T3. Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Justice, given that it has recently come to his attention in answers to questions for written answer that over £10 million has been spent in repair and maintenance work at HMP Maghaberry in the last four years, to provide a clear explanation as to why this £10 million was needed. (AQT 2643/11-15)

Mr Ford: I was aware that Mr Anderson was aware of this, given the way he ran to the press to talk about what he described as a fairly excessive budget spend on the issue. Sadly, he did not check up on the facts in the first place. Compare, for example, the maintenance spend at Maghaberry with that in modern Scottish prisons: we find that, in 2014-15, Maghaberry spent £22-50 per square metre on general property maintenance, and the Scottish prison spent £28 per square metre. Indeed, since devolution, we have seen the overall cost of maintenance at Maghaberry reduced by over 38%. Perhaps Mr Anderson might like to ask his colleague the MP for Upper Bann to ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what went wrong before devolution.

Mr Anderson: OK, I am being asked questions now. Minister, there was £400,000 also spent, which was termed by the Department as "a small amount", and I do not think that that was a small amount by any stretch of the imagination. We need to know how and why it was spent. Minister, do you agree with me that those high costs highlight an even bigger problem in the service, which is that the prisons are seriously understaffed? If you do agree, many feel that the safety of prison officers has been compromised.

Mr Ford: Sorry, Mr Deputy Speaker. I have just told Mr Anderson that costs are going down, and now he has asked me to agree with him that the high costs mean that there is a problem. I will accept his logic entirely and accept that the Prison Service is getting better.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I call Mr William Irwin for a topical question.

Mr Irwin: Thank you, Mr Deputy Speaker. [Interruption.]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Order, please. Mr Irwin, will you resume your seat? Sorry, some Members to my right are insisting on speaking from a sedentary position. That means that I cannot hear the Member who is asking the question and, perhaps more importantly, that I cannot hear the Minister.

Victims of Crime Fund: Elderly Victims

T4. Mr Irwin asked the Minister of Justice, whilst welcoming his recent announcement on increased support for victims of crime through the victims of crime fund, what portion of the fund will be allocated specifically to support and help elderly and vulnerable victims of crime, particularly those whose homes have been burgled. (AQT 2644/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is not possible to give the figures at that level of detail, given that the funding is delivered through some of our voluntary sector partners that deal with this issue, particularly Victim Support and the NSPCC. Therefore, I cannot say how we could possibly break that down. It would be a requirement to find it from the voluntary groups. I am not sure that it would be a terribly good use of their resources to chase up that level of detail rather than asking them to provide the services.

Mr Irwin: I thank the Minister for his response. Does the Minister accept that the elderly and vulnerable who have been victims of crime in their home feel very vulnerable and should be worthy of funding?

Mr Ford: I accept that a number of older people feel vulnerable, even though the statistic is that 2% of violent crime is directed against older people, who constitute 16% of the population, but there is no doubt that there are fears of issues like domestic burglary. That is why a lot of work has been done, principally under the auspices of policing and community safety partnerships (PCSPs) across Northern Ireland, to provide various security aids. I visited some of those schemes in a number of different areas. Good work is being done, and I am keen to encourage that, including using the proceeds of criminal assets to help to fight crime. Where appropriate, local organisations can assist in installing and providing the kind of equipment that can help to provide reassurance. People should be aware that the risk to older people in this society is very low, but there is no doubt that the fear of crime amongst older people remains at a fairly high level.

Youth Justice Agency: Strategic Partnerships

T5. Mr Douglas asked the Minister of Justice to outline the work the Youth Justice Agency has done to date to develop strategic partnerships with the Department of Education, particularly for under-18s, following his earlier mention of the Prison Service and the further education colleges. (AQT 2645/11-15)

Mr Ford: Mr Douglas raises an entirely valid point. Very similar work is going on at Woodlands Juvenile Justice Centre. A few weeks ago, I met the Education Minister, John O'Dowd, at Woodlands, and we looked at how we can improve the quality of teaching provided there. There is no doubt that there are difficulties for the Youth Justice Agency in employing teachers, specifically the external services that they are unable to access because they are not teachers in a recognised institution. Officials from the two Departments have been looking at that. I do not yet have a conclusion, but I hope that we will see something fairly speedily.

Mr Douglas: I am sure that the Minister will agree that we are talking about some of the most vulnerable young people. Will he agree to keep the House informed of developments with Woodlands?

Mr Ford: I certainly will. Probably one of the best opportunities that we have is the use of the education other than at school scheme, which, potentially, would allow Woodlands to be recognised as an education provider. That would mean that, for example, staff there would have access to professional training courses, which they do not currently because they are not employed in an appropriate place, but I will keep the House in general and Mr Douglas in particular informed.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Question 6 has been withdrawn.

Policing: Banbridge and Craigavon

T7. Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Justice whether he accepts that, through changes to neighbourhood policing in the ABC council area, policing in the Banbridge and Craigavon areas has been run down. (AQT 2647/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have two difficulties in responding to that, the first of which is the fundamental one: this is an issue for the Chief Constable, the Policing Board and the new PCSP that will shortly be established in the Armagh, Banbridge and Craigavon (ABC) council. That will be the appropriate place to discuss those issues rather than from my part as Minister, because I suspect that, if I engaged in too much of that conversation, I would be seen by the Chief Constable and others to be interfering in his responsibilities and those of the Policing Board, and I would not wish to come across members of the Policing Board, especially those in the House.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Perhaps the supplementary will be a bit more direct, Mr Gardiner.

Mr Gardiner: I hope so. The Minister needs to accept some accountability for this: he works with the PSNI daily. Does the Minister accept that neighbourhood policing connects the police with the population on the ground and that his decision has only put greater distance between the police officers and the community that they are here to serve?

Mr Ford: I am slightly perturbed by the phrase "his decision", because the Member appears to refer to a decision of mine. The only decision that I have taken about the provision of resources for neighbourhood policing in Banbridge, Craigavon or anywhere else in Northern Ireland has been to protect the budget of the Police Service as much as I can by making cuts of only 5·7% in the policing budget this year against the 22% cuts being made in the core Department of Justice. I have not taken any decision that has made those matters worse, but there is no doubt, as I said earlier and will doubtless say on future occasions, that the difficult financial situation makes it difficult for a range of public agencies to provide the service that the public are used to.

Internet Safety: DOJ Actions

T8. Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Justice, in light of the tragic death of Tyrone teenager Ronan Hughes, to outline what measures his Department is taking to highlight the dangers faced by young people who use the Internet and social media sites. (AQT 2648/11-15)

Mr Ford: Given that tragic death, we should certainly be concerned about the issue. A lot of work has been done on Internet-related issues, although, because of the telecommunications aspect, they are principally reserved matters. Good work has been done involving the Police Service, and a lot of educational work is being done through a variety of organisations. I certainly trust that that tragic death will, as Ronan's parents have made it, become an issue that can be used to ensure that young people are made aware of the dangers of the Internet and are protected from those who would harm them on it.

Mr McAleer: Does the Minister share the view that fake accounts, which are believed to be operated by international criminal gangs, need to be tackled?

Mr Ford: Yes, they most certainly need to be tackled. When we are talking about gangs that are operating from other jurisdictions, as Mr McAleer highlighted, and targeting young people in these islands, it is very difficult to ensure that they are tackled easily. However, there are wider issues. Given the specialist nature of the matter, there is limited expertise in Northern Ireland. We at least now benefit from the input of the National Crime Agency in helping us to fight these criminals.

Sexual Abuse and Terrorism Cases: Sir Keir Starmer Report

T9. Mr Cree asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of Sir Keir Starmer's report on the independent review of the prosecution of related sexual abuse and terrorism cases. (AQT 2649/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is not entirely for me to give an assessment of the Keir Starmer report; it is an issue for the Director of Public Prosecutions to follow through. I welcome the fact that he has accepted the report in full. I welcome the fact that he has apologised to the victims and I welcome that he is clearly putting actions in train in the Public Prosecution Service to make those necessary changes. I had a brief discussion with the DPP before the report was published and I had a subsequent discussion with him last week. I have no doubt that he is taking the report seriously and ensuring that the Public Prosecution Service learns from it.

Mr Cree: I thank the Minister for that. Bearing in mind the outcome of the report, does the Minister not think that the Director of Public Prosecutions should have resigned?

Mr Ford: No, I do not, for the very simple reason that he was not in post when those issues first came up and was not the person taking the decisions. Rather than calling for resignations, it is far more important to ensure that organisations learn lessons from reports such as this.

Policing: Public Confidence

T10. Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Justice whether he believes that revelations from the 'Panorama' programme will affect confidence in policing, given that a further 'Prime Time' programme will air tonight. (AQT 2650/11-15)

Mr Ford: I would be in serious danger of pre-empting a debate that we are due to have in the House shortly if I went too far into that detail. There is no doubt that the revelations in 'Panorama', the subsequent local programme and, potentially, 'Prime Time' will cause people to have concerns about the behaviour of a number of organisations in the past. They should not have any effect on confidence in policing today, because we see a very different police service, which is fully accountable to the Policing Board, of which Ms Ruane is a member, has the highest human rights standards and is operating in a way and in a very different place from the circumstances that applied in the 1970s and 1980s.

Social Development

DSD: Asset Disposal

1. Mrs Overend asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the disposal of surplus assets from his Department and its arm's-length bodies. (AQO 8406/11-15)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): My Department adheres to best practice in identifying and disposing of surplus assets. This best practice is set out in the Department of Finance and Personnel's guidance, 'Disposal of Surplus Public Property In Northern Ireland'. Last year, for example, my Department achieved £3·38 million of receipts from the sale of surplus assets, and has a target to achieve £5 million in the current financial year. I am pleased to report that we are well on course to achieving this target.

In the broader context, the Executive approved their asset management strategy in June 2013. One of the recommendations was to establish a central disposal unit in DFP properties division by April 2017 for the processing of all surplus assets from all Departments. This is being taken forward under the reform of property management programme, which is a DFP project supported by the Strategic Investment Board. My Department is fully engaged in that process.

The Housing Executive has advised that it has 21 sites on its land disposal programme 2015-16 for sale on the open market, valued at £1·9 million. Offers have been received on seven sites, totalling almost £0·57 million, but no sales have yet been completed. The value of the undeveloped land schedule surplus sites sold in 2014-15 was £160,450, and in 2013-14 it was £117,500. The Housing Executive has advised that the figures at two above do not include land transfers to housing associations, which are at nil consideration as they do not represent the total of all land disposals, for example open space lands and leases.

Mrs Overend: I thank the Minister for the vast figures he outlined there. While I recognise that, on paper, his Department does well on capital receipts, does he accept that much of it comes from the Northern Ireland Housing Executive using public funds to pay his Department, so it is not true revenue in people's eyes? Given the extent of surplus lands owned by the Housing Executive, for instance, does the Minister believe that the target he referred to, and which he is well under way to reaching, is possibly too low?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for her supplementary question. Obviously, in any of these, I would like to be in a position where we disposing of assets in a way that is generating more revenue for us, given the debate we are having in the House today on the Budget. However, I think that the targets have to be realistic, and, if you look at the past record on this, you will see that there has been an attempt to ensure that we did not overestimate what was achievable. As a result, the amount of money that has come in has been realistic. The Member made the point that this is all public money, and she is right. This is all under the responsibility and due diligence of the public purse, and I think that that is all the more reason why we have to ensure that, when we possibly can, we get the best possible outcome for the sales we enter into.

Mr Rogers: Minister, has your Department bought any new buildings either in the last financial year or this year?

Mr Storey: I have not got the detail on the particular issue that the Member raises. I will provide him with the specific detail.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a fhreagraí go dtí seo. How many district councils have requested the transfer of DSD staff to support the transfer of regeneration powers and functions to local government?

Mr Storey: As the Member is aware, we are specifically talking about land purchase and land disposal, but I am quite happy to refer to the issue of staff. I have continued to have discussions with the councils about the potential success of the Regeneration Bill, which will come up later on in questions for oral answer.

If the Bill is passed and the transfer of functions takes place, it will be an issue for the individual councils. To date, a small number of councils have expressed an interest. We will continue to work with councils to maximise the benefit for them and agree the ultimate complement. I am quite happy to provide the Member with the actual numbers for all the councils, but they are relatively small.

Urban Regeneration Projects: Resources

2. Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Social Development to outline the resources available to continue with urban regeneration projects. (AQO 8407/11-15)

Mr Storey: As you are aware, under the reform of local government my Department will confer powers and budgets to enable councils to decide how best to take forward regeneration and community development in their areas.

The financial allocation to local government from 1 April 2016 is £56.5 million. In order to determine the percentage of the £56.5 million that should be allocated to each council, the Department devised a funding allocation model. The allocation to each council is determined largely on the basis of income-deprived population settlement bands for tackling disadvantage; total population for physical development; income-deprived population of district for community development; and programme costs, excluding the Laganside, for salaries.

In terms of human resources, arrangements are in place to allow the new councils access, on a voluntary secondment basis, to staff from my Department with regeneration and community development expertise. My officials will continue to liaise with councils to determine their requirements, as I mentioned in answer to the previous question.

In terms of general assistance, my officials are working closely with councils to assist them in putting in place effective arrangements to meet the needs of their communities. Officials recently reviewed all existing projects for support in 2015-16, and the outcome of these reviews is being made available to councils to enable them to take informed decisions about the arrangements that they wish to put in place. Indeed, I recently met my officials in connection with the community planning element of all of this. I had some concerns about how we were implementing this and wanted to be absolutely sure that the functions for which my Department is responsible —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): The Minister's two minutes are up.

Mr Storey: — are being exercised with the councils.

Mr Hilditch: I thank the Minister for his detailed answer. I am glad to hear that the Department will continue to liaise with councils. Can he give us an overview of how the financial allocation to each council was determined?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his supplementary. This issue caused concern and raised questions. I endeavoured during conversations with councils to explain it to them as well as I could so that they are absolutely sure that we endeavoured to do everything possible to make a fair allocation across the 11 councils.

The development of the methodology for the distribution of funds for urban regeneration and community development was the outworking of the Executive's policy decision to transfer the functions in the first place. The model is designed to provide local government with objectively based allocations that take into account both population and deprivation. DSD can transfer to new councils only the relevant budgets and the physical assets associated with the delivery.

The budget being transferred is mostly what is being used for the current implementation of urban policies by the Department. As the Member knows, those policies currently applied only to settlements of 4,500 persons and above, the number recommended by the Northern Ireland Statistical Research Agency in its report in 2005. However, the Department recognised that the new councils may want to deliver regeneration programmes in smaller settlements, and for this reason the proposed distribution of funding is based on population figures down to settlements of 1,000 persons, resulting overall in councils with more rural populations receiving a greater share of the budget than would have been the case if we had decided to apply the 4,500 urban cut-off rigidly. This has resulted in a skewing of resources from largely urban councils to their more rural counterparts in places such as Fermanagh and the west. That was welcomed by those councils, which had felt that smaller councils were left with a lesser amount from the allocation process.

Mr Ramsey: Acknowledging the serious importance of urban regeneration, I ask the Minister whether he can assure the House that targeting social need will still be the priority in the allocation of that funding?

Mr Storey: Of course, if the Bill is successful and the powers are transferred in 2016, it will ultimately be for the councils to determine how they use that money. I have said that to councils that I have met. There is a concern now growing among some councils across Northern Ireland that members of those authorities may have different priorities and a different focus. What I am ensuring is that it is entirely an issue for the councils as to how they use that money, but I am also ensuring that they take into account the needs of the community that they serve. If we believe that all council is local, surely those at the grass roots of our political process should be best placed to be able to identify the needs in their locality.

The other element is that councils now have a responsibility for community planning, so there has to be a joined-up approach. It is something that I have a concern about and something that I want to ensure is done in a way that maximises the best possible outcome for the councils, but they, as the lead authority when they have the power and the resource, will have to determine, in conjunction with their elected representatives and the information and guidance that is issued by my Department and that comes out of the community planning process, that they are doing it in a way that is best tailored to meet the needs of their community.

Mr Beggs: Will the Minister confirm that it would be inequitable if he were to restrict funding to, say, groups larger than 4,000? In fact, it was for equality reasons that smaller pockets of deprivation were not excluded in the past. Will he confirm that they will continue to be assisted in the future?

Mr Storey: The aim is to ensure that this is equitable, as far as we can make it so, within the resources that are available. Obviously, there was an issue in the past, where there was a cut-off point of 4,500. There was a view that funding should be for smaller conurbations. Councils have made representations — I have had discussions now with most of them. I think that there are two councils that I still have to meet, but there was certainly a clear indication from local authorities that they wanted to be in a position in which they were able to be of help and assistance where there was a smaller number of persons within their particular community. However, given the amount of money that we are talking about here, it is a limited resource, and there are many needs, whether they are in conurbations of 1,000 persons or beyond 4,500. The council will have to ensure that it does this in the best way possible, and in a way that does not create the situation that the Member outlined.

Mr Allister: On the public realm scheme's contribution to urban regeneration, can the Minister respond to the concerns of traders in Church Street in Ballymena that, at the onset of the scheme a couple of weeks ago, the pavements were dug up, after which everything was at a standstill for days on end with no further work done, much in contradiction of the assurances given to the traders in advance of the work starting? Can the Minister seek to address and tighten up that situation?

Mr Storey: Although the Member's question is slightly beyond the remit of the original question, I am quite happy to answer it.

The money that is being invested in Ballymena is somewhere in the region of £4.6 million, which is very welcome by the traders and the town. I am sure that the Member, like me, would have been the first to complain if we did not have an investment in Ballymena, which is a premier town in Northern Ireland for retail and many of the other shopping experiences that people enjoy when they go there.

On the specifics, I have met individual traders, and I am going back again this week to meet the council on the issue, because it will have responsibility for the management of the works. The work on the Ballymena public realm scheme actually commenced on the ground on 18 May. It is anticipated to last some 80 weeks and to be completed by November 2016. I take on board the concerns that have been raised and continue to be raised. I am asking the council and the contractor to ensure that everything is done to minimise the disruption, because an 80-week project of this magnitude will undoubtedly have particular challenges. It is important that we work with the traders. I have received correspondence from my colleague the MP for the area on compensation for traders. Other requests have come in on specifics, and we are working our way through those so that we do all that we can.

The other point is that we have learned from other public realm schemes that have been carried out in this way so that we can avoid some of their issues. I trust that that will be the case with Ballymena.

3.00 pm

Social Housing

3. Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development to outline his Department's social housing provision. (AQO 8408/11-15)

Mr Storey: In the four-year period just ended, my Department funded registered housing associations to provide over 6,100 new high-quality, energy-efficient social homes in areas of need across Northern Ireland. The Programme for Government target set by the Northern Ireland Executive was to deliver 6,000 houses, so the overachievement was a good result for those on the housing waiting list. Plans are to deliver at least 1,500 more new homes in the current year.

At this point, I acknowledge the contribution made by the housing association sector, not least the £315 million of private finance that was levered in to part fund the building programme. That makes a tremendous addition to the work that we can do every year to help those in housing need. Housing associations build some of the very best housing to be found in Northern Ireland. They provide not only housing for families but supported housing for some of our most vulnerable citizens. We can be rightly proud that our social housing standards are very much the envy of other jurisdictions.

In fact, if we look at output in the rest of the UK, we see that we are doing much better. Recent figures show that in England one new social house was being provided for every 60 applicants on the waiting list. The figures for Scotland and Wales were better, but the figure for Northern Ireland was best, with one social house being built for every 30 or so applicants. In relative terms, therefore, we are outperforming the rest of the United Kingdom on this issue.

Lord Morrow: I thank the Minister for that comprehensive reply. I am sure that he, like everyone else here, recognises that there is a considerable waiting list. Can the Minister tell us whether he and his Department are on target with all its housing provision, or is there a miss or a lack here?

Mr Storey: In relation to whether the targets for the delivery of social and affordable housing have been met, I think the answer is yes. A total of 10,066 homes have been delivered in Northern Ireland under the current Programme for Government. As I said, 6,101 of those were social homes and 3,965 were affordable homes. Believe it or not, that is over 2,000 more homes than were promised. It is not often that Ministers stand in the House and are able to say that something has exceeded a Programme for Government target. The individual targets for all four years were exceeded each year, with 1,410 homes delivered in 2011-12; 1,379 delivered in 2012-13; almost 1,300 delivered in 2013-14; and 2,013 delivered in 2014-15. That all goes well for how we plan in the future. It is a good news story, particularly for those who are now in receipt of good homes. I look forward to ensuring that we continue to do the same in the future.

