whitaker Street and Limavady Road. Furthermore, consultants have just been appointed to bring forward design proposals for a scheme on Bank Place, Union Hall Place, Magazine Street and Society Street.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the number of applicants currently on the waiting list for social housing in North Down.

(AQW 40614/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that the number of applicants on the waiting list in North Down at 30 September 2014 was 1,837, of which 1,062 were in Housing Stress.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister for Social Development what funding streams are available within his Department for community groups to apply for in 2015.

(AQW 40646/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Department for Social Development does not have any funding streams open for new applications.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development what is the current position and timeline on the implementation of the reported policy decision to dissolve the Northern Ireland Housing Executive.

(AQW 40706/11-15)

Mr Storey: No decisions have been made with regard to social housing reform. The Social Housing Reform Programme has a mandate to explore the potential for reform of housing structures and policies in NI which includes the Northern Ireland Housing Executive. It will present a range of proposals for consultation throughout 2015.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 40284/11-15, whether he intends to resolve the anomaly that affect places such as Drumbo Park Greyhound Stadium and to include an amendment to the existing legislation so that general permitted hours for liquor licensing, in respect of a place of public entertainment, also extend to Sundays.

(AQW 40762/11-15)

Mr Storey: A Licensing and Registration of Clubs (Amendment) Bill is currently being drafted based on the Executive approval of previously published proposals. I do not intend to make any changes to general permitted hours for racetracks however, as you are aware, an opportunity exists during the Assembly process to put forward amendments and I will consider any amendments at that time.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister in light of their responsibilities for victims' issues, what matters they plan to draw to the attention of the review of the administration scheme for dealing with on-the-runs, headed by Lady Justice Hallett.

(AQO 5825/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): OFMDFM co-operated fully with the inquiry conducted by Lady Justice Hallett and raised a range of issues.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) what is the annual cost of operating and using the G Heyn Building in Belfast; (ii) to what use is it put; and how regularly it is used.

(AQW 40477/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Headline Buildings (G Heyn Building) is currently occupied on a full-time basis by the Northern Ireland Judicial Appointments Commission (NIJAC) and the Commission for Victims and Survivors Northern Ireland (CVSNI). Details of Operating Costs are included in NIJAC's Annual Report and Accounts, which also records the contribution made by the CVSNI in respect of rent, rates and other premises costs.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the savings to be made by her Department from the public sector voluntary exit scheme, over each of the four financial years commencing 2014/15.

(AQW 40691/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): I understand that the public sector Voluntary Exit Scheme (VES) is on target to launch in early March 2015. Given the timing of this, there will be no savings made by my Department from the VES in 2014-15.

My Department's Draft Budget 2015-16 proposals included a staff reductions savings proposal of £5.6m as a result of the VES. This was based on an estimated reduction of around 300 posts next year from the Core Department. This position is also reflected in the Final Budget recently agreed by the Executive.

The VES savings in financial years 2016-17 and 2017-18 will be determined whenever the parameters for overall departmental savings for the next Budget period are agreed by the Executive and the scope of the VES is available.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is the level of sheep smuggling across the border reported to her Department.

(AQW 40796/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Sheep smuggling is invariably associated with the substitution of false domestic identities into the illegally imported or exported sheep. Smuggling may occur in either direction across the border. However the availability of a VAT rebate for slaughter lambs in the south is considered a major attraction to move northern sheep across the border without appropriate health certification, and re-identify them as southern sheep. The Department of Agriculture, Food and the Marine (DAFM) and the Office of Revenue Commissioners are responsible for investigating such cases in the south. DARD's own Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch cooperates closely with their investigators. Although accurate and reliable reporting or recording of smuggling is difficult, DARD does keep a record of illegal sheep import and export cases that can be verified or where there was sufficient evidence to undertake an investigation. In the period 2012-14 DARD investigated seven such cases.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what is the level of cattle smuggling across the border reported to her Department.

Mrs O'Neill: Cattle smuggling is invariably associated with the substitution of false domestic identities into the illegally imported or exported cattle. As such, accurate and reliable reporting or recording of smuggling is difficult and in the absence of verification, DARD does not classify or record cases under the category of smuggling. DARD does however keep a record of illegal cattle import and export cases that can be verified or where there was sufficient evidence to undertake an investigation. In the period 2012-14 DARD investigated eighteen such cases.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for the percentage of her Department's overall Current Resource Expenditure allocated to staff wages in (i) 2013/14; and (ii) the 2014/15 draft Budget.

(AQW 40826/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I refer you to my response to AQW 40690/11-15.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many farms in South Antrim (i) rent; or (ii) let out land in conacre.

(AQW 40932/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Analysis of the June 2014 Agricultural and Horticultural Census indicates that (i) 552 farms rented in and (ii) 107 let out land in conacre in the South Antrim constituency.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action her Department has taken to establish a common definition of rural with the Department for Social Development.

(AQW 40974/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The system of settlement classification is currently subject to review by a cross-departmental working group led by NISRA. DARD and DSD are represented on the group. It is expected that the review findings and technical documentation will be published later this year. It is unlikely that the recommendations will be prescriptive regarding an urban/rural population threshold and users will be advised, as with the current classification framework, to define urban and rural areas in ways which are consistent with the policy aims of projects and programmes. However, in keeping with the existing approach, a default urban/rural boundary is likely to be provided.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 40610/11-15, whether the 442 people who completed the FarmSafeNet online course are included in the 678 people who have been trained.

Mrs O'Neill: The 442 people who completed the FarmSafeNet online course are separate to and not included in the 678 people trained through FarmSafe awareness training.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on negotiations that are on going with the European Commission regarding the exact definition of a young farmer.

(AQW 41212/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Regulation (EU) 1307/2014 provides a clear definition that a young farmer must not exceed 40 years of age in the year of first application to the Basic Payment Scheme and be setting up as head of an agricultural holding for the first time, or have had already set up as such during the five years preceding his/her first application.

Discussions have just concluded between my officials and the European Commission on a number of detailed issues relating to the practical implementation of this definition for the purposes of administering the Young Farmers' Payment and the Regional Reserve. The Department will very shortly be publishing detailed guidance on this and the evidence that will need to be provided by prospective applicants to the Young Farmers' Payment and Regional Reserve.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 33554/11-15, whether the investigation by Inland Fisheries Ireland into the death of hundreds of thousands of elver on Lough Erne in 2014 has been completed.

(AQW 40461/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): In view of the magnitude of the fish kill and in line with existing Inland Fisheries Ireland (IFI) policies, IFI undertook an investigation and referred the matter to its legal advisers.

It would be inappropriate to comment further on the matter at this time. I will keep you advised of developments.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what funding opportunities are available through her Department for the restoration of historical items and artefacts.

(AQW 40490/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: DCAL does not directly provide a grant funded programme for individuals or groups to restore historical items and artefacts. My Department's investment in this area is primarily directed to the NI Museums Council (NIMC), National Museums and the Public Record Office (PRONI).

The NIMC provides grant support to local museums in the north of Ireland to assist with the conservation and restoration of objects held in their collections. It provides two grant programmes for local museums – the Accredited Museums Grant Programme and the Acquisition Fund. The former supports projects at local museums including conservation and restoration needs. The latter gives assistance for the purchase of objects for local museum collections. In 2012-13 the NIMC provided a total of £18,738 in grants through the Accredited Museum Grant Programme, of which £15,637 was provided to 11 projects concerned with the conservation of artefacts and 1 restoration project. In 2013-14 the Council provided £45,293 in grants through the same programme, of which £30,480 was given to 10 conservation projects and 2 restoration projects. In 2014-15, grants totalling £11,782 have been offered to seven projects with a conservation focus.

Neither National Museums nor PRONI provide funding to third parties for the restoration of historical items and artefacts. The investment they receive is used to assist in meeting their respective statutory obligations.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what responsibility museums, that receive funding from her Department, have to restore historical items and artefacts.

(AQW 40492/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department's investment in the museums sector is primarily directed to National Museums and the NI Museums Council (NIMC).

National Museums' responsibility for the treatment of historical items and artefacts is set out in Article 4 (1) of The Museums and Galleries (NI) Order 1998. Under Article 4 (1) National Museums is required "so far as practicable" to "care for" and "preserve...objects in its collections". This can include restoring historical items and artefacts in its collections if National Museums consider this appropriate, practicable and the funding is available.

There is no statutory responsibility on local museums to conserve or restore items in their collections. However, the Museum Code of Ethics places a responsibility upon such accredited museums to act as guardians of the long-term public interest in the collections they hold. As a result there is an expectation that accredited museums will publish, implement and regularly review a forward-looking collections management policy, approved by their governing body, which specifies standards of care and defines the level of care appropriate for the different parts of their collection.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the Líofoa campaign; and to outline the activities planned for the campaign during the 2015/16 financial year.

(AQW 40692/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The success of the Líofoa campaign clearly demonstrates the need for this support for learners of Irish, and the upward revision of the target, on 4 occasions of the number of people signing up to the challenge, reinforces the motivational value of the campaign.

Currently over 9,000 people have signed up to the challenge and, if recent trends continue, the 10,000 target will be achieved shortly. Given this proven success, I am minded to continue with the Líofoa campaign post 2015 taking account of the findings from the recent survey of Líofoa participants.

Given that the Executive has now agreed the Departmental allocations for 15/16, I will confirm the position of the Líofoa campaign and planned activities in the near future.

Department of Education

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children in foster care who have access to classroom assistants in the educational setting, broken down by Education and Library Board.

(AQW 40581/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): Access to classroom assistant support is not determined by whether or not a child is in foster care; rather it is determined by the individual needs of the pupil, for example special educational needs.

The Department and the Education and Library Boards do not hold information on classroom assistant support that is accessed by foster children.

When a pupil enters the care system, it is the responsibility of the Health and Social Care Trust who looks after them to ensure that their school is notified. The October 2013 school census showed that schools had been notified of 723 pupils in foster care.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education to detail the rationale of the 100 per cent cut to his Department's Community Relations, Equality and Diversity in Education (CRED) budget for 2015/16; and what impact this will have on the requirement on statutory early years' providers to contribute to improved community relations.

(AQW 40586/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The proposal to end earmarked Community Relations Equality and Diversity (CRED) Funding is a direct consequence of the challenging budget reduction faced by my Department, in which I have sought to protect front line services.

Amongst the mitigating factors which I have taken into account as to the impact of the ending of CRED funding is the introduction of a £25m Shared Education Signature project which seeks to improve educational (including reconciliation) outcomes.

When CRED funding was introduced its purpose was to support and underpin existing curricular requirements, with a focus on capacity building, resources and sharing of good practice, all of which have been significantly progressed since the policy was introduced.

The inclusion of Personal Social and Emotional Development in the Early Years curriculum addresses CRED issues which providers are expected to continue to deliver.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the waiting list for Special Educational Needs assessments in each Education and Library Board.

(AQW 40592/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Following receipt of a request for a statutory assessment of a child's special educational needs, Education and Library Boards are required to complete this process within the statutory timeframes outlined in the Education (NI) Order 1996 and the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs. Therefore waiting lists do not apply in relation to such assessments.

The Education and Library Boards have advised that the number of pupils for whom a decision has been made to carry out a statutory assessment and who were within the ten week period, allowed by statute, to complete the assessment, as at 31 December 2014, was as follows:

Board	Number of pupils
BELB	203
NEELB	177
SEELB	82
SELB	114
WELB	185

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to outline the assessed impact on pre-school education in North Down as a result of proposed budget cuts.

(AQW 40613/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Following the additional allocations to the Education budget announced in the Executive's Final Budget on 19 January 2015, I have restored the draft budget reduction to ensure that sufficient funding is available to meet the projected need for pre-school places across the north for the 2015-16 academic year.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education how many responses his Department received as part of the consultation exercise on the Department of Education's draft budget.

(AQW 40673/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The DE Draft Budget 2015-16 was published on 26 November 2014 and was open for public consultation until Monday 29 December 2014.

Up to and including 29 December 2014, my Department received a total of 23,052 responses. 6,643 were received via e-mail responses, 1,818 signatures submitted via an online petition and 14,591 hard copy responses were received via the post; this included 6,407 petition signatures.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to list the numbers of children in each Education and Library Board area supported by the Autistic Spectrum Disorder advisory service; and to detail the cost of the service.

(AQW 40676/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards (ELBs) have advised that the number of children supported by each ELB's Autistic Spectrum Disorder advisory service and the cost of that service, for the calendar year 1 January 2014 – 31 December 2014, is as follows:

	Number of Children	Total Cost (£)
BELB*	1,221	620k
NEELB	1,029	354k
SEELB	1,210	428k
SELB	1,161	642k
WELB	1,147	590k

* 2013/14 academic year and associated staff costs.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the proportion of his Department's budget allocated to controlled schools. (AQW 40681/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The amount spent on Controlled Schools (excluding Controlled Integrated and Controlled Irish Medium schools) in 2013/14 is shown in the table below:

Controlled Schools

Financial Year	Total Expenditure £000
2013/14	557,042

Note: This is the latest available data (from Board Outturn statements) - unaudited figures pending submission of audited Education and Library Board Outturn Statements to the Department.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the proportion of his Department's budget allocated to maintained schools. (AQW 40682/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The amount spent on Catholic Maintained Schools (excluding Other Maintained and Maintained Irish Medium schools) in 2013/14 is shown in the table below:

Maintained Schools

Financial Year	Total Expenditure £000
2013/14	532,729

Note: This is the latest available data (from Board Outturn statements) - unaudited figures pending submission of audited Education and Library Board Outturn Statements to the Department.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to outline all action taken by his Department in light of the judgement in HR (a minor)'s Application [2013] NIQB 105, which identified shortcomings in the "exceptional circumstances" definition for the allocation of free school transport.

(AQW 40708/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The judgement identified that Education & Library Boards had not made reference to exceptional circumstances in their application documents and indicated that this situation should be corrected.

The Belfast Education & Library Board against whom the judgement was made, as an interim measure amended their application form for September 2014 to include the following wording;

"Education boards may divert from the Department of Education's Circular 1996/41 where exceptional circumstances exist".

The matter was then further considered by the Regional Transport Officers group on behalf of all five Education & Library Boards. Accordingly, the Education & Library Boards' "Transport in Exceptional Circumstances" policy has been reviewed and updated in advance of the new school year starting in September 2015 to reflect the contents of the judgement. Legal opinion has been sought on the redrafted policy, and further to this it is intended that all revisions will be in place to coincide with the 2015 school transport application process which will begin in mid-April.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Education to detail the spend on youth services in North Belfast in each of the last three years, broken down by (a) capital; and (b) resources for each organisation that has received funding.

Mr O'Dowd: I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Education what evidence a primary school principal can provide to demonstrate to a parent, who is concerned about their child's education, that the full school curriculum is being taught.

(AQW 40756/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The statutory requirements for the revised curriculum are set out in legislation and cover the areas of learning, cross-curricular and other skills. Assessments are carried out (and reported to parents) in Communication and Using Maths using Levels of Progression at the end of Key Stages 1 and 2 in primary school. These assessments demonstrate (based on the judgment of the teacher in the classroom) the extent to which pupils have mastered, at these key points in their education, the knowledge and skills that our curriculum is designed to deliver.

The Education and Training Inspectorate monitor the quality of teaching and learning and, where appropriate, would raise concerns in an inspection report regarding the breadth and balance of the curricular provision. In demonstrating that the full school curriculum is being taught, a primary school principal may refer to the school's policies and planning and / or information for parents (for example, class newsletters to outline the curriculum for each year).

Where parents have concerns that a school is not providing a full and balanced curriculum, these concerns should be raised with the Principal in the first instance. Where attempts to settle the complaint informally in this manner have failed, parents can make a formal appeal to the Board of Governors.

If, following these processes, a parent remains dissatisfied with the decision of the Board of Governors, they may make a written complaint to the relevant Education Library Board. The Education Library Board should then set up an independent Curriculum Complaints Tribunal to hear the complaint, and when the complaint has been fully investigated and considered, the Tribunal will notify all parties of its determination. If it upholds the complaint, the Tribunal can give a notice for steps to be taken to remedy the matter.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education, further to his approval of the development proposal for the lower Mourne primary schools estate, what progress has been made in respect of the economic appraisal.

(AQW 40805/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I approved a development proposal for the amalgamation of St Joseph's PS, Ballymartin, Moneydarragh PS and St Mary's PS, Glasdrumman on 23 September 2014; effective from September 2015. Should the Mourne Primary Schools project be successful in any future major capital investment announcement an economic appraisal will be commissioned at that stage.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education how many school crossing patrols have been (i) established; (ii) withdrawn; and (iii) reinstated in each Education and Library Board in each month of the last three years.

(AQW 40818/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards have advised that the number of school crossing patrols that have been (i) established; (ii) withdrawn; and (iii) reinstated in the last three years, is as follows:

Year		BELB	NEELB	SEELB	SELB	WELB
2012	Established	1	0	0	0	0
	Withdrawn	0	1	3	2	2
	Reinstated	0	0	1	0	0
2013	Established	0	1	0	0	0
	Reinstated	0	0	1	0	0
2014	Established	1	0	0	1	1
	Withdrawn	1	2	3	3	2
	Reinstated	0	2	2	1	0

The information is not available for each month for all Boards.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) North Eastern Education and Library Board Youth Centres in North Antrim; (ii) the level of funding each organisation received last financial year to operate programmes; and (iii) the number of nights each centre was open and utilised.

(AQW 40822/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information requested is detailed in the table below:-

(i) Name of Youth Centre	(ii) Cost in the Financial Year 2013/14	(ii) No. of nights open/utilised
Ballee Community High School	£13,387	150
Ballykeel	£153,694	144
Broughshane	£59,159	78
Waveney	£98,572	212

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the affect the budget for 2015/16 will have on North Eastern Education and Library Board Youth Centres in North Antrim, including the services that will be reduced in each youth centre.
(AQW 40823/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Following the additional allocations to the Education budget announced in the Executive's Final Budget on 19 January 2015, I have restored the £2million draft budget reduction to the Education and Library Boards.

Detailed decisions on allocations to local youth centres will be determined by the Education and Library Boards in due course, but will take account of the final budgetary position.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Education for an update on the disposal of land owned by the North Eastern Education and Library Board at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey.

(AQW 40837/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) is currently taking steps to dispose of the land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey in accordance with Land and Property Services Central Advisory Unit guidance: Disposal of Surplus Public Sector Property in Northern Ireland (March 2013).

However this disposal is highly complex due to restrictive clauses imposed when the NEELB originally purchased the site from the Housing Executive (NIHE) in 1967. Sale of the land requires joint co-operation between the NEELB and the NIHE. Newtownabbey Borough Council is the sole applicant interested in acquiring the site and is seeking to do so at nil cost.

Transferring assets at less than 'best value' can only be carried out in 'highly exceptional circumstances', in line with Central Advisory Unit's guidance. My Department's officials are currently giving careful consideration to the Council's proposal, based on all available evidence, and a decision will issue as soon as is practicable.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Education what date the North Eastern Education and Library Board declared land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey as surplus to requirement.

(AQW 40838/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) declared the land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey as surplus to requirement in 1983.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Education to outline the public sector trawling process for the disposal of North Eastern Education and Library Board land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey.

(AQW 40839/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: All government bodies, including Education and Library Boards, are required to dispose of surplus assets in accordance with Land and Property Services Central Advisory Unit Guidelines: Disposal of Public Sector Property in Northern Ireland (March 2013). Details are available at: http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/lps/index/property_valuation/valuation-public-sector-bodies/disposal_of_surplus_public_sector_property.htm

Land and Property Services (the responsible Government Agency) has confirmed that the public sector trawl of the land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey issued on 23 July 2014.

Parties interested in the said land were then required to register an interest with Land and Property Services who in turn liaised with the North Eastern Education and Library Board and the Housing Executive (NIHE) (who is involved in the disposal process due to a restrictive clause on the site).

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Education to list the expressions of interest received following the public sector trawl process for the disposal of North Eastern Education and Library Board land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey, including the dates on which any expressions of interest were received.

(AQW 40840/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Land and Property Services (LPS) is responsible for all aspects of the public sector trawl process. LPS has confirmed that one expression of interest was received following the public sector trawl of the land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey. This was from Newtownabbey Borough Council on 28 July 2014.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education when the work to St Louis Grammar School in Ballymena under the School Enhancement Programme will be completed.

(AQW 40870/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The project for St Louis Grammar School, Ballymena to refurbish and extend the existing convent building to provide a creative and expressive arts facility, is well advanced in planning.

The Design Team is currently preparing the final designs for the project. Once the designs are complete they will be submitted to my department for review.

Once approval for the final design is given by the Department, the project will advance to the procurement phase subject to the necessary funding being available.

Given the budget constraints in FY15/16, SEP projects will be allocated budget at the point they are ready to be released for procurement of construction therefore the timescale for progressing the St Louis Grammar School project will be dependent on the point at which the design for the project has been completed and approved.

The speed of implementation of the project would then be dependent on availability of budget at monitoring rounds or in future years. The availability of capital budget beyond March 2016 is currently unknown.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Education to detail the status of all projects that are receiving funding under the School Enhancement Programme.

(AQW 40871/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There are currently 50 schemes progressing under the School Enhancement Programme. To date design teams have been appointed at 49 schemes. The process to appoint the remaining design team is well advanced. Seven SEP projects have either moved on site or are due on site by the end of January 2015 these are:

- | | |
|--|--|
| ■ Rainey Endowed School | ■ Knockevin Special School |
| ■ Maine Integrated Primary School | ■ Acorn Integrated Primary School |
| ■ Saintfield High School | ■ Millennium Integrated Primary School |
| ■ St Joseph's Primary School, Carnacaville | |

A further 11 schemes are at the tender stage and the remainder of the schemes are progressing well.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to detail the timescale for the launch of the policy on the education of looked after children.

(AQW 40927/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Work has commenced on the development of the policy on the education of looked after children. The aim is to have this in place in the 2015/16 school year.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education how he planned to spend the £5.6m originally allocated for Together: Building a United Community expenditure that he returned to the Department of Finance and Personnel.

(AQW 40965/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department was allocated £8.4m in 2014-15 as part of the Together Building a United Community (TBUC) Strategy of which £8.0m is for the Lisanelly Shared Education Campus and £0.4m is for the Integrated Schools Project.

At the January Monitoring Round, £5.4m was surrendered from the Lisanelly Shared Education Campus budget for the following reasons - the initial spend profile included estimates in the main for enabling works, design and construction fees. The profile changed throughout the financial year as a result of lower market prices reflected in the tender pricing for enabling works, in particular demolition of the main site, and due to re-phasing of the construction and design timetable resulting in the deferral of expenditure into 2015-16.

Steady and significant progress is being made with demolition of the main site due to take place over the next 12 months and construction of the main Arvalee campus due to commence this financial year. The opening of Arvalee remains on track for September 2016. The main campus comprising the five post-primary schools remains on schedule to open in September 2020.

The original £400k allocated to the Integrated Schools' Projects related to design/planning work at Corran IPS, Portadown IPS and Omagh IPS. The £200k in-year reduced requirement relates to delays on the Portadown project (associated with a development proposal regarding a possible change of size at the school) and the Corran project (discovery of a potential alternative site which is now being considered).

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Education to detail the maintenance costs associated with North Eastern Education and Library Board land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 40991/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The North Eastern Education and Library Board has confirmed the maintenance* costs, associated with land at Knockenagh Avenue, in each of the last five years to be as follows:

Year	Amount
2009/10	£210.00
2010/11	£3,050.00
2011/12	£1,052.00
2012/13	£1,120.00
2013/14	£1,440.00

*Maintenance appropriate for this particular asset includes grass cutting, rubbish removal and bonfire clearance.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education to detail the budget allocation for youth provision in the current Belfast Education and Library Board specifically for detached youth, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 40993/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Belfast Education and Library Board received an allocation of £730k for outreach/detached youth work in the financial year 2014-2015.

For operational efficiency outreach/detached youth workers are employed within 4 area based youth work teams across the city, these are not co-terminus with parliamentary constituency boundaries. The indicative year-end spend for each of these teams for outreach/detached youth work is:-

- North Belfast £210k
- South Belfast £170k
- East Belfast £160k
- West Belfast £190k

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education what plans he has to address the education and facility requirements of schools for pupils with special educational needs.

(AQW 40995/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The special educational needs (SEN) of children are met through a statutory framework including the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs. This involves a range of provision to meet the individual SEN of each child and includes support from the child's school and, where necessary, the relevant Education and Library Board.

ELBs are responsible for children in their area and, where necessary, determine the provision needed to meet a child's individual SEN. Educational provision for pupils with SEN may include placements in special schools, learning support centres in mainstream schools and mainstream classes, delivering a continuum of provision and ensuring that the diverse range of needs are met.

All Minor Works applications are considered and progressed in line with Ministerial priorities and within the context of available resources and competing priorities and pressures for investment across the schools' estate. The requirements of children with SEN tend to be considered under the heading of Health and Safety and Disability Discrimination Act (DDA) issues, which currently receive the highest priority.

The School Building Handbook, which set down standards for new schools, but which also informs consideration of Minor Works applications, makes provision for multi-purpose rooms which serve a wide range of functions, including therapist and healthcare visits.

If a Minor Works application relates to SEN it is supported by a report from an occupational therapist who will make appropriate recommendations. Examples of such Minor Work schemes have included hygiene and quiet rooms and special flooring to improve acoustics for children with hearing problems. DE also meets its statutory obligations under DDA in providing, for example, ramp access to school buildings.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education why assessment centres are not used as part of the recruitment process for school leaders.

(AQW 41027/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: For the purpose of this answer the term school leaders has been taken to mean school principals.

My Department is not responsible for the appointment of school Principals.

Within the controlled sector, each Education and Library Board (ELBs) has an established Teaching Appointments Committee Scheme (TACS), a copy of which is available from each Board.

Within the catholic maintained sector, the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) operates a scheme for the appointment of principals in maintained schools province-wide, a copy of which can be obtained from the Council. In the Voluntary Grammar, Grant Maintained Integrated, Irish Medium and other maintained sectors the Board of Governors of each school, as both the employer and employing authority, is responsible for the criteria, selection and appointment of principals in accordance with relevant employment legislation.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Education how many temporary posts of Senior Education Officer and above were created in each Education and Library Board in 2014; and of these posts, how many were awarded permanent status up to 31 December 2014, broken down by religious background.

Mr O'Dowd: There were no temporary posts of Senior Education Officer and above created in the Education and Library Boards in 2014.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Education (i) how much his Department pays annually for Trade Union officials; (ii) how many officials this payment covers; and (iii) what is the cost of administering Trade Union's dues.

(AQW 41062/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In the 2013/14 financial year, my Department paid staff costs of £67,025 in respect of 2.5 full-time equivalent (FTE) staff seconded to NIPSA.

HRConnect, as the payroll provider for the NICS, provides the facility to deduct trade union subscriptions from staff salaries. There is no charge levied for this service.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the number of graduates, who have a primary degree in a science discipline, who progress into primary and post-primary teaching positions.

(AQW 41068/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I refer to my answer to AQW 38063/11-15 tabled by Robin Swann and published in the Official Report on 21 November 2014, which details the position for primary school teachers with a science degree.

In relation to post primary school teachers, data held by the General Teaching Council (GTCNI) indicates that there are currently 894 teachers currently employed who hold a degree in which the main specialism is a science subject.

There may also be teachers employed in schools who hold a subsidiary science subject within their degree, or who have not advised the GTCNI of additional qualifications which they may hold over and above those required to teach here..

I am of course conscious of the importance of ensuring adequate appropriately trained science teachers in our schools. Consequently, when setting intakes to courses of initial teacher education my Department has advised the Higher Education Institutions to give priority to enrolling students to STEM subjects. The selection of students for entry to courses of initial teacher education is however a matter for the providing institution.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) capital; and (ii) resource spend on youth services in North Down in each of the last three years, broken down by organisation.

(AQW 41077/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education how primary school funding per head of child is determined; and for his assessment of funding per head in the Coleraine area.

(AQW 41121/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: All grant-aided schools receive a delegated budget under the Local Management of Schools arrangements. The formula funded budgets for schools reflect a range of factors including pupil year groups, additional funding support for smaller schools, funding to reflect social deprivation, premises and above average teaching costs etc. Details of the funding arrangements for schools are set out in the Common Funding Scheme, available on the Department's website: www.deni.gov.uk/schools and infrastructure/schools_finance/common_funding.

The overall average per capita funding for all primary schools in the Coleraine District Council area in 2014/15 was £3,013. This includes pupils in nursery classes within primary settings where applicable.

This represents recurrent funding delegated to schools in the current year and excludes other programme funds or centrally administered (non-delegated) funding such as home-to-school transport, meals services, statemented pupil costs etc. provided to schools outside of their delegated budgets.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail the average size of primary school class in (i) East Londonderry; and (ii) Coleraine, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 41124/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The table overleaf details the average primary school class size for East Derry constituency and Coleraine LGD. The figures relate to 2011/12, 2012/13 and 2013/14. Figures for 2014/15 will be available at the end of February.

Average primary school class size in East Londonderry constituency and Coleraine LGD, 2011/12 – 2013/14

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
(i) East Derry	23.0	23.6	23.6
(ii) Coleraine	23.3	24.1	24.3

Source: NI school census

Notes:

- 1 Data excludes learning support centre classes.
- 2 Figures include pupils in years 1 – 7 only.
- 3 Any composite classes including reception pupils have been included, but the class size excludes reception pupils

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to list the development proposals (i) that are awaiting Ministerial approval; and (ii) (a) agreed; and (b) rejected in the (i) current; and (ii) previous year.

(AQW 41154/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Information on development proposals is available on my Department's website.

A list of current proposals i.e. those that are awaiting my decision are available using the following link:

http://www.deni.gov.uk/current_development_proposals.htm

A record of decisions made since May 2011 is also available for each complete calendar year. The following links provide the information for the current and previous year, as requested:

http://www.deni.gov.uk/dp_decisions_2015-2.htm

http://www.deni.gov.uk/dp_decisions_2014.xls

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education (i) how much money has been expended on Community Relations, Equality and Diversity in Education scheme in 2013/2014, 2014/2015 (ii) how much will be allocated in 2015/2016; and to detail the organisations that have received funding.

(AQW 41155/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Total earmarked funding of £1,195,000 in 2013/14 and £1,228,000 in 2014/15 was allocated to the Community Relations Equality and Diversity in Education Enhancement (CRED) Scheme. The organisations that received funding from this budget in each of these years are listed in the tables below.

Following an evaluation of the impact of the CRED policy by the ETI and in the context of the challenging 2015/16 education budget, I am looking at how best to support the further embedding of the CRED policy and to explore the synergies with Shared Education in order to ensure that good work to date is built upon.

I have not yet, therefore, finalised the budget for 2015/16.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education whether the Community Relations, Equality and Diversity in Education scheme will be replaced by the mainstreaming of shared education initiatives.

(AQW 41156/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Total earmarked funding of £1,195,000 in 2013/14 and £1,228,000 in 2014/15 was allocated to the Community Relations Equality and Diversity in Education Enhancement (CRED) Scheme. The organisations that received funding from this budget in each of these years are listed in the tables below.

Following an evaluation of the impact of the CRED policy by the ETI and in the context of the challenging 2015/16 education budget, I am looking at how best to support the further embedding of the CRED policy and to explore the synergies with Shared Education in order to ensure that good work to date is built upon.

I have not yet, therefore, finalised the budget for 2015/16.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Education how the current curriculum and quality of teaching will be maintained following the impending redundancies.

(AQW 41161/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The curriculum has been designed to empower school leaders to take decisions at a local level, including investment in CPD to enable teachers and school leaders to continue to be highly effective. School leaders must allocate resources in a way which enables them to deliver the statutory curriculum and meet their students' needs.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education whether he will provide, or place in the Assembly Library, a copy of his Department's Child Protection Policy; and if the policy is applicable to all agencies under his remit.

(AQW 41169/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department's Child Protection Policy is set out in DE Circular 1999/10 and can be found on the DE website. This Circular sets out who should adhere to this policy.

I have arranged for a copy of DE Circular 1999/10 and 'Pastoral Care in Schools: Child Protection' to be placed within the Assembly Library.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education how much funding his Department has provided to the GAA in each of the last three financial years.

(AQW 41180/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education has made £750,000 available each year to the GAA in the last three financial years (2011/12, 2012/13 and 2013/14) to deliver the Curriculum Sports Programme to participating primary schools. The programme includes an equal payment for the IFA.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education whether his Department has provided support to the BT Young Scientist of the year competition or has formally encouraged Northern Ireland schools to participate.

(AQW 41206/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department provided funding of up to £36k this year to help cover the cost of accommodation grants, the prize fund and north of Ireland specific marketing activity. My Department also promotes the competition directly to schools and I host an annual reception in Parliament Buildings, prior to the finals in Dublin, in recognition of all north of Ireland schools that entered the competition. My Department also works with BT to maximise media coverage at key points in the competition's calendar such as at the entry stage and at the time of the finals in Dublin.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the importance and long term benefits of the BT Young Scientist of the Year competition, given that this year's event attracted 2,077 entries involving 4,616 students in 550 qualifying projects.

(AQW 41207/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The BT Young Scientist Exhibition is an important event in the calendar for many of our schools and the exhibition stimulates the interest and imagination of everyone who participates or visits each year.

Schools which recognise science and technology as a priority will help us create a workforce that can fill skills gaps in society and help drive our economy. They will also provide our pupils with the skills that they will need to take advantage of the opportunities offered by today's increasingly global economy.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of Catholic Maintained Schools in the last five years, including the number with fewer than 60 pupils.

(AQW 41209/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information below is taken from the annual school census. The figures for 2014/15 are currently provisional and will be finalised at the end of February.

Number of Catholic Maintained schools, and the number with enrolments fewer than 60, 2010/11 – 2014/15

Catholic Maintained Primary schools

	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
All schools	396	392	387	384	381

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education for an update on the survey on cross-border education.

(AQW 41211/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am committed to exploring the possibility of cross border schools provision where there is evidence of demand. The most obvious example being where the nearest school for a community is across the border rather than within the particular jurisdiction where pupils reside.

St Mary's High School in Brollagh is a case in point. In refusing to accept a proposal to close the school last summer I recognised that its isolated rural position and setting along the border required me to examine the proposal in a way that recognises these challenges.

I have asked the Western Education and Library Board and the Catholic Council for Maintained Schools to bring forward a pilot scheme which would allow the school to work with schools on the other side of the border. I expect a proposal to be with the Department by the end of February 2015.

This approach is in keeping with the commitment of both Education Ministers to the principle of co-operation on education matters for the mutual benefit of citizens in both jurisdictions.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education for a breakdown of the 2013/14 budget and the projected budgets for (i) 2014/2015; and (ii) 2015/16 for each Area Learning Community established to deliver the Entitlement Framework.

(AQW 41213/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department allocates the earmarked Entitlement Framework (EF) budget to individual schools rather than Area Learning Communities (ALCs). Each post-primary and special school working in an ALC receives two separate elements of EF funding support. Firstly, they each receive 3 thousand pounds per annum to support collaborative working within the ALC to facilitate the planning of the curricular offer on an area basis. The total amount available to an ALC therefore depends on the number of schools within it. The table below sets out the amount allocated to support collaborative working within each ALC based on the number of schools for the 2013/14 and 2014/15 financial years. It is not possible to provide a breakdown for the 2015/16 financial year as decisions on how the EF budget for 2015/16 will be allocated have yet to be finalised.

Secondly, each school receives a contribution towards the costs associated with the delivery of individual courses on a collaborative basis. The amount received by each school varies depending on the number and type of eligible courses provided.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education what percentage of development proposals for growth has the Education and Training Inspectorate supported; and what percentage of these has he supported and rejected in the last two years. (AQW 41214/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have made decisions on 40 development proposals for schools seeking an increase in enrolment in the last two years. The Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) has supported 34 of these proposals, or 85%. Of the 34 proposals supported by the ETI, I approved an increase in the enrolment at 27 of the schools concerned, or 79.4% and turned down seven, or 20.6% of the proposals supported.

I should add that the ETI provide advice based the quality of education provision at a school and their knowledge of the local area. This advice, however, is only one part of the assessment. All development proposals are considered on their own merit and are assessed against my Department's policies. In addition to the views of the ETI, all relevant comments received during the statutory objection period that follows publication of a DP are taken into account and due consideration is given to my Department's statutory duties in relation to Integrated and Irish Medium education, where appropriate.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Education how many meetings he has had with representatives from Epilepsy Action to help inform teachers with pupils who have epilepsy.

(AQW 41244/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: To date, I have received no requests for a meeting with representatives of Epilepsy Action to discuss these issues.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Education how his Department ensures teachers and classroom assistants are trained to manage pupils with epilepsy.

(AQW 41245/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards (ELBs) undertake a needs analysis, on an annual basis, of the training required by schools for the forthcoming academic year.

School principals are responsible for determining the training needs of their teachers and school staff and they can avail of the wide range of courses on all aspects of special educational needs, including epilepsy, through the ELBs.

Training with regard to health conditions, including epilepsy, would be provided by the relevant Health and Social Care Trust and will be in line with the pupil's individual healthcare plan and be subject to on-going review.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 40795/11-15, to detail (i) whether there is no such policy or legally binding order meaning Education and Library Boards can only accept a diagnosis of Asperger syndrome, Autism, Attention Deficit Hyperactivity Disorder and Dyslexia if it is provided by the relevant Education and Library Board or the Educational Psychologist; and (ii) in relation to the Code of Practice, whether this means the decision on the acceptance or non-acceptance of privately obtained diagnosis falls to the individual Education and Library Board, school and/or Board of Governors.

Mr O'Dowd: As stated in my response to AQW 40541/11-15, account is taken of private psychologists' assessments as outlined in paragraphs 3.55 and 3.57 of the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs.

While the Educational Psychologist (EP) from whom psychology advice is sought must be employed by the Education and Library Board or engaged by it for this purpose, the EP must consult, and record any advice received from any other psychologist, such as a clinical or occupational psychologist, who may have relevant knowledge of or information about the child. He or she should also be asked by the Board to consider any advice which parents may submit independently from a fully qualified educational psychologist.

Therefore, the issue of non-acceptance of private psychologists' assessment does not arise.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education for an update on the consultation regarding the future of Drumcree College, Portadown.

(AQW 41296/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is not engaged in any consultation regarding the future of Drumcree College.

However, I am advised that the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools is currently analysing responses to its consultation on the future of Drumcree College and that it expects to make a decision on whether or not to bring forward a development proposal for change in March this year.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the budget for the new controlled sector body.

(AQW 41299/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: A Working group has been established to support the establishment of the Controlled Schools' Support Council (CSSC). The Working group has submitted a grant application for the establishment and running costs of the CSSC. My officials have requested further information to support this grant application and will progress the necessary appraisals and approvals on receipt of this information.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what initiatives his Department is pursuing to encourage female pupils to study STEM subjects.

(AQW 41339/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department undertakes a wide range of interventions to promote the uptake in STEM subjects to all pupils. Sentinus, the Department's front line STEM delivery partner, secures in excess of 57,000 primary and post-primary pupil engagements annually across a portfolio of STEM enhancement and enrichment programmes. Sentinus provides an 'Insight into Engineering' programme which is specifically designed for girls, utilising female role models to help dispel misconceptions regarding engineering careers for females.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education what provisions exist, within post-primary secondary level schools, to support young people who have low to moderate disability needs to pursue paid employment opportunities.

(AQW 41363/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department recognises the importance of supporting young people with learning difficulties through the transition from school to adulthood, including paid employment opportunities. As such, statutory transition arrangements are well embedded in our post-primary schools for all pupils with statements of special educational needs (SEN).

The Education Transition Co-ordinators in each Education and Library Board (ELB) support the parent and young person through the transition process and work in conjunction with the Department for Employment and Learning's Careers Service and other key agencies, providing a co-ordinated approach and ensuring that connections for access to post-school education, careers advice, employment and health and social care sector supports are made.

For young people with SEN who do not have a statement, under the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of SEN, ELBs and schools should seek to provide appropriate help and guidance during the transition period.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education where the Education Authority will hold its meetings.

(AQW 41387/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: It will be a matter for the Board of the Education Authority to determine where it will hold its meetings. As a regional organisation with a strong local presence, the Authority will wish to ensure that it is accessible to the schools and communities it serves.

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether Northern Ireland has any access to the £30m Change Fund package announced by the Deputy Prime Minister in April 2014.

(AQW 39370/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): The Change Fund referred to in the question is a Cabinet Office led fund and is not available to NI Departments.

However the Executive has announced its own Change Fund, being administered by the Department for Finance and Personnel.

The £30 million fund announced by the Deputy Prime Minister in April 2014 is targeted at helping disadvantaged young people improve their prospects and preventing them from becoming Not in Education, Employment or Training (NEET). This will be delivered through Social Impact Bonds (SIBs).

My Department has a keen interest in promoting participation for all young people into education, including those who are NEET, and actively promotes further and higher education through all DEL programmes. I have submitted bids from across my Department to the Executive's Change Fund to help alleviate current budgetary pressures and to tackle the challenges facing our community.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many applications were received for the European Social Fund from the community and voluntary sector; and how many applications were received in total.

(AQW 40428/11-15)

Dr Farry:

a) 135 applications were received for the European Social Fund (ESF) as follows –

Further education college	6
Local council	5
Government Dept/Agency	0
Health Trust	1
Limited Company	30
Other - Unincorporated Association	1
Other - Social Enterprise	3
Other public sector organisation	1

Registered Charity	68
Voluntary/Community	20
Total	135

- b) All applications to the European Social Fund had to demonstrate how they met the Programme criteria and this will be assessed by independent panels scoring applications against the criteria. This should ensure that the applications enable the Department to deliver the Programme targets and outcomes agreed with the European Commission.
- c) All applicants to the ESF Programme must meet a financial capability assessment for the new Programme including demonstrating the capability of 10% net cash assets in their organisation's most recent set of annual accounts. One of the main reasons for introducing this specific condition is that the new ESF Programme for 2014-2020 has no facility for providing a 30% pre-payment advance. Any pre-payment advance is likely to be limited to 5% in each year of the new programme.

Given that actual ESF expenditure has to be paid out in full by an ESF project before submitting a claim to the ESF Managing Authority, a project must therefore have access to the relevant cash resources.

It is therefore imperative that a project has net cash assets to fulfil this requirement. If a project has no net cash assets, it would not be able to comply fully with the ESF financial claims process specified by the European Commission.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how he will ensure that European Social Fund criteria will help secure better overall outcomes.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, following a recent media report on the trebling of drugs seizures in schools and education facilities in the last year, what action he is taking both for students and tutors in this matter, particularly in respect of noting signs of potential drug abuse; and what input he is seeking or has received from other agencies and Departments.

(AQW 40472/11-15)

Dr Farry: Responsibility for pastoral care arrangements lies with governing bodies of Further Education (FE) colleges although my Department fully supports all initiatives undertaken by colleges to address drugs and substance abuse issues.

All six FE colleges have policy statements in place regarding drugs and substance abuse and misuse of alcohol.

The colleges are active throughout the year to make their students aware of the dangers of drugs and substance misuse. Each college has a number of policies in place to raise awareness, which are promoted through student induction, student handbooks, promotional leaflets and websites. The policies provide education on the detrimental effect of drugs and substance misuse and provide guidance to staff and students on the procedures to deal with incidents.

Colleges, in partnership with a range of external organisations, including the PSNI, Health and Social Care Trusts, and voluntary and community organisations, deliver training and awareness sessions for students and staff on drugs and substance misuse. These cover issues such as the implications of drug misuse, detecting the signs of drug misuse and sources of help.

FE colleges also provide support for the students through counselling services and welfare officers.

Higher Education

The four campus based Higher Education Institutions all have policy statements in place regarding drugs and substance abuse and misuse of alcohol.

The universities provide information to students on drugs and alcohol as part of the induction process and throughout the year through a range of media including handbooks, promotional leaflets, websites and wellbeing and health events. Support services are also available to students in the form of counselling, welfare and healthcare.

In addition, the Students' Unions work with a number of drug and alcohol charities and agencies to promote health issues around drugs and alcohol.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether he will make a bid in the January Monitoring round for funding for the Teaching Block at the Magee Campus of the University of Ulster.

(AQW 40524/11-15)

Dr Farry: The economic appraisal for the new teaching block at Magee is nearing the final stages of approval within my Department. It will then need to be approved by the Department of Finance and Personnel as the funding request is in excess of the Department's delegated limit of £5m. I would anticipate having all approvals in place in the near future.

The University of Ulster intends to commence construction during 2015-16 and to complete the development by 2019. Given this timescale, there was no advantage in making a bid for the project in the January monitoring round as any capital funding secured would have had to be spent by 31 March.

I fully support this project and will submit a bid for it during 2015-16 if capital funds cannot be found within my Department's baseline next year.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the effectiveness of the Learner Access and Engagement Programme in addressing educational underachievement and social disadvantage.

(AQW 40783/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Learner Access and Engagement (LAE) programme was initially introduced in 2008 as a pilot programme to engage with and encourage those most hard to reach and to provide learner support. The three year pilot was established in the absence of any other focused provision at that time. A longitudinal evaluation of this pilot in 2012 reflected that the programme had been successful on several fronts and demonstrated emerging evidence, at that time, of a need for this type of intervention, and the programme was mainstreamed as a result.

The last full year of the pilot programme recorded a total of 3,359 enrolments. However since mainstreaming, enrolment figures have been steadily declining with 2013/14 activity reflecting a total of 1,698 enrolments against a target of 4,500. Third party providers have not been as successful in attracting and retaining learners on the programme.

One of the significant impacts of the programme has been that further education colleges themselves, outside of LAE and within mainstream provision, have since built the capacity, awareness and expertise in targeting and engaging those most hard to reach into further education provision and increasing retention and delivering successful outcomes.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what support is being offered to the former employees of City Link.

(AQW 40794/11-15)

Dr Farry: Officials from my Department have been in contact with Ernst and Young, the administrators for City Link, who agreed that they would send a letter on behalf of my Department to staff affected by the closure of the company. This letter advises employees about the support DEL can provide and a local contact number is available for people to ring for assistance and further help.

The Department's Steps to Success programme includes opportunities for work experience placements, assistance to become self-employed, opportunities to gain a work related qualification and help with developing the skills needed to search for employment. Further support available includes information about alternative job opportunities, mentoring support, job clubs, assistance to write CVs, assistance with job application forms, help preparing for interviews and careers advice

Further advice is available through other government departments or agencies and DEL will be able to signpost the affected employees to these services which include information and help on benefits and taxation

Rest assured my staff will be available to any of the City Link employees made redundant to assist them in their endeavours to find alternative employment.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to list the organisations that received funding from the Collaboration and Innovation Fund, which is due to run out in March 2015.

(AQW 40852/11-15)

Dr Farry: Funding of £9.23 million has been allocated to 24 organisations under the Collaboration and Innovation Fund to support young people aged 16 to 24 who are not in education, employment or training (NEET).

These organisations are as follows:

- | | |
|------------------------------------|--|
| ■ Action for Children Services Ltd | ■ Fast Track into Information Technology |
| ■ Artillery Youth Centre | ■ GEMS NI Ltd |
| ■ Barnardos NI | ■ Include Youth |
| ■ Belfast Metropolitan College | ■ MACS Supporting Young People |
| ■ Bryson Charitable Group | ■ NIACRO |
| ■ Customized Training Services | ■ NOW Lto |
| ■ Derry City Council | ■ Start 360 |
| ■ Extern Organisation Ltd | ■ South Eastern Health & Social Care Trust |

- South Eastern Regional College
- South West College
- Southern Regional College
- Sport Changes Life Foundation
- The Appleby Trust
- The Prince's Trust
- Training for Women Network Ltd
- Youth Action NI

While funding under the Collaboration and Innovation Fund will cease at the end of March 2015, my department will continue to support young people not in education, employment or training through the new European Social Fund (ESF) Programme commencing in April 2015. Through ESF funding and the contribution from my department which equates to 65%, over £13.5 million will be made available to support this group of young people from April 2015 to March 2018, under the first call for funding. With the required 35% match funding, this will bring the total funding for this group of young people to almost £21 million over the three year period.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether payments from the European Social Fund, used for projects addressing the needs young people not in education, employment or training, will continue to require match funding. (AQW 40876/11-15)

Dr Farry: The intervention rate for the European Social Fund (ESF) in Northern Ireland is 40%. In the 2007-13 Programme, my Department provided 25% match funding to all successful projects, and it will seek to do the same in the 2014-20 Programme.

A further 35% match funding is still a requirement for the new ESF Programme and the responsibility of potential applicants. Match funding should come from a public or private funding source. Applicants were encouraged to engage with potential match funders in advance to discuss their application.

My Department engaged with potential match funders, ahead of the ESF 'Call for Applications' opening, to inform them of the new ESF Programme and ensure that they were open to such approaches.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of potential inward investors that have visited the Limavady area in each of the last three years. (AQW 40593/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): During the current financial year Invest NI has facilitated an inward investment visit by a major, US-owned company that included visits to the former Seagate premises at Dowland Road, Limavady, and the former Shackleton Barracks site in Ballykelly.

A potential investor's requirements will vary depending on the nature of the project, but a company will typically look at existing investors in the same business sector (Invest NI's key target sectors being ICT, business and professional services, financial services and renewables); universities and colleges that offer courses relating to that sector; and suitable, available property.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions she has had with Firmus Gas on the extension of the gas pipeline to Ballykelly and Greysteel. (AQW 40594/11-15)

Mrs Foster: As Ballykelly and Greysteel lie outside firmus energy's existing development area, extending the gas network to these towns will depend upon identification of sufficient gas loads and require an additional development plan to be approved by the Utility Regulator. firmus energy has advised that it intends to work with the Utility Regulator to obtain agreement on an economically viable proposal.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the potential number of new jobs that could be created as a result of Corporation Tax being devolved to Northern Ireland. (AQW 40685/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Economic Advisory Group (EAG) commissioned work back in 2011 that examined the impact of reducing Corporation Tax in Northern Ireland. This work examined a move to a reduced rate of 12.5% and estimated that this would create an additional 58,000 jobs.

Changes since 2011, most notably the further falls in the UK rate of Corporation Tax (to 20% from 2015/16), have already taken us part of the way towards this goal and prompted us to update the work previously undertaken by EAG. That updated work, carried out by the Ulster University Economic Policy Centre (formerly the Northern Ireland Centre for Economic Policy), focused on the economic benefit of moving from the new 20% UK rate to a lower Northern Ireland rate of 12.5%.

Initial findings of this work indicate that approximately 37,500 net additional new jobs could be created by 2033 if a 12.5% rate of Corporation Tax was implemented in 2017. These jobs will be created not only in those sectors that directly benefit from a reduced rate, but across all sectors which will see indirect benefits from the increased spending and jobs in the local economy.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for the percentage of her Department's overall Current Resource Expenditure allocated to staff wages in (i) 2013/14; and (ii) the 2014/15 draft budget.

(AQW 40734/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

- (i) The percentage of the overall Current Resource Expenditure allocated to DETI staff salaries in 2013-14 was 30.9%.
- (ii) It is forecast that 30.0% of the overall Current Resource Expenditure will be spent on staff salaries during the 2014-15 budget period.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for her assessment of the savings to be made by her Department from the public sector voluntary exit scheme, over each of the four financial years commencing 2014/15.

(AQW 40737/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The public sector Voluntary Exit Scheme (VES) is expected to be launched so as to deliver savings in 2015-16. Therefore savings cannot be delivered from the VES in 2014-15.

It is anticipated that DETI will need to reduce Civil Service posts by around 50 in 2015-16 through a combination of suppressing vacancies, redeployment, and accessing the VES. The actual numbers accessing the VES will be determined once the Scheme has launched and applications have been made.

At present there is no budget or savings target beyond 2015-16.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 39595/11-15, and the reference to restraint on Kilroot production from 2021, to correlate that to the reference in the 22 December 2014 paper from the Utility Regulator and her Department on Security of Electricity Supply in NI to restraint on Kilroot from 2016.

(AQW 40765/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The AES Kilroot plant will be impacted by the EU Emissions Directive requirements from January 2016 as noted in the joint Utility Regulator/DETI update paper on security of supply. The response to AQW 39595/11-15 notes that there will be an increased impact on the Kilroot plant from 2021 when constraints from EU emissions regulations further reduce Kilroot's generating output.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to explain and verify her claim that reducing Corporation Tax will enhance workers' earnings by £3000 per annum.

(AQW 40766/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Research undertaken by the Ulster University Economic Policy Centre demonstrates that a 12.5% rate of Corporation Tax could create approximately 37,500 net additional jobs in Northern Ireland. It is estimated that these jobs would be of higher value added and overall labour productivity in Northern Ireland would increase by around 6% by 2033.

This means that economic output, as measured by Gross Value Added (GVA), would be £3,000 higher per employee than without a rate reduction. GVA is largely made up of wages and profits – so this additional £3,000 will ultimately feed through into employee's wages.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the financial support provided to each organisation by InvestNI in each of the last three years.

(AQW 40776/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Over the past 3 years (2011-12 to 2013-14), Invest NI has made offers of financial support to over 4,700 organisations. The table required to answer the question posed would include this number of entries.

In addition, to prevent Invest NI from releasing commercially sensitive information, the relevant Invest NI Executives would need to consult with each individual company to ensure that they are content to be included in this list. This administrative exercise would incur disproportionate cost.

Perhaps the member would be willing to consider a revised question that would enable Invest NI to supply a more specific list of companies appropriate for his needs.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether there will now be a local Events Fund as a result of the increased allocation to her Department in the revised Budget 2015/16.

(AQW 40916/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Events play a key role in driving tourism to Northern Ireland and therefore I am delighted to announce that I have secured £1million for Tourism Northern Ireland's (Tourism NI) Tourism Events Funding Programme in the final budget settlement for 2015/16.

Tourism NI is currently working up the detail of this, however I expect Tourism NI to open both the International and the National Events Fund in early February and would encourage all tourism events to start developing their applications and proposals for submission to Tourism NI.

In 2014/15 Tourism NI committed approximately £1.2 million to the National Tourism Events Sponsorship Scheme supporting 63 events.

In addition, it committed approximately £1.5 million to the International Tourism Events Fund to cover 12 international events in 2014/15.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the (i) number of jobs created; and (ii) financial expenditure provided to businesses by InvestNI in each of the last three years, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 40937/11-15)

Mrs Foster:

Note: There was an additional £0.9m of assistance offered to projects that have not yet identified a location to set up business.

It should be noted that the information in Table 2 is not directly related to the information in Table 1, as Table 2 contains support for all Invest NI interventions, not just those relating to job creation.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what policies are in place to assist council areas with lower than average tourist visitor numbers and lower than average tourist spend per visitor.

(AQW 40997/11-15)

Mrs Foster: As a named Statutory Partner in the Community Planning process Tourism Northern Ireland has been engaging with the 11 new Council Chief Executives to determine tourism development priorities in each of the new Local Authority areas. These development priorities will be reflected in the respective Council Community Plans as they are progressed.

New Councils will play a leading role in the development of local tourism priorities. Through the community planning process Tourism NI will work with them to define the role of tourism as an investment opportunity within each of their districts.

In terms of evaluating average visitor numbers, the tourism product offering obviously differs across each of the Local Authority areas and as such so will the volume and value of visitors.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list the nine key tourism destinations.

(AQW 41055/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The draft Tourism Strategy for Northern Ireland to 2020 identifies nine key destinations:

- Belfast City & Greater Belfast
- Londonderry
- Armagh
- Mourne Mountains
- Strangford Lough
- Causeway Coast and Glens
- Lough Neagh and Its Waterways
- Fermanagh Lakelands
- Tyrone & Sperrins

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the amount of funding she is allocating to the (i) International Tourism Events Fund; and (ii) Tourism Events Sponsorship Scheme for 2015/16.

(AQW 41059/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I have allocated £1 million to the Tourism Events Funding Programme. The breakdown of that fund is the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board (NITB).

I believe NITB is currently working up the detail on the Events Fund and will be communicating this to the events industry over the next week.

Department of the Environment

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment what lessons have been learned from the recent collapse of the wind turbine on Screggagh wind farm; and to detail the consequences for future permissions of the extensive spread of the debris, given the duty of care owed to the public.

(AQW 40478/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): I am aware that investigations into the collapse of the turbine at Screggagh Wind Farm are currently being carried out. I look forward to the findings from these investigations which I intend to fully consider in terms of any implications that they may have on my Department's planning policy for Renewable Energy.

Although my Department does not have any responsibility for the physical construction, mechanical integrity or the maintenance of wind turbines, I am committed to working with Executive Colleagues as well as the Renewable Energy Industry on any findings that may arise from the ongoing investigations into this incident at Screggagh wind farm and any implications that there may be for my Department's Renewable Energy Planning Policy.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 39802/11-15, of the number of staff who requested an illustration of entitlements under the Northern Ireland Civil Service Administrative Assistant and Administrative Officer Voluntary Exit Scheme, how many submitted a formal application to leave under the terms of the Scheme.

Mr Durkan: A total of 783 eligible staff registered an interest in receiving an illustration of entitlements under the Scheme. The closing date for these staff to submit a formal application to exit under the terms of the Scheme was Wednesday 7 January 2015.

The number of eligible staff who submitted a formal application to exit was 223.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on timescales for the Factory Girl Sculpture for Derry City.

(AQW 40542/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department has not received a planning application for the erection of the Factory Girls Sculpture in Harbour Square, Derry. I am aware that further pre application discussions have recently taken place. My planning officials have met with officials from Derry City Council and have engaged with Northern Ireland Environment Agency staff in my Department regarding the proposed development and further discussions with TransportNI are required. It is anticipated that a planning application will be forthcoming in the next two months.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) the cost to his Department of (a) heating; and (a) electricity in 2014; and (ii) the capital costs and details of the five most cost effective projects which his Department could undertake to generate its own energy or reduce energy costs.

(AQW 40560/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Heating costs for the Department of the Environment for 2013/14 reporting year of (a) heating, which included Gas, Oil and Biomass, were £605,790; and (b) the cost of electricity was £1,141,840.

My Department is committed to the future generation of its own energy and the continuing reduction of its energy costs and recently completed its third report on energy performance, costs and carbon footprint for 2013/14. The report highlights usage trends and, importantly, performance against the Carbon Reduction Commitment Energy Efficiency Scheme, a UK wide mandatory scheme.

In terms of specific projects, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) has carried out work on the Roe Valley Country Park Hydro Electric Restoration Scheme in two phases which involved restoration of the entire millrace and replacement of the inlet, spillway sections and turbine at costs of £1.2 million and £1.7 million respectively. Once generation commences, it is expected to provide an annual income of £100k which may be invested in other sources of renewable energy.

The energy efficiency measures introduced to the Ness Country Park Visitor Centre, which include rainwater harvesting and Reed Bed Filtration systems to turn sewage into clean water, cost £227,825.

The Biodiversity Education Centre at Peatlands Park cost approximately £230k.

The NIEA is procuring 95% of its electricity needs from green energy sources and following recent investment in voltage optimisation at key sites, usage has decreased by over 10% since 2010/11 despite increased use of the buildings outside normal office hours.