Mrs D Kelly: I listened carefully to what the Minister had to say. There is no doubt that there have been some achievements. Nonetheless, Minister, would you not acknowledge that we are in a housing crisis and have been for some time? To compare us with GB is to compare one crisis with another. Did you give further thought in your review of the Housing Executive to whether it would be able to put in a submission to the European Investment Bank to build houses again?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for her question and for the work she does on the issue on the Committee for Social Development. Obviously, she has a particular interest in this.

I would like to see the Housing Executive again at the forefront of building and providing homes. However, over the last number of years, we have seen the challenges that have been created. Since I have been in post, I have seen the variety of housing provision. It cannot be one-size-fits-all, so it has to be a multiplicity of providers. That will come from the Housing Executive being a good landlord and ensuring that its properties are kept up to the standard that they should be. We have fallen behind on that. Very soon, I will announce the outcome of the Savills stock condition survey, which will clearly indicate the huge investment needed. We have seen progress made with housing associations. I am having ongoing discussions with them on how we can improve our relationships, and they are key. There are also issues that Members have raised in the House about tower blocks and the way in which the Housing Executive needs to address those. All those matters are under consideration in a variety of ways. However, the focus must remain for me, as the Minister, and the Department to continue to work with all providers to get the best possible outcome and delivery for the people of Northern Ireland.

Mr McGimpsey: I agree with the Minister that we provide good public housing. The problem, of course, is that there is simply not enough of it. What effect will the projected 2,000 properties for this year being reduced to 1,500 — a 25% reduction — have on the waiting list, particularly for the provision of vital family-sized housing?

Mr Storey: When you have to cut your cloth according to the amount of money you have, it will obviously have an impact. I would like to be exceeding the plan and doing more than we intended. Much has been achieved, and no doubt much more needs to be done, but, in the current circumstances of a reduced overall amount of money, we have to do the best we can with the money that is available. However, there is no doubt that that has an impact on communities and locations where there is a greater need or demand. That is the challenge for my Department and everybody, which follows on from my comments to the previous Member about all those involved in the provision of housing in Northern Ireland.

I attended a meeting recently with the CBI and had a useful exchange with a variety of providers from co-ownership providers to bankers. It was an open discussion around how we could continue to provide good homes in Northern Ireland. Let us not leave out the private sector, which continues to build houses and is showing some recovery in Northern Ireland. It has to be an all-round provision, not focusing solely on one element. However, there is no doubt that challenges remain for us in the budget.

Ms Lo: Of the social homes built in the last few years, how many were under the shared housing scheme?

Mr Storey: I do not have the exact figures to give the Member, so I am happy to come back and give her a detailed breakdown.

Housing Associations: Service Charges

4. Mr Hazzard asked the Minister for Social Development to outline how his Department regulates service charges levied on tenants by housing associations. (AQO 8409/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department has no authority to control the level of service charges that are set by housing associations. However, the Department reviews service charges through the inspection regime and quarterly financial monitoring. The inspection reviews the appropriateness of the arrangements that housing associations have in place to determine the level of service charges and the processes for collecting those costs. The monitoring team receives and reviews quarterly financial information relating to service charge income and costs.

My Department is developing comprehensive proposals for a social housing rent policy. The proposals will also look at the fairness, consistency and transparency of service charges.

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answer. I welcome the report and the process that he has spoken about bringing forward. Is a timeline available for that? When could tenants expect that to kick into action?

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for the supplementary question. It is my intention to put this out for consultation over the summer. That always raises the question of whether it is being done over the summer because people are away on holidays. However, I assure the Member and the House that the issue will generate considerable debate. It has already done so. Housing associations have made representations to me and the Department on the issue of a rent policy, and I think that they even raised that issue when they were with the Committee recently. I am also aware of concerns that have been raised across the piece about the particular way that we ensure that we do not have excessive rents but, equally, that people can live in homes in which they get value for money for the rent that they are charged. That goes right across the piece, whether it is Housing Executive properties or those in the control of housing associations.

I trust that I have taken a pragmatic view of the issue. I do not want to scare the horses or create alarm. I want to have an informed discussion about how we get the best possible outcome that secures tenure for people in their homes and gives them the assurance that they are not being overcharged for services that are not being provided.

Mr Dunne: I thank the Minister for his answers. Following on from what he said, does he recognise the very real concerns among housing association tenants about the management of service charges and what they really relate to?

Mr Storey: Yes, in answer to the question that the Minister — the Member — asked. That might be a prophecy: he may be a Minister one of these days.

You are not long in post in any of the positions in the House before you realise the particular issues that are prevalent and the particular concerns that various groups and interests raise. One of those concerns is rent. We also get some very good feedback and some positive messages from a variety of sources in the Housing Executive and housing association provisions and from those who are involved in co-ownership.

It goes back to the point that I made earlier. We have a patchwork quilt of provision and a variety of providers. I want to ensure that, in whatever sector the homes are provided, they are provided in a way that is fair and equitable and gives quality of provision to those who live in them.

Lagan Footbridge

5. Mr Girvan asked the Minister for Social Development whether the Lagan footbridge will be ready in time for the Tall Ships event in July 2015. (AQO 8410/11-15)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question. I am glad that he has an interest in what goes on in our Maiden City. The Lagan Weir pedestrian and cycle bridge is on programme to be opened to the public before the Tall Ships event, which is due to take place in July.

Mr Girvan: I thank the Minister for his answer. Will he outline what benefits the Lagan footbridge and cycle path will bring to Belfast city centre?

3.15 pm

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his supplementary question. My colleague has reminded me that Belfast is the capital city; I may have been referring to another city in the west, which is the Maiden City. The new bridge will provide improved connections across the River Lagan between Belfast city centre and the Titanic Quarter. The bridge will also help to promote the Queen's Quay area to potential developers. In only the second event that I attended after taking up office, I went to see the commencement of the works. At that stage, people were raising concerns as to why there was a huge investment of £5.5 million. It is a good investment that will provide tremendous connectivity between the Titanic Quarter and Queen's Quay —

Mr Humphrey: And north Belfast.

Mr Storey: — the Member mentions north Belfast — and the rest of our city. There is already anticipation in the lead-up to the bridge being handed over. I look forward to being in a position by the end of this month to officially open the bridge. It will be another added asset to this great city and to the River Lagan, which it crosses.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): That ends the period for listed questions. We will now move on to topical questions.

Pavement Furniture: Pedestrian Access

T1. Mr McKay asked the Minister for Social Development what work his Department is doing in conjunction with the community, voluntary and charity sectors to address issues presented by pavement furniture blocking pedestrian access. (AQT 2661/11-15)

Mr Storey: This issue is always raised in regard to public realm schemes. When public realm schemes are taken on board, as far as I am concerned and, I trust, for those who are involved in the delivery of these schemes, every concern is heeded, whether in relation to those who have particular physical disabilities or some other disability. In particular, we have had issues in the past with guide dogs for the blind. All those issues are taken on board in a very practical way. In fact, just a few days ago, I was made aware of a particular scheme that had not been followed in a way that gave us a good outcome. I have asked for that particular issue to be looked at again.

Mr McKay: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for his answer. Will he and his Department fully support recommendations made by disability groups in relation to the development of the regulation of pavement cafes?

Mr Storey: Yes. Again, we are aware of those particular recommendations. They are being considered, and I trust that we will be able to give a positive response in a way that is equitable and tries to strike a balance between the needs of the traders, who have expressed their particular concerns, and the needs of pedestrians.

Independent Advice Sector: Funding

T2. Mr McElduff asked the Minister for Social Development whether he appreciates that, although independent advice organisations are facing much greater demand for their services at this time than ever before, very many of them have seen their funding remain static for the past 10 years or more. (AQT 2662/11-15)

Mr Storey: Yes. Obviously, I value very much the work that the independent advice sector does for us. The Member will be well aware of the challenges that we have in the House in relation to the Budget and in making difficult decisions. In fact, because of requests from his party, we have had to take some money from the block grant and divert it into other needs that he and his colleagues have seen as being a priority, particularly in relation to welfare. We did that in the comprehensive agreement but, unfortunately, the Member and his party are stalling the implementation of that agreement that we made.

I continue to support the independent advice sector and, through the various funding arrangements that we have, I give them the support and the financial assistance that they need so that they can continue to deliver the service in the expert way that they have done to date.

Mr McElduff: I will zone in on the current needs of Omagh Independent Advice Services. Will the Minister ensure that senior officials from his Department work closely and directly with Omagh Independent Advice Services to fix a hole in its finances? I understand that the deficit runs to £12,000 for the current year.

Mr Storey: This is the benefit of the House, because all politics is local. I appreciate the fact that the Member has a particular issue in relation to the matter that he raised. I am quite happy, now that the Member has given the details of the matter to the House, for my officials to look at the particular need and see what help can be given to the service in Omagh that is currently under stress.

Welfare Reform: DSD Problems

T3. Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Social Development at what point the ongoing welfare reform and Budget issues will cause his Department to hit the problems of being unable to pay people benefits and having to replace outdated IT equipment to avoid running two different systems. (AQT 2663/11-15)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member. Obviously, this issue is part of the problems that we currently face. In fact, correspondence some time ago from the previous Chief Secretary and from the previous Deputy Prime Minister, Mr Clegg, indicated to the Executive that they needed to make decisions on how they wanted to provide social security when DWP started to withdraw from its IT contracts in mid-2016.

That is one element of the issue. The other is that, if we cannot find an agreed solution to the Budget and were to find ourselves in the position that the finances of the House were under the control of the permanent secretary at the Finance Department, it would certainly create a huge challenge for us. By August of this year, which is not that many weeks away, we would be in a very difficult and challenging position that could result in a situation in which some element of the annually managed expenditure (AME) delivered on the ground, specifically in the form of certain benefits, could be put in jeopardy, and some benefits might not be paid.

Mr McCallister: I am grateful to the Minister for his reply. On that point, if some benefits will not be paid, would the Minister care to elaborate on how exactly the ongoing fight on welfare and the Budget, if it gets to the situation that he outlined, will help the vulnerable?

Mr Storey: The Member is absolutely right: it does not help. By constantly delaying it, we are ratcheting up problems that affect everybody in Northern Ireland. At Stormont House, we endeavoured in good faith to ensure that we had a comprehensive agreement, to which five parties made a contribution and signed up. We then began the process of implementing it.

Despite all the smokescreens and diversions over the last number of weeks, and despite all the misinformation about papers not being given and people acting in bad faith, I cannot understand why, when we had an agreement at the beginning of this year that was sold by the parties opposite and advocated as being a new dawn and a new day — it was a process that would help the vulnerable and one whereby we were getting to terms with dealing with issues — all of a sudden, on that fateful weekend in March, something dramatically changed. We know, of course, what it was. It was not the focus on the people of Northern Ireland. A party was looking two ways, and its focus was on an election that it hopes will come in the Irish Republic.

My call and challenge to the party opposite and to the SDLP, which, unfortunately, along with the single Green Party Member, became a conspirator on this issue, when it signed the petition of concern, is this: let us implement the agreement that we made; let us ensure that we do not create any more vulnerable people; and let us deal with the issues that will give to the people of Northern Ireland clarity and certainty in a way that does not create more vulnerability for those saying that they have lost all confidence in the House.

Markets Area: Environmental Improvement Scheme

T4. Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister for Social Development to return to thinking about the Lagan, the inner city and the Markets area and give an update on the planned environmental improvement scheme for the Markets, and, without giving away his supplementary, to consider the fact that there has been more planning than action. (AQT 2664/11-15)

Mr Storey: I do not have specific details about that scheme with me, but I am quite happy to give the Member an update on it. In that scheme, as in others, I want to ensure that we continue to make progress. However, progress can be made only when all the agencies concerned work together and when we have the overall budget that will be made available to deliver these schemes.

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Go raibh maith agat. Thank you, Minister. The problem is that phases 3 and 4 of the environmental improvement scheme never happened. The Minister has been in Sandy Row, which is almost a partner area of the Markets in this development. We invited you in before Christmas. There was a crisis in government, then there was another crisis. We will probably not make it before the summer, but I hope, Minister, that you will take up the invite to visit the Markets to see the great work that is being done there in partnership with surrounding communities. The environmental improvement scheme will be a key part of that.

Mr Storey: The Member rightly refers to phases 3 and 4. It is certainly a challenge to ensure delivery. The crises that he referred to were not of my making and are no reflection on my goodwill in trying to see delivery of a project that would undoubtedly have a huge impact on the well-being and quality of life of people in the Markets area.

Whether it is this scheme or others — my Department and I have been involved with a myriad and multiplicity of schemes over the last number of months and years — we need to ensure that we do not lose the focus of the importance of these projects for the communities that want them delivered. Other Members have the very cavalier attitude that we should not spend this amount of money and should spend it on other things. However, we sometimes need to take cognisance of the communities that we are delivering these projects in, listen to their voices and concerns, and try as much as we possibly can to deliver for them.

Benefits Uptake Programme

T5. Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Social Development how much money the benefits uptake programme has generated in the past year. (AQT 2665/11-15)

Mr Storey: I thank the Member for his question on benefits uptake. Of all the benefits — excuse the pun — benefits uptake has been one of the most successful schemes that we have engaged in. I continue to be committed to promoting the uptake of benefits in an effort to tackle poverty and improve the lives of the most vulnerable. In 2013-14, over 4,000 people, many from our older generation, gained some £14.2 million in new and additional benefits. In fact, since 2005, benefit uptake work has generated over £81 million in additional income for people in Northern Ireland.

Mr Moutray: I thank the Minister for that very positive answer. What plans are in place to improve further the uptake of benefits in this financial year?

Mr Storey: The Department is entering into the final year of Maximising Incomes and Outcomes, which is a three-year strategy to improve the uptake of benefits. An action plan for 2015-16 is in place. It continues to prioritise and invest resources in programmes and activities aimed at encouraging the uptake of benefit services and supports. Officials are due to present the action plan to the Social Development Committee on 18 June. That will give the Committee and Members of the House an insight into how we intend to address this issue over the next three years.

3.30 pm

May I say to the Member, and to Members across the House, that they should continue to encourage people in their constituencies to ensure that they have made the call so that they can see what may be available to them? Given the fact that we are talking about a considerable amount of money over a number of years, I think it is well worth making the effort to make that call, because it will, undoubtedly, bring a reward.

Welfare Mitigation Scheme: Papers

T6. Mr Elliott asked the Minister for Social Development how many papers he and his Department have produced on the welfare mitigation scheme since the Stormont House Agreement proposals were made, given that a number of other papers have been issued. (AQT 2666/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Department has produced five papers since the Stormont House Agreement.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I am afraid that time has beaten us. Members, we can return to the debate on the Supply resolutions.

Executive Committee Business

Supply Resolution for the 2013-14 Excess Votes and Supply Resolution for the Northern Ireland Main Estimates 2015-16

Debate resumed on motion:

That this Assembly approves that resources, not exceeding £7,444,446.68 be authorised for use by the Department of Education and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, for the year ending 31 March 2014, as summarised for each Department in Part II of the 2013-14 Statement of Excesses that was laid before the Assembly on 8 June 2015. — [Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

The following motion stood in the Order Paper:

That this Assembly approves that a sum, not exceeding £8,336,067,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund, for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 and that resources, not exceeding £9,004,299,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(b) and 3(a) of table 1·3 in the volume of the Northern Ireland Estimates 2015-16 that was laid before the Assembly on 8 June 2015. — [Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

The following amendment stood on the Marshalled List:

In the second motion leave out all after “exceeding” and insert:

“£7,732,067,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund, for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 and that resources, not exceeding £8,400,299,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(b) and 3(a) of table 1·3 in the volume of the Northern Ireland Estimates 2015-16 that was laid before the Assembly on 8 June 2015, subject to a proportionate reduction for each Department, with the exception of the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety, and each other public body referred to in columns 3(b) and 3(a) of table 1·3 of the aforesaid Estimates, so as to reflect the £604,000,000 shortfall resulting from the failure to implement the Stormont House Agreement.” — [Mr Allister.]

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I will give our friends time to move across.

I want to return to some of the topics that we tackled earlier today. In brief, and in summary, our belief is that we need to have a more robust attitude and challenge to the cuts juggernaut that is coming at us from London. It disappoints those of us on this side of the Chamber that our colleagues on the other side of the Chamber are willing to accept, willy-nilly, the nature and severity of those cuts. They take it as read that there should be no resistance, protest, demand to, or explanation from, the British that it is the wrong way forward, that it will not benefit anyone in this community and that it will not help our economy. We are divided on the approach; I understand that. Despite that, the evidence shows that the ideology of austerity has not been the springboard for the improvement of our economy, and will not be in the time ahead.

The amount of money that has been taken from our block grant has been well rehearsed in the Chamber. At times, some of our colleagues across the Chamber are more critical of the British Government with regard to the £1·5 billion that has been taken out of our Budget since 2011. They have the attitude that it is done and that there is no merit in saying to the British that it needs to be reversed. That is not my attitude. It is my view that the £1·5 billion that has been taken out is equivalent to 0·002% of the British Budget, yet, of course, it has been a hammer blow to our budgets and has meant real hardship for ordinary people. If we want to continue the progress that we have made in the last two decades, we need to have that grant restored. We need to be able to provide the services that our people are crying out for.

Of course, we are at this crisis point because our friends in London are back in power. I was going to refer to the Lib Dem/Conservative coalition, but the Conservatives are back, on their own, in power, and have wasted no time in telling the public and us that further cuts will be our lot in the time ahead. We were fresh out of the election when we were told that cuts in the region of £30 million would come immediately, in-year. We also know that the £25 billion reduction that is being talked about will mean swingeing cuts to our budgets.

At some point, all of this will become unsustainable. Is it our role as politicians, civic leaders — people who have a stake in this land, in this community, and who are fighting for our neighbours, families and society — to go back to our community, time out of number, especially in the years ahead, and say that we have less money, that we will have to continue to cut back, and that we will have to continue to make a detrimental impact on public services because that is what the British are insisting on? If that is our entire role in politics, it places a huge question mark over why we should continue in that matter. I am not here to carry water for English Ministers. I believe that, if we are masters of our own destiny and have the ability to raise from our own people the resources needed to pay for public services, we should be allowed to do that. However, the British want it both ways. They do not want to allow us that right, except in very restrained circumstances, where they say that we can have corporation tax powers, but, at the same time, the income tax, the PAYE revenue, raised through the extra jobs, would go to London only. And so it is with all the other fiscal levers.

In the time ahead, our objective must be to have a response from the entire community right across the board. Last week, as part of a Sinn Féin delegation, I met the Institute of Directors (IOD) and the CBI. It heartened me to find that their attitude is not that of the Tory Government; they do not agree with the Tory Government when they say, "It is our way or the highway." They believe that there is a strong and special case to be made for our community as to why we cannot continue to suffer this blizzard of cutbacks. I am particularly heartened by the CBI's insistence that, to inflict further cuts on this society will make it even more difficult for us to do the essential things if we are to build the economy, not least provide jobs to our young people and make sure that our universities have the ability to turn out the many talented and qualified graduates that industry calls for.

My call today is that, as we look to the future, we have a vision for a society that is fair and prosperous. I do not believe that that is impossible. I believe that we are united, right across the Chamber, in the belief that a fair and prosperous economy is good for everyone. That is one of the visions that unites us.

At this stage, we are divided because some of us are willing to accept the agenda from London and some of us are not. It is my feeling that continuing to slash public services and to accept, without protest, the continued cuts to our Budget is not the way forward. We will not be thanked for that, either by the electorate or the community.

I hope that, in the time ahead, as negotiations continue with the Treasury on the way forward and the austerity ideologues sit down and take out their pencil and decide what budgets to cut, our representatives on the Executive will bring to them a united voice and insist that we need the resources to build this society and to provide first-class public services to our people. We will continue to work in the interests of ordinary people to create jobs for all and to build the economy. It is my hope that, as we emerge from discussions in this Chamber and outside it, we can get a united approach from us all around the Chamber to the British Government in the time ahead.

I am someone who likes to say yes, but, if we are to say no to anything, now is the time to say no to the austerity ideologues and English Ministers and say that we will not accept their mission or plan to make our institutions untenable and unsustainable. Be sure of this: if they continue to cut as they plan — taking another £800 million out of our Budgets between now and 2018 — they will have dealt a hammer blow and a death knell to the institutions that we are all fighting to keep up and sustain in this part of the world.