The NIEA participated in the 16th Northern Ireland Environmental Benchmarking Survey which is managed by Business in the Community. This survey assesses the performance of 250 of Northern Ireland's largest organisations. The Agency received a 'Platinum' award in November 2014 showing that the Agency's environmental performance is amongst some of the top performers.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment whether he addressed Parkgate residents' concerns when considering planning applications (a) T/2005/1054/F; and (b) T/2005/0977/F.

(AQW 40569/11-15)

Mr Durkan: These applications remain under consideration. All relevant considerations will be taken fully into account before a final decision is made, including the views and representations from local residents.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment how many planning officers will be required to relocate to the new East Coast Borough Council.

(AQW 40604/11-15)

Mr Durkan: There are 24 specialist planning staff transferring to North Down & Ards Council.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of breaches of Tree Preservation Orders in each of the last three years.

(AQW 40606/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Table 1 below details the number of breaches of Tree Preservation Orders in each of the last three complete financial years, and up to quarter 2 of 2014/15.

Table 1

Year	No of Breaches
2011/12	23

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 38711/11-15, why the questions are mutually consistent.

(AQW 40608/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The questions you referred to in AQW 38711/11-15 related to two different issues, however, I believe the answers provided are mutually consistent in that they are not contradictory.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment to provide details of the Landfill Communities Fund, including (i) the total claimed by each council in each year since the fund was established; (ii) the total paid out in grants by each council since the fund was established; and (iii) the current accumulated balances held by each council.

Mr Durkan: Landfill Tax is a reserved matter and is administered by HMRC on behalf of the Treasury.

All of the revenue that is raised through landfill tax in Northern Ireland goes to the UK Exchequer. Since 2003/04, as a Barnett consequential, Northern Ireland has received an allocation from the landfill tax. However, there is no direct link between the area in which the revenue is raised and where it is spent. The use of all funding that is allocated through the Barnett formula is a matter for the Executive.

Some further monies raised through landfill taxes are returned to Northern Ireland through the Landfill Communities Fund (LCF). The Fund (formerly the Landfill Tax Credit Scheme) enables landfill site operators to claim tax credit for contributions they make to approved environmental bodies for spending on projects that benefit the environment. The environmental bodies are those enrolled by ENTRUST, the regulatory body for the scheme.

Only councils that operate landfill sites are eligible to participate in the scheme and they may make contributions to environmental bodies, which will then hold the balance of any unspent funds. Details of the total annual amounts claimed, and the amounts paid out to environmental bodies by councils in each year since the fund was established are contained in the attached tables.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment what percentage of the Military Covenant his Department has adopted as policy; and what percentage has been implemented.

(AQW 40634/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am aware that this matter was addressed in Parliamentary debate on 22 October 2014 where it was reported that at least 93 per cent of all measures under the Covenant had been extended to Northern Ireland or were soon to do so, with liaison arrangements already in place in areas such as healthcare and housing.

As the scope of the Covenant does not directly relate to the services provided by my department it is not practicable, at this time, to adopt the Covenant as departmental policy nor, therefore, to confirm what percentage has been adopted.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 39218/11-15, whether planning approval K/2013/0072/F permitted the deposition of large quantities of processed aggregates on site; and if so, where in the planning approval are the detailed drawings showing the proposed levels and cross-sectional drawings normally required of such proposals.

Mr Durkan: My Department is satisfied that the importation of granular fill material for use in the level siting of structures and creation of access paths was included within the planning application submission K/2013/0072/F.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the total number of anaerobic digesters operating in Northern Ireland, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 40668/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department does not maintain a record of the total number of anaerobic digesters operating in Northern Ireland broken down by constituency and I am unable to provide any statistics on the numbers of operational anaerobic digesters.

However, by way of some assistance, details of the number of planning applications for Anaerobic Digestors received and decided since 2007/8, broken down by constituency, is provided in the table below. It is important to note that the number of applications approved will not necessarily equate to the number of operating Anaerobic Digestors as it is not known whether the permission has been implemented. Since 2007/8 the Department has approved 117 applications for anaerobic digesters.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to a private hire taxi operator illegally parked on double yellow lines in Waring Street, Belfast on the evening of 3 January 2015, whether a booking record has been (i) sought; and (ii) provided for the alleged fare.

Mr Durkan: This complaint is currently the subject of an ongoing investigation by the Driver & Vehicle Agency and it would therefore be inappropriate to comment on any aspect of the matter at this time.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what examination his Department completed of the templates for functioning models of approved taxi meter centres operating in the Republic of Ireland and the rest of Europe.

(AQW 40701/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department conducted extensive online searches to identify robust taximeter approval, calibration, sealing and testing services in the UK, Republic of Ireland and the rest of Europe. On completion of these searches, two Taxi Licensing Authorities were identified as having sufficiently robust systems in place that could inform the development of the Department's solution for taximeter approval, installation, calibration, sealing and testing services. These authorities were Transport for London and the Legal Metrology Service (NSAI) in the Republic of Ireland.

Department officials met with both Transport for London and the Legal Metrology Service to examine their models for taximeter approval, installation and verification.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment how and when he met his Section 75 obligations in respect of his proposal that the Union flag should not appear on Northern Ireland driving licences.

(AQW 40707/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Driver licensing is a transferred matter under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. Under the provisions of the Road Transport (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. My Department has responsibility for a broad range of matters relating to the licensing of vehicle drivers, including the form of the driving licence.

In 2012, when the UK Government announced its intention to include the Union flag on Great Britain driving licences, Department for Transport (DfT) Minister Mike Penning wrote to my predecessor to advise him of this intention. Minister Penning's letter noted that driver licensing is a devolved matter but that the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) in Swansea prints Northern Ireland driving licences under contract. Minister Penning indicated his intention that DVLA would continue to print Northern Ireland driving licences without change to the existing design. He asked for a view on this.

Further to this correspondence, officials in my Department engaged with DVLA to ascertain whether it would be possible to provide individuals with an option to choose whether to include or exclude the flag. DVLA however indicated that this would not be possible, as the costs involved in making the system and associated changes required to offer such a choice were prohibitive.

The response to DfT, confirming agreement to DfT's proposal, took account of the sensitivities identified in the Good Friday Agreement about the use of symbols and emblems here, and of the Department's responsibilities under Section 75 (2) of the Northern Ireland Act to have regard to the desirability of promoting good relations.

My Department received no further correspondence in respect of the UK Government's plans for GB driving licences until a letter from DfT Minister John Hayes dated 23 December 2014, indicating that the plans for GB licences would be announced over the Christmas period, and that Northern Ireland driving licences would continue to be printed by DVLA without the Union flag.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 39218/11-15, whether the processed aggregate was required to be screened for invasive species prior to being deposited on site; and if so, whether it was screened.

(AQW 40712/11-15)

Mr Durkan: There is currently no legal requirement to screen processed aggregate for the presence of invasive species. The only proviso is for the operator to ensure that under The Wildlife (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 Schedule 9 part 2, they do not intentionally cause invasive species to spread in the wild by their actions.

The responsibility to ensure this would lie with the site management. If any invasive species was confirmed on the site where the material was extracted from, then the contractor would be obliged to ensure, by whatever means, that they were not spread to another site.

If a landowner wishes to excavate or remove an invasive species from a site, then the removal and disposal of this 'controlled non-hazardous waste' is regulated under the Waste and Contaminated Land (NI) Order 1997 articles 4 (1a) and 4 (1b) and by the Waste Management Licensing (NI) Regulations 2003 schedule 2.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 39218/11-15, to detail (i) whether his Department is aware of where the processed aggregate was mined from; (ii) whether this quarry has planning permission and complies fully with environmental regulation; and (iii) what tonnage of processed aggregates were deposited on site.

(AQW 40716/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department understands that the majority of the granular aggregate material is from a quarry site in Cookstown.

This quarry benefits from planning approval for extraction and the Department is not aware of any current enforcement action for non compliance.

It is understood approximately 8,000 tonnes of material was imported across the site for the construction of roads and foundations for buildings and other structures.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 38950/11-15, why a consent to discharge was granted subsequent to planning approval K/2013/0072/F which contradicts planning conditions 25 and 26; and why Northern Ireland Environment Agency Natural Heritage, which insisted on the imposition of these conditions, is now refusing to comment on the proposal to remove them.

(AQW 40717/11-15)

Mr Durkan: NIEA are content that no conflict exists between the requirements of the Planning Approval and the conditions of the discharge consent relating to this proposed development.

The principle objective of conditions 25 and 26 of the Planning Approval, and that of the discharge consent, are the protection of the integrity of the Owenkillew SAC, and the conditions have been formulated accordingly. The suspended solids level of 10 milligrams per litre stipulated on the Planning Approval has been set in order to maintain favourable condition status for the Freshwater Pearl Mussel present in the catchment. The discharge consent limit of 50 milligrams per litre does not compromise the achievement of this objective. The reasoning for this is due to the dilution effect. The proposed discharge enters the Owenkillew via the Curraghinalt Burn, and as such is diluted firstly by the existing flow in the Curraghinalt Burn, then by that in the Owenkillew upon the confluence of the two waterways.

The NIEA Natural Environment Division did not refuse to comment on the Article 28 application but rather deferred judgment to water quality experts within Water Management Unit.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of the Environment for the percentage of his Department's overall Current Resource Expenditure allocated to staff wages in (i) 2013/14; and (ii) the 2014/15 draft budget.

(AQW 40735/11-15)

Mr Durkan: For 2013/14 61.2% of my Department's Current Resource Expenditure was allocated to staff wages.

For 2014/15 58.1% of my Department's Current Resource Expenditure has been allocated to staff wages.

It should be noted that an element of both figures are covered by fee income which is not included in the Resource DEL allocations.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment (i) how many gifts, or offers, of hospitality have been received by staff in the Driver and Vehicle Agency Licencing Department and Enforcement Department, from companies or individuals, per year for the last three years; (ii) what the gifts or hospitality were; (iii) whether the gifts were properly declared; and (iv) who offered the gifts.

(AQW 40746/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The following table contains answers to each part of the question.

Year		Number of gifts or offers of hospitality	Description of gift or hospitality	Gifts/ hospitality properly declared (Yes/No)	Accepted (Yes/No)	Who offered gift or hospitality
2012	Enforcement	1	Gift bag with bottle	Yes	No	Belfast Bus Company
2013	Licensing	1	Posy of Flowers	Yes	Yes	Customer (name unknown)
	Enforcement	1	Chocolates	Yes	No	Value Cabs
2014	Enforcement	2	Export and Freight Awards dinner	Yes	Yes	Road Haulage Association Ltd
			Box of chocolates and biscuits	Yes	Yes	Cavehill Coaches

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether the applicant is in full compliance with condition 14 of planning permission application K/2013/0072/F and planning condition 2 of planning permission application K/2014/0387/F; and what action his Department intends to take if these road safety conditions are being breached.

(AQW 40779/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Condition 14 of K/2013/0072/F and Condition 02 of K/2014/0387/F require visibility splays to be in place prior to commencement of development. My Department has consulted with Transport NI and is satisfied that acceptable access standards are in place. Accordingly, my Department does not intend to pursue this matter further.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment why the investigation into illegal landfilling at 91 Glenshane Road, Drumahoe was closed; and whether it is his Department's position that illegal landfilling at the site ceased prior to 1992.

(AQW 40780/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The investigation carried out by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency was closed because investigations of the site did not yield any evidence of the deposition of recent material or demonstrate the presence of significant quantities of the wastes – metal, plastic etc. – which had allegedly been deposited there.

As regards historic in-filling of the site; the Department has previously reviewed the planning history of the site and available aerial photographs, and is satisfied that any illegal landfilling that may have taken place would have been deposited prior to May 1992. It is therefore immune from enforcement action because the infilling precedes the primary legislation used to regulate and enforce the management of waste in Northern Ireland.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what role his Department or any of its agencies have in regulating hedge cutting.

(AQW 40812/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department, and its agencies, have no role in regulating hedge cutting, although it has created legislation to require local government to arbitrate in disputes between neighbours over the impact of certain hedges causing a loss of the reasonable enjoyment of property.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what percentage of planning officers will (i) transfer to new councils; and (ii) be retained centrally.

(AQW 40817/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Under local government reform proposals my department will, on 1 April 2015, transfer circa 87% of its current specialist planning workforce to the 11 new Council clusters.

This means that circa 13% of the current specialist planning workforce will be retained in the Department.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to Dalradian Resources' Curraghinalt Mine, what requirements are in place to notify local residents of underground mine explosions prior to detonation.

(AQW 40833/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department has strictly conditioned the limits allowed for blasting operations but does not impose requirements on the operator to notify neighbours.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment why Northern Planning Division withdrew its recommendations to approve planning applications (i) A/2007/0488/F; (ii) A/2007/0530/F; and (iii) A/2013/0400/F from the December 2013 Derry City Council schedule.

(AQW 40834/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Following receipt of an objection dated 28 November 2014, the Department felt it was necessary to withdraw all three applications from the December 2014 Derry City Council schedule. This was to enable the full consideration of the issues raised. The objection cited concerns with screening for Environmental Impact Assessment and Habitats Regulation Assessment. Procedural queries were also raised. These matters are now being addressed by staff in the Area Planning Office and the Northern Ireland Environment Agency

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to outline his concerns over the Northern Planning Division presenting recommendations to approve planning applications (i) A/2007/0488/F; (ii) A/2007/0530/F; and (iii) A/2013/0400/F to Derry City Council in December 2014, without first having undertaken Environmental Impact Assessment determinations; and for his assessment of whether this is an indication of procedural inadequacies in the corporate decision making process, so close to the transfer of planning functions to the new council.

(AQW 40835/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Area Planning Office made a judgement on receipt of the three applications that screening under the Environmental Impact Regulations was not necessary as the sites were not wholly or partly within a sensitive area and the proposed development did not fall within Schedule 1 or Schedule 2 of the Regulations. I do not consider this to be an indication of procedural inadequacies in the corporate decision making process, but rather a professional opinion made on the basis of information available at that time. However in considering an objection to the proposals received on 28 November 2014, the Area Planning office and the Northern Ireland Environment Agency are currently reconsidering this issue and the information will be made available to the public and the objector once the Department is in a position to do so.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether planning approvals issued after 1 April 2015 without first having been subject to an Environmental Impact Assessment determination, where one was required by law, will become the responsibility, and liability of the new councils.

Mr Durkan: If an application has not been determined by 1 April 2015 and transfers to the appropriate council, it will be determined by that council.

Liabilities arising from the granting of planning permission after 1 April 2015 will rest with the planning authority responsible for granting that permission i.e. the relevant Council or Department.

The Environmental Impact Assessment Regulations both currently and after 1 April 2015 prohibit planning authorities from granting planning permission or subsequent consent for EIA development without consideration of environmental information where appropriate.

Mr Wilson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of listed church buildings in East Antrim.

(AQW 40844/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Based upon the 1974 ward boundaries – which are how the department holds such records – the total number of listed church buildings in the East Antrim area is 35.

You will be aware, however, that there have been boundary changes since 1974. As such, the figures should not be taken as definitive in relation to the current boundaries.

I attach, in response to your question

- 1 A list of the 35 church buildings that are Listed, their address and listing status.
- 2 A list of the 1974 electoral wards that were used to provide the detail in the above list.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 38630/11-15, for a breakdown of the offences that resulted in a £200 Fixed Penalty Notice.

(AQW 40873/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As confirmed in my response to AQW 38630/11-15 there were no operators issued with a £200 Fixed Penalty Notice where a driver of a licensed private hire taxi has picked up passengers without a pre-booking within Belfast City limits.

However, I can confirm that from 1 January 2014 to 30 September 2014 the breakdown of offences that resulted in a £200 Fixed Penalty Notice being issued to a taxi operator is as follows:

Offences under the Taxis Act (NI) 2008	Number of Fixed Penalty Notices Issued
Operating a taxi service without a taxi operator licence	24
Operating a taxi service using an unlicensed taxi or a taxi driven by a person who does not hold a taxi driver licence	36
Total	60

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what checks are carried out on working hours of taxi drivers to ensure there is not a breach of the Working Time Directive.

(AQW 40879/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Road Transport (Working Time) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2005 came into effect on 16 June 2005 and apply to mobile workers, including drivers of heavy goods and public service vehicles subject to European Drivers' Hours rules.

Taxi drivers do not fall within scope of these regulations and as such the Department does not carry out checks on their working hours.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of self-employed private hire taxi drivers with operators' licences operating in Belfast, not employed by any taxi firm.

(AQW 40892/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The following table provides a breakdown of the latest official figures showing the current number of licensed taxi vehicles.

As at 30 September 2014:
Public Restricted	6,669
Private Hire	1,587
Belfast Public Hire	440
Taxi Bus	208
Total	8904

Note: Figures sourced from DOE Official Statistics published as of 30 September 2014.

Information is not stored on the Taxi Licensing IT system in a way that would facilitate your request to detail the number of self-employed private hire taxi drivers with operator's licences operating in Belfast, not employed by any taxi firm.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment what role his Department has in overseeing issues affecting the transfer of services since the Driver and Vehicle Agency moved services to Swansea.

(AQW 40893/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Vehicle licensing is a statutory responsibility of the Department for Transport in Whitehall. Previously these services were delivered in Northern Ireland by the DOE under an agency agreement with the Department for Transport. Despite my appeals to the Secretary of State for Transport, vehicle registration and licensing services were centralised within the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) in Swansea on 21 July 2014. From that date, operational responsibility for the delivery of vehicle registration and vehicle excise duty in Northern Ireland transferred to DVLA.

Following the transfer, I was aware that the DVLA were experiencing a number of transitional issues which were affecting local customers. I wrote to the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Robert Goodwill MP, on 13 August 2014, on behalf of Northern Ireland customers to express my disappointment that the level of service provided by DVLA was not of the high standard expected in Northern Ireland.

In response to my letter, Claire Perry MP, replied confirming that she was aware that there were issues with a small number of records, reassuring me that these would be rectified as a matter of priority. DVLA have since stated, at official level, that the initial teething problems have been rectified.

From the date of transfer, access to DVLA's computer systems and the Northern Ireland records contained within it, was withdrawn from Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) staff removing any capacity for my Department to monitor or resolve any complaints or specific issues raised.

Whilst I am sympathetic to the issues now being faced by local motorists, I must refer you to DVLA to address any specific query in relation to the delivery of this service.

Should you need to highlight a particular issue on behalf of a constituent you can raise it directly with the DVLA at the address below:

Mr Oliver Morley
Chief Executive
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency
Swansea SA6 7JL

There is also a dedicated telephone number and email address for MPs and other elected representatives, including MLAs, to contact DVLA on behalf of their constituents. Emails should be sent to dvlaministerials@dvla.gsi.gov.uk, or alternatively the telephone number is 01792 788585.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of meetings he, or his officials, had with the Driver and Vehicle Agency in Swansea to monitor service provision in Northern Ireland following the transfer of services.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment what new environmental information was submitted after 10 September 2014 which has warranted a change in the Northern Ireland Environment Agency's position from one of recommending refusal on the basis of serious environmental concerns, to one of agreeing to approve a licence to abstract water for AIL/2008/0240; and why the Water Management Unit is not prepared to comment on whether such information was received, or make that information available to the public through open file inspection.

Mr Durkan: I can confirm that no new environmental information, relating to this application, was received after 10 September 2014.

However NIEA did seek further clarification from the Loughs Agency in relation to their initial consultation response to the application.

The Loughs Agency responded on 17 October 2014 and NIEA subsequently conducted a review of the application documents in light of the Loughs Agency response.

The review concluded that potential environmental impacts resulting from the development could be mitigated through a conditioned Abstraction and Impoundment Licence.

NIEA has not made a final determination on this application as the applicant is now considering the draft conditions.

Under regulation 24 and Schedule 3 of the Abstraction & Impoundment Licensing Regulations NIEA is required to hold a Public Register. These Regulations stipulate and list the documents that must be available on the Public Register. The Register is available to the public to view upon request and includes undetermined abstraction licence applications. NIEA is fully compliant with its statutory duty under these Regulations and with its overall duty to provide access to information as established by the Aarhus Convention.

My own involvement in this application resulted from a complaint to my office by the applicant in relation to the delay in NIEA determining his application.

In response to the complaint I facilitated a meeting between NIEA and the applicant on 30 April 2014. I have also corresponded with the applicant to keep him abreast of progress in the determination of his application by NIEA.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the full extent of his involvement in the case of the Ballyarton hydro-electric proposal on the River Faughan Special Area of Conservation which has led to the change in the Northern Ireland Environment Agency's position from one of recommending refusal based on serious environmental concerns to one of being prepared to grant a licence to abstract water for application AIL/2008/0240.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the impact of the outcome of the 2015/16 Budget, after inescapable spending commitments have been met, on each service and activity currently supported by his Department. (AQW 40938/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Under the final Budget for 2015-16, my Department's non ring-fenced Resource DEL budget was reduced by 10.7% to £104.2 million, the highest percentage reduction of all the Departments.

Reductions of such magnitude will mean that 2015-16 will be an exceptionally challenging year for my Department. The financial allocations in the final Budget will have significant adverse implications for the services provided by my Department and for its clients, stakeholders and staff.

In order to deliver on its core statutory obligations and ensure protection of public health the Department will have to reduce activity across a wide range of discretionary functions and withdraw funding to a wide range of external bodies while seeking to implement substantial reductions in staff numbers under central Civil Service voluntary exit schemes.

The Department is actively assessing which discretionary functions will be affected. It is expected that a wide range of grant and other support programmes that are aimed at supporting key environmental programmes will be affected. Further details will be provided to the Environment Committee once final decisions have been taken on the position.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what equality proofing was completed prior to the decision to deny drivers in Northern Ireland the opportunity to have the Union Flag contained on their driving licence. (AQW 40996/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Driver licensing is a transferred matter under the Northern Ireland Act 1998. Under the provisions of the Road Transport (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. My Department has responsibility for a broad range of matters relating to the licensing of vehicle drivers, including the form of the driving licence.

In 2012, when the UK Government announced its intention to include the Union flag on Great Britain driving licences, Department for Transport (DfT) Minister Mike Penning wrote to my predecessor to advise him of this intention. Minister Penning's letter noted that driver licensing is a devolved matter but that the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) in Swansea prints Northern Ireland driving licences under contract. Minister Penning indicated his intention that DVLA would continue to print Northern Ireland driving licences without change to the existing design. He asked for a view on this.

Further to this correspondence, officials in my Department engaged with DVLA to ascertain whether it would be possible to provide individuals with an option to choose whether to include or exclude the flag. DVLA however indicated that this would not be possible, as the costs involved in making the system and associated changes required to offer such a choice were prohibitive.

The response to DfT, confirming agreement to DfT's proposal, took account of the sensitivities identified in the Good Friday Agreement about the use of symbols and emblems here, and of the Department's responsibilities under Section 75 (2) of the Northern Ireland Act to have regard to the desirability of promoting good relations.

My Department received no further correspondence in respect of the UK Government's plans for GB driving licences until a letter from DfT Minister John Hayes dated 23 December 2014, indicating that the plans for GB licences would be announced over the Christmas period, and that Northern Ireland driving licences would continue to be printed by DVLA without the Union flag.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment why NIEA's Water Management Unit denies public access to inspect undetermined water abstraction licence applications; and how this official policy is compliant with Articles 1, 3(2) and 4 of the Aarhus Convention. (AQW 41029/11-15)

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the introduction of Single Tier Licensing, that was due to be introduced at the end of January 2015, under the Taxi Vehicle Licensing Regulations.

(AQW 41034/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The target operative date for the new regulations of 31 January 2015 was set in mid-2014. At that time, January 2015 was seen as the optimum month for implementing the new provisions, both from a legislative timetable point of view and also from the industry perspective.

However, as my Department worked towards making the new regulations, a number of MLAs expressed concerns about some elements of the legislation, primarily the intention to introduce a single tier licensing regime in Belfast. I considered these concerns and listened to all views on matters around single tier and remain of the view that, for the benefit of both the public and the taxi industry, it should be introduced.

To allow time for the full Assembly legislative process to be completed, my Department deferred the operational date of the regulations until 29 June 2015.

The regulations have now been made. They are subject to negative resolution and I understand that a prayer of annulment has been moved.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of the Environment to outline how the Coastal Communities Fund will benefit local communities.

(AQO 7378/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Over the next two years communities around our coast will benefit from almost £1.5m from the Coastal Communities Fund. The Fund supports the regeneration and economic development of coastal communities through projects that create new jobs and safeguard existing jobs.

The projects all contribute to the Executive's Economic Strategy and come from small and medium size coastal communities facing economic challenges. They promote regeneration and create jobs through investment in tourism, business and the built and natural environments of coastal settlements. They promote training and skills development, and will enable local people to secure jobs in local industry growth sectors.

This year, three rounds of funding from 2014 to 2017 have been brought together into one to enable larger projects to be funded.

Seven projects based around our coast at Coleraine, Bushmills, Ballycastle, Rathlin Island, Carrickfergus and Newcastle will receive grants ranging from £71,000 to £734,000. These projects will create up to 100 jobs.

In the past two years grants in excess of £870,000 have been awarded to four projects in Glenarm, Magheramorne, Kilkeel and Waterfoot in the previous two rounds of funding. These contributed to the creation of 23 jobs and the safeguarding of many more.

These projects are excellent examples of how people can work together to regenerate and support the economic development of their communities. I am very pleased to be able to help them by providing funding that encourages partnership working and which will create and sustain jobs at all skills levels.

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of the Environment to outline his current responsibility for driving licences.

(AQO 7379/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department's statutory responsibility for driver licensing is contained in Part 2 of the Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. The Order contains a broad range of provisions relating to the licensing of vehicle drivers, including the requirement for drivers to hold licences, to undertake appropriate tests of competence and to meet specified medical standards.

The responsibilities also include the administration of the driver record, designed to be endorsed with particulars relating to offences under the Road Traffic Orders, and extends to both resident and non-resident drivers.

My Department has a statutory duty to ensure that all persons applying for and holding NI driving licences meet the relevant medical standards. This includes, where appropriate, carrying out medical investigations in conjunction with the Department's medical advisors, the Occupational Health Service. The medical standards are set out in the European Directives on driver licensing, and are further clarified by the Secretary of State for Transport's Honorary Medical Advisory Panel and the NI Regulations.

My Department issues approximately 220,000 licences each year, 26,000 are first time licences and 192,000 are renewed driving licences.

The administration of the driver licensing system in Northern Ireland is an integral part of my Department's responsibilities as regards the promotion of road safety. The primary legislation and the associated regulations, including the requirements of a driving licence application and the form of the Northern Ireland driving licence, are in alignment with the European Directives on driver licensing.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment why his Department has warned that funding for road safety promotion and associated education activities in schools may be curtailed in 2015/16.

(AQO 7380/11-15)

Mr Durkan: With your permission, Mr Speaker, I would like to combine the answers to AQ 8 and AQ 10.

The rise in fatalities to a provisional total of 79 in 2014 is of course a serious concern and I extend my sympathy to those who have lost loved ones and those who have suffered life changing injuries.

However, in recent years, there has been an overall downward trend in road casualties. In the five years prior to 2014, the number of people killed on our roads in Northern Ireland halved - from 115 in 2009 to 57 in 2013. Indeed prior to 2009 there had not been a year since fatality records began in 1931 that had recorded fewer than 100 road deaths. The highest number – 372 – was recorded in 1972.

In terms of serious injuries, the 2013 total of 720 was the lowest level since such records began to be collated in 1971. While a total for 2014 is not yet available, serious injuries to the end of October last year were at a comparable level to that at the same time in 2013.

While there is no clear pattern which we can address, I have held a number of discussions on the figures and the reasons for them with road safety partners, including at recent Ministerial Road Safety Group and Road Safety Forum meetings.

It is hard to be certain about the causes, given the range of factors. However it is probable that, in addition to the education, enforcement and engineering measures taken by road safety partner organisations, the recession also played some part in reducing casualties. The economic recovery is therefore likely to make achieving further reductions in road casualty figures more challenging.

The 2015-16 Executive draft Budget proposals add to that challenge. The financial allocations proposed for my Department in the draft Budget would have significant adverse implications for the services provided by my Department and for its clients, stakeholders and staff. As part of my Department's consultation on the draft budget, I therefore set out the very serious implications for road safety activity (and indeed a range of other DOE activity) should the proposed DOE budget be confirmed in the Executive's final Budget. In road safety terms, the implications are likely to include a significant curtailment of road safety promotion and of my Department's road safety education activity in schools.

That said, I will do my very best to ensure that financial pressures do not unduly compromise our ability to tackle road safety issues. At the December meeting of the Ministerial Road Safety Group that I chair, we agreed that our next meeting should focus on what more might be done to address our collective road safety concerns – taking account of budgets for the 2015/16 financial year.

I can assure you that I remain fully committed to continue working with my Executive colleagues, the PSNI and other stakeholders to improve road safety and to reduce casualties. As I have indicated, this will be especially challenging given the very difficult financial position set out in the Executive's draft budget but I will continue to make road safety a high priority.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of the Environment when he intends to introduce measures to implement a circular economy approach to waste management.

Mr Durkan: The circular economy is an economic model that aims to decouple economic development from virgin material. Waste is designed out of the system, and materials or components no longer required in their place of origin are 'metabolised' elsewhere in the economy through such activities as reuse and recycling. My Department has already introduced a number of measures to promote a circular economy approach to waste management.

In October 2013 my Department published a Waste Management Strategy entitled 'Delivering Resource Efficiency'. I see the strategy as a key element in developing and promoting a low carbon, circular economy. The Strategy contains actions and targets aimed at moving waste up the Waste Hierarchy, i.e. prioritising waste prevention, including re-use, to reduce our reliance on finite resources and increasing the amount of waste which we recycle. Actions which are currently being implemented include further legislation to minimise the use of carrier bags, a consultation on measures aimed at increasing the quality of recyclates and the introduction of requirements to separately collect certain dry recyclables and food waste.

On 30 September 2014 I published the Northern Ireland Waste Prevention Programme - "The Road to Zero Waste"; a measure within the Strategy. Waste prevention is central to the circular economy.

The title inclusion of "Zero Waste" expresses my desire to focus on, and work towards, an aspirational end point where materials are used more efficiently and not sent to landfill or other disposal – effectively working towards a circular economy.

Despite the current uncertain financial climate it is important that government continues to provide funding for initiatives that improve the environment, and move society towards a circular economy. In 2014/15, my Department has allocated over £4.3 million to councils and the Third Sector for resource efficiency projects aimed at diverting waste from landfill, and turning waste into a valuable resource.

The annual waste figures show that household recycling continues to increase; 41.3% in 2013/14. This is over a fourfold increase in household recycling since 2002. In the same period household waste arisings fell by 9.7%. For the first time figures for 2013/14 show that less than 50% of household waste went to landfill. A key landmark – but as a society we must maintain this momentum and continue on a “Road to Zero Waste”.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the latest road safety statistics.
(AQO 7382/11-15)

Mr Durkan: With your permission, Mr Speaker, I would like to combine the answers to AQ 8 and AQ 10.

The rise in fatalities to a provisional total of 79 in 2014 is of course a serious concern and I extend my sympathy to those who have lost loved ones and those who have suffered life changing injuries.

However, in recent years, there has been an overall downward trend in road casualties. In the five years prior to 2014, the number of people killed on our roads in Northern Ireland halved - from 115 in 2009 to 57 in 2013. Indeed prior to 2009 there had not been a year since fatality records began in 1931 that had recorded fewer than 100 road deaths. The highest number – 372 – was recorded in 1972.

In terms of serious injuries, the 2013 total of 720 was the lowest level since such records began to be collated in 1971. While a total for 2014 is not yet available, serious injuries to the end of October last year were at a comparable level to that at the same time in 2013.

While there is no clear pattern which we can address, I have held a number of discussions on the figures and the reasons for them with road safety partners, including at recent Ministerial Road Safety Group and Road Safety Forum meetings.

It is hard to be certain about the causes, given the range of factors. However it is probable that, in addition to the education, enforcement and engineering measures taken by road safety partner organisations, the recession also played some part in reducing casualties. The economic recovery is therefore likely to make achieving further reductions in road casualty figures more challenging.

The 2015-16 Executive draft Budget proposals add to that challenge. The financial allocations proposed for my Department in the draft Budget would have significant adverse implications for the services provided by my Department and for its clients, stakeholders and staff. As part of my Department's consultation on the draft budget, I therefore set out the very serious implications for road safety activity (and indeed a range of other DOE activity) should the proposed DOE budget be confirmed in the Executive's final Budget. In road safety terms, the implications are likely to include a significant curtailment of road safety promotion and of my Department's road safety education activity in schools.

That said, I will do my very best to ensure that financial pressures do not unduly compromise our ability to tackle road safety issues. At the December meeting of the Ministerial Road Safety Group that I chair, we agreed that our next meeting should focus on what more might be done to address our collective road safety concerns – taking account of budgets for the 2015/16 financial year.

I can assure you that I remain fully committed to continue working with my Executive colleagues, the PSNI and other stakeholders to improve road safety and to reduce casualties. As I have indicated, this will be especially challenging given the very difficult financial position set out in the Executive's draft budget but I will continue to make road safety a high priority.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of the Environment what plans he has to change the MOT online booking system to allow customers the option of using 'Derry City' in the Town field of the system.
(AQO 7383/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The online system has been in place since January 2007 and currently allows customers the option to enter 'Derry City' into the town field at both the notification stage and payment stage.

On the notification details screen the customer is able to enter the address where their appointment letter should be sent to. On the payment screen the customer is able to enter their debit/credit card details including their card billing address. The 'Town' or 'Town/City' field on these screens is formatted to accept free text; therefore the customer can enter any town/city.

There is therefore no need to change the MOT online booking system to allow this option.

Mr Brady asked the Minister of the Environment how he plans to address the increase in the number of road fatalities since January 2014.
(AQO 7384/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The rise in road fatalities in 2014 is a serious concern and I extend my sympathy to those who have lost loved ones and also those who have suffered life changing injuries. The number of road traffic fatalities here has generally been declining since the early 1970s. However, since 2012, fatality figures have increased: to 57 in 2013, and provisionally to 79 in 2014.

My Department continues to take a range of actions to reduce deaths and serious injuries on our roads. We focus on problem areas, such as drink driving, speeding, carelessness and inattention; and on groups which are over-represented in the casualty figures. These are a key focus of the Road Traffic (Amendment) Bill which I introduced into the Assembly in May last year.

I have also commissioned an advertising campaign to tackle rising levels of motorcyclist deaths, and my officials are working with the Health & Safety Executive to produce a guide on driving at work. My Department is also taking forward a fitness to drive review to consider the factors that increase risks for older road users.

The Road Safety Strategy to 2020 includes 224 Action Measures of which over 100 have been completed; they address issues including changes to road engineering, changes to the driving test, and the setting up of a PSNI Collision Investigation Unit.

I should emphasise that implementation of the measures contained in the Road Safety Strategy fall to a number of Departments and agencies working in partnership. The implementation process is monitored by a Strategy Delivery Board which comprises representatives from all of those road safety partner organisations including the Department for Regional Development, Department of Education, PSNI, the NI Fire and Rescue Service and the NI Ambulance Service.

Looking ahead, the draft Executive Budget 2015/16 proposals reflect a very difficult financial position. Once the final Budget for 2015/16 is confirmed, decisions on implications for the Road Safety Strategy will be informed by the resources made available to all of the road safety partner organisations. I am anxious to ensure that financial pressures do not unduly compromise our ability to tackle road safety issues. At the December meeting of the Ministerial Road Safety Group that I chair, we agreed that our next meeting should focus on what more might be done to address our collective road safety concerns – taking account of budgets for the 2015/16 financial year.

Ultimately, however, the vast majority of collisions and casualties on our roads are caused by human error. My Department and our road safety partners can educate, engineer and enforce, but each of us as individuals has to take personal responsibility for our attitudes and behaviours as road users.

I can assure you that I remain fully committed to continue working with my Executive colleagues, the PSNI and other stakeholders to improve road safety and to reduce casualties. This will be especially challenging given the very difficult financial position set out in the Executive's draft budget but I will continue to make road safety a high priority.

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of the Environment why a driving licence costs more in Northern Ireland than in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Mr Durkan: The administration of driver licensing in Northern Ireland is expected, as far as possible, to be a self-financing service, with costs recovered through fee income. These costs include salaries, maintenance, support and development of the IT system, production of the licence, postage and the payment of fees for certain medical assessments.

The licence fees are varied according to the complexity of individual licences and transactions. Driving licence renewals for those 70 years old and over and those renewals that are required for medical reasons are free of charge.

Following a public consultation, driving licence fees were increased on 18 October 2012 to go some way towards covering the cost of producing all licences, including those issued free of charge.

This increase resulted in a gap across a range of licences between the fees charged in NI compared to those charged in GB. This gap exists largely due to the lack of economies of scale for recovering the costs of processing driver licences locally. I am also aware that DVLA recently introduced a reduction in their fees that has further widened the gap between NI and GB. This reduction to their fees was possible due to developments in technology, with the ability to offer online transactions for customers.

The Driver & Vehicle Agency is currently developing a new driver licensing IT system to be delivered by April 2016. This system will improve the customer experience, deliver service efficiencies and will enable online processing. This will provide an opportunity to review the fees currently charged for the processing of driver licences.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the recent changes to the Carrier Bag Levy.

(AQO 7386/11-15)

Mr Durkan: When the levy was first introduced in April 2013 it applied only to single use carrier bags. From 19 January 2015, retailers must add the 5 pence carrier bag levy to all carrier bags with a retail price of less than 20 pence – effectively extending the levy beyond single use bags to include cheap reusable carrier bags.

Data from several retailers indicate that cheap reusable bag sales have jumped by approximately 800% since the single use bag levy was first introduced in 2013. Extending the levy to cheap reusable bags is intended to maximise the environmental benefits by encouraging shoppers to reuse their existing bags rather than buying new ones.

Retailers still have the option to operate a “bag-for-life” policy, replacing worn out reusable plastic bags free of charge – meaning shoppers who actively reuse their carrier bags won't be penalised.

My Department ran a communication campaign including street teams, downloadable posters, online support tools, social media and classified advertising to inform the public and support retailers in the run up to 19 January.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the merits of the extension of the Carrier Bag Levy. (AQO 7387/11-15)

Mr Durkan: When the levy was first introduced in April 2013 it applied only to single use carrier bags. From 19 January 2015, retailers must add the 5 pence carrier bag levy to all carrier bags with a retail price of less than 20 pence – effectively extending the levy beyond single use bags to include cheap reusable carrier bags.

My Department ran a communication campaign including street teams, downloadable posters, online support tools, social media and classified advertising to inform the public and support retailers in the run up to 19 January. Through this campaign and by way of the recent extension of the levy I believe we can deliver the optimal environmental outcome – avoiding unnecessary resource consumption, pollution and litter.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, given that unauthorised extraction operations were witnessed taking place within Lough Neagh Special Protection Area on 19 January 2014, when he will answer AQW 40435/11-15. (AQW 41100/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My response to AQW 40435/11-15 dated 22 January 2015 refers.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 38304/11-15, how the continuing unauthorised mineral extraction from Lough Neagh Special Protection Area, witnessed on 19 January 2015, complies with his stated policy that unauthorised mineral extractions require the most rigorous and prompt enforcement action. (AQW 41152/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials have not been alerted of any alleged breach in respect of unauthorised minerals extraction on Lough Neagh the 19 January 2015. I have asked my officials to investigate and report back to me as a matter of urgency.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Copeland asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) the total level of capital receipts generated by his Department in each year since 2011; (ii) each individual asset; (iii) its location; (iv) when it was sold; (v) by whom it was purchased; and (vi) for how much it was sold. (AQW 39501/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): The level of capital receipts received by Department of Finance & Personnel in the financial years 2011-12, 2012-13 & 2013-14 are as follows:-

- 2011-12 £283k
- 2012-13 £470k
- 2013-14 £852k

The table on the following page provides:-

- Each individual asset
- Its location
- When it was sold
- By whom it was purchased
- For how much it was sold

Asset Category	Location	When sold	Purchaser	Selling Price £k
Land & Buildings	35/37 Slieveban Drive, Belfast	2011-12	Apex Housing Association	575
Land & Buildings	1A Belt Road, Londonderry	2012-13	MKB Co 48 Ltd	500
Land & Buildings	21 Hospital Road, Omagh	2013-14	Not disclosed	152
Land & Buildings	Crown Buildings, 2-14 George Street	2013-14	Silverwood Property Developments Ltd	120
Motor Vehicles	Various	2011-14	Sold through Auction	70

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what plans are in place to ensure the Executive can 'claw back' any windfall gains made by banks and major utility providers related to a reduction in Corporation Tax.

(AQW 39698/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The proposed technical design of the Northern Ireland Corporation Tax regime – as detailed in the Bill introduced in the House of Commons on 8th January 2015 – has been carefully designed to encourage genuine investment that will create jobs and growth, while minimising opportunities for profit-shifting and avoidance. And in that regard, it excludes a range of highly mobile banking and insurance activities that will remain subject to the UK main rate of Corporation Tax.

Major utilities are subject to scrutiny by the independent Utility Regulator and the treatment of their costs, and the returns that are allowable, will continue to be determined under regulatory price control procedures.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many public servants live in each (a) constituency; and (b) council area.

(AQW 39850/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Department does not hold information regarding where public servants live.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether the Chancellor of the Exchequer's announcement regarding the changes to Stamp Duty will apply in Northern Ireland; and if so, to detail the implications for house buyers.

(AQW 39858/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Stamp Duty changes announced in the Autumn Statement will apply in Northern Ireland and these came into effect across the UK as a whole on 4th December 2014.

The new structure of the duty will be beneficial for Northern Ireland house-buyers, and in particular, those whose purchase price would have just breached the thresholds under the old 'slab' structure. These individuals will see significant savings in the duty paid.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, should Corporation Tax be devolved, how the amount of relevant profit earned in Northern Ireland will be calculated.

(AQW 40142/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Following the introduction of the Corporation Tax (Northern Ireland) Bill in the House of Commons on 8 January 2015, administrative arrangements need to be agreed with, and put in place by HM Revenue & Customs to identify and collect Corporation Tax receipts on behalf of the Northern Ireland Executive.

Similarly, the precise detail of the block grant adjustment mechanism to be applied has not yet been agreed with the Government. My officials and I will continue to engage with HM Treasury to ensure that the necessary arrangements are put in place prior to the transfer of Corporation Tax rate setting powers.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, should Corporation Tax be devolved, whether there will be separate accounting in Northern Ireland, or a formula deployed to apportion the base; and if so, to detail the formula.

(AQW 40143/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Following the introduction of the Corporation Tax (Northern Ireland) Bill in the House of Commons on 8 January 2015, administrative arrangements need to be agreed with, and put in place by HM Revenue & Customs to identify and collect Corporation Tax receipts on behalf of the Northern Ireland Executive.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, should Corporation Tax be devolved, to detail (i) how; and (ii) by what mechanisms the block grant will be reduced.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what percentage of tourism revenue has resulted from overseas tourist business in each year since 2007.

(AQW 40414/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The annual percentage of expenditure on overnight trips in Northern Ireland of (i) Northern Ireland residents; (ii) Great Britain visitors; (iii) Republic of Ireland visitors and (iv) outside UK & Ireland visitors is shown in the table overleaf.

Table: The percentage of expenditure on overnight trips to Northern Ireland of (i) Northern Ireland residents (ii) Great Britain visitors, (iii) Republic of Ireland visitors and (iv) Outside UK & Ireland visitors (2008-2013).

Place of Origin	20081	2009	20102	2011	2012	2013
Northern Ireland residents	27%	36%	34%	28%	29%	27%
Great Britain	40%	34%	29%	37%	35%	38%
Republic of Ireland	9%	12%	15%	9%	10%	8%
Outside UK & Ireland	24%	18%	22%	26%	26%	27%

Notes:

- 1 Figures from 2008 to 2009 were collated by the Northern Ireland Tourist Board.
- 2 Figures from 2010 to 2013 were collated by the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, given the requirement for the Executive to pay the cost of the differential between higher levels of social security provision in Northern Ireland compared to Great Britain, what mechanisms exist to enable the Executive to recover benefits which would accrue to central government of implementing other social policies such as free childcare.

(AQW 40507/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: If the Northern Ireland Executive can clearly demonstrate that savings in AME spending, that accrue directly to the UK Exchequer, have been generated as a direct result of a policy the Executive has implemented then it may make a case to the UK Government that these savings should be returned to the NI Executive. There is however no guarantee that such a request would be successful.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) how the level of public borrowing by the Executive in May 2007 compares with the current situation; (ii) how much has been repaid each year; and (iii) how much interest has been paid on the loans.

(AQW 40535/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Details of public borrowing along with the associated interest and capital repayments are set out in the Public Income and Expenditure Account, as laid before the Assembly on an annual basis.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the amount of non-domestic rates collected in each of the last five years.

(AQW 40621/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The total amount of non-domestic rates collected (receipts) in each of the last five years is provided in the table below.

Non-Domestic Receipts 2009/10 to 2013/14

Financial Year	Non-Domestic Receipts
2009/10	£533,525,810
2010/11	£564,917,208
2011/12	£574,730,510
2012/13	£591,394,059
2013/14*	£598,199,929

*2013/14 figures subject to audit assurance.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) what are the levels of employer and employee contributions applicable under the North/South Pension (Amendment No.5) Scheme; (ii) how does this compare with the Northern Ireland Civil Service Scheme; and (iii) whether the scheme now applies to all the North/South bodies.

(AQW 40767/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) Amendment 5 resulted in the Loughs Agency joining the North South Pension Scheme from 1 January 2015; this amendment had no impact on employee contributions. Amendment 4 increased employee contributions for staff based in Northern Ireland to an average of 4.7%. Amendments 4 and 5 had no impact on employer contributions.
- (ii) Average employee contribution rates for Northern Ireland members in the North South Pension Scheme are now identical to those of the Northern Ireland Civil Service Scheme. The employee contribution rates will change again in April 2015 for both Northern Ireland and Republic of Ireland members to further align it with the Northern Ireland Civil Service Scheme – the average rate will be 5.6% for all members. It is also intended that the North South Pension Scheme will be reformed to align it with the reforms to be implemented for the Civil Service Scheme from April 2015. These reforms include changing from a final salary scheme to a career average revalued earnings scheme, with scheme pension age linked to the state pension age.
- (iii) Yes, all of the North South bodies now participate in the North South Pension Scheme.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 39507/11-15, to detail the occupants of the two units that are exempt from rates.

(AQW 40827/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I can confirm the occupants of the two units are as follows:

- 152 Springfield Road, Belfast – West Belfast Economic Forum.
- 152a Springfield Road, Belfast – Clonard Residents Association.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel when the guidance, which redirects departments and Public Bodies in providing compensation to home owners as a result of public developments, was last reviewed.

(AQO 7400/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Compulsory Purchase and Compensation Guide to Compensation for Residential Owners and Occupiers published by Land & Property Services, was last reviewed in October 2012. A revision of the guidance is anticipated by April 2015.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how he plans to ensure that the Executive spends its full allocation of Financial Transactions Capital.

(AQO 7395/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My recent Statement to the Assembly on the January Monitoring Round detailed allocations of Financial Transactions Capital in 2014-15 of £40.6 million meaning that all of the Financial Transactions Capital available to the Executive this year is now allocated. I now expect departments to spend in full the allocations made in this year to ensure that no funding is lost to Northern Ireland.

Looking forward, the Executive's Budget for 2015-16 allocates £88.1 million of Financial Transactions Capital to departments with a further £40.9 million to be allocated to the Northern Ireland Investment Fund.

I will continue to urge Minister's to come forward with suitable proposals to spend ring-fenced Financial Transactions Capital, however creation of the Northern Ireland Investment Fund will provide an effective mechanism for the Executive to spend this funding going forward.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the timescale for the remainder of the Budget 2015-16 process.

(AQO 7396/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The 2015-16 Budget was agreed by the Executive on 15 January 2015 and announced to the Assembly on 19th January 2015.

The Assembly will debate and vote on the Budget tomorrow (Tuesday 27th January 2015).

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what preparatory work his Department has carried out following the commitment in the Stormont House Agreement to commission work assessing the cost of division.

(AQO 7397/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My officials have already started engagement with HMT and NIO counterparts on the many actions points contained within the Stormont House Agreement. Included within this engagement is how to progress the 'medium and longer term reform' actions, one of which calls for an independent audit of departmental spending to identify how divisions in society impact.

My officials will advise me on the outcome of their engagements with NIO and HMT on this specific matter and how any audit might be progressed.

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how the proposed Voluntary Exit Scheme for the Civil Service will operate.

(AQO 7398/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Plans to develop a Voluntary Exit Scheme for the NICS are well advanced. The terms of the Scheme have yet to be finalised and agreed and will become clearer after appropriate consultation has been concluded with the Trade Unions. However, the intention is to launch a Voluntary Exit Scheme on an NICS-wide basis in early March 2015 and it is anticipated that it will be open to all staff in all grades and disciplines (up to and including NICS Grade 3 and analogous) in all Departments. Any exceptions to this are expected to be rare.

My officials anticipate those selected to leave under the Scheme will do so in tranches between Autumn 2015 and Spring 2016, however there will not be a provision for staff to select a leaving date when making their application. The Scheme will be in line with provisions in the new Civil Service Compensation Scheme (Northern Ireland) [CSCS(NI)].

My officials hope to be in a position to share more detail ahead of launching a scheme, including details about an online calculator which staff can use to estimate the compensation payment and Frequently Asked Questions.

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the level of funding from Peace IV and Interreg V European Programmes which will be available in Northern Ireland.

(AQO 7401/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Draft PEACE IV and INTERREG VA programmes were submitted to the European Commission for consideration on 22 September 2014. The PEACE IV programme has a proposed European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) budget of €229 million plus €40 million match funding. The INTERREG VA programme has a proposed ERDF budget of €240 million plus €42 million match funding.

Mr Spratt asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline any engagement his Department has had with the European Commission on public sector reform.

(AQO 7402/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: On 21st January 2015 I travelled to Brussels to meet with Mr Carlos Moedas, Commissioner for Research, Science and Innovation, who took up post late in 2014.

The meeting highlighted the Commissioner's, and wider EU, thinking on the importance of the public sector as a driver of innovation and competitiveness, a view shared within my Department's agenda and the Executive's own Innovation Strategy.

It was clear from the meeting that Brussels already recognises Northern Ireland as one of the leading regions in Europe in relation to public sector innovation. It is important, therefore, that we continue to engage with the Commissioner, and his officials, as he sets his priorities in this area so that Northern Ireland can not only showcase what we are doing in developing innovative approaches, but also learn from the experience of others.

Previous engagements with the EU Commission have involved both me and my officials. These have included presentations on the approach to Public Sector Reform in Northern Ireland as well as sharing knowledge and learning on European Public Sector Reform and Innovation.

As the reform agenda in Northern Ireland gathers pace, I am keen to build on these developments and encourage continued engagement with the EU Commission on public sector reform and innovation.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the effectiveness of the commissioning function in the Health and Social Care Board.

(AQW 40297/11-15)

Mr Wells (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): An effective commissioning function is essential to ensure that local populations have access to health and social care services which meet their needs, contribute to improvements in health and wellbeing, are safe and of a high quality, and represent value for money in terms of outcomes delivered and costs incurred. Of course commissioning is only one factor in addressing these issues.

Of the large numbers of patients and clients who access health and social care services here every day, the vast majority receive care and treatment of the highest standard. However, too many people in Northern Ireland still die prematurely or live with conditions that could have been avoided. Too many people have to wait too long to access the services they need. And it is clear that the health and social care system in Northern Ireland cannot continue to meet the growing demand for services within available resources, without significant reform. It is over five years now since the establishment of the commissioning function within the HSC Board, and in that context officials have been asked to develop plans, for my consideration, for a review of the effectiveness of the function.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much funding has been provided by his Department to the Family Planning Association and any other 'pro-choice' organisations since May 2011.

Mr Wells: There is no agreed definition of a 'pro-choice' organisation. The list below details funding provided to organisations, whose responses to the 2013 termination of pregnancy guidance consultation, demonstrated a pro-choice position.

Funding is provided towards central administrative costs.

	2011/12 £	2012/13 £	2013/14 £	2014/15 £
Family Planning Association (NI)	£92,745	£96,045	£89,632	£96,045
Women's Resource and Development Agency	£45,871	£45,871	£45,871	£45,871

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much funding has been supplied by his Department to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender groups since May 2011.

(AQW 40480/11-15)

Mr Wells: Grant funding has been provided to two organisations as follows:

Name of Organisation	2011/2012	2012/2013	2013/2014	2014/2015
The Rainbow Project	£32,443	£32,443	£32,443	£32,443
Cara-friend	£31,705	£31,705	£31,705	£31,705

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of the cost of performance related bonuses for senior medical staff, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, in the last five years.

(AQW 40482/11-15)

Mr Wells: Senior medical staff do not receive performance related bonuses.

They can however apply for a Clinical Excellence Award through an independent committee process managed by the Department. These awards are given to recognise exceptional performance by medical consultants in the services they provide to patients. Clinical Excellence awards are part of the Terms and Conditions of service for medical and dental staff employed by the Trusts.

The cost of the awards over the past 5 financial years is detailed below.

	2009/10	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14
Belfast Trust	£8,822,071	£8,624,825	£7,219,753	£6,556,067	£6,160,907
Northern Trust	£1,351,478	£1,319,240	£1,101,000	£946,000	£810,000
Southern Trust	£1,318,913	£1,264,726	£1,121,528	£1,087,018	£1,074,413
South Eastern Trust	£1,164,546	£1,191,087	£1,047,208	£928,607	£926,583
Western Trust	£1,248,336	£1,183,919	£1,166,515	£1,044,163	£1,013,974

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the introduction of standardised packaging for tobacco products in Northern Ireland; and for his assessment as to whether the powers will be made prior the dissolution of the current Westminster Parliament.

(AQW 40515/11-15)

Mr Wells: In February 2014, the Assembly agreed to the extension of certain provisions in the Children and Families Act 2014 which would allow the Secretary of State for Health (SoS) to make regulations on a UK-wide basis in relation to the standardised packaging of tobacco products. The provisions in the Act require SoS to obtain the consent of the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister before making regulations which would apply in Northern Ireland.

On 21 January the UK Government announced its decision to proceed with plans to introduce standardised packaging in England before the General Election. The legislation is expected to come into force in May 2016 and I will be working with the Executive to secure agreement for the law to apply in Northern Ireland.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an up-to-date breakdown of the £5m spend in additional funding allocated to unscheduled care services to help ease winter pressures.

(AQW 40532/11-15)

Mr Wells: My Department has allocated an additional £5m of funding to Health and Social Care to address pressures in unscheduled care services this winter. £2.3m of this funding has been allocated to fund a range of measures set out in the table below:

Trust		£000
Belfast	External support	100
	Additional ED Consultant	450
	3 Physicians for AMU Additional AHP/Pharmacy staff
Northern	External support	100
South Eastern	External support	100
	Introduction of 7-day Allied Health Professional and other services at the Ulster Hospital to improve patient flow.	470
Southern	External support	100
	Implementation of a new model for Acute Medicine in Craigavon Area Hospital. This model has seen a reorganisation of both the Medical Admission Unit (MAU) and base ward medical cover, a strengthening of 7 day working and facilitates direct General Practitioner (GP) admission to in-patient beds. Additional staff includes two consultants.	492 (750 FYE)
Western	External support	121
	2 ED consultants	250
NIAS	Hospital Ambulance Liaison Officers (HALOs) at 4 EDs	150

Of the remaining £2.7m, £600k will be utilised to enhance out of hours capacity in primary and community care; £400k has been allocated to each Health and Social Care Trust and £100k to the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) for winter pressures. In addition following the October monitoring, £750k has been made available from Health and Social Care Board baseline funds and allocated equally to each Hospital Trust to support the delivery of unscheduled care services.

During November Trusts submitted proposals on measures to improve patient flow and to expand capacity, as required, over the winter period. These have been approved and are currently being implemented by individual Trusts. Included in the Trust proposals are a range of service provision including: additional beds, extended working hours in Minor Injury Units, additional weekend radiology services, additional Domiciliary Care packages and additional transport to expedite discharge. Other enhancements include Belfast City Hospital Direct which enables frail elderly patients to be transported by NIAS to Belfast City Hospital, so reducing admissions via the Emergency Department.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he can provide an assurance that upon the completion of the new Ballymena Health and Care Centre, GPs currently located at Ballymena Health Centre and who move to the new Centre will be able to do so, in terms of rent and rates, on a cost neutral basis.

(AQW 40539/11-15)

Mr Wells: The HSCB provides premises funding for rent and rates from the General Medical Services (GMS) funding envelope for GPs. However, the funding envelope is cash limited and does not contain separate budgets for elements such as premises. Funding therefore has to be prioritised across differing pressures in both service provision to patients and infrastructure costs.

The HSCB has advised me that it is seeking to include funding to cover the additional costs associated with Ballymena Health and Care Centre in the 2015/16 financial plan.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) how much his Department spent on mobility aid items, in each of the last five years; (ii) whether the items are reusable; and (iii) how his Department addresses people who do not return the items.

(AQW 40571/11-15)

Mr Wells: I refer the member to the responses provided by the Health and Social Care Trusts which are attached at Annex A.

DHSSPS AQW 40571/11-15

Annex A

Western HSC Trust

- (i) This information is not readily available in the format requested.
- (ii) The Western Trust provides a range of mobility aids including walking aids; walking sticks; Zimmer frames and tripods, as well as short-term loan wheelchairs etc. A separate arrangement is in place to retrieve wheelchairs, which are then decontaminated and re-issued where possible. In addition to this, the Trust has an arrangement with a local Council to collect, clean and re-issue items of equipment, where appropriate, that are retrieved from any of its civic amenity sites.

- (iii) Service users are encouraged to return these aids for re-use where possible.

Southern HSC Trust

- (i) The Trust does not maintain a separate record of expenditure solely on mobility aids and therefore is unable to provide this information without a manual exercise to extract this.
- (ii) The Southern Health and Social Care Trust (SHSCT) has introduced a new approach to managing Community Equipment, through its Transforming Community Equipment Services (TCES) project. This project reviewed the increasing demands being placed upon community equipment services due to the increasing number of people with complex needs being supported within community settings and it considered how the available budgets could be used in the most cost effective manner. The TCES project recognised a number of categories of equipment, including Simple Aids for Daily Living and Complex Aids for Daily Living. Typically Simple Aids for Daily Living (SADL) are issued to individuals on a permanent basis and are not reusable. This category includes items such as Walking Sticks, Zimmers and Tripods. Complex Aids for Daily Living (CADL) are managed via a loan scheme; this includes items such as Hoists and Beds. These are reusable and are managed in different ways, as detailed below:

Walking Aids (Non Reusable)

Sticks, Zimmers and Tripods – These items are issued to individuals through the issue of a Voucher, which individuals can then redeem at participating retailers. Most individuals require these small items of equipment for a number of years.