Mr McGlone (The Chairperson of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome the opportunity to speak on behalf of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment on the Main Estimates. The former Minister briefed the Committee on 10 February 2015 on the draft Budget proposals.

DETI's baseline position consisted of an overall 15·1% reduction distributed pro rata across the Department and its arm's-length bodies. The Committee noted that the assessment provided little indication of any prioritisation of expenditure in DETI. The Committee would like to have seen further analysis to ensure that the impact of reductions is lessened on areas of strategic priority for the Executive. Unfortunately, that does not seem to have occurred.

More than 90% of Invest NI's budget for 2015-16 was already committed when the Committee was briefed in February. DETI officials informed the Committee that that meant that Invest NI would be unable to support its current level of activity, resulting in fewer jobs being promoted, and presumably leading to fewer jobs being created. On a future Programme for Government (PFG) and economic strategy, officials stated that Invest NI would have to scale back its targets. That is of considerable concern to the Committee, especially at a time when Invest NI is performing very well against most of its PFG targets. The growth of Northern Ireland's export base is the one key area in which Invest NI has not met its targets, yet there seems to be no provision in the Budget to address it. Northern Ireland has a small internal market; therefore, the growth in exports is essential to economic growth.

Assurance provided previously that no worthwhile inward investment for job creation will be rejected owing to budgetary constraints remains in place. The Committee sought and received an assurance from the former Minister of Finance and Personnel that that remains the case. However, reduced activity by Invest NI will undoubtedly result in fewer opportunities being identified, leading to fewer worthwhile proposals for inward investment and, as such, fewer jobs being created. At a time when we are looking to reduce corporation tax and promote the North as a place to do business, that has to be a concern for the Executive.

DETI officials briefed the Committee on the June monitoring round on 2 June 2015. The Department outlined key monitoring round bids of £4 million to Invest NI for the Bombardier nacelles project and £1 million to Tourism NI for feasibility studies around maximising current tourism initiatives. The economy is the Executive's number one priority, and the Committee has always believed that it is important that Invest NI be resourced to meet current commitments, and to deliver for future opportunities that present themselves. The Bombardier nacelles project is a high-value research and development project. That DETI's GB counterparts are also topping up the £110 million project shows its significance, with an estimated 115 R&D jobs, 168 production jobs and the potential for subsequent work to emanate from the project.

Invest NI bid for £4·3 million in capital for Seagate Technology (Ireland) for R&D assistance into leading-edge technology. That will be an important project for the site in Derry, with the company itself spending £34·7 million on it.

The Committee welcomes the initiatives in the June monitoring round that aim to maximise on money already spent by the Department. A bid of £1 million by Tourism NI for feasibility studies includes exploring the potential for future spin-offs from the high-profile 'Game of Thrones' and further footfall opportunities for the Gobbins path. The Committee looks forward to reviewing the results of the feasibility studies and any future work on the projects. It will continue to scrutinise the benefits, and whether they outweigh any spending.

There is slippage on the Waterfront convention centre, the Railway Preservation Society of Ireland and the SS Nomadic. The £1 million for that will be met by reallocation of funds. The Committee recognises the importance of those projects, not least the benefits of the Waterfront convention centre to visitor numbers and to putting Belfast on the map as a major conference destination.

The Committee is awaiting further information from the Department on the voluntary exit scheme for the Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI). DETI core has registered £2.4 million and HSENI £0.5 million of requirements for the voluntary exit scheme. Those were considered in the first tranche of bids under the scheme. The Health and Safety Executive plays an extremely important role in ensuring and promoting health and safety in the workplace, not least with its recent advertising campaign for farm safety, which resonates very sadly and soundly with us all.

The Committee asked what impact the voluntary exit scheme will have on the most vital HSENI services — including, of course, farm safety — considering that, just over 18 months ago, the Health and Safety Executive appointed eight trainee inspectors to address a shortage in staff and bring the organisation up to full complement. The Committee has noted a reduction of half a million pounds owing to construction work not commencing on the gas extension project to the west and north-west until later in 2015. Again, that is an important construction project that will bring jobs in itself but also provide long-term economic benefits.

I will now speak for a moment in my capacity as a member of the SDLP. I wish to discuss the processes around the Northern Ireland Executive Budget. The most recent Assembly Budget Bill debate was only four months ago. I will reiterate a point that my SDLP colleagues have made many times.

An annual budgetary process used in other jurisdictions causes participation and robust process and brings ideas to the forefront. We in the Northern Ireland Assembly should and could have a significant budgetary process to discuss, but this is simply a financial management process — or mismanagement, as some might argue. There are so many things that we could be discussing, as well as legislation and allocation of funds that we could be bringing forward.

3.45 pm

I have been out and about quite a bit in the last while, and a key issue that has been raised with me by members of the community, particularly young families, is childcare. I know that my colleague Seán Rogers has raised that on a number of occasions. The costs of childcare are exorbitant, and it is essential that I put this on the record. Aviva did a survey at the tail end of last year into childcare costs for parents of children up to five years of age. Many of them are working for less than £100 a month after childcare costs are paid. That is the situation that many people are facing. Indeed, many of them, mostly but not exclusively young mums, are having to face choices about whether they should or should not work. Those exorbitant costs are providing a barrier to employment, especially for young mums, and that deprives the labour market of key and very well-educated people with skills, who are being forced because of those pressures and the costs of childcare to remove themselves from the labour market. Childcare is also ultimately a key element in the development of the academic and intellectual skills of the child. We need to identify early on whether there are any shortcomings or problems that might need to be addressed in the development of the child. It has huge, huge social and economic value.

We have had a debate in the last while on welfare reform. I think that it is time we moved the focus. It needs to be on people who face difficulty. We need to move the focus of our debate from welfare reform to welfare and work reform, especially when those high childcare costs mean that one in five parents are considering either reducing their hours or giving up work altogether, thereby depriving the labour market of key people at a time when we are talking about investing in skills for our young people and reskilling people of a more advanced age. As a consequence of lack of proper investment in childcare, that key element of the skills sector is being withdrawn from the labour market. We talked about corporation tax. I think that a big attraction for any FDI coming here — yes, reduced taxation levels helps — is to come to a society that is caring and supportive towards its employees.

As my colleague Fearghal McKinney mentioned, we in the SDLP welcome the Supply resolution for 2013-14 Excess Vote, which provides further funding for the Department of Education and the Department of Health. The Main Estimates for DFP state that it will be unable to quantify the liability faced due the voluntary exit scheme and that it will become clear only in-year. I am concerned that that will affect the ability of not only the Department of Finance and Personnel but other Departments to work effectively. It appears that the Departments have not yet been able to forward plan to deal with that. I know that many civil servants are looking ahead, trying to plan ahead and trying to work their way through this, so it is important that they, too, have clarity on what their circumstances will be.

I will conclude at that, Mr Deputy Speaker. Thank you very much for the opportunity to put that on record.

Mr Swann (The Chairperson of the Committee for Employment and Learning): I welcome the opportunity to outline the Committee for Employment and Learning's consideration and views on the Supply resolution Main Estimates 2015-16. As it is one of the Executive's largest spenders, scrutiny of the DEL budget is taken very seriously by the Committee, and, to that extent, Minister Farry briefed it on the budget on 26 November, 10 December, 3 February and 18 March to provide details of the changing situation with his Department's budget.

During his briefing on 3 February, the Minister informed the Committee that the original total for the reductions that he had to find was £82 million. However, due to a reallocation of £20 million from the Executive, the total reductions to be found fell to £62 million.

I also welcome the fact that the Executive have listened to Committee and others' warnings about the Department for Employment and Learning's spending and provided £13.2 million of change fund money to bring the Department's opening baseline budget cut to £48.3 million.

In dealing with the pressures, the Employment and Learning Minister outlined his way forward to the Committee. The Minister provided detail of £33.2 million reductions made up of £18 million of cuts rolling forward from the 2014-15 budget and £3.5 million of efficiency savings from the employment service.

The main issue that exercised the minds of the Committee during the Minister's briefings was the impact on student places in our universities and colleges and the knock-on impact on the Northern Ireland economy. In detailing what the impact will be, the Minister outlined that the remaining £30.1 million pressure on the budget will be managed by a reduction to the universities of £16 million, a reduction to the further education (FE) colleges of £12 million and further departmental efficiencies of £4.1 million. The Minister accepted that the remaining £6 million of savings to be found by the universities will most likely result in a cut in university places and jobs. This is at a time when the Minister has warned that even no reduction in jobs or places is not a positive option and that an increase in places is needed for the sake of the future of Northern Ireland as a growing economy. On that issue, the Committee welcomed the commitment by the universities that there will be a protection of the narrow STEM subjects, given their importance to the economy.

The Committee welcomed the allocation of £7.5 million from the change fund to enable the Department to proceed with piloting the new apprenticeship strategy and the youth training strategy, but it is concerned that those new initiatives may not cover the shortfall found elsewhere. The Committee has also noted with concern that the Minister has been unable to guarantee committing extra funding to vocational skills and apprenticeship programmes to meet the demand that will result from a shortfall in places at colleges and universities.

The Committee welcomed the fact that the Minister is not cutting the further education and higher education support that it gives to students with disabilities, and also that it is not cutting its disability employment programme. The Committee was also content to note that the Department is also protecting the hobby and leisure provision for people who have learning disabilities.

At its meeting on 20 May 2015, the Committee was briefed on the June monitoring round by departmental officials and welcomed the fact that the Department is making four non-ring-fenced bids.

The first bid is in relation to £6 million end-year flexibility to ensure that inescapable pressures are met across the further education sector. Departmental officials advised the Committee that it is absolutely critical that the Department receives that money, as failure to do so would mean that the money would have to be found elsewhere in the Department and create further pressures in the Department.

The second bid is for £5.5 million to meet inescapable contractual obligations or residual costs after the pausing of the youth employment scheme in December 2014 and the costs of the remodelled employer subsidy for 18- to 24-year-olds: £4 million of this bid relates to the youth employment scheme and the remaining £1.5 million relates to the remodelled element. Again, the bid for the youth employment scheme is a committed amount, and, if the bid is unsuccessful, the money will have to be found elsewhere in the Department.

The third bid is for £2.6 million of match funding for the European social fund to meet the match funding requirements of that programme. This is required to bridge the gap in the departmental match funding element, and, if not met, the money would have to be found elsewhere as it is already committed.

The fourth bid is for £1 million for the economic inactivity strategy to develop a range of pilots to see what works best to tackle economic inactivity. However, the Committee noted that this bid is not inescapable and could be delayed. The Committee has already expressed concern regarding the timelines for some of the projects that would not commence until 2016 or 2017, and even some as detailed as 2019. Therefore, if the strategy is delayed now, some projects may not commence until well into the new mandate in 2021.

The Committee also noted that the Department has submitted two capital bids — one for the further education colleges of £5.9 million, which is to ensure that colleges meet their legal and statutory obligations on health and safety and disability.

The Committee for Employment and Learning will continue its scrutiny of the Department for Employment and Learning's budget and especially the Minister's efforts to mitigate the impact of the cuts.

I now wish to make a few comments as a member of the Ulster Unionist Party and as a Member of the House. With regard to the Employment and Learning budget, I believe that the removal of the education maintenance allowance for the Pathways to Success programme has caused severe problems to many young people. The latest position from the Minister was that it was still on his desk. I hope that the Minister makes a positive decision and makes it soon. The Include Youth Give and Take online video that was posted recently will explain the importance of that funding.

With regard to the European social fund and the match funding, many organisations are still in limbo over the current programme and are waiting for money to be delivered from the Department so that they can finish off the last programme.

As chair of the all-party group on congenital heart disease, I will seek the confirmation of the allocation of moneys to provide the promised cardiac centre of excellence for children in Belfast, as recommended in the international working group report. I want to express my disappointment that the moneys — namely £1 million — promised a number of years ago by John Compton during the review of cardiac surgery in Belfast was utilised by the Minister of Health to send children across to England to have their surgery done there. The £1 million that was promised to revitalise the centre in Belfast was utilised elsewhere. So, I would like the financial commitment that that money will be promised in the incoming Budget.

Mr Irwin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development): I am speaking today as Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development and will represent the views of that Committee.

The Committee received material and documentation from DARD on the Main Estimates and took oral evidence from officials on 2 June 2015. In carrying out its scrutiny of the Main Estimates, the Committee noted the following issues and concerns. First, and most importantly, the Department is the paying agency for EU grants to farmers. The Main Estimates that DARD presented to us on 2 June show a figure of just over £245 million for CAP. The administration and payment of CAP funds is DARD's single biggest task and responsibility. It is no surprise, therefore, that when we examined the Main Estimates, that is where the Committee focused its attention.

The Committee is adamant that the main priority for DARD should be its front-line services to farmers and the wider rural communities and, specifically, the payment of the EU grant. The Committee recently received a separate written briefing on the numbers applying for the EU grant through the single application form. We are aware that this year is a time of great change and flux for DARD. The system has changed, and, instead of a single payment of an EU grant to a farmer, there are now up to five separate areas where the farmer can claim payments. All those new areas need to be checked, inspected and verified, and some of those inspections are new and different from what went before. For example, all applicants to the fund now need to meet a new criterion called the active farmer. All applicants need to provide proof that they are an active farmer, and that proof needs to be checked and verified by DARD.

In the past, the Committee has received assurances from the Minister and DARD officials that the basic payment system is the number one priority for the Minister and the Department. The Committee acknowledges that the system has changed and is more complex to administer, but there has also been a fall in the number of applications. This year, we have seen an increase in the number of applications made online, which makes the administration easier. Those two factors — the falling number of applications and more applications made online — plus the additional support that DARD has requested for IT systems in the June monitoring round should counter any proposed increase in complexity. We, therefore, fully expect that DARD will be able to meet the same payment timetable as last year.

There has also been some speculation in the media regarding the legalities around the payment of the EU grant in the event that no Budget can be agreed and the permanent secretary of DFP takes over the Budget for Northern Ireland. This is the issue of accruing of resources. I was, therefore, pleased to note that the Minister of Finance and Personnel stated during Question Time on 9 June that she was taking steps and was confident that the basic farm payment would be paid, even if it is not through the normal processes. Northern Ireland farmers will take some assurances from that.

In its further scrutiny of the Main Estimates, members of the Committee questioned officials on the voluntary exit scheme. The Committee is aware that DARD is expected to make savings in salaries of £5.9 million from the exit of staff. The Committee was interested to explore the firmed-up figures and any assessment the Department has made regarding the figure of £5.9 million. The Committee was interested in DARD's assessment of whether it would make that saving and what impact it would have on its Main Estimates if it did not. Unfortunately, the officials were unable to tell us very much, other than that DARD staff who had applied had received letters that morning. That was 2 June.

The Committee also questioned DARD on the budget provision for TB compensation. As the Assembly and Members are aware, TB compensation has been very costly to the public purse. As a result, the Committee keeps a very close eye on the costs of TB, including not just compensation paid to farmers but the costs associated with testing and research.

4.00 pm

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

This year, for the first time, we see the full costs for TB built into the Main Estimates. Previously, there had been a structural deficit in the Main Estimates in that only around £5 million was allowed for TB. That meant that the Department had to constantly seek additional funding for TB in the monitoring rounds. Our Deputy Chairperson, Joe Byrne, referred to the Department's reliance on the monitoring round for TB compensation as being like relying on a slush fund. He was not too far wrong.

This year, for the first time, we saw a baseline of £12.5 million in the Main Estimates for TB. You can imagine the Committee's disappointment when it was informed that that line in the Estimates was incorrect and that an additional £4.5 million bid was being made in the June monitoring round.

Testing for TB in cattle and the payment of compensation are statutory responsibilities: they must be done. Given the uncertainties over the Budget process, we, as a Committee, had to ask the "What if?" question. Mr Poots directly asked the DARD officials:

"What happens when you do not get the money?"

The answer was not reassuring. The Department basically told us that it was exploring contingencies, that none of them were palatable and that difficult decisions would have to be made. A final point to make on the issue of TB compensation is that the additional bid is due to a spike in TB incidence. That is something that we are not happy with, and we have called for additional information.

The final issue that I want to cover, which was raised at the Committee, is the upward trend in departmental administration costs. Those costs have risen from £54 million in 2013-14 to nearly £58 million in 2014-15, and the Main Estimates show a further increase to just over £60 million in 2015-16. On top of that, programme costs over that same period have dropped considerably. We, as a Committee, cannot understand that, and we are not happy with the explanation that we have been provided with. We questioned DARD officials on 2 June, and we will be keeping a very close eye on administration expenditure in the future.

That concludes my remarks as Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development.

Dr Farry: I am speaking as an ordinary MLA, and I will resist the temptation to respond to some of the comments made by Mr Swann in his capacity as Chair of the Employment and Learning Committee.

Mr Allister: Oh, go on.

Dr Farry: All in good time.

At this stage, it is important that we understand and recognise what we are doing today and what we are being asked to do today and over the next couple of weeks, namely to pass a Supply resolution to authorise the supply of resource and pass a Budget Bill to give legal authority to Departments to spend that money. That should be the normal course of action during any financial year. The Executive and Assembly take policy decisions in terms of the Budget resolution, and then there is a responsibility on the Assembly to ensure that that money flows.

As people know, my party opposed the Budget in the Executive for a host of reasons, including a lack of strategic thinking for the future and difficult decisions not being taken, including a fair and balanced approach to revenue-raising issues and issues around the cost of division. Those are all issues that are big structural difficulties within our Budget. Once that debate happened this year and a democratic agreement was made, we all had a duty to ensure that we follow through with the supply of the necessary resource. So, as we find ourselves in June, our duty is to ensure that we follow through with that Budget, albeit one that we believe was flawed in a number of respects. That is our responsibility as legislators in this context.

As we meet today, that context takes on a certain air of unreality, because we all know that there are some major financial challenges facing Northern Ireland, most of which are self-inflicted wounds due to our lack of ability to agree on the politics of the way forward. Northern Ireland is in a bad place financially and politically, in the sense that we do not have a sustainable framework of public finances. The immediate issue, above and beyond those wider structural difficulties that I have alluded to, lies in the non-implementation of the Stormont Castle agreement and the Stormont House Agreement, including the thorny and difficult but inescapable issue of welfare reform.

Obviously, we would not wish to start from this place, but the least irresponsible thing to do is to proceed and ensure that we have some sort of legal framework in place around money. We have a duty to ensure that the money does not run out, and anyone who is thinking of voting against the Supply resolution this evening needs to think very long and hard about what the consequences would be of a no vote and, indeed, if the Assembly were to follow suit and endorse their perspective on a no vote. That would mean that, in the absence of an intervention from the DFP permanent secretary, the money would run out. In that eventuality, there would be not only a political problem but a financial problem, in that we would be facing much deeper cuts even than those that we wrestle with at present, with all of the pain that has been articulated not just by MLAs but by people across society over the past number of weeks and months.

At the very best, agreeing the motion does not in itself resolve any of those political and financial issues, but it buys us a little time. I have to confess that I have a slight reservation about proceeding on this basis because, true to form, there is a danger of people sitting back and becoming complacent: somehow, having got over one hurdle, money can be spent regardless. We have to use the time that we buy wisely, and time is not a luxury that we have. We have to act quickly to resolve the outstanding issues because, if we keep putting off their resolution until the late summer and into the autumn, when we finally reach a conclusion on the way forward, we may well face even steeper cuts than those that we have had to face so far. Much less time will be available to deliver those cuts, meaning that the options available to Ministers and Departments will be much more constrained and the pain across society even deeper. We have a duty to give those whom we serve a degree of financial certainty as early as we possibly can.

There was a degree of unreality in some of the remarks that I heard from Members from all Benches, particularly from the two nationalist parties. I know that the Green Party will join in later. The two nationalist parties articulated concerns about the cuts and talked about how terrible it is that this is happening, that that is happening and that we are missing out on opportunities. If they had any sense of joining the dots, they would recognise that the failure to deliver the agreements at Stormont House and Stormont Castle and the failure to face up to the realities of welfare reform are plunging Northern Ireland into financial uncertainty, and that is making the pressures on public services and on the economic levers that transform our economy even more acute. Every time individuals stand up and talk about cuts, they need to look at themselves in the mirror and ask what they are doing to help or hinder that particular situation. Are they part of the problem or part of the solution?