Nine out of ten items of equipment issued cost less than £20, however it costs the Trust in excess of that amount to transport, decontaminate/deep clean and re-issue the items of equipment and a high number are not able to be used again.

As these equipment items are designed for single use by individuals, the voucher scheme means that they will own the equipment. Individuals are advised to hold on to the item in case they need it again in the future. In this way they will be helping the Trust use its resources to the maximum.

When individuals no longer have a need for the equipment they are asked to dispose of it thoughtfully. Most or all of the above equipment will fit into normal household waste or can be left at your local amenity centre.

Wheelchairs (Reusable)

Wheelchairs – The issue of wheelchairs can occur in two ways, either through long-term issue through the Regional Wheelchair Service based in Belfast or for short-term issue from the British Red Cross, who manage a local short-term loan scheme. The SHSCT does not manage a short-term loan scheme.

- (iii) Management of Individuals who do not return Reusable Items

As detailed above, the SHSCT categorises items into:

- a) Simple Aids for Daily Living (SADL), which are not returned or deemed as reusable and
- b) Complex Aids for Daily Living (CADL), which are issued as “on loan” with an expectation that they are returned and reusable.

The CADL are larger items of equipment such as hoists, standing frames and community specialist beds. The loan system is managed via a computerised system that facilitates the Trust managing the loan period, related servicing and maintenance of the equipment during the loan period and recall and collection of the equipment when it is no longer required. The Trust does not have a significant problem with non-return of reusable items by individuals.

South Eastern HSC Trust

- (i) Expenditure on Mobility aids

The term mobility aids covers the supply of a variety of walking aids such as walking sticks, crutches, Zimmer frames (with or without wheels), delta rollators. The majority of these items are supplied by BSO PaLS as they are stock items. BSO PaLS would be able to provide the cost of supply of these aids to South Eastern Trust clients.

- (ii) Return of equipment

When equipment is issued to clients they are requested to return equipment when it is no longer required. They are provided with a contact number 028 9262 2111, which is answered Monday to Friday. Clients arrange collection of equipment from their home at a time convenient to them. Normally equipment is uplifted within agreed timescales. Equipment is checked when it is returned to the central store (Lissue stores) and if it can be reissued it is decontaminated on site. If it is no longer fit for reissue it is disposed of.

- (iii) Items not returned

South Eastern Trust have found that the return of equipment has improved significantly since the arrangements detailed above in (ii) have been introduced a few years ago. A significant amount of equipment is returned and reissued.

Belfast HSC Trust

- (i) Our service colleagues have suggested that we would need further clarification on the definition 'mobility aids' before we could adequately respond to this AQ - mobility aids can be simple items like walking sticks and walking frames but depending on interpretation, could also cover wheelchairs - manual and powered, hoists, beds and even lift installations. However, they have also suggested that even with clarification they are not sure whether we could separate out specific items in cost terms.
- (ii) We do not attempt to treat low cost mobility aids such as walking sticks and zimmers as assets, as the cost of managing would exceed their replacement value. The cost of decontamination also means we recycle equipment on the basis of its value, as well as condition.
- (iii) Every effort is taken to have mobility aids, which are effectively on loan, returned to the Trust when no longer required by the patient.

Northern HSC Trust

- (i) These figures relate to walking sticks, crutches and walking aids delivered through Community Equipment Stores (CES) and do not include any provided through the Acute sector. It is not possible to provide figures for the Acute sector.

Number of walking sticks issued through Community Equipment Stores (CES) in the last five years and cost:

- 2010 - 642 at a total cost of £2,606.70 - £4.06 each
- 2011 - 750 at a total cost of £2,993.36 - £3.99
- 2012 - 809 at a total cost of £3,159.74 - £3.90 each
- 2013 - 836 at a total cost of £3,284.80 - £3.90 each
- 2014 - 1014 at a total cost of £3,346.20 - £3.30 each

Number of crutches issued through CES in the last five years and cost

- 2010 - 154 at a total cost of £1,890.39 - £12.27 each
- 2011 - 187 at a total cost of £2,217.57 - £11.85 each
- 2012 - 268 at a total cost of £3,020.93 - £11.27 each
- 2013 - 266 at a total cost of £2,369.52 - £8.90 each
- 2014 - 249 at a total cost of £2,415.30 - £9.70 each

Number of walking aids

- 2010 - 1936 at a total cost of £25,168 - £13.00 each
- 2011 - 1640 at a total cost of £21,320 - £13.00 each
- 2012 - 1788 at a total cost of £23,244 - £13.00 each
- 2013 - 1875 at a total cost of £24,375 - £13.00 each
- 2014 - 1486 at a total cost of £19,318 - £13.00 each

- (ii) The Trust use a wheelchair recycling system via the Regional Disability Service (RDS), based in Musgrave Park Hospital. When a client's wheelchair is no longer required, either no longer fit for purpose or the client has passed away, arrangements are made to uplift the chair and bring back to their base. If the chair is economically repairable the chair is serviced and placed on a refurbishment list. The 'Refurb' List is then circulated on a weekly basis to all the health trusts in Northern Ireland to which each trust has the opportunity to purchase manual and powered wheelchairs at a reduced price. For the financial year ending 2013/2014 the Northern Trust saved £53,934 purchasing wheelchairs via this system.
- (iii) The Trust does not record the numbers of equipment returned, however the Trust's Community Equipment Service has set up local centres across the Trust where members of the public are encouraged to return equipment.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to provide a breakdown of the total amount spent on the provision of (i) foster care; and (ii) children's residential care in 2013/14.

(AQW 40584/11-15)

Mr Wells: The total amount spent by the health and social care trusts on payments to foster carers and children's residential care in 2013/14 was as follows:

	2013/14 £m
Payments to foster carers	35.9
Children's residential care ⁽¹⁾	40.4
	76.3

Note(1): Programme of Care 3 (Family and Childcare) and Programme of Care 6 (Learning Disability).

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many beds were moved from the Bangor Hospital GP Ward to cope with winter pressures in the Ulster Hospital during the Christmas period.

(AQW 40598/11-15)

Mr Wells: Ten beds were temporarily transferred from Bangor Hospital to the Ulster Hospital, where a number of staff have been redeployed.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what support is provided by each Health and Social Care Trust to RNIB.

(AQW 40611/11-15)

Mr Wells: I refer the member to the responses provided by the Health and Social Care Trusts which are attached at Annex A.

AQW 40611/11-15 – Responses from Health and Social Care Trusts

Annex A

Belfast HSCT

RNIB provides a range of support services for people who are visually impaired. Ophthalmology Services within the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust provides a range of assessment, diagnostic and treatment services for patients with a range of ophthalmic conditions and therefore works in partnership with the RNIB on a number of issues and developments within Ophthalmology. An example of this is the provision of Eye Clinic Liaison Officers; the Health and Social Care Board and the Trust fund a number of these posts which support patients during their attendances at a number of eye outpatient services such as the Macular and Glaucoma Services in Belfast. Eye Clinic Liaison Officers are provided by RNIB and play a critical role in supporting and sign-posting patients when they are attending for appointment.

Southern HSCT

The SHSCT have a contract with the RNIB to the value of £60,000. From this contract the RNIB provide one full-time Community Access Worker and two part-time Community Access Assistants. This service works extremely well and as a result many individuals with a sight difficulty across the SHSCT area receive ongoing advice and information about activities which enable them to develop their knowledge and skills.

The SHSCT would also purchase a significant amount of equipment from RNIB which enables people with visual difficulties to manage more independently. The SHSCT and RNIB participate regularly in awareness training and information sharing sessions. The awareness training is often targeted at members of the public as well as statutory, private and voluntary bodies.

Northern HSCT

Finance systems in NHSCT show that the Trust makes a grant of £9238 per month to RNIB.

South Eastern HSCT

The South Eastern Trust currently funds the Royal National Institute of Blind People (RNIB) to provide 21 hours per week of Community Visual Co-ordinator time in the Ards Locality. This totals £18,152.54 per year.

Western HSCT

Currently, the WHSCT has a contract in place with RNIB to provide a range of support services for people with vision difficulty. The Trust works very closely with RNIB staff at a client operational level. The Trust also works in partnership with RNIB through a range of processes, through contract monitoring, strategic planning meetings (both local and regional), and through cross directorate service development meetings.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the progress on the 2009 North South Feasibility Study into Health.

(AQW 40617/11-15)

Mr Wells: This Study, which was exploratory in nature, was completed in March 2009. The following recommendations provided the opportunity to offer the most immediate impact on patients:

- The two Departments and the relevant Agencies should promote joint programmes and joint approaches to tackle obesity.
- The two Departments and the relevant Agencies should promote joint programmes to promote positive mental health and suicide prevention.
- The All-Island Action Plan on Suicide Prevention should be broadened to include mental health promotion.
- The two Departments and the relevant Agencies should continue their work to develop a collaborative model of care for patients with paediatric and congenital cardiac conditions.
- The two Departments and the relevant Agencies should work collaboratively to plan and develop radiotherapy capacity in Altnagelvin Hospital in order to improve access to radiotherapy for populations in the North West of the island of Ireland.
- The two Departments and other relevant Agencies/Departments should evaluate the effectiveness of the current alert systems for children at risk.
- The two Departments and the relevant Agencies/Departments should continue to take forward measures to improve child protection.

These recommendations are currently being progressed. It is likely that the remaining recommendations in the report would each involve additional resources to implement and my Department will consider these on a case by case basis going forward subject to my approval and available resources. A full copy of the report is available on the Department's website at <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/north-south-feasibility-study-final-report-19th-feb-09.pdf>.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the costs accrued as a result of the ongoing court case into blood donation from gay men.

(AQW 40618/11-15)

Mr Wells: The legal costs incurred by this Department in relation to the policy on blood donation by men who have had sex with men, are summarised in the following table:

	£'000
Counsel Costs	29.2
Departmental Solicitors Office Legal Staff	9.4
Swear Fees /Data Dispatch/Appeal Stamp/Order Fee	0.5
	39.1

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on All Ireland Air Ambulance proposals.

(AQW 40620/11-15)

Mr Wells: I expect to receive the report by the Republic of Ireland's Emergency Aeromedical Support service group in the near future. When I have received it, I will consider its recommendations in conjunction with the Health and Social Care Board's Helicopter Emergency Medical Service (HEMS) study before making a decision on this matter.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of whether the proposals for palliative care as set out in Transforming Your Care are now relevant in the present economic climate.

Mr Wells: Palliative and end of life care is a vital part of our health and social care services. Whilst the present economic climate is challenging, nevertheless I am committed to ensuring that high quality care continues to be provided to people with palliative and end of life care needs.

The Health and Social Care Board and Public Health Agency, in conjunction with Marie Curie and working with statutory, voluntary and independent sector partners, are taking forward the Transforming Your Palliative and End of Life Care Programme. The Programme aims to improve the design and delivery of co-ordinated services and ensure equity of access to services for both urban and rural communities. It will do this through the development of person centred care, so that people with palliative and end of life care needs will have, as far as possible, choice in how and where their care is provided.

Following extensive engagement with stakeholders, a number of priority areas for improving palliative and end of life care have been identified and the potential for service re-design will be considered in the coming months.

The Health and Social Care Board has also been working with Integrated Care Partnerships to put in place new care pathway arrangements for patients who are frail and elderly, have had a stroke, or who have diabetes or chronic respiratory conditions. These new pathways will support people to be cared for at home, which is often the preferred place of care at the end of life.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much has been spent on taxis by the Northern Ireland Health and Social Care Trust in each of the last five years.

(AQW 40632/11-15)

Mr Wells: Expenditure by the Northern Health and Social Care Trust on taxis in each of the last five financial years is set out in the table below.

2013/14 £	2012/13 £	2011/12 £	2010/11 £	2009/10 £
885,842	908,348	775,595	859,540	989,296

Taxis are used by NHSCT for the transportation of patients and clients, e.g. the safe transportation of children in care; adult mental health outpatients, transporting clients to day centres etc. In addition taxis are required for the transportation of blood, medical records, equipment and staff escorting patients.

The use of taxis by the Northern Health and Social Care Trust is planned and monitored. Cost: Paramedic Training

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) how much it costs; and (ii) the length of time it takes to train a paramedic.

(AQW 40640/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service is the sole provider of Paramedic education in Northern Ireland.

They deliver a two year Paramedic-in-Training Programme costing around £41k per student. These costs include the salary costs of the student, tutor costs and non-pay costs, for example vehicle hire and course materials.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) how much it costs; and (ii) the length of time it takes to train a temporary paramedic.

(AQW 40641/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service is the sole provider of paramedic education in Northern Ireland.

They deliver a two year Paramedic-in-Training Programme costing around £41k per student. These costs include the salary costs of the student, tutor costs and non-pay costs, for example vehicle hire and course materials.

This is the same training programme as that delivered to permanent paramedics.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) what is involved in regards to carrying out an assessment for a controlled wheelchair; and (ii) what criteria has to be met in order to receive a controlled wheelchair.

(AQW 40642/11-15)

Mr Wells:

- (i) Health and Social Care Trusts' occupational therapy staff conduct a person-centred, comprehensive assessment for all such wheelchair requests. It is important for anyone who is being assessed for a wheelchair to give as much information as possible about their condition, their physical and social needs, their expectations and proposed usage of a wheelchair, and to ask any questions that occur to them at the time of the assessment. The information provided will help to ensure that the chosen wheelchair matches as much as possible the physical and social needs of the wheelchair user.
- (ii) The provision of this type of wheelchair is considered under the Regional Eligibility Criteria for the provision of wheelchairs through the Northern Ireland Wheelchair Service - A Guide for Users.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how patients with vasculitis are identified and monitored.

(AQW 40679/11-15)

Mr Wells: As vasculitis is a feature of many diseases with a range of severity, and organs affected, there is no one way by which it is identified or monitored. This will depend on the manner in which the vasculitis manifests itself, the organs affected and the severity of the condition which can range from mild and self-limiting, to severe and life threatening.

Commonly, general practitioners would be the first point of contact for patients and would usually make the diagnosis clinically before referring patients to the appropriate speciality for their particular care on a case-by-case basis.

Appropriate treatment for patients diagnosed with vasculitis is provided through several different specialities including rheumatology, arthritis, renal, cardiac and dermatology depending on the severity as well as the organs affected in each specific case. Arrangements for the monitoring of patients by clinically skilled practitioners also vary and are tailored to individual needs, dependent on the type of vasculitis presenting.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number of patients awaiting the delivery of a bed to their home in December 2014 in each Health and Social Care Trust; and (ii) the number of patients who did not take receipt of a bed prior to 25 December 2014, and as a result, spent Christmas in hospital.

Mr Wells: The information requested is not held centrally and was therefore requested from each Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust. Their responses can be found below.

Belfast HSC Trust

- i The Trust had 308 requests for beds in December 2014.
- ii. No patient remained in hospital over Christmas in relation to the delivery of equipment.

Northern HSC Trust

- i The Trust had 75 people waiting for beds at the end of December 2014.
- ii. No patient remained in hospital awaiting the delivery of a bed prior to 25th December.

South Eastern HSC Trust

- i The Trust had 65 requests for beds in December 2014.
- ii. 1 patient remained in hospital until 29th December. This was not related to the unavailability of a bed.

Southern HSC Trust

- i The Trust had 85 requests for beds in December 2014.
- ii. No patient remained in hospital awaiting the delivery of a bed prior to 25th December.

Western HSC Trust

- i The Trust had 91 requests for beds in December 2014.
- ii. No patient remained in hospital awaiting the delivery of a bed prior to 25th December.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the revenue and cost consequences for the (i) Downe; (ii) Lagan Valley; and (iii) Ulster Hospitals as a result of the bed reductions implemented on 1 December 2014. (AQW 40730/11-15)

Mr Wells: The South Eastern Trust is currently forecasting the following cost savings as a result of the bed reductions implemented on 1 December 2014:

Hospital Site	Forecast Cost Reduction £'000
Downe	166
Lagan Valley	41
Ulster	N/A1

- 1 As there have been no bed reductions at the Ulster Hospital, there are no direct cost implications.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average waiting time for GP appointments in South Belfast, broken down on a weekly basis in the last three years. (AQW 40741/11-15)

Mr Wells: The information regarding the average waiting time is not available as it is not collated centrally.

I not aware of any problems with GP waiting times in South Belfast. None of the GP Practices in South Belfast have raised this as an issue with the HSCB. However, over the last two years the HSCB has commissioned a Northern Ireland Local Enhanced Service, Demand Management, which allows Practices to review their current demand and working practices and in turn identify and implement changes which should improve management of workload.

In addition, the HSCB has commissioned a Northern Ireland Local Enhanced Service, Additional Surgeries, to deal with the issue of additional pressures for patient appointments and home visits on GP Practices during the winter months. This service, for which additional funding is provided to the Practices, was introduced from 1st November 2014 and will be delivered to 31st March 2015. Fifteen out of the eighteen GP Practices in the member's constituency have signed up to provide this Enhanced Service.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures are being taken by his Department to alleviate GP waiting times in South Belfast. (AQW 40742/11-15)

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why it was decided not to include the Children's Emergency Department at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children in the remit of the unscheduled care regional task group.

(AQW 40752/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Unscheduled Care Task Group was established by my predecessor in response to the findings and recommendations of the RQIA review of unscheduled care which was published in June of last year, as well as the key work undertaken by the College of Emergency Medicine (CEM) and the Royal College of Nursing (RCN) in relation to urgent and emergency care in Northern Ireland.

The task group was instructed to take immediate action to oversee and co-ordinate the implementation of the RQIA's recommendations and set the clear aim of eliminating all avoidable 12 hour waiting time breaches from this winter onwards and over the next 18 months in making significant progress towards achieving the 4 hours waiting time standard.

To date, no issues of concern have been highlighted to my Department by RQIA, CEM or the RCN in relation to the Emergency Department of the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children (RBHSC). Performance at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children Emergency Department is consistently strong - in 2013/2014 no patients waited longer than 12 hours, and 4 hour performance was 89.8% over the year.

The most recent preliminary statistics for December 2014 show that performance continues to be good with no patient waiting over 12 hours that month and 86% of patients admitted or discharged within 4 hours.

I recognise that all of our health services will face a greater level of demand at this busy time of the year and that continued improvement in the quality and effectiveness of care is always possible. My Department will always listen and respond to the views of parents who use the RBHSC's Emergency Department and if the Member has specific concerns about the service that she would wish to bring to my attention I will arrange for my Department to investigate this.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action his Department is taking to ensure that a joined up approach is taken for personality disorder support services, including in the voluntary sector, so that money is not being wasted on administration but focused on patient and clients.

(AQW 40768/11-15)

Mr Wells: My Department's Personality Disorder (PD) strategy, 'Personality Disorder: A Diagnosis for Inclusion' (June 2010), is being implemented through a regional clinical network. The membership of the network group comprises key stakeholders in the delivery of PD services including the Health and Social Care Board, the Public Health Agency, all five Health and Social Care Trusts, Prison Health Care, Probation Board NI, CAUSE (carers representatives), service user representatives, Queen's University Belfast and the University of Ulster.

The PD Network Group supports the delivery of care and treatment by providing a clinical support network for staff; providing a forum to share best practice; actively seeking the views of people who have used services; and supporting them to participate in shaping the development of services. It also provides a forum for coordinating service development across the region and negotiating interface arrangements.

All of the funding provided by the Department for the implementation of the PD strategy has been used to employ front line specialist clinical staff or to fund support for carers. None of the funding is used to fund administration posts.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the number of neonatal beds in each Health and Social Care Trust area.

(AQW 40809/11-15)

Mr Wells: The number of neonatal beds in each Health and Social Care Trust area at 31st December 2014 is given in the table below.

HSC Trust	Number of neonatal cots
Belfast	27
Northern	14
South Eastern	13
Southern	22
Western	24

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the £10m contained in the January Monitoring Round for Health and Social Care Trusts frontline service pressures will be used to maintain the respite care facility in The Cottages, Derry.

(AQW 40864/11-15)

Mr Wells: Unfortunately, none of the £10m bid for HSC Trusts' frontline service pressures was met in the January Monitoring Round.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the Terms of Reference for the health sector review to be undertaken as part of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development review into public sector reform in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 40934/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Department of Finance and Personnel leads work on the OECD Public Governance Review for Northern Ireland which was agreed by the Executive in June 2014.

As the DFP Minister's Budget paper submitted to the Assembly noted, it is intended to progress a health sector review through a case study to be undertaken as part of the on-going OECD. Terms of Reference for the case study have not yet been agreed.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of administrative staff working in each aspect of the Health Service in each of the last three years.

Mr Wells: Detailed figures on the staffing of HSC Organisations at 31st March in each year, along with trends and comparisons with the previous several years, are published annually in the HSC Workforce Census. The 2014 Census is available at <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/hscwc-march-2014.pdf>.

The headcount and whole-time equivalent (WTE) numbers of Administrative and Clerical staff employed by each HSC Organisation at 31st March each year are shown in the table below. These figures exclude members of Boards, members of staff with a WTE of less than 0.03, and members of staff on career breaks.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether Larne and Ballycastle ambulance stations will benefit from the investment in the ambulance fleet.

(AQW 40951/11-15)

Mr Wells: As part of the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service Trust's five-year ambulance vehicle replacement cycle, the Northern Division, which includes Larne and Ballycastle ambulance stations, will receive 15 replacement vehicles within the current financial year 2014/15. However, the vehicles specifically allocated within Larne and Ballycastle ambulance stations are not due for replacement within this financial year.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the Health and Social Care Trusts that are currently reviewing their provision of domiciliary meals; and whether any Health and Social Care Trusts has conducted a consultation amongst the recipients of meals.

(AQW 41004/11-15)

Mr Wells: As you will be aware in line with Public Procurement Policy, the South Eastern Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust has recently tendered its community meals service. Trust officials have confirmed that they have consulted with existing service users in preparing the tender documentation and also sought the views of potential future users, through the use of targeted focus groups.

The Western HSC Trust have advised that they are currently considering their Community Meals Service and plan to commence an engagement process with service users and independent providers in the near future.

At present, the Belfast, Northern, and Southern HSC Trusts have no plans to review their provision of community meals.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 40467/11-15, what is the ability of Pinewood residential home to accept permanent placements.

(AQW 41019/11-15)

Mr Wells: In line with the regional process, each Trust has submitted proposals for change to the Health and Social Care Board. My department is now working with the Board to develop a robust consultation plan for these proposals.

Following the completion of this process, those homes where no significant change is planned in the near future, the Trusts will be asked to review their position on permanent admissions. In the interim, the Northern HSC Trust has advised that Pinewood residential home continues to accept respite and intermediate care admissions.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust, in restricting the Meals on Wheels Service to providing a 14 day supply of frozen food, have conducted (i) a consultation with the client group; and (ii) an equality screening/impact assessment as stipulated under Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

(AQW 41049/11-15)

Mr Wells: The South Eastern HSC Trust has confirmed that it consulted with existing Community Meals service users to inform the development of the service specification which was used to tender the contract. The views of potential future users were also obtained through targeted focus groups.

The Trust has advised that the procurement of Community Meals was subject to Equality Screening in January 2013. A further rescreening exercise was undertaken in January 2015, the outcome of which is that the proposal will be subject to on-going screening. The Trust is committed to monitoring the impact of the proposal on an on-going basis.

Mr Lynch asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why an operation was cancelled in the Royal Victoria Hospital on 19 January 2015 given that the patient was high risk with an urgent condition.

(AQW 41085/11-15)

Mr Wells: Due to reasons of patient confidentiality, I am unable to provide the information requested in this reply. However, if the Member would write to me with a patient consent form I will provide a full reply.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many outpatient clinics operate out of Bangor Hospital.

(AQW 41138/11-15)

Mr Wells: Information on outpatient activity in hospitals in Northern Ireland is collected on the basis of the number of appointments that are held and cancelled, not the number of clinics held and cancelled.

There were 12,356 total consultant-led outpatient attendances in Bangor Hospital during 2013/14, compared to 11,635 in 2012/13.

The number of appointments does not equate to the number of patients seen, as it is possible for the same person to attend a consultant-led outpatient service more than once during the year.

Information on the number of consultant-led outpatient appointments in HSC Hospitals in Northern Ireland is published on an annual basis in the Northern Ireland Hospital Statistics: Outpatient Activity publication (Table 2a) and is available to view or download from:

<http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/hs-outpatient-stats-2013-2014.pdf>

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people attended the Bangor Hospital outpatients clinics over the last two years.

(AQW 41139/11-15)

Mr Wells: Information on outpatient activity in hospitals in Northern Ireland is collected on the basis of the number of appointments that are held and cancelled, not the number of clinics held and cancelled.

There were 12,356 total consultant-led outpatient attendances in Bangor Hospital during 2013/14, compared to 11,635 in 2012/13.

Mr Devenney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Western Health and Social Care Trust's proposals to reconfigure services at The Cottages, Londonderry.

(AQW 41148/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Western HSC Trust continues to keep me and my officials updated regarding its plans to remodel the children's respite facilities in the area. The Trust's review of its respite services is continuing and I understand a range of options are under consideration.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the options available to add further services at the site of the new Ballymena Health Centre.

(AQW 41326/11-15)

Mr Wells: The new Ballymena Health and Care Centre, which is scheduled to be open in autumn 2015, will include accommodation for 6 GP practices as well as a mix of locally accessible acute, primary and community care clinics.

Many of the services transferring into the new centre will relocate from the Braid Valley Hospital or buildings on the Braid Valley site. The Northern HSC Trust has established a working group to look at the vacated space and develop options to reuse it considering the site profile and the need to ensure the equality of access to services for the resident population.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the investment in Clark Clinic, Belfast.

(AQO 7407/11-15)

Mr Wells: My Department is currently considering proposals submitted by the Belfast Trust Cardiologists which aim to develop and strengthen the Clark Clinic. This will be required if I decide that the all-island congenital cardiology service, recommended by the International Working Group, is to be implemented. The public consultation on this closed on Friday 23 January and I intend to announce next month my decision on the all-island model and my Department's investment proposals for the Clark Clinic. The additional £1m offer of funding through the Change Fund for 2015/16, announced by my Executive colleague the Finance Minister last week, will go some way towards delivering the required investment should I decide to proceed with the all-island model.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the new Ballymena health centre.

(AQO 7408/11-15)

Mr Wells: Construction work on the new Ballymena Health and Care Centre is progressing well and is due to open to service users in Autumn 2015.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on his plans regarding minimum unit pricing for alcohol.

(AQO 7409/11-15)

Mr Wells: On the 3rd December 2014, I announced my intention to introduce minimum unit pricing for alcohol in Northern Ireland, as a key measure to tackle alcohol related harm and reduce health inequalities. This decision was supported by the publication of research commissioned from the University of Sheffield, available on my Department's web site, which demonstrated that Minimum Unit Pricing is a targeted and effective measure.

Since that announcement, officials in my Department have been working with counterparts in the Department for Social Development and the Department of Justice to draft a policy consultation paper on how Minimum Unit Pricing will be introduced in Northern Ireland. Given that this measure will have an impact on other Government Departments, I will be submitting this paper to the Executive for formal approval, in the near future. If approved, the document will issue for a 12-week public consultation.

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what progress has been made in efforts to tackle so-called legal highs.

(AQO 7411/11-15)

Mr Wells: Substances referred to as "legal highs" have a psychoactive effect but are not currently covered by the UK-wide Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. However, the term "legal highs" can be misleading, and we therefore refer to them as "New Psychoactive Substances" (NPS).

The legislation in respect of the Misuse of Drugs Act is reserved to the UK Government. However, both my Department and I have raised this issue with the Home Secretary seeking a more robust and consistent approach. The Home Office subsequently commissioned an expert review of the UK's legislative response. The New Psychoactive Substances Review: Expert Panel Report and the associated Government Response were published by the Home Office in October 2014.

I welcomed the Panel's Report, which provides a comprehensive assessment of the NPS problem in the UK. In particular, I am very supportive of the main legislative proposals – i.e. where consideration will be given to the Republic of Ireland's approach to banning headshops, and also to group definitions for banning substances based on their psychoactive effects rather than their chemical composition.

These recommendations are now being developed by the Home Office. I have offered my full support to this work, and officials from my Department will be involved as appropriate.

In the meantime, I strongly advocate the approach taken by Belfast City Council, for the pioneering work undertaken on NPS in the city, and I welcome the recent injunction that has been brought forward. I believe this innovative and joined up approach has been key to tackling the availability of NPS in Northern Ireland.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he has taken to promote awareness of sudden infant death syndrome.

(AQO 7412/11-15)

Mr Wells: Advice on reducing the risk of Sudden Infant Death Syndrome, also known as SIDS or Cot Death, has been provided since the early 1990s. In December, I issued a press release to promote awareness of SIDS and remind everyone of the key steps that can be taken to help prevent SIDS. My Department has produced awareness raising leaflets which provide advice on how to reduce the risk of SIDS. These leaflets are provided to first-time mothers by the Health and Social Care Trusts. Information on SIDS is also available on the NI Direct website; and included in the 'Pregnancy' and 'Birth to Five' books provided to expecting and new mothers.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given the extended waiting times at Emergency Departments over the past number of weeks, what action his Department is taking to ensure that performance targets for 2014/15 are being met.

(AQO 7413/11-15)

Mr Wells: My Department, through the work of the unscheduled care task group has been working closely with the HSC to ensure that our emergency care services are better prepared this winter. This work is on-going.

Considerable progress has been made to date in better planning for periods of increased demand, better direct access to speciality services thus avoiding ED's and in developing indicators and standards for services, including our frail elderly

My Department has allocated £5 million of additional funding to the HSC this Winter. In addition to this, £750k has been made available from Health and Social Care Board. This funding has been used to provide additional consultants, AHP and pharmacy staff, and Hospital Ambulance Liaison Officers across the HSC, as well as to support Trusts in implementing measures to improve patient flow and to expand capacity, as required, over the winter period.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the key challenges of the recently announced review of Health and Social Care.

(AQO 7414/11-15)

Mr Wells: The purpose of the review of administration within the Health and Social Care system is to ensure that the structures in place to support the delivery of health and social care are working – both individually and collectively – as efficiently and effectively as possible. Whilst the review must be cost-effective and proportionate given the current financial climate, it is important that all opportunities for more efficient and effective delivery of services are identified. I also expect the review to explore the benefits of benchmarking against other organisations, and to identify the potential areas for enhanced collaboration and cooperation across the whole system.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the procedures in place that led to the closure of Orchard House nursing home, leaving residents in need of immediate alternative accommodation.

Mr Wells: Orchard House is a privately owned facility. I understand that due to the limitations of the current building, the proprietors have made a decision to temporarily close to allow for the building to be re-designed and modernised, with the intention of providing care services for people with dementia.

The Belfast Trust and RQIA have advised me that the period of notice for change of use given met relevant legislative and contractual requirements.

The Trust are working closely with the nursing home staff, residents and their relatives to ensure that all residents are appropriately and successfully relocated.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline any assessment made of the numbers and types of cases presented to Emergency Departments that could more appropriately be addressed through GPs, out-of-hours GPs and Minor Injuries Units.

(AQO 7416/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Health and Social Care Board monitors the number of patients who attend Emergency Departments and each attendance is classified under a system called the Manchester Triage Category. Whilst it is not possible to definitively say the number of patients that could more appropriately be seen in Primary Care as opposed to an Emergency Department, evidence suggests that a number of patients triaged as category 4 and 5 could potentially be treated in Minor Injury Units or in Primary Care. In 2013/14, 37.2% of those triaged in Type 1 and 2 Emergency Departments were Category 4 and 1.9% were Category 5. This indicates that there is significant scope for these patients to be treated in MIUs or in Primary Care and it is therefore important that the public use our emergency services wisely by choosing the most appropriate service for their needs. This is particularly true in the winter months when our Emergency Departments are under pressure. That is why I launched the "Choose Well" campaign last year to encourage people to make the right choices.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on Integrated Care Partnerships.

(AQO 7417/11-15)

Mr Wells: All 17 Integrated Care Partnerships have been working hard to improve the co-ordination and effectiveness of care for service users in the four areas of frail elderly, respiratory conditions, stroke and diabetes.

A key strand of ICP work to date has been in respect of care pathways for these condition areas. The health and social care professionals, service users and carers involved in ICPs have used local knowledge to map care pathways, from prevention through to end of life care.

Action Plans have also been developed for each ICP detailing the agreed priorities for improvement, in line with commissioning specifications issued by Local Commissioning Groups.

Where investment was required, business cases were submitted to Local Commissioning Groups. There has been ongoing discussion to agree those business cases and the resources required.

ICPs are also working to risk stratify their local population so that they can put in place proactive care plans to better integrate care for those that need it and ensure that appropriate support and care is in place to prevent deterioration or unnecessary hospital admissions.

Department of Justice

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the cases of Fred McClenaghan and the murder of Marion Millican, for a breakdown of the total costs, including legal aid to law firm and counsel, or where not yet available an estimate of same, shown by the (i) trial; (ii) appeal; (iii) first re-trial which was aborted; and (iv) second re-trial.

(AQW 40522/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): In response to AQW/38027/11-15 I provided estimated costs of the aborted first retrial of Fred McClenaghan. A second retrial commenced within 15 days of the end the first retrial and consequently, in accordance with paragraph 23(2) of Schedule 1 to the Legal Aid for Crown Court Proceedings (Costs) Rules (Northern Ireland) 2005, the case is considered as having comprised one trial for the purposes of determining the fees. One overall set of retrial figures have therefore been detailed. The cost of witness expenses are not broken down by individual court but are shown as an aggregate. For convenience they are included with the original trial cost details.

The original trial costs are as follows:

■ Legal Aid Solicitor	£52,200
■ Legal Aid Counsel	£43,117
■ Courts	£38,708
■ Prosecution	£50,700
■ Witness expenses	£11,932

The appeal costs are as follows:

■ Legal Aid Solicitor	£34,436
■ Legal Aid Counsel	£49,600
■ Courts	£4,765
■ Prosecution	£17,853

The estimated retrial costs are as follows:

■ Legal Aid Solicitor	£59,025
■ Legal Aid Counsel	£56,438

- Courts £65,255
- Prosecution not yet available

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how much has been paid in legal aid for representation at legacy cases in each of the last three years; and whether funding for these matters comes from a separate allocated budget in legal aid, or are classed as civil cases.

(AQW 40605/11-15)

Mr Ford: Legal aid for representation in legacy inquest cases is paid under the Statutory Exceptional Grant Power Scheme. The information provided has been extracted from the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission's (the Commission) record of cases which the Commission deems to be legacy inquest cases.

In the last three years payments have been made as follows:

Year	Fees Paid
2011/12	Nil
2012/13	£125,558.60
2013/14	£64,959.31

Funding has also been paid under the Statutory Exceptional Grant Power Scheme in respect of the plaintiffs' costs in the Omagh Civil action.

In the last three years payments have been made as follows:

Year	Fees Paid
2011/12	£32,638.69
2012/13	£829,365.22
2013/14	£176,767.21

The above costs are in relation to inquest cases paid under the Statutory Exceptional Grant Power. The costs do not include other satellite litigation cases relating to legacy inquests as those costs cannot be readily identified by the Commission's management information system.

Funding with regard to these cases is paid from the overall legal aid budget and is not paid from a separate allocated budget.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 31893/11-15 and AQW 32276/11-15, what was the outcome of the review into prison chaplaincy.

(AQW 40669/11-15)

Mr Ford: The review of Prison Chaplaincy made a number of recommendations in order to clarify the role of Chaplains, strengthen relationships between NIPS and Church Leaders and address perceived inequalities in the current model highlighted by the Churches during the consultation process.

NIPS has met with senior Church representatives on a number of occasions to discuss the review's recommendations and from those meetings an alternative model for delivery of Chaplaincy provision has been developed and agreed. NIPS plans to implement these arrangements on 1 April 2015 and continues to engage with Church Leaders.

The new model will deliver the maximum benefit for prisoners within resources available and will focus on three high level core activities: conducting services, committals and prisoners in crisis.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to people parking in allocated disabled bays displaying the requisite Blue Badge in Court House car parks, whether Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunal staff and G4S staff are remitted to check the Blue Badge in question refers to the person traveling in the car.

(AQW 40693/11-15)

Mr Ford: Under the terms of the contract for the provision of security and ancillary services, the management of car parks is delegated to G4S Secure Solutions (UK) Ltd (G4S). G4S staff have authority to monitor access to the car parks, and to ensure that those parking in disabled parking bays are displaying a Blue Badge. This remit extends to all persons travelling in the car. A disabled space in a secure parking area can be allocated by prior arrangement with the relevant court office and permission to this area will be permitted subject to validation of identity and information provided. All car parking in public car parks is on a first come first served basis.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many convictions have been secured for fuel smuggling in each of the last two financial years.

(AQW 40731/11-15)

Mr Ford: The information requested is not available. Court conviction and sentencing datasets do not distinguish fuel smuggling from other evasion of duty or intent to defraud offences which would be prosecuted under the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 and/or the Criminal Attempts and Conspiracy (Northern Ireland) Order 1983.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many convictions have been secured for cigarette smuggling in each of the last two financial years.

(AQW 40732/11-15)

Mr Ford: The information requested is not available. Court conviction and sentencing datasets do not distinguish cigarette smuggling from other evasion of duty or intent to defraud offences which would be prosecuted under the Customs and Excise Management Act 1979 and/or the Criminal Attempts and Conspiracy (Northern Ireland) Order 1983.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice what cooperation exists between his Department, and its arm's-length bodies, and the Irish Government to prevent fuel and cigarette smuggling.

(AQW 40733/11-15)

Mr Ford: Fuel and cigarette smuggling are both examples of excise offences which are reserved matters falling within the remit of HM Revenue and Customs. The Home Office's Border Force is also involved in the detection of smuggling at the borders.

Locally, the Organised Crime Taskforce (OCTF), which I chair, has a cross border sub group specifically dealing with fuel fraud – this includes members from all relevant bodies on both sides of the border. HMRC also chairs a similar group on tobacco fraud with cross border representation. These meetings assist with current operational issues, comparisons of best practice and updates.

Additionally, as part of this year's OCTF cross border conference HMRC/ Revenue Commissioner Officers conducted a joint North/ South tobacco workshop over two days looking at the issue across the island.

The new fuel marker, which is due to come into use later this year, is an example of a joint initiative between officials in both jurisdictions and will be an important tool in the fight against laundered diesel.

As Justice Minister I work closely with my counterpart in the Republic of Ireland and have regular discussions about organised crime issues.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many cars were parked in the Dungannon Courthouse car parks by 10.30am on Monday 12th January 2015; and how many of these were doubled-parked on pavements, at kerbs and outside parking bays.

(AQW 40747/11-15)

Mr Ford: This information is not collected and therefore it is not possible to advise how parking at Dungannon Courthouse was utilised on the date specified.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice (i) to detail the (a) accommodation costs; (b) costs for flights; and (c) living expenses claimed to date by the Northern Ireland Prison Service Change Managers travelling to and from Northern Ireland since they were employed; (ii) from which budget these costs are met; and, (iii) who approves payment.

(AQW 40748/11-15)

Mr Ford:

- (i) This expenditure is not broken down into categories. The overall expenditure was £70,378 between December 2011 and December 2014.
- (ii) The costs are met from the Prison Reform Team budget.
- (iii) The Department of Justice approved the contract. Individual payments are processed under established procedures by staff within the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to estimate the cost to date in legal aid in the case of Seamus Connery in case number 13/121205 at Magherafelt Magistrates Court, broken down by (i) law firm; (ii) counsel and (iii) any additional costs incurred.

(AQW 40750/11-15)

Mr Ford: Legal Aid was granted for representation by solicitor and junior counsel on 7 April 2014 to defend proceedings in Magherafelt Magistrates Court.

Court records indicate that on 7 January 2015 the Judge declared the proceedings void as the summons was deemed as not being served. A new summons is to issue. The case is still ongoing and therefore no claims for payment have been received from the instructing solicitor or counsel. Fees will be determined on the disposal of the case and it is not possible to provide an estimate of the costs at this time.

To date, an authority has been granted by the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission for the Solicitor to engage a graphologist in respect of this case at a cost of up to £80.00.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice at what rate did prison officers, who left under the voluntary early retirement scheme and owed days of service to the Prison Service, pay back the days owed.

(AQW 40760/11-15)

Mr Ford: Any staff who left under the voluntary early retirement scheme, who owed days of service, would have repaid these days on the basis of calendar days based on their rate of pay at their date of leaving.

The number of staff who owed days cannot be calculated without incurring disproportionate cost, as each case would need to be examined individually and this information is not held centrally. However, when any member of staff leaves the service (for whatever reason) there is a process in place at each establishment to ensure that days owed are recovered from salary.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice how many prison officers, who left under the voluntary early retirement scheme, owed days of service to the Prison Service.

(AQW 40761/11-15)

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what is the area of the Dungannon Courthouse site; and whether the site is owned or leased by the Northern Ireland Courts Service.

(AQW 40798/11-15)

Mr Ford: The total boundary area of Dungannon Courthouse site is 35,764.56 square metres. The Dungannon Courthouse site is owned by Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 39847/11-15, why this information would relate to a specific case, given that the alleged mistaken identity would remove the matter from Probation Board's remit.

(AQW 40799/11-15)

Mr Ford: AQW/39847/11-15 and preceding written questions AQW/38144/11-15, AQW/38779/11-15 and AQW/39125/11-15 directly refer to a specific case, in part or in whole. The Probation Board for Northern Ireland does not provide information on specific cases.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 40234/11-15, whether this response, and others answered in a similar manner, amount to a ban on the public being permitted to know the facts and circumstances of an unlawfully at large individual; and if so, which precise section of the Data Protection Act applies under these circumstances.

Mr Ford: There is no ban on members of the public being made aware of the facts necessary to assist with the return to prison of unlawfully at large persons. This is fair and lawful by virtue of the crime and taxation exemption cited at section 29 of the Data Protection Act 1998 (DPA). Facts about any other aspect of an individual's time in prison or matters related to that are sensitive personal data as defined in section 2 of the DPA. As such, any processing of this data must be compliant with the first data protection principle. In order to comply with the first principle, at least one of the conditions for processing as specified in Schedules 2 and 3 of the DPA must be fulfilled. If none of the conditions are met, then processing may take place if an exemption to the first principle can be applied. In this case, the supply of the detail requested does not fulfil any of the conditions for processing, nor is there a relevant exemption to be applied. The supply of the information would therefore be neither fair nor lawful.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 37161/11-15 and AQW 38849/11-15, and the subsequent correspondence, why the PSNI were not routinely notified of unescorted home leave as matter of course, particularly in instances of a categorisation of dangerous.

Mr Ford: At the time of the incident back in February 2012, it was routine practice to notify the PSNI when a young person was going on unescorted home leave from Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre. However there was no requirement for the PSNI to visit the young person. Following the subsequent review of the Youth Justice Agency's home leave and mobility policies, a formal procedure was agreed whereby each district Reducing Offending Unit team is informed in advance of all instances of unescorted home leave in their area and will visit the young person during that period of unescorted home leave.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice to detail the steps to be taken in the formation of Police and Community Support Partnerships in the new councils, including the projected timescales for each step.

(AQW 40869/11-15)

Mr Ford: District Councils are required, by the Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 2011, to appoint political members to Policing and Community Safety Partnerships (PCSPs) and District PCSPs (DPCSPs) so as to ensure that, so far as practicable, the political members reflect the balance of parties prevailing among the members of the council immediately after the last local general election. My Department has been advised that District Councils will make political appointments to PCSPs and DPCSPs at Annual General Meetings, which will be held in March 2015.

Independent members will subsequently be appointed by the Northern Ireland Policing Board who, in accordance with the requirements of the Justice Act, shall, so far as practicable, secure that the members of the PCSP, taken together, are representative of the community in the district. The Policing Board is expected to appoint independent members in June 2015, following a recruitment campaign which commenced on 6 November 2014. Before the campaign commenced, following public consultation, my Department issued a revised Code of Practice in October 2014 on the appointment of independent members to PCSPs and DPCSPs to provide guidance to the Policing Board and Councils on the appointment process. Pre-campaign activity also included information events, hosted by the Policing Board in September and October 2014, to raise awareness and to encourage as broad a pool of applicants as possible.

The new PCSPs and DPCSPs are due to be established in June 2015.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the remedial action taken by the Prison Service in relation to the Staff Attitude Survey.

(AQW 40881/11-15)

Mr Ford: Since the results of the survey were published and further analysed by the Department the Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) has participated in departmental focus groups and proactively engaged with staff through different mechanisms. For example, senior managers continue to engage with staff across the prisons both formally and informally. This has included the establishment of 'front-line fora' where staff have the opportunity to discuss a range of issues with senior management.

NIPS has also held an 'Engagement Workshop' with a range of staff from across the organisation to discuss key themes under the NICS People Strategy.

Work has commenced to develop an Engagement Strategy for 2015/16.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice whether the Prison Service conducts a stress risk assessment for Prison Service staff; and if so, to detail its content.

(AQW 40882/11-15)

Mr Ford: Health and Safety risk assessments are carried out at each establishment by local units. The assessments cover hazards such as fire, electrical, violence, slips, trips, and falls. There are currently no items in relation to stress within this format.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice to detail the engagement that has taken place between Prison Service management and the Health and Safety Executive regarding systems of work at HMP Maghaberry.

(AQW 40883/11-15)

Mr Ford: NIPS have not engaged with the Health and Safety Executive regarding systems of work at Maghaberry prison.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice whether meetings held between the Prison Service and the Health and Safety Executive are held jointly with Prison Officers Association representatives.

(AQW 40884/11-15)

Mr Ford: On occasions the Health and Safety Executive meet with senior management at establishments. Depending on the topic of discussion Prison Officers Association representatives may be invited to attend.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many Prison Service staff have been medically retired in each year since the end of the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

(AQW 40886/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Voluntary Exit Scheme ended on 31 May 2014. During the period 1 June 2014 – 19 January 2015 a total of 14 members of staff have been medically retired from the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many of the new intake of Prison Service staff have been (i) medically retired; or (ii) left the service for medical reasons.

(AQW 40887/11-15)

Mr Ford: I can confirm that none of the new intake of Prison Staff have been medically retired from the Service.

With regard to the number of staff who have left the Service for medical reasons, we are unable to provide details as that would breach the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1998 as it may lead to the identification of individuals.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to provide, or place in the Assembly library, a copy of the screening form for Police Officers Pay and Conditions that followed the Police Negotiating Board Working Party pay and conditions meeting on 15 Oct 2013. (AQW 40888/11-15)

Mr Ford: No single piece of paper was prepared to screen pay and conditions following the Police Negotiating Party meeting on 15 October 2013. Throughout the process, cognisance was given to the effect of any overall package of potential reforms as they might impact upon various groups, and the individual potential changes that might constitute a fair package, in achieving the ultimate collective aim.

A number of reforms were considered and not implemented at that time, partly in consideration of the impact they would have on certain groups within the Police Service.

Following lengthy negotiations, the reforms were ultimately agreed at the Police Negotiating Board in May 2014. These resulted in a balanced package which took cognisance of the age profile, recent and planned recruitment, pension-related pay, the need to retain senior experienced officers, gender matters and improved family-friendly reforms. The changes included improved maternity provisions, shorter pay scales linked to improved management practices in areas such as assessment of performance, retention of the competence related threshold payment scheme, and increased compensation when placed on-call.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice what percentage of ground area at Dungannon Courthouse is taken up by (i) the court building and any other buildings on-site; and (ii) each car park. (AQW 40889/11-15)

Mr Ford: The total boundary area of Dungannon Courthouse site is 35,764.56 square metres. The court building takes up 5.8% of the ground area at Dungannon, the other buildings on site take up 0.14% of the ground area. Three car park areas take up, in total, 10.63% of the ground area. These are the Rear secure car park (2.60%), Top car park (3.21%) and Front Public car park (4.82%).

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Justice whether his Department will maintain proportionate support to the Probation Board of Northern Ireland to sustain levels of staffing, to address offending behaviours with people at assessed levels of contact, that are proportionate to risk and public safety for the offender and the victim. (AQW 40928/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department and the wider justice system is facing an extremely challenging environment both this year and also into 2015-16. The level of savings required means very difficult funding and prioritisation decisions need to be taken that will impact on frontline services and peoples' experience of the justice system.

Each criminal justice organisation has had to review how it delivers its services in order to live within current budgetary constraints. In making funding decisions I have sought to protect frontline services as far as possible.

My Department greatly values the services delivered by our partners within the community and voluntary sector. However, difficult decisions have had to be taken in order to achieve the significant savings required.

My Department will continue to work closely with the Probation Board for Northern Ireland to ensure frontline services are protected as far as possible and to consider how best to sustain community partnerships in the current economic climate, in order to maintain public safety.

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Justice whether his Department will invest in the Probation Board for Northern Ireland to sustain community partnerships which will support intervention in the community. (AQW 40929/11-15)

Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Justice to outline the rationale for the reduction in budget to the Probation Board for Northern Ireland, which supervises offenders at a lower cost than a custodial sentence. (AQW 40930/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department and the wider justice system is facing an extremely challenging environment both this year and also into 2015-16. Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to an application for an occasional drinks licence which was made in Irish in 2008 for an event in Cultúrlann in West Belfast, whether legal aid was granted to the applicant when they sought (i) a judicial review; and (ii) to subsequently appeal that decision.

(AQW 40946/11-15)

Mr Ford: Article 24 of the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (NI) Order 1981 precludes the release of information in relation to specific persons seeking or receiving legal aid for civil cases.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the outcomes of the Community Safety Strategy; Fear of Crime Strategic Action Plan 2012-14.

(AQW 41203/11-15)

Mr Ford: Crimes against older people are relatively rare with three in 1000 people aged 60+ becoming victims of offences of violence against the person in 2013/14. However, the fear of crime can have a negative impact on quality of life for older people, and a great deal has been done through the multi-agency delivery group to address this issue.

The Fear of Crime Strategic Action Plan 2012-14 sets out actions being taken by my Department and delivery partners in relation to reducing fear of crime and helping older and vulnerable people feel safer as outlined in the Community Safety Strategy 2012-2017.

When the Justice Committee approved this Action Plan in January 2013 it was agreed that a progress report would be provided after twelve months. The first progress report was provided to the Justice Committee for its meeting on 20 February 2014. A copy of this report, which sets out what was achieved in 2013-14 against agreed Community Safety Strategy outcomes and what was planned for 2014-15, is available on the Department of Justice website:

www.dojni.gov.uk/justice-committee-paper-community-safety-strategy-progress-reports

The second progress report on the Action Plan, demonstrating what was achieved in 2014-15, is due to be submitted to the Justice Committee in March and a copy will be made available on the Departmental website.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice what plans he has to reduce the provision of service at Ballymena Court House.
(AQW 41222/11-15)

Mr Ford: In response to significant budgetary pressures, the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service has reviewed the court estate to identify potential options for rationalisation. A public consultation exercise on the Rationalisation of the Court Estate was launched on 29 January 2015.

The consultation sets out proposals to close 8 courthouses, including Ballymena, with the transfer of business to alternative court venues.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Justice for an update on proposals regarding the future of vehicle immobilisation.
(AQW 41414/11-15)

Mr Ford: My responsibility for vehicle immobilisation is limited to ensuring that those operators who carry out vehicle immobilisation on private land are properly licensed by the Security Industry Authority. In February 2014 my Department undertook a public consultation and no conclusive evidence was provided to show there were any problems within this sector in Northern Ireland. I therefore decided to maintain the current regime as it is.

The consultation did highlight a number of issues relating to parking which were outside of the remit of my Department. I have brought these to the attention of the relevant Ministers.

A link to the response to consultation document is available below:

<http://www.dojni.gov.uk/index/public-consultations/archive-consultations/future-regulation-of-vehicle-immobilisation-on-private-land-in-northern-ireland-2.htm>

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of when the National Crime Agency will begin a full role in combating crime in Northern Ireland.

(AQO 7422/11-15)

Mr Ford: I remain hopeful that the NCA will have a role in the devolved sphere here in the next few months. I circulated a further, additional proposal paper to parties on 13 January. This built on the 8 September paper. Together they represent a significant attempt to find a solution. They suggest a level of local accountability for the NCA in Northern Ireland which is comparable to that for the PSNI and, in some respects, greater.

The proposals are the product of my Department's engagement with parties and others. They are supported by the Home Secretary, Director General of the NCA, PSNI and NIO.

I have asked the Home Secretary to lay a draft Order so that we can seek to put legislation in place before the election. This is likely to be laid in the next day or so at Westminster. An early draft of this was circulated to parties and some changes are being made.

I understand that a motion has been tabled concerning the NCA. If supported it would resolve the current impasse by giving Assembly consent for the necessary legislation in Westminster.

I very much hope that the Assembly will support the proposals and the motion. We have a significant gap in our law enforcement arrangements against organised criminals. I am proposing a robust accountability framework. We need to make progress.

Ms McGahan asked Minister of Justice for an update on the conference on rural crime held by the Ulster Farmers' Union in the Crumlin Road Gaol.

(AQO 7426/11-15)

Mr Ford: An update of the Ulster Farmers' Union conference is available on the UFU website; It attracted a large number of attendees – approximately 140 individuals from a wide range of sectors, with the largest group being from the farming sector.

Speakers and panel members represented a variety of organisations, including the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development, the Police Service for Northern Ireland, An Garda Síochána and the Rural Services Network of England and Wales.

The conference acknowledged the frustration in the farming community as to how agri-crime is dealt with on the ground and was primarily focused on what key organisations are doing to tackle rural crime. The conference also provided an opportunity to acknowledge the important role the farming community had to play in tackling rural crime, through uptake of crime prevention advice or by reporting their concerns about suspicious activity in their local area.

I understand that attendees' feedback was generally positive, with increased awareness of rural crime issues and the farming sector being more informed of measures they can take to protect their property. There was also an acknowledgement of the need to continue to build strong working relationships to tackle rural crime and the impact it has on rural communities.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Justice how he will ensure that policing oversight bodies have sufficient funding to carry out their work.

(AQO 7427/11-15)

Mr Ford: When allocations were made for the Budget 2011-15 period, the Police Ombudsman's office was the only area in the justice system that received a resource cash DEL increase in its budget from the Department: a budget increase of £271k, equivalent to 3%.

In 2015/16 the Police Ombudsman's Office will continue to be one of the most protected areas across the Department.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the creation of an interdepartmental group to examine exit strategies for sex workers as outlined in the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Criminal Justice and Support for Victims) Act (Northern Ireland) 2015.

(AQO 7428/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation (Criminal Justice and Support for Victims) Act (NI) 2015, which received Royal Assent on 13 January, places a requirement on the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to prepare and publish a strategy, with other Departments, in relation to a programme of assistance and support for persons who wish to leave prostitution. My Department will consider its contribution to that work as soon as it is commissioned by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister of Justice what issues he has discussed recently with the Minister for Justice and Equality.

(AQO 7429/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have had a number of discussions with Frances Fitzgerald, Minister for Justice and Equality since her appointment in May 2014 and before that with her predecessor Alan Shatter. I value these discussions to further promote co-operation across the range of policing and criminal justice matters.

Specifically, I met with Minister Fitzgerald under the auspices of the Inter-Governmental Agreement (IGA) on Co-operation on Criminal Justice Matters on 27 June 2014 and 21 November 2014. After each meeting I made an oral statement to the Assembly noting that matters under discussion included hate crime, sharing of information and training on programmes to challenge offending behaviour, exploring opportunities for collaboration in interventions for domestic violence and violent offenders, forensic science partnership between Northern Ireland, Ireland and Scotland, the sharing of information between the PSNI and Garda Síochána, implementation of the European Victims Directive, cooperation in relation to juvenile offenders on diversion.

Prior to the IGA meeting on 21 November I attended with Frances Fitzgerald the annual joint public protection seminar organised by the probation services north and south when we both gave opening speeches. The theme of this event was "Working with and in Communities."

On 1 October, the Minister met Minister Fitzgerald at the 2014 Cross Border Conference on Organised Crime when we discussed a range of issues concerning organised crime such as fuel laundering and smuggling, drug and tobacco smuggling and people trafficking.

At the North South Ministerial Conference on 5 December I discussed with Frances Fitzgerald matters including sexual exploitation by paramilitary organisations including potential for inquiries.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Justice to outline when the proposed Mental Capacity Bill will be introduced in the Assembly.

(AQO 7430/11-15)

Mr Ford: DoJ and DHSSPS are working to a joint timetable. It is our aim to submit a Bill to the Executive in March 2015, to enable passage through the Assembly by March 2016.

Whilst acknowledging that this is a challenging timetable, both departments are committed to delivering this important piece of legislation within the current mandate.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Justice whether he will introduce pension enhancements for police officers serving in a region which still has a high level security threat over an extended period.

(AQO 7431/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have currently no plans to introduce pension enhancements for police officers. Pensions for police officers are considered at national level and it remains key to policing in Northern Ireland that police officers retain the ability to move between GB and Northern Ireland unfettered by different terms and conditions across the jurisdictions.

Officers in Northern Ireland currently receive an allowance which is paid in recognition of the extraordinary circumstances under which they currently serve in Northern Ireland.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Justice for an update on his Department's proposed reconstitution of the Policing Board.

(AQO 7432/11-15)

Mr Ford: Under Part III of Schedule I to the Police (Northern Ireland) Act 2000, I am responsible for the appointment of independent members to the Northern Ireland Policing Board. The next reconstitution of the Board is due to take place by May 2015, at the end of the current four-year appointment term for independent members. I have written to a range of key stakeholders as part of a targeted consultation to seek their views on proposals for the appointment of independent Board members.

I intend to appoint independent members by way of a public appointment process. I also propose moving to a rolling appointments model for appointing independent Board members, effective from 2017. This would provide for three independent members to be either appointed or reappointed to the Board every year, in contrast to the current approach which sees nine members appointed once every four years.

These proposals are designed to provide a more effective model for the appointment of independent members as well as supporting the cohesion and continuity of the Board as a whole by providing the optimal balance between skills, knowledge and experience. The proposals are in line with existing statutory requirements and best practice in respect of public appointments.

The consultation provides an opportunity for key stakeholders to share their views on the proposals and I will consider all views in advance of commencing the appointments process.

Department for Regional Development

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans there are to upgrade rural cycle tracks, in particular on the A1 dual carriageway.

(AQW 38963/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): Subject to available funding, my Department plans new rural shared use cycle/footway lanes on the Lough Yoan Road, Enniskillen; Castledawson Road, Magherafelt; A29 Tobermore Road, Maghera; C84 Corkey Road Ballymena; and the A6 Foreglen Road at Owenbeg.

Officials also plan to extend the existing rural cycleway on the A50 from Newcastle to Castlewellan.

Regarding the A1, there is a segregated shared Cyclepath/footway south of Loughbrickland alongside the A1 for a distance of some 7 miles to Sheepbridge. Cyclists can then merge onto the old road towards Newry running alongside the new A1. These works were completed in 2010.

Upgrades to the road network are continually reviewed and other opportunities to upgrade cycling provision in tandem with the road network are continually reviewed as part of that process.