If we drill even more deeply, we find troubling issues that need to be teased out. I appreciate that a lot of people have very deep concerns about the cuts made to the Northern Ireland block grant over the past number of years. Also, there is uncertainty about the future, with the very real prospect of cuts to welfare payments and the Northern Ireland block grant in the immediate years to come. If we are to fight that process and join forces with Scotland and Wales to present a common front, surely our position will be strengthened if we are able to show that we are capable of acting in a responsible manner through having resolved the financial pressures facing us this year. By contrast, if we go into that process with those issues unresolved, our credibility will be so much weaker. I do not see how having an understanding of this year's financial framework will, in any way, shape or form, prejudice our ability to argue our case — our special case and our special circumstances — in any process of dialogue with the Treasury over the years to come. Those who are deliberately holding out on providing financial certainty because of their stated concerns about what may happen in the future need fundamentally to reassess their position.

Perhaps even more fundamental political and constitutional questions are being raised. We hear talk, particularly from Sinn Féin but echoed implicitly by the SDLP, that they want to be masters of their destiny in Northern Ireland and that they are not here to administer cuts on behalf of the UK Government.

That is not what they were elected into politics for. Certainly, I do not want to be in a situation in which I am cutting budgets; I find it incredibly difficult, and it pains me every time that I am forced to make a cut. However, we have to recognise the wider constitutional reality: we are part of a UK framework, and that is where our public spending comes from. We do not have the resources to go it alone and have a free-standing situation. Insofar as tax-varying powers can be considered, it has to be in a framework in which we are still dependent to a very large extent on the Treasury. Indeed, if we were to imagine a future united Ireland, unless there were a major change of circumstances, Northern Ireland or a devolved Administration in the northern part of the island would be very heavily dependent on a fiscal transfer from the Irish Government as a whole, which themselves have gone through a process of austerity and spending cuts. They could then put a lot of pressure on public spending in Northern Ireland, and the same arguments would be voiced again.

The approach also does a great disservice to the creativity and innovation that has been shown under devolution. We are not simply here to dole out money on behalf of others. We are here to add value and make a difference, not always by spending money in different ways but by showing creativity in policy and the type of projects we put in place and ensuring that those projects are much more in keeping with our set of affairs.

Most troublingly, if you join the dots in what Conor Murphy said implicitly on 'The Stephen Nolan Show' last week, Sinn Féin not only insists that it be immune from what happens in the UK as a whole, bypassing entirely the principle of consent, but believes that Northern Ireland must have the ability to determine its own future and that, because in itself Northern Ireland is not sustainable, there needs to be an all-Ireland framework. If Sinn Féin is essentially linking delivery of a united Ireland in the short run and as a precondition to progress on all these issues, it is obviously erecting a bar that is —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Could the Member bring his remarks to a close?

Dr Farry: — beyond anyone's reach, not least because we have to respect the democratic wishes of the people of Northern Ireland. There are a lot of not only political and constitutional but financial and economic issues that we have to square if we are to make progress over the coming days.

Mr Wilson: None of us wants to be in the situation we are in today of the Finance Minister bringing forward this proposal. It is not an ideal situation, but it is the only solution available if Departments are to have the authority to keep on spending after July to deliver all the services people expect in Northern Ireland, to pay public-sector wages and to pay grants to groups that depend on government. This Supply resolution has to be passed today, and Stephen Farry is right: those who wish to vote against it ought to consider the consequences, which will be that every one of their constituents will be affected when, after July, the ability to spend money is no longer there.

As was pointed out, the Finance Minister is asking us to authorise the expenditure of more money than we know will be available. Eventually, Departments, if they keep spending at the rate this Supply resolution would authorise, will be overspent, and there will be consequences. I suspect that the Treasury will not permit it. The Treasury will certainly not want that to happen in Northern Ireland, because it would have implications for Scotland, Wales and other parts of GB as a whole. Nevertheless, we have to move forward and have certainty that Departments will be able to spend.

There have been three reactions. One was from Mr Allister, who said, "Let us not have the black hole in the Budget; let us cut £600 million from these Supply resolutions". I have two issues with that. It ignores the fact that the Finance Minister is trying to get the Assembly and the parties that have buried their heads in the sand to address the whole issue of the Stormont House Agreement. It ignores that issue. The one way of either getting the parties here to focus on the problem or to get the Government at Westminster to focus on the problem is to have a Supply resolution that clearly leaves the problem unresolved and forces people to pay attention to it.

4.15 pm

If Mr Allister wants to let Sinn Féin and the SDLP off the hook on the decision they have taken, then the way to go is to vote for his amendment. I will give way.

Mr Allister: I suggest that the Member is proposing a course that kicks the can down the road and gives Sinn Féin more time to play the games it loves to play, instead of facing reality. My amendment would pull everyone up short and cause the parties to face reality, rather than kicking the can even further down the road to the point where the Minister inevitably breaks Treasury controls and we are in an absolutely irreparable crisis.

Mr Wilson: Of course, it does not. First of all, although I suspect his amendment will not be carried by the Assembly, we would immediately be in the situation, not where we have a black hole, but where we would be throwing ourselves over the cliff, because there would not be any spending power available for Departments after the end of July. The second issue, of course, is that the reductions are unspecified. He will argue, of course, that he has covered them in his amendment, but all that does is give general terms. It actually works, in effect, on a 15% annual reduction in the budgets of all other Departments apart from the Department of Health. I would have thought that, if he wanted the Assembly to make that decision, we would have had at least some indications as to what that means for schools, housing, roads and all of the other budgets. Of course, that is not specified.

At least there was some construction in his amendment. SDLP Members have taken a totally different view. They have simply buried their heads. Listen to them. They have prattled on today about the need for annual Budgets, the need for more money on childcare and the need for more money on health, as Mr McKinney told us, as if there was not a problem and we did not have a shortfall — a shortfall caused by their party and the fact that it joined Sinn Féin in the blocking mechanism of the Stormont House Agreement and welfare reform. They cannot pretend that they have not caused a problem. They certainly cannot then go and blame the Government at Westminster, as Alex Attwood tried to do, and say, "Well, we were promised the final Budget".

The Budget that I voted on at Westminster earlier in the year was the final Budget for this year, but, as the Conservative Government won a majority, they are now going to revise that Budget. It is the right of a Government to do that. They have decided to revise the Budget for the whole of the United Kingdom, with financial implications for here. We cannot just run away and say, "Well, it's the Government's fault". It is the parties in this House that have refused to implement the agreement that they made in December, which would have given the Finance Minister the resources to do all the things she wants to do over the next year. It is their fault that we have not got it. We cannot bury our heads in the sand and then just prattle on about what we want to spend money on. I noticed, of course, that, although SDLP Members talked about those extra things, they did not suggest one way in which we could get the money.

If we come to the other end of the spectrum — total irresponsibility — then of course we have Sinn Féin's attitude to it. "We simply resist it all." How they resist it is unspecified. "The cuts juggernaut should be resisted. We will stand in front of it." Well, you are going to get run over. "We will not carry water for British Ministers, though we will pour cold water all over economic recovery in Northern Ireland by our irresponsible behaviour." Of course, the ultimate threat that we got from Mr Ó Muilleoir at the very end of his speech was that, if the Government insist that Northern Ireland, as part of the United Kingdom, bears its part of the United Kingdom budgetary cuts, that will be the death knell of the Assembly.

Now, that is really constructive. Of course, if it spells the death knell for the Assembly, will the juggernaut stop? No. Will the cold water of austerity not affect Northern Ireland? No. It will simply be done by Westminster. That is Sinn Féin's solution: resist it in some unspecified manner and, if not successful, close the Assembly down. I take it that that is what Mr Ó Muilleoir meant when he talked about the death knell for the Assembly: "We will walk out and let those evil Ministers from Westminster do the job anyway".

It is significant that no other part of the United Kingdom has adopted that immature attitude. Despite all their rhetoric, the Scottish nationalists have still introduced budgets commensurate with the reductions that have come from Westminster. Despite the opposition in Wales, the Welsh Labour Government, with all their rhetoric against austerity, have introduced a budget that reflects the cuts that have come from Westminster. It appears that only in Northern Ireland is there a group of politicians who are so immature that they cannot see that, as part of the United Kingdom, there are considerable benefits for us — £10,000 million worth of benefits each year for us. They simply ignore reality and, first, cause uncertainty for those who want the economy to work and, secondly, bring disrepute upon politics. That side of the House has been almost entirely responsible for that.

The Finance Minister, in the absence of any construction from other parties in the House, has done the best job she can. Yes, there are implications for it and it may lead to intervention from the Treasury, but —

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): The Member must draw his remarks to a close.

Mr Wilson: — the important thing is this: we have it, and it will keep public services running in Northern Ireland after July. Therefore, I believe that the Supply resolution that she has tabled should command the support of the House.

Mr Rogers: I welcome the motion today and the opportunity to speak on it.

The Supply resolution for the Northern Ireland Main Estimates 2015-16 provides us with another opportunity to assess the areas of greatest need in the education sector. I have consistently argued that the main priority for the Assembly in its approach to education should be delivery in the classroom. Northern Ireland must consistently raise standards in the proper provision of education and, in order to do that, there must be a consistent strategy and balanced funding for all levels of a child's development.

Let me say to begin with that I fully appreciate and welcome the additional £6 million being provided to the Department. I recognise that not all Departments have been so lucky. I note, however, that this was a wise move, as, ultimately, the proper provision of education for the region will have a lasting impact for generations to come. Education forms the building blocks of our society and economy. It is primarily through education that children and young people will develop their attitudes and their views of the world. Education remains essential for gaining the tools necessary to build a fulfilling future. I call on the Minister to use the money wisely and effectively. When I say "wisely", I mean through sound financial management that empowers schools and other institutions to meet the educational needs of all young people.

The term "subsidiarity" comes to mind. The Oxford dictionary's definition of the term is that it is the idea that:

"a central authority should have a subsidiary function, performing only those tasks which cannot be performed at a more local level".

Through the local management of schools (LMS), the large majority of schools have demonstrated that they are capable of sound financial management. I have no doubt that, if other aspects of their budgets were delegated, they could do a very good job and ensure value for money. I have spoken many times about the procurement process for general maintenance. I have no doubt that schools could save thousands of pounds and redirect this to where the need is in the classroom.

With less money tied up in education administration in the Department and at authority level, primary schools could deploy resources in areas of curricular need. Science, in The World Around Us, is the birthplace of STEM. The SDLP believes there must be a more robust focus on attainment in STEM subjects and degrees to provide our young people and, as a consequence, our businesses with the necessary skills base to excel in this era of global competition.

Education funding must make proper provision for young people in order to help them reach the highest possible standards of educational achievement and, as outlined by the Estimates, to grant them a secure foundation not only for lifelong learning and employment but to develop their values and attitudes so that they may help bring new prosperity into Northern Ireland.

To allow our children to grow and develop in the most beneficial way, it is crucial that there be investment in a long-term early years strategy, as it remains essential if we are to create the building blocks for our children's educational future. Underinvestment and the lack of a long-term strategy in education not only fails our children and young people but is detrimental to our economy and to social justice. Early years funding now stands at £26.9 million, representing a noticeable drop from last year. I am once again dismayed that even the most critical years of a child's development are underfunded. The proposed reduction of £1.7 million in the early years fund creates a serious risk to 170 jobs and up to 2,500 early childhood places. Particularly worrying is the effect that such proposals will have on 620 special needs children who rely heavily on such funding to help meet their specific learning needs. The early years fund has proved vital to the development of children across Northern Ireland, by sustaining high-quality services in areas of greatest need and supporting initiatives across the region. Not only is an effective early years plan right for the development of our young people but it will help improve our local economy in the long term.

As I noted earlier, a well-educated population can bring innovation, creativity and ingenuity to the local economy. Therefore, the SDLP recognises that a child's development hinges on high-quality early childhood education. I urge the Minister to use excess resources to fund early years learning. It is at that base level that increasing investment is essential to addressing poor rates of literacy and numeracy.

Mr McCallister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Rogers: I took the advice of the Speaker earlier that I do not get an extra minute.

I wish to make a couple of points on literacy and numeracy. In 2010-11, 9,000 pupils left full-time education having failed to reach the required standards in literacy and numeracy. An Audit Office report in February 2013 stated that thousands of Northern Ireland's young people leave school unable to read and write. Northern Ireland's global education position for literacy and numeracy has been on the decline since 2006. Although we need emergency measures to address the issue in late primary and early secondary school, we need to adopt a strategic approach that gets to grips with it early in a child's education — in primary school.

Youth services are another critical aspect of the personal development of young people, with the issues of proper provision and funding needing to be addressed. The Estimates state that the primary goals for youth services should be:

"Promoting ... the personal and social development of children and young people and assisting them to gain knowledge ... and, through community relations measures for young people, encouraging the development of mutual understanding and promoting recognition of, and respect for, cultural diversity".

To that end, it is crucial that youth services, from voluntary and community organisations to our very libraries, be properly and consistently funded.

When reviewing the figures, I made particular note of the almost £27,000 provided to the Department of Education by the European Union Programme for Peace and Reconciliation. I ask Members to recognise how EU membership benefits Northern Ireland, especially given the uncertain future that lies ahead. I listened carefully to the Chair of the Agriculture Committee and thought, "What would the farming community do without EU funding?".

If we are to see our economic outlook improve, we need to address the skill imbalances that characterise our island economy. Critically, those imbalances lead to lacklustre productivity and stifle levels of foreign direct investment and business start-up. Skill gaps act as an impediment to productivity and, as such, can generate lags in growth. Skills shortages refer to an imbalance between demand and supply in our labour market. Labour demands may not be fully met if the labour supply does not possess the skills to meet those needs.

We also need to address the imbalance in employment opportunities. All Departments have the opportunity to decentralise public-sector jobs. I understand the pressure that the Invest NI budget is under, but smaller, indigenous business needs a greater share of the cake.

4.30 pm

The SDLP is only too aware of the finite nature of the resources that are available for education services and of the ongoing impasse in welfare reform. However, increased budgetary restrictions and severe Tory cuts in schools will result only in more expensive problems in school maintenance and future provision.

I have said this before and will today reiterate that sound financial planning and balanced funding are intrinsic to improving our education system. I urge the Minister of Education to allocate funding to strengthen the educational prospects of all our young children.

Mr Weir (The Chairperson of the Committee for Education): I will begin with a few remarks in my capacity as Chair of the Education Committee. The two votes on the Supply resolution for the Excess Votes for 2013-14 and the Supply resolution for the Main Estimates for 2015-16 are obviously interlinked.

I will first address the Excess Vote. Most of the excess — £6.28 million — is associated with the Department of Education and refers to a larger than expected cash drawdown in 2013-14. As the House is aware, the Public Accounts Committee has produced a useful summary report of all the excesses. The Education Committee questioned the Department on that in September 2014. The problem in question occurred in the education and library boards, and the Department has subsequently instituted an enhanced control framework to prevent reoccurrence. I understand that the new controls are operating well. We are obviously now also into a new scenario with the Education Authority.

Although £6.28 million is a very small amount when compared with the overall Budget or even with the £2 billion budget for Education, it is nonetheless very important that excesses of that type are avoided. I believe that the Education Committee is generally content that matters are now appropriately under control and that it will support the relevant Supply resolution.

Turning to the Main Estimates for 2015-16, the Committee has studied the budget for Education and appreciates the difficult choices that the Minister has had to make. While the Committee welcomes support for schools, it is concerned about a number of significant funding cutbacks, including, as mentioned by the Member who spoke previously, the early years fund, as well as the Sentinus STEM promotion programmes, the primary-school modern languages programme, the Book Trust Bookstart scheme and the community education initiatives. In addition, there are other challenges to the Education budget in 2015-16 and beyond.

The Committee expects that the level of uptake for teaching and non-teaching voluntary exit will be considerably lower than the target. The Department recently helpfully clarified that it never actually had a target for voluntary exit and that it was, in fact, simply “an extrapolation”, as it called it. Notwithstanding the unusual semantics of redundancy, suppression and voluntary exit schemes, it appears that the failure to meet the imaginary target, or the “extrapolation” as the Department would call it, will lead to real pressures on school budgets. Indeed, the failure to meet that extrapolation is by a considerable margin; it is not something that is relatively minor.

The Department has prudently planned to make additional savings in other areas. However, it is not clear what will happen to individual schools if they do not take proper advantage of the exit scheme — indeed, if they are not given the opportunity — and consequently significantly overspend their budget. It is also not clear what the implications for school transport, school meals and other issues might be if the planned salary savings are not achieved.

The Committee was also surprised to learn of possible additional voluntary exits from the Education Authority. The Department has yet to clarify how many of those posts will be non-school based. I mention that, as the business case for the Education Authority indicated that the resource and staffing depletion had been such that the predecessor organisations, the education and library boards, had been operating at “the extremities of corporate risk”. It therefore seems strange that we seem to be contemplating reducing non-school-based staffing at all. From that point of view, I suppose the issue is also whether the figures were got right by the education and library boards in the first place.

In these times of constrained budgets, an important consideration will be the impact not only on services but on risk. It is, therefore, important that spending is planned and scrutinised and that, perhaps, mitigation measures are included against inevitable additional challenges. At the risk of understatement, I suspect that this may be a very difficult year for budgets, even in the best case scenario. By that I mean that there are a few unwelcome surprises, followed by unpopular revisions. We can all agree that what will be required by schools and the education-related public sector is the minimisation of risk to services.

Having made those remarks as Chair of the Committee for Education, I will move on to some remarks in my capacity as a DUP Member, but I will concentrate on the broader level of education. We have heard, particularly from the previous contributor, about a number of areas where there should be a shift in spending in the education sector. Although I would not share his concerns over Europe, I would broadly share a lot of his concerns about education. There has been, for instance, a lack of strategic direction in early years provision to ensure that there is that level of intervention.

The only problem with that is that while we agree on all those things, unless we get the broader picture right — there are certain parties here that would take us down a different road — dealing with the margins in education will be very much dwarfed by the £600 million black hole that potentially is there in the Budget. Are we to take the advice of Mr Allister, who has, at least, indicated that these are illustrative figures? The Department of Finance and Personnel has already produced illustrative figures, so, quite frankly, why he has a desire to act as a sort of catch-up with the Minister a month later is slightly beyond me. The cynic might say that, as he is not advocating £600 million in cuts, he put down his amendment simply to gain additional speaking time.

Mr Allister: I thank the Member for the additional speaking time. The reason for the amendment is to focus attention on the fact that we need to face reality. We cannot keep kicking the can down the road because that will just be exploited by those who love to do that. I wish to remind the House that what the Minister is doing today is precisely what, for weeks, she said she would not and could not do, which was to put her hand to a Budget with a £600 million hole in it. Yet today, that is exactly what she is doing.

Mr Weir: That is not what the Minister is doing. She will be able to respond to that in greater detail. This did not need to be illustrated because it has already been fairly heavily illustrated. In the Department of Education, the implications of a failure to grasp this issue will, pro rata, be about £114 million. Before and since I became Chair of the Committee for Education, I have met representatives of a wide range of groups who put forward very good cases for a lot of the good work that is being done in education. I do not doubt that for a moment, and I want to see that work supported. The implication, if we ignore the elephant in the room of the £600 million, will be devastating to education.

A year ago, when we had the draft Budget, changes were made by the Department of Education and the Department of Finance and Personnel. We were staring at a reduction in the aggregated schools budget of something in the region of £78 million. The reality is that if there is an in-year gap of £114 million, that will, largely speaking, be faced directly by schools. Sixty per cent of the expenditure goes directly to schools and a lot of other areas are things that, in a very short-term context, cannot be adjusted. This will be an in-year cut. We are not debating next year's Budget today; we are debating the Supply resolution for money going directly into this year's Budget. We are going to be left with a situation where, if we do not get this correct, or people do not allow us to get it correct, instead of the nightmare scenario that was painted a year ago of the implications for teachers of redundancies and the failure to provide levels of education, it will be greater than double that, because that is £114 million in-year. That is the abyss into which we are staring.

I believe in the positive value of education. I believe that it provides opportunities to be a life changer or game changer for many individuals. However, if some people in the House get their way, that game will be changed for people massively to their detriment. We will have a meltdown of the education system and that is the stark reality that needs to be faced up to in the wider context.