My officials have been asked to focus their efforts on the provision and enhancement of cycling facilities at locations where the benefits achieved could be enjoyed by the greatest number of people. Whilst facilities will continue to be provided in rural areas, this approach has inevitably resulted in the main cycling focus being within urban areas which have considerably higher concentrations of vehicle, cycle and pedestrian movements.

The provision of dedicated cycle facilities on roads such as the A1 dual carriageway presents particular challenges. The A1 has been improved at various places along its length and its layout changes, reflecting changes in design standards over time. For example, at some locations the hard shoulder that runs for most of its length is interrupted by side road junctions.

In rural areas, my Department hopes to explore the opportunity to develop more off-road 'Greenway' cycle facilities to promote involvement and to encourage more leisure cycling and to attract cyclists away from heavily trafficked roads.

Officials will also, as a matter of course, investigate opportunities to improve cycling provision in association with other planned upgrade works.

My Department's policies and practices are constantly evolving and the provision of cycling facilities will be kept under review.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the rationale behind the decision to remove the crash barrier at the Malone Road, Belfast where a pedestrian was killed in October 2014; and whether there are plans to replace the barrier. (AQW 40319/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As a result of the tragic incident that took place on the Malone Road in October 2014 there is now an on-going PSNI investigation. Officials are liaising closely with the investigating team regarding the information that can be made public prior to the investigation being completed. I hope you will appreciate it would not be appropriate for me to comment further, prior to confirmation being received from the PSNI that the information you have asked for, is no longer required for the investigation.

I trust this clarifies the Department's position on this matter and I shall write to you again once I receive a further update from the PSNI.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what impact the cut to the TransportNI budget will have on service provision. (AQW 40363/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: There has been a significant cut to the TransportNI budget for 2014-15 which amounts to £6 million. In addition the baseline is £12 million less than the objective requirement for roads maintenance. This has been addressed through in-year monitoring in each of the last three years. As a consequence I took a number of decisions to ensure a level of service could continue to be delivered to the public by protecting TransportNI's essential services –

- (i) Winter Maintenance;
- (ii) Energy costs for Street Lights, Traffic Signs & Signals;
- (iii) Inspection & testing and associated safety repairs of the Street Lighting, & illuminated signs stock; and
- (iv) Maintenance of traffic signals.

I also chose to protect TransportNI's internal maintenance teams, this was to ensure a minimum level of service could be delivered for the public to deal with public safety issues such as prioritised street lighting outages, ensuring sight lines have their grass cut, the most at risk gullies are emptied to moderate the risk of flooding and only the most significant defects on the road network can be patched.

However all Resource DEL work with external contractors, unless associated with the protected activities detailed above, was ceased; in reality this has meant –

- (i) The vast majority of street lights, where small scale maintenance, e.g. replacing a light-bulb was required, had been left unrepaired.
- (ii) Minimal maintenance was being completed on bridges;
- (iii) Only the most hazardous defects on roads and footways were being fixed; though every effort was being taken to carry out the Departments statutory duty to maintain the road network,

- (iv) The majority of gullies were un-cleaned or the frequency of cleaning was reduced.
- (v) Very few road markings were being renewed. Priority is given to regulatory / safety related markings such as STOP & Give Way markings.

The allocation of £5.2 million provided in January Monitoring will of course help to mitigate the impact of the cuts on the above services. The additional funding element for roads and bridge maintenance (£3.2 million) will be spent on a wide range of functions including gully emptying, renewal of road markings, bridge maintenance patching and some safety fence repairs. In relation to the street lighting allocation (£2 million), this will be used fix the backlog of outages and the outages that occur from now until the end of the year.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development how much has been cut from the NI Water budget for the remainder of the financial year.

(AQW 40399/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As NI Water had to manage a total funding gap of £14.4m in its 2014/15 budget allocation, which included a £4.2m shortfall against the Utility Regulator's Price Control (PC13) final determination, it was decided that there should be no further reduction to the NI Water budget for the remainder of the financial year.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what impact the cut to the NI Water budget will have on service provision.

(AQW 40400/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water has worked to manage the funding gap in its DEL Resource operational cost budget in 2014/15 whilst seeking not to impact its core services. Cost-cutting measures have been taken across a large range of areas within the company, many of which are one-off in nature and are not without risk, including assuming a normal winter period.

NI Water will continue to actively mitigate any risk of failure of service but this will remain a challenge within its current DEL Resource budget. Negative impact on customers due to increased risk of out of sewer flooding, pollution events, increased leakage, clean water supply interruptions, and overall longer response times cannot be ruled out.

Going forward, it is not likely to be sustainable for NI Water to operate at the same reduced budget level.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development how much has been cut from his Department's capital budget for the remainder of the financial year.

(AQW 40401/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has not had any cuts made to the capital budget for the remainder of the financial year.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department received any European funding in the 2013/14 financial year.

(AQW 40488/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I established a dedicated European Unit in July 2013 with the purpose of pro-actively engaging with Europe in order to maximise my Department's opportunities to secure European funding and significantly increase the flow of EU monies into Northern Ireland.

The existing budgetary mechanisms applied to EU Competitive Funds, such as Trans-European Transport Network funding, do not incentivise performance or deliver the normal additionalities associated with European funding paid directly to my Department.

In the 2013/14 financial year my Department successfully competed to secure a total of £14,417,094 from European funding sources.

This consisted of:

- £4,663,774 of Trans-European Transport Network (TEN-T) funding;
- £4,061,830 of funding from the INTERREG IVA Programme for Northern Ireland, the Border Region of Ireland and Western Scotland; and
- £5,691,490 through the European Sustainable Competitiveness Programme 2007-2013.

My Department continues to explore further opportunities for additional funding from the European Union.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what action he is taking to resolve the NI Water pensions dispute.
(AQW 40526/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Negotiations regarding the pension dispute have been on-going between NI Water, the Water Group Trade Unions (WGTU) and the Labour Relations Agency (LRA) for a number of weeks. In addition, I have met with both NI Water and Trade Unions in December 2014 and January 2015 in an effort to resolve the situation. I also attended talks at the LRA on 20 January where I made clear that any settlement had to be within the terms of Executive pay and pensions policy.

The statement made by Water Group Trade Unions (WGTU) on 21 January stating that it has suspended Industrial Action is to be welcomed. This is positive news for the public, especially those households and businesses who have experienced significant disruption to their water supply.

Trade Unions will now consult with their members on the detail. I understand that WGTU plan to recommend that members accept the deal before a ballot is conducted.

Now that the Industrial Action has been suspended, all NI Water staff will be working hard to ensure provision of services to all customers

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development what action he is taking to address the backlog of repairs to street lights. (AQW 40528/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: In order to be able to address the backlog of street lighting repairs that accumulated due to the shortfall in the resource budget for street lighting, my Department made bids for funding in the October and January monitoring rounds for this financial year.

Following the success of the January bid, I have instructed officials to immediately resume using external contractors to carry out street lighting repairs. Work to clear the backlog is already under way.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development what progress has been made on the installation of traffic light controls at the Belfast Road entrance to Holywood on the Belfast to Bangor A2.

(AQW 40529/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Traffic signals are generally provided at junctions where there are considerable queues or delays for traffic wishing to enter main road traffic from side roads and where a significant road safety issue has been identified. This is not the case at this location.

Junction improvements were carried out a number of years ago at this location to remove the facility for vehicles emerging from Belfast Road, Holywood to turn right onto the A2 dual carriageway to travel towards Bangor. Under the present arrangement vehicles leaving Holywood at this location can only travel towards Belfast with access into the Belfast Road towards Holywood only available from the A2 dual carriageway, thereby reducing the possibility of collisions.

A recent survey on the traffic using the slip road from the A2 dual carriageway into Belfast Road has not highlighted excessive queues or undue delays. This junction is 1.2km from the junction at Sullivan Place, which provides gaps in the traffic flow from the Bangor direction thereby allowing traffic to progress into Belfast Road. Drivers also have the opportunity to avail of a signal controlled access to Holywood at the junction at Sullivan Place, if they feel this is appropriate.

The provision of traffic signals at this location would result in considerable delays to traffic using this extremely busy strategic route from Bangor and the Ards Peninsula to Belfast.

Such a scheme would not attract a high priority at this time and my Department is not currently proposing to install traffic lights at this junction.

My officials will, however, continue to monitor this location and review the situation should circumstances change.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister for Regional Development how many new street lights have been installed in each of the last three years.

(AQW 40531/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details on the numbers of new street lights that have been installed by my Department, in each of the last three years, are set out in the table below:

Financial Year	Number of Street Lights Installed
2011-12	5262
2012-13	5240
2013-14	4332

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to question AQW 40163/11-15, for a geographical breakdown of the 32,000 water meters installed since 2007.

(AQW 40558/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Northern Ireland Water holds water meter installation information according to the nature of the installation, the number of meters, and the type of property (domestic or non-domestic) it serves. It is not operationally practical for the company to hold the information according to geographical area or constituency boundary and it is therefore not in a position to provide the requested information.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps he will take to ensure that road surfaces are not unnecessarily dug up.

Mr Kennedy: Road surfaces are opened for many reasons. These include the placing, inspection, maintenance and repair of utility apparatus, necessary to deliver utility services to homes and businesses across Northern Ireland, and works to maintain and improve our streets and footways, necessary for the safe and efficient transport of people and goods.

All of these works are necessary, but my Department seeks to co-ordinate works of all kinds in streets to minimise the inconvenience to persons using the street and to protect the structure of the street.

My officials work closely with utility companies through Divisional and Northern Ireland Road Authority and Utilities Committees (DRAUC's and NIRAUC), sharing programmes of planned major works to assist in that co-ordination process. While much of the work of these groups is unseen by the public, a very visible example has been the success in ensuring high profile events such as the Giro d'Italia and major City of Culture events were uninterrupted by planned works.

The NIRAUC Code of Practice for the Co-ordination of Street Works and Works for Road Purposes and Related Matters, approved by my Department, provides practical guidance for my Department and utility companies, including minimum notification periods for various categories of works. Notifications are provided through the shared Northern Ireland Streetworks Registration and Notification System (NISRANS) which allows officials to co-ordinate works and monitor compliance with notification requirements. In the case of substantial road works such as resurfacing schemes, my Department provides at least three months notice to utility companies, and will defer schemes where necessary to allow planned utility works to be completed before resurfacing takes place.

Unfortunately not all works can be planned so far in advance, and many cases do arise where utility companies must dig up the road surface at short notice, including emergency works to restore customer supplies or remove a serious risk presented by defective surface apparatus, or works to meet customer connection requests within timescales stipulated by the Utility Regulator. In those cases my Department ensures, through a formal inspection regime, that utility companies reinstate openings in accordance with the Specification for Reinstatement of Openings in Roads.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development whether senior executives in NI Water, who are negotiating with staff on the pension issue, are in the same pension scheme; and what are the respective rates of employer and employee contributions proposed throughout the various grades within the scheme.

(AQW 40623/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that the senior managers involved in the negotiations with the Water Group of Trade Unions are members of the same pension schemes as other employees of the company.

NIW has proposed the following contribution rates for all staff which are to be phased in over a 3 year period as set out in the table below.

	Salary	Current	2015-16	2016-17	2017-18
Classic	Up to £21k	1.5%	1.9%	2.6%	3.5%
	Over £21k	1.5%	2.6%	4.5%	6.9%
Premium/Care	Up to £21k	3.5%	3.5%	3.5%	3.5%
	Over £21k	3.5%	4.2%	5.4%	6.9%

It should be noted that it will be that pay element above £21k that will attract the higher percentage contribution i.e. an employee earning £24k pensionable pay in 2017-18 and currently a member of the Classic Scheme will pay 3.5% on the first £21k and 6.9% on the additional £3k (£24k - £21k).

The employer contribution rate will reduce to approximately 20% from the current level of approximately 26.9%.

These proposals remain subject to final consultation and agreement with a range of stakeholders.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development to list the locations to which NI Water delivered water during the recent disruption to the system in Fermanagh and Tyrone.

(AQW 40624/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Northern Ireland Water (NIW) has provided pick-up points at predetermined alternative water distribution locations during the period to 19th January as follows:

28-30 December 2014	Church Car Park at 194 Newtownhamilton Road, Armagh/ Markethill	Bottled water
8 – 9 January 2015	Fontenoys GAA Club car park, Castlewellan, Dromara	Bottled water
11-12 January 2015	Castle Court, Fermanagh	Bottled water
15 January 2015	Church Car Park, The Diamond, Pomeroy	Static tanks

16-17 January 2015	Sixtowns Road, Londonderry (Draperstown area)	Static tank
16-19 January 2015	Loughmacorrcy community hall, Ballybrack Road Tyrone	9 static tanks
16-19 January 2015	Patrician Hall, Main St, Carrickmore	5 static tanks
16-19 January 2015	Creggan visitor's centre, Creggan Road Tyrone	7 static tanks
16-19 January 2015	Creggan Road / Barony Road	7 static tanks
16-19 January 2015	9 Maryville Tyrone	2 static tanks
16-19 January 2015	2 Main Street Tyrone	7 static tanks
17 – 19 January 2015	104 Main St, Dungiven	10 static tanks
17 – 19 January 2015	58 Main St, Claudy	10 static tanks
17 – 19 January 2015	Burnfoot Cottages, 307 Drumrane Road, Dungiven	4 static tanks
17 – 19 January 2015	87 Main St, Feeny	8 static tanks
17 – 19 January 2015	213 Learmount Road, Derry	8 static tanks
18-19 January 2015	St Michael'S Church, Cooley Road, Sixmilecross,	10 static tanks
18-19 January 2015	Car park, Main St, Beragh	10 static tanks

Bottled water has also been delivered to individual customers in all areas affected by loss of supply who are registered on NIW's Critical Care Register.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the criteria followed by NI Water when deciding which villages would have water delivered during the recent disruption to the system in Fermanagh and Tyrone.

(AQW 40625/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: During a water supply interruption, supplies can generally be achieved by adjusting the water distribution system through re-valving. However, when this is not practical, and customers experience a prolonged loss of supply, NI Water will provide an alternative supply of water by deploying bowsers or static tanks and the use of bottled water. A number of criteria determine the method used to provide an alternative water supply to customers:

- The area affected by the supply interruption;
- The anticipated duration of the incident; and
- The number of customers in the area affected.

NI Water is committed to prioritising the needs of the sick, the elderly, the disabled, hospitals, schools and other vulnerable groups. Vulnerable customers are generally provided with bottled water, while the general public has to fill containers of water to be boiled from a bower. This is due to the impracticality of storing large amounts of bottled water with a relatively short shelf life.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development when NI Water became aware that the supply to Lisbellaw was interrupted as a consequence of the recent disruption to the system in Fermanagh and Tyrone.

(AQW 40627/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Lisbellaw area is fed from Cavanacross Service Reservoir. The reservoir was empty from approximately 6pm on 11 January 2015 to 8am on 12 January 2015. NI Water was aware that reservoir levels were indicating signs of depletion from approximately 8pm on 10 January 2015.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Regional Development how many (i) domestic; and (ii) non-domestic water meters were installed in North Belfast between (a) May 2007 and May 2011; and (b) May 2011 and December 2014.

(AQW 40643/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Northern Ireland Water holds water meter installation information according to the nature of the installation, the number of meters, and the type of property (domestic or non-domestic) it serves. It is not operationally practical for the company to hold the information according to geographical area or constituency boundary and it is therefore not in a position to provide the requested information.

The data is held by financial year and this has been provided in the table below.

There are approximately 113,000 water meters in Northern Ireland, of which some 32,000 have been installed at domestic properties. The table below show the number of domestic and non-domestic meter installations in Northern Ireland during the last number of years.

Year	Number of meters installed at domestic properties	Number of meters installed at non-domestic properties
2007 / 08	3,220	2,154
2008 / 09	11,460	4,886
2009 / 10	3,945	933
2010 / 2011	4,427	1,115
2011 / 2012	3,458	814
2012 / 2013	3,078	737
2013 / 2014	3,031	481

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Regional Development how many meters were installed on water lines servicing (i) commercial and industrial; (ii) agricultural; and (iii) domestic properties in North Belfast in (a) 2007; (b) 2008; (c) 2009; (d) 2010; and (e) 2011.

(AQW 40644/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It is not possible to provide meter installation data broken down into commercial and industrial and agriculture property types. However, total figures for water meter installation for domestic and non-domestic properties can be provided. It is not operationally practical for the NI Water to hold the information according to geographical area or constituency boundary and it is therefore not in a position to provide the requested information.

However, there are approximately 113,000 water meters in Northern Ireland, of which some 32,000 have been installed at domestic properties. The table below show the number of domestic and non-domestic meter installations in Northern Ireland during 2007/08, 2008/09, 2009/10, 2010/11.

Year	Number of meters installed at domestic properties	Number of meters installed at non-domestic properties
2007 / 08	3,220	2,154
2008 / 09	11,460	4,886
2009 / 10	3,945	933
2010 / 2011	4,427	1,115

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he will include Feystown Road, Glenarm on the gritting schedule.

(AQW 40645/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Feystown Road, Glenarm has very low traffic volumes and therefore does not meet the criteria for inclusion on the gritting schedule, which focuses on main through routes that carry more than 1,500 vehicles per day and, in exceptional circumstances, roads with difficult topography carrying between 1,000 and 1,500 vehicles per day. The application of this policy ensures that 28% of the total road network, which carries around 80% of traffic, is salted.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the criteria which must be met before a (i) road defect; and (ii) pothole is authorised for repair.

(AQW 40654/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Article 8 of the Roads (Northern Ireland) Order 1993 places a duty on my Department to maintain all public roads in reasonable condition. In recognition of its duty of care, my Department has put in place a set of Maintenance Standards for Safety. These standards, which are designed to ensure a consistent service level and a safe highway while offering value for money, are based on best practice, research and consultation with both the public and other professional bodies and Industry.

The standards and procedures currently in operation establish frequencies for road inspections dependent on traffic volumes and specify response times for the repair of defects. Inspection frequencies vary between daily cycles for motorways to four monthly cycles for carriageways carrying low volumes of traffic. Response times specified for the repair of defects are dependent on the severity of the defect and range from one calendar day to simple inclusion in the next work programme for that particular route. If it becomes apparent that the relevant response time cannot be met, then the Department has the option of installing signs to warn road users of a possible danger.

The urgency of repair is determined taking into account a number of factors including defect depth, volume of traffic, defect location in relation to carriageway width etc.

It is important to note that the standards set a minimum intervention level of 20mm. This figure has been established over many years as being the level below which defects are generally not deemed to present a danger to road users. Therefore, defects less than 20mm deep are generally not recorded during routine inspections for priority repair. Defects may also be repaired as part of planned programmes of work, such as resurfacing, surface dressing or larger planned patching, subject to available resources.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister for Regional Development how many water meters have been installed in (i) Portadown; (ii) Lurgan; and (iii) Banbridge, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 40657/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Northern Ireland Water holds water meter installation information according to the nature of the installation, the number of meters, and the type of property (domestic or non-domestic) it serves. It is not operationally practical for the company to hold the information according to geographical area or constituency boundary and it is therefore not in a position to provide the requested information.

However, there are approximately 113,000 water meters in Northern Ireland, of which some 32,000 have been installed at domestic properties. The table below shows the number of domestic and non-domestic meter installations in Northern Ireland during the last three years.

Year	Numbers of meters installed
2011 / 2012	4272
2012 / 2013	3815
2013 / 2014	3512

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) how many car parks the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company (NITHCO) own and operate; (ii) how much profit the car parks raise annually; and (iii) whether any senior members of NITHCO have any interest declared in any of these car parks.

(AQW 40675/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that NITHCO owns and operates car park facilities on four Belfast sites:

- Hi-Park;
- Great Northern Mall;
- Donegall Quay; and
- Central (Rail) Station

The car park accounts are consolidated within the overall group accounts. Page 13 of the group annual report and accounts for 2013/14 records pro forma profit for the parent company as £0.7m but this will include all income sources recorded against this company.

There are no declared interests from senior members of NITHCO relating to the car parks owned and operated by NITHCO.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) when his Department was first made aware of the proposal by Translink to increase fares; and when his Department approved these proposals.

(AQW 40677/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that Translink provided officials with a paper setting out some fares proposals on 4 November 2014. The issue was discussed at a Performance Review meeting with the Translink Chair and Chief Executive on 6 November 2014. A further paper was received from Translink on 21 November 2014 setting out a revised fare proposal. A submission on the proposed increase in fares was formally put to me on 5 December 2014 and I approved the proposals on 11 December 2014.

You will be aware that when the 2014/15 Translink Corporate Plan was discussed in the early part of the year reference was made to a potential fare increase in January 2015. The cuts to Translink's budget this year have made this inevitable and this has been firmed up during and after monitoring rounds that have taken place throughout 2014/15.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) whether there are departmental protocols between the Consumer Council and himself in place relating to changes in public transport fares and services; (ii) if so, to provide a copy of these protocols; and (iii) in the case of the fare increases announced on 11 December 2014, whether these protocols were followed.

(AQW 40686/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that there is a protocol in place whereby my Department, Translink and the Consumer Council engages in discussions prior to the announcement of any Translink fare increases. The protocol referred to was drawn up in 2010 and requires:

- DRD officials to scrutinise Translink's financial position and report their view to the Minister.
- DRD officials then meet with the Consumer Council and provide any underpinning information requested.

- Following a period of consultation the Consumer Council makes its views known to DRD.
- DRD officials report the Consumer Council position to the Minister.
- Translink engages with the Consumer Council on detail of its proposals i.e. individual fares.
- Following a period of discussion with the Consumer Council and its views Translink will finalise its detailed fares.

On this occasion the protocol was only partially followed because the impact of budget cuts to Translink's financial position in the current financial year was such that it needed to take immediate action to address these even ahead of the corporate planning process for 2015-16.

This was an exceptional circumstance and as soon as the decision to announce the fare increase was made, steps were taken to ensure that the Consumer Council was alerted in advance of the announcement. I had a positive meeting with the Interim Chief Executive of the Consumer Council on 19 January to explain the context and reasons for the announcement. My officials explained the context in a meeting with the Council on 16 December 2014 and there has been engagement between Translink and Consumer Council since that meeting.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development how Translink has promoted the use of the Dundonald Park and Ride. (AQW 40687/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: For the opening of the Dundonald Park & Ride site, on 1 December 2014, Translink delivered a comprehensive programme of promotional activity. This included:

- Household mailing: How to Use Guide, Mini-Timetable, Smartlink offer to 15,000 households.
- Team Translink: Smartlink card sales activity for 2 weeks at Dundonald P&R site.
- Smartlink Offer: 5 journeys for £5, a saving of £6 compared to buying cash fares – offer available throughout December 2014 and January 2015 online.
- Web Page: Bespoke web page featuring how to use information, map and Smartlink promotional offer.
- Livery: Bespoke branded Metro vehicle promoting Dundonald Park & Ride route.
- Advertising Campaign: Tactical advertising campaign at key locations, including outdoor, radio, press and ambient media.
- Social Media: Regular social media posts on Facebook and Twitter (combined audience reach of 50,000).
- Print Media: Joint Press Release with Department and launch photograph issued to media with coverage obtained in a number of publications.
- Radio: Promotion of the opening; radio station staff also attended first morning of opening and travelling into Belfast City Centre with live links back to their studio.
- Competitions: Two consumer competitions set up in newspaper and Translink Facebook page offering free travel.
- Stakeholders: Political briefing at Newtownards Bus Station on 28 November 2014 included an update on the opening of the new Park & Ride facility.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development what provision exists within his Department to support rural houses who wish to install mains water.

(AQW 40719/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Under Article 76 of the Water and Sewerage Services (NI) Order 2006 NI Water has a duty to provide a public water main if required to do so by the owner or occupier of a domestic property.

NI Water currently provides a Reasonable Cost Allowance (RCA) of around £2,000 per property. For properties built before 2000, the Department supplements this allowance so that the total contribution is £12,000 per property.

More recent properties are entitled to the lesser RCA of around £2,000 as householders are expected to include the cost of a water main in the overall cost of a new build.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development for a breakdown of the draft 2015/16 cycling budget.

(AQW 40744/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As notified in the Executive's Budget my Department has been allocated £441.9 million in Resource DEL, which will allow my Department to take forward a number of programmes and services in public transport, roads and water and sewerage.

The Capital allocation for my Department is £328.3 million across water and transport. This is constrained and very challenging budget settlement. I will therefore continue to review the allocation of capital within my Department, including cycling, and have made no final decisions at this time.

I have yet to fully consider the allocation to cycling since the budget announcement.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development how many requests for grit boxes have been received from 2013, broken down by constituency; and how many have been provided.

(AQW 40763/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not hold this information in the format requested.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department had given consideration to providing established Community Groups with salt boxes or salt to cater for their own area's needs.

(AQW 40764/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Salt bins or grit piles are provided for use by the public, on a self-help basis, on roads which do not qualify for inclusion onto the gritting schedule, providing certain criteria is met. There are no limits placed on the number of salt bins which may be provided, although they will not normally be provided within 100 metres of another bin.

During my predecessor's tenure, my Department piloted providing salt to communities; however, this did not prove to be successful due to issues relating to the misuse of salt. Given the resource pressures facing my Department in 2015/16 and the potential impact on winter service, I do not consider this to be an appropriate time to consider an extension to the current service.

When evaluating requests for the provision of salt bins, my officials take into account issues such as residential usage and community facilities; including schools, hospitals and care homes for the elderly. This evaluation is carried out using a criteria-based system which also takes into account the following factors:

- the location in question must be on the publically maintained road network;
- the gradient of the road in question must be over 5%;
- no reasonable alternative route shall be available; and
- the subject road attains a minimum overall score of greater than 50 points, derived using a specific formula, where points are awarded depending on road geometry, residential usage, community welfare and commercial usage.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development how many incidents or complaints about potholes in roads have been reported or recorded since 1 January 2013.

(AQW 40773/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not maintain statistics solely in relation to potholes either recorded or repaired.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development, since January 1 2013, to list the 50 roads with the highest number of potholes; and the 50 roads with the highest number of complaints about potholes.

(AQW 40774/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not maintain statistics solely in relation to potholes.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development why the Audit Office does not have access to Translink's accounts.

(AQW 40781/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The NI Audit Office has full access to all financial and other records in Translink and has conducted a number of audits on Translink affairs.

I can advise you that Translink's Accounts are audited by external auditors appointed by the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company Board and the Accounts are open to the inspection of the Comptroller and Auditor General.

My Department also lays the NITHC Annual Report and Accounts in the Assembly, in accordance with the guidance on the procedures for presenting and laying the combined Annual Report and Accounts issued by the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development how many (i) domestic; and (ii) non-domestic water meters were installed in Newry and Armagh between (a) May 2007 and May 2011; and (b) May 2011 and December 2014.

Mr Kennedy: It is not operationally practical for NI Water to hold the information according to geographical area or constituency boundary and it is therefore not in a position to provide the requested information. However, total figures for water meter installation for domestic and non-domestic properties across Northern Ireland can be provided. The data is held by financial year and this has been provided in the table below.

Year	Number of meters installed at domestic properties	Number of meters installed at non-domestic properties
2007 / 08	3,220	2,154
2008 / 09	11,460	4,886

Year	Number of meters installed at domestic properties	Number of meters installed at non-domestic properties
2009 / 10	3,945	933
2010 / 2011	4,427	1,115
2011 / 2012	3,458	814
2012 / 2013	3,078	737
2013 / 2014	3,031	481

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the (i) number; and (ii) grade of the essential car users in Translink.

(AQW 40789/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that:

- (i) There are currently 40 allocated business use cars.
- (ii) Company car users are generally operational staff within the management and engineering grades. This includes managers within Bus Operations, i.e. Depot/Service Delivery Managers and Bus Fleet Engineers who between them cover approximately 60 operating sites.

Infrastructure Engineers who have company cars are generally those responsible for maintenance of track, signalling and all aspects of structures i.e. bridges, cuttings, embankments and sea defences.

The above staff are also part of the organisation's on-call arrangements which meets the requirements of the Translink Emergency Plan and Business Continuity commitments.

As part of a cost reduction programme, Translink is actively pursuing a strategy of reducing the number of cars.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development how many company cars Translink operates; and; what was the annual cost of running these cars, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 40790/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: There are 40 allocated company cars operated by Translink.

Fuel costs for the last five years amounted to:

Year	Cost £'s
2009/10	94,942
2010/11	102,523
2011/12	117,182
2012/13	127,008
2013/14	126,284

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development whether Translink operates pool cars; and if so, what is the annual cost of running these cars, over the last five years.

(AQW 40791/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink operates 3 pool cars for operational use, including responding to security incidents, conducting risk assessment and attending accidents.

Fuel costs for these vehicles average £1,200 per annum.

Total maintenance costs since 2010 amount to £7,454.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to improve rush hour traffic flows for North Down commuters on the A2 Dual Carriageway from Bangor to Belfast.

(AQW 40803/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The A2 Belfast to Bangor road is part of the strategic road network and carries about 45,000 vehicles per day. My Department's longer term plans include proposals to widen the Sydenham Bypass, its busiest section, to 3 lanes in each direction to improve capacity and reduce delays at peak times. Progression of this scheme will, however, be subject to satisfactory completion of the statutory processes, the availability of funding in future years and priorities.

About one quarter of the route between Holywood and Ballyrobert is single 4 lane carriageway. My Department has long term plans to improve a number of the junctions along this section to improve road safety. However, these schemes are not specifically identified to address a peak hour issue. All such schemes must compete for the finite funds available for such works and at present these schemes do not attract a high enough priority to warrant inclusion in our Minor Works Programme for the North Down Council area.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to repair street lights in North Down, following the additional funding from the January monitoring round.

Mr Kennedy: As the additional funding is only available until the end of March 2015, it is proposed that the most efficient method of dealing with the backlog of defective lights which have accumulated since the Autumn of last year, is to carry out repairs on a route by route basis within the North Down area. This will minimise travelling time between sites and ensure lights are repaired as quickly as possible. The contractor has already commenced this work in January 2015.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the plans to upgrade the Sydenham Bypass dual carriageway to a three-lane carriageway.

(AQW 40807/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The A2 Sydenham Bypass scheme is now at the third stage of a three stage development process:

- Stage 1 concluded in May 2008 with the selection of the Proposed Corridor;
- Stage 2 concluded in February 2010 with selection of the scheme Preferred Option; and
- Stage 3, currently underway, involves detailed assessment of the Preferred Option and ongoing consultation with key stakeholders.

This will result in the publication of the Statutory Orders: the draft Direction Order, Environmental Statement and Notice of Intention to Make a Vesting Order.

Whilst the budget for the period 2014/2015 will allow development work on Stage 3 to continue, progression of the scheme beyond this will be subject to future budget settlements and priorities.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development how many (i) domestic; and (ii) non-domestic water meters were installed in North Down between (a) May 2007 and May 2011; and (b) May 2011 and December 2014.

(AQW 40815/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It is not operationally practical for NI Water to hold meter installation data according to geographical area or constituency boundary and it is therefore not in a position to provide the requested information. However, total figures for water meter installation for domestic and non-domestic properties can be provided.

There are approximately 113,000 water meters in Northern Ireland, of which some 32,000 have been installed at domestic properties. The table below show the number of domestic and non-domestic meter installations in Northern Ireland during the last number of years.

Year	Number of meters installed at domestic properties	Number of meters installed at non-domestic properties
2007 / 08	3,220	2,154
2008 / 09	11,460	4,886
2009 / 10	3,945	933
2010 / 2011	4,427	1,115
2011 / 2012	3,458	814
2012 / 2013	3,078	737
2013 / 2014	3,031	481

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the status of the A5 project and the estimated associated costs.

(AQW 40824/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Work to address the one area of concern the Judge identified in the Court ruling of March 2013 on the A5 Western Transport Corridor (A5WTC) is now well advanced. This relates to undertaking Appropriate Assessments under the Habitats Directive of the impact of the A5WTC proposals on designated environmentally sensitive sites.

A consultation exercise on four draft reports, developed to assess impacts on the integrity of all potentially affected European designated environmentally sensitive sites (nine in total) in the vicinity of the scheme, concluded in November 2014.

Responses to this consultation exercise will, in due course, be taken into consideration in the final Reports to Inform the Appropriate Assessments.

In relation to scheme development costs, spend during my predecessor's time in office, up to April 2011, was in the region of £36 million. During my time in office further spend in the region of £37 million has been incurred, taking the total spend on the scheme at the end of December 2014 to £73 million.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether any funding has been ring-fenced by his Department for the A5 project.

(AQW 40825/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would advise the Member that no funding for the A5 project has been ring-fenced by my Department.

My Department submits bids each year to the Department of Finance and Personnel for funding to allow Strategic Roads projects to progress. Funds allocated for the construction of these projects are normally restricted to a particular scheme, where specific allocations have been made for that project by the Executive. This has been the case for the A5 over the current Budget period.

I have not yet finalised, at project level, the Capital allocation provided to my Department following the Executive's recent agreement on the 2015/16 Budget.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development how many (i) domestic; and (ii) non-domestic water meters were installed in the Foyle constituency between (a) May 2007 and May 2011; and (b) May 2011 and December 2014.

(AQW 40872/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It is not operationally practical for NI Water to hold meter installation data according to geographical area or constituency boundary and it is therefore not in a position to provide the requested information. However, total figures for water meter installation for domestic and non-domestic properties can be provided.

There are approximately 113,000 water meters in Northern Ireland, of which some 32,000 have been installed at domestic properties. The table below show the number of domestic and non-domestic meter installations in Northern Ireland during the last number of years.

Year	Number of meters installed at domestic properties	Number of meters installed at non-domestic properties
2007 / 08	3,220	2,154
2008 / 09	11,460	4,886
2009 / 10	3,945	933
2010 / 2011	4,427	1,115
2011 / 2012	3,458	814
2012 / 2013	3,078	737
2013 / 2014	3,031	481

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development how many pot holes are in need of repair in North Down.

(AQW 40877/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not maintain statistics solely in relation to potholes.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development how many pot holes are in need of repair.

(AQW 40878/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not maintain statistics solely in relation to potholes either recorded or repaired.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he anticipates an overspend in his departmental budget for 2014/15; and if so, by how much.

(AQW 40906/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Department's budget was set, as part of Budget 2011-15, by the then Executive, in the expectation that £20 million of income would be secured from Belfast Harbour Commissioners in both 2013-14 and 2014-15. However, while the Harbour has agreed to undertake £41.5 million of Release of Value projects and is progressing these projects, there is no means of crediting this investment to my Department's budget.

The Budget Review Group recommended that the Executive should provide the necessary funding for the £20 million Release of Value receipt from Belfast Harbour Commissioners through in-year monitoring this financial year 2014/15. The Executive had provided the required £20 million budget allocation to my Department in 2013/14 in recognition of the position in that year.

I have consistently made it clear at each monitoring round and in letters to the Finance Minister that the Department cannot absorb this £20 million pressure in 2014/15, but the funding has not been provided.

I have identified some £7.0 million to go towards the Release of Value pressure, though this is not without risk. The remaining £13 million could only be achieved through service reductions which would damage core services severely and have an impact on public safety. These include stopping winter service and stopping all routine road maintenance. As a consequence I issued my Accounting Officer with a direction to continue to provide such services.

My Department received an additional Resource allocation of £5.2 million from the Executive in January Monitoring, with the stipulation that funding should be used specifically on street lighting repairs and roads and bridge operations and maintenance, it should not be offset against the Release of Value pressure. As such the potential overspend remains at £13 million although I will continue to seek measures to reduce this figure.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department's cycling unit was consulted on the road works currently being undertaken on the Ballymiscaw road; and whether any mandatory cycle lanes are to be developed as part of these works.

(AQW 40918/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The work currently being completed on the Ballymiscaw Road is part of my Department's annual programme of reconstruction and resurfacing and is primarily to improve the condition and longevity of the carriageway.

No consultation with the Cycling Unit took place as mandatory cycle lanes were not being developed or provided at this location or along this road.

The draft Bicycle Strategy highlights my commitment to creating a network of high quality, direct, joined up routes throughout Northern Ireland, to make cycling a safe and attractive method of travel every day.

Since 2002 my Department has invested over £10million in the development and expansion of cycle lanes and on cycling infrastructure measures. However, I appreciate that many people feel that provision is frequently fragmented and of varying quality.

Going forward my Department will ensure that provision is more integrated and coherent in nature, by providing a 'whole of route' treatment. Where 'opportunities' arise to provide bicycle infrastructure as part of road maintenance or upgrade schemes, we will seize these opportunities, whilst emphasising how these improvements fit into the wider vision for Northern Ireland

Mr Byrne asked the Minister for Regional Development how many (i) domestic; and (ii) non-domestic water meters were installed in the West Tyrone constituency between (a) May 2007 and May 2011; and (b) May 2011 and December 2014.

(AQW 40952/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It is not operationally practical for NI Water to hold meter installation data according to geographical area or constituency boundary and it is therefore not in a position to provide the requested information. However, total figures for water meter installation for domestic and non-domestic properties can be provided.

There are approximately 113,000 water meters in Northern Ireland, of which some 32,000 have been installed at domestic properties. The table below show the number of domestic and non-domestic meter installations in Northern Ireland during the last number of years.

Year	Number of meters installed at domestic properties	Number of meters installed at non-domestic properties
2007 / 08	3,220	2,154
2008 / 09	11,460	4,886
2009 / 10	3,945	933
2010 / 2011	4,427	1,115
2011 / 2012	3,458	814
2012 / 2013	3,078	737
2013 / 2014	3,031	481

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister for Regional Development how regularly his Department monitors, inspects and refills grit boxes in North Belfast.

(AQW 40957/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Throughout the winter service season salt boxes are inspected and replenished as required, generally on a weekly basis. However, if weather conditions deteriorate and other safety-related maintenance activities cannot be completed then the frequency of work instructions will be increased.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development which bus services in North Down will be affected by departmental cutbacks.

(AQW 40968/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink indicated potential service reductions in response to draft budget figures potentially available next year. Included in these proposals was potential service reductions and consolidation in a number of areas.

Since then I have been successful in securing additional resource to be used to maintain, as far as possible, Translink's provision of much needed town services.

In light of the new agreed budget position Translink is currently reviewing its overall levels of service provision.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Regional Development whether, upon completion of the proposed bus facility in Banbridge, the Church Square bus stop will continue to be served by inbound and outbound 238 and 238A services.

(AQW 41011/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: On completion of the new facility in Banbridge services 238 and 238A will continue to serve Church Square.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the developer of the roundabout at the Outlet in Banbridge was required to undertake a Road Safety Audit of the proposed changes to the roundabout prior to implementation on site; and if so, what was the outcome of this audit.

(AQW 41012/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: A Safety Audit has been carried out in accordance with my Department's policy to assess the changes made to the roundabout at Bridgewater Park. There are a small number of minor issues to be addressed by the developer and I expect these matters to be resolved in the short term.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Regional Development what amenities to assist and promote cycling will be available at the proposed bus facility in Banbridge.

Mr Kennedy: The bus facility at Banbridge will comprise four off-street bus stops/stands, covered waiting area and a small building to provide ticket sales and internal waiting area.

Plans also include the provision of a cycle rack. Although the exact size has not yet been finalised, Translink advise it is likely the rack will be able to accommodate a minimum of five cycles.

This project is subject to available funding.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Regional Development, given the delays to the upgrade of the Derry-Coleraine railway line and the underestimation of the costs of this project, whether he will ring-fence the funding required for the completion of the upgrade.

(AQW 41023/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I made a statement to the Assembly on 3 November 2014 in which I indicated that the estimated cost of Phase 2 is likely to increase but a final figure is subject to a full procurement. My statement confirms a commitment on my part to prioritise the project for funding subject to an updated economic appraisal. The member will recognize that this project remains a Programme for Government commitment.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development when construction work will begin on the A26 dualling project.

(AQW 41084/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can confirm that preparatory works and site mobilisation will commence in February 2015, with the main construction works expected to start in April.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the future of services facilitated through the Translink Rural Transport Fund.

(AQW 41087/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The detailed implication of the budget for 2015/16 is yet to be worked out. There will be difficult decisions to make regarding the future of services bearing in mind the overall funding to Translink and Community Transport has been reduced by at least £13m and £2m next year respectively.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) whether the recent release of EU capital finance for major transport infrastructure projects could make a road or rail link to Scotland a feasible project; (ii) what consideration his Department has given to this proposal; and (iii) whether his Department has explored such an idea with the Department for Transport in Scotland.

(AQW 41099/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Investment Plan for Europe recently announced by President Jean-Claude Juncker seeks to mobilise up to €300 billion in additional public and private investment over the next three years. While this is to be welcomed, it does not provide an additional €300 billion; indeed there are indications from the European Commission that the current financial envelope allocated to the 2014-2020 Connecting Europe Facility, which is the funding instrument for the Trans-European Transport Network, may be reduced by as much as €2.7 billion as funds are diverted into the newly established European Fund for Strategic Infrastructure which is, through the use of various financial instruments, intended to multiply investment effects up to the €300 billion stated.

The feasibility of a road or rail link to Scotland could not be considered without a step-change in Government thinking. Any such project would require new levels of financial commitment, both nationally and from Europe, that have never before been seen in Northern Ireland terms. In addition there would, of course, be a requirement for inter-governmental, institutional and private sector co-operation and collaboration at the very highest levels over significant timescales and this would, by necessity, go beyond Scotland and reach internationally.

That said, I am ambitious for the future of Northern Ireland and on that basis I remain open to proposals, including feasibility studies, which can project this region and its people towards the heart of Europe both economically and socially.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of off-peak, socially necessary, public transport provision.

(AQW 41122/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has continued to provide direct subsidy to Translink to support the provision of transport options through the Rural Transport Fund (RTF) for socially necessary routes.

Many rural areas have benefitted from this including: Antrim, Armagh, Ballymena, Bangor, Coleraine, Craigavon, Downpatrick, Dungannon, Enniskillen, Lisburn, Londonderry, Magherafelt, Newcastle, Newry, Newtownabbey, Newtownards and Omagh.

Socially necessary, off-peak public transport provision by its nature is transport that would be uneconomically viable without additional funding. It is important to say that until the latest budget the Department subsidised, through a substantial fuel rebate cost, all bus services.

The detailed implication of the budget for 2015/16 is yet to be worked out. However there will be difficult decisions to make regarding the future of services bearing in mind the overall funding to Translink and Community Transport has been reduced next year.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the number of defective street lights in Northern Ireland.

(AQO 7436/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As I have already stated, I can confirm that following the Executive's decision to meet my Department's bid for additional funding in the January Monitoring round, external contractors have been on the ground since early last week repairing street lights to supplement the Department's own staff. My Department will seek to have all outstanding street lighting repairs completed as quickly as possible.

During the period of 8 August 2014 to 27 January 2015 some 33,359 street lighting outages were reported. This figure is typical of the number of faults normally reported to my Department. However, as a result of the outcome of the June and October Monitoring rounds, as the House will be aware, my Department's resource budget was severely cut and I was left with no option but to suspend the issuing of work instructions to external contractors.

My Department's staff repaired 9,758 of these outages during this period.

As I have already stated my Department has reduced the backlog to approx 20,000 since last Monday.

However, can I again make it clear that the funding provided in January Monitoring is for this financial year only. Street lights will go out again after 1 April if my Department is not adequately funded in 2015-16.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on how he plans to deal with the increasing number of street lights not working in North Down.

(AQO 7439/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As I have stated in my previous answers, following the outcome of the January monitoring round, I am happy to be able to confirm that external contractors have been on the ground since early last week, repairing street lights, although Members should understand that it will take time to clear the backlog of repairs that has accumulated since last August, when I had to suspend street lighting repairs by external contractors due to a lack of funding.

I want to emphasise that I was very unhappy to be unable to provide the normal levels of service during this period. My Department had made bids for the money needed to repair street lighting at every possible opportunity throughout this financial year, but it was only in the latest Monitoring round in January that the Executive finally provided the necessary funding to allow normal street lighting repair arrangements to resume.

I am committed to having the backlog of street lighting repairs cleared as quickly as possible.

Mr D Bradley asked the Minister for Regional Development what consideration is being given to improving the safety of road users on the A1 dual carriageway (Newry to Dublin) by improving infrastructure, signage and up-to-date information on traffic conditions.

(AQO 7440/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can assure the Member that road safety is a key priority for my Department, not least on the A1, where he will recall our recent meeting to discuss road safety at the Beech Hill junction following the fatal collision which occurred at this location in September of last year.

My Department is progressing the A1 Junctions Phase 2 proposal, which includes construction of four flyover-type junctions and a northbound on-slip at Castlewellan Road, Banbridge.

The provision of these grade separated junctions, together with the junction improvements already implemented on the A1, will facilitate the closure of all gaps in the central median and the provision of a safety barrier between Hillsborough Roundabout and Loughbrickland.

I have not yet made a decision on the preferred option for the scheme.

My Department provides traffic and travel information to alert road users of incidents, abnormal traffic flow, poor road conditions etc. This information is disseminated to drivers through radio broadcasts and by displays on roadside variable message signs. There is also information published on the Trafficwatchni website and social media to enable drivers to make informed decisions before starting their journey.

The A1 is a key route and part of the core strategic network. Any further consideration for traffic control/travel information measures will be taken forward by my Department through the EU part funded road corridor programme.

My officials will continue to review signage along the A1 in conjunction with the PSNI.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development whether his Department has carried out an assessment of the road safety implications of broken street lights, unfilled pot holes and unrefreshed road markings.

(AQO 7441/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: You will be aware that my Department received an extra £3.2 million for routine maintenance functions and £2 million for street lighting repairs in the January monitoring round. While this additional funding is very welcome, the amount allocated is purely a reflection of what can be utilised between now and year end. While it will go some way to addressing the backlog of work, it will not resolve the situation as the total shortfall for the year was some £12 million.

Following the Executive's agreement to meet my Departments bid in the January Monitoring round I can confirm that I immediately reinstated the use of external contractors to carry out routine and street lighting maintenance work. Works orders have been issued to street lighting contractors who are currently on the ground fixing outages and to other external contractors to address backlogs in white line maintenance, pothole repair and gully emptying.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps has he taken to ensure that Translink consults fully with the Northern Ireland Consumer Council, and other stakeholders, before announcing fare increases.

(AQO 7442/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I had a positive meeting with the Interim Chief Executive of the NI Consumer Council on 19 January to explain the context and the reasons for the announcement on 11 December 2014. I recognise that there is a protocol in place whereby my Department, Translink and the Consumer Council engages in discussions prior to the announcement of any Translink fare increases.

On this occasion the protocol was only partially followed because of the impact of budget cuts to Translink's financial position in the current financial year was such that it needed to take immediate action to address these even ahead of the corporate planning process for 2015-16. This was an exceptional circumstance.

As soon as the decision to announce the fare increase was made, steps were taken to ensure that the Consumer Council was alerted in advance of the announcement and a meeting was subsequently arranged between all the parties.

I can assure the member that the protocol will be an important consideration for the future and other engagement with Translink, the Department and the Consumer Council will continue.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister for Regional Development for an overview of the key findings of the public consultation on the A5 Western Transport Corridor project.

(AQO 7443/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department carried out two consultation exercises on the A5 Western Transport Corridor scheme during 2014.

The first consultation related to three draft Habitat Regulation Assessment Reports. It commenced on 30 April 2014 and concluded on 13 June 2014. Thirteen responses were received.

The second consultation related to a fourth draft Habitat Regulation Assessment Report. It commenced on 15 October 2014 and concluded on 28 November 2014. Five responses were received to this consultation.

Taking the two consultation exercises together, four responses were of a supportive nature; five were neutral; eight raised areas of concern and one relating to the first consultation, reserved opinion pending publication of the fourth draft Report.

The next steps in the development of the scheme will be the publication of the draft Statutory Orders. The draft Statutory Orders are the new draft Vesting Orders and draft Direction Order. A new Environmental Statement for the scheme will also be published at the same time as the draft Orders. Publication of the draft Orders and Environmental Statement will be followed by a six week public consultation period.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to ensure that Community Transport remains an integral part of the transport system.

(AQO 7444/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am aware that there are a substantial number of Community Transport Service providers across Northern Ireland and of the valuable services that they provide to local communities and to their members. My Department's link to community transport is through grant support provided to 11 Rural Community Transport Partnerships in 8 operational areas under the auspices of the Rural Transport Fund which is administered by my Department. The primary objective of the Rural Transport Fund is to reduce social isolation in rural areas by improving or providing new transport opportunities for people with reduced mobility.

To meet this objective each partnership provides transport options to their members who live in rural areas. The type of services provided include a Dial-a-Lift scheme which is a transport service for individuals which can provide access to local basic services such as shopping, post office or local health services such as GP, or link in with the wider public transport network to travel outside their local area.

The partnerships are voluntary and community organisations and are companies in their own right. They all have Boards of Directors who are responsible for the governance and strategic direction for the company. They all are required to operate under licensing arrangements which are the responsibility of DOE NI.

It would be my intention subject to EU rules and licensing arrangement to continue to support these partnerships next year and in later years. However the level of grant support next year available will be determined by the budget allocation made available to me

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on whether the crash barrier on Malone Road will be reinstated.

(AQO 7445/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As a result of the tragic incident that took place on the Malone Road in October 2014 there is now an on-going PSNI investigation. Officials are liaising closely with the investigating team regarding the information that can be made public prior to the investigation being completed. I hope you will appreciate it would not be appropriate for me to comment further, prior to confirmation being received from the PSNI that the information you have asked for, is no longer required for the investigation.

I trust this clarifies the Department's position on this matter and I shall write to you again once I receive a further update from the PSNI.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the works to the drainage system in the Toome Road/ Queen Street area of Ballymena to prevent further flooding and protect householders and their properties.

(AQO 7446/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by NI Water that, at the request of the interdepartmental Flood Investment and Planning Group, it is preparing an investigatory report to look at the root causes of the flooding and to develop potential solutions.

The report looks into the operation of NI Water, TransportNI and Rivers Agency assets as well as assessing overland flows. The final report was due to be completed by the end of November 2014, subject to obtaining sufficient flow measurement on the Toome Road site during rainfall events. Regrettably, the investigation was delayed by eight weeks due to an exceptional dry spell which meant that the hydraulic models could not be verified. The models were subsequently verified but the modelling outputs raised some additional, more complex issues.

NI Water is working to address these issues and I am pleased to confirm the report is due to be completed by the end of January 2015. As there are likely to be a number of potential sources contributing to the flooding in the area, going forward NI Water will liaise with TransportNI and Rivers Agency to consider potential solutions and their implementation.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the impact that effective cats eyes have in improving road safety.

(AQO 7447/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The cat's eye is a retroreflective safety device used in road marking and was the first of a range of raised pavement markers. They were invented by Yorkshire man Percy Shaw whose inspiration for the device was the eyeshine reflecting from the eyes of a cat. A patent was lodged in 1935 but it wasn't until the black-out during the Second World War that his invention was widely adopted and used on UK roads, and exports around the world followed later.

Retroreflective road studs are frequently used in conjunction with longitudinal road markings to enhance driver visibility of the road ahead. The studs reflect the light from a vehicle's headlamps back to the driver. Road studs are effective in wet weather and also in fog when the effectiveness of road markings is reduced.

As well as providing information to drivers on the road alignment, road studs also provide tactile and audible feedback to drivers should cars wander across lanes thus reducing the potential for head on collisions.

White studs are used to indicate a traffic lane or centre of carriageway marking.

Red studs are used to indicate a line which must not be crossed, mainly the left hand edge of a running carriageway.

Amber studs are also used to indicate a line which must not be crossed and are placed along the right hand edge of a running carriageway.

Green studs indicate a length of the edge of the carriageway which may be crossed. They are used to mark the boundary of acceleration and deceleration lanes on the left hand side of the carriageway. At lane-drop junctions, and right turn lanes, green studs are used to demarcate the exit lane.

These are the reasons why road studs have been installed widely on road networks across the UK and Ireland.

Department for Social Development

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the grants available from his Department for community groups.

(AQW 39773/11-15)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): My Department provides an annual Belfast City Centre Community Activity Grant. The objective is to support activities (arts, sports, educational, cultural and environmental) that address the needs of and provides benefit to the Belfast City Centre local community and continues to bring life to the Belfast City Centre.

The Belfast City Centre Community Activity Grant is a discretionary grant and has a limited annual budget. The maximum grant award for each activity is £1,000 and there is a limit of two applications for different activities per annum per applicant.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the number of applicants currently on the waiting list for social housing in South Belfast.

(AQW 40481/11-15)

Mr Storey: The information is not available in the format requested because some of the Common Landlord Areas straddle other Parliamentary constituencies and the Housing Executive advises that it cannot extract the figures purely for South Belfast.

Therefore, taking this into account, the Housing Executive advises that the number of applicants on the waiting list in South Belfast at 30 September 2014 was 3,706, of which 1,951 were in Housing Stress. These are the most up to date figures available from the Housing Executive.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Social Development to detail any grants or financial support available to cancer patients to heat and adapt their homes.

(AQW 40502/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that cancer patients living in private sector housing, depending on their financial circumstances, may qualify for assistance to help heat or adapt their homes. The Housing Executive can pay Disabled Facilities Grants to help improve the home of a person with a disability though it should be noted that only works recommended by an Occupational Therapist can be considered for grant aid. The amount of grant depends on the approved cost of the work and on the disabled person's financial circumstances.

My Department's Warm Homes Scheme and the Affordable Warmth Scheme also assist low income households to improve their energy efficiency by delivering a range of energy efficiency improvement measures. My Department's Boiler replacement Scheme also offers a grant to householders to replace old inefficient boilers.

In terms of Housing Executive properties, if an Occupational Therapist makes a recommendation that an adaptation is required, the Housing Executive inspects the work when it is completed to ensure it is adequate for the client's needs. The Housing Executive has also piloted the use of re-locatable modular extensions (known as PODS) within its own stock. This can provide a temporary prefabricated extension to a property, for example a bedroom and en-suite shower room which can be reused at another property when no longer required.

With regard to heating systems in Housing Executive properties, tenants may apply for a change of heating on medical grounds. Each case is considered sympathetically and a decision made based on the specific circumstances involved - particularly where the existing heating system is having a detrimental effect on the health of the tenant or a member of their household.

The Social Security Agency, through its benefit uptake work, encourages people of all ages and in all circumstances to have a benefit entitlement check, either through its work with the voluntary and community sector or through the 'Make the Call' Benefits Advice Line, 0800 232 1271.

People can avail of a free and confidential benefit entitlement check, to ensure that they are not missing out on potential entitlement to the wide range of Government services and supports available. Help can also be given with making a claim and a home visit by a Community Outreach Officer can be made to help with the filling in of benefit claim forms, if applicable.

Also, in relation to benefits, the Agency provides help and advice to people through its network of Social Security Offices/ Jobs and Benefits Offices and through the wide range of literature available which provides information on benefits and how to claim. Information on benefit entitlement is also available for the public to access in the "Money, tax and benefits" section of Nidirect, the official Government website for all Northern Ireland citizens.

Last year, £14.2million in additional annual benefits and arrears was generated by benefit uptake activities; over £8million of which was in benefits for those with an illness or a disability.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development whether, on foot of the Stormont House Agreement, the supplementary fund, being established in relation to Welfare Reform, will enable claimants in Northern Ireland to receive, from this block grant funded facility, benefits in excess of the GB cap of £26,000 per annum.

(AQW 40622/11-15)

Mr Storey: In accordance with the terms of the Stormont House Agreement my Department is currently developing proposals for the provision of additional financial support to those claimants that will be adversely impacted by the Welfare Reforms. I will be bringing a paper to the Executive in the near future setting out how it is proposed to move forward with welfare reform including the modalities of implementing the different schemes agreed at Stormont House.

At this time my Department is currently working through the different payment scenarios in terms of assistance from the Supplementary Payment Scheme.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development what percentage of the Military Covenant his Department has adopted as policy; and what percentage has been implemented.

(AQW 40633/11-15)

Mr Storey: In relation to housing, the Armed Forces Covenant proposes that serving and former members of the Armed Forces should have priority status for Government-sponsored affordable housing schemes, and that those injured in service should have preferential access to appropriate housing schemes and assistance with adaptations to private housing. While Northern Ireland's equality legislation means that it is not possible to give priority / preferential status to serving or former members of the Armed Forces, I can confirm that the proposal in the Covenant that members of the Armed Forces Community should have the same access to social housing as any other citizen, and should not be disadvantaged in this respect by the requirement for mobility whilst in service, is my Department's policy.

In relation to social security, the Armed Forces Covenant proposes that members of the Armed Forces Community should have the same access to benefits as any UK citizen except where alternative schemes are in place. I can confirm that the Social Security Agency, through its benefit uptake work, encourages people of all ages and in all circumstances to have a free and confidential benefit entitlement check, to ensure that they are not missing out on potential entitlement to the wide range of Government services and supports available. Help can also be given with making a claim and a home visit by a Community Outreach Officer can be made to help with the filling in of benefit claim forms, if applicable. My Department is committed to working closely with representative groups and individuals to ensure that they receive all the help they require with understanding their entitlements, assistance with claims making and also with making transitions within the benefits system.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister for Social Development what funding streams are available within his Department for community groups to apply for in 2015.

(AQW 40646/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Department for Social Development does not have any funding streams open for new applications.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Social Development whether he would consider extending the Warm Homes Scheme until such times as the new councils have the appropriate capacity in place to manage and roll out the new Affordable Warmth programme.

(AQW 40658/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Affordable Warmth Scheme was launched in September 2014 and although at an early stage is already being effectively delivered across all council areas. Whilst local Councils are going through a period of significant restructure, officials have been working with council staff for over 2 years to pilot and develop the Affordable Warmth Scheme. Each of the 11 lead councils have signed a Service Level Agreement with the Department demonstrating their commitment to delivering the new scheme. All councils have appointed a co-ordinator and support staff for the scheme. Officials from my Department meet regularly with lead council officers to monitor progress, receive feedback and provide additional support where necessary.

One of the reasons for extending the existing Warm Homes Scheme contract from 18 June 2014 to 31 March 2015 was to allow the Affordable Warmth Scheme to become established and embedded in the new structures. Due to procurement rules, it is not possible to further extend the Warm Homes Scheme, nor is it possible to provide Affordable Warmth measures under the existing Warm Homes Scheme contract.

I am closely monitoring the Affordable Warmth Scheme to ensure that those households most at risk of fuel poverty are being supported.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development, as a result of departmental Housing Association audits, whether housing associations management costs and overheads have increased or decreased; and what is the number of additional housing association staff appointed as a result of audit recommendations.

(AQW 40705/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Inspection of Housing Associations as carried out by my Department does not analyse the increase or decrease of management costs and overheads, as the result of audit recommendations, therefore this information is not held.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister for Social Development what issues have emerged in the cladding and external refurbishment of Cúchulainn House in North Belfast.

(AQW 40726/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that during the overcladding and window replacement works, a technical issue arose with fixing the cladding panels to the existing concrete framed structure. The Housing Executive is currently assessing the suitability of a range of products to remedy this defect and this has caused a delay.

The Housing Executive has notified all Cúchulainn residents of the current situation by letter. The Housing Community Network has also been briefed. In addition, a meeting has been arranged with the Seven Towers Residents Association.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail local expenditure on (i) social security; and (ii) pensions for each year of the most recent consecutive five years for which information is available in comparison with Britain and the south of Ireland.

(AQW 40769/11-15)

Mr Storey: The amount of social security benefit expenditure paid by the Department for Social Development for the last five consecutive financial years is disclosed in the table below. This includes the expenditure amounts for pension benefits.

The Department for Social Development does not hold the comparative social security benefit expenditure information for Great Britain or for the South of Ireland

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development whether the Northern Ireland Housing Executive has enough staff in place to work in partnership with the local councils when the Affordable Warmth Scheme is rolled out; and how many new staff have been employed, broken down by council area.

(AQW 40775/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Department for Social Development has been working closely with the Housing Executive and local councils to develop the new Affordable Warmth Scheme.

Councils have carried out initial visits to targeted homes which have been identified as being most at risk of fuel poverty and are referring cases to the Housing Executive who will arrange for the installation of energy efficiency improvements. Current Housing Executive Grants staff have been trained and are processing applications. The Housing Executive has advised that they are looking at what additional staffing resources will be required and anticipate that these will be put in place by April 2015.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of homes that will be targeted by the Affordable Warmth Scheme; and the average annual savings this will generate for his Department.

(AQW 40784/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Affordable Warmth Scheme aims to improve the energy efficiency of at least 9,000 low income households each year. This target is the same as was in place for the Warm Homes Scheme and has been consistently exceeded. The Affordable Warmth Scheme will target and assist households most at risk of fuel poverty.

The scheme was launched in September 2014 and although at an early stage is already being effectively delivered across all council areas. I have allocated £16.5 million to the Affordable Warmth Scheme for the 2015/16 year the same amount as was allocated to the Warm Homes Scheme in 2014/2015.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Area at Risk programme for Beechfield Estate, Donaghadee.

(AQW 40804/11-15)

Mr Storey: Funding of £10,800 has been allocated to the Beechfield Estate Areas at Risk programme in the current financial year to finance the running costs of the Community House.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the disposal of Northern Ireland Housing Executive land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey.

(AQW 40857/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) agreed on 22 January 2015, that the current lease with the North Eastern Education and Library Board can be extended to include the surrounding NIHE owned land for community use as required by Newtownabbey Borough Council.

The NIHE has approved in principle the transfer of the land to Newtownabbey Borough Council. As land is deemed for disposal at less than best consideration, Departmental approval is required. The NIHE is currently in the process of seeking DSD approval before instructing Solicitors to complete the legal formalities to amend the lease to NEELB for onward assignment of the leased lands to the Council.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development whether the individual has ever declared any interest while being involved in the approval process for assistance to GAA clubs under the Neighbourhood Renewal Programme.
(AQW 40859/11-15)

Mr Storey: I refer the Member to the response given to AQW 40193 /11-15, tabled on 12 December 2014.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the legislation The Charity Commission for Northern Ireland, or their appointed interim managers, that enables (i) access to private and confidential text messages, and private emails of charity employees or Trustees; and (ii) the release information gathered in this fashion to third parties.
(AQW 40865/11-15)

Mr Storey:

- (i) The Charity Commission for Northern Ireland has the power to call for documents and search records pursuant to section 23 of the Charities Act (Northern Ireland) 2008. There is also a power to enter premises and take possession of documents and devices under section 52 of the Act. An interim manager in respect of a charity, appointed under section 33(1)(vii) of the Act, acts as receiver and manager in respect of the property and affairs of the charity and this enables access to the charity's property (and any information held on the charity's property); and
- (ii) The Commission has the power, pursuant to section 24 of the Act, to disclose any information to any public body (including a Northern Ireland department) for any purpose connected with the exercise of the Commission's functions, or for the purpose of enabling or assisting the public body to exercise any functions.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 34971/11-15, to detail (i) whether he is aware of; and (ii) in support of The Charity Commission for Northern Ireland when in a board meeting in September 2014 they resolved to ask their legally qualified Commissioner to approach members of the legal profession on the appropriateness of appeals; and for his assessment of whether this is an attempt to block access to justice for those under investigation by The Charity Commission for Northern Ireland.
(AQW 40866/11-15)

Mr Storey:

- (i) The Charity Commission for Northern Ireland is the independent regulator of charities in Northern Ireland. As such, I do not routinely see the minutes of its Board meetings and was previously unaware of the discussion at the September 2014 Board meeting concerning the perception that challenges to Commission decisions were being submitted to the Charity Tribunal as a matter of course, rather than principle;
- (ii) I can support the efforts of the Charity Commission in seeking to reduce costs, to the Commission and charities, by reminding legal professionals of the Commission's decision review process, which provides a straightforward, quick and cost-effective way of challenging a decision without taking an appeal to the Charity Tribunal.

My assessment is that the Commission was seeking to deal with what appears to it to be the immediate reaction of charities and their representatives to enter into potentially costly legal proceedings rather than seeking a review of the case by the Commission. The statutory right of appeal to the Charity Tribunal remains. I do not view this as an attempt to block access to justice.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development what date the Northern Ireland Housing Executive declared land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey as surplus to requirement.
(AQW 40908/11-15)

Mr Storey: Land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey was declared surplus by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive on 3 June 2014.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the public sector trawling process for the disposal of Northern Ireland Housing Executive land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey.
(AQW 40909/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive follows Land and Property Services Central Advisory Unit's guidance on the Disposal of Surplus Public Sector Property in Northern Ireland.

The process requires the Housing Executive submitting a Disposal of Surplus Land form (D1) to the Central Advisory Unit requesting a public sector trawl for the land to be carried out. In the case of the disposal of land at Knockenagh Avenue Newtownabbey, the Disposal of Surplus Land Form was sent to CAU on 30th June 2014.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development to list the expressions of interest received following the public sector trawl process for the disposal of Northern Ireland Housing Executive land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey, including the dates on which any expressions of interest were received.

(AQW 40910/11-15)

Mr Storey: Central Advisory Unit Disposal of Surplus Public Sector Property in Northern Ireland has advised that there was one expression of interest regarding the disposal of land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey. This expression of interest was received on 28 July 2014 from Newtownabbey Borough Council.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the social housing need in the Rathfern area of Newtownabbey.

(AQW 40911/11-15)

Mr Storey: The projected housing need for the Rathfern Area of Newtownabbey for 2014-19 is seven new build units.

The numbers of people considered to be in housing stress in the area, has fluctuated over recent years. However as at March 2014, the housing stress waiting list for Rathfern stood at nine. Allocations have increased slightly with five allocations having been made in the last 12 months.

The Housing Executive is currently examining the potential for new build units on their land within the Rathfern estate and at upper Rathcoole.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development when the last social housing unit was constructed in Rathfern, Newtownabbey.

(AQW 40912/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that the last social housing units constructed in Rathfern was in 1975.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development whether The Charity Commission for Northern Ireland differentiates when investigating concerns with a charity that is a Non-Departmental Public Body as opposed to the stance taken to a charity which is run by volunteers.

(AQW 40919/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Charity Commission does not as a matter of practice differentiate when investigating concerns with a charity that is a Non-Departmental Public Body as opposed to the stance taken to a charity which is run by volunteers.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the development of the policy on a Living Over The Shop scheme.

(AQW 40923/11-15)

Mr Storey: Town and city regeneration is a key policy priority as my Department's Housing Strategy and Urban Regeneration and Community Development Policy Framework clearly sets out. The Housing Strategy specifically contains a commitment to revitalise the Living Over The Shops (LOTS) initiative which I believe will help to encourage the development of homes within vacant or underused commercial premises which will in turn allow people to return to town and city living. The previous LOTS scheme, which helped create over 100 new dwellings, closed to applications in 2008/09 as a result of budget pressures associated with the economic downturn.

My officials are completing a review of the previous LOTS scheme and consultation proposals are under development with a view to putting in place a revised assistance policy. It is anticipated that these proposals will be published during 2015 with a view to a scheme being in place as soon as is practicable.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister for Social Development how many items of correspondence in Irish have been received by his Department in the last three years, other than those from Irish language organisations.

Mr Storey: The information is not available in the format requested as the Department does not routinely record details of when correspondence is received in a language other than English.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister for Social Development how many items of correspondence in Irish have been received by the Social Security Agency in the last three years, other than those from Irish language organisations.

(AQW 40950/11-15)

Mr Storey: The information is not available in the format requested as the Agency does not routinely record details of correspondence which is received in a language other than English.

The Agency can, however, avail of document translation services provided by Flex Language Services. In the last three years the Agency has not used this service to have correspondence in Irish translated into English.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development what liaison has taken place between his Department and the Department for Agriculture and Rural Development on the transfer of funding to local councils for social inclusion and rural development under the Regeneration Bill (NIA 43/11-16).

(AQW 41002/11-15)

Mr Storey: Under the provisions of the Regeneration Bill, powers currently available to DSD will be conferred on councils to assist them, where necessary, in addressing issues related to social need and to take forward regeneration within their areas by means of development powers. Councils will be given the budgets associated with this area of work.

The transfer of DSD funding to local councils is a matter for my Department. A financial allocation model has been developed as a means of distributing my Department's funds to Councils and it will be for them to decide how and where to distribute funds. My predecessor, Nelson McCausland MLA, wrote to the Minister for Agriculture and Rural Development to clarify the details of the model.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development when funds will be released to councils and community groups under the powers transferred by the Regeneration Bill (NIA 43/11-16).

Mr Storey: As the date of transfer has been revised to 1 April 2016 urban regeneration and community development funds will be released to the respective councils in April 2016, subject to the successful passage of the Regeneration Bill. Thereafter it will be for each new Council to decide its own priorities regarding the funding of community groups.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to benefit appeal tribunals, whether panel members are paid per case, per hearing or per day.

Mr Storey: In relation to benefit appeal tribunals, panel members are paid per half day session, between either 9.30 to 13.00 or 13.30 to 17.00. Each session includes multiple hearings. Members may be asked to prepare multiple cases for each session and to sit for two sessions in one day.

The Department for Social Development is responsible for determining and paying the remuneration and allowances of panel members. The fee payable is included in members' terms and conditions.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Social Development what departmental initiatives are available in Dungannon and South Tyrone to provide advice for people, particularly older people, to ensure they are receiving their full entitlement to benefits; and to detail any organisations involved in this work.

(AQW 41021/11-15)

Mr Storey: Since 2005, my Department has invested almost £7 million in delivering Benefit Uptake Programmes to increase awareness and the uptake of social security benefits, resulting in over £81million of additional benefit and arrears being generated of which over £62 million was awarded to older people. These Programmes target a wide range of customers: older people, people with disabilities and those with caring responsibilities.

Part of the current Programme involves the 'Make the Call' advertising campaign, where people in all circumstances across Northern Ireland are encouraged to call the Benefits Advice Line 0800 232 1271 for a free and confidential benefit check, to ensure that they are not missing out on the wide range of government services and supports available to them.

In addition, the Department's Community Outreach Officers are located in local offices and they are working in partnership with local voluntary and community sectors to ensure that people are made aware of their potential entitlement to benefits.

In relation to benefits, the Agency provides help and advice to people through its network of Social Security Offices/Jobs and Benefits Offices and through the wide range of literature available which provides information on benefits and how to claim. Information on benefit entitlement is also available for the public to access in the 'Money, Tax and benefits' section of indirect, the official Government website for all Northern Ireland citizens.

As part of the Social Security Agency's Innovation Fund for Improving Benefit Uptake, funding was awarded to four projects to deliver fresh and innovative approaches to reach harder to engage customer groups with unclaimed benefit entitlement. One of the projects funded was the South Tyrone Empowerment Programme (STEP) who target families with complex needs.

My Department also provides funding of £2.8million each year for advice services. This funding includes a range of support functions and also provides frontline advice services in over 45 locations across Northern Ireland. Approximately 20% of all customers accessing advice services in 2013/14 were aged 60 and over.

For the Dungannon and South Tyrone area funding of just over £76k was provided for advice services in 2013/14. Of this £33,887 was provided by my Department through its Community Support Programme and £42,127 by council.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how much his Department has spent on Neighbourhood Renewal in each of the last three financial years.

(AQW 41090/11-15)

Mr Storey: The table below details my Departments expenditure and allocation through its Neighbourhood Renewal Investment Fund in each of the last three financial years.

Year	2012/2013 Expenditure	2013/2014 Expenditure	2014/2015 Allocation
Total Spend	£27,875,000	£28,495,000	£29,879,000

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Mr Agnew asked the Assembly Commission, pursuant to AQW 39440/11-15, to provide details of any locations it intends to install electric car charging points over the next year; and whether electric car charging points will be made available to all staff and visitors and designated as time limited.

(AQW 41032/11-15)

Mr Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): I refer to the Assembly question which you tabled for written answer, namely:

To ask the Assembly Commission, pursuant to AQW 39440/11-15, to provide details of any locations it intends to install electric car charging points over the next year; and whether electric car charging points will be made available to all staff and visitors and designated as time limited.

(AQW 41032/11-15)

Following the introduction of grants from the Office of Low Emission Vehicles (OLEV), to supply and fit charge points within public sector estates the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission will be fitting 1 charging unit, which will be capable of charging 2 cars, within the service yard in the Upper Car park of Parliament Buildings. The exact location is yet to be confirmed however the work is scheduled for completion by the end of May 2015.

The Assembly Commission will allow all building users with an electric vehicle access to the upper car park to charge their vehicles however, upon completion of the charge they will have to vacate the designated space to maximise its availability.

We have been advised that no plans are currently in place to install charging points within the lower east staff car park. This asset is owned and managed by the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP). It should be noted that a number of charging points will be installed within the Stormont Estate as part of the OLEV scheme.

- T:BUC staff costs - £600k
- Community Relations Council Programme - £300k

This leaves a small amount for further consideration of overall pressures.

Mr Beggs asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the cost to date of the decontamination of the Ballykelly site; and what estimate has been made of removing any remaining site contamination.[R]
(AQW 39491/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: No expenditure has been incurred by the Department in relation to decontamination of the Shackleton site at Ballykelly as it is the Department's intention to dispose of the site.

The potential costs of decontamination are dependent on the end use of the relevant parts of the site and as the Department does not intend to develop the site, a specific estimate for the removal of contamination has not been made at this time.

Mr Hussey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how many Assembly Questions tabled to their Department remain unanswered nine months after the tabled date, including AQO 5995/11-15.
(AQW 39987/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Of the 2722 Assembly Questions tabled to OFMDFM during this mandate, 94 (3.5%) remain unanswered nine months after the tabled date.

AQO 5995/11-15 was answered on 17 November 2014.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the effectiveness of the current Gender Equality Strategy in addressing gender related violence.

(AQW 40278/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Gender Equality Strategy 2006-2016, for which OFMDFM has overarching responsibility, sets out a framework for departments, their agencies and other relevant statutory authorities to promote gender equality. The GES includes a number of key strategic objectives, including the elimination of gender based violence in our society.

A review of the Gender Equality Strategy and its associated cross departmental Action Plans was completed in November 2013. The Review considered how effectively the Strategy has performed against its nine strategic objectives. The objective which had the most positive response related to the elimination of gender based violence in society, in particular the progress in relation to domestic violence and sexual assault. This included the opening of the Sexual Assault Referral Centre in September 2013, and the ongoing development of the Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse Strategy by the Department of Justice and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

The Review considered a key action not included in the Strategy centred around eliminating violence between young men.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the total spent on each of the (i) capital; and (ii) other projects which have not proceeded since May 2007, including the loss resulting from each project.

(AQW 40350/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The only project for which the Department has incurred expenditure that has not proceeded since May 2007, is in relation to the Peace Building and Conflict Resolution Centre at a total cost of £1.587m.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how the six Delivering Social Change Signature Programmes are addressing the needs of young people who are engaged in cycles of anti-social behaviour.

(AQW 40491/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Delivering Social Change is about creating a new culture and focus on cross-cutting work to achieve social benefits that deliver a sustained reduction in poverty and associated issues across all ages. Within the programme there is a particular focus on improving children and young people's health, well being and life opportunities, and breaking the long-term cycle of multi-generational problems.

The initial six Delivering Social Change Signature Programmes are part of this process, and their social benefits are multi-faceted. All of these Signature Programmes will inevitably either help prevent, or address head on, anti-social behaviours in children and young people, and their families.

A range of holistic interventions are being provided under these Signature Programmes to encourage re-engagement in education, training or employment and enhance prospects to become full participants in society. These include a series of mentoring, counselling and psycho-education support for those children, young people and families directly experiencing anti-social behaviours.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether people applying to the Social Investment Fund have been notified of applications which have been unsuccessful; and if so, to detail how applicants were notified.

(AQW 40568/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: In keeping with the community based ethos of the Social Investment Fund, Zonal Steering Groups made the final decisions on projects selected for their Area Plans. Individuals or groups involved with concepts which did not make it into Area Plans were advised at the time. The Area Plans were submitted in February 2013.

When the Zonal allocations were subsequently announced the Steering Groups were asked to prioritise their Area Plan projects within their assigned Zonal budget. This process was completed by November 2013 and the Steering Groups should have informed those involved of the decisions. If anyone is still in doubt, they should contact their Zone's Steering Group directly. Contact details for Steering Groups can be found on the NI Direct website.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to list the applications to the Social Investment Fund, from within the Northern Zone; and for an update on the status of these applications.

(AQW 40573/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Six projects are being taken forward in the Northern Zone.

Two (Coleraine Rural and Urban Network (CRUN) and Fuel Poverty) had funding committed in 2014 and CRUN has contractors on site.

Two (Community Capacity Hubs and Employment through Education) as announced on 20 January 2015 will have letters of offer issued shortly.

Two (Capacity for Health and Access to Employment and Health) are currently going through the internal approvals process.

Mr Easton asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the implementation of the Social Investment Fund.

(AQW 40684/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Funding of £37.2 million has been committed to 24 projects across the 9 Social Investment Zones. This is divided into £12.8 million of capital funding and £24.4 million revenue, and represents 46.5% of the £80 million allocated to the Social Investment Fund.

To date two capital projects, the Coleraine Rural and Urban Network in the Northern Zone and Bryson Street Surgery in the Belfast East Zone have commenced. In addition, 5 revenue projects from across the Zones are out to tender for delivery agents. Others will follow.

As announced on 20 January 2015 letters of offer will issue for a further 9 projects worth approximately £13 million in the very near future.

Considerable effort is being invested in all remaining projects to get them through the necessary appraisal process and to letter of offer stage as soon as possible.

Details of all projects prioritised within the funding allocation for each of the nine social investment fund zones are available on the OFMDFM website.

Mr Spratt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much funding has been allocated to local communities from the Social Investment Fund.

(AQO 7338/11-15)

Mr Dunne asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the delivery and implementation of the Social Investment Fund.

(AQO 7339/11-15)

Dr McDonnell asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what form of inquiry will be established for victims of clerical abuse, not covered by the current Historical Institutional Abuse Inquiry process chaired by Justice Hart.

(AQO 7340/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We are currently giving careful consideration to an options paper provided by officials in relation to child clerical abuse that falls outside the scope of the Inquiry into Historical Institutional Abuse.

We are mindful of the destructive impact clerical abuse has had on many individuals and we are giving much thought to the likely needs of victims and survivors, particularly in terms of emotional and other support.

Ultimately it will be for the Executive to consider how to deal with clerical abuse that does not fall within the Inquiry's terms of reference.

Anyone whose experiences fall outside the scope of the current Inquiry is encouraged to report this to the PSNI and Social Services for investigation. Where appropriate, the alleged perpetrators can then be brought before the courts. This is the primary means by which victims and survivors can seek justice for what happened to them.

Mr G Robinson asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the role the Executive offices in China and Washington have in highlighting the benefits of investing in Northern Ireland.

(AQO 7343/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The offices in Washington D.C. and Beijing are responsible for delivering the Executive's international priorities and objectives. These include developing and maintaining government relations and identifying opportunities for mutual benefit across a range of sectors, including economic and investment opportunities. Our offices influence central and local governments and political leaders by portraying Northern Ireland as an attractive economic partner and by securing access to key investors and representation at economic events. They work in partnership with InvestNI which delivers specific investment projects and, together, they promote a strong corporate economic message to key government and business decision makers. In addition, we rely on the offices to recommend when it is appropriate for us as Ministers to visit these markets to promote our positive economic message.

Since its establishment, the Bureau in Washington D.C. has collaborated successfully with InvestNI to promote with the North American business sector the economic, financial and social benefits of investing in Northern Ireland. This has seen many iconic global brands, including Coca Cola and Caterpillar, investing here. The Bureau's ability to promote a positive view of Northern Ireland amongst elected representatives, business leaders and the extended community in North America provides a firm platform for InvestNI's more focused promotion of the local economy.

The Bureau benefits from close relations with the offices of many legislators on Capitol Hill and influential members of the Irish-American community, ensuring continued access for Executive Ministers and officials.

The Northern Ireland Bureau in Beijing opened for business on 1 September 2014 with the appointment of an Interim Director. Relationships have now been established with senior government representatives in key departments and organisations, including economic departments at central, regional and municipal government levels and their investment organisations. The Bureau is working closely with InvestNI and has facilitated joint initiatives targeting organisations and businesses in a number of regions and business sectors.

The Bureau is engaged in an active outreach campaign promoting the benefits of collaborating with Northern Ireland across a range of sectors including education, tourism, culture and agriculture, in addition to our economic priorities of trade, foreign direct investment and investment in infrastructure.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the opening of an Executive Office in Beijing.

(AQO 7344/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Northern Ireland Bureau in China commenced operations on 1 September 2014 when the interim director arrived in Beijing. He has secured an office in Beijing, which is currently being fitted out, and it is planned to become fully operational at the start of February.

The interim director's immediate tasks have been to set up the office; to establish relationships with key government departments and other stakeholders in an effort to identify mutually beneficial programmes; to promote Northern Ireland in China; and to facilitate partnerships with Chinese regions.

The priority sectors for the Bureau in its work with the Chinese government are the economy, education and cultural collaboration, improving tourism and promoting best practice. Good progress has been made, with the director securing access to senior government representatives and key organisations across all areas. The Bureau has been active in developing connections at a provincial level in China which has generated significant interest. We hope to follow up on this work when we visit China to officially open the Executive Bureau.

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how the £10m allocated for Together: Building a United Community by the Budget 2015/16 will be spent.

(AQW 40976/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Department is presently assessing the resourcing requirements across the seven headline actions and other commitments to ensure that it makes most effective use of the resources available and maximises good relations outcomes.

Mr Lunn asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Summer Camps Pilot Programme envisaged in Together: Building a United Community.

(AQW 40979/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Work is progressing to design and implement a pilot programme of 100 summer schools/camps in the summer of 2015. Four co-design workshops with stakeholders and four youth engagement sessions were held in December and early January. The feedback from these events will inform the final design of the summer schools/camps programme for implementation in the summer of 2015.

Mr Lunn asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for the percentage of their Department's overall Current Resource Expenditure allocated to staff wages in (i) 2013/14; and (ii) the 2014/15 draft Budget.

(AQW 40981/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Between 2013/14 and 2014/15 OFMDFM's resource DEL budget fell by £2.8m. The core Department, excluding Arm's Length Bodies, spent 23% of its DEL Resource outturn on salaries in 2013/14 and forecasts that by the end of this financial year 25% of its final DEL Resource 2014/15 budget will be spent on salaries.

Mr Easton asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much funding the Ulster-Scots Agency received from their Department in the last three financial years.

(AQW 41000/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Department has provided no funding to the Ulster-Scots Agency in the last three financial years.

Mr Clarke asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) how much their Department pays annually for Trade Union officials; (ii) how many officials this payment covers; and (iii) what is the cost of administering Trade Union's dues.

(AQW 41170/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: OFMDFM does not incur any costs in relation to Trade Union officials.

Mr Hussey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the position of St Lucia Barracks in Omagh, including details of discussions between their Department and (i) Omagh District Council; and (ii) other Executive Departments.

(AQW 41261/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Ministry of Defence (MOD) recently advised OFMDFM that it had resolved the legal impediment relating to the ownership of the historic barracks, which forms part of the St Lucia site.

Officials are currently investigating the potential costs that would be incurred by the Executive, if the historic barracks was to be transferred. In the current financial climate, we need to ensure that ownership of this part of the site would not place an unnecessary drain on the Executive's resources.

Since the approach from MOD, our officials have discussed potential future uses of the site with organisations that have an interest, including Omagh District Council and the Department for Social Development (DSD). DSD recently convened a meeting of a public sector stakeholders group to discuss the future of the site. OFMDFM officials attended this meeting and will continue to engage with stakeholders.

Mr Easton asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on Social Investment Fund applications for the extension of community houses for Beechfield, Bloomfield and Whitehill.

(AQW 41337/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Funding has been provided to establish the quantum of works needed at each of the 8 houses identified in the Community Houses project.

This is to start shortly and once completed the project will be subject to the standard Social Investment Fund (SIF) assessment process prior to the issue of any letter of offer.

SIF funding of £300,000 has been allocated to this project.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what checks are made on hedgerow cutting practices to ensure compliance with European commitments to halt biodiversity loss.

(AQW 40813/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): All direct agricultural support payment claimants (including Basic Payment Scheme) must abide by the NI Cross-Compliance standards which include the Good Agricultural and Environmental Condition (GAEC) requirements. Under EU law at least 1% of claimants are required to be inspected under the NI Cross-Compliance standards and these inspections are carried out by my Department each year.

GAEC 7 prohibits the cutting (including trimming and laying) of hedgerows during the bird nesting season between 1 March and 31 August unless there is a health and safety reason or an animal welfare reason. It also recommends that hedges are cut in a 2-3 year rotation ideally during January and February to provide a food resource for farmland birds.

When performing GAEC On-the-Spot checks in respect of these measures inspectors check for evidence of hedge trimming or laying carried out between 1st March and 31st August. Inspectors also respond to all reports received alleging activities in breach of these Regulations. Where breaches are identified penalties may be applied to Single Farm Payments and other land based Scheme claims.

GAEC 7 also prohibits the removal of landscape features including hedgerows and some hedgerow trees without prior permission from my Department. To ensure compliance, my Department uses a combination of ortho photography / satellite imagery and ground checks to confirm the presence of field boundaries and hedgerow trees.

As noted, if a claimant is found to be in breach of scheme requirements or Cross-Compliance then a penalty may be applied to their direct agricultural support payments. Members of the public may report any suspected breach of Cross-Compliance rules through the DARD Helpline on 0300 200 7852 or by e-mail on dardhelpline@dardni.gov.uk.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the impact on taxation following the new definition of an active farmer.

(AQW 40931/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Direct Payments Delegated Regulation (EU) No 639/2014 states that the allocation of entitlements under the Basic Payment Scheme (BPS), and therefore direct payments, should go to those who can demonstrate that they satisfy the requirement of enjoying the decision making power, benefits and financial risks in relation to the agricultural activity on the land for which such allocation is requested. For the purposes of CAP support, the definition of agricultural activity is also set by EU regulation.

Domestic taxation law insofar as it relates to agriculture is not built on CAP definitions of agricultural activity or farmers.

The position in respect of Agricultural Property Relief has been raised as an issue of concern by some individuals. My understanding is that the position outlined in a letter from the British Treasury to the then Ministers of Agriculture and Rural Development and Finance and Personnel in December 2009 remains unchanged.

It clarifies that land let in conacre will qualify for Agricultural Property Relief provided that the deceased owned the land throughout the period of seven years immediately prior to death and throughout that period the land was farmed either by the deceased or by another person.

Although all taxes are kept under review, I am not aware of any plans to change the rules around Agricultural Property Relief and, in particular, how it relates to conacre land.

Agricultural Property Relief is only one aspect of taxation and as taxation law is complex and tax liability depends on individual circumstances, it is important that professional advice is sought for specific cases.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development when the Rural Development and Social Inclusion budgets will be transferred to local councils.

(AQW 40971/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department is not transferring any staff, functions or budgets to local councils as part of the Review of Public Administration.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many rural households have benefited from her Department's Fuel Poverty Intervention scheme.

(AQW 41001/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: 2,748 rural households have benefited from fuel poverty interventions supported through my Department's Tackling Rural Poverty & Social Isolation Programme and its predecessor, the rural Anti-Poverty and Social Inclusion Programme since 1 April 2008.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the Contacting Elderly Rural Isolated pilot project in the Western Health and Social Care Trust area; and whether she will consider rolling out a similar project to reduce social isolation for vulnerable older people in rural areas of the Northern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 41006/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Connecting Elderly Rural Isolated (CERI) pilot project is proving to be an effective mechanism to alleviate social isolation among vulnerable elderly people living in rural areas of the Western Health and Social Care Trust area. 1,927 isolated elderly rural people have directly benefitted from CERI since commencement in January 2012. Following completion of the CERI pilot, an evaluation will be undertaken which will inform potential future mainstreaming of the Flexicare/CERI initiative. This approach has been endorsed by the Health and Social Care Board and would involve other HSC Trusts.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the effectiveness of the Maximising Access in Rural Areas to Grants, Services and Benefits (MARA) project in providing access to services, grants and benefits for people living in rural areas who are at risk of poverty and social isolation.

(AQW 41010/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am very pleased with how the MARA Project has been delivered across all rural areas of the north of Ireland in the past 3 years. All targets set for the Project have been achieved. To date 13,479 households and over 15,000 individuals have had a holistic assessment of their needs in respect of entitlement and availability of various grants, benefits and services. From these assessments, over 36,000 referrals have been made to government agencies and departments.

An evaluation of the project which will commence shortly will provide a comprehensive assessment of the project effectiveness when it reports later this year.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development (i) how much her Department pays annually for Trade Union officials; (ii) how many officials this payment covers; and (iii) what is the cost of administering Trade Union's dues.

(AQW 41064/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development paid £123,692.72 for 4 full time Trade Union Officials in the NI Public Service Alliance (NIPSA) from 1 April 2013 – 31 March 2014.

Specific costs relating to the administration of Trade Union dues is not available.

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the status of the laboratory facility in Omagh; and whether she has any plans to close this facility.

(AQW 41231/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The laboratory in Omagh is part of the estate leased by DARD to the Agri-food and Biosciences Institute (AFBI). DARD and AFBI agree that the high operating cost of AFBI's estate as a whole needs to be addressed as a priority. Work is ongoing to establish a clear roadmap for the future of the AFBI estate, informed by AFBI's strategic vision and scientific priorities and in the context of significant pressures on public expenditure. Opportunities for rationalisation and reconfiguration are currently being explored, but no decision has been taken on the future of AFBI's Omagh site at this point.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 40940/11-15, how many of the 926 single farm payments as yet unpaid have been subject to remote sensing.

(AQW 41237/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The number of Single Farm Payments which remain unpaid has now reduced to 740. Of these, 331 have been subject to inspection via Control with Remote Sensing. This number will fall quickly in coming weeks.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what assessment she has made of the mooted announcement by the United States Department of Agriculture that it will re-open its market to exports of beef from the EU; and what steps are being taken as a result.

(AQW 41442/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I was delighted when the United States Department of Agriculture (USDA) lifted the EU wide BSE ban in March 2014 as I am keenly aware that access to the US market for exports of beef from the north is a key priority for local producers and processors. Therefore, in anticipation of and following that announcement, considerable effort has been made by my department to expedite the market access process for beef exports from the north. The focus of these efforts is in securing approval from the US that the north of Ireland and Britain are compliant with their export requirements.

The first stage in the process, is completion of a very detailed questionnaire known as a Self Reporting Tool (SRT) to the USDA which sets out our controls of beef production and how we will meet the US specific export standards. The first draft was submitted in early 2014 with revisions being required throughout 2014. A final version is being prepared and will be provided to US authorities in the coming weeks at which time a request will also be made for them to schedule an audit of the controls we have set out in the SRT. We are anticipating an inspection in the first half of 2015 which will look at my Department's controls in two meat processing establishments in the north.

In preparation for the audit my officials participated in a mock inspection of processors by ex USDA inspectors in November 2014. They are continuing to work with industry to ensure that any deficiencies found during the mock audits are addressed and that they are fully prepared to meet the stringent USDA requirements.

A successful visit will see our production and audit systems approved for exports and allow my officials to audit and approve other processors in the north interested in this market without the need for another inspection by the US authorities.

I am pleased to note that the USDA have agreed that this inspection team will also visit a lamb processor in the north in anticipation of the US lifting their ban on EU lamb in the second half of 2015. Access will give the north an early foothold into this market ahead of other Member States.

The commencement of beef and lamb exports from the north will supplement the already buoyant pork export trade with the US.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what proposals her Department has to promote diversification opportunities in the farming sector in 2015.

(AQO 7479/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department will continue to promote and deliver diversification training programmes throughout 2015. The training is provided by the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) and it helps farmers, and farm family members, to assess and develop new business opportunities.

Participants, who are considering or have undertaken diversification projects may attend diversification awareness events and challenge programmes covering Business Start and Business Development.

The training is promoted to farmers through a number of channels including the CAFRE website, press releases, farmers' meetings and Balmoral Show. CAFRE Development Advisers will also refer potential clients to their locally-based Rural Enterprise Team member for advice and mentoring.

To date over 2,000 people have participated in these programmes which have led, in part, to the establishment of over 400 new businesses and almost 1,000 new full time and part time jobs. These new enterprises and employment opportunities add valuable additional income streams to farm families as well as helping to encourage and underpin economic activity within our rural communities.

In addition to CAFRE's training programmes, the new Rural Development Programme 2014-2020 includes a Rural Business Support Scheme, which will make funding available for applications from rural businesses including farm diversification, micro and small business development and small tourism projects. Promotion of the new Scheme will be determined by the timing of the Programme being signed off by the European Commission and on getting the necessary business case approval. However more information should be available in April or May of this year.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what departmental support is available for small farmers.

(AQO 7484/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: DARD delivers a range of schemes, including Direct Payments, Areas of Natural Constraint (ANC), agri-environment, forestry and rural development schemes. Each scheme has its own eligibility criteria and where small farmers meet these, they will be eligible to apply.

The College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE) provides support to farm businesses, including small farmers, by offering a range of industry training programmes primarily aimed at farmers and growers and those who work in land-based industries. These training opportunities allow participants to develop new technical and practical skills across a range of disciplines.

CAFRE also provides support through the delivery of Business Development Plans, which are tailored to individual farm businesses. These Plans set business development objectives and identify support that is available to meet these objectives. Further, CAFRE delivers support to farm businesses through benchmarking and knowledge and technology transfer. These help farmers gain the right skills and technology to manage their businesses in a sustainable way.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the estimated total cost of the proposed move of her departmental headquarters to Ballykelly.

(AQO 7478/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I can advise the Member that the estimated total cost for the relocation of my departmental headquarters to Ballykelly is £30.8m capital and £14.3m resource.

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what measures she has, or is proposing to, put in place to support the dairy sector.

(AQO 7480/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The dairy sector makes an important contribution to the local agri-food industry and, to ensure its future sustainability, it is vital that the sector remains competitive and profitable.

My Department's overall aim is therefore to help the dairy sector improve its performance and grow its potential in the market in a sustainable way. For example, we provided joint support with Invest NI for an industry-led dairy competitive study aimed at helping the sector to plan for the future post milk quotas which end on 31 March 2015.

I believe that the dairy sector has the potential to grow further and to exploit the opportunities arising from the predicted expansion in world population. My Department will, continue to support the dairy sector's growth ambitions, as set out in the Agri-Food Strategy Board's report's Going for Growth, through the provision of education, training, technical support and research to help improve efficiency, competitiveness and innovation.

I envisage that, subject to necessary approvals, support will also be available under the next Rural Development Programme, including the proposed Farm Business Improvement Scheme, Agri-Food Processing Investment Scheme and Co-operation measures to encourage supply chain integration.

Furthermore, as the price paid to farmers continues to fall I have written again to the Defra Secretary of State to ask her to press for EU support for the north's dairy industry at the Agriculture and Fisheries Council in Brussels. I am keen that the EU urgently examines the intervention price and assesses whether it adequately fulfils the role of providing an effective safety net.

I also held a meeting with the Ulster Farmers' Union and the local banks and I was heartened by the banks' reassurance that they remain determined to support the dairy industry and would pro-actively engage with their customers to support them.

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what progress has been made on the Relief Flood Scheme for the Lisburn Road area of Belfast.

(AQO 7483/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: In the Sicily Park and Greystown areas, Rivers Agency is working in partnership with NI Water on the development of a scheme to upgrade existing infrastructure. Subject to securing agreement with landowners, it is hoped to commence the first phases of this scheme this summer.

Rivers Agency has also taken on responsibility for three privately owned urban drains in the Sicily Park area, so that they can be upgraded and maintained at public expense. The proposed works were approved by the Drainage Council in October 2014, and maintenance work has already been completed. Upgrading work is planned to commence in the latter half of this year.

There is ongoing engagement with the local community to keep them informed and provide support for self help.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline what her Department is doing to secure new trade opportunities for local agri-food produce.

(AQO 7489/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Securing new market access is a key priority for me and I am committed to assisting industry in achieving their ambitious export growth targets.

My officials through their role in the various export partnerships ensure the interests of exporters in the north remain at the fore of the work they do to secure new trade opportunities for local agri-food produce. The participation of my department in these partnerships enables close two-way communication with industry in terms of targeting resources towards pursuing their priority markets.

My department also works closely with industry to ensure we put our best foot forward during inward inspections from third countries which are key to opening these valuable new markets. Currently my officials are making preparations to facilitate inward inspections of pork producers in the north by Chinese inspectors and beef and lamb producers by the United States authorities in the first half of 2015. My department are also engaged in market access negotiations with Australia for the export of locally produced pork and the Philippines for beef. Securing these markets will be a welcome boost for our exporters.

My officials provide further support to the industry in terms of making them aware of new markets as they open and working with them to renegotiate existing markets and remove barriers to trade. For example I was pleased to announce renegotiation of conditions for the Singapore pork and South African beef markets which made these opportunities more lucrative for our industry. Our work in this area continues.

Throughout 2014 there was positive growth in the volume of international exports across a range of locally produced agri-food commodities and over seventy new third country export opportunities were agreed. I am committed to securing even more markets for our industry to see greater growth in 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the impact the recent water crisis has had on farming communities in counties Tyrone, Fermanagh and Londonderry.

Mrs O'Neill: I was pleased to see that a resolution was found to the recent water crisis. A large number of farms, business and homes in rural areas across the West were significantly affected by having no water supply for their animals, or for other activities such as washing and cleaning of milking equipment.

During the crisis, general advice was available to farmers on the DARD website, and the DARD Helpline was used by those with particular animal welfare related problems to seek further advice and support. Over 30 farmers who contacted DARD this way were triaged to NI Water for provision of an alternative water supply. In addition, DARD officials kept in contact with NI Water during the crisis and participated in the multi-agency tele-conferences over Christmas and in the period up to the ending of industrial action.

I was very pleased to hear about the good community spirit that prevailed in affected areas where those who still had a water supply or a borehole for example, were able to help out their neighbours. The impact of losing something essential such as water supply, or dealing with disruption caused by severe weather, emphasises the need for farmers and rural businesses to have a contingency or alternative in place to reduce their vulnerability in the event of unforeseen circumstances.

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the improvement works to the urban drains in areas of South Belfast that are prone to flooding.

(AQO 7477/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: There are three main areas in South Belfast which have been affected by flooding.

At Orchardville, Rivers Agency has completed maintenance and upgrading work and continues to monitor the situation which, to date, has proved effective.

In the Sicily Park and Greystown areas, Rivers Agency is working in partnership with NI Water in the development of a scheme to upgrade existing infrastructure. Subject to securing agreement with landowners, it is hoped to commence the first phase of this scheme this summer. Rivers Agency has also taken on responsibility for three privately owned urban drains in the Sicily Park area, so that they can be upgraded and maintained at public expense. The proposed works were approved by the Drainage Council in October 2014 and maintenance work has already been completed. Upgrading work is planned to commence in the latter half of this year.

At Upton Park and Lille Park, investigations by NI Water, Transport NI and Rivers Agency are ongoing.

In all these areas, the three drainage authorities are engaging with local communities to keep them informed and provide support for self help.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what preparatory work has been completed since the St Andrew's Agreement towards the establishment of an Irish Language Act.

(AQW 40978/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Based on the experience of other jurisdictions, legislation is an effective way of protecting a language and according it proper status. You will be aware that the British government gave a commitment at St Andrews to introduce an Irish Language Act which has yet to be met.

I remain committed to an Irish Language Act and, as I announced in the Assembly on Tuesday 13 January, I will be putting proposals for an Irish Language Bill out for public consultation in February.

All supporters of the Irish language should take part in the consultation and work together to convince the Executive, the Assembly and all our people of the merits of supporting an Acht na Gaeilge.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what steps she has taken to assist in the development of a Northern Ireland bid for the Commonwealth Youth Games 2021.

(AQW 41033/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I understand that the NI Commonwealth Games Council has been in communication with the Commonwealth Games Federation advising of the Council's intention to make a bid for the Commonwealth Youth Games in 2021.

Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, is represented on the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment's Strategic Bidding Group for Major Events which has supported the Council's bid to bring the Commonwealth Youth Games to the north of Ireland.

As a member of that Group, Sport NI has had an initial scoping meeting with the Council and has consulted with a number of potential stakeholders including Invest NI, NI Tourist Board and Belfast City Council. On the basis of these meetings, Sport NI is currently assisting with the progression of the business case for the 2021 Commonwealth Youth Games in conjunction with the Council.

Sport NI will continue to liaise with the Council to identify potential sports to be held at the 2021 Commonwealth Youth Games and to finalise the outline budget for the event.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the proposed redevelopment of Newtownards Library.

(AQW 41107/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI remains committed to the development of a new library on the Queen's Hall site in Newtownards, subject to funding and agreement on the parameters of a joint development. I am pleased, that following progress regarding the merger between Ards Borough Council and North Down Borough Council, Libraries NI has recently re-engaged with these Councils who are now in a better position to reconsider the project.

Discussions continue between Libraries NI and Council officials to update and refine requirements for the project with particular reference to the arts and culture provision. This work also includes addressing the accommodation needs for each party as well as the feasibility and cost options.

Council officials have also been invited to visit Bangor Carnegie Library as it is an example of a large library with a mix of library services provided.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 39221/11-15, whether the report investigated the time frame over which the original timber and wattle deflectors were replaced with steel pile and mesh; and the effect of these changes.

(AQW 41149/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The impact of the timeframe between the replacement of the original timber and wattle deflectors with steel pile and mesh was not considered as part of the report.

Neither my Department nor AFBI have any records of the timing of works to replace, repair or maintain the fish deflecting structures to consider if these works would have impacted on the fish kill.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much funding her Department has awarded the GAA over the last three financial years.

(AQW 41173/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: To sustain and increase participation, and improve performances in sport, Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, invests in a range of projects throughout the north of Ireland. Sport NI is a Lottery award distributor and also provides exchequer funding to a number of Sport NI recognised Governing Bodies of Sport, sports groups and clubs seeking funding in the north.

In the last three years up to March 2014, Sport NI has allocated a total of £4,079,766 in funding to the Gaelic Athletic Association, which includes the Ulster Council, County Boards and Clubs. Details of this funding are as follows:

Financial Year	Amount
2011/12	£982,176
2012/13	£1,280,450
2013/14	£1,817,140
Total	£4,079,766

In addition, my Department has provided a total of £5,089,377 funding to the Gaelic Athletic Association through the Regional Stadium Programme and a total of £850,073 from the Promoting Equality and Targeting Social Exclusion through Sport Programme (PETPSE) as follows:

	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	Total
Regional Stadium Programme
GAA Development Costs	161,403	1,648,622	3,279,352	5,089,377
Total Awarded for Casement Park				£5,089,377
PETPSE through Sport Programme
Garvaghey Centre of Participation	Nil	400,000	100,073	500,073
GAA PETPSE Programme	Nil	250,000	100,000	350,000
Total Awarded for PETPSE				£850,073
Total Awarded to GAA				£5,939,450

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail any change in the cost of running her Ministerial Private Office in the last three financial years.

(AQW 41177/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The total cost of running the Ministerial Private Office in the last three financial years was as follows:

2011-12	£746,634
2012-13	£692,696
2013-14	£749,521

Costs were made up of staff salaries (99%) and general office expenses.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) how much has been spent on the Líofo Initiative since its launch; (ii) what additional support her Department provided; and (iii) what stakeholders are involved in the project.
(AQW 41178/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) The expenditure incurred for Líofo, since it was launched in September 2011 to 31 October 2014 is £624,879. This includes a spend of £196,957 for the 2013/14 advertising campaign, which was approved by the Executive.
- (ii) My Department provides additional support to Líofo, as appropriate, for example the Department's Communications office will assist with publicity in relation to Líofo events.
- (iii) In addition to Líofo participants, there are a range of stakeholders involved in Líofo. For example, Foras na Gaeilge assist with the promotion of Líofo through activities organised by Irish Language Officers. Good Relations Officers employed by Councils also assist, as appropriate, with the promotion of Líofo events. Gaeltacht providers assist with the delivery of the Líofo Gaeltacht Bursary Scheme. Libraries NI distribute Líofo publicity materials such as leaflets for the Gaeltacht Bursary Scheme. This not an exhaustive list as there are a number of different stakeholders involved in the Líofo campaign at any given time.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure (i) how much her Department pays annually for Trade Union officials; (ii) how many officials this payment covers; and (iii) what is the cost of administering Trade Union's dues.
(AQW 41198/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín:

- (i) My Department does not currently pay for Trade Union Officials.
- (ii) Nil.
- (iii) There is no charge to DCAL for administering Trade Union's dues.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 40468/11-15, for a breakdown of the figures, by prosecution and number of people prosecuted.
(AQW 41277/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Details of the numbers of successful prosecutions by offence and the total numbers of persons convicted in each of the last three years are listed below:-

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the funding awarded to marching bands in each of the last four years, including the sources of the funding.

(AQW 41333/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department has funded marching bands through a number of sources in the past four years.

The Arts Council has awarded the following funding to marching bands through the Musical Instruments for Bands scheme:

Year	Amount Awarded
2011/12	£205,555
2012/13	£202,691
2013/14	£196,874
2014/15	£104,415
Total	£709,535

The same amount of funding was made available in 2014/15 as in previous years. The lower amount awarded by the Arts Council is a reflection of the number of eligible applications received and not a reduction in the fund.

The Ulster-Scots Agency (the Agency) has awarded the following funding to marching bands for music and dance tuition and summer schools:

Year*	Amount Awarded
2011	£232,858.64 + €9,505.72
2012	£226,128.45 + €5,940.44
2013	£185,545.36 + €7,653.63
2014	£119,968.57 + €7,328.50
Total	£764,501.02 + €30,428.29

* The Agency's financial year operates from January-December, therefore grant information is also provided in calendar years.

 The Agency provides grants to organisations in the South of Ireland, and therefore a proportion of the funding is provided in Euros.

In addition, funding amounting to £7k has been provided by Foras na Gaelige to Acadamh Ceoil Chaoimhín Uí Dhochartaigh, Doire, to work with a local Bands Forum. The project will enable adults from a Protestant / Unionist / Loyalist background in the North West area, who have not had an opportunity to learn Irish, to undertake an Irish course and take part in talks, discussions and events concerning the history of the language and in particular its relationship to the Protestant community.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the investment in the film and creative industries in South Down in the last two years.

(AQW 41368/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Investment by NI Screen and the Arts Council in film and the creative industries in South Down in the last two years is in excess of £116,000.

This funding comprises production funding, film education, Ulster-Scots Broadcast Funding and Creative Industries Innovation Fund grants.

A number of NI Screen funded productions, such as Dracula Untold, Game of Thrones, Robot Overlords, Halo, A Patch of Fog and The Fall, have also used South Down as a filming location, further boosting the local economy and profile, and the local tourist industry.

The Amma and Nerve Creative Learning Centres have provided skills development in creative digital technology for young people, teachers and community groups to 25 schools and libraries in the South Down area over the last 2 years.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when the decision was reached to allocate £67 million to the IFA and GAA; and what steps she is taking to address the inequalities in funding for rugby.

(AQW 41378/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Executive has approved funding packages for the Regional Stadium Programme and a Soccer Sub Regional Programme of £110m and £36m respectively.

As with all investment decisions business cases (both OBC's & FBC's) have been developed to examine in detail a range of options which demonstrate the long term strategic requirements for each Governing Body and these form the basis of investment decisions with each Governing Body in terms of Regional Stadia and will be developed in due course for Sub Regional facilities.

The Regional Stadia Programme commenced with Ulster Rugby and an investment of £16.5 million investment underpinned by the completion of the Kingspan Stadium.

Subsequently, the IFA and UCGAA progressed with their FBCs and procurement activities which resulted in a re-profiling of £5.0 million between the stadia budget lines. IFA and UCGAA received investments of £31.0m and £62.5 million respectively.

Due to a re-profile of budgets within the Stadium Programme, the UCGAA will have £5.0 million available for a Sub Regional Programme.

The Department are looking at the potential for widening the sub regional programme to Ulster Rugby subject to budget being secured.

Ulster Rugby have recently submitted a draft Facilities Strategy to my officials for review and, subject to comment, this may form the basis of future investment which may be delivered in respect of rugby sub-regional facilities, should funding become available.

My officials are currently developing a framework for the Sub Regional Programme which will be capable of delivering sub regional facilities for each of the three Governing Bodies subject to future funding becoming available.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when representatives of the Ulster-Scots community first raised with her Department the need to develop an Ulster-Scots dictionary; and to outline the circumstances in which it was raised.

(AQW 41526/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: According to the records maintained within my Department the need to develop an Ulster-Scots dictionary was first raised with my Department when it was incorporated into the Ulster-Scots Agency's first Corporate Plan for the period 2001/02 - 2003/04.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether she will provide the viewing figures for each of the programmers funded through (i) the Irish Language Broadcast Fund; and (ii) the Ulster-Scots Broadcast Fund, as she stated in the Assembly on 25 November 2014.

(AQW 41532/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I provided the requested information in a letter which issued to the Member on 18 December. I attach a copy of that letter at Annex A.

Annex A

Our ref: SUB 807/2014

18 December 2014

Mr Nelson McCausland MLA
NI Assembly
Parliament Buildings
Ballymiscaw
Stormont
BELFAST BT4 3XX

Nelson, a chara,

I refer to Oral Questions in the Assembly on 25 November 2014 when I stated that Ofcom's communications market report had disclosed that, during 2013-14, programming supported by the Irish Language Broadcast Fund and the Ulster-Scots Broadcast Fund and broadcast by the BBC reached an audience of 660,000. You requested that I provide separate viewing figures per programme for each broadcast fund and I am pleased to provide a breakdown at Annex A attached.

Please note that many of the individuals who make up the 660,000 figure mentioned above will have watched a number of programmes. The figures provided in Annex A for viewers for each programme will therefore, when totalled, greatly exceed that figure of 660,000.

I trust you find this helpful.

Is mise le meas

Carál Ní Chuilín MLA

Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on her plans to attract and host legacy games.
(AQO 7503/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The responsibility of attracting international games events in terms of legacy from previous event successes is primarily the responsibility of the Minister for Enterprise Trade and Investment. I am aware however of a growing schedule of potential international sports events that if secured will bring significant benefits in terms of sports promotion and development. The north of Ireland through its welcome and support for the World Police and Fire Games and the Giro D'Italia has proved itself as a venue that can deliver great success and by good collaborative work between Departments can build on the successes gained and sustain a lasting legacy for our sports.

As a direct consequence of the Giro D'Italia success, the amateur cycling 'Gran Fondo Event' will be held in the North and work is underway to run the initial visit of 'Gran Fondo' in June this year.

The member may be aware that my Department is already engaged with DETI and with officials in the south, to scope and plan the bid for the Rugby World Cup 2023. I am also aware of DETI and Tourist Board support to the Commonwealth Games Council to attract the Commonwealth Youth Games. My officials, through Sport NI, are exploring the potential for further events that are highlighted through DETI's Global Events Group. Other events that I have indicated that I would support include the Women's Rugby World Cup in 2017, international ice hockey, international golf and IFA Youth and Women's international football tournaments.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether she has any plans to formally recognise the recent success of Carrickfergus Cricket Club.

(AQO 7495/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am aware of the success which Carrickfergus Cricket Club achieved during the 2014 season, winning four senior trophies and a further three trophies at junior and youth level. This is a fantastic achievement for the club in a single season and I would like to congratulate everyone involved in helping the club to such a successful year.

I will recognise the club's achievements by inviting it to the annual Celebration of Sport event which is planned to take place in Newry at the end of March.

In the wider context, my Department takes the development of cricket seriously. Sport NI is providing significant support to cricket, particularly in the context of the Participation and Performance targets within Sport Matters. This includes funding the provision of coaches within District Councils through the Active Communities Programme, with the aim of increasing participation in the sport. It also includes a number of interventions to develop and support our talented cricketers.

Whilst on the subject talented cricketers, I would like to congratulate the Irish Cricket Union on the recent announcement that Ireland is one of only two teams which will join the Test playing nations in a ranking system to qualify for the World Cup in England and Wales in 2019. This is not only a boost to the chances of qualification for the tournament, but also to the profile of Irish cricket on the world stage. It should also further increase the morale of the team, which is competing in the 2015 World Cup in Australia and New Zealand this month.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the potential relocation of the Enniskillen Library to the old Erne Hospital site.

(AQO 7498/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI is currently developing a business case aimed at securing resources for the development of a new and improved public library in Enniskillen.

Libraries NI is aware of the proposals put forward in the Department for Social Development's Enniskillen Master Plan in relation to the former Erne Hospital site and is considering this site as a potential location option in its business case.

The benefits of relocating to the former Erne Hospital site will be fully tested. They will be considered in light of their ability to provide a value for money solution, support sustainable use of the library into the future, provide ease of access to customers and build upon the strong presence the library already holds in the town.

Libraries NI is currently planning to submit its business case to my Department for consideration by November 2015. At this stage, the case is in draft format. However Libraries NI needs to review and update this draft to ensure that it meets both my and its own strategic priorities in relation to Promoting Equality and Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether artists are paid a fee for showing their work in publicly funded galleries in Northern Ireland.

(AQO 7502/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Artists are paid a fee for exhibiting their work in publicly-funded art galleries such as the Centre for Contemporary Art in Derry and the Golden Thread Gallery. This is in-line with best practice and current Visual Artists Ireland guidelines.

Libraries NI, National Museums NI and the Local Museums sector do not pay fees to artists for showing their work in their galleries.

National and Local museums do, on occasions, hold and sell stock on behalf of local artists. This stock would be the subject of a commercial arrangement, usually with an agreed retail price and mark-up, and with stock being held on a 'sale or return' basis.

Both National and Local museums also, on occasions, pay artists to lecture about their work, give gallery talks or facilitate workshops. Exhibition partnership or hire fees are also paid but these tend to be to the organising institutions and not to individual artists.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure why her Department, in its publications or events, does not recognise the importance of marching bands.

(AQO 7504/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department recognises the importance of music in a wide variety of forms.

In recognition of the importance of music making in communities, my Department provides support for bands through its Musical Instruments for Bands Scheme which is administered by the Arts Council. Through the Scheme, bands can apply for funding towards the cost of purchasing musical instruments.

A study document and accompanying guidance notes for marching bands which was developed in 2011 with specialist input, remain available on the Department's website.

In addition, the Ulster-Scots Agency makes funding available to bands through its Financial Assistance Scheme which can provide funding for musical tuition.

Department of Education

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education how many after-school programmes supporting primary school children with special needs receive recognition, funding or support from his Department or Belfast Education and Library Board.
(AQW 40411/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The Belfast Education and Library Board (BELB) has advised that, with the exception of summer schemes, it does not fund any after-school programmes for pupils with special educational needs (SEN). BELB's Autistic Spectrum Disorder service, however, provides after-school social skills programmes for primary pupils prior to transfer and, in collaboration with its youth service, a number of classroom assistants are involved in board managed youth schemes during holiday periods to enable participation of SEN pupils.

My Department's Extended Schools (ES) programme provides additional resources to those schools which serve children and young people from areas of disadvantage by providing additional learning opportunities, including after-school provision. There are currently 65 primary schools in the BELB area that qualify for ES funding and programmes implemented will facilitate all children including those with SEN.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education why the proposed cut to funding to schools is proportionately higher than the proposed cut to his Department's budget.
(AQW 40496/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As part of the 2015-16 Draft Budget, my Department's Resource budget faced a reduction, in cash terms, of 4.9% (£94.4 million) compared to the 2014-15 budget baseline.

However, this figure did not take into account either inflation or other inescapable pressures such as pay increases, increased pension contributions, statutory and contractual commitments and the impact of demographic change in 2015-16.

Once these inescapable pressures were taken into account, the net impact was that my Department was facing a funding gap of £162.5 million. This would have resulted in an 8.4% reduction when set against my Department's opening baseline budget of £1,943.7m.

Unfortunately, due to the scale and timing of the required 2015-16 budget reductions and the fact that the Aggregated Schools Budget (ASB) represents almost 60% of the total Education resource budget, protection of delegated budgets would not have been entirely possible.

I therefore proposed, in my 2015-16 Draft Budget, that the ASB be reduced by £78.7 or 7%. This reduction of 7% was below the overall 2015-16 Resource Budget funding gap of 8.4% and would have been further reduced to a net 6% reduction when factoring in the additional £10 million funding for Targeting Social Needs which I proposed to allocate next year.

However, as part of this Final Budget settlement, Education received an additional resource allocation of £64.9 million. This allocation now results in a reduction of £29.4 million when compared to the 2014-15 Education budget baseline representing a 1.5% reduction. Nevertheless, when the range of inescapable pressures faced by my Department are again taken into consideration, the net impact is that overall my Department is now left facing a funding gap of £97.6 million which represents a 5% cash reduction from 2014-15 figures.

On Monday 19 January 2015, I announced the allocation of £80 million to the Aggregated Schools Budget in 2015-16. Hence, this allocation has offset the proposed gross reduction in the Draft Budget of £78.7m meaning that there has now been no reduction in cash terms, to schools' delegated budgets in 2015-16.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to outline the number of classroom assistants and their associated costs provided by each Education and Library Board to assist statemented children in mainstream schools.
(AQW 40674/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The number (headcount) of classroom assistants and their associated costs provided by each Education and Library Board to assist statemented children in mainstream schools is as follows:

	Number	Costs
BELB	877*	£8,911,000
WELB	980	£12,046,000
NEELB	1176	£9,491,002
SEELB	1057	£9,117,106
SELB	1361	£8,683,562

*at December 2014

- The figures shown above, with the exception of BELB, represent the number of Special Educational Needs (SEN) Classroom Assistants as at 15 January 2015, but these can fluctuate during the year.
- The costs shown above are for 2013/14 and include employers' National Insurance and Pension Contribution costs.

Mr Lytle asked the Minister of Education how his Department's budget is greater per capita than in any other region of the UK and yet the expenditure per pupil is less than any other devolved region of the UK.

(AQW 40745/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: It is difficult to make meaningful comparisons between the levels of funding here and in other regions for schools in other jurisdictions – including England, Scotland, Wales or the South of Ireland - for a variety of reasons including the different funding and structural arrangements that apply.