This is not some long-term issue that is going to be faced, as the situation in 2016-17 is going to be; it is about what is happening now and what is going to happen in the next couple of months if things are not got right. It will have real impact on the vulnerable in our society. It will destroy life chances. It will destroy schools. It will destroy children's lives. That is what we are faced with. The Minister has brought this forward to try to protect front-line services and do what she can to bring the matter to a head in a sensible fashion. That is why I support the proposal that has been put forward by the Minister and reject the proposal that Mr Allister put forward to cut £600 million from the Budget.

Mr Ross (The Chairperson of the Committee for Justice): In relation to the 2014-15 provisional out-turn, the Department's non-ring-fenced resource DEL underspend of £18.3 million represents 1.7% of the budget, or 0.9 % if PSNI underspend is excluded. The capital underspend of £4.9 million represents 7.8% of the budget.

The Committee discussed the underspends with Department officials, particularly the PSNI underspend of £14.9 million, given the very clear budgetary pressures that the Police Service is facing, as were articulated not so long ago by the Chief Constable on a number of occasions. Whilst there are a number of explanations for the underspend, including legal aid challenges, the cost of which did not materialise during the 2014-15 financial year, and the actions that the PSNI has taken to reduce costs, which focus on planning for the longer term, it is disappointing that such underspends occur and were not identified and declared earlier to enable the money to be used, if not by the PSNI then elsewhere, particularly when there are clear budgetary pressures on front-line services in other parts of the Department.

The Committee fully expects the Department to work more closely with the PSNI during this financial year to ensure that there is transparency and adequate information around its budget, which accounts for over 60% of the overall Justice budget, and spending plans to identify any emerging pressures or easements so that action can be taken to quickly address those issues. The Committee has also advised officials that the Department must proactively identify and manage all emerging underspends to ensure that the budget allocated is fully utilised to support the delivery of its objectives and priorities.

The Committee was also very concerned to learn from officials that Treasury has indicated that the £53 million that was intended to be carried over, under end-year flexibility, for the Desertcreat community safety training college is not available and that, assuming that the college goes ahead, the entire funding will have to come from the block grant. The Committee is of the view that, the sooner a decision is made on how and, indeed, whether it should proceed, the better for all concerned.

In respect of the 2015-16 Budget and some of the key pressures that the Department of Justice is facing, the Minister has had to prioritise funding allocations to protect the delivery of front-line services. The result is severely reduced budgets in many areas of the Department. I previously highlighted the Committee's concerns regarding an approach to cutting spending that does not include a cost-benefit analysis or an analysis of the impact on and cost to other areas of the criminal justice system or other Departments, such as Health. The Committee still has concerns that, by reducing funding to projects that aim to prevent offending and rehabilitate offenders, such as those provided by NIACRO and other voluntary organisations, it will increase costs in the longer term for not just the police but the Courts and Tribunals Service and, ultimately, the Prison Service, thus negating, at least in some part, any savings that may be made in the short term.

Whilst it is clearly difficult to live within reducing budgets, the Finance Minister will know from her previous role that, much in the same way that the private sector used the financial downturn to make its businesses more efficient and look for innovative ways in which to do things so that they are in better shape coming out the other end, reductions in public spending should be used by government as a springboard for change. We should look at how we do things and whether new, innovative approaches could be brought forward to save money and improve outcomes for service users.

That is why I instigated a series of Justice Committee seminars that looked at approaches that could be adopted here in Northern Ireland. The first three seminars that we hosted focused on youth justice issues. Three more will take place in the autumn, covering early intervention projects and other initiatives that we believe could be implemented here in Northern Ireland. The seminars bring together key representatives in the justice system — the judiciary, the PSNI, the Department, the Probation Board, the Youth Justice Agency, the legal professions and, of course, voluntary organisations — to discuss areas for improvement and new initiatives. We, as a Committee, intend to assess the information gathered and identify ideas and new ways of working that could be implemented in the justice system here to deliver more efficient services whilst maintaining the standards that we require.

The Committee is also considering initiatives being taken forward in other jurisdictions and will undertake a visit to London before summer recess to meet the Lord Chief Justice, the Centre for Justice Innovation, the Civil Justice Council and Sir Brian Leveson, who has completed a review of efficiency in criminal proceedings in England and Wales. The purpose of the visit is to explore innovative ways to speed up the justice system and make it more efficient through increased use of digitisation in areas such as court listings, online courts and online dispute resolution. The Lord Chief Justice in Northern Ireland has welcomed the approach that the Committee has taken in these areas.

While the Committee will carefully scrutinise the Department's budget and spending plans, as I have outlined, we also intend to identify possible new approaches that, if adopted, could assist in delivering efficiencies in both the short term and, crucially, the longer term.

Specific in-year pressures that have already been identified by the Department include a range of potential pressures in relation to pensions, including increased employer contribution rates for the main unfunded public service pension schemes from April 2015, for which the Department intends to bid for £7.4 million in the June monitoring round. The creation of the Legal Services Agency and the associated transfer of staff from the Northern Ireland Local Government Officers' Superannuation Committee (NILGOSC) to the Principal Civil Service Pension Scheme (PCSPS), and the costs associated with the transfer of Youth Justice Agency staff to those two schemes, are also creating pressures, although the extent is not yet clear. There is also the potential for a very significant pressure in relation to fine default imprisonment, depending on the outcome of test cases which the Department has indicated it cannot fund within existing resources.

Unfortunately, yet again, the main pressure faced by the Department, even at this early stage of the financial year, centres on the cost of legal aid. Despite the fact that the Department increased the baseline for the Legal Services Agency by using some of the Executive's 2015-16 allocation and implementing larger-scale reductions to other budget allocations, a legal aid pressure of approximately £20 million is already being forecast. The Minister of Justice, when he appeared at the Justice Committee meeting on 28 January, indicated that the key risk to the Department being able to live within its budget is legal aid spend. At that time, he stated that he would be proposing a range of further reforms to manage the pressures on an in-year basis, and it is clear that action is required to address the cost of legal aid on both a short-term and, crucially, a longer-term basis. A failure to find resolution to the legal aid issue will result in impacts on the funding for front-line areas such as the Prison Service, the Court Service and the Probation Board.

Turning very briefly to the Department's savings delivery plans, it is clear that a wide range of savings have had to be made, many of which will impact on the service provided to the public. One example is the relocation of the tribunal hearing centre to the Royal Courts of Justice. Given that the dedicated tribunal centre provided an informal environment for appellants who are often unrepresented and vulnerable and that the Royal Courts of Justice presents a very formal setting that is not in keeping with the original ethos of tribunals, this is far from ideal.

Other examples include reductions in staff in youth justice services, and the operational capacity of the Probation Board is being affected, which will have a direct impact on its delivery of front-line services including the supervision and monitoring of offenders.

The Justice Department is facing substantial budgetary pressures during 2015-16 that will have to be carefully managed to ensure that key priorities and targets continue to be delivered to the required standard. As I said earlier, this does, however, provide a driver and a challenge to look at doing things differently and more innovatively. The Committee intends to play a key role in doing just that.

I now want to speak very briefly as Chairman of the Ad Hoc Joint Committee on the Mental Capacity Bill and highlight the cost that will need to be met if this Bill becomes law. We will have the Second Stage of that Bill tomorrow, and I hope that Members will significantly interrogate the costings that would be required if we were to pass it.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and the Department of Justice have estimated that somewhere between £75 million and £129 million will be required in the first year to implement the legislation, with the associated annual costs estimated at between £68 million and £102 million. These are substantial costs that are currently not budgeted for and that will, even at the lower end of the estimates, represent a significant pressure on the budgets of both Departments, both in the first year of implementation and then on a recurring basis. In my view, the magnitude of the cost is concerning, particularly given the pressures already being faced by both Health and Justice and the other competing priorities that they face. It would be remiss of me not to highlight that at this stage.

Mrs Cameron: I welcome the opportunity to contribute to the debate on the Supply resolution and Main Estimates 2015-16. The Environment Committee was first briefed on the draft Budget by officials from the Department of the Environment in November 2014. That was followed by a further briefing from officials in February 2015. In March, the Minister also agreed to attend the Committee to brief it on the final Budget and the consequences that it will have on the Department and the services that it provides. There is no doubt that, as a result of the parties opposite deciding to hold each other's hand in the economic wilderness, we face not just a tsunami of financial consequences and penalties but a threat to the very institutions of government. Departments now find themselves in the almost impossible position of delivering services whilst barely knowing from one week to the next what further cuts they will be asked to make or what further penalties might be imposed on them.

Perhaps, when the members of Sinn Féin next travel to America with their fundraising begging bowl, they might consider telling their audience about the millions of pounds of taxpayers' money they throw away every week back at home. Their economic strategy, it appears, leaves much to be desired.

The Environment Minister can turn to his colleagues around him, and to his partners in denial in Sinn Féin, and thank them for allowing his Department to suffer the hardest budget hit of any Department, a headline reduction of 10.7%.

As the Chair and Committee members acknowledged, there are existing obligations that the Department is statutorily obliged to pay, such as the derating grant to councils. The Department received an additional £2 million in the draft Budget and £1.9 million in the final Budget to restore that grant to its opening baseline position, but there remains a £1.3 million shortfall, which the Department is bidding for in the June monitoring round. That, coupled with the fact that 60% of the DOE's budget covers salaries, means that other areas in the Department will receive a larger percentage reduction.

Of particular concern to me is the uncertainty now felt by the Environment Department's NGO sector. Those organisations consist of thousands of people who are passionately committed to every aspect of our environment and carry out such valuable work on behalf of us all. If the DOE is taking its responsibilities seriously, those organisations and the work that they do should be described as vital. I welcome the fact that the Minister has finally seen sense and engaged with them, leading to the creation of the £1.25 million natural environment fund. My fear is that whilst that fund may provide some easement, it does not go nearly far enough. Once the groups cease to exist, their expertise will be lost, and we may never get them back. The consequences for the environment in that scenario do not bear thinking about. The loss of valuable services may lead to EU infringement fines and the loss of valuable research into our biodiversity and historic environment. I am aware that the Department has bid for an additional £2 million for environmental programmes in June monitoring and that that is one of its preferred bids.

I have further concerns about the impact of budget reductions in other areas, such as road safety. In recent weeks, our country has witnessed absolute carnage on our roads, with horrendous loss of life and many lives subsequently destroyed through the suffering of the families left behind after a tragedy. It is an absolute travesty to say that we can no longer afford to raise awareness or take preventative action. Those in the Chamber who fail to support Budget reform will, no doubt, be called to explain their reasons to the heartbroken victims of road tragedies. With the number of road fatalities rising, the Department's bid for £1 million in June monitoring to restore the level of funding for road safety communications in line with 2014-15 levels is particularly important. It is also important that the Department of the Environment looks carefully at how it plans to deal with the ever-increasing road fatalities and injuries in Northern Ireland and at more effective and creative ways of delivering road safety messages.

With such a large proportion of DOE's budget relating to salaries, I am pleased that the Committee has pressed the Department, at every opportunity, to determine the exact saving should money become available from the voluntary exit scheme. The Department has a target to reduce its staff by around 400 posts, which will go some way to addressing the other pressures. The Committee is keen that the Department act swiftly and strategically to reallocate savings to priority areas, if and when that money becomes available. I ask the parties opposite to consider how they plan to reform public services should the voluntary exit scheme not have sufficient funding to proceed.

Finally, I turn to the £58 million of capital allocated to the Department. Some £50.5 million is for financial transactions capital funding for the Arc21 development in my constituency. I seek assurance from the Finance Minister that, should the Arc21 planning application for Mallusk not be granted, that loan money can be handed back and allocated, if need be, to another project or even to another project in another Department. It is worth pointing out the fact that here is mass public opposition to the project in Mallusk and more viable and non-controversial options exist.

Mr McCallister: I could join colleagues by getting up and completely ignoring the countless elephants in the room. I wonder about the sheer credibility gap, as it used to be known in American politics, between the politics of what we are discussing and the realities of where we actually are.

I look at and listen to colleagues with great respect. I must say that, for many months, those sitting on the SDLP and Sinn Féin Benches clung to the great hope that Labour was going to win the election. I must say to them that I have some upsetting news: last time I looked, the Tories won. If you do not like it, that is too bad; the Tories won, and they are the elected Government of the United Kingdom.

(Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair)

Those who thought that, under Labour, it would all have been so different should perhaps read the interview given by the shadow Secretary of State for Northern Ireland in 'The Irish Times'. I will quote a couple of highlights. He makes it emphatically clear that neither Sinn Féin nor the SDLP would have had an ally in the battle to compel the British Government to row back on welfare reform in Northern Ireland. He makes that quite clear:

"All the parties, including Sinn Féin and the SDLP, have to demonstrate a willingness to make responsible, tough choices and not to look at the Westminster government and expect blank cheques".

He goes on to ask why there should be in Northern Ireland:

"a far more generous scheme' than was available to his own Bury South constituents in England" — and so on and so forth. It is quite clear that Labour policy would have been no different, or would have differed very little, from that of the Tories. During the election campaign, the First Minister estimated that the difference between the future plans of a Conservative Government and a Labour one was as little as £1 million.

Look across the water to our colleagues in Scotland and listen to them on welfare. They are held up as a great example of fighting the Tories. Alex Neil, the SNP Cabinet Secretary for Social Justice, talked about three things he would change about welfare: the bedroom tax, fortnightly payments and housing benefit to be paid directly to landlords. Does any of that sound familiar? It would suggest that we have done or were about to do exactly what our Scottish friends would like to do.

However, we are in the process of driving the Northern Ireland Assembly and the Executive into crisis. As was pointed out by Dr Farry and Mr Wilson, the Scots and the Welsh are talking about taking on the majority Conservative Government, but they are not plunging their institutions into crisis. No one is talking about taking powers away from Cardiff Bay or Holyrood; they are talking about increasing the powers of those institutions. We have Sinn Féin talking about getting more powers over tax and saying, "If only we had control of this, we could change it". In broad terms, I am a supporter of more tax-raising powers being devolved to this Assembly and Executive but only in the context of a reformed Assembly that has a functioning Executive arm, which could make some of this work.

We seem to have completely closed down the debate and the realities on welfare. We have moved so far away from the broad principle that work should pay that many families who have people in work are worse off than those on benefits, and that situation should not be sustainable.

5.00 pm

I listened to Mr Rogers talk about early years and I agree entirely. During one of the welfare debates, I spoke at length, saying that the idea that we are spending £564 million over the next six years, and cutting early years intervention to pay for it, is absolute madness. Yet that is exactly what we are doing by not dealing with welfare. We are neither fish nor fowl, effectively: we are not doing welfare and we have no budget. So, how are we going to pay for any of this? A key part of any Government is delivering Supply and a Budget. In normal parliamentary democracies, if a Government cannot do that, that Government fall and you have an election. Our difficulty is that we do not know what an election would solve. Would it bring back the same people with the same problems, with no alternative and no viable opposition in place as an alternative Government?

I agree with colleagues who point out that it is incumbent upon all members of the Executive to vote for this, because they are bound into the Executive. In some of the previous Budget debates I quoted from John Fitzgerald Kennedy. I am going to quote, now, from another Kennedy, but this one is from Bessbrook. I want to quote Minister Danny Kennedy from last week:

"More than ever, the debate highlights the fact that our current system allows those in government to behave as though they are absolutely removed from it and as though they are in opposition ... Sadly, for people in Northern Ireland, some here today seem much more comfortable with the character of opposition

— a harum-scarum opposition — rather than the responsibility of government.” — [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p279, col 1].

The parties that are in the Government should step up and act like they are in the Government. Those of us who are in opposition are free to make those choices, because we do not bear the responsibility of government, and do not get extra speaking rights, ministerial cars and the perks of being members of the Executive.

The real tragedy is the impact that all of this is having on Northern Ireland. We look like we are lurching from crisis to crisis: and we are. During recent weeks, I attended an Invest NI event in South Down — at the very successful Irish Open — and I was away with the Assembly and Business Trust at Mr Ó Muilleoir’s conference, New York-New Belfast. The one message we got, in all of those places, was about stability, and yet we are expecting Invest NI to go out and sell Northern Ireland on stability and corporation tax, neither of which this Minister, nor the economy Minister can guarantee. None of that can be made to happen. There is a disconnect from the realities of finance and welfare here, all bogged down in the idea of a Dáil election and what would happen with that.

As I pointed out before, if this place were a sovereign government, the IMF would be running it, not anyone else. We are in the fortunate position that we get a huge fiscal transfer from Westminster. The Greeks were held up by Sinn Féin as a model, as comrades and as an example, but now they are finding it increasingly difficult. They are trapped in a monetary union with no fiscal transfer from the Germans to help them out. We are very fortunate that we are in a political, monetary and fiscal union in the United Kingdom and that we enjoy a £10 billion a year subvention that props this place up.

Meanwhile, we put off all the difficult decisions. We have delayed on public-sector reform. If we had implemented recruitment freezes four years ago, we would not have needed to borrow £700 million to deal with that. We could have borrowed £700 million and made the case for infrastructure. There are many things in the Stormont House Agreement, and, when the Minister responds to the debate, she might want to comment on who all she thinks still supports the Stormont House Agreement. Where does this leave the £700 million for the voluntary exit scheme? If she did get that over the line, would it be enough to ease her financial problems? Where does it leave the £350 million of borrowing for other infrastructure problems? Where does it leave the asset sales? Have we commenced with any asset sales?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I ask the Member to bring his remarks to a close.

Mr McCallister: Can any of that be used to offset the £100 million loan and the £114 of welfare reductions?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Time is up.

Mr McCallister: All those questions remain unanswered.

Ms Lo (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Environment): I welcome the opportunity to outline the Committee for the Environment’s views on the Supply resolution Main Estimates 2015-16. The Committee was first briefed by officials from the Department of the Environment in November 2014 on the draft Budget, followed by a further briefing in February outlining changes. The Minister briefed the Committee, at its request, in March on the final Budget and the impact that it will have on the protection of the environment.

The Committee is aware that DOE has been the hardest-hit Department, with a headline reduction of 10.7%; therefore, it is particularly important that the Committee scrutinise and challenge the Minister on his priorities and budget allocation. Committee members challenged the Minister on his allocation to necessary expenditure. The Committee acknowledges that the Department is obliged to pay the derating grant to councils. Having received an additional £2 million in the draft Budget and £1.9 million in the final Budget to restore that grant to its opening baseline position, there remains a £1.3 million shortfall, which the Department is bidding for in the June monitoring round. That, coupled with the fact that 60% of DOE’s budget covers salaries, means that other areas in the Department will receive a larger percentage reduction.

That has certainly been felt by the Department’s NGO sector, many of whom now face an uncertain future. Towards the end of March, many organisations received letters from the Department advising that their funding will cease in June. Indeed, some were given notice that funding would not be available after March. The Minister has, late in the process, engaged with those organisations and has created a new natural environment fund of £1.25 million, replacing the well-established natural heritage grant programme. While that may alleviate some of the pressure, it does not go nearly far enough, and concerns remain for the longer-term stability of the sector.

An unrealistic budget for environment programmes will ultimately have implications on the protection of the environment, the retention of skills, and the sector’s ability to leverage other funding. It might lead to EU infringement fines and a loss of valuable research into our biodiversity and historic environment. The Committee is aware that the Department has bid for an additional £2 million for environmental programmes in June monitoring and that that is one of the Department’s priority bids. The Committee will keep a watchful brief on that matter.

The Committee also raised concerns regarding the impact of budget reductions in other areas. Members encouraged the Minister to look at alternative and innovative ways of communicating messages on road safety more effectively to a targeted audience to make a bigger impact. With the number of road fatalities rising, the Department’s bid of £1 million in June monitoring to restore the level of funding for road safety communications in line with 2014-15 levels is particularly important.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker, 1 April saw the implementation of a significant change to how Northern Ireland is governed, following the transfer of many functions to local councils. The Committee had previously expressed concerns that a reduction in the rate support grant for less well-off councils would lead to a reduction in service delivery or an increase in rates. The Department’s largest resource bid in June monitoring, £2.8 million, will bring the grant back in line with previous levels of funding.

With such a large proportion of DOE’s budget relating to salaries, the Committee has pressed the Department at every opportunity to determine exact savings should money become available for voluntary exit. The Department has a target to reduce its staff by around 400 posts, which will go some way to addressing its other pressures. The Committee is keen that the Department act strategically to reallocate savings to priority areas if and when that money becomes available.

I will now speak about capital. Of the £58 million allocated to the Department, £50.5 million is for financial transactions capital funding for the Arc21 development. Committee members expressed reservations about the allocation of that money, particularly as planning permission has not yet been granted for the development. The Committee sought reassurances that funding would not influence the outcome of the planning decision.

The Committee is aware that the Department is bidding for a total of £3.41 billion of capital and £12.65 billion of resource in the June monitoring round. Much of the resource bid is either to restore funding to previous levels or to cover unfunded commitments. The Committee will continue its scrutiny role to ensure that the Minister allocates any additional funding that he might receive to priority areas.

Mr Allister: Patently, there is a major crisis in the public finances of Northern Ireland and in the governmental institutional arrangements in Northern Ireland. Else we would not have reached the ridiculous level of proposals being brought for public spending, where those who bring them know that the money that they are voting to spend, they do not have and will not have, because of the logjam created over welfare reform. It is clear that there is a crisis, but it is equally clear that this is a crisis made in Stormont. It is not anyone else's fault: it is made in Stormont. It is a crisis made because of the inevitable consequences of the form of government that we have. It is a crisis epitomising the failure of mandatory coalition in this Province, and it has come to the point at which it looks as though it could well perish on the rock of financial issues. Whether it is now or later, that is the reality because, at the heart of government, there is a party that does not want to make Northern Ireland work; that is quite happy to bankrupt Northern Ireland; and that has no interest in fiscal probity or in making sure that we pay our way, that we have the money to pay our bills or that we meet our national obligations. Now that it has the ball at its toe, it is taking full advantage of the situation. Today, we are giving an opportunity for more of the same. Kick the can down the road rather than face the reality and the fact that the system is grinding to that inevitable halt. Of course, the kicking of the can down the road gives those best experienced in exploiting every situation more opportunity to twist and turn and to do all the things that they do best.

From this fantasy Budget discussion, I suppose it is no great surprise that we have had fantasy-plus in the debate, most particularly from Sinn Féin Members, who talked in wild, extravagant, crazy terms about what needs to be done. When you strip it down, you find that the sophistication of the Sinn Féin message to the British Government was this: "Butt out, but leave your chequebook." That really is the lamentable sum and substance of Sinn Féin's approach to our governmental finances. Little wonder, with a veto —

Mr Wilson: Will the Member give way?

Mr Allister: If I have time. Little wonder, with a veto bestowed on such a party, that we would get to this point. I will give way very quickly.

5.15 pm

Mr Wilson: Will he accept that no chequebook will be left when the Government know that they have people who will continue to write cheques ad nauseam in the irresponsible way that Sinn Féin will, even though they cannot even stick by the agreements that they made?

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Allister: Sinn Féin is very happy to spend other people's money, and if it is the British Government's money, so much the happier it will be. That is the situation we have got to.

This really brings to a crystallising point the failure of these institutions. In a way, it is indicative of the oblivion that these institutions deserve if we have got to the point of playing pretend with the public finances. That game of pretence speaks of a dismal, failed Executive deserving only of oblivion. In fact, it reminds me of some well-known words from Shakespeare that might be the epitaph of this Executive:

"Last scene of all, that ends this strange eventful history, is second childishness and mere oblivion".

Of this Executive it could be said, "sans Budget, sans credibility, sans legitimacy, sans everything".

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call the Minister of Finance and Personnel, Mrs Arlene Foster, to conclude and make a winding-up speech on the debate. The time allocated to the Minister is 52 minutes.

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): There you are — 52 minutes. Excellent. The debate has covered many aspects relating to public expenditure, as well as many aspects not relating to public expenditure, it has to be said. Nevertheless, I will endeavour to address as many points raised as I possibly can in the time very generously allocated to me.

There are three categories of people who have spoken today in the debate. The first is those who are imbued with a sense of realism. They have spoken to support the motion with varying levels of enthusiasm. I accept that, and I understand it. This is certainly not the set of circumstances that I would have chosen for my first substantive debate on the Supply resolutions, but, of course, that is not of my making. It was not my party that reneged on the welfare Bill at the very last stage, thereby causing the difficulties that we find ourselves in today.

However, just to be clear, especially for Mr Allister, this Budget is predicated on welfare being dealt with. His argument that I have in some way moved my position is a fallacy, as I am consistent with what I have said all along, which is that we in my party would certainly not put our hand to a cut of the kind that he is advocating today. The only way that this Budget works is if welfare reform is enacted. I cannot be clearer than that, and, as far as I am concerned, the sooner the better.

The second category of people —

Mr Allister: Will the Minister give way?

Mrs Foster: Yes, I will give way.

Mr Allister: The Minister is on record many times in the public media saying that, if welfare reform is not addressed, we would be in a situation where we could not produce a Budget because we could not balance the books and she would bring only a balanced Budget. Today, she is bringing what is effectively an unbalanced Budget. It is in that respect that she has done the U-turn in kicking the can further down the road.

Mrs Foster: I have not — I wish the Member would listen to what I have said: it is predicated on welfare reform being enacted, and therefore it is a balanced Budget. The second category is his category, namely those who know that they can put forward proposals safe in the knowledge that they will not pass. Mr Allister can put forward a 15% year-on-year cut to the Budget safely knowing that it will not happen. We have not heard from Mr Allister today — he has had ample opportunity to tell us — on where he would cut in the Department of Education in terms of schools or the Health Department in terms of nurses. We have not heard any of that today from the Member, who is looking straight at me and wants to get in.

Mr Allister: Thank you very much. I have made it very clear that the purpose of the amendment is to bring the issue to a head. The Minister thinks that by kicking it down the road some day we will pull in the Secretary of State and she will have to do something. I am saying — it is patently obvious — that there has been more than enough time to sort this failure of the Executive. Bring it to a head now by demonstrating that the Budget is unworkable and force the hand of the Secretary of State to do the things that the Minister really wants her to do.

Mrs Foster: I notice that the Member did not take the opportunity to tell us where the 15% cuts would be enacted.

Anyway, I move on to the third category of people who have spoken today: what I call the “you couldn’t-make-it-up group”. That group has two subsections. First of all, we have the SDLP, who continue to ask ad nauseum for more money without any indication as to where it is coming from. Of course, the second subsection of that group is Sinn Féin, who have absolutely no sense of irony when they seek to lecture the Westminster Government on their “economic incompetence”. The party that advocated clearing people’s credit cards as a policy platform at the Westminster election is lecturing others about economic incompetence.

According to Mr Ó Muilleoir, he is not here to carry water for English Ministers, but frankly, if Sinn Féin and the SDLP get their way, that is exactly what we will be doing — if even that — in the utopia that they are driving us towards. Neither the SDLP nor Sinn Féin has given us any indication as to how we pay for what they are advocating. I am not surprised by that, because throughout this process we have asked for alternatives and different ways of doing things, but no solutions have been brought forward. It is my party that has to always come forward with solutions to the problems that we find ourselves in.

I want to move on to the particular issues that have been raised by Members. Mr Allister took the time to read the DFP Estimates manual. I am not sure that there are too many other Members who have taken the time to read the Estimates manual and quote from it. He highlighted that the manual explains that the Supply Estimates are a critical part of public spending control, which is absolutely right. The key point is that the Assembly can only vote on spending plans agreed by the Executive and brought forward by me, as Finance Minister. The Assembly cannot propose new figures, as the Member suggested. That does not make this vote any less important: it is vital. However, only I, as Finance Minister acting on behalf of the Executive, can bring forward the figures.

Mr Allister also made the point —

Mr Allister: On a point of order, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker. If what the Minister just said is correct, would it not be so that the Speaker, in permitting this amendment to be on the Marshalled List, is failing? I believe that the Minister is wrong and that this Assembly has the power, and indeed the requirement, to approve the Estimates in the manner in which it wishes to approve them.

Mrs Foster: That is not a matter for me to comment on, Mr Principal Deputy Speaker.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: It would be useful if you could comment on that as you continue into the depth of your speech, Minister.

Mrs Foster: It is my belief that only the spending that comes from the Executive can be voted on. That is not just my belief; it is the legal opinion of my departmental solicitors.

Mr Allister also made the point that the Estimates that are being taken through now are too high and that any changes must be agreed by the Executive after today. I am acutely aware that we need to have, as I have indicated, the implementation of welfare reform to ensure that the Budget is sustainable, not just this year but into the future. The alternative is completely unpalatable, with significant reductions required in-year. It is certainly not about kicking the can down the road. The SDLP and Sinn Féin need to sign up to welfare reform, as agreed at Stormont House, or Westminster needs to act. Either of those two elements need to be dealt with sooner rather than later.

It is not unusual to take through Main Estimates that need to be amended through the financial year; the Finance Minister brings proposals to the Executive through the monitoring rounds, and, once agreement has been reached, these changes will ultimately be reflected in the spring Supplementary Estimates for endorsement by the Assembly. This year is no different in that respect, although I do accept that the uncertainties are more severe.

Mr McKay mentioned the welfare reform study that has been conducted. The report is helpful in understanding the context of welfare reform, and it is my intention to release it to the Committee for its perusal in the next few days. Mr McKay also raised the legal position of the use of accruing resources, and I am confident that the legal advice that I have received is robust. I have taken into account the position taken by the Committee, but hopefully the progression of this Budget Bill will ensure that neither legal position needs to be tested.

The expected quantum and spread of savings across Departments from the voluntary exit scheme is being calculated by the working group under the direction of the head of the Civil Service, and hopefully those figures will be available shortly as well. However, before those figures can have any meaning at all, the Stormont House

Agreement needs to be implemented in full because, of course, all of those things are part of the same agreement.

Paul Girvan mentioned the Excess Vote for the Department of Education. I entirely agree with the Member that arm's-length bodies need to be accountable for their expenditure and that they need to deliver value for money for the taxpayer. To be clear, the Excess Votes relate to the 2013-14 financial year, when the Department of Education breached its Vote's amount. I note that steps have been taken by the Department that there will not be a repeat of this situation, and that has been confirmed by the Public Accounts Committee's recommendation.

I am sure that my colleague the Minister of Health will have been interested to hear what Mr McKinney said. He indicated that welfare reform had no impact on the Department of Health. I find this amazing. As Finance Minister, I completely refute that claim. The failure to implement welfare reform has resulted in substantial financial losses for Northern Ireland. For example, this year alone, the block will lose some £114 million in welfare reform penalties. The House will know only too well the financial pressures that our health service faces. Undoubtedly, the Health Minister could have made significant use of an additional £114 million. I have no doubt about that at all. When you listen to people saying that they are protecting the vulnerable, think of the use that that £114 million could have been put to. Think of what it could have been used for. Think of the difference that we could have made to people's lives by £114 million going into the health budget.

Mr Poots: I thank the Minister for giving way. Of that £114 million, the Department of Health's allocation is well over 40%, equating to roughly £1 million each week that the health service is being starved of. That is money that should be spent on increasing nurses' wages and increasing midwives' wages. It is money that should be spent on people's hip operations and knee operations. It should be spent on domiciliary care for the elderly, but, as a result of the actions of the parties opposite, we are in a situation where those people are being denied that service and the health service is being starved of money as a consequence of their grossly bad behaviour.

Mrs Foster: I thank the Member for his comments. I do not know whether he was in the House when Mr McKinney made comments about Transforming Your Care (TYC), which I know that the Member has a particular interest in. Mr McKinney indicated that implementing TYC is about implementing a new model of care. That is right. It will see the home as the hub of care, and, to achieve that, it is important that we build the right services to achieve the vision and that services are sustainable. I do welcome the progress that has been made to date. That progress has seen the creation of 17 new integrated care partnerships across Northern Ireland, which are working to improve the coordination of care and support in key areas such as the care of the elderly and the treatment of chronic conditions, such as diabetes, stroke and respiratory conditions.

Clearly, more has to be done. More will be done, but the Member should note that transition to the new model of care is a long-term process. It will not happen overnight. It takes time to change a health service to deal with a new model of care. I welcome the savings that the Department of Health has made to date. This year alone, the Minister has committed to delivering savings of some £164 million.

5.30 pm

Mr McKinney also raised the issue of the Chancellor's in-year reductions. I can confirm that the Executive's Budget will be reduced by £33 million in resource DEL and £5 million in capital DEL. Her Majesty's Treasury has given us some flexibility in the timing of the reductions, and I will bring proposals to the Executive as part of June monitoring and will, of course, report the outcome of June monitoring to the House in due course.

Michaela Boyle raised the issue of more powers to manage the economy and criticised the United Kingdom Government. The Member conveniently failed to mention that the fiscal deficit is in the region of £9.6 billion, and she did not provide any strategy to reduce it. She did, however, give a knighthood to George Osborne, which I found very interesting, referring to him as "Sir George Osborne". Sinn Féin is now in the business of giving people knighthoods. Moreover, reneging on the Stormont House Agreement has put the devolution of corporation tax in the balance, and we heard the comments made by her colleagues over the weekend in that regard.

Mr McGlone, speaking about the DETI budget allocation for 2015-16 in his capacity as Chair of the Committee for Enterprise, Trade and Investment, referenced the 15.1% reduction in DETI's baseline and expressed concerns about the impact on Invest Northern Ireland's activities. I reassure the Member that the final Budget settlement agreed by the House in January resulted in a net increase of £18.6 million in the 2015-16 DETI resource budget, enabling Invest NI to create legally binding commitments that have resulted in unprecedented success, as we have seen from their recently published results. We know that that will continue under the leadership of the new Minister and Alastair Hamilton in Invest NI. We have allowed them to promote new jobs, drive investment in research and development and support companies to grow export sales.

Mr Irvine — Irwin, rather; I nearly gave him a new name. Mr William Irwin gave the view of the ARD Committee and mentioned bovine TB as one of the key challenges facing the sector. I am aware that, whilst the most recent figures report a reduction in the number of TB herd breakdowns, there has been an increase in the number of reactor animals. While we cannot lose sight of the negative impact of bovine TB on our local farmers, we must also be cognisant of the cost to the taxpayer, particularly given our current budgetary position. The total cost of TB compensation payments in 2014-15 was £14 million. As the Member highlighted, the Agriculture Minister has already flagged up the need for additional funding in this financial year. There is, therefore, a clear need to explore all means of eradicating bovine TB, including the modernisation of our compensation regime.

(Mr Speaker in the Chair)

Mr Irwin also, along with a number of other Members, raised concerns about the use of accruing resources. The accruing resources that a Department may use are subject to a limit set by the Budget Act. As I said in response to the Chair of the Finance Committee, I have received legal advice from the Departmental Solicitor's Office that accruing resources cannot be used in the absence of a Budget Bill, because the limit has not been set. If there is no limit, we cannot use the accruing resources. That would have serious consequences for items such as the single farm payment, and that is why I very much want to progress the Budget Bill to avoid such a situation. I encourage Members to think carefully about how they vote today, bearing in mind the huge issues out there, particularly, in this case, for our farmers.

Mr McCallister: Will the Minister give way?

Mrs Foster: Yes, I will.

Mr McCallister: I declare an interest as a recipient of single farm payment, Mr Speaker. Will that not be hugely worrying to a sector and an industry that you are trying to promote through the agrifood strategy? Adding to very poor trading prices — particularly in the milk sector but also for beef and lamb — difficulties or uncertainty about whether single farm payments will be paid either on time or in full is a hugely detrimental place to be.

Mrs Foster: I understand the Member's concern, not just from a personal point of view but as someone representing his constituents. It is one of the reasons why I have already looked into whether there are other ways in which we could deal with that matter. I hope that we do not have to go down that road. I hope that the Budget Bill will be passed and that we will, therefore, have access to accruing resources, but we have looked at whether we can put the money through the Rural Payments Agency, for example, instead of it going to DARD. I am hopeful that we will not get to that point.

Mr Hilditch, speaking on behalf of the Audit Committee, raised the issues of Audit Office savings and voluntary exit. I welcome the commitment of the Audit Office and, indeed, the Audit Committee to find efficiency savings to ensure that the Audit Office remains within its agreed budgetary settlement. I can confirm that the transformation fund will be open to bids from the Audit Office. However, it must be recognised that the Audit Office is not alone in seeking transformation funding and that all applications to the fund must be strictly assessed on merit. The Member must also be aware that, as Finance Minister, I cannot give a commitment that any funding bids received during in-year monitoring will be met. Such decisions are, ultimately, a matter for the Executive and are dependent on the financial pressures faced and the funding that may or may not become available.

Mr Cree raised a number of issues around the 2014-15 financial year. Whilst the provisional out-turn is not strictly related to the Supply resolution before us today, I confirm that I will report it to the House with the conclusion of the June monitoring round. However, I can reassure the Member that I expect the out-turn to come within the Budget exchange scheme limits set out by the Treasury, so there will be no money returned.

Mr Cree also raised the review of financial processes. I share his concern that that has not been progressed. The Member asked for an update on the Northern Ireland investment fund. I confirm that the fund is still at the formative stage, but I hope that it will lever in additional funding that will help to boost investment and promote economic growth in Northern Ireland. As a first step, the Executive have agreed to commission a feasibility study that will help to determine the optimal structure, scale and investment strategy of the fund. I am pleased that the consultants, Deloitte, have been appointed to advance the study, which I expect to conclude in the next few weeks. The feasibility study will also inform the ideal scale of the fund, but, in the interim, the Executive have decided to set aside an initial £40.9 million of financial transactions capital. We can further review the funding requirements once the feasibility study has concluded.

The social innovation fund has been established to utilise dormant account moneys in Northern Ireland. It was announced as part of the final Budget in 2015-16. There is some £6.4 million available to us. Those funds are in addition to our public expenditure. There has been significant interest in the fund from public representatives since the final Budget announcement, and a public consultation will be launched as soon as possible to seek views on the proposed spending priority of social investment. In addition, the consultation will test options for utilising the fund that will ensure that the fund can be recycled into other social investment schemes. That will include the consideration of match funding.

Mr Clarke, on behalf of the Regional Development Committee, mentioned the Coleraine to Londonderry railway line. I, too, am very pleased that work on phase 2 of the line is going ahead and that it will facilitate hourly services. Like him, I was concerned about the escalation of the costs of the project, which resulted in the Minister for Regional Development having to make a statement to the Assembly back in November acknowledging the errors that had been made with the cost estimates. The project is proceeding at a cost of £46.4 million, and, given the history of the project, the onus is very much on the Regional Development Minister to ensure that the costs are kept under review.

I agree entirely that, in the current financial climate, it is only right that an organisation such as Translink, which receives a substantial subsidy from the taxpayer every year, shares the burden of public expenditure pressures. I understand that, while Translink's results for 2014-15 have not been finalised, its reserves will be reduced considerably compared with previous years.

As far as the current year is concerned, I understand that the company is being required to work to an increased deficit of around £15 million, which is being funded from its reserves. That can reflect DRD's assessment of what Translink can contribute.

Mr Clarke also commented on the funding that the Executive have secured from the European Union, particularly for investment in road infrastructure. One such road project that has benefited from such funding is the A8 Belfast to Larne dual carriageway scheme. That work is almost complete and is expected to be open to traffic shortly. We are looking forward to DRD, hopefully — I think that it is confident — securing up to 40% EU funding for the proposed York Street interchange scheme, which, of course, is also vital.

Pam Cameron mentioned Arc21 and asked what will happen to the financial transactions capital that was allocated to it if the project does not proceed, because, as we know, it does not yet have planning permission. If that is the case, that money can be transferred into the proposed Northern Ireland investment fund. It will not be lost, and we hope that it can be used for further investment.

Mrs Cameron and Anna Lo also praised the work of the voluntary and community sector organisations that are involved in environmental work. Both mentioned the recently launched natural environment fund, which will allocate £1.2 million to environmental groups to help them to deliver on key environmental outcomes. It is worth highlighting the role that the carrier bag levy has had in that fund, thanks to the agreement that my Department secured from the UK Government to retain the income from that levy for use in funding. It has provided a secure income stream that is forecast to be £4.75 million this year, which can be used by the Department of the Environment to fund the sort of organisations and programmes that the Chair and Mrs Cameron spoke about.

Finally, I want to mention Mr Ó Muilleoir, who again talked about fiscal levers and wanted fiscal autonomy. Mr McCallister's point about the credibility gap was very well made. How can we possibly argue for more fiscal powers to come to Northern Ireland when we cannot deal with the powers that are already devolved? We all share a vision of our economy supporting our people, but you cannot simply ignore the fiscal deficit of £9.6 billion. We have to acknowledge the reality of where we are, what that means for the economy and Budget rather than pretending that that simply does not exist.