Relative need for expenditure on education is affected by a number of factors, including:

- the number of pupils;
- the age profile of pupils (including pre-school and post-16);
- sparsity of population (i.e. rural/urban distribution); and
- levels of deprivation.

The North of Ireland has a greater proportion of young people (aged 4-18) in its population than other regions of the UK (19.4%, compared to 17.5% in England, 17.0% in Wales and 16.2% in Scotland).

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education to detail the timeline for the establishment of the amalgamated primary school in Lower Mourne.

(AQW 40862/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I approved a development proposal for the amalgamation of the Lower Mourne schools on 23 September 2014; effective from September 2015. Should the Mourne Primary Schools project be successful in any future major capital investment announcement a timetable for the establishment of an amalgamated primary school will be commissioned at that stage. In the meantime I understand that the Trustee, Principals and Chairs of Governors of the schools involved are continuing to meet to discuss the amalgamation.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to detail the visits proposed by the Teacher Insight Programme, including the costs associated with each visit.

(AQW 41024/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There were two events in 2014/15. The Teacher Insight Event to WIN Business Park in Newry on 20 November 2014 and the Teacher Insight Event to Funeral Director and Crematorium on 30 January 2015. Both events cost in the region of £4k each. A breakdown of the estimated costs are detailed in the table below, however, these are subject to teachers submitting relevant travel claims.

	WIN Business Park Estimated Cost (£)	Funeral Director & Crematorium Estimated Cost (£)
Catering	207	210
Teacher Release	3,500	3,500
Teacher Travel	400	400
Total	4,107	4,110

The Teacher Insight Programme supports the Careers Education Information Advice and Guidance (CEIAG) agenda and has been running since 2009. This project aims to support schools in the STEM/CEIAG programme through exposing teachers to the world of work outside the education sector, allowing them to bring live up-to-date examples back to their classroom teaching. They will also be in a position to give pupils examples of direct and associated career opportunities as well as examples of ways of working. A post-primary teacher influences/teaches from 60 to 600 pupils per year and a primary school teacher around 20. Therefore, one visit of 20 post-primary teachers can positively impact between 1,200 and 12,000 pupils.

Twenty teachers attended the event on 20 November 2014. Sixteen teachers attended the event on 30 January 2015.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the Teacher Insight Programme; and how the need for this programme was identified by the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment.

(AQW 41025/11-15)

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Education what actions his Department intends to take to ensure that educational standards are maintained.

(AQW 41160/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Continuous improvement will continue to be achieved through schools being supported and trusted to develop their own school improvement strategies and to identify themselves what support they need in implementing them.

The Department provides data to schools to inform self-evaluation and the Education and Library Boards provide guidance and training for schools and school governors on school development planning and the effective use of data.

In addition, the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI) continues to promote a culture of self-evaluation within our schools and the ETI resource Together Towards Improvement supports self-evaluation of the quality of a school's educational provision. Through inspection the ETI will assess the effectiveness of a school's self-evaluation processes and identify good practice or where improvement is required. Schools that are not providing at least a satisfactory quality of education will be placed in the Formal Intervention Process through which they will receive the targeted support needed to address the areas for improvement identified by the ETI.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Education, in light of the reduced maintenance budget, what assurances he can give that children will continue to be taught in schools that are safe and fit for purpose.

Mr O'Dowd: The safety of children whilst in school is of the uttermost importance and I am fully committed to ensuring that schools are both safe and fit for the purpose for which they were built. To this end, and within tight budget constraints, I allocated £17m to maintenance at the start of the 2014-15 financial year and was successful in obtaining a further £5m as the result of a successful bid submitted in the in year June monitoring round. A significant element of the increased capital allocation for minor works in 2014/15 was also applied to projects. This will assist in reducing the maintenance backlog and in addressing health and safety issues.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education, following the details of the 2015-16 Budget, whether he will provide an update on the continuation of the Delivering Social Change Signature Programme which is due to conclude in 2015.

(AQW 41167/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Delivering Social Change improving Literacy and Numeracy Signature Programme is a two year programme planned to finish at the end of June 2015. The future of the programme is under consideration in the context of a severely constrained financial climate.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 40616/11-15, how many of the applications were from outside North Down.

(AQW 41220/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd:

	2010/11	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Number of applications for pre-school places from outside the North Down Borough Council area	82	72	93	65	93

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Education how his Department ensures teachers and classroom assistants are trained to manage pupils with epilepsy.

(AQW 41245/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education and Library Boards (ELBs) undertake a needs analysis, on an annual basis, of the training required by schools for the forthcoming academic year.

School principals are responsible for determining the training needs of their teachers and school staff and they can avail of the wide range of courses on all aspects of special educational needs, including epilepsy, through the ELBs.

Training with regard to health conditions, including epilepsy, would be provided by the relevant Health and Social Care Trust and will be in line with the pupil's individual healthcare plan and be subject to on-going review.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail all recipients of the Community Relations, Equality and Diversity Fund in each of the last four years; and whether this will be awarded in 2015/2016.

(AQW 41266/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Details of all recipients of Community Relations, Equality and Diversity Funding in each of the last four years are listed in the tables below.

Following an evaluation of the impact of the CRED policy by the ETI and in the context of the challenging 2015/16 education budget, I am looking at how best to support the further embedding of the CRED policy and to explore the synergies with Shared Education in order to ensure that good work to date is built upon.

I have not yet, therefore, finalised the budget for 2015/16.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education what transition planning and reviewing arrangements currently exist for young people with a disability, once they have left post-primary compulsory education.

(AQW 41361/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Once young people have left post-primary education, the responsibility for their transition arrangements no longer falls to the Department of Education.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail the areas in which Sure Start Programmes are currently funded; and whether services will be expanded to the top 25 per cent most disadvantaged wards in 2015.

(AQW 41362/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The following table provides details of the Sure Start Programmes that are currently funded in the north of Ireland, displayed by Childcare Partnership and electoral ward areas. Sure Start Services are being expanded to the top 25% most disadvantaged wards (as defined by the Multiple Deprivation Measures 2010 (NIMDM 2010)) on a phased approach as budgets allow, by April 2015.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education whether he will expand the Extended Schools' Programme to provide funding for eligible schools in 2015/16.

(AQW 41364/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I regard the Extended Schools programme as a critical part of my overall strategy for school improvement by responding to the needs of pupils, parents, families and the local community.

The level of Extended Schools funding will be considered in the context of my overall spending plans for education which I am currently finalising for 2015/16.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the total spent; and (ii) and the number of teachers included in the Efficient Discharge scheme for (a) 2013/14; and (b) 2014/15.

(AQW 41372/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Efficient Discharge scheme was revoked in 2010 with the agreement of employers therefore no teachers were released under such a scheme in 2013/14.

The scheme was re-introduced in May 2014 however, due to the small numbers involved, suppression would be required to prevent the identification of individuals. This guidance is in accordance with the confidentiality principle of the Statistics Authority's Code of Practice on Official Statistics.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to outline the procedures in place to appoint staff to the Education Authority Implementation Team.

(AQW 41384/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There are no plans to appoint staff to the Education Authority Implementation Team (EAIT). Staff in the Education and Library Boards and the Staff Commission, as well as staff in my Department, will work with EAIT to deliver the change programme.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education when he anticipates that the Education Authority Implementation Team will complete its work and provide a timescale for its dissolution.

(AQW 41385/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority Implementation Team (EAIT) is currently implementing the change programme to establish the Education Authority (EA). This is a significant programme of work which will continue beyond 1 April 2015.

Responsibility for managing the change programme will pass to EA on 1 April 2015.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister of Education who will have responsibility for the development of an appropriate management structure for the new Education Authority.

(AQW 41386/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department is currently developing a management structure for the Education Authority (EA) in consultation with the Interim Chief Executive. This includes the identification of posts at a senior level and will ensure that senior managers are in post as soon as possible after the Authority becomes operational. My Department will ask the Board of the Authority to review the management structure after an interval of no more than five years.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education whether there is any shortage of teachers at primary or post-primary level education; and if so, to detail the subject areas where a gap exists.

(AQW 41395/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department does not hold details of any shortages of teachers in primary or post-primary schools.

However, each year the Department commissions the Teacher Vacancy Return, which asks schools how many vacancies they have been unable to fill and the breakdown of those vacancies by school type, full-time/part-time and permanent/temporary.

Table 1 below shows the number of vacancies, in primary and post-primary, which existed at the end of the 2013/14 academic year that were unfilled at the start of November 2014.

The School Omnibus Survey is an annual multi-purpose survey of all grant-aided schools covering a variety of topics. In 2014 the survey included questions for all post-primary schools, asking if they had any difficulty in recruiting teachers. The results were published in Chapter 9 of the School Omnibus Survey 2014 on the DE website - http://www.deni.gov.uk/index/facts-and-figures-new/32_statistics_and_research-research_pg/school_omnibus_survey.htm

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) percentage; and (ii) number of children that achieved at least five GCSEs at grades A* - C in schools that serve South Down, in each of the last thirteen years, broken down by (a) gender; (b) religious background; and (c) socio-economic background.

Mr O'Dowd: The information contained in the following tables refers to the achievement of pupils resident in the South Down constituency leaving mainstream grant aided post-primary schools during the academic years 2000/01 to 2012/13. A pupil's socio-economic background has been derived using free school meal entitlement.

Data covering the academic year 2012/13 are the most recent available. Equivalent figures for 2013/14 school leavers are scheduled for release in May 2015.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education for an update on the new build for St. Columbanus' College in Bangor.
(AQW 41401/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: No timescale has been set for the delivery of a new build for St Columbanus College, Bangor. Any decision on this matter has been subject to ongoing area planning considerations.

By way of update I can advise that the South Eastern Education & Library Board published Development Proposal No 254 on 2 October 2014. The 2-month consultation period ended on 2 December 2014 and my officials are currently considering responses received. A decision on the Development Proposal will issue in due course.

I will continue to examine the case for Capital Investment across the estate and subject to the structure of maintained provision in the area being clear, any proposal for the school will be considered alongside other priorities, as part of any future capital announcement.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the provision of classroom assistants in mainstream post-primary schools for pupils who have a disability that were supported by a classroom assistant at primary level.
(AQW 41428/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As outlined in the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs, Education and Library Boards (ELBs) are required to review all statements of special educational needs (SEN) at least annually and these reviews should be seen as part of a process of continuous assessment. A child's transfer from primary to post-primary education is carefully considered during the last year in the child's current school and the annual review of the child's SEN, which if necessary should be brought forward to allow sufficient time, will review the provision being made including, if appropriate, provision of a classroom assistant.

The review process enables an ELB to consider the individual needs of a child and how they may change in a post-primary setting. If it is concluded that a child continues to need the support of a classroom assistant the statement will be subsequently amended and the provision put in place in the new school setting.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the average primary school class size in North Down in each of the last five years; and how this compares with the Northern Ireland average.
(AQW 41433/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The table overleaf details the average primary school class size for North Down constituency. The figures relate to 2009/10 to 2013/14. Figures for 2014/15 will be available at the end of February.

Average primary school class size in North Down constituency and Northern Ireland, 2009/10 – 2013/14

- 1 Data excludes learning support centre classes.
- 2 Figures include pupils in years 1 – 7 only.
- 3 Any composite classes including reception pupils have been included, but the class size excludes reception pupils

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Education how much has been spent on taxis by each Education and Library Board in the last five years.

(AQW 41454/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The costs for transporting pupils to school by taxi for the last five years for which data are available are:

Year	BELB	NEELB	SEELB	SELB	WELB
2009/10	£908,075	£1,932,458	£1,124,064	£1,998,832	£1,516,725
2010/11	£977,355	£1,663,086	£1,055,732	£1,887,236	£1,630,190
2011/12	£946,244	£1,332,875	£811,132	£1,681,110	£1,503,900
2012/13	£889,138	£1,343,097	£906,326	£1,640,853	£1,745,773
2013/14	£1,036,548	£1,419,492	£978,317	£1,751,221	£2,005,773

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education for an update on a new build for Priory College, Holywood.

(AQW 41469/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: No timescale has been set for the delivery of a new build for Priory College, Holywood. The school was considered under 'The Major Works Projects - Protocol for Selection of Projects to Proceed in Planning' in advance of my June 2014 capital announcement. The protocol subjected potential projects to Gateway checks for sustainability and area planning issues. Priory College did not pass the 'Gateway' and was therefore not included in my announcement.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education for an update on a new build for Holywood Primary School.

(AQW 41470/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: No timescale has been set for the delivery of a new build for Holywood Primary School (PS). Prior to my June 2014 capital announcement, the school was considered under 'The Major Works Projects - Protocol for Selection of Projects to Proceed in Planning' but did not achieve a sufficient score to be included in the list of announced projects due to budget constraints.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education for an update on the Kilcooley Primary School development proposals.

(AQW 41473/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: On 3 June 2014 I approved Development Proposal No 243 to decrease Kilcooley Primary School's approved enrolment number from 567 to 205 and admissions number from 81 to 29 with effect from 31 August 2014 or as soon as possible thereafter.

This was the first phase of the South Eastern Education and Library Board's reorganisation of controlled primary provision in the Bangor area.

Information on Development Proposals is available on my Department's website and a record of my decision on this development proposal can be accessed using the following link

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of how the Northern Ireland Curriculum raises awareness of the contribution Northern Ireland has made to the development of STEM subjects.

(AQW 41500/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The curriculum keeps prescribed content to a minimum and allows schools to choose the most appropriate approach to take with their pupils to ensure they are engaged and challenged to reach their full potential. Teachers therefore have the flexibility to teach their pupils about those from the north of Ireland who have made major contributions to science and technology. This could include people such as William Thomson 1st Baron of Kelvin (pre-eminent scientist), Neil Armstrong (aviator) or John Boyd Dunlop (Dunlop Tyres) amongst many others.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education for an update on development proposals for Clondeboye Primary School, Bangor. (AQW 41530/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: On 3 June 2014 I approved Development Proposal No 244 with a modification to decrease Clondeboye Primary School's admission number from 78 to 58 with effect from 31 August 2015 or as soon as possible thereafter. This was to set the admissions for Clondeboye Primary School at a two class entry.

This proposal and that for Kilcooley Primary School were the first phase of the South Eastern Education and Library Board's reorganisation of controlled primary provision in the Bangor area.

Information on Development Proposals is available on my Department's website and a record of my decision on this development proposal can be accessed using the following link http://www.deni.gov.uk/kilcooley_and_clondeboye_ps_-_officials__submission.pdf

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Education how the decision was made to designate St Ronan's, Lurgan as a Voluntary Grammar School, including the criteria used. (AQW 41560/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: St Ronan's College is the proposed name for the new school created as a result of the amalgamation of St Michael's Grammar School, St Mary's High School and St Paul's Junior High School, Lurgan.

When post primary schools of mixed management types, in this case a voluntary grammar school and two maintained secondary schools, bring forward a proposal to amalgamate, it is for the proposers to indicate what the management type of the new school will be. As requested in DP 291, St Ronan's College will be a co-educational 11-18 voluntary grammar school and the new school will not select for entry on the basis of academic criteria.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education to detail the schools where pupils are studying the book 'Bog Child' at Key Stage 3. (AQW 41586/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The curriculum allows teachers flexibility over how they deliver the curriculum to meet children's needs. My Department does not prescribe resources to be used by teachers to deliver the curriculum and therefore does not hold information on what resources are used.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Education whether any additional support or encouragement is given to schools within inner city only areas to take part in British Telecoms young scientist of the year competition. (AQW 41615/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The BT Young Scientist Exhibition is open to all schools to apply. My Department provides funding in support of the exhibition and promotes the competition directly to schools. It also works with BT to maximise media coverage at key points in the competition's calendar such as at the entry stage and at the time of the finals in Dublin.

No additional support or encouragement is given to any particular school, including those within inner city areas.

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how the actions assigned to his Department, contained in the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development's Rural White Paper Action Plan, will be effected by any budget cuts in 2015/16. (AQW 40433/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): My Department recognises the need to enhance the sustainability of rural communities and for this reason has been undertaking a number of actions in the current Rural White Paper Action Plan (RWPAP) that have a positive impact on rural areas.

The first Annual Progress Report on the RWPAP was published in January 2014 and indicates that good progress is being made. All four of my Department's actions are underway and on track to be achieved in the timeframe.

The draft 2015-16 Budget for the Department results in a net 10.8% cash reduction from the opening baseline figure of £756m which equates to £82m.

The Department's Draft Budget for 2015-16 was published on our Department's website on 4 December 2014 for consultation. Responses to the consultation have since been received and are currently being considered.

The Department will seek to act as strategically as possible, which means trying to protect, first and foremost, those areas that are most relevant to the economy, as well as looking to protect those services that are provided to those who are most vulnerable.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 39336/11-15, whether any of the salary and other core costs associated with the 14 members of the academic staff at the University of Ulster, who deliver Irish language courses, are met by Foras na Gaeilge or any other external funding or from the core budget of the university.
(AQW 40473/11-15)

Dr Farry: As my Department does not hold the information you have requested I have asked officials to refer your questions to the University of Ulster so that it can respond to you directly on this matter.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what steps his Department is taking to increase the number of people from North Down enrolling in higher education.
(AQW 40500/11-15)

Dr Farry: One of the key aims of my Department's higher education strategy, Graduating to Success, is to ensure that higher education is accessible to all who have the ability to benefit.

This is reflected in Access to Success, my Department's regional strategy to widen participation which focuses on the creation of a more accessible sector in which the people who are most able but least likely to participate are given every encouragement and support to apply to, and to benefit from, higher education. Raising awareness is an important aspect of the implementation plan and my Department has developed a campaign under the 'Reach Higher' banner to raise awareness across Northern Ireland of the benefits of higher education.

Although the implementation plan for Graduating to Success and Access to Success does not target specific geographical areas, it does aim to improve learner information in regard to higher education to support all students including those from North Down in their decision making. To this end my Department has recently reviewed and enhanced the higher education information available through NIDirect.

Improving access to higher education is also a key aspect of the implementation plan and I can confirm that South Eastern Regional College's allocation of full-time higher education places has increased from 557 in academic year 2013/14 to 580 in academic year 2014/15. This increase is the result of my Department's annual review of college full-time higher education allocations and additional full-time places that I have made available.

These additional full-time places were allocated to the college based on established current and future demand for higher education in the college catchment area which includes North Down; the college's alignment with my Department's strategic priority areas as demonstrated in its College Development Plan; and support for the Department's Widening Participation goals in the geographical distribution of higher education places across Northern Ireland.

However, it is the responsibility of the senior management in the regional college to manage their allocation of full-time higher education places across campuses and curriculum areas to balance local demand and Departmental priorities.

My Department is also committed to carrying out further reviews of college allocations in the future.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the (i) budget for; and (ii) expenditure on pastoral care and student support held by each higher and further education establishment, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 40665/11-15)

Dr Farry: Higher Education

My Department does not allocate a budget for pastoral care.

The Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) are responsible for putting in place their own individual pastoral care arrangements aimed at promoting the health and wellbeing of students by providing them with access to appropriate guidance and support.

The information in the table below was provided by the HEIs.

	(i) Budget (£000)	(ii) Expenditure (£000)	(i) Budget (£000)	(ii) Expenditure (£000)	(i) Budget (£000)	(ii) Expenditure (£000)

St Marys	757,000	758,904	685,000	694,068	594,000	572,369

Queen's University has stated that its budgets are not allocated at an individual activity level but at a Faculty and Directorate level and so they were only able to provide expenditure for each year.

Further Education

In further education (FE), my Department does not have a specific budget for pastoral care and student support. The colleges are responsible for putting in place their own individual pastoral care arrangements aimed at promoting the health and wellbeing of students by providing them with access to appropriate guidance and support. My Department does however have a number of schemes in place to ensure that a variety of financial support is provided to assist students in FE provision.

Financial support to students is provided through the following schemes:

- FE Awards which provide bursaries to eligible students to assist with the costs associated with undertaking a course of study.
- College Hardship Funds which are directed at students who are experiencing exceptional financial difficulties.
- Care to Learn Scheme which seeks to provide financial support to young parents to help meet the cost of childcare and allow them to start or continue their education in FE Colleges. It is aimed at those aged under 20 at the time of enrolment.
- Additional Support Funds which seek to encourage enrolments from students with disabilities and/or learning difficulties.

The tables at Annex A set out the budgets and expenditure, by college, as requested. For reference, the six FE colleges are: Belfast Metropolitan College (BMC); Northern Regional College (NRC); North West Regional College (NWRC); South Eastern Regional College (SERC); Southern Regional College (SRC) and South West College (SWC).

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what impact the changes to the criteria for the European Social Fund, especially the requirement to hold in cash flow 10 per cent of the application funding, will have on applications from community and women's groups.

(AQW 40722/11-15)

Dr Farry: All potential applicants to the European Social Fund (ESF) must meet a financial capability assessment for the new Programme including demonstrating the capability of 10% net cash assets in their organisations most recent set of annual accounts.

One of the main reasons for introducing this specific condition is that the new ESF Programme for 2014-2020 has no facility for providing a 30% pre-payment advance. Any pre-payment advance is likely to be limited to 5% in each year of the new programme.

Given that actual ESF expenditure has to be paid out in full by an ESF project before submitting a claim to the ESF Managing Authority, a project must therefore have access to the relevant cash resources.

It is therefore imperative that a project has net cash assets to fulfil this requirement. If a project has no net cash assets then they would not be able to fully comply with the ESF financial claims process specified by the European Commission.

It is very difficult to determine any impact the above conditions of funding will have on grass roots community organisations. However, similar conditions apply to other Government or European funding, and in the case of the ESF, they reflect requirements at European level.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many fraud investigations have taken place in each university and regional colleges in each of the last three years.

(AQW 40754/11-15)

Dr Farry: The number of fraud investigations which have taken place in each University and regional college in each of the last three years is as per the table below.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the Irish language courses funded by his Department.

(AQW 40942/11-15)

Dr Farry: Further education colleges currently deliver a range of Irish language courses, including short courses and accredited courses, such as GCSE and A-Level.

The following courses were provided by Further Education colleges and funded by DEL as shown in the table below:

Enrolments

The Further Education (FE) recurrent block grant is delivered to FE Regional colleges through the Funded Learning Unit (FLU) funding model, which is a distributive funding mechanism designed to support the Department for Employment & Learning's (DEL) strategic priorities (introduced in September 2007). Consequently the analysis focuses on the most recent complete academic year 2013/14.

My Department also provides funding to the Higher Education Institutions (HEIs) for teaching and learning and research purposes. It does not provide funding for specific courses and does not hold information on course content.

The HEIs hold information on their own specific course provision and you may wish to write to them directly to obtain information on the full list of Irish language courses currently being delivered.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what mechanisms are in place to (i) identify young people who are not in education, training or employment; (ii) encourage their engagement in programmes to address their needs; and (iii) monitor the outcomes of their engagement with relevant programmes.

(AQW 41008/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Executive agreed the Northern Ireland cross-departmental strategy for those young people in the Not in Education, Employment or Training (NEET) category, 'Pathways to Success', in 2012.

The strategy contains an Action Plan which pulls together actions across Departments, statutory agencies, the voluntary and community sector and local government, and employers also have a role to play. The NEET Advisory Group (NAG) chaired by DEL, brings together key decision makers from Government Departments, voluntary and community, education, health, social care and business sectors and local government. The Group provides leadership and co-ordination of the programme of interventions. It also addresses the need to improve the information base available to all the stakeholders involved so that the actions can be targeted effectively at those most in need and continue to be informed by best practice elsewhere.

In developing the 'Pathways to Success' strategy, DEL also helped establish the independent NEET Strategy Forum to engage and help join up those organisations in the voluntary and community sector who deliver services in this area. The Forum consists of some 80 members currently, membership is open and Forum members are also represented on the NEET Advisory Group.

To support a method of agreeing best practice, the Forum is supporting the introduction of the Journey to Employment (JET) pilot. This is a Shared Measurement Framework for Young people who are in need of Education, Employment and Training. The Forum is also developing a NEET Youth Forum (NYF), promoting a Mapping Tool to provide a map of service provision available to NEETs. We are considering the role of the Forum following the formal evaluation of Pathways to Success and the introduction of the new ESF programme.

Collaboration and Innovation Fund (CIF) projects use a range of methods to identify young people who are not in education employment and training. These include collaboration with local community groups and government bodies, advertising through various media sources, the distribution of promotional leaflets and by project staff conducting home visits within local communities.

Projects use a range of activities to encourage CIF participation, such as the use of IT packages, digital media, music and outdoor team building events. Incentives provided by projects and the availability of an Educational Maintenance Allowance of up to £25 per week for 16-17 year olds helps to retain participants' commitment to the programme. These, combined with access to a personal mentor, have proved successful in providing the motivation for young people to progress to more intensive activities such as vocational training and work experience.

Statistics received on a monthly basis from CIF projects provide information on the destination of all programme leavers including, into employment, education and training. Statistics are also collected on the level of qualifications obtained and the number of essential skills qualifications achieved.

By the end of December 2014, a total of 5,284 young people commenced Collaboration and Innovation Funded (CIF) projects. Of the 3,754 leaving the programme 2,870 have completed activities with 1,954 moving into positive outcomes of employment 496 (13%), education 485 (13%) and training 973 (26%). Performance of individual projects is monitored on a monthly basis by DEL staff.

The Community Family Support Programme providers and DEL staff monitor the destinations of young people participating on the programme at the end of each 26 week programme cycle. Data at the end of cycle two showed that, of the 319 NEETs participating on the programme, 206 (65%) progressed to positive destinations in education, employment and training.

During the period April 2014 to December 2014, a total of 2,422 clients were case loaded to the LEMIS programme, of these 999 were young people not in Education, Employment or training. Derry Job Assist Centre case-loaded 417 clients and 73 people (17.5%) commenced permanent full time employment, seven commenced part time employment and eight entered temporary employment. 145 of those case loaded were NEET clients, 28 commenced permanent full time employment, three commenced part time employment and four commenced temporary employment. The unit cost of a client entering permanent full time employment for this period was £3,556.

Monitoring of statistical information is carried out on a monthly basis using Provider returns and LEMIS spreadsheets.

Tracking System

Data sharing arrangements have been agreed with 258 schools out of a total of 265, including 210 post-primary, 40 special needs and 15 independent schools. DEL's Careers Service provides full class lists from schools, including details on pupils who are in Alternative Schooling or those that have been suspended. Data sharing ensures that all young people at school and at risk of becoming or remaining NEET can be identified and offered advice. Careers advisers actively case-manage early leavers from school and DEL funded programmes for 16 and 17 year olds. Those identified as being NEET are supported into appropriate provision.

The Unique Learner Number (ULN) has already been adopted by DEL across all its programmes and is being adopted by the Department of Education (DE). This will support the ongoing development of a system to track individuals' employment, training and educational progress.

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what evidence exists that demonstrates the ratio, engagement and success of further education colleges compared to Independent Training providers in delivering the Business Improvements Techniques programmes.

(AQW 41035/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Business Improvements Techniques programme was updated in 2013 /14 and since then 15 programmes have either been delivered or are currently under way. Of these, ten have been delivered by Further Education colleges and five by Independent Training providers. The ratio of delivery is therefore 2 to 1. In terms of outcome, all those who have undertaken the training have achieved the relevant Level 2 qualification whether that training has been delivered by colleges or private providers.

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the engineering programmes offered by Regional Colleges and universities.

(AQW 41038/11-15)

Dr Farry: Engineering is one of a number of priority sectors on which my Department is focusing its employment and skills provision. I have established and chair the Advanced Manufacturing and Engineering Services Working Group which aims to identify and address the skills challenges faced by employers within this sector bringing together government, academia and local employers. One of the Group's commitments is to establish a curriculum group to ensure courses at the further education colleges and universities are relevant to the industry. Indeed, the recent changes I announced for the way forward for Apprenticeships in Northern Ireland will ensure colleges and universities continue to focus on relevant and high quality training for the industry offering a seamless progression into further and higher education.

In addition to the importance of ensuring that engineering provision offered reflects the needs of employers and the wider economy, the quality of that provision is also paramount. Colleges are regularly inspected across all areas of provision by the Education and Training Inspectorate to ensure that they provide high quality teaching and learning programmes that meet the needs of learners. Within higher education, my Department contracts the Quality Assurance Agency, to ensure that the teaching provision funded by my Department is of good quality and meets the agreed standards within the higher education sector.

I believe the quality of engineering provision coupled with its strong industry relevant curriculum is reflected through the level of enrolments on engineering courses at the colleges and universities. In academic year 2013/14 there were 7,192 enrolments at the further education colleges in engineering of which 6,487 were on courses that could potentially lead to a 'regulated' qualification. The success rate for those final year 'regulated' enrolments in 2013/14, within the subject area 'Engineering', was 84%.

The university enrolments for engineering are also extremely promising with 3,410 enrolments in 2012/13. The universities also continue to score extremely highly in terms of student satisfaction in engineering courses. In some cases up to 100% of students reported that they were satisfied with the quality of their course. Even more promising is that up to 95% of students on some engineering courses were in professional or managerial jobs six months after graduating.

My assessment of the engineering programmes on offer at our further and higher education providers is therefore highly positive and I remain committed to ensuring that their provision meets the needs of employers and also provides all learners with a high quality learning experience.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how much funding the Ulster Scots Agency has received from his Department over the last three financial years.

(AQW 41043/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Ulster Scots Agency has not received any funding from the Department over the last three financial years.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many students attend the Titanic campus of Belfast Metropolitan College.

(AQW 41071/11-15)

Dr Farry: In academic year 2013/14 there were 13,649 enrolments registered by Belfast Metropolitan College at the Titanic Quarter site and of these enrolments there were 6,647 individual students. For the same year there were 10,433 enrolments by 6,904 students at the Millfield site and 725 enrolments by 535 students at the e3 site. Across the whole college, there were 37,055 enrolments by 20,191 students.

It should be noted that caution should be taken when interpreting the numbers of students above, as the same student may be enrolled on multiple courses at different sites and so feature more than once in the statistics.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action his Department is taking to secure funding from the European Globalisation Adjustment Fund to support workers at JTI Gallaher.

(AQW 41108/11-15)

Dr Farry: I was disappointed to learn that Japan Tobacco International (JTI) have not accepted the Union's proposal to save jobs at the Lisnafillan plant. My thoughts are with those who are facing redundancy.

The European Globalisation Adjustment Fund (EGF) supports workers made redundant as a result of major structural changes in world trade patterns due to globalisation and global financial and economic crises. My officials have been in contact with the Commission Office in Belfast and the European Commission in Brussels to discuss the potential for an application to be made to this fund. All applications must be agreed by the Member State Government; therefore my Department has also initiated discussions with relevant officials in the Department for Work and Pensions.

However, JTI have advised that they are planning to relocate some jobs within the European Union; this puts the potential eligibility of an application to the EGF in question as jobs relocated to other Member States do not qualify for funding under the EGF. Engagement with the company is ongoing to determine the total number of expected redundancies in the local supply chain to ascertain whether the situation might be eligible for the EGF. I have written to my Executive colleagues to explain the fund and its potential use in the case of JTI Gallaher. I will continue to work with my Executive colleagues to support those affected by the closure of JTI Gallaher.

My Department will provide a range of services to those facing redundancy through the Redundancy Advice Service, the Careers Service, Bridge to Employment and through the Further Education Sector, in particular Northern Regional College. I have also brought the potential closure to the attention of the business members of the Advanced Manufacturing and Engineering Services Group (AMES) at their last meeting and asked them to consider the JTI workers who become redundant in their future hiring plans. I will ensure my Department does everything that can be done to assist those affected by the recent announcement.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what financial support is available from his Department for young people who chose to study in other EU countries.

(AQW 41109/11-15)

Dr Farry: EU citizens have the right, subject to certain conditions, to study or work in another EU country. Consequently, they also have the right to be treated equally with domestic students in terms of any course fees they may be required to pay. This arrangement does not necessarily apply to other types of support such as maintenance grants. Some countries may nevertheless choose to provide maintenance grants to foreign students, on their own initiative.

My Department does not offer financial support for young people in further or higher education who chose to study their entire course in other EU countries, apart from students attending higher education courses in the Republic of Ireland. In academic year 2014/15 these students are eligible to apply for a loan to cover the student contribution charge of €2750, maintenance loans of up to £4,840 and means tested maintenance grants of up to £3,475.

My Department contributes to the overall UK funding for the Erasmus+ Programme. Students may apply for Erasmus grants through participating higher and further education institutions. Students on these Erasmus placements are also eligible to apply for the usual student support maintenance grants and loans. Erasmus participants do not pay fees to the EU institution as a fee waiver arrangement exists between higher education institutions in participating countries.

Students attending other study and work placements in EU countries as part of their Higher Education course may be eligible for student support. Further details are available from their local Education and Library Board.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 40453/11-15, and in light of closer links between Tourism Northern Ireland and InvestNI, what communication has he had with the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to ensure that skills challenges facing local tourism industry are a priority.

(AQW 41201/11-15)

Dr Farry: Officials from my Department met with their counterparts in Tourism Northern Ireland and Invest NI on 30th January 2015 to discuss the skills needs of this economically important sector.

During this meeting it was agreed that we will work together to establish a steering group which would commission research to investigate the skills needs facing this industry and to determine the most appropriate mechanism for addressing these issues.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what support exists for carers who wish to participate in further and higher education.

(AQW 41202/11-15)

Dr Farry: Financial assistance for those seeking to undertake a further or higher education course is not aimed specifically at any particular group. Financial help is targeted at those who are most in need and eligibility is based on family income. Further education students who require financial assistance with meeting the costs associated with learning, including travel and childcare costs, can apply for help through Further Education (FE) Awards and / or college Hardship funds. The amount of assistance provided is dependent on individual circumstances with the combined maximum amount payable through the FE Awards and Hardship Funds amounting to £3,500 in academic year 2014/15. Assistance with childcare costs is payable in addition to this amount.

Further details regarding financial assistance can be obtained from the Student Finance Team at any further education college.

A higher education student can apply for a Special Support Grant of up to £3,475 a year, payable to some students who are eligible to claim means-tested benefits such as Income Support and Housing Benefit. Generally, this will be lone parents with caring responsibilities and students with disabilities.

Supplementary grants for students, in addition to maintenance loans and grants are also available. These include: Childcare Grants available for full-time higher education students who have dependent children and a low household income; Parents' Learning Allowance for help with course-related costs of up to £1,538 a year for students with dependent children; and Adult Dependants' Grant of up to £2,695 a year for students who have a partner or another adult who depends on them financially.

In addition, carers may be eligible to apply for a payment from the Support Funds. This is money allocated by my Department to provide financial assistance to students on lower income who are able to demonstrate that they are in financial hardship during their studies. Students seeking financial support need to apply to their university which is entirely responsible for administering the Support Funds.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many students in the South Eastern Regional College in (i) 2013/14; and (ii) 2014/15 enrolled in courses which support the hospitality and tourism sectors.
(AQW 41347/11-15)

Dr Farry: The most recent figures available, for the 2013/14 academic year, show that (i) 1167 individuals enrolled in 'Hospitality and Catering' or 'Travel and Tourism' at South Eastern Regional College and for the 2014/15 academic year (ii) 833 individuals enrolled in 'Hospitality and Catering' or 'Travel and Tourism' at South Eastern Regional College.

The figures are correct as at 28th October 2014 using the subject sector area Hospitality & Catering and Travel and Tourism for both colleges.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what provision is made in each of the teacher training institutions to equip teachers to teach (i) Irish dancing; (ii) Scottish country dancing; and (iii) Highland dancing.
(AQW 41425/11-15)

Dr Farry: While my Department provides funding to the teacher training institutions for teaching and learning purposes it does not have responsibility for curriculum content and does not hold the information requested.

You may, therefore, wish to write to the relevant institutions directly to obtain the information you require.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how she is encouraging foreign direct investment by selling the attributes of areas outside of Belfast and Londonderry.
(AQW 40854/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Invest NI's track record in attracting high quality Foreign Direct Investment provides a very significant benefit for all of Northern Ireland. A record year in 2013/14 was followed by Invest NI's best ever mid-year results, released at the start of November last year, with some of the achievements from the previous year already surpassed. Those mid-year results show that 40% of the job-related inward investment offers were made to companies outside the Belfast and Londonderry areas.

It is important to note that, in order to compete internationally, Invest NI promotes Northern Ireland as a whole. To promote parts of Northern Ireland individually, or to exclude specific areas, would dilute the proposition in what is a very competitive market for FDI. That is not to say that Invest NI does not take steps to understand and appreciate each area's key demographics and attributes. This is achieved through direct engagement with interested parties in a number of ways.

For example, Invest NI has engaged with a number of Councils and other stakeholders to help them develop sales propositions which show the strengths and opportunities in their area. The agency has also developed an "FDI app" and a "District Council App" and is working with a number of Councils on developing this tool. The app will help present a snapshot of the benefits of setting up in Northern Ireland, and in specific areas, to potential investors.

Ultimately the investor will make the decision as to where they locate based on their specific business needs and having considered the options available to them. The requirements will vary depending on the nature of the project, but a company will typically look at existing investors in the same business sector; universities and colleges that offer courses relating to that sector; and suitable, available property. In addition, potential investors are often drawn to population centres that they consider will provide the appropriate number of suitably skilled potential employees. Therefore, a clear understanding and evidence of skill demographics for any region greatly assist a potential investor in considering a particular area.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the current scheme of works to improve and extend rural broadband in Newry and Armagh.

(AQW 40894/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project is being delivered in eight phases with an overall completion date of 31 December 2015. The project is progressing according to schedule and by 31 December 2014 just under 17,500 premises across Northern Ireland had benefitted from the improvements being delivered including almost 3,000 in the Newry and Armagh Constituency.

By project completion, it is anticipated that improvements will have been delivered for at least 45,000 premises across Northern Ireland resulting in the provision of basic wire-line broadband services of at least 2 Megabits per second in areas that previously had no service and improvements in the availability of superfast fixed-line broadband services (24 Megabits per second or higher) in areas where choice is poor or broadband speeds are low.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the response to AQW 27278/11-15.

(AQW 40896/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The table presented in response to AQW 27278/11-15 has been updated below to reflect the most recent 5 year period.

Invest NI Assistance Offered in North Antrim PCA (2009-10 to 2013-14)

Year	North Antrim (£m)	North Antrim as % of NI
2009-10	6.1	3.6
2010-11	6.0	5.7
2011-12	2.4	2.9
2012-13	7.4	5.9
2013-14	4.3	1.9

Note: Invest NI revises performance data on a regular basis to ensure that it reflects implemented projects; therefore, the data above may differ to previously published information.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the response to AQW 27106/11-15.

(AQW 40897/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Since the response to AQW 27106/11-15 was provided, Invest NI has put in place measures to allow it to report on actual jobs created for all its jobs related support. It is now able to provide jobs created statistics from 2011-12 onwards. The table below shows the number of jobs that Invest NI has helped to create as a result of its support for projects in North Antrim in each of the last three years.

PCA	2011-12	2012-13	2013-14
North Antrim	148	154	272

Information relating to job creation is commercially sensitive at business level while a project is still 'live'. In order to ensure that individual companies are not identifiable, Invest NI applies statistical disclosure controls, meaning that information is not released if there are less than 5 businesses included in the results for each area. As this is the case for North Antrim, Invest NI is not able to provide analysis by local and external ownership.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of major departmental infrastructural projects which have been abandoned, having been put out to tender; and to detail the expense incurred.

(AQW 40905/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not have major departmental infrastructure projects that have been abandoned having been put out to tender.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the role of InvestNI in the new tourism structures.

(AQW 41056/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The objective of the Hunter Review was to look at opportunities for greater alignment between Tourism Northern Ireland and Invest NI. The review highlights that there is already good cooperation between the two organisations, but points to the need to deepen the existing relationship. The impact on Invest NI is as follows:

- a Invest NI will continue to play an important role in supporting the development of the local tourism industry going forward through provision of business support services and the administration of accommodation grants;

- b Invest NI will work alongside Tourism NI to deliver a new economic development brand strategy to strengthen the competitive position of Northern Ireland through inward investment and tourism;
- c Consideration will be given to the potential role for Invest NI in the evaluation of major tourism projects and in the processing of tourism grant payments; and
- d Invest NI and Tourism Northern Ireland will take forward opportunities to share back office services and consider co-location when leases expire in 2016.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) how the new Tourism Growth Fund will operate; (ii) how much funding the Fund will oversee; and (iii) what finances councils will contribute.

(AQW 41057/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Hunter Report recommends the development of a Tourism Growth Fund jointly supported with the new Councils. I will work to establish such a Fund in the next budget period.

Development of the joint fund will be taken forward by the new Chief Executive and the new Chairman of Tourism Northern Ireland, in collaboration with the new super-councils when they are in place after March.

I look forward to their proposals, as we will then, of course, want to support any bid that they make to the Northern Ireland Executive to procure a joint tourism fund.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) how much her Department pays annually for Trade Union officials; (ii) how many officials this payment covers; and (iii) what is the cost of administering Trade Union's dues.

(AQW 41063/11-15)

Mrs Foster: (i.) In the 2013/14 financial year my Department paid £25,729 for Trade Union officials.

(ii.) This payment covers one full time equivalent member of staff.

(iii.) It is not possible to provide the cost of administering Trade Union dues as the information is not separately identifiable.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether Tourism Northern Ireland will be able to spend any of its budget in promoting Northern Ireland outside of Northern Ireland.

(AQW 41083/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Tourism Northern Ireland is responsible for marketing Northern Ireland as a tourism destination in Northern Ireland and The Republic of Ireland. Tourism Ireland is responsible for marketing the island of Ireland in Great Britain and Overseas.

The Savings Plan has proposed a reduction in marketing spend however Tourism NI will continue to maintain an important presence in the Republic of Ireland market with promotional activity designed to keep Northern Ireland front of mind with these visitors.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for a breakdown of projected costings associated with changing the name of the Northern Ireland Tourist Board.

(AQW 41110/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Tourism Northern Ireland will be exploring the most cost effective way to implement the name change.

This will involve some expenditure on design and printing (signs, stationery, website etc).

Tourism Northern Ireland will be looking at all options over the coming weeks.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the emissions targets in the Programme for Government 2011-15; and what steps her Department is taking to reduce emissions from space heating.

(AQW 41309/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The reduction of greenhouse gas emissions is a DOE PfG target.

As regards heating, my Department has contributed to this through the introduction and promotion of the Renewable Heat Incentive, (RHI), which provides support for both domestic and non-domestic customers to move to sustainable heat systems.

The primary objective for the Northern Ireland RHI is to increase the uptake of renewable heat to 10% by 2020 (baseline position of 1.7% in 2010). This target was included in the Strategic Energy Framework and an interim target of 4% renewable heat by 2015 is included in the Programme for Government.

My Department continues to support further provision of natural gas as the least polluting fossil fuel, within current licence areas and to the main towns in the West, which will contribute to meeting emissions targets.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Renewable Heat Incentive.

(AQW 41377/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Northern Ireland Renewable Heat Incentive (RHI) has been in place since November 2012 and has to date supported 258 commercial applications. On 9 December 2014, I announced the extension of the RHI to the domestic sector. Domestic customers who availed of support under the interim Renewable Heat Premium Payment (RHPP) will transfer across to the RHI. Some 1240 customers received support under the RHPP.

The phase 2 review of the non-domestic RHI which will see the extension of support to new technologies and the introduction of new tariffs will be taken forward early in 2015.

Department of the Environment

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 38685/11-15, to provide details on each of the court cases where this money was spent, including (i) the total legal costs of taking each of case; and (ii) the outcome of each case. (AQW 40377/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): The information held by the Department is not recorded in such a way as to allow identification of the legal costs accrued by each enforcement case with associated court action or the outcome of each case.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 39218/11-15, given the extent of landfilling which has taken place at this site, why no details of proposed levels or cross-sectional drawings of the extent of landfilling proposed was required before application K/2013/0072/F was approved; and how this accords with his Department's best practice and guidance on developing on sloping sites.

Mr Durkan: In determining the application my officials considered a submission which made reference to cut and fill operations with the import of materials. Upon investigation, officials determined that the import of materials in the limited manner undertaken was inherent to the application.

Officials have received detailed plans with the final topographical levels for the site shown.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment, if a public hire taxi passes a meter test and replaces the meter with private hire tariffs, what provision is in place to retest and reclassify the taxi.

(AQW 40890/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Only vehicles whose meters are tested and sealed by the Department with the regulated tariff can operate as Belfast Public Hire taxis.

Belfast Public Hire plated taxis are permitted to have dual tariffs programmed into their meters. The first tariff, the regulated fare, must be displayed when the driver is providing a public hire service. The secondary, lower, tariff can be used when the vehicle has been pre-booked and operating on a private hire basis.

Belfast Public Hire licence holders can apply to the Department for a Change of Hire on a Taxi Licence. This process can be completed using a V37 form which is available on NI Direct. As part of this process the licence holder must surrender the current licence plates and paper licence.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment (i) whether he is aware of the reports in the Irish News of the pollution caused in Lough Muckno, Lough Ross and the Fane River by fuel launderers in South Armagh; (ii) what steps the Rivers Agency has taken to clean the source in South Armagh; (iii) what is the cost to the public purse of this pollution; and (iv) to detail any discussions he has had with her counterpart in the Republic of Ireland on this matter.

(AQW 40953/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- i) I was made aware of this alleged incident following a report in the Irish Independent on 19 January 2015. An NIEA Water Quality Inspector was immediately deployed to the area in order to determine if there was an ongoing water pollution issue involving fuel laundering waste. From that visit and a further inspection carried out the next day, no evidence of water pollution was confirmed.
- ii) The Rivers Agency is not part of my remit; rather, it is within Minister O'Neill's Department for Agriculture and Rural Development.
- iii) I can advise that, since 2012, my Department, under the Flytipping Protocol, has been involved in the cleanup of 346 incidents of fuel laundering waste at a cost of just under £961,288. In addition, during the same time period, NIEA Water Quality Inspectors have responded to 312 such incidents. The cost of these investigations and remediation to NIEA, in that 3 year period has been a further approx £29,000.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment what has been the cost to Rivers Agency over the last ten years to clean rivers polluted by fuel launderers, broken down by (i) location; and (ii) the cost per incident.

(AQW 40954/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The criminal investigation of illegal fuel laundering is led by Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs, who deal with the disposal of any fuel laundered waste (FLW) that is discovered in association with illegal fuel laundering plant.

The majority of FLW is dumped indiscriminately in the countryside throughout Northern Ireland and this is dealt with by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA). Significant quantities of both solid and liquid hazardous wastes are produced during the fuel laundering process. As these cannot be disposed of legally, they are generally dumped at random around the countryside where it can pose a risk to the public and to the aquatic environment.

NIEA is responsible for investigating reports of water pollution, for regulating discharges to waterways and underground strata and for initiating enforcement action where appropriate, as defined under the terms of the Water (Northern Ireland) Order 1999. Consequently, NIEA Water Quality Inspectors are required to assess each instance where FLW is identified. Such incidents involving fuel laundering waste are usually reported to NIEA via the Water Pollution Hotline 0800 807060 or are discovered by NIEA staff in the course of their duties.

As this is a relatively recent issue, NIEA has only been recording this information in a readily accessible format for the last 3 years. This is presented in the Table attached, broken down by Council area and cost. These costs relate solely to the assessment and remediation of the risk to the aquatic environment.

A further £945,758 has been spent by the NIEA in clearing up fuel laundered waste in 3 years.

Table: Fuel Laundering Waste Incidents 2012 – 2014 by Location showing the associated costs.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the cost to his Department in the last ten years to clean sites discovered to have been used as fuel laundering plants, including (i) the council areas involved; (ii) the cost per incident; and (iii) whether any compensation for such incidents has been awarded by the courts.

(AQW 40988/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Her Majesty's Revenue and Customs (HMRC) are responsible for investigating fuel fraud including fuel laundering. As part of this work HMRC clean any sites that they uncover. Therefore HMRC hold the information on the council areas involved, cost per incident and whether any compensation has been awarded by the court.

In 2012 NIEA commenced a Flytipping Pilot in partnership with local councils. Currently 21 councils are members of the pilot. Under this pilot, NIEA took on the responsibility for clearing fuel laundered waste that had been dumped at locations remote from fuel laundering plants. A summary of the number of incidents and total cost per council area is included in the table below. NIEA is not aware of any compensation for such incidents being awarded by the courts.

Summary table of fuel laundered waste incident numbers and costs incurred by NIEA per council
(June 2012- 20 Jan 2015)

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the recommended procedure for the operation of the central planning telephone number, in terms of connecting callers to the planning officer they need to speak to; and why there has been incidents of operators refusing to do so.

(AQW 41073/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The central telephone system for Planning is operated by NI Direct. If a caller has a general query relating to a planning matter, the call agent will put the caller through to the Duty Planner in the relevant Area Office. If the caller wishes to speak to a Case Officer about a specific planning application, the call agent will log the caller's details on the relevant Area Office call log for response by the relevant Case Officer within 24 hours. If the caller is an elected representative, the call will be put through directly to the relevant Case Officer.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the number of listed church buildings in North Down.

(AQW 41082/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Based upon the 1974 ward boundaries – which are how the department holds such records – the total number of listed church buildings in the constituency is 24.

You will be aware, however, that there have been boundary changes since 1974, and as such the figures should not be taken as definitive, in relation to the current boundaries.

I attach, in response to your question

- 1 A list of the 24 church buildings that are Listed, their address and listing status.
- 2 A list of the 1974 electoral wards that were used to provide the detail in the above list.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 41094/11-15, why he will not answer this question.
(AQW 41147/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am unable to provide an answer to AQW 41094 as my Department does not hold this information. This is a matter for local councils.

I would therefore suggest that you redirect your enquiry to them.

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of the Environment whether he has any plans to move taxi licencing and tax enforcement powers to the new councils.
(AQW 41164/11-15)

Mr Durkan: In April 2013, the Executive reaffirmed the list of functions to transfer to councils in April 2015 and gave an undertaking that, in April 2016, the functions transferred should be reviewed, with a view to augmenting the package. The position relating to taxi licencing and enforcement powers will be considered as part of that review.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment (i) how much his Department pays annually for Trade Union officials; (ii) how many officials this payment covers; and (iii) what is the cost of administering Trade Union's dues.

Mr Durkan: My Department pays the salary costs of one DOE full time employee seconded to the Northern Ireland Public Service Alliance in relation to the Assistant Departmental Trade Union Side Secretary position. The cost for this position in 2013/14 was £31,304.

In addition, a number of DOE employees are Accredited Trade Union Representatives who spend time on union duties. Prior to 1 April 2014 and the introduction of an electronic time recording process no central record was held by the Department to capture the time spent by Accredited Trade Union Representatives on trade union business or to undertake trade union training. The application and approval for time off (facilities time) by Accredited Representatives to carry out a trade union business was recorded manually at local management level.

Trade Union dues are administered centrally through the NICS Payroll System. My Department pays an annual fee for HR Services including payroll administration. The cost of administering Trade Union dues is not separately identified in the fee.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment what action his Department (i) can take; or (ii) is currently taking to ensure that the odour, fly and dirt problems at the BIFFA Cottonmount Site are minimised and eradicated.
(AQW 41193/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Biffa Cottonmount landfill is regulated by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) under a waste permit. NIEA inspectors conduct sites inspections on a regular basis. If an amenity issue that is likely to cause annoyance is detected outside the site boundary, NIEA can take enforcement action in line with the NIEA Enforcement Policy. A range of enforcement measures are available including warning letter, enforcement notice, suspension notice and prosecution.

NIEA is currently working with the operator to address the issue of odour. Following a targeted NIEA odour survey in autumn 2014, the operator has been required to develop and implement a gas action plan, including site works to address odour issues. NIEA is currently monitoring the implementation of these actions.

NIEA has not received any complaints or observed any non-compliances in relation to flies or mud on the roads in the last 12 months.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 40281/11-15, when he expects the 'necessary legislative amendments' to be published.

(AQW 41252/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I refer the member to the answer I gave to AQW 40281/11-15, in which I noted that the removal of the provision is being taken forward in the context of the implementation of Continuous Insurance Enforcement (CIE).

Further details on the proposed changes are contained in my Department's 2014 consultation (<http://www.doeni.gov.uk/index/information/foi/recent-releases/publications-details.htm?docid=9774%20>) and the synopsis of responses (<http://www.doeni.gov.uk/index/information/foi/recent-releases/publications-details.htm?docid=9935>).

Officials in my Department are in discussion with Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency and Motor Insurance Bureau officials about a number of detailed operational matters, including amendments to IT systems to include Northern Ireland in the scope of CIE. The detailed timetable for bringing forward the regulations needed to implement and operate CIE will be subject to these matters being finalised.

I have instructed my officials to progress this work at an early date. The Environment Committee has asked for a briefing from my Department on CIE, and this will be arranged once the operational matters timetable are clear. Subject to any issues raised at the Committee briefing, I will bring forward the SL1s shortly thereafter.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment whether a cost analysis was completed in relation to displaying the Union Flag on Northern Ireland driving licences.

(AQW 41254/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As no change to the existing Northern Ireland driving licence was proposed, no requirement to complete a cost analysis arose.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment whether it was the Secretary of State for Transport that stopped the Union Flag being displayed on Northern Ireland driving licences.

(AQW 41256/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I refer the Member to the answer I gave to AQO 7373/11-15.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department suggested to the Secretary of State for Transport that there should be an option on Northern Ireland driving licence applications to opt in or out of displaying the Union Flag.

(AQW 41257/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I refer the member to the answer I gave to AQO 7373/11-15.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment whether driving licences are produced in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 41258/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I refer the member to the answer I gave to AQO 7373/11-15.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment what discussions he has had with the Minister for Regional Development regarding taxi licensing reform; and how the taxi licensing reform process will ensure that only wheelchair accessible taxis are permitted to use bus lanes.

(AQW 41374/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I met with Minister Kennedy to discuss taxi reform and the related issue of bus lanes on 17 December 2013. Whilst the taxi reform programme is within the remit of my Department, decisions in relation to which vehicles are permitted to use bus lanes are for Minister Kennedy.

I understand that Minister Kennedy is waiting until the completion of the legislative process specifying the new taxi licensing regime before he takes a final view on which taxis, if any, are allowed to travel in bus lanes.

At the meeting with Minister Kennedy I expressed my preference for only wheelchair accessible taxis being permitted to use bus lanes, as this will maintain the incentive for some drivers to purchase wheelchair accessible taxis. The Taxi Licensing Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2014 (SR 2014 No. 302) differentiate between wheelchair accessible and other taxis, thereby enabling this distinction to be made in DRD regulations regarding the use of bus lanes.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 40588/11-15, when the Service Level Agreement between the Driver and Vehicle Agency and the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency is next due for review.

(AQW 41491/11-15)

Mr Durkan: A review of the Service Level Agreement between the Driver & Vehicle Agency and the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency for the printing of driving licences is due to commence in March 2015.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much each Health and Social Care Trust has spent on their respective multi agency support teams since their inception.

(AQW 40661/11-15)

Mr Wells (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Expenditure by each Health and Social Care Trust on each of the five Multi Agency support teams in each year since their inception in 2007 to 31 March 2014 is set out in the table below:

	2013/14 £	2012/13 £	2011/12 £	2010/11 £	2009/10 £	2008/09 £	2007/08 £
Belfast Health & Social Care Trust (Children's Inter Disciplinary Schools Team-CIST)	811,608	737,167	574,459	661,750	687,446	893,366	546,027
Northern Health & Social Care Trust (Multi-Agency Support Team for Schools -MASTS)	949,324	1,012,985	1,009,012	928,813	906,007	913,330	557,039

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans he has to improve the response times for neurology appointments at the Ulster Hospital.

(AQW 40810/11-15)

Mr Wells: Waiting times for general neurology appointments at the Ulster Hospital now stand at 26 to 28 weeks for new patients.

The Health and Social Care (HSC) Board has put in place a regional group to agree medium to long terms plans for improved access to Neurology outpatient services.

The Board has also asked HSC Trusts to submit non recurrent plans for more immediate improvement and these plans are currently with the Board for consideration. However, the implementation of the plans is very much dependent on additional resources being available.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the process for systematic engagement with patients that was used during the recent consultation on the Individual Funding Requests process; and to detail who was invited to meet with officials or provide written submissions to the evaluation team.

(AQW 40819/11-15)

Mr Wells: There was no formal consultation on the Individual Funding (IFR) Request process. My predecessor asked the Department to evaluate whether the IFR process is meeting its objectives. That process is nearing completion and I am considering the initial findings of the evaluation.

During the course of the evaluation officials met a wide range of stakeholders including cancer patients and survivors, charities, political representatives and the pharmaceutical industry.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his Department's guidance to hospitals in the event that a significant number of doctors are absent due to illness at the same time at the same hospital.

(AQW 40820/11-15)

Mr Wells: It is the responsibility of individual Health and Social Care Trusts, as employers, to manage resources to ensure continuity of service provision. All Health and Social Care Trusts have emergency plans to deal with issues such as staff shortages.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline (i) the number of staff within his Department and each Health and Social Care Trust that earn over £100,000 per year; and (ii) the operational areas in which these personnel are engaged.

(AQW 40821/11-15)

Mr Wells: The table below details the number of staff in the Department and the five Health and Social Care Trusts who earn over £100,000. These have been split into the operational areas of medical and administrative.

	Number of medical staff earning over £100,000 per year	Number of administrative staff earning over £100,000 per year
Department of Health and Social Services and Public Safety	0	1
Belfast Health and Social Care Trust	369	3
Northern Health and Social Care Trust	144	1
Southern Health and Social Care Trust	128	1
South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust	133	1
Western Health and Social Care Trust	157	2

It should be noted that the information for the 5 Trusts in relation to administrative staff is based on 2013/14 figures; whereas the figures for medical staff are as at January 2015.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the procedures in place when a medical emergency or other event requiring immediate air ambulance transfer occurs and the contracted air ambulances are unavailable due to other ongoing emergencies or being out of service.

(AQW 40842/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Health and Social Care Board has a contract in place with Woodgate Aviation for the provision of an air ambulance/air transport service for the population of Northern Ireland. The service includes the provision of accompanying clinical and technical support appropriate to the needs of each individual patient. The contract requires that the service be available 24 hours a day, 365 days of the year to respond to patients transport needs. In the exceptional event that more than one emergency presents in a similar timeframe, Woodgate Aviation has the option to sub-contract with another provider as and when required. Any sub-contractual arrangements put in place must remain compliant with the contract between the HSC Board and Woodgate Aviation.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many medical emergencies, or other events, required immediate air ambulance transfer in the last twelve months; and how many were subject to delay due to air ambulances being unavailable.

(AQW 40843/11-15)

Mr Wells: During the last 12 months (1st January to 31st December 2014), the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) indicate that 413 journeys / transfers were made by air ambulance.

The HSCB indicated that it was not aware of any transfers being unduly delayed due to the air ambulance being unavailable.

Mr Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has sought to have any discussions with the Secretary of State for Health regarding the Francis Report.