Mr McKay: I thank the Minister for giving way. She refers to the £9.6 billion. Indeed, other members of her party referred to a £10 billion deficit. That figure comes from a report by her Department and her predecessor. Obviously, we have a great deal of difficulty accepting it as a credible report. The London Government and their Office for National Statistics clearly do not accept that it is credible either.

Mrs Foster: I will tell you what is not credible: the current Sinn Féin economic policy. I listened with incredulity to some Sinn Féin Members' comments, whether Mr Hazzard or Mr Murphy, who is back in the House. I listened to them and cannot believe what is coming out of their mouths. How can they possibly argue for further fiscal powers to be devolved here when we cannot even deal with the powers that we have in front of us? It is just an incredible situation. There is no credibility to go and argue that point. They seem to think that the British people got it wrong in the general election. The arrogance of telling the British people whom they should have put into Westminster is quite incredible. [Interruption.] I do not know what is being said across the way. I cannot hear because I am still talking. It is just incredible to think of the arrogance of Sinn Féin that it will tell the British people whom to put into our national Parliament. Even if that party had got its way and Labour was now in power at Westminster — Mr McCallister made the point — Ivan Lewis was very clear in 'The Irish Times' over the weekend about where he thinks the problems are coming from at present.

5.45 pm

He said that Sinn Féin and the SDLP should accept the current political realities and agree an accommodation on welfare reform. He said that what was being offered in Northern Ireland was a far more generous scheme than was available to his own constituents and that no extra money was coming from Westminster.

Mr McCallister made reference to the voluntary exit scheme, and I hope I answered the point in relation to the £700 million. That is all tied in with the Stormont House Agreement and, therefore, if welfare reform does not happen, none of the other parts of the Stormont House Agreement happens either. That was indicated by the Secretary of State on many occasions.

Mr Speaker, I will draw my remarks to a close. I thank you for your patience. Assembly approval of the Supply motion, and the associated departmental expenditure plans laid out in the 2015-16 Main Estimates, is a crucial stage of the public expenditure cycle. Failure to pass the 2015-16 Supply resolution at this juncture would put at risk the smooth continuation of public services into the remainder of this financial year. Equally, as I have repeatedly outlined, failure of the Executive and the Assembly to find a way forward on welfare reform would put our spending plans at risk and present Ministers and the Assembly with the unenviable task of imposing further spending reductions on our already hard-pressed departmental budgets. That is something that we as a party have already indicated that we are not prepared to do to the people of Northern Ireland.

So, it is in that context that I commend the motion to the House.

Mr Speaker: Thank you, Minister. Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the motion requires cross-community support.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That this Assembly approves that resources, not exceeding £7,444,446.68 be authorised for use by the Department of Education and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, for the year ending 31 March 2014, as summarised for each Department in Part II of the 2013-14 Statement of Excesses that was laid before the Assembly on 8 June 2015.

Mr Speaker: As there are Ayes from all sides of the House and no dissenting voices, I am satisfied that cross-community support has been demonstrated.

I now move to the motion on the Main Estimates, which has already been debated.

Motion proposed:

That this Assembly approves that a sum, not exceeding £8,336,067,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund, for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 and that resources, not exceeding £9,004,299,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(b) and 3(a) of table 1.3 in the volume of the Northern Ireland Estimates 2015-16 that was laid before the Assembly on 8 June 2015. — [Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel).]

Amendment proposed:

Leave out all after “exceeding” and insert:

“£7,732,067,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund, for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 and that resources, not exceeding £8,400,299,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(b) and 3(a) of table 1·3 in the volume of the Northern Ireland Estimates 2015-16 that was laid before the Assembly on 8 June 2015, subject to a proportionate reduction for each Department, with the exception of the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety, and each other public body referred to in columns 3(b) and 3(a) of table 1·3 of the aforesaid Estimates, so as to reflect the £604,000,000 shortfall resulting from the failure to implement the Stormont House Agreement.” — [Mr Allister.]

Mr Speaker: Before we proceed to the Question, I remind Members that the vote on the motion, whether or not amended, requires cross-community support. The vote in relation to the amendment will be on a simple majority basis.

Question, That the amendment be made, put and negatived.

Main Question put and agreed to.

Resolved (with cross-community support):

That this Assembly approves that a sum, not exceeding £8,336,067,000, be granted out of the Consolidated Fund, for or towards defraying the charges for Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 and that resources, not exceeding £9,004,299,000, be authorised for use by Northern Ireland Departments, the Northern Ireland Assembly Commission, the Assembly Ombudsman for Northern Ireland and the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Complaints, the Food Standards Agency, the Northern Ireland Audit Office, the Northern Ireland Authority for Utility Regulation and the Public Prosecution Service for Northern Ireland for the year ending 31 March 2016 as summarised for each Department or other public body in columns 3(b) and 3(a) of table 1·3 in the volume of the Northern Ireland Estimates 2015-16 that was laid before the Assembly on 8 June 2015.

Mr Speaker: As there are Ayes from all sides of the House, I am satisfied that cross-community support has been demonstrated. I have clearly identified the No vote, so the motion is carried.

Private Members' Business

BBC 'Panorama': 28 May 2015

Mr Speaker: Members, just leave quietly, please. The Business Committee has agreed to allow up to one hour and 30 minutes for the debate. The proposer will have 10 minutes to propose the motion and 10 minutes to make a winding-up speech. One amendment has been selected and is published on the Marshalled List. The proposer will have 10 minutes to propose the amendment and five minutes to make a winding-up speech. All other Members who wish to speak will have five minutes.

Ms Ruane: I beg to move

That this Assembly shares the serious concerns about collusion, as reported in the BBC 'Panorama' programme broadcast on 28 May; calls for a thorough and independent investigation of these matters; and further calls for the legacy institutions, agreed in the Stormont House Agreement, to be set up as a matter of urgency so that victims and survivors are given real hope of achieving truth and justice in the near future.

Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. As I ask for support for the motion, I am conscious that the debate is taking place as people continue to grieve. I understand that that grieving is happening across the political spectrum, and I want to acknowledge the pain and suffering that our society has come through over decades. I hope that we will have a good and respectful debate; I ask all Members for that.

The debate is about collusion. I have no doubt that some in the House will be opportunistic and try to bring up killings by the IRA. We have had many debates about that, and I am sure that we will have again in the future. As we speak today about state involvement, I understand that many people have also suffered at the hands of the IRA and that their grief is no less than the grief of the families who have suffered through state violence.

Today is about the collusion of state forces and their use of loyalist paramilitaries. That is nothing new for the British Government: they used the same tactics wherever they colonised, whether it was in Aden, Africa, Latin America or in Europe.

The last 12 months have been very difficult for families who have been victims of collusion; they have had long court battles, and more and more truth is coming out. Collusion was a deliberate policy that was designed to use unionist paramilitaries as a method of killing Irish citizens or, indeed, anyone who got in their way — those in opposition to the state. There was a particular focus on Irish republicans and nationalists. They did it to subvert the rule of law and to avoid responsibilities in international courts. I was a human rights worker at the time, and we carried out a number of public inquiries into state killings, into the shoot-to-kill policy. The British Government were coming under a lot of international scrutiny, and international courts were clogged up with cases, so the use of unionist paramilitaries was a very deliberate strategy for the state to pretend that it had nothing to do with it.

I pay tribute to the families who have done sterling work to expose it: the family of Pat Finucane and the Loughinisland families. You just need to look at what happened in Loughinisland. Agents were used to drive getaway cars, and cars were destroyed whilst being held by the RUC. Evidence was destroyed by the RUC, and agents, many of whom had serious criminal records and got money for their services, were protected.

Collusion was only one of a number of policies. I remember being a member of the committee for the truth about collusion in the late 1990s. We were laughed at and called conspiracy theorists; now it is generally accepted by all that there is collusion. We are beginning to see the extent of it, but I would argue that it is the tip of the iceberg. That is what 'Panorama' exposed, and I have no doubt that that is what 'Prime Time' will expose tonight.

In this part of Ireland, we have had paramilitary policing, Diplock courts, emergency legislation and judges congratulating the RUC for sending people to "the final court of justice", effectively endorsing the RUC shoot-to-kill policy. We have also had the targeting of defence lawyers. The British Government are still trying to present themselves as neutral peacekeepers between the warring tribes.

Collusion was about suppressing dissent, terrorising communities and telling the croppies to lie down. We have seen cases in which families thought, for decades, that their loved ones had been killed by the IRA, only to discover that it was the state. We have not yet heard all the truth about the biggest loss of life in the conflict — the Dublin and Monaghan bombings — and the British state's involvement in those south of the border.

A number of our Members will speak in the debate, but I want to focus on gender, and on the particular role of women when loved ones were lost. We all know in the House that, in many instances, women would fulfil the primary role of family carers and homemakers. The violation of the safety of their home and the ensuing trauma was a harm in its own right.

Mr Humphrey: Will the Member give way?

Ms Ruane: No, I will not give way. You will have an opportunity to speak.

Following the importation of South African weapons, 12 women — Katrina Rennie, Eileen Duffy, Teresa Fox, Teresa Dowds De Mogollon, Sharon McKenna, Philomena Hanna, Sheena Campbell, Karen Thompson, Moira Duddy, Theresa Clinton, Roseanne Mallon and Kathleen O'Hagan — were murdered.

Mr Allister: Caroline Moreland.

Mr Humphrey: Jean McConville.

Mr Speaker: Order.

Ms Ruane: All those killings point to state collusion. We also had the murder of tireless human rights lawyer Rosemary Nelson. I have no doubt that I have missed other names, and if I have, I apologise to those families in advance. What we had was a state policy that targeted family homes and family members. The civilian women and children of those homes deserve an independent and thorough investigation that is article 2-compliant.

In many cases, the paramilitaries that went in doing the shooting for the state had maps of the houses provided to them by state forces. Any agency charged with investigating our past must apply a gender lens to ensure that the full complexion of experience and arising need is identified. I am not in any way trying to belittle the killings of men, but we will all agree that, when a woman is murdered in a conflict, there are extra dimensions to it. [Interruption.] The Stormont House Agreement is the appointed way forward that all the parties here negotiated. All the investigations must be article 2-compliant. We cannot have a situation in which those involved in murders, in overseeing murders and in overseeing investigations are carrying out those investigations. George Hamilton has an enormous responsibility in relation to those matters, given what happened in the past. I have no doubt that he understands that confidence in policing is at stake here. He needs to avoid the mistakes of his predecessors.

We will not support the DUP amendment. It is an attempt to separate those killed by the British state and an attempt to create a hierarchy of victims. I have yet to hear from the other side of the House — today is an opportunity to do this — a critique of state killings and of the extent and level of involvement of the RUC, the RIR, and layers and layers of the British Army.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Ms Ruane: No, I will not give way.

We know that the British Government have been found guilty, unanimously, by 12 judges in the European Court. I was privileged to be at that hearing. To move forward, we need to ensure that there is proper truth for all relatives. We should never try to say that there is a hierarchy of victims. That is the greatest insult to people who lost their life in this conflict and to their family. They deserve truth and justice, and, to date, they have got very, very little of it. I commend the motion to the Assembly.

Mr Speaker: Before I call the next contributor, I remind Members about the guidance that I issued on respect. This is a very important debate, but it is a debate cannot happen only in this Chamber. It is already very difficult for such a debate to happen in wider society. Our behaviour can either make it more difficult or more possible for that important debate to happen in the wider community. I remind Members of their responsibility in that regard.

Mr Poots: I beg to move

Leave out all after "May" and insert

"as well as the 'Spotlight' programme broadcast on 9 June 2015 and the criminal actions of paramilitary organisations highlighted in both programmes; and calls for the implementation of the Stormont House Agreement, in full, as a matter of urgency to afford victims and survivors the opportunity to pursue justice in the near future."

I thank the Speaker for reminding us of that. It is just a pity that he did not do so at the outset, before Ms Ruane asked for respect and then gave a grossly disrespectful speech to the House. When I first read the Sinn Féin motion, I was somewhat incredulous at its wording. I will deal with that. When I listened to Ms Ruane, a greater degree of incredulity arose.

People might think that we are living in some sort of parallel universe. I think that Ms Ruane's speech came from some sort of paramilitary universe where people want to rewrite history, whitewash the past of the IRA and implicate others as the main perpetrators in the Troubles, when, in fact, the IRA was responsible for over 60% of the murders in Northern Ireland. If no collusion took place with that organisation, where did it get the information from for many of the murders that it carried out?

6.00 pm

Look at the bombings, for example, that took place in Claudy and Enniskillen and the activities that took place in south Armagh. Where did the people go when those murders took place? They took refuge and were harboured in the Republic of Ireland. When information was sought on the murders of Superintendent Buchanan and Chief Superintendent Breen, it was not forthcoming. That inquiry was held back and delayed as a result of information not coming from the Republic of Ireland Government.

Even now as we speak, the Kingsmills people are still waiting for information so that they know what happened in the situation involving their loved ones. We will not have —

Mr Humphrey: Will the Member give way?

Mr Poots: I will in a moment.

We will not have a situation where Sinn Féin can come to the House and attempt to whitewash its way and rewrite history. That will not be tolerated.

Mr Humphrey: I am grateful to the Member for giving way. The Member talks about the Republic of Ireland Government and Administration. Does he agree with me that it was not until we had the foot-and-mouth disease that the border was sealed, which unionist politicians called for to protect people in Northern Ireland, whatever their religion or political background? That could not be done until we a situation with foot-and-mouth disease along the border.

Mr Poots: That is absolutely true.

When you look at circumstances where you had the ethnic cleansing of a community in County Fermanagh, you see that some 111 people were murdered in that county, 110 of them from the Protestant faith. How can that be described as anything other than ethnic cleansing? Who were the people responsible for it? The IRA.

Look at villages like Castlederg, where 20 people were murdered. Look at places like south Armagh, where hundreds of people were murdered. Those actions were carried out by none other than the IRA. I have to say that the authorities in the Republic of Ireland showed considerable degrees of complicity with it, as those people were allowed to stay in the Republic of Ireland. They were not extradited; they were harboured and given safe haven to carry out their activities and to live in that country after they conducted their activities.

My incredulity at the outset related to Sinn Féin's reference to Stormont House. Here we have Sinn Féin wanting the Stormont House Agreement to be implemented, yet it is the single party that is holding back the implementation of Stormont House. Let me be very clear about this: you will not be getting a partial implementation of the Stormont House Agreement; it will be implemented in full or not at all. Sinn Féin needs to realise very clearly that, if it does a deal, it needs to stand over it. Do not expect others to implement what it wishes to be carried out, while Sinn Féin does not implement the bits that it does not like.

The second part of my incredulity was because, in the motion, Sinn Féin refers to victims and survivors. I touched on this, but Sinn Féin is hardly the best advocate to represent victims and survivors. I note the names on the list, one of which is Mr Raymond McCartney. Representing victims and survivors? He was convicted of murder — the murder of Jeffrey Agate.

Mr McCartney: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. Those convictions were quashed. I fought a very successful campaign to have those convictions quashed. I ask Mr Poots to withdraw those remarks.

Mr Campbell: How much money was paid?

Mr Speaker: The Member has the opportunity to withdraw those remarks in the light of that information.

Mr Poots: I accept what Mr McCartney is telling us about that element of it being quashed.

Mr McCartney: Further to that point of order, Mr Speaker, it is not a matter of accepting what Mr McCartney said; it was said by the Court of Appeal and, indeed, the Supreme Court in London.

Mr Campbell: What was the amount of money that was paid?

Mr Poots: I am happy to accept what Mr McCartney says —

Mr Speaker: Order. Sorry, Mr Poots. I am not going to have people shouting across the Floor. Mr Poots has the Floor. You have a piece of updated information, and it seems that you are prepared to accept it. If so, I think we should move on.

Mr Poots: Thank you for that.

We then have Mr Kelly, who was found guilty of bombing and of explosives charges. We have Mr Lynch, who was caught in possession of firearms and explosives. They are hardly the people to be representing the voice of victims. In truth, none of this was justified. No single murder that took place in Northern Ireland was justified or justifiable, yet we have the people who are associated with the organisation that carried out the vast majority of the murders coming to the House today seeking to implicate others as the baddies.

Amongst the targets were soldiers, RUC men, part-time UDR men, ordinary farmers, businesspeople and female census collectors. They were men, women and children in Bloody Friday, Claudy, La Mon, Kingsmill, Enniskillen, Shankill and many more. Ms Ruane started to lecture us about the women who were killed in the Troubles. Women were killed in many of those instances by the organisation called the IRA. If Ms Ruane wants to condemn the murder of those women by the IRA, I will be very happy to give way to her — but her silence is deafening. Her silence is deafening because it is all right for women to be murdered when they are just Protestants or some form of legitimate target of the IRA. That is an absolute disgrace.

They were young women like Gillian Johnston, who was shot dead by the IRA while getting out of the car after her boyfriend had left her home. She was not involved in anything other than that she was a young Protestant woman living on the border. There was the murder of Jean McConville, the mother of 10 children who had already lost her husband, which left those 10 children orphans. In the murder of Caroline Moreland, Sinn Féin or IRA women took her away in the car. It was women who took Caroline Moreland away. It was women who interrogated her. It was women who questioned her. I am happy to condemn all these murders; all the ones that were referred to by Ms Ruane and these ones. Joanne Mathers was a young mother out collecting the census. Heidi Hazell was a young woman killed over in Germany. Here we have, over and over and over again, lives taken and Sinn Féin coming here making some sort of suggestion —

Mr Givan: Will the Member give way?

Mr Poots: Yes.

Mr Givan: Does the Member agree that, while the murder of women was utterly condemnable, we are only now starting to hear the true findings of the sexual abuse of republicans by republicans that took place?

Mr Poots: Yes. Then we had a special adviser appointed to this House who was convicted of being involved in the murder of another young woman, Mary Travers, and her father. We are not going to take lectures about people being misogynist from Ms Ruane when she is supporting an organisation that killed women left, right and centre, namely the IRA, and is unable to stand up and condemn those murders today.

I do not believe that collusion was associated exclusively with loyalists. I believe that there were elements who engaged in collusion, but that was not the security forces that we know. Had there been the widespread collusion that people opposite seem to suggest that there was, I believe that there would have been many, many thousands of people killed as a result. If that information flow had been such, there would have been thousands of people, thousands of republicans, killed in a very short space of time. Yes, there may be the odd rotten apple in a barrel, but no systematic collusion took place. I want to nail that very, very clearly. What some individuals did was one thing, but it was not an organisational thing.

I should be grateful to some of the Members opposite. It is quite clear to me that the informers helped to end the Troubles, and the informers did not stop at Freddie Scappaticci or Denis Donaldson. There are much higher-placed informers in the republican movement than those individuals. I suspect that some of those high-level informers could be in places of great authority, even as we speak.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Poots: I have not named anybody. You are all getting very edgy and uppity —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr Poots: — but I have not named anybody. Let me be clear that informers did not stop there.

Mrs D Kelly: Ms Ruane commenced her speech by saying that we should be mindful of the fact that people are still hurting and grieving, that there are many victims out there and that it is very regrettable that, 17 years on from the signing of the Good Friday Agreement, commitments made to victims have yet to be fully realised in their search for truth and justice. Unfortunately, however, Ms Ruane went on to say that she was confining this debate to the evident collusion, described in the 'Panorama' programme, between the British security services, the RUC and loyalist/unionist paramilitaries, and she failed, utterly, to recognise the collusion that existed between republicans and the security services. She almost airbrushed, certainly from her memory, the contribution made on 'Panorama' by Shauna Moreland, who spoke from the heart and very eloquently said what it meant to her to lose her mother at such a young age. She also spoke of the travesty of justice and of trying to remain in such a community where, as the daughter of an alleged informer, you are at the bottom of the pile. Ms Ruane has said that there should not be a hierarchy of victims, but, in her contribution, she created the hierarchy by confining and restraining her remarks to finger-pointing at the collusion that existed elsewhere.