(AQW 40845/11-15)

Mr Wells: My Department has not sought discussions with the Secretary of State regarding the Francis report.

Mr Wilson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has any plans to implement the findings of the Francis Report.

(AQW 40846/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Francis Report was commissioned to consider activity in an English NHS Trust. There are clearly lessons that can be learnt from the report findings in any jurisdiction. My Department has considered these findings as learning points and incorporates them, as appropriate, to inform policy development.

Following publication of the report of the Donaldson Review on 27th January 2015 I announced an intention that my Department would progress work to introduce a statutory Duty of Candour for Northern Ireland. The focus now is on actively considering the recommendations from the Donaldson Review which are out for public consultation ending on 30th April 2015.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why the percentage of patients first treated for cancer within 62 days following an urgent GP referral for suspect cancer decreased from 72.6 per cent in July 2014 to 64.5 per cent in September 2014; and why this is short of the target of 95 per cent.

(AQW 40848/11-15)

Mr Wells: I have been advised by the Health and Social Care Board that the reason for the deterioration in 62 day performance between July 2014 and September 2014 regionally, and in each Trust, was due to the strong focus on treating those patients who had breached the target and been waiting the longest. As more of the longest waiters, rather than patients waiting less than 62 days have been treated, performance against the target has fallen.

Provisional performance management information provided by the HSC Board indicates that the proportion of patients actively waiting longer than 62 days to be treated reduced from over 10% in August 2014 to 4.6% in October 2014. Overall, the percentage of those treated within 62 days following an urgent GP referral has also improved to 69% in October 2014 and in November 2014 it was 71% - bringing the regional performance for the period April 14 to October 14 to 72%.

The majority of those patients who are currently waiting beyond 62 days are waiting within the Urology speciality. Urology services across Northern Ireland remain very challenged and the Health and Social Care Board is leading a service improvement initiative across all Trusts to improve the position.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the differing rates of success of cancer treatment and diagnosis in each Health and Social Care Board.

(AQW 40849/11-15)

Mr Wells: Age-standardised relative survival is an estimate of cancer patient survival that adjusts for both the background mortality rates and the population age-structure that varies between geographical areas. This is an internationally agreed standard which allows for meaningful comparison of performance.

Northern Ireland relative cancer survival rates data indicates the Health and Social Care Trust of residence of patients treated. The Trust of residence is not necessarily the Trust where the patients received most, or all, of their cancer treatment. Patients across Northern Ireland often have their surgical operations and procedures carried out in the Cancer Centre at the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust where specialised services are located.

In Northern Ireland there is no consistent evidence across the main cancer sites that there are survival differences between patients resident in the different Trusts.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether a shortage of staff or beds in Type 1 Emergency Care Departments has been identified as a problem in any hospital.

(AQW 40851/11-15)

Mr Wells: The management of bed capacity in hospitals is not confined to the Emergency Department as this concerns the entire system achieving a balance between demand and availability of beds for patients which can fluctuate due to periodic pressures arising from increased emergency admissions. This issue was identified by the RQIA in its report of the review of unscheduled care in the Belfast Trust and related regional considerations published in June 2014. My Department's Unscheduled Care Task Group is working with the HSC Trusts to address this issue by making improvements to the management of patient flow

There remain however regional and national challenges in the recruitment of middle grade doctors for Emergency Departments, and HSC Trusts working with professional bodies and local colleagues continue to focus on the recruitment and retention of staff.

I look to the HSCB and HSC Trusts to ensure that any ongoing workforce issues are appropriately managed and that patients can continue to receive safe and effective care in a timely fashion.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the number; and (ii) estimated value of items disposed by each Health and Social Care Trust in accordance with their equipment disposal policy, in each of the last three years.

(AQW 40867/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Department of Health and Social Services does not hold the information requested however Health and Social Care Trusts were asked to provide the information and the Trust responses are detailed in the table at Annex A.

Annex A: Number of items of Capital Equipment Assets disposed of and Estimated Net Book Values

HSC Trust	Year	Number of Items	Estimated Net Book Value

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the equipment disposal policy utilised by each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 40868/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Department of Health and Social Services does not hold information centrally relating to the operational policies of individual Health and Social Care Trusts. The Health and Social Care Trusts were asked to submit details on equipment disposal policies and the Trust responses are summarised in Annex A with the relevant policies attached in Annex's B to I.

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what efforts are being made to ensure there are sufficient carers in the community in East Londonderry to deal with an increase in care packages.

(AQW 40921/11-15)

Mr Wells: Health and Social Care Trusts are undertaking a range of measures, within available resources, to ensure the availability of care workers. These measures include, within the Western Trust, the reform of the in-house homecare service to create teams of home carers alongside reforms to the procurement of independent sector domiciliary care. The Northern Trust, which also covers part of the East Londonderry area, has advised that it has recently carried out a recruitment drive to secure its homecare workforce and has also increased the number of independent sector providers it contracts with.

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why the Oncotype DX test is no longer being offered in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 40943/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) recognises the potential benefit of Oncotype DX testing when used in conjunction with existing decision making protocols to inform the relative merits of chemotherapy among patients who are assessed as being at intermediate risk.

Pending a commissioning decision on Oncotype DX and its introduction, the HSCB issued advice to Health and Social Care Trusts in 2013 that, where clinically indicated, they could provide the test, subject to costs being met from within Trust baselines.

The HSCB have now formally considered the commissioning position and the priority of this NICE advice relative to other service commissioning priorities.

Consistent with the approach on other NICE advice, the HSCB would wish to move towards commissioning the test for those patients for whom it is clinically appropriate.

However, at this time there are other key areas prioritised for development, including other NICE guidance for which the necessary resources have yet to be identified.

In this context the HSCB is not in a position to commission the Oncotype DX test during 2014/15. The timing of the introduction of this service – whether in 2015/16 or beyond – will be dependent on the availability of resources for service development.

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given that in early 2014 the Oncotype DX test was due to be rolled out across all Health and Social Care Trusts, whether this is no longer the case despite the test being recommended as clinically and cost effective by the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence in September 2013.

(AQW 40945/11-15)

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of whether the net resource impact of the Oncotype DX test shows that it is cost effective as the test will be absorbed by future reduced chemotherapy costs.

(AQW 40947/11-15)

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to the job vacancy at Lagan Valley Hospital for a Dietetic Assistant which opened in 2014, to detail (i) the number of applicants; (ii) the number of successful applicants; (iii) when successful applicants appointment started; and (iv) the total cost of the recruitment competition.

(AQW 40970/11-15)

Mr Wells: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has advised my Department that due to financial pressures this post has been put on hold. The total costs are unavailable.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when paediatric cardiac services will move to Dublin; and to outline the relocation procedure.

(AQW 40972/11-15)

Mr Wells: My Department's consultation on the International Working Group's recommended all-island Congenital Cardiac Services model ended on 23 January 2015. I intend to make an announcement, before the end of this month.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, for an update on the Cancer Focus NI campaign, following his announcement in September 2014.

(AQW 40973/11-15)

Mr Wells: I assume that the Member is referring to the evaluation of the Individual Funding Request process for specialist drugs. My Department has reported to me on the initial findings of the evaluation and further work is now being carried out. I will update the Assembly as soon as possible on the outcome once I have considered the final evaluation report.

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the circumstances required and procedures followed when an ambulance is dispatched.

(AQW 40984/11-15)

Mr Wells: It is assumed these questions refer to Accident and Emergency (A&E) ambulances and Rapid Response Vehicles (RRVs).

A&E ambulances and RRVs operate across the whole of Northern Ireland from ambulance station and deployment points. They are dispatched on receipt of a 999 call, when the information necessary to initiate dispatch successfully has been ascertained.

A&E ambulances are targeted for urgent response to high priority, clinically urgent calls, typically Category A (potentially immediately life-threatening) and Category B (serious but not immediately life threatening); however, they are also dispatched to lower priority calls to provide transportation to hospital for patients.

Post-dispatch the control dispatch officer monitors progress and acts to address issues arising. Relevant additional information derived from further questioning of the caller is relayed to the attending ambulance resource. The A&E ambulance may be stood down from a call if the clinical urgency of the call is reduced as a result of further interrogation of the call-taker or another resource offers a better response option. The A&E ambulance may be reallocated to a different, higher priority call post-dispatch at the discretion of the ambulance control dispatch officer.

RRVs are targeted for urgent response to high priority, clinically urgent calls, typically Categories A and B; however, they may also be dispatched to lower priority calls if resources permit and the call would benefit from paramedic assistance.

As with A&E ambulances, the control dispatch officer monitors progress post-dispatch and acts to address issues arising or relay relevant additional information. The RRV may be stood down from a call if the clinical urgency of the call is reduced as a result of further interrogation of the call-taker or another resource offers a better response option and may be reallocated to a different, higher priority call post-dispatch at the discretion of the ambulance control dispatch officer. The RRV may advise ambulance control to stand down A&E ambulance transport or request non-emergency ambulance transport if, following patient assessment and engagement, the circumstances warrant this.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the estimated annual cost savings should the Western Health and Social Care Trust proceed with reduced services in connection with The Cottages, Glendermot Road in Londonderry.

(AQW 41014/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Western HSC Trust have informed me that the current budget for the Cottages Children's respite on Glendermot Road is £396,324 however, spending on the facility is presently some £200,000 in excess of this budget.

The Trust's ongoing review of this service seeks both to address this deficit and remodel provision to ensure that respite services are delivered in a way which meets current needs in the most effective way possible. Subject to the outcome of this work, the Trust anticipates that respite services will be delivered within the funding available in 2015/16.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps are being taken to reduce the number of patients waiting more than four hours at Emergency Departments, broken down by hospital.

(AQW 41015/11-15)

Mr Wells: The regional Unscheduled Care Task Group has been set the clear aim of eliminating all avoidable 12-hour emergency department waiting time breaches from this winter onwards and, over the next 18 months, making significant progress towards achieving the 4-hours waiting time standard.

My Written Statement to the Assembly on 19 November 2014 detailed the work that the task group has undertaken, including improvement work on the design and implementation of more effective patient pathways through a whole system approach, including GPs, the Ambulance Service, community care teams and staff and processes within acute hospitals, with the aim of improving patient flow within and across hospitals to alleviate the pressures on Emergency Departments.

I have allocated £5 million of additional funding to the HSC this winter and a further £750,000 has been made available from the Health and Social Care Board. This funding has been used to provide additional consultants, AHP and pharmacy staff, and Hospital Ambulance Liaison Officers across the HSC, as well as to support Trusts in implementing measures to improve patient flow and to expand capacity, as required, over the winter period.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average percentages of people waiting more than four hours at Emergency Departments in each Acute Hospital in the last three months.

(AQW 41016/11-15)

Mr Wells: Information on waiting times for new and unplanned review attendances at emergency care departments is released on a monthly basis, and available to view or download from:

<http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/statistics/hospital/waitingtimes/waitingtimes-emergency.htm>

The percentage of attendances waiting longer than 4 hours at each emergency care department is detailed in the table below, for the three month period 1st October – 31st December 2014.

Emergency Care Department	Percentage Waiting Over 4 Hours (October to December 2014)
Mater	29.1%
Royal Victoria	32.9%
RBHSC	8.9%
Antrim Area	34.4%
Whiteabbey	0.1%
Mid Ulster	0.1%

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 40347/11-15, how many times an in-patient, who has become a threat to staff or other in-patients, has been removed from the premises by hospital security staff or the PSNI, in each Northern Health and Social Care Trust hospital in each of the last three years.

(AQW 41017/11-15)

Mr Wells: There have been 12 in-patients removed by the PSNI from Northern Health and Social Care Hospitals in the last 3 years. The figures are broken down as follows:

Year	Hospital	No. of Patients Removed
2012	Antrim Area Hospital	1
	Holywell Hospital	2
2013	Antrim Area Hospital	1
	Holywell Hospital	2
2014	Antrim Area Hospital	3
	Causeway Hospital	1
	Holywell Hospital	1
	Ross Thompson	1

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 40347/11-15, what action is taken when an in-patient who becomes a threat to staff or other in-patients cannot be removed from the premises by hospital security staff or the PSNI, due to medical reasons.

(AQW 41018/11-15)

Mr Wells: HSC Trusts adopt a risk based approach to in-patients who are deemed to be a threat to staff or other in-patients and who cannot be removed from the hospital premises due to medical reasons. There can be physiological and psychological reasons as to why a patient may become threatening to staff and these would require investigation and care/treatment.

This risk based approach involves a range of measures which Trusts can implement such as:-

- moving the patient who is deemed to be a threat to a secure room;
- assessment of the patient by a senior doctor/consultant on duty, and if necessary the patient can be sedated under the Trust's rapid tranquilisation and safe sedation protocol;
- one to one nursing care where specialist psychological treatment is required;
- where possible, security staff will provide dedicated security cover for the ward to ensure the safety of other patients, staff and visitors;
- where possible security staff/PSNI will remain with the patient until the threat de-escalates.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, since 2008 and in real terms at 2013/14 prices, to detail (i) the amount the Health Service has spent per head of the population; and (ii) the amount spent on social services per head of the population; and (iii) how these figures compare with other regions of the UK.

(AQW 41030/11-15)

Mr Wells: In the complex area of health and social care, high-level benchmarking of expenditure needs to be approached with caution. For example, research shows that the relative need for health and social care spending in NI is greater than the other UK regions, with professional estimates ranging from a minimum of 9% to as much as 17%. Also, in other parts of the UK more people pay for their own health and social care, displacing public spending.

The amount spent per head of population for NI and the other UK regions is summarised in the following table:

UK Health Services Expenditure per Head (£: 2013/14 prices)

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the engagement his Department has had with the Department for Social Development to address the problems faced by homeless people accessing healthcare providers.

(AQW 41040/11-15)

Mr Wells: Until 2014, this Department was represented on the PSI Homelessness Partnership chaired by the Department of Social Development (DSD) which were set up to take forward the DSD strategy on homelessness. This Department has also participated in a number of engagements with DSD, Voluntary sector and HSC Trusts to consider how the health and well being of people who are homeless could be improved and will continue to engage with DSD as necessary.

In 2012, the Public Health Agency set up a 'Regional Working Group on Health and Homelessness' to contribute to the implementation of the homelessness strategy. The purpose of this group is to have a particular focus to health and wellbeing. This work is ongoing.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the bids his Department submitted to the change fund for the 2015/16 budget.

(AQW 41050/11-15)

Mr Wells: Details of the Change Fund bids submitted by my Department are detailed in my published response to AQW 40296/11-15, (6 January 2015).

Total funding of £4m from the Change Fund has been provided in the 2015/16 Final Budget for the following projects:

Proposal	Description
Project ECHO NI (Extension for Community Healthcare Outcomes)	The mission of Project ECHO is to expand the capacity to provide best practice care for common and complex diseases in rural and underserved areas and to monitor outcomes.
Acute Hospital Outpatients Modernisation	The objectives of the project are to modernise outpatient service delivery models and pathways in order to e.g.:- <ul style="list-style-type: none"> ■ Reduce waiting times for new and review appointments; ■ Reduce Hospital cancellations; ■ Reduce DNA rates; and ■ Reduce the number of face to face appointments required.
RAID (Rapid Assessment Interface Discharge)	With increasing societal levels of mental ill health, dementia and substance abuse, the RAID model provides the capacity to impact on all of these. It has been demonstrated that RAID can contribute to efficiency and cost avoidance in the context of growing pressures on health and social care budgets.
Supporting Medicines Optimisation	This includes a regional model for medicines optimisation in older people, progressing the SBRI initiative and development of a regional innovation hub.
All Island Congenital Cardiac Service Model	This involves commissioning surgical services on the island rather than in GB. Longer term health benefits include improved waiting times, emergency transfers and patient experience.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the potential impact the Voluntary Exit Scheme on Health Service staff and provision.

(AQW 41051/11-15)

Mr Wells: My priority is always to protect the front line staff in the Health Service and due regard will be paid to the need for service provision. As a Voluntary Exit Scheme has still to be drawn up I cannot comment any further at this stage on the potential impact this scheme will have on the Health Service.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what quality checks are completed on meals delivered to older people by Health and Social Care Trusts.

Mr Wells: All producers and providers of community meals are subject to a range quality checks in line with current food & health and safety legislation. The overriding quality governance framework is contained within the contract held by Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts with the various Community Meals Providers. The contract should include specific quality requirements regarding clear written statements of practice on a number of elements of the production, delivery and availability of the Community Meals Service.

HSC Trusts must ensure that the nutritional content and standard of the Community Meals Service is at an appropriate level in order to suitably and safely meet individuals assessed care needs.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether staff from the administration block at Bangor Health Centre will move to Bangor Hospital.

(AQW 41093/11-15)

Mr Wells: I refer the member to the answer I provided to AQW 41092/11-15.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will make High Dose Rate Brachytherapy available to people with prostate cancer.

(AQW 41097/11-15)

Mr Wells: I would like to see new and innovative radiotherapy treatments commissioned as soon as practical. The Health and Social Care Board is currently assessing a business case for high dose rate brachytherapy to complement the low dose rate service that has been in place since 2010. The timing of the introduction of this service will be dependent on competing priorities and the availability of resources for service developments.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will hold discussions with HMRC to assist in the Save a Life at 16 campaign, whereby information about the bone marrow register might be included on young people's National Insurance details when provided to them at the age of 16 years.

Mr Wells: I am sympathetic to the Anthony Nolan campaign to increase the number of young people on their bone marrow register; however decisions on the appropriateness of including information about the bone marrow register along with young people's National Insurance numbers, are a matter for HM Revenue and Customs. I understand that HMRC is already aware of this campaign, having discussed it with the Anthony Nolan Trust.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many Multiple Sclerosis patients are waiting to begin Tysabri treatment in each Health and Social Care Trust; and how many weeks each patient has been waiting for the treatment.

(AQW 41116/11-15)

Mr Wells: There are several different disease modifying drugs licensed for MS. Patients who meet the criteria are placed on a waiting list for NICE recommended disease modifying therapies rather than a specific product. Once the patient is ready to start treatment, they will be given information about the drugs available and discuss with their clinician which is the most appropriate for them.

At 31st December 2014, there were 29 people actively waiting for treatment for NICE recommended therapies for MS in Northern Ireland, all of whom were waiting less than 13 weeks. A breakdown of these by Trust of Residence is given below.

Trust of Residence	Number of Patients Waiting less than 13 weeks
Belfast Trust	6
Northern Trust	4
South Eastern Trust	6
Southern Trust	5
Western Trust	8
Total	29

At 31st December 2014, there were 22 people receiving Tysabri treatment in the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust, and 20 people receiving Tysabri treatment in the Western Health and Social Care Trust.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) what eating disorder services are currently offered to patients; (ii) whether he has any plans to merge all eating disorder services within a single regional unit; and (iii) whether he would consider the Downshire site in Downpatrick as a potential location for a single eating disorder unit.

(AQW 41119/11-15)

Mr Wells:

- (i) Eating Disorder Services are provided through a stepped care approach which ranges from early detection and intervention, to community-based treatment, to specialist inpatient provision.

Community-based Specialist Eating Disorder Services are available across all five HSC Trusts (with Belfast Trust providing services for the South Eastern Trust) for both adults and children and young people.

Inpatient treatment for adults with an eating disorder is facilitated in existing hospitals with in-reach support provided by specialist community-based eating disorder teams. This ensures a continuum of care when patients are discharged.

Inpatient care for children and adolescents with eating disorders is usually provided at Beechcroft, the Regional Child and Adolescent Mental Health Inpatient Unit. If the patient's condition is primarily physical, clinicians may decide that the best place for treatment is an acute hospital setting.

If a patient requires more intense specialist treatment for anorexia, Trusts can access beds in England, Scotland and Ireland through the Extra Contractual Referral (ECR) process.

- (ii) & (iii) There are currently no plans for a single regional eating disorders unit.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 40038/11-15, whether his Department is actively pursuing alternatives to litigation proceedings for people who feel they have been wrongly treated by the Health Service.

(AQW 41185/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Department is committed to delivering safe, high quality health and social care to all patients and clients in Northern Ireland with a wide range of measures already in place to ensure that services are delivered in a safe and effective manner.

The Department is currently reviewing a range of early developmental options in relation to the clinical negligence settlement management process within the HSC, to ensure the current settlement strategy is suitable for the contemporary HSC environment.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 40293/11-15, in relation to the business plan, for his assessment of the economic benefit of the establishment of such a centre.

(AQW 41186/11-15)

Mr Wells: Consideration of the establishment of a genomic medicine centre in Northern Ireland is at its early stages and a business plan is being developed. When this has been finalised I will be in a position to assess the economic benefit of such a centre subject to available funding.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why the Director of Human Resources and Corporate Affairs of the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has not replied to my correspondence dated 17 April 2014, despite four reminders.

(AQW 41188/11-15)

Mr Wells: Health and Social Care Trusts are responsible for their own correspondence management. The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has advised me that a reply was forwarded to you on 21 January 2015.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why there is ongoing delay in the publication of the O'Hara report on the Hyponatraemic issue; and whether his Department has received the report, in any form; and, if so, when.

(AQW 41190/11-15)

Mr Wells: Mr Justice O'Hara is working diligently to complete his report and as such, my Department has not received the report in any form.

Completing the report is a time consuming and demanding task, particularly in light of the significant volume of evidence presented to and generated by the Inquiry. Notwithstanding this, Mr O'Hara has advised that he is aiming for the earliest possible publication date.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether people who require to have meals cooked for them will continue to receive the service in the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 41218/11-15)

Mr Wells: The South Eastern HSC Trust have advised me that all service users who have been assessed as requiring assistance with the heating and serving of their meal will continue to receive this service from the Trust. The new service will have no impact on this provision.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the number of elderly or vulnerable residents currently in receipt of daily meals from the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust compares with (i) 2014; and (ii) 2010.

(AQW 41223/11-15)

Mr Wells: Information on meals services in the South Eastern Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust is published annually in Statistics on Community Care for Adults in Northern Ireland. The latest available figure is for the position as at 31 March 2014 which can be found in Table 1 below, along with that for 2010.

Table 1. Number of persons aged 65 & over receiving a meals on wheels service in the South Eastern HSC Trust.

Date	Persons aged 65 & over receiving a meals on wheels service
31 March 2014	356
31 March 2010	527

Information on the number of people who require meals to be prepared for them is not available.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there are plans to restore temporary cut backs to domiciliary care in the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust in 2015/16.

(AQW 41228/11-15)

Mr Wells: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust advise that it has not implemented temporary cut backs to domiciliary care packages. The Trust continues to review care packages on an ongoing basis to ensure that levels of support match the assessed eligible needs of service users.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 40630/11-15, when the building will be vacated and sealed and an application for planning permission submitted.

(AQW 41240/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Northern Health and Social Care (HSC) Trust anticipates that Rathmoyle will be vacated by the end of February 2015.

An application for planning permission will be taken forward by APEX Housing Association. The Northern HSC Trust is continuing to work with APEX to progress the design to the point of making the application.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on timeline for the North Wing development at Altnagelvin Hospital.

(AQW 41253/11-15)

Mr Wells: The detailed design work and tender preparation are progressing well and it is currently planned to award the contract and commence construction on site by late Summer/early Autumn 2015.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to reduce inequalities in (i) cervical screening uptake; and (ii) HPV vaccination rates.

(AQW 41282/11-15)

Mr Wells: There are 483,000 women in Northern Ireland who are eligible to participate in the cervical screening programme, and 77% of these have had a smear test in the last 5 years. As almost a quarter of women still do not attend for cervical screening raising public awareness of cervical cancer prevention is important. The Public Health Agency (PHA) has undertaken work to explore how potential inequalities in the uptake and coverage of all cancer screening programmes can be addressed. The PHA developed a four year 'Informed Choice Action Plan' (2012-15) which provides a coordinated approach to promote informed choice of the three cancer screening programmes. This has included working with the Women's Resource Development Agency (WRDA) to deliver a peer facilitator programme to educate and raise awareness of breast, cervical and bowel cancer screening with community groups. This focuses on the Belfast and South Eastern Trust areas, targeted at areas of social deprivation; however a tendering process is now being progressed to roll out this model to the whole of Northern Ireland. The PHA also works with other voluntary and community groups to develop supporting resources for cancer screening programmes in various formats, for example audio format and Braille, in order to provide informed advice, improve patient accessibility and experience of screening. The PHA has also recently commissioned focus group work with non-attenders for cervical screening to be completed by end March 2015 to better understand the barriers to participation and identify any actions which can be taken to overcome these.

National Cervical Cancer Prevention Week is held in January and Cervical Screening Awareness week in June each year and the PHA use these key times as an opportunity to make women aware of the symptoms of cervical cancer and promote the importance of women attending for cervical screening through local media releases and activities. In January 2015 to coincide with this year's National Cervical Cancer Prevention week the PHA launched a new video on their website which is aimed at women attending for a smear for the first time. It explains the screening process and seeks to reassure them about some of the issues which may make them anxious to attend. GPs are being asked to promote the video within their practices.

The HPV vaccination programme, aimed at reducing the cervical cancer rate, was introduced across the UK in 2008. The vaccination programme has been very successful to date and the latest available uptake data show that by June 2014 Northern Ireland had achieved an average uptake of 91.3% for a completed course of the vaccine. This compares favourably with the average uptake rate achieved across the UK. Uptake of the HPV vaccination programme across each of the Trusts is closely monitored by the PHA and appropriate action taken to ensure the high uptake rate is maintained.

In Northern Ireland the vaccine is routinely offered, via school nursing teams, to all girls in year 9. A mop-up of any girls in year 10 who missed all or some of their injections is also completed at the same time by the school nursing teams. In addition, any girls who for whatever reason missed out on all or some of the injections while in years 9 and 10, can receive the vaccine via their GP, on request, up to the age of 18 years.

It is important to note that the HPV vaccine does not protect against all types of HPV, so it is not guaranteed to prevent cervical cancer. This is why regular cervical screening continues to play an important role in detecting potentially cancerous cell changes in the cervix.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what actions he is taking to increase cervical screening rates in Northern Ireland, in particular the areas which fall below the national average for cervical screening. (AQW 41283/11-15)

This has included working with the Women's Resource Development Agency (WRDA) to deliver a peer facilitator programme to educate and raise awareness of breast, cervical and bowel cancer screening with community groups. This focuses on the Belfast and South Eastern Trust areas, targeted at areas of social deprivation; however a tendering process is now being progressed to roll out this model to the whole of Northern Ireland. The PHA also works with other voluntary and community groups to develop supporting resources for cancer screening programmes in various formats, for example audio format and Braille, in order to provide informed advice, improve patient accessibility and experience of screening. The PHA has also recently commissioned focus group work with non-attenders for cervical screening to be completed by end March 2015 to better understand the barriers to participation and identify any actions which can be taken to overcome these.

National Cervical Cancer Prevention Week is held in January and Cervical Screening Awareness week in June each year and the PHA use these key times as an opportunity to make women aware of the symptoms of cervical cancer and promote the importance of women attending for cervical screening through local media releases and activities. In January 2015 to coincide with this year's National Cervical Cancer Prevention week the PHA launched a new video on their website which is aimed at women attending for a smear for the first time. It explains the screening process and seeks to reassure them about some of the issues which may make them anxious to attend. GPs are being asked to promote the video within their practices.

The HPV vaccination programme, aimed at reducing the cervical cancer rate, was introduced across the UK in 2008. The vaccination programme has been very successful to date and the latest available uptake data show that by June 2014 Northern Ireland had achieved an average uptake of 91.3% for a completed course of the vaccine. This compares favourably with the average uptake rate achieved across the UK. Uptake of the HPV vaccination programme across each of the Trusts is closely monitored by the PHA and appropriate action taken to ensure the high uptake rate is maintained.

In Northern Ireland the vaccine is routinely offered, via school nursing teams, to all girls in year 9. A mop-up of any girls in year 10 who missed all or some of their injections is also completed at the same time by the school nursing teams. In addition, any girls who for whatever reason missed out on all or some of the injections while in years 9 and 10, can receive the vaccine via their GP, on request, up to the age of 18 years.

It is important to note that the HPV vaccine does not protect against all types of HPV, so it is not guaranteed to prevent cervical cancer. This is why regular cervical screening continues to play an important role in detecting potentially cancerous cell changes in the cervix.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures have been put in place to future-proof coronary care at Downe Hospital following the recent amalgamation of these services.

(AQW 41290/11-15)

Mr Wells: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust is responsible for the delivery of services at Downe Hospital. The Trust has advised that whilst the location for the delivery of cardiology services at the hospital has changed, this service continues to be provided in the Downe.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 40378/11-15, whether his Department does not, or cannot, obtain access to the detail of the dates when the 13 applications for adoption from same-sex couples were received.

(AQW 41297/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Health and Social Care Trusts have advised that between December 2013 and December 2014, a total of 10 applications to adopt from same-sex couples have been received. The actual dates on which these applications were received are provided in the table below.

Applications from Civil partners	Dates Received	Applications from unmarried same sex couples	Dates Received
4	i) 05/12/13 ii) 06/01/14 iii) 02/04/14 iv) 07/11/14	6	i) 04/12/13 ii) 18/04/14 ii) 14/05/14 iv) 01/06/14 v) 05/06/14 vi) 11/12/14

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action his Department has taken to ensure that the quality standards for audiology services are being implemented.

(AQW 41317/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Health and Social Care Board and Health and Social Care Trusts (HSCTs) adopted the Adult Quality Standards for Audiology Services in 2013 to develop a process of measurable service improvement across Northern Ireland.

The implementation of the Adult Quality Standards by HSCTs was expected to take 3 years with improvements initially focussing on the quality of the patient experience; the development of improved pathways; and more efficient ways of delivering care. This has also included effective triage and a straight to diagnostic test to help deliver streamlined pathways. The pace of implementation has been slower than expected, due to a number of factors; most significantly recruitment and retention issues in respect of audiology staff. However, HSCTs remain fully committed to the implementation process.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the savings that can be attributed to the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust's decision to reduce the delivery of frozen meals from daily to fortnightly.
(AQW 41321/11-15)

Mr Wells: The South Eastern Trust estimates that the new contract will reduce expenditure by approximately £100,000 per year and by up to £500,000 over the life of the contract.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans his Department has in place, in conjunction with the Department for Regional Development, to provide additional, regular public transport to the new Local Enhanced Hospital in Omagh.
(AQW 41324/11-15)

Mr Wells: This is a matter for the Western Health and Social Care Trust to decide. The Trust is currently working on a travel plan for the new Omagh Enhanced Local Hospital facility. This will include working with Translink on the bus service.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the rates of prostate cancer, broken down by constituency.
(AQW 41340/11-15)

Mr Wells: During the five year period from 2008 to 2012, the European age standardised¹ prostate cancer incidence rate was 168.2 per 100,000 persons in Northern Ireland, broken down by parliamentary constituency below:

Parliamentary Constituency	2008-12 Prostate Cancer Age Standardised Incidence Rate (Confidence Interval) ²
	Rate	Confidence Interval
Belfast East	150.4	(131.5,169.3)
Belfast North	175.4	(155.2,195.6)

- 1 Age standardisation improves comparability between geographic areas and time periods with varying age distributions. Incidence rates provided have been directly standardised to the 2013 European Standard Population.
- 2 Standardisation introduces a degree of uncertainty around resultant estimates. This is quantified in confidence intervals, where there is a 95% chance that the true value lies between these values.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether Health and Social Care Trusts accept private healthcare diagnosis for adults with autism; and what support and treatment is available following a diagnosis.
(AQW 41412/11-15)

Mr Wells: In line with the Regional Health and Social Care Board Adult Autism Care Pathway, HSC Trusts are required to undertake an assessment of all adults referred to them. The pathway advises that "Where a person presents with a diagnosis from an independent sector diagnostician or has a historic diagnosis, the diagnosis should be in keeping with the regional pathway diagnostic standards and those outlined in NICE Guideline 142". In practice, this means that Trusts will seek consent in order to have any documentation about previous diagnosis shared with the assessing practitioner, who will in turn reflect on the findings and consider these as part of the assessment.

HSC Trusts' Adult Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) services are small teams and rely on a wide range of health and social services to address the needs of Adults with ASD. In general, all Trusts provide post diagnostic education/counselling, support with psychological needs, occupational therapy, mental health care and social/lifestyle support. Care and support is either offered directly by the Adult ASD Team and/or from other Health and Social Care Services, including support from ASD specific community and voluntary providers.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how would a referral for adults with autism be handled, should a specialist psychologist be unavailable to conduct an assessment.

(AQW 41413/11-15)

Mr Wells: Referrals for Adult Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD) services are managed in line with the Adult ASD Care Pathway. Adult ASD services are multidisciplinary teams and therefore an assessment may be conducted by a range of professionals. Most Adult ASD Teams across the Health and Social Care Trusts are staffed by psychologists, but due to limited resources there are only a small number in each team. Whilst every effort is made to ensure that the appropriate professional is available, if a psychologist is required for the assessment but is unavailable, it is policy to either identify another psychologist to undertake the assessment or to reschedule the appointment. The person referred will be kept informed and be supported by the Trust ASD team with any other needs that they might have.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in light of the publication of Sir Liam Donaldson's review, whether he will increase funding to implement the Transforming Your Care plan in 2015/16.

(AQW 41446/11-15)

Mr Wells: In line with other Departments, the final budget for 2015/16 is exceptionally challenging for my Department. Even if significant savings of some £164m are achieved, my Department will be unable to fund essential service developments including investments in elective care; unscheduled care; normative nursing levels; public health initiatives; NICE drugs and specialist services; mental health and learning disability; and transitional funding for Transforming Your Care (TYC).

Work is ongoing with the Trusts, HSCB and other arms length bodies to clarify the implications of the final budget, develop balanced financial plans and to put in place a Commissioning Plan which delivers, as far as possible, the department's priorities – including TYC.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people who have a long-term, or chronic, condition who are currently enrolled in a specialist chronic condition management programme.

(AQW 41486/11-15)

Mr Wells: The information requested is not available and could only be provided at disproportionate costs. Information is however available on the number of participants who availed of a patient education / self management programme in 2012/13.

In 2012/13, 11,531 participants availed of a patient education / self management programme.

This information can be found published online at the following web address: http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/patient_education_self_management_-_regional_summary_2012-13.pdf

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update of the Early Intervention Service for Derry as part of the Early Intervention Transformation service.

(AQW 41553/11-15)

Mr Wells: Under the Early Intervention Transformation Programme, five Early Intervention Services (EIS) will be established in specific locations across all five Health and Social Care Trust areas over a three year period. Each will be delivered under contract by the community and voluntary sector. The establishment of one service per Trust area will enable the model to be tested and outcomes demonstrated. It is intended to undertake quarterly monitoring of outcomes and share the results with Commissioners of early intervention services.

The actual location of each EIS will be decided by the Outcomes Group for the area. Each decision will be subject to equality impact screening and assessment, where required. In the Western Health and Social Care Trust area, the location of the EIS will be decided by the Western Outcomes Group, which is a partnership of statutory, voluntary and community sectors organisations delivering services to children, young people and families in that area. The EIS will be implemented in conjunction with the Family Support Hub network and will work closely with the local Family Support Hub.

The competitive process for the EIS will be led by the Public Health Agency and is likely to commence in Spring 2015. All five EIS are expected to be operational from Summer 2015.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when the review on Individual Funding Requests will be published.

(AQW 41557/11-15)

Mr Wells: I plan to release the key findings of the evaluation of the IFR process shortly.

Department of Justice

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Justice why his Special Advisor met with a representative of Amnesty International on on 24 July 2014; and what was the nature of the discussion.

(AQW 40874/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): My Special Adviser and I met with a representative of Amnesty International at her request, to discuss an invitation for me to speak at a public event about my proposed consultation in relation to abortion legislation.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the total costs, or an estimate, of (i) legal aid shown by (a) law firm; (b) junior counsel; and (c) senior counsel; and (ii) interpreter services, of cases 13/099496; 13/099497; 13/099503; 13/099511; 13/099513; 13/099517; 13/099519; 13/099521; 13/099522; 13/099498 and 13/099510, at Dungannon Magistrates Court, all latterly collectively 14/084646 at Dungannon Crown Court from, from the beginning of this case to its conclusion.

Mr Ford: Legal aid was granted for representation by solicitor and junior counsel to defend proceedings in the magistrates' court in respect of each of these cases. To date, a total of £15,011.03 has been paid to 11 solicitors and £11,147.37 to 8 Junior Counsel in respect of magistrates' court proceedings. All claims have not yet been received but the estimated total cost of the magistrates' court proceedings is £38,675.03 made up as follows:

		Fees Paid to date	Estimate of fees to be paid	Estimated Total
13/099496	Solicitor	£2,329.37		£2,329.37
	Junior Counsel	£1,183.59		£1,183.59
13/099497	Solicitor	£2,242.93		£2,242.93
	Junior Counsel	£1,496.62		£1,496.62
13/099503	Solicitor	£180.00	£1,509.31	£1,689.31
	Junior Counsel		£1,112.62	£1,112.62
13/099511	Solicitor	£2,332.48		£2,332.48
	Junior Counsel	£1,489.34		£1,489.34
13/099513	Solicitor	£1,708.04		£1,708.04
	Junior Counsel		£1,112.62	£1,112.62
13/099517	Solicitor	£4,038.47		£4,038.47
	Junior Counsel	£1,496.62		£1,496.62
13/099519	Solicitor		£3,490.86	£3,490.86
	Junior Counsel	£1,467.55		£1,467.55
13/099521	Solicitor		£984.00	£984.00
	Junior Counsel	£1,344.00		£1,344.00
13/099522	Solicitor	£1,909.74	£984.00	£2,893.74
	Junior Counsel	£1,249.34		£1,249.34
13/099498	Solicitor	£270.00	£984	£1,254.00
	Junior Counsel		£1,265.22	£1,265.22
13/099510	Solicitor		£1,074.00	£1,074.00
	Junior Counsel	£1,420.31		£1,420.31
			Total	£38,675.03

The arraignment has not taken place in the Crown Court so it is not yet known how the proceedings will progress. It is therefore not possible to provide an estimate of costs.

To date the total amount spent by the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service on interpreters is £7,684.40, with a further £76 paid by the Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission.

The PPSNI is not in a position to provide costs or estimates for interpreter services as it has not yet received any invoices.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to provide, or place in the Assembly library, a copy of his Department's Whistleblower policy; and whether this applies to all agencies under his departmental remit.

(AQW 40990/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice, including its Agencies, adheres to the Public Interest Disclosure "Whistleblowing" policy as laid down in the Northern Ireland Civil Service HR Handbook, Chapter 6.01 "Standards of Conduct", paragraph 4 and Annex 3.

This policy makes provision for departmental specific procedures/ guidance for raising concerns about possible wrongdoing.

The relevant section of the NICS HR Handbook is at: <http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/6.01-standards-of-conduct.pdf>

A copy of the DOJ Whistleblowing arrangements has been placed in the Assembly Library.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 39896/11-15 and AQW 40235/11-15, and given the responsibility of senior management to ensure compliance with Prison Service policies at all times (i) why on 6 May 2013 the Care and Supervision Unit Manager and other staff at Maghaberry prison were unaware of the need to adhere to the 2011 policy on The Safe Custody of Hoffman Cut Down Knives; and (ii) how the 2011 policy was implemented by senior management throughout the prison estate, in particular Maghaberry.

Mr Ford:

- (i) There is no explanation for the non-compliance with the policy from both the CSU manager and staff. However, Maghaberry management are satisfied that this non-compliance of the policy at the time of Mr Singleton's death was neither deliberate nor intentional and deemed it a lack of awareness by staff within the CSU.
- (ii) The policy contains instructions for establishments as to how it should be implemented and guidance on the use of Hoffman knives. All establishments subsequently issued Notices to Staff advising of the new policy and training continues both as part of Induction and Conversion training and where individual training needs are identified.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Justice what measures are being considered to cut the legal aid bill.

(AQW 41022/11-15)

Mr Ford: A number of actions are planned to reduce legal aid spend. I will shortly implement changes to Crown Court Fees which will deliver savings in excess of £7million per annum. I am currently consulting with the legal profession on a new structure for Civil Fees, with the intention of introducing new arrangements for Family Cases shortly. A consultation on the Scope of Legal Aid has just completed and I plan to bring forward urgent measures to reduce the scope in certain areas. This will include reform of money damages claims, the management of private family law cases, ancillary relief and consideration of changes to means testing. I am also considering the introduction of a temporary levy on legal aid payments. Finally I am reconsidering my position on proposals for the Reform of Financial Eligibility which were put forward some time ago.

In the longer term, I expect the Access to Justice Review Part II to inform the agenda for future change.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Justice what action his Department is taking to ensure that relatives of prisoners have access to transport to and from Magilligan and Maghaberry prisons.

(AQW 41039/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) supports and provides a range of services to assist relatives of prisoners in maintaining contact with family members in custody. This includes the transport service currently provided by NIACRO to each prison establishment.

With the recent confirmation of the departmental budget for 2015-16, my officials are currently working to determine what level of resources will be available to fund services provided by the Voluntary and Community Sector. One of the priority areas where this funding will be targeted is families.

Once the level of funding is confirmed my officials will be working with Voluntary and Community Sector organisations to identify those services which can best assist in maintaining family links while people are in custody.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many convicted murderers have (i) sought; and (ii) been granted temporary leave from custody in the last six months, broken down by prison facility.

(AQW 41045/11-15)

Mr Ford:

	No. who have sought Temporary Release	No. granted Temporary Release
Maghaberry	47	36
Magilligan	3	1
Hydebank	2	2

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 40235/11-15 to detail the reason for the disparity in his answer and the statement by the Prisoner Ombudsman at page 28 of his report that since this incident all CSU staff now carry Hoffman knives on their belts but this is not the practice throughout Maghaberry.

(AQW 41046/11-15)

Mr Ford: The policy and Standard Operating Procedure (SOP) under section 'Standard 3' only requires the issue of Hoffman knives to those staff carrying landing keys. All staff working in a residential location may not require keys and therefore will not carry a Hoffman knife. Given the nature of the CSU and the contents of the Ombudsman report it was decided that Maghaberry would issue all staff working within this small unit a personal Hoffman Knife. This is specific to this area. All staff and managers carrying keys with direct contact with prisoners or staff operating at specific times such as nights and lock up periods carry Hoffman knives as per the Policy and Standing Operating Procedure.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to provide, or place in the Assembly library, a copy of his Department's child protection policy; and whether this applies to all agencies under his departmental remit.

(AQW 41052/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice, including its Agencies, adheres to the NICS Child Protection policy as laid down in the Northern Ireland Civil Service HR Handbook, Chapter 6.02 "Child Protection".

Please find below the link to the relevant section of the NICS HR Handbook for your information.

<http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/nics-child-protection-policy.pdf>

The policy makes provision for more specific procedures and guidance to be developed specific to Departmental functions or circumstances.

Both the Youth Justice Agency and the Northern Ireland Prison Service have developed specific Child Protection Policy and Procedures which are consistent with the NICS wide policy but more specific to the needs of their client group and their particular functions.

Please find links to both policies below;

YJA policy:

http://www.youthjusticeagency.ni.gov.uk/document_uploads/Child_Protection_Policy_&_Procedures.pdf

NIPS policy:

http://www.dojni.gov.uk/index/ni-prison-service/nips-publications/policy_reports/safeguarding-children-framework-and-guidance.pdf

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice in relation to his Department's statement in the press on 16 January 2015, (i) why the statement is focused on the prisoner and their concerns and makes no reference to public safety or the sensitivities of victims or their relatives; (ii) why no mention is made as to what consideration is taken of offenders who have previously absconded whilst on temporary release; and (iii) whether previous absconding whilst on temporary release affects a decision on an application for temporary release.

(AQW 41054/11-15)

Mr Ford: This was a response to a media query not a statement intended to address all of the issues and complexities associated with applications for temporary release.

Any form of temporary release is not an entitlement. It does, however, form an integral and vital part of preparing a prisoner for resettlement back into the community.

Prisoners who apply undergo a thorough risk assessment to ascertain whether they are suitable for temporary unaccompanied release. Part of this assessment looks at factors which help governors come to a view on whether applicants are likely to adhere to the terms of their temporary release.

These factors include the likelihood of re-offending; the nature of the offence or offences; an assessment of behaviour in custody; the length of time a prisoner has still to serve; where appropriate the recommendations of Parole Commissioners; the record of behaviour during any previous periods of release; and whether they are likely to return to prison by the appointed time. Only those who are determined as presenting a low risk to the public and across these various factors will have their application granted.

If a prisoner fails to return from a period of temporary release the police are notified and take action to return individuals to prison custody.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Justice (i) how much his Department pays annually for Trade Union officials; (ii) how many officials this payment covers; and (iii) what is the cost of administering Trade Union's dues.

(AQW 41060/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice, including its agencies but not its arm's-length bodies, paid a total of £132,271 in staff costs for three Trade Union officials during the 2013/14 financial year. The cost to the Department of administering Trade Union dues is nominal as this is completed as part of the routine monthly salary process.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice to detail the drug seizures made by Prison Service staff and police in each prison in the last four years, including the quantities seized.

Mr Ford: The number of drug finds for the stated period is set out below.

	2011	2012	2013	2014
Maghaberry	44	87	452	224
Magilligan	28	17	25	57
Hydebank	18	22	52	64

It would not be possible to determine the quantities of substances without manual checking of extensive records at disproportionate cost.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice to detail the (i) prosecutions; (ii) convictions; and (iii) disciplinary actions resulting drug seizures in prisons in the last four years.

(AQW 41078/11-15)

Mr Ford: Prosecutions and convictions are a matter for the PSNI. It is not possible to determine how many internal disciplinary actions relate specifically to drug finds. All such matters are dealt with under the universal prison rule of 'being in possession of an unauthorised article'.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 40345/11-15, how much funding has been provided by his Department's arms-length bodies to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender groups since April 2010.

(AQW 41081/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Policing Board, an arms-length body of the Department of Justice, paid a total of £4,726.66 between July 2011 and July 2013 to stage five productions of the Laramie Play to raise awareness of homophobic issues. £2,322.50 of this was paid directly to The Rainbow Project which is a lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender group.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Justice what progress has been made with the refurbishment project at HMP Magilligan.

(AQW 41126/11-15)

Mr Ford: The outline business case for the Magilligan Redevelopment Project was approved by Department of Finance and Personnel on 9 January 2015 and progress is dependent on securing the capital funding necessary.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to persons, convicted of an offence and imprisoned in a country outside Northern Ireland, who apply to be re-patriated to serve their sentence in a Northern Ireland prison facility, (i) whether said persons are entitled to 50 per cent remission, taking into account time served in the country where there were initially jailed; (ii) if so, whether this applies; and (iii) if not, to detail the circumstances of exception.

Mr Ford: If the index offence was committed before 1 April 2009 remission would apply on the balance of the sentence still to be served following repatriation under the provisions of Section 13(7) of the Prison Act (Northern Ireland) 1953.

If the index offence was committed on or after 1 April 2009 and the sentence handed down was 12 months or more the individual would not be entitled to remission by virtue of the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008. Remission is still available in respect of sentences under 12 months.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to Prison Service staff working in close proximity to prisoners, (i) how many staff at Maghaberry are issued with Hoffman knives on a daily basis; and (ii) how many members of staff at Maghaberry have received instruction or training on the use of Hoffman knives.

Mr Ford:

- (i) A Hoffman knife is issued to each member of landing staff who draws a set of cell keys. A Hoffman knife is also issued to each residential Senior Officer and to each individual officer within the Care and Supervision Unit. As numbers within these areas can fluctuate throughout the day and between certain days, it is not possible to specify how many are issued on a daily basis.
- (ii) Training in the use of Hoffman knives is included in Induction and Conversion Training, which has been provided for staff joining the Service or regrading since July 2012. There are 367 such staff within Maghaberry Prison.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice for a breakdown of the cost expended in bringing William Sloan back to custody at HMP Maghaberry.

(AQW 41129/11-15)

Mr Ford: The cost incurred by the Northern Ireland Prison Service in bringing William Sloan back to custody in Maghaberry was £302.33.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether the two convicted murderers who absconded whilst on temporary leave from custody and have since returned to custody, will be adjudicated for being unlawfully at large.

(AQW 41131/11-15)

Mr Ford: Disciplinary action would be considered as part of Northern Ireland Prison Service standard procedures.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice to detail any legal highs recovered in each prison over the last four years, including the (i) items recovered; and (ii) quantities recovered.

(AQW 41133/11-15)

Mr Ford: Under prison rules all non-prescribed medication is treated as illicit. New Psychoactive Substances are recorded under overall drug seizures and are not recorded separately on the prison system.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice to detail the contraband, other than drugs, seized in each prison in the last four years, including (i) the items recovered; (ii) disciplinary action; and (iii) any resulting criminal (a) prosecutions; and (b) convictions.

(AQW 41134/11-15)

Mr Ford: The term contraband covers a multitude of items from weapons to over quota issued property. All finds which give concern are dealt with under prison rules. To provide the statistics as requested would require a very considerable number of records to be manually checked and incur disproportionate cost.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Justice why sex workers or organisations representing sex workers are excluded from his Department's Engagement Groups on Human Trafficking; and whether he will rectify this situation.

Mr Ford: The Engagement Group was established in December 2012, essentially from those who responded to a consultation about how the Department should engage with civic society about human trafficking as well as a number of other organisations which were engaging with the Department. No request was made from sex workers or their representatives at that time, or when membership was reviewed in September 2013.

A number of requests to join the Engagement Group will be considered when membership is next reviewed. However it will not be possible to include all groups which have expressed an interest, given the need to keep the size of the group manageable.

In addition to the Engagement Group, the Department has engagement with others, including those representing sex workers, to allow relevant issues relating to human trafficking to be raised with it.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 37161/11-15 and AQW 38849/11-15 and his subsequent correspondence of 22 December 2014, whether this person, when being released on home leave, was (i) subject to a curfew; (ii) if so, what were the times; (iii) was the curfew breached; (ii) prohibited from consumption of alcohol; and (iii) placed under parental or guardian responsibility who were then in turn required to enforce and report any breaches.

(AQW 41189/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am unable to disclose the specific information requested as to do so would run contrary to the Data Protection Act 1998.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 40364/11-15, who paid said costs.

(AQW 41194/11-15)

Mr Ford: The costs incurred were paid by the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice (i) what is his Department's definition of a solicitor or law firm working on a case pro bono; (ii) under what circumstances can they apply for legal aid; and (iii) what services the legal aid covers.

(AQW 41195/11-15)

Mr Ford: The definition of pro bono is legal work undertaken by practitioners voluntarily and without payment. Legal Aid would not be available in cases where the practitioner agrees to provide pro bono legal work.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many magistrates court cases in the last twelve months have been dismissed due to over-running the stipulated time for progress, broken down by court division; and of these how many have since been re-listed.

(AQW 41196/11-15)

Mr Ford: This information is not available as it is not recorded.

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice how many prisoner on prisoner physical attacks have taken place in HMP Maghaberry in each of the last 24 months.

(AQW 41217/11-15)

Mr Ford: The number of prisoner on prisoner assaults in Maghaberry over the 24 month period from 1 January 2013 to 31 December 2014 is provided in the table below.

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice how many prison officers have (i) been recruited to; and (ii) left the Prison Service, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 41219/11-15)

Mr Ford: The number of Prison Officers recruited to, and the number who have left the Prison Service, in each of the last five years is set out in the table below:

Period	Number recruited	Number of leavers*
2010 (from 12/04/10)	0	63
2011	0	47
2012	140	257
2013	170	323

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the installation of drop-down bollards at Dungannon Courthouse, (i) on what recommendation were these installed; (ii) who approved the installation; (iii) what was the cost; (iv) what other costs have been incurred since installation; (v) what is their record of operational reliability; and (vi) what is their current status in respect of usage and operational function.

(AQW 41233/11-15)

Mr Ford: The installation of bollards at Dungannon Courthouse was recommended by the Centre for the Protection of National Infrastructure and approved by the then NICTS Director of Finance. Installation at Dungannon cost £110,500 and to date approximately £3,116 has been spent on remedial maintenance to ensure they are operating effectively. The bollards are considered to be operationally reliable and fulfil their function of minimising the security risk to the courthouse.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many Fermanagh and Tyrone division crown court cases have had No Bill applications made in each of the last three years; and how many were successful.

(AQW 41234/11-15)

Mr Ford: The table below outlines the number of No Bill applications dealt with in each of the last three years in Fermanagh and Tyrone Division and includes a breakdown of their outcomes. A case may have more than one defendant and therefore more than one No Bill application.

[2] Provisional Figures.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to detail the compensation payments paid to prison staff since October 2013; and why these figures have not been updated quarterly as required.

(AQW 41235/11-15)

Mr Ford: The total amount of compensation paid to prison staff, from October 2013 to the end of December 2014, is £742,890. Of this figure, £369,173 relates to compensation paid for noise induced hearing loss claims awarded to current and retired staff. There is no requirement for NIPS to update these figures quarterly.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of (i) prosecutions; and (ii) convictions for theft of agricultural machinery, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 41247/11-15)

Mr Ford: The information requested is not available from datasets held by the Department. Prosecutions and convictions data are recorded for generic offences, such as theft, robbery or criminal damage and datasets held by my Department currently do not contain information on items stolen or circumstances in which offences were committed. Therefore, it is not currently possible to identify from the data whether a prosecution or conviction relates specifically to theft of agricultural machinery.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 40651/11-15, whether funding is available for this project.

(AQW 41270/11-15)

Mr Ford: Following DFP approval of the outline business case, the next stage will be to secure the necessary capital funding to progress the Redevelopment of Magilligan Project.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Justice how many ex parte High Court applications have been heard on a Friday afternoon in (i) 2014; and (ii) 2015.

(AQW 41275/11-15)

Mr Ford: The table below outlines the numbers of ex-parte High Court applications dealt with on a Friday in 2014. It is not possible to determine how many were heard on a Friday afternoon. Data for 2015 are not yet available.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice whether he will hold discussions with the Chief Constable regarding inclusion within the Annual Performance Review for Police Officers any requirement regarding the number of prosecutions for which each officer may be responsible.

(AQW 41313/11-15)

Mr Ford: I meet regularly with the Chief Constable to discuss a range of matters relating to the policing of Northern Ireland. However, I do not tell the Chief Constable how to manage his officers. It is for the Chief Constable to determine which targets are the most appropriate measure of performance for police officers.

The Chief Constable has at his disposal the ability to assess individual officers and he reports regularly to the Policing Board on the performance of the PSNI.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many (i) prosecutions; and (ii) convictions resulted from investigations by the Historical Enquiries Team.

(AQW 41328/11-15)

Mr Ford: The information requested is not available. Court prosecutions and convictions datasets do not distinguish whether a prosecution or conviction was the result of an investigation by the Historical Enquiries Team. Information relating to investigations by the Historical Enquiries Team may be available from the PSNI.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 40749/11-15, what assurance he can give that no offender will be released on home leave if the mechanism is not in place for monitoring.

Mr Ford: The revised home leave policy operated by the Youth Justice Agency requires monitoring arrangements to be agreed in advance before a young person will be released on unescorted home leave from Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre. This monitoring role is undertaken by the local PSNI Reducing Offending Unit team by formally visiting the young person during their period of unescorted home leave.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Justice how many ex parte High Court applications in each of the last three years have been (i) granted; (ii) heard; and (iii) refused, broken down by court division.

1 Ex-parte applications based on initiating document entered on Integrated Courts Operation System (ICOS). Data for 2014 is provisional.

To determine how many ex-parte High Court applications have been granted and resulted in costs and damages being ordered for the respondent would require a manual review of all final orders and would incur a disproportionate cost.

I currently have no plans to ask the Lord Chief Justice to review how ex-parte High Court applications are processed.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many (i) prosecutions; and (ii) convictions for crimes committed by loyalist paramilitaries resulted from investigations by the Historical Enquiries Team.
(AQW 41402/11-15)

Mr Ford: The information requested is not available. Court prosecutions and convictions datasets do not distinguish paramilitary affiliations in relation to defendants, or whether a prosecution or conviction was the result of an investigation by the Historical Enquiries Team. Information relating to investigations by the Historical Enquiries Team may be available from the PSNI.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many (i) prosecutions; and (ii) convictions for crimes committed by republican paramilitaries resulted from investigations by the Historical Enquiries Team.
(AQW 41403/11-15)

Mr Ford: The information requested is not available. Court prosecutions and convictions datasets do not distinguish paramilitary affiliations in relation to defendants, or whether a prosecution or conviction was the result of an investigation by the Historical Enquiries Team. Information relating to investigations by the Historical Enquiries Team may be available from the PSNI.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to place in the Assembly Library a copy of the agreements regarding the pensionable pay of all four Police Federation of Northern Ireland Office Bearers since August 2012; and whether these are drawn from departmental funding or members contributions.
(AQW 41459/11-15)

Mr Ford: As stated in the answer I gave to AQW/38708/11-15, my Department is not party to any agreement between the central committee of the Police Federation for Northern Ireland, the Northern Ireland Policing Board and the Chief Constable in respect of the pay, pension or allowances paid to the individual police officers holding office within the Police Federation. I can also confirm that this matter has not been referred to the Minister in line with the provision of Regulation 18(1).

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice to detail the change in the legal aid bill between 2009 and the estimated bill for 2014.
(AQW 41465/11-15)

Mr Ford: This information is available by financial year and, has been reported on that basis from the date of devolution.

Financial year	Cash expenditure £m
2010/11	93.3
2011/12	101.7
2012/13	95.8
2013/14	105.0

Financial year	Cash expenditure £m
2014/15 Forecast	103.9

Notes:

Figures include expenditure from contributions made by legally assisted persons.

All figures exclude administration costs.

In cash terms, legal aid expenditure has increased by £11.7m over the four year period since the devolution of the Department of Justice in April 2010. Figures reported for 2014/15 are based on current forecasts from Northern Ireland Legal Services Commission.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice which of the new council areas will host a court under the proposals for the future of courthouse provision.

(AQW 41478/11-15)

Mr Ford: Under the consultation proposals for the Rationalisation of the Court Estate the new local government districts which would host a court, and those that would not, is set out in the table below.

Proposed Administrative Court Division	New Local Government District	Proposed Court Locations
North Eastern	Belfast	Royal Courts of Justice Laganside Court Complex Old Town Hall Building Mays Chambers
	Lisburn and Castlereagh	-
	North Down and Ards	-
	Antrim and Newtownabbey	Antrim
	Mid and East Antrim	-
	Causeway Coast and Glens	Coleraine
Western	Derry and Strabane	Londonderry
	Mid Ulster	Dungannon
	Fermanagh and Omagh	Omagh
South Eastern	Armagh, Banbridge and Craigavon	Craigavon
	Newry, Mourne and Down	Newry Downpatrick

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the impact that the proposed courthouses closures will have on the Programme for Government 2011-15 commitment to improve access to justice.

(AQW 41487/11-15)

Mr Ford: The proposals for the court estate have been drawn up to provide an accessible and flexible model for justice administration in the future.

I appreciate that local courthouses are important to some people, but access to justice is not just about the number and proximity of courthouses but about reforms and initiatives to ensure that those that need to use the justice system are supported and have access to appropriate services.

The intention of the proposals is not to reduce the current level of activity within the courts but to realign where that business is undertaken to make best use of the larger, more modern, court buildings which have the capacity and facilities to deal with the broad range of court business.

The proposals will preserve access to justice for the people of Northern Ireland within a smaller, more focused, court estate.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Justice how many times the steering group for the Northern Ireland Community Safety College at Desertcreat have met since November 2014, and how many times they have reported to him.

(AQW 41508/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Steering Group for the Northern Ireland Community Safety College has met three times since November 2014. I have been kept fully apprised of developments and, in turn, have kept Executive colleagues and the Committee for Justice informed.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice how many convictions for driving without insurance have been secured in North Down in each of the last five years.

(AQW 41563/11-15)

Mr Ford: Uninsured driving is an offence under Article 90(4) of the Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. Figures have been provided in relation to Bangor and Newtownards Courts for the period specified.

Convictions for Driving with no insurance in Bangor and Newtownards Courts, 2009 – 2013

Court Office	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013
Bangor Court Office	176	212	112	71	16
Newtownards Court Office	192	298	328	198	240
Total	368	510	440	269	256

Notes:

- 1 Data are collated on the principal offence rule; only the most serious offence for which an offender is convicted is included.
- 2 The figures provided relate to convictions for all classifications of the offence specified.
- 3 Figures provided relate to the court the offence was tried in, not the area where the offence occurred, or where the defendant lived.
- 4 Bangor court office closed in April 2013.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW40693/11-15, what is the procedure in instances where non-disabled badge holders park in a disabled bay; and whether Courts Service have overall responsibility for enforcement.

(AQW 41604/11-15)

Mr Ford: The control of car parking in the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals estate is delegated to G4S Secure Solutions (UK) Ltd. Where car users who are not disabled badge holders are seen to use a disabled car parking space, G4S are instructed to request that they vacate the space. NICTS car parks are private property including spaces for public use, and car parking violations are not enforced.

Department for Regional Development

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the issues in the NI Water pensions dispute.

(AQW 40527/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): NI Water has a separate Funded Pension Scheme. The company has been working to reform its scheme to bring it largely into line with the Pension Reforms which have already taken place or are underway in the wider public sector in Northern Ireland.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister for Regional Development for a breakdown of the average cost over the last three years to install a new street light.

(AQW 40537/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The cost of installing a new street light is dependent upon site-specific factors such as the extent of work required, type of road, location and the type of equipment used.

However, the average cost of a typical installation, including the associated underground cabling, over the last three years is approximately £1,650.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development how much his Department has paid in grants to external organisations, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 40565/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The amounts paid out in grants by my Department for the last five years are summarised in the table below:

	2009-10 £m	2010-11 £m	2011-12 £m	2012-13 £m	2013-14 £m
Grants	55.5	83.0	126.3	50.9	43.7

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development, in light of the recent budget cuts, what plans he has to cut senior posts within Translink.

(AQW 40670/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Departmental budget consultation document stated that as part of a package of measures to address cuts in Translink subsidies in 2015/2016 that efficiency savings can be made. This included reference to early reductions in senior and middle management levels and reductions in areas of general administrative expenditure. I want to see this being taken forward as we deal with the challenging final Budget outcome.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development (i) whether he is aware of the reports in the Irish News of the pollution caused in Lough Muckno, Lough Ross and the Fane River by fuel launderers in South Armagh; (ii) what steps NI Water has taken to ensure that drinking water in South Armagh is not adversely affected; and (iii) to detail any discussions she has had with his counterpart in the Republic of Ireland on this matter.

Mr Kennedy:

- (i) I am aware of articles published recently in the Irish Independent and the Irish News which alleged that harmful chemicals were flowing into the Lough Muckno, Lough Ross and the Fane River as a result of fuel laundering. A Water Quality Inspector from the Department of the Environment's NI Environment Agency (NIEA) was deployed to the area on 19 November 2015 and a further inspection was carried out on 20 January however no evidence of water pollution was identified. Further to the investigation, NIEA contacted the journalist who advised that the pollution he witnessed as detailed in the article, had occurred on the southern side of the border in County Monaghan, outside NIEA jurisdiction.
- (ii) NI Water's treatment works are designed to take untreated (raw) water of varying quality from surface water sources, such as Lough Ross, and to treat it in order to provide a high quality, safe drinking water supply to customers. Water quality monitoring across South Armagh has demonstrated that the drinking water supply continues to be of a high quality and within regulatory standards following the recent news articles and is completely safe for consumption.

The Drinking Water Inspectorate (DWI) has advised that NI Water must assess all potential risks within the catchments to its drinking water sources, put in place appropriate sampling and, where required, any possible mitigation measures, and provide DWI with a summary drinking water safety plan report of its risk assessments for all water treatment works.

DWI has confirmed that in the risk assessment for the Carran Hill Water Treatment Works, which treats water from the Lough Ross catchment, NI Water has noted the potential for illegal fuel laundering to occur within the catchment and the potential risks associated with this activity. There have been no contraventions of drinking water quality standards at Carran Hill Water Treatment Works which have been linked to potential pollution within the catchment caused by illegal fuel laundering however in light of the recent newspaper reports, the risk assessment will be reviewed by NI Water to determine if the current risk to the water quality within the catchment supplying Carran Hill Water Treatment Works has changed.

- (iii) NI Water liaises with the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) on all potential and actual pollution events (including the reports in the recent news articles) and NIEA, in turn, works with agencies in the Republic of Ireland to ensure that all cross-border drinking water catchment areas are protected.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Regional Development for the percentage of his Department's overall Current Resource Expenditure allocated to staff wages in (i) 2013/14; and (ii) the 2014/15 draft budget.

(AQW 41065/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Staff wages as a percentage of Current Resource Expenditure is provided in the table below:

	2013-14	2014-15
Salaries and wages as a percentage of current resource expenditure	15.5%	16.8%

The salaries and wages percentage for 2013-14 is based on the final outturn for 2013-14 and the percentage for 2014-15 is based on the final budget plan for 2014-15.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the savings to be made by his Department from the public sector voluntary exit scheme, over each of the four financial years commencing 2014/15.

(AQW 41067/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The outcome of Budget 2015/16 has required my Department and its arm's length bodies to manage budget reductions equating to some £65 million, that is 19% of current expenditure. As part of this process, it will be necessary to significantly reduce staffing levels and associated costs. The Voluntary Exit Scheme will facilitate that reduction.

I expect savings from the public sector voluntary exit scheme to start to be realised in my Department in 2015/16. It is too early to assess with any accuracy the extent of savings which will be made by the Department in the period 2015/16 to 2017/18. This will depend on the numbers and grades of staff who apply and who are selected to leave under the voluntary exit scheme. The timing of exits will also impact on savings. Initial Budget planning has indicated that up to 300 posts, saving up to £10 million, may be involved.

The Department will continue to review the position to develop full and robust assessments of savings as the voluntary exit scheme is developed and rolled out.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister for Regional Development what resources he proposes to put into the development of the A5 route after the financial commitments of the Irish Government; and whether this will change his prioritisation of upgrades to the A6, at the Moneynick section and Dungiven Bypass, and the A12 Westlink at Yorkgate Interchange.

(AQW 41069/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Member will be aware that the A5 Western Transport Corridor scheme is being taken forward as a result of an agreement between the Executive and the Irish Government. Both the Executive and the Irish Government remain committed to the scheme.

Work to address the one area of concern identified in the judicial review is well advanced. This relates to undertaking Appropriate Assessments under the Habitats Directive of the impact of the A5 proposals on designated environmentally sensitive sites. Work on the new Environmental Statement and new draft Statutory Orders is now complete and will be published in due course. Once published this will initiate a six week public consultation exercise, which may lead to the need for a further Public Inquiry in late 2015.

Subject to the successful completion of statutory procedures, construction of this scheme will be dependent upon funding being made available by the Executive in future budget settlements.

Along with the A5, work is continuing on the development of other schemes, in particular the A6 Randalstown to Castledawson dual carriageway, the A6 Dungiven Bypass and the York Street Interchange. Delivery of all of these schemes is dependent on the level of funding made available in the next budget period 2016/17 to 2020/21.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 39660/11-15, for his assessment of the impact that fare increases will have on consumers with disabilities who hold the Half Fare Smartpass.

Mr Kennedy: Half-fare Smartpass holders will continue to pay half the price of the relevant adult bus single fare and half the price of the relevant adult rail single and day return fare.

As from 16 February 2015, fares will increase for all customers by an average of 5.3% for Metro, 4% for Ulsterbus and 4.5% for NI Railways. The value of the half fare concession will therefore increase proportionately.

Translink has been able to freeze fares on public transport services for over 18 months and since I became Minister in 2011, bus fares have increased by only 6% and rail fares by 8% whilst inflation over the same period was 14%. In other words fares have fallen significantly in real terms.

It is acknowledged that bus and rail fares in Northern Ireland are lower than and have risen by less than Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland. Indeed if I compare the fares since 2011 against fares in Northern Ireland, Great Britain has increased bus and rail fares by 19% and in the Republic of Ireland bus fares have increased by between 20 and 40% and the rail fares by 38%.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the groups that his Department has consulted with on transport provision for disabled and older people.

(AQW 41088/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Over the past year, my Department has consulted with the following groups on transport provision for disabled and older people.

- | | |
|---|---|
| ■ Action Mental Health – New Horizons | ■ Consumer Council |
| ■ Action on Hearing Loss (formerly Royal National Institute for Deaf people); | ■ Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety |
| ■ Age Friendly Belfast | ■ Department of Education |
| ■ Barnardos | ■ Disability Action |
| ■ Belfast Health and Social Care Trust | ■ Epilepsy Northern Ireland |
| ■ Belfast Education and Library Board | ■ Federation of Passenger Transport |
| ■ Community Transport Association | ■ Greater Belfast Seniors' Forum |

- Guide Dogs for the Blind
- Health and Social Care Board
- Inclusive Mobility and Transport Advisory Committee (IMTAC)
- Junction Club.
- MENCAP
- National Autistic Society
- North Eastern Education and Library Board
- Northern Health and Social Care Trust
- Northern Ireland Ambulance Service
- Private Bus Operators
- Royal National Institute for the Blind

- The Cedar Foundation
- Rural Community Transport Partnerships
- South Eastern Education and Library Board
- Southern Education and Library Board
- Southern Health and Social Care Trust
- Translink
- Western Education and Library Board
- Western Health and Social Care Trust

The Department also consults regularly with the Inclusive Mobility Transport Advisory Committee (IMTAC), whose role is to advise Government departments in Northern Ireland on issues that affect the mobility of older people and disabled people.

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the road bonds in the Strangford constituency, including the (i) length of time these roads have been bonded; and (ii) the initial and current value of the bonds. (AQW 41104/11-15)

Miss M McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the water and pumping station agreements and bonds in the Strangford constituency, including the (i) length of time these have been in place; and (ii) the initial and current value of these bonds.

(AQW 41105/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: There are 67 unadopted development sites within the Strangford constituency where bond security is held. Details of the developments and the year the bond security was provided are listed in the table below. NI Water does not consider that details of the value of the bonds for these developments should be released as it relates to third party commercial information.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development why full size bicycles are not permitted on trains prior to 9.30am Monday to Friday.

(AQW 41111/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The reason no full size bicycles are permitted before 09:30 is that on the vast majority of commuter trains there is not sufficient space. The bulk of trains coming into Belfast each morning are carrying large numbers of standing passengers and these standing passengers need to use the fold-up seated areas which are otherwise available for carriage of bicycles during the rest of the day.

Clearly we would not want a situation where a bicycle ended up displacing 3 or 4 passengers from a service because of insufficient space.

Translink does, however, advise its Conductors that discretion may be applied before 09:30 but mainly on trains travelling outwards from Belfast, where space is likely to be available.

Translink's objective remains to provide as much capacity as possible and to carry as many passengers as possible on their train services.

No restrictions are placed on the number of folding bicycles which may be carried. These bicycles will actually fit in the small void between back to back seats on our trains. Furthermore they have become more prominent in recent years as they have become much more affordable.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development when the backlog of street lights in need of repair will be cleared.
(AQW 41115/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Following the Executive's decision to meet my Department's bid for additional funding in the January Monitoring round, I immediately reinstated the use of external contractors to repair broken street lights. Contractors are back on the ground, in addition to my Department's own street lighting staff, working through the backlog of street lighting repairs that has accumulated since last August.

I have instructed that all available resources are to be used to expedite the work. My aim is to have the backlog cleared as quickly as possible within the remainder of this financial year.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what auditing Translink's account undergo; and who carries out this audit.

(AQW 41140/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink accounts are audited by Deloitte LLP.

The Group also benefits from an internal audit function led by a Head of Internal Audit provided by an independent firm, PricewaterhouseCoopers.

The Accounts are open to the inspection of the Comptroller and Auditor General and the NI Audit Office also has full access to all financial and other records in Translink and has conducted a number of audits on Translink affairs.

My Department also lays the NITHC Annual Report and Accounts in the Assembly, in accordance with the guidance on the procedures for presenting and laying the combined Annual Report and Accounts issued by the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development how many (i) new; and (ii) replacement street lights have been installed in North Down in each of the last three years.

(AQW 41144/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of new and replacement street lights that have been installed in North Down, in each of the last three years, are provided in the table below:

Year	New Lights	Replacement Lights
2012/2013	0	372
2013/2014	0	227
Total	0	599

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 40343/11-15, how many personal injury claims have been submitted to his Department since January 2014 citing defective street lighting as a contributory factor.

(AQW 41150/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department holds information on personal injury claims involving street lighting only where defective street lighting is alleged to be the main cause of injury sustained. Details of the number of such claims received in the calendar years 2014 and to date in 2015 are set out in the table below:

Calendar Year	Number of Claims Received
2014	6
2015	1
Total	7

However, there may be other personal injury claims where defective street lighting is a contributory factor albeit not the main contributory factor, but it is not possible to identify these claims from the database.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development, over the last five years, what changes have been made to the number of grit boxes supplied for use on streets, that are not on the salted network, in the East Londonderry constituency.

(AQW 41175/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The numbers of salt boxes provided for use by the public in East Londonderry from 2011 to present are as follows:

2011	470
2012	465
2013	466
2014	472

Figures for 2010 cannot be verified and therefore are not included in this response.

Mr Girvan asked the Minister for Regional Development what were his Department's (i) major; (ii) bypass; and (iii) relief road priorities, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 41208/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has taken forward a balanced programme of improvements to the road network over the past five years.

Major roads projects completed during this period include: the A4 Dungannon to Ballygawley Dual Carriageway; improvements to the A4 at Anaghilla and A5 at Tullyvar; and the A1 Beech Hill to Cloghogue Dual Carriageway, which were all part of PPP Package 2.

Conventionally funded schemes completed during this period include: the A2 Broadbridge Dual carriageway in Londonderry; Improvements to the A29 at Carland Bridge between Dungannon and Cookstown; the A32 Cherrymount Link in Enniskillen; and rolling improvements to the A32 Omagh to Enniskillen corridor, at Drumskinny and Shannaragh.

Construction works on two major schemes, the A8 Belfast to Larne Dualling and the A2 Shore Road, Greenisland, are well advanced with both schemes due to be completed this year. Site work on the construction phase of the A26 Glarryford to A44 Drones Road dual carriageway is scheduled to start in February 2015 and it is also anticipated that a contractor will be appointed to construct the A31 Magherafelt Bypass in February.

In addition, I have secured funding to appoint a contractor to develop the A6 Randalstown to Castledawson scheme to a "shovel ready" position. This will allow construction to start at relatively short notice when funding becomes available.

Development work has been ongoing on other major projects including the A5 Western Transport Corridor, the A6 Londonderry to Dungiven dualling and the York Street Interchange. Development work is also continuing on the A24 Ballynahinch Bypass.

Other schemes, including the Millennium Way in Lurgan and the Strathroy Link Road in Omagh, are also being advanced in the programme.

Mr Girvan asked the Minister for Regional Development when the safety related works on the Scullions Road footways, Mallusk will be completed.

(AQW 41210/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The proposed work at Scullions Road includes street lighting improvements and edging of the grass verge to restore the full width of the footway.

I am pleased to say that following the Executive's decision to meet my Department's bid for additional funding in the January Monitoring round, work at Scullions Road, to remove redundant street lighting columns, no longer required as a result of a street lighting scheme, will be undertaken by an external contractor during the first two weeks of February 2015. However, verge trimming remains a lower priority and will be undertaken as soon as our internal resources permit.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has considered the use of LED lighting as a cost saving measure.

(AQW 41215/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has considered the use of LED street lighting and already installed many hundreds of new LED street light fittings.

LEDs have developed rapidly over recent years and their efficiency and reliability has improved greatly, while costs have been falling steeply. My Department has worked with the Strategic Investment Board to examine a number of technical and operational options for street lighting and LEDs featured prominently in that work.

Going forward, my Department plans to make extensive use of LED street lighting.

Signed:

Date:

Background

- It should be noted that replacement LED Street lighting schemes can involve either one-for-one replacement of lanterns on existing columns, or the complete renewal of the whole installation including columns, underground cables and associated works. Approximately 470 LED lanterns had been installed by the street lighting department by the end of 2014.
- Further LED street lighting has also been installed in a number of other Public Realm schemes, for which the Department will take over maintenance responsibilities upon completion.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he is is considering the introduction of toll roads.
(AQW 41216/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: At present there are no toll roads in Northern Ireland and I currently have no plans to introduce them.

I have previously explored the potential for road pricing such as toll roads and congestion charges in Northern Ireland however given the level of implementation costs involved and the limited revenue raising potential further work was ruled out.

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development how many streetlights in (i) Larne; (ii) Carrickfergus; and (iii) Newtownabbey Borough Council are currently in need of maintenance; and following the additional allocation afforded to his Department in the Budget settlement, when will this work will be completed.

(AQW 41224/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As of Monday 26 January 2015, the numbers of street lights awaiting repair in each area were as follows:

- (i) Larne 492;
- (ii) Newtownabbey 1059 and
- (iii) Carrickfergus 583.

I am pleased to be able to confirm that the additional money made available in the January monitoring round has allowed my Department to engage external contractors to deal with the significant backlog of repairs which it is anticipated will be cleared by the end of the financial year.

Mr Ross asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the Sydenham bypass widening scheme; and whether the budget cuts to the Department will delay this project.

(AQW 41226/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The A2 Sydenham Bypass scheme is now at the third stage of a three stage development process:

- Stage 1 concluded in May 2008 with the selection of the Proposed Corridor;
- Stage 2 concluded in February 2010 with selection of the scheme Preferred Option; and
- Stage 3, currently underway, involves detailed assessment of the Preferred Option and ongoing consultation with key stakeholders.

This will result in the publication of the Statutory Orders: the draft Direction Order, Environmental Statement and Notice of Intention to Make a Vesting Order.

Whilst the budget for the period 2014/2015 will allow development work on Stage 3 to continue, progression of the scheme beyond this will be subject to future budget settlements and priorities.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the new grade-separated junction at Connsbank on the Sydenham bypass.

(AQW 41229/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The provision of the Connsbank junction is a planning condition of the overall Titanic Quarter Phase 2 development lands. The trigger for the provision of the junction is based on the opening of the Titanic Belfast (Visitor Centre) and one-fifth of other Phase 2 development as defined in vehicular trips within an approved Transport Master Plan. The new junction, which facilitates the closure of the existing Dee Street access at Sydenham Bypass, is dependent on the implementation of approved development. However, given the economic downturn, Titanic Belfast is the only development currently implemented within these lands and a time-frame for the construction of the new Connsbank junction is therefore uncertain.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the (i) timeframe; and the (ii) benefits to the local community of the recently commenced Annacloy Kilmore wastewater project.

Mr Kennedy: The construction programme for the proposed works at Kilmore and Annacloy Wastewater Treatment Works is projected to be completed by the end of 2015.

Investment in the Kilmore / Annacloy project will upgrade the existing wastewater infrastructure serving both villages and will deliver significant benefits for the local communities and the environment.

Works which have now commenced will convert the existing Kilmore Wastewater Treatment Works (WwTW) into a pumping station. This means that there will be no sewage treatment with continuous discharge of treated effluent at this site. As a direct result there will be fewer road tanker visits once work is complete. Local residents and businesses will also benefit from an aesthetics perspective as the refurbishment means that the majority of the new pumping station equipment will be below ground, allowing NI Water to remove the old concrete structures at Kilmore.

Significant improvements will also be made at the treatment facility at Annacloy. The tanks being installed at the existing site, to the rear of Annacloy Business Park, are modern, fully covered treatment units, which will provide a much higher quality of wastewater treatment.

The sophisticated processes being installed will increase the capabilities of the sewage works, deliver environmental improvements and ensure stringent EU discharge standards are met for many years to come. The design of the tanks allows them to be mostly buried and to further screen the new infrastructure, landscaping will be undertaken around the site once the construction work is complete.

Work at Kilmore and Annacloy will be confined to the respective WwTW sites and should have no impact to the local community. However, the pipeline to link the two assets will affect adjoining roads between the two villages and therefore may cause some localised and time limited disruption to traffic. NI Water will make every effort to minimise disruption and complete this pipe laying work as soon as possible. The pipeline route has been planned to avoid any roadworks through Annacloy village. Sections of the pipe will be laid along the Tullynacree and Teconnaught Roads.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what criteria applies when appointing a chairperson of the Northern Ireland Holding Company and its 8 companies within the Translink Group structure.

(AQW 41341/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise you that the criteria for the appointment of the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company (NITHC) chairperson is derived from the Transport Act (Northern Ireland) 1967. The Chair of the Board of NITHC has to be appointed from among persons who appear to the Minister to have had wide experience of, and to have shown capacity in transport or industrial or commercial or financial matters; or to have other adequate or suitable experience.

In addition to this criterion a successful candidate will also have to demonstrate their ability in four other areas, namely:-

- Leadership
- Developing and Delivering Strategy
- Governance, Control and Accountability
- Interpersonal and Communication Skills

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what meetings have taken place between the Board of Translink, Irish Rail and Bus Eireann to discuss and develop cross-border strategies, objectives and policies.

(AQW 41342/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The NITHC/Translink Board has no formal scheduled meetings with the Board of either Irish Rail or Bus Éireann.

Translink senior management including executive board members do meet on a regular and ad hoc basis with their counterparts in both Republic of Ireland bus and rail operating companies, to discuss operational issues and forward planning. You will be aware that NI Railways and Irish Rail jointly operate the Enterprise service and are currently working together to refurbish these trains and Ulsterbus and Bus Eireann co-operate very effectively on cross border bus services.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development why the chairperson of Northern Ireland Water was not available for media to explain the role of the Board of Directors during the recent crisis.

(AQW 41345/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I have been advised by Northern Ireland Water (NIW) that to ensure the messaging from the company was singular and undiluted, the best course of action was to have that message come from a single executive source namely the Chief Executive, who was not only best placed to deliver it, but did so with the full backing of all of the NIW Board, i.e. the Chair, Executive and Non-Executive Directors. The Chair and Non-Executive Directors of the NIW Board were also in regular contact with the Chief Executive and Executive Team throughout this incident providing support and advice as necessary.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development what action he is taking to improve bicycle storage and carriage provision on buses and trains during rush hour, to encourage integrated sustainable transport options for commuters.

(AQW 41388/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As a 'Champion of Cycling' I am very conscious of the need to improve the provision of facilities for cyclists using public transport. This presents a particular challenge during peak periods where the success of my promotion of sustainable travel options has delivered a substantial increase in the numbers of people using public transport. It is an issue that my Cycling Unit will explore as it develops a Bicycle Strategy Delivery Plan.

There is bicycle storage provision on the current Class 4000 trains for eight full size bicycles throughout the main part of the day – this is an increase on the provision for four bicycles on the Class 3000 trains. Making this space available during the weekday morning peak presents a challenge because the carriages are already full to capacity with significant numbers of passengers standing on Belfast-bound trains and there is a need to strike the best balance between bicycle provision and passenger provision.

NIR, however, allow conductors to exercise discretion during the morning peak to allow bicycles to be carried on less busy routes (e.g. those leaving Belfast) where space is likely to be available. Storage for bicycles at many rail and bus stations is also provided.

In terms of provision for the carriage of bicycles on buses, my officials are exploring, with Translink, the possibility of developing a pilot exercise in Belfast. Consideration is being given to the technical and safety implications of such a pilot.

Folding bicycles continue to be carried without restriction on all Translink rail and bus services.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the roads adopted in the North Down constituency since January 2011; and the length of time bonds were in place until they were released.

(AQW 41435/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of roads adopted within the North Down constituency since 1 April 2011, along with the length of time the respective bonds were in place, are set out in the table below:

Development	Date Adopted	Time Bond Held

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the road safety measures undertaken by Transport NI over the last three years at Diamond Primary School, Cullybackey to ensure the safety of pupils; and to outline any future plans for improving road safety at the school.

(AQW 41451/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: This school has benefited from the provision of Safe Routes to School signage on Dreen Road since 2006 and the signage was upgraded in 2013.

Currently, the North Eastern Education and Library Board (NEELB) has approval to carry out works to widen the footpath across the frontage of the school, which are expected to begin in the next few months.

My Department has agreed to investigate the possibility of widening the existing 1.0m hard standing to a 1.8m footpath over a distance of approximately 100m beyond the school boundary towards Cullybackey.

Department for Social Development

Ms Fearon asked the Minister for Social Development to detail local (i) social security; and (ii) pension spend per capita in comparison with Britain and the South of Ireland.

(AQW 40770/11-15)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): The Minister for Social Development to detail local (i) social security; and (ii) pension spend per capita in comparison with Britain and the South of Ireland.

Please note the following:

- The amounts for NI social security benefit expenditure are included within the 2013-14 Department for Social Development annual resource accounts and the 2013-14 NI Social Security Agency annual report and accounts.
- The amounts for GB social security benefit expenditure are taken from the 2013-14 Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) annual resource accounts.
- The amounts for Republic of Ireland Expenditure on Social Welfare by Program are taken from the 2013 figures published by Department of Social Protection. The Department for Social Development does not possess detailed knowledge of the underlying workings of these figures, so figures should be used with caution.
- The amounts for pension benefits, Table B, are included in the total expenditure figures per Table A.
- Populations are taken from 2013 mid-year estimates (most recent) produced by ONS (GB) and NISRA (NI). Republic of Ireland population figures are from 2013 estimates produced by Central Statistics Office.
- Pension Credit includes individuals under 65 years old.
- Elements of Republic of Ireland expenditure are not comparable with those in GB and NI.
- Per capita figures do not reflect differences in demographics between all 3 regions and are therefore not necessarily comparable.
- Certain elements of expenditure between NI and GB are not directly comparable. See issues listed in the table below.

Universal Credit	DWP figures will include Universal Credit expenditure. Welfare Reform has not yet been implemented in Northern Ireland.
------------------	---

PIP	DWP figures will contain Personal Independence Payment expenditure. Welfare Reform has not yet been implemented in Northern Ireland.
ESA	DWP figures will be impacted by ESA Time Limiting changes. ESA Time Limiting changes are not yet implemented in Northern Ireland.
Social Fund Expenditure	NI Social Fund expenditure is not directly comparable to GB expenditure. GB have introduced changes in relation to the administration of Crisis Loans and Community Care grants. In addition Northern Ireland Social Fund expenditure incorporates loan issues and recoveries, and Funeral Loans and Budget Loan annual activity. DWP do not incorporate all the equivalent expenditure information within their Social Fund expenditure figure.
General	DWP expenditure includes a sub category called "other expenditure". Details of this are not available and it is not known whether this is directly comparable to Northern Ireland expenditure.
Housing Benefit	The GB DWP figure includes "Amounts paid to Local Authorities". Full details of this expenditure is not available in the annual resource accounts. We are unable to establish if this is comparable to Northern Irelands DSD Housing Benefit costs.
Benefit Cap and Spare Room subsidy	DWP's expenditure figures will have been impacted by the introduction of these initiatives.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of applications which have been submitted to the Warm Homes Scheme in each of the last three years; and how many have been successful.

(AQW 40785/11-15)

Mr Storey: The table below details the number of eligible referrals received under the Warm Homes Scheme and the number of energy efficiency measures carried out in the last 3 years.

Year	*Referrals Received	Energy Efficiency Measures carried out
2011/12	17,189	10,654
2012/13	14,413	9,904
2013/14	14,210	8,718

* Referral means that a householder has contacted the Warm Homes Scheme seeking help, but their entitlement has not been confirmed.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development whether grants have been recovered by his Department pursuant to Article 4 of The Social Need (Northern Ireland) Order 1986; and if so, to detail the grants.

(AQW 40858/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Department has recovered grant expenditure pursuant to Article 4 (1) of the Social Need (Northern Ireland) Order 1986.

In the current financial year to date, the Department has recovered £1,125 in respect of £88 from the Women's Child Care Fund, £129 from an events grant, £102 from the Community Investment Fund and £806 from a community organisation.

The amount recovered in financial years can vary considerably and in two individual developments in previous years £352K and £7.75M was clawed back from a shopping centre and hotel development respectively.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development, whether decisions made by the Child Support Appeal Tribunals on referrals (under Article 28D(1)(b)) under Article 18 and/or Article 19, have the right of appeal under Regulation 22(1)(a) and (b) of the Child Support Order 1991, including whether there are any circumstances where this is not the case; and if so, to provide details.

(AQW 40960/11-15)

Mr Storey: Decisions made by an appeal tribunal do not have the right of appeal under Article 22(1)(a) and (b) of the Child Support (Northern Ireland) Order 1991. This is because this Article provides the right to appeal to a tribunal against a decision made by the Child Maintenance Service, as opposed to a decision made by an appeal tribunal.

Article 25 of the Child Support (Northern Ireland) Order 1991 provides the right to appeal the decision of an appeal tribunal to a Child Support Commissioner on a point of law.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development when the Northern Ireland Housing Executive plan to upgrade housing in the Nelson Drive Estate in Londonderry; and to detail the work that will be completed.

(AQW 40963/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that Nelson Drive is one street within the Caw estate, though locally the estate is often referred to as Nelson Drive estate. The Housing Executive has therefore provided the following information for the Caw estate, where they currently own 424 properties.

The Housing Executive advise that a kitchen replacement scheme for ten properties in Nelson Drive and 32 properties in Seymour Street is due on site in March 2015. All other properties in the estate have had their kitchens replaced.

The following streets in the estate are included in an External Cyclical Maintenance scheme which is currently programmed to begin in the last quarter of 2015/2016. The exact details of any work to be carried out will not be known until surveys have been completed:

- | | |
|--------------------|--------------------|
| ■ Auglish Court | ■ Drumgesh Gardens |
| ■ Brighter Court | ■ Esker Gardens |
| ■ Clonmakane Court | ■ Farlow Road |
| ■ Drumbane Gardens | ■ Garvagh Court |

In relation to heating upgrades, the Housing Executive is addressing 15 year old heating system installations as they occur. This involves various addresses throughout the estate which would have had oil installed as part of an adaptation.

All properties have double glazing.

Mr Byrne asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the current number of single story Housing Executive housing units in West Tyrone; and (ii) the current waiting list for these housing units.

(AQW 40987/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that, in relation to (i) they have 1,187 bungalows and 135 ground floor flats totalling 1,322 units of single story accommodation in West Tyrone; and in relation to (ii) there are 250 applicants on the waiting list for single story accommodation in West Tyrone of which 145 are in housing stress.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the maintenance costs associated with Northern Ireland Housing Executive land at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey in each of the last five years.

(AQW 41007/11-15)

Mr Storey: The costs associated with the maintenance of the area owned by the Housing Executive for the last five years at Knockenagh Avenue, Newtownabbey are detailed below.

Year	Cost (£)
2010	1304.69
2011	1329.43
2012	1354.67
2013	1328.41
2014	1406.68

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) what plans the Northern Ireland Housing Executive have to upgrade housing in the Fountain Estate in Londonderry; and (ii) how much has been spent on regeneration in the Fountain Estate in each of the last five years.

(AQW 41047/11-15)

Mr Storey: In relation to (i) the Housing Executive has advised that there are two heating installation schemes scheduled for Waterloo Place as follows:-

- 2015/16 16 dwellings at a cost of £80,000 and
- 2016/17 24 dwellings at a cost of £48,000

They have also advised that there are no plans for new build social housing in the Fountain estate at present as demand is being met through re-lets of existing stock.

In relation to (ii) the tables below detail the amounts spent on regeneration in the Fountain estate in each of the last five years: -

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the role of the Joint Government/Voluntary and Community Sector Forum.

(AQW 41066/11-15)

Mr Storey: My assessment of the Joint Forum is very positive. I see the Joint Forum as being responsible for promoting and regularly reviewing the implementation of the Concordat between the Voluntary and Community Sector and the Northern Ireland Government. This Concordat is the formal agreement which articulates the shared vision of these social partners as we build a participative, peaceful, equitable and inclusive community in Northern Ireland.

The Joint Forum is an important partnership between Government and the Voluntary and Community Sector which helps us work together to better serve the people in Northern Ireland. The Joint Forum is made up of representatives from Central and Local Government and the Voluntary and Community Sector and provides a mechanism to facilitate open discussion of key issues which shape the relationship between the Voluntary and Community sector and the Northern Ireland Government.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of applications in North Down that have been submitted to the Warm Homes Scheme in each of the last three years; and of these applications, how many have been successful.

(AQW 41079/11-15)

Mr Storey: NI Housing Executive are only able to supply information on the number of Warm Homes completed on a council basis for North Down and Ards areas, part of which make up the North Down constituency. This is due to the fact that the scheme managers do not report on demand on an individual council basis.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister for Social Development whether he has any plans to provide assistance for home owners who cannot afford to maintain their property.

Mr Storey: Between 2007 and 2014 my Department has invested nearly £200 million on improving private sector housing stock. £22.5m of this was for repair and improvement grants helping over 6,000 households, with almost £64m towards grants assisting 6,600 occupants with disabled adaptations. A further £105m in energy efficiency assistance to almost 90,000 households has been provided over the same period through the Warm Homes and Boiler Replacement schemes.

Budgets remain squeezed and my focus for the grant funding I have available will continue to be: improving energy efficiency, tackling fuel poverty, and supporting people with disabilities to adapt their homes.

In terms of private sector repair and improvement, grant funding will be limited and my Department is therefore looking at other opportunities which are sustainable into the future, including current practice in Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland where low cost loans are available to assist householders on affordable terms.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown of how much money has been provided under Neighbourhood Renewal to Protestant working class areas.

(AQW 41091/11-15)

Mr Storey: The table below details how much money has been provided under Neighbourhood Renewal to Protestant working class areas from the inception of the Strategy to 31 March 2014.

The 2011 Census figures have been used to identify the areas where the percentage population of Protestant and other Christian denominations (including Christian related) is 51% or greater.

	Neighbourhood Renewal Area	% of Population in NRA who are Protestant and other Christian Denominations (including Christian related)	Revenue 2003-2014	Capital 2003-2014	Total Revenue + Total Capital 2003-2014 (£)

	Total (£)				63,214,073.08

Note: Caution should always be exercised in making comparisons across Neighbourhood Renewal areas as a range of factors may influence expenditure. The main factors being the revenue investment in an area from lead Departments or from other initiatives/sources; history of capital investment and or proposed capital investment in an area from other initiatives or mainstream sources; size (population) of an area; geographical location and proximity to existing services; and priority needs identified in Action Plans.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development whether he will review the wording in letters reminding on the completion and return of ESA50 forms in people with established ill health and conditions, taking into consideration that many recipients are vulnerable and representations made in the interim on their behalf regarding Employment Support Allowance.

(AQW 41095/11-15)

Mr Storey: In March 2014 the Social Security Agency gave a commitment to conduct a review of written and verbal communications to Employment and Support Allowance claimants. A review is currently underway of all claimant facing forms and letters, identifying improvements to communications to aid understanding and clarity. This review will take account of the recommendations on improving correspondence with claimants from Dr Paul Litchfield's 2013 report, 'An Independent Review of the Work Capability Assessment – year four'.

The Agency is also committed to working closely with representative groups and individuals to ensure that they receive all the help they require with understanding their entitlements, assistance with claims making and also with making transitions within the benefits system.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development whether he will hold discussions with the Cabinet Office regarding the benefits that might be gained from introducing the National Citizen Service to Northern Ireland.

(AQW 41112/11-15)

Mr Storey: National Citizen Service (NCS) was developed as a Cabinet Office initiative aimed at providing young people of all backgrounds the opportunity and support to take on new challenges and learn new skills. My predecessor as Minister for Social Development held discussions with the Cabinet Office in 2013 regarding the possibility of running the programme here in Northern Ireland.

Following a successful pilot programme in 2012 funded by the Cabinet Office my department has funded an additional two programmes in 2013 and 2014 and involving in excess of 700 young people graduating from this programme. It has proved to be a great opportunity for our young people bringing huge personal benefits in terms of self awareness and development whilst at the same time giving the young people the opportunity to do something positive in their community.

It is complementary to the programmes my department is delivering under Neighbourhood Renewal and Community Development and also under its responsibilities for volunteering, where it aligns well with the Volunteering Strategy for NI (published March 2012). It is also consistent with the Delivering Social Change Agenda.

For all of these reasons I am pleased to state that my department has just agreed to fund a NI NCS programme which will run during the summer and autumn 2015. My expectation is that this NI NCS Programme will continue each year on a rolling basis until 2018 subject to available funding with between 350 and 450 young people participating each year.

I can also confirm that my departmental officials and I will maintain the good relationship we have with Cabinet Office as we continue to roll out this exciting programme.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the development of an Addressing Bureaucracy Code of Practice.

(AQW 41125/11-15)

Mr Storey: A code of practice entitled 'Code of Practice for Reducing Bureaucracy in Grant Funding to the Voluntary and Community Sector' has been developed in partnership between government and the voluntary and community sector and is due to be formally launched in March 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development what consideration has been given to allowing longer periods between reviews of Employment Support Allowance claimants who have been awarded the allowance under special circumstances.

Mr Storey: All claimants of Employment and Support Allowance, whether or not exceptional circumstances apply, are subject to reassessment of their work capability in order to ensure that they are receiving the correct amount of benefit and support.

The length of time between assessments can range from three months to three years depending on the claimant's medical condition, their age and any other circumstances such as upcoming treatment or surgery.

Dr Paul Litchfield's independent review of the Work Capability Assessment has recommended extending the review period to a maximum of five years for those claimants suffering severe incapacity as a result of degenerative brain disorders. My Department is currently carrying out a policy impact assessment with a view to taking this forward.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development how many homes availed of the Replacement Boiler Scheme in East Londonderry by 31 December 2014.

(AQW 41168/11-15)

Mr Storey: The East Londonderry parliamentary constituency largely comprises the council areas of Limavady and Coleraine. In those two council areas and since the start of the Boiler Replacement Scheme and up to 31 December 2014 a total of 794 homes have had new boilers installed under this scheme.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 40536/11-15, how revealing the highest amount of benefit paid to a single family in Northern Ireland would identify in any way the recipient household.

(AQW 41191/11-15)

Mr Storey: The United Kingdom Statistics Authority Code of Practice Principle 5, Practice 1 states that official statistics should not reveal the identity of any respondents with the risk of disclosure to include taking into account other relevant sources of information.

These sources may be private or public but the relevance of them is determined by whether they are likely reasonably to be used to identify an individual and reveal information about them. Thus one does not need to take into account all local sources but information likely to be available to third parties.

Where an answer involves a small number of cases, particularly if the count is 1 (which it is in this case as a single family), there is a possibility of identification or self-identification, which can lead to the discovery of rareness, or even uniqueness, in the population of the statistic.

For certain types of information, rareness or uniqueness may encourage others to seek out the individual, in particular with this single household where significant media and public interest may lie.

The threat or reality of this could cause harm or distress to the individual, or may lead them to claim that the statistics are inadequate to protect them, and therefore others.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the impact on people in fuel poverty who do not live in the target areas for the Affordable Warmth Scheme after 31 March 2015.

(AQW 41248/11-15)

Mr Storey: Since 2001 the Department has delivered energy efficiency improvements to 125,000 homes through the self referral Warm Homes Scheme. Yet despite this investment research carried out by the University of Ulster highlighted that over 33,000 households in Northern Ireland are in severe or extreme fuel poverty, that is, they need to spend more than 25% of their household income on energy costs. Many people who need help most have not applied for the assistance which has been available.

The Affordable Warmth Scheme was launched in September 2014, following two successful pilots over a 2 year period. In some of the targeted areas, fuel poverty prevalence was almost 80% and many of these households had not applied to the Warm Homes Scheme. These are the households that the Affordable Warmth Scheme will identify, approach, and persuade to take up the offer of the help available.

While the Affordable Warmth Scheme is at an early stage and is already being effectively delivered across all council areas, the existing Warm Homes Scheme will not end until 31st March 2015. Householders who may be eligible are encouraged to apply and take up on the energy efficiency measures which remain available through this scheme up until that date.

There is a limited budget available to tackle fuel poverty in Northern Ireland and it is important that we make the best use of this funding and ensure that we are targeting those vulnerable households. Whilst the scheme is primarily a targeted approach, there is a mechanism which will allow for non targeted referrals, however these should be the exception, where a household has been identified as vulnerable and living in severe fuel poverty. Councils will accept non targeted referrals that are supported with evidence from sources such as a health professional, or other local support services.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development what arrangements are being put in place to retain the expertise of staff who administered the Warm Homes Scheme after current the scheme cessation date of 31 March 2015.

(AQW 41249/11-15)

Mr Storey: The NI Housing Executive administers the Warm Homes Scheme and the Boiler Replacement Scheme on behalf of my Department. The skills and expertise in delivering both of these schemes will be critical to the successful delivery of The Affordable Warmth programme.

Those installers, who have experience with The Warm Homes and Boiler Replacement Scheme, will be able to carry out the installation measures which are grant funded under the new scheme.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the readiness of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and local government to administer the Affordable Warmth Scheme, including whether there is a need for the Warm Homes Scheme to be extended beyond 31 March 2015.

(AQW 41250/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Department has been working closely with both the NI Housing Executive and local councils to develop the new Affordable Warmth Scheme.

The Affordable Warmth Scheme was launched in September 2014 and although it is at an early stage it is already being effectively delivered across all councils areas. Whilst local councils are going through a period of significant restructure, officials have been working with council staff for over 2 years to pilot and develop the scheme. Each of the 11 lead councils has signed a Service Level Agreement with the Department demonstrating their commitment to delivering the new scheme. All councils have appointed a Co-ordinator as well as support staff for the scheme.

Current NI Housing Executive grants staff have been trained and are processing applications. They have also advised us that they are looking at what additional staffing resources will be required and anticipate that these will be put in place by April 2015.

The current Warm Homes Scheme contract has been extended to 31st March 2015 which was to allow for the Affordable Warmth Scheme to become established and embedded in the new structures. Due to procurement rules it is not possible to further extend the Warm Homes Scheme, nor is it possible to provide Affordable Warmth measures under the existing Warm Homes Scheme contract.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to detail (i) the support provided to Omagh District Council in relation to the development of a plan to develop St Lucia Barracks in Omagh once transferred from the Minister of Defence to the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister; and (ii) the discussions he has had with any other interested parties.
(AQW 41262/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department is committed to supporting the development of a Masterplan for the St Lucia site and has previously prepared a draft Masterplan for this site. This draft Masterplan could not go to public consultation as there were issues in relation to a restricted covenant on the deed of the site preventing its transfer from the Ministry of Defence (MOD) to OFMdFM. We have now been advised that MOD has addressed the outstanding issues and is prepared to transfer the site. As the previous draft Masterplan was prepared in 2010 it is appropriate that this document should be updated and all assumptions tested again before the document can go to Public Consultation. My officials are currently exploring mechanisms for the updating of this plan and to this end have been hosting a number of St. Lucia stakeholder meetings; these have included representatives from NI Environment Agency, Transport NI, Housing Executive, Department of Education, Omagh District Council, Planning Services and OFMdFM.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the total cost of fees paid to external consultants by housing associations for undertaking housing association stock condition surveys required by his Department's Audit office; and for his assessment of whether 100 per cent stock condition surveys are best value for money.
(AQW 41304/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department does not hold detail on fees paid to external consultants by Housing Associations for undertaking housing association stock condition surveys, therefore this information is not available.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the Boiler Replacement Scheme.
(AQW 41319/11-15)

Mr Storey: Since it was launched in September 2012, the Boiler Replacement Scheme has issued approvals to commence work to approximately 22,000 households. Of those, approximately 18,000 homes have carried out the work. On average households in a standard house type can save at least £250 on their fuel bills by replacing their boiler for a new more energy efficient condensing boiler. To date the Boiler Replacement Scheme has provided work to 2,000 separate installers who have carried out installation work under the scheme.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development, following the Creating Pathways to Success project, what change there has been in the percentage of school leavers with five or more GCSE's at grades A to C in the Coleraine Churchlands and Coleraine East areas.
(AQW 41323/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Creating Pathways to Success programme included pupils aged 14-16 who attended the Entitlement Framework courses in their schools and studied on a day release basis one day a week at College. It is too early, at this stage, to state the percentage of these pupils leaving school with formal qualifications. The project has however reported success in the numbers of pupils setting themselves individual targets and goals, both short and long-term; encouraging them to be proactive and forward thinking; and helping them increase motivation and confidence levels, all in relation to their current studies.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 13762/11-15, to detail the results of the investigations into the Tullyally and District Development Group.
(AQW 41334/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department's investigation into the Tullyally and District Development Group were concluded in July 2013. The investigation was unable to secure sufficient evidence to determine how much, if any, of the funds provided by the Department to pay for tax and National Insurance, were not properly expended. Furthermore, specifically pertaining to the matter of funds due to the HMRC, the investigation was unable to secure any evidence to determine whether criminal activity has taken place.

As a result of this case and the risks around HMRC payments which have been highlighted by it, my Department has introduced a new system of controls to ensure that funded groups are meeting their obligations. Funded organisations are now asked to provide proof to the Department that HMRC payments are up to date by submitting either their most recent HMRC real time PAYE record showing payments and outstanding balances for funded employees or (if the organisation does not operate HMRC real time) bank statements and other relevant supporting documentation that shows HMRC payments have been made.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister for Social Development how much his Department contributed to community festivals, on the basis of an approved business case, prior to the creation of the Community Festival fund in April 2006; and to detail (a) the names of the festivals; and (b) the amount allocated to each festival in each year.

(AQW 41614/11-15)

Mr Storey: In line with the Department for Social Development's Retention and Disposal Schedule, financial and project records are destroyed seven years after project completion. The Department, therefore, does not hold any information on funding of festivals prior to the creation of the Community Festivals Fund in April 2006.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the installation of double glazing in Housing Executive properties in North Down.

(AQO 7468/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that they currently have a stock of 3,059 properties in the North Down constituency of which 2,704 have had double glazing installed. The remaining 355 properties will have double glazed fitted through schemes which are currently on site.

Of the 2,704 properties that have had double glazing installed 680 of those were completed in various schemes throughout the North Down constituency since the Programme for Government target was established. The total cost of schemes completed and those currently on site is approximately £2.2m.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the funding mechanisms for transferring funding to local government to support the transfer of functions.

(AQO 7469/11-15)

Mr Storey: Funding to Local Government will be provided by the Regional Rates System. DFP and DOE officials are considering options to address the impact of the delay in transferring Urban functions on the funding mechanism. The Department will be advised of the outcome of this work in due course.

The member may wish to note that while DSD has responsibility for urban regeneration and associated budgets, DARD also has responsibility for regeneration in rural areas. DSD has decided to devolve the urban regeneration budget to local government, while DARD has not done the same for their rural regeneration budget.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on how his Department is supporting women in disadvantaged areas.

(AQO 7470/11-15)

Mr Storey: Over the past number of years my Department has invested heavily in supporting women in disadvantaged areas.

DSD in partnership with the Department for Agriculture and Rural Development (DARD) has established a specialist support programme to Women's Sector organisations across Northern Ireland.

Since October 2013 DSD has allocated £519,344 in funding to the Training for Women Network Ltd (TWN) who lead a consortium of seven organisations formed as the Women's Regional Consortium. This funding was for the period 1 October 2013 – 31 March 2015. (Organisations listed at appendix A)

The work of the consortium is key to supporting all women across disadvantaged and rural areas.

In addition, in the year 13/14 a total of £4,348,667 was provided by the NI Housing Executive through the Supporting People Programme to support Women's Aid services (breakdown at appendix B).

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Social Development, in relation to the awarding of social housing points and allowances, if any exemption can be afforded to half-siblings from the standard sharing rules.
(AQO 7471/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing (NI) Order 1981 defines a 'family' as including siblings and half-sibling relationships. The Housing Executive has advised that its Housing Selection Scheme uses this definition and therefore no difference is made on this basis when awarding points.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Social Development if he will provide assistance for home owners whose homes continue to deteriorate as a result of the removal of grants between 2007 and 2011.
(AQO 7472/11-15)

Mr Storey: No grants have been removed. Private housing grants have continued to be made albeit at a reduced rate. Nevertheless, the Member will wish to note that between 2007 and 2014 my Department has invested nearly £200 million on improving private sector housing stock. Some £22.5m was for repair and improvement grants to help over 6,000 households, and almost £64m towards grants assisting 6,600 occupants with disabled adaptations. In addition £105m was provided for energy efficiency assistance to almost 90,000 households has been provided over the same period thorough the Warm Homes and Boiler Replacement schemes.

Budgets remain squeezed and my focus for the grant funding I have available will continue to be: improving energy efficiency, tackling fuel poverty, and supporting people with disabilities to adapt their homes.

In terms of private sector repair and improvement, grant funding will be limited and my Department is therefore looking at other opportunities which are sustainable into the future, including current practice in Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland where low cost loans are available to assist householders on affordable terms.

Mr Byrne asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the construction of the cycle and pedestrian bridge in Strabane.
(AQO 7473/11-15)

Mr Storey: I am pleased to confirm that the Strabane Pedestrian and Cycle Bridge project is progressing well. Work started last summer and is advancing quickly. The steelwork should start to be erected in March and the bridge is due to be completed by June.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the current work of the Social Housing Reform Programme.
(AQO 7474/11-15)

Mr Storey: During 2015 the Social Housing Reform Programme will bring forward reform proposals in a number of areas. On 15 January 2015 the Programme published its draft tenant participation strategy for consultation. It is also on track to publish in March, consultation proposals for a new regulatory framework for social housing.

Concurrently the programme continues to develop its proposals for a Northern Ireland social housing rent policy and for the future structures to deliver social housing. These proposals are currently planned to be brought forward later in 2015.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister for Social Development, given that the Executive Summary of the South East Coast Masterplan, published in January 2013, identified the need for an indoor leisure facility to be built in Warrenpoint, what discussions have taken place between officials from his Department and senior officials from Newry and Mourne District Council or Down District Council to progress this facility.
(AQO 7475/11-15)

Mr Storey: Officials from my Department meet on a regular basis with officials from Newry and Mourne Council and Down District Council to progress actions outlined in the South East Coast Masterplan such as a leisure facility in Warrenpoint.

Newry and Mourne District Council commissioned Williamson Consulting to produce a Feasibility Study for a Community Hub in Warrenpoint which would include leisure provision. I understand that the Study was completed in October 2014 and that Council is currently considering the recommendations.

Mr Wilson asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of the changes in the level of fuel poverty since 2012. (AQO 7476/11-15)

Mr Storey: A household is considered to be in fuel poverty if it needs to spend more than 10% of its income to heat the home. There are three main factors that contribute to a household being in fuel poverty, these are income, fuel prices and energy efficiency. While improvements to the energy efficiency of homes helps to reduce the risk of fuel poverty, it is important to acknowledge that low income and high fuel prices are the main contributors to fuel poverty. Almost 70% of homes in Northern Ireland rely on oil to heat their homes.

The 2011 Northern Ireland House Condition Survey reported that 42% (294,240) of households in Northern Ireland were in fuel poverty. The House Condition Survey provides a robust estimate of fuel poverty in Northern Ireland and the next survey is planned to be undertaken in 2016. Recently oil prices have reduced significantly and it is reasonable to assess that the level of fuel poverty in Northern Ireland has decreased in line with this oil price reduction.

My Department, working with the Housing Executive and other partners, is modelling the impact of reduced fuel prices on the level of fuel poverty.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Mr Flanagan asked the Assembly Commission to detail any prayer groups, or similar gatherings, either formal or informal, organised by the Commission, Commission staff or others, that take place within Parliament Buildings. (AQW 41118/11-15)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Assembly Commission does not organise any prayer groups, or similar, for its employees or other building users.

I am aware that informal groups or gatherings are arranged from time to time by Commission employees. These take place within or in the vicinity of Parliament Buildings. These include a prayer and Bible study meeting for people working in the Building, a reading group and a walking group.

Mr McGlone asked the Assembly Commission how many mobile phones are on contract with mobile provider EE; and to detail the total monthly cost of the contract. (AQW 41308/11-15)

Mr Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): I refer to the Assembly question which you tabled for written answer, namely:

“To ask the Assembly Commission how many mobile phones are on contract with mobile provider EE; and to detail the total monthly cost of the contract.”

(AQW 41308/11-15)

The Northern Ireland Assembly currently has 75 mobile phones on contract with EE, 67 ‘smart’ phones and 8 standard phones. The agreed monthly cost of the contract, which includes the data package, phone care insurance and mobile device management is £1,311.50.

Fraud Investigations

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many fraud investigations have taken place in each university and regional colleges in each of the last three years.

(AQW 40754/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): The number of fraud investigations which have taken place in each University and regional college in each of the last three years is as per the table below.

Department of Finance and Personnel

In Bound Volume 100, page WA 51 please replace AQW 38871/11-15 with:

Trade Unions

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how much public money is paid to Trade Unions on an annual basis, broken down by Department.

(AQW 38871/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): In 2013-14 no public money was paid directly to Trade Union organisations by my Department. However, the Department paid £187k in salary costs in respect of Trade Union Representatives and their administrative support staff.

This response is provided for the Department of Finance and Personnel only as the information for all departments is not held centrally. The Member should contact individual departments for their information.

Department of Justice

In Bound Volume 100, page WA 332 please replace AQW 39794/11-15 with:

Sexual Offences

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, based on the date of sex-offender convictions resulting in a requirement to sign the Sex Offender's register, (i) how many people have been convicted of a sexual offence in each of the last six years; (ii) how many had a previous record for sexual offences; and (iii) how many committed any further sexual offences.

(AQW 39794/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): I am writing to correct an error contained in my answer of 19 December 2014 to an Assembly question which you tabled in relation to sex offender convictions, namely AQW/39794/11-15.

My response referred to the following table of figures:

Information relating to persons required to sign the Sex Offenders register as a result of a conviction for a sexual offence, 2010 – 2013

Year	Persons convicted for a sexual ^{1,2} offence	Individuals with previous record for sexual offences	Individuals with subsequent convictions for sexual offences
2010	102	4	0
2011	113	10	0
2012	178	14	4
2013	169	10	0

This should have read:

Information relating to persons required to sign the Sex Offenders register as a result of a conviction for a sexual offence, 2010 – 2013

Year	Persons convicted for a sexual ^{1,2} offence	Individuals with previous record for sexual offences	Individuals with subsequent convictions for sexual offences
2010	102	11	5
2011	113	13	8
2012	178	29	9
2013	169	27	2

Please accept my apologies for this error, which was caused by a mistake in bespoke computer syntax for this question.

Minister of Finance and Personnel

2.4 Amendment 1

Proposed:

Leave out all after the first 'Assembly' and insert:

'notes the lack of transparency contained in the programme of expenditure proposals for 2015-16; believes that the failure of many Departments to produce draft spending and saving plans weakened and invalidated the process; notes with perplexity how the tens of thousands of consultation responses could have been analysed between the close of the consultation period on the 29 December 2014 and the Executive final decision only two weeks later; notes that the proposals were created in a vacuum of strategic direction and have not been based on a revised Programme for Government; and calls on the Minister of Finance and Personnel to modify the proposals, as set out in the Budget laid before the Assembly on 19 January 2015, including (i) removing the £26m DEL allocated for the Social Investment Fund, in light of its inability to spend the budget it had been allocated between 2011-2015; (ii) removing the reference to the relocation of the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development headquarters to Ballykelly, as the project should not continue until a full business case is produced and value for money has been demonstrated - and changing its budget allocation accordingly; (iii) allocating £5m Resource DEL to the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to partially alleviate the pressures on the Health and Social Care Trusts; (iv) allocating £3m Resource DEL to the Department for Regional Development to partially assist with funding Northern Ireland Water to the PC15 final determination; (v) allocating £1.5m Resource DEL to the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure to partially alleviate the reductions to the arts and Northern Ireland museums; (vi) allocating £1.5m Resource DEL to the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to partially alleviate the reduction to the Fire and Rescue Service; (vii) allocating £15m Capital DEL to the Department for Regional Development to partially alleviate the pressures on Transport NI and to assist with funding Northern Ireland Water to the PC15 final determination.'

‘Discretionary support

130A.—(1) The Department may, in accordance with regulations under this section —

- (a) make payments by way of grant or loan to prescribed persons;
- (b) provide, or arrange for the provision of, goods or services to prescribed persons.

(2) Anything done under subsection (1)(a) or (b) is referred to in this section as the provision of discretionary support.

(3) Regulations may make provision —

- (a) for the Department to provide discretionary support only in prescribed circumstances;
- (b) conferring a discretion on the Department (subject to any provision made by virtue of paragraph (c) or (d)) —
 - (i) as to whether or not to provide discretionary support in a particular case; and
 - (ii) as to the nature of the discretionary support and (in the case of support by way of payments) as to the amount of the payments and the period for or in respect of which they are made;
- (c) imposing a limit on the amount of the discretionary support that the Department may make in any particular case;
- (d) restricting the period for or in respect of which the Department may provide discretionary support in any particular case;
- (e) for claims for discretionary support to be made in the prescribed form and manner and for the procedure to be followed in dealing with and disposing of such claims;
- (f) imposing conditions on persons claiming or receiving discretionary support requiring them to provide to the Department such information as may be prescribed;
- (g) for the disclosure of information relating to discretionary support in prescribed circumstances or to prescribed persons;
- (h) authorising the Department in prescribed circumstances to recover by prescribed means discretionary payments made under this section;
- (i) requiring or authorising reviews (whether by the Department or a prescribed person) of decisions made by the Department with respect to the provision of discretionary support or the recovery of payments made under this section;
- (j) for such other matters as appear to the Department to be necessary or expedient in connection with the provision of discretionary support, including provision creating criminal offences and provision amending or applying (with or without modification) any statutory provision.

(4) In this section “prescribed” means prescribed by, or determined in accordance with, regulations under this section.

(5) Discretionary support is not to be regarded as a social security benefit; but regulations under this section may provide for any statutory provision relating to a social security benefit (or to such benefits generally) to apply with prescribed modifications to discretionary support.

(6) Regulations shall not be made under this section unless a draft of the regulations has been laid before, and approved by a resolution of, the Assembly.