I also have to take exception to Mr Poots's contribution. He fails to recognise the evidence compiled in report after report, from Stevens and Stalker/Samson to the Police Ombudsman and numerous others, that point to systematic collusion. I understand that there is a further documentary tonight on RTÉ, on which former head of Special Branch Mr Raymond White will be saying that he raised the handling of agents with the then Prime Minister, Margaret Thatcher. He, very clearly, is firing a shot across the bow of those who would reveal the truth and is saying that he will not go down on his own in relation to how high up and how systematic the collusion was in respect of state-sponsored killings.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Member for giving way. Given the lack of balance that has been exhibited by Ms Ruane and, indeed, Mr Poots, and given the fact that we have so much information now that involves republicans and loyalists, British intelligence services and the RUC, is it now more necessary for there to be a firm and established process that establishes the balance of truth here in Northern Ireland and that we work towards that as soon as we can?

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mrs D Kelly: Thank you, Mr Speaker. I agree entirely with my colleague's comments. It is regrettable that both contributors thus far have underscored the concerns raised in the Secretary of State's "Moving politics forward" speech of April 2014. In that speech, she said that there was:

"concern that new structures and processes could lead to a one sided approach which focuses on the minority of deaths in which the state was involved rather than the great majority which were solely the responsibility of the terrorists".

Having listened to some of the contributions today, I can understand why the Secretary of State said that.

The SDLP is very clear that all of the truth must come out. Certainly, many people are not going to get justice, and many victims and their families are reconciled to that fact, but they want to know how it happened and why it happened. I do not know of any other western democracy where state-sponsored killings and collusion would be allowed on such a scale without an outcry in the Parliament of that nation.

It is regrettable that the responsibilities and vested interests have taken primacy over the needs of the victims and survivors and even, I think, Mr Speaker, arguably, of society in trying to reconcile the people on the island and between these islands. So, it is not just about meeting the needs of victims; it is about trying to build reconciliation and telling the truth about the past, because a lot of people are very keen to rewrite history and their role in it. Ms Ruane demonstrated that most eloquently when she failed to mention the Jean McConville or Caroline Morelands of this world.

In my party, we have colleagues also hurting. Councillor Denise Fox's own father, Denis Mullen, was murdered by the Glenanne gang. He was one of 120 people thought to have been murdered who were named in that excellent investigative report by Anne Cadwallader, 'Lethal Allies'. So it is very clear that the truth about the scale and nature of what happened in our past must come out so that people who are building up themselves and their colleagues as heroes have a lot of explaining to do as to why they took the route of violence. The SDLP has always been a peaceful, constitutional party and it has never explained away the requirement for violence, unlike others who, once again today, are attempting to rewrite history.

Mr Hussey: Today we see Sinn Féin members attempting to cite the BBC and media investigations as evidence of widespread collusion between police and loyalist paramilitaries. They stoically refuse to recognise the role of agents and informers within republican ranks who may have survived the Troubles and may now be in key positions. Stevens, Stalker, Sampson etc, plus de Silva, Nelson and Ballast indicate that something was indeed going on between elements of the security services and some loyalist gangs. Given that the state faced a mass insurrection in the early 1970s and the fact that the use of informants and undercover agents has been a tactic used for hundreds of years, it is not surprising that the state had agents in loyalist and republican groupings.

Let us look at the context of life in Northern Ireland in the Troubles—

Mr A Maginness: Will the Member give way?

Mr Hussey: I will.

Mr A Maginness: Just in relation to agents, of course there will be agents, but what we are talking about here is allowing those agents to commit criminal offences, and in particular murder, on a systematic basis. That is the problem, and that is what needs to be examined.

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Hussey: That is what I intend to deal with and, as has already been mentioned by others, this has been a practice for many years. It was used by the loyalist and republican groupings.

Let us look at the context of life in Northern Ireland. During the Troubles, we endured 3,500 deaths, 47,000 injured, 16,000 bombings and 36,000 shooting incidents. The RUC was stretched to breaking point, and it is entirely unfair to judge actions at that time from the relative comfort and safety of the present day. The state did what it did to end violence. It sought to penetrate terror gangs to gather intelligence and thwart their ability to mount operations and take lives. Agents and informers were a necessary part of that, just as they were a necessary part of the FBI's efforts to bring down organised crime in the USA. Terror groups, in contrast, had hundreds of members who, on a daily basis, set out to try to kill people.

Mrs D Kelly: Will the Member give way?

Mr Hussey: No.

The existence of files created and held by the state with regard to the police, army and intelligence services means that the media and formal inquiries can gain access to them. The IRA, INLA, UVF and UDA, being illegal terrorist gangs, did not keep records or files — or, as far as we know, they did not. This very fact means that any attempt to investigate the past will inevitably be skewed to investigate the actions of the state, the police and the army. This completely misses the point that in the early 1970s thousands of terrorists spent their waking hours seeking to murder policemen, soldiers and civilians. The focus needs to be on the terrorist godfathers who sent young men and women out on murder missions, rather than on the police and security services who were doing their damndest to stop them.

However, just imagine for a moment that there was a conspiracy. If the might of the British state, ranging from the intelligence services such as MI5, acting alongside the SAS and many regiments comprising tens of thousands of well-trained and well-armed troops, backed up by the RUC, including the famous Special Branch, was indeed able to call on and direct thousands of loyalist paramilitaries to take on the IRA, some questions arise. The first is: how were they so ineffective? How did this vast array of forces managed to miss virtually everyone in the IRA and Sinn Féin leadership? How did so many senior figures manage to avoid jail or death? Some of them, it must be remembered, led curiously charmed lives for over 30 years. Surely the SAS, MI5 and Special Branch would have had ample opportunity to remove key players from the pitch.

If they could not arrest and jail them, what about the allegations of shoot to kill by the security forces? Surely, if collusion was in operation, loyalist terrorists could have been directed to murder high-value targets in the IRA and the wider republican movement, rather than killing so many innocent people when there was no strategic military or political value. Why would the state risk so much for so little reward?

One answer may be that there was no great conspiracy and that loyalist murder gangs were acting under their own direction when they targeted low-level republicans and innocent Catholics. Another explanation may be rather unpalatable to republicans: the IRA and Sinn Féin contained a large number of informants and state agents, and, as a result, the security services were protecting their men and women at the heart of the republican terror machine by directing loyalist killer gangs away from highly placed and valued British agents in the IRA and Sinn Féin. Certainly, if the state was able to direct and facilitate the UDA and the UVF, you would have expected loyalist gunmen in the 1970s and 1980s to manage to take out IRA and Sinn Féin leaders and bring terror to their door, rather than wasting time and effort killing innocent nationalists or the odd IRA foot soldier. The success in prosecuting loyalist terrorists also suggests that they were not acting in concert with the state. After all, if collusion with loyalists was widespread, surely the state would not have wanted their agents removed from the stage.

Would Sinn Féin recognise the truth? Sinn Féin has proven in the past that it is selective in what it believes. What about collusion between the Republic of Ireland and republicans: the murder of the RUC officers, Mr Breen and Mr Buchanan; the murder of Lord Justice Gibson; the arms trial in the 1970s; the foundation of the Provisionals; the blind eye turned to on-the-runs, training camps etc in the Republic's jurisdiction; and the border campaign, particularly in my constituency of West Tyrone and the Castleberg area, and the relative ease with which the IRA could come and go across the entire region?

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr Hussey: What of the collusion between the IRA and the civilians who identified part-time members of the security forces? Ms Ruane made a comment about truth for all victims: that is what we want. I would love there to be truth for all victims, but as long as people on your side of the House remain silent, Ms Ruane, we will not get it.

Mr Dickson: I welcome the opportunity to speak on an issue that has poisoned political discourse but, most importantly, has destroyed and poisoned the lives of those directly affected. They include citizens from all communities in Northern Ireland. Since the late 1980s, suspicions that the state worked with agents in paramilitary organisations have been widely established.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Member for giving way. Quite rightly, he says that the issue has poisoned political discourse, but would a proper truth recovery process not liberate the political process and allow it to get better and be more constructive?

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

Mr Dickson: I thank Mr Maginness for his intervention and wholeheartedly agree with him.

Numerous investigations have proven, beyond a doubt, that that was the case, and many agents from all quarters have been implicated in the murder of people across Northern Ireland. It appears that these were murders that could have been prevented had the state intervened, rather than passively watching, turning a blind eye or even sanctioning them at the highest level.

The Stevens inquiries highlighted the characteristics of the collusion, which include:

“the wilful failure to keep records, the absence of accountability, the withholding of intelligence and evidence, and the extreme of agents being involved in murder. These serious acts and omissions have meant that people have been killed or seriously injured.”

In a liberal, democratic and open society, that is an intolerable situation. However, what makes it worse is the continuing lack of action on the issue in the House and in the Executive. Victims and survivors deserve, demand and require our support. We must give them our support. More than that, they deserve action: action to deliver the truth; action to deliver justice.

Today, I believe that all that the families want is the truth. Many will want more, but some will require just the simple truth. Therefore, the Alliance Party wholeheartedly supports the creation of legacy institutions to deal with the past, as we agreed in the Stormont House Agreement.

Those institutions will include an oral history archive, which will provide a place for people from all backgrounds to share experiences and narratives. Crucially, that will be free from political interference, and all of us in the House must ensure that that freedom is maintained. A historical investigations unit will be set up to carry out the unfinished work of the Historical Enquiries Team. That will be crucial for victims and survivors who have not yet had their case investigated or for whom new evidence comes to light.

To secure those prospective institutions, we must, as a matter of urgency, return to the pathway set out by the Stormont House Agreement. That means that we implement all parts of the agreement as previously agreed or risk unravelling it all. Although it requires the difficult implementation of welfare reform, Sinn Féin and, indeed, the SDLP must face up to their responsibilities in government. To put it simply, the House cannot implement only the parts of the agreement that it likes and forget about the commitments that we have made, for example, to welfare reform. We cannot provide justice and deal with the past in an insolvent, unstable environment. We all need to work together to build the foundations for truth and justice by first securing a Budget, the living standards and the basic necessities for all our citizens in Northern Ireland.

If, however, we are ever truly to establish the truth through those institutions, people need to disclose what they know. The day of speeches like Ms Ruane's has to come to an end. She has to step out of the world of denial that she and her party live in. For that reason, I propose an amendment to the debate this evening that calls on all the actors to share with the new institutions any information that they hold. Sinn Féin cannot demand a higher standard of truth from state actors who caused harm without delivering the same actions and the same truth itself. The Stormont House Agreement made progress in those areas, and we must not throw it away. The victims and survivors deserve that from us. Sinn Féin and the SDLP cannot have their cake and eat it either. They must be responsible parties in government and implement the Stormont House Agreement in full.

Mr Frew: I rise in angst at the behaviour of the party opposite and at the way in which, at every opportunity, whether in the House or in the media, they apply hurt and pain on the victims and survivors each time they open their mouths with their selective memories and their forked tongues. Tonight was no different. Ms Ruane, in her opening speech, wanted to be selective and to confine the debate to murders that may involve collusion between our security forces only. Ms Ruane, I have a message for you: we will not let you. You and your colleagues are living in a world of denial. We will not allow that to take place. We will not allow you to do that, and we will make sure that, if it is the last thing we do, the truth will come out.

Given that 60% of murders were committed by the IRA and 30% by loyalist terrorists, there is absolutely no doubt that that is where the blame must lie for the Troubles and for the pain and the hurt on all our people. No matter what religion you are, what church you worshipped in or what background you came from, murder is murder, and it was committed by terrorist actions. Ten per cent of those killings were committed by security services, but many of them were committed by bringing terrorists down as they were active and on their way to murder innocent victims.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the Member for giving way. Will he acknowledge that there is evidence that some murders could have been prevented had the security services not allowed agents to get up to acts, including murder?

Mr Speaker: The Member has an extra minute.

6.30 pm

Mr Frew: Thank you, Mr Speaker.

Yes, any collusion should be investigated, but you have to remember that whilst we talk about collusion, Sinn Féin talks about informers as being in collusion, and that is not the case. The use of informants is a tried and tested means of helping to protect people in a security threat and in a security environment, and that is what our security forces and security services had to do. I have no doubt that the use of informers saved many hundreds of lives.

Mr Hazzard: Will the Member give way?

Mr Frew: No, I will not, because your party did not have the good grace to give way to other Members of the House.

We need to find out the truth about the IRA and other terrorist organisations. We need to find out everything about their murders and their activities in murders. We have the Kingsmills victims and families, and we have the Teebane victims and families. Every time they hear Sinn Féin talk in a forked tongue, in a confined environment, it pours more pain and more hurt on those people, and that will be echoed across the spectrum of victims — across everyone in Northern Ireland.

Look at what the terrorist organisations did to our people. They ethnically cleansed large communities in our border counties; they worked in the shadows, hid in the hedges and shot people in the back, at their place of work, or at their front door with their children around their knees. They blew them to bits in their cars, in their vans, and even in the school buses they were driving that day. We will never allow this peace process or this truth recognition process to be one-sided. We will never ever allow that to happen.

When I think about the use of informants, I have no doubt that it actually strangled the republican movement to a halt. I believe that it eventually led to the defeat of the IRA and all other terrorist organisations. You may laugh and scorn at that statement, but I know for sure that there are many today in the ranks of political parties who were and are informers, which led to the defeat of the IRA. Many of you sitting in the room tonight may also have been informers and gave information to the police. Let us remember what that statement means, because the IRA murdered people and "disappeared" them because they gave information to the police — not even for informing or being an informant, but just for giving information to the police. You murdered them; the IRA murdered them; and that will never be forgotten by our people.

I have no doubt that the use of informants means that we have peace, or relative peace, in our towns, in our cities and on our country's streets. It is very important, when we come to truth, that it is the whole truth and nothing but the truth, because that is what our people deserve. Our people have been butchered and murdered and blown to bits long enough —

Mr Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Frew: It is time that they heard the truth from the Members opposite.

Mr G Kelly: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. The revelations in the 'Spotlight' and 'Panorama' programmes triggered this important debate today. What is, perhaps, surprising for those who have long known that state collusion took place, and it did take place on a systematic basis, is that we are still calling them revelations.

There is now a volume of evidence out in open view, not done by the media, that can surely leave no one in doubt — even those who, ostrich-like, do not want to see what the British Government did through their forces in the military, the police, the intelligence services, their state agents and informants — that state killings caused the death of hundreds of innocent citizens. That is the truth, if we are talking about the truth, and I am for the truth coming out all over. That is what the truth process that Sinn Féin has been arguing for for at least 15 years has been about and has been resisted, up till now, by those opposite.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr G Kelly: Not to you, Jim.

Whether you read the various reports by Stevens, Judge Cory, de Silva, or Nuala O'Loan or whether you read Anne Cadwallader's book, 'Lethal Allies', it is obvious that collusion was not random; it was part of a policy by British Government forces. We do not know how far up it went, although there is at least some evidence that, over many years, it went as far as the British Cabinet. Its purpose was to intimidate, demoralise and terrorise the nationalist community.

It is important to state that Ireland was not the only, or, indeed, the first, place where such a policy was enacted. If you want to read it from the British point of view, you will find it in General Kitson's book 'Low Intensity Operations' and also in his second book, which was called, I believe, 'Bunch of Five'. The first laid out the strategy, and the second gave examples of its implementation in many other places where the British had their colonies before here.

It is also important to say that the policy and practice did not work and was never going to work. Instead, it welded the nationalist community together in the face of such an onslaught. It certainly welded the families of victims together, and we all owe them a debt of gratitude for their tenacity and determination, sometimes into a second and third generation in searching out the truth from behind a maze of obstruction and obstacles put in front of them — also as a policy to prevent the truth coming out.

That culture of the impunity of state actors still prevails today, even amongst those in government and state agencies, who may not themselves have been involved in collusion leading to those deaths. It is perhaps one of the things that is most difficult for victims, survivors and their families to understand that people — even those across the Benches here — are defending things that they might not have had anything to do with. That is hard for victims to understand in their grief and in their search.

Let us be clear: holding back information, lack of disclosure, refusals to investigate, obstructing inquiries, destroying or losing evidence is the new collusion. Colluding in the cover-up makes those who do it as guilty as those who participated in the deaths and injuries of the collusion that we are discussing here during the very long conflict.

Victims of state collusion are so numerous that it is difficult to single out any one above the others, but let me speak just for a moment about the death of Pat Finucane because he stands out for two other reasons. An inquiry was agreed at Weston Park by the British and Irish Governments, yet that inquiry never took place. What the British did instead was to bring in legislation in the Inquiries Act to prevent an open and independent inquiry. That was their way of dealing with the truth: to prevent it.

Secondly, although it is on record that a number of state agents were involved in his murder, not one member of any state force who handled those agents has ever been charged, even though it is not disputed, I would argue, on any side of the House.

Another case from north Belfast was one of the biggest losses of life, that is the McGurk's Bar bombings. It is documented that state forces knew that loyalists were involved in the bombings that killed so many people and that those same forces set about blaming republicans for the deaths, knowing not only that loyalists were involved but that state agents were involved.

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is almost up.

Mr G Kelly: The motion states that the legacy — just let me finish with this because Mr Poots and Mr Dickson have linked this. They say that they are up for the whole truth coming out —

Mr Speaker: The Member's time is up.

Mr G Kelly: Yet they have linked this to others. [Interruption.]

Mr Speaker: Mr Robin Newton.

Mr G Kelly: Surely, they would agree [Interruption.] that the truth comes out no matter from where.

Mr Newton: I looked at this motion and the underlying principles, and what has prompted Sinn Féin to bring the motion forward; what it signed up for as general principles in the Stormont House Agreement is what it is basing its motion on. The four aspects that I want to highlight are that it signed up to promoting reconciliation; it signed up to upholding the rule of law; it signed up to acknowledging and addressing the suffering of victims and survivors; and it signed up to facilitating the pursuit of justice and information recovery. Of course, Ms Ruane, in proposing the motion, wanted only to limit the motion, and as she read out her list of names, she limited them to ones that are perceived by her to be more favourable to her case.

That indicates that this is not a motion of concern but only a motion of Sinn Féin propaganda. There is no respect — no respect — for those who suffered at the hands of terrorists, from whatever source the terrorism came. Ms Ruane has tried, by the words of the motion, to limit the debate to that aspect that she sees her case resting on: the 'Panorama' programme. She calls in the motion for a "thorough and independent investigation" and for legacy institutions to be set up as:

"a matter of urgency so victims and survivors are given real hope of achieving truth and justice in the near future."

There can be no doubt that this is a motion based on hypocrisy, pretence and duplicity. Those are the foundations of the motion.

Mr Kelly said that it is hard for innocent victims to understand. Yes, it is hard for innocent victims to understand the motivation of Sinn Féin and this motion. Actions speak louder than words. If they mean what they say in the motion, actions speak louder than the words that are down in the Order Paper. Many will believe that it is by their deeds that you know them. If they are not prepared to come forward with all the information that they have about all the cases, it is by their deeds that you know them.

Mr Frew: Will the Member give way?

Mr Newton: I will give way.

Mr Frew: The Member will realise, having lived through all the Troubles, that when the IRA were murdering people for giving information to the police and the security forces, Sinn Féin and the IRA were speaking to and negotiating with the British Government. However, they were still murdering people. Even today, they are sitting here as British agents and as British Ministers administering British law.

Mr Newton: Many might see that as them having a conscience seared by a hot iron.

Slowly and surely, the real picture of the IRA is being revealed. As time goes on, more and more information will come out. Many of us on this side of the Chamber look forward to the revelations in the Boston tapes as they come out. The one interview that has come out is that of Brendan Hughes, who was referred to as "Darkie" Hughes. Of course, we all know about the double life of Freddie Scappaticci.

Reference has been made to the 17 cases of the disappeared, particularly that of Jean McConville. Gerry Adams has long denied being a member of the IRA. However, his former compatriots in the IRA claim that he authorised murder. That is not something being said by the DUP. It is his former compatriots who say that he, the president of Sinn Féin, authorised murder.

The case of Jean McConville was the most high-profile case, and one of the most infamous cases of the Troubles. There is information within Sinn Féin on the case. Sinn Féin has a knowledge of everything that happened around the murder of Jean McConville. If they want to use the high and mighty words that they have used in their motion, let them apply them and reveal the information around the murder of Jean McConville. Let them say who dragged Jean McConville from her crying children. Who kidnapped her? Who tortured her? Who disappeared her?

Mr Speaker: Before I call Chris Hazzard, I say to him that, if he decides to take any interventions, I will not award any additional time, because I am going to try to get in another Member to speak.

6.45 pm

Mr Hazzard: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. At the outset, let me say that I know that a lot has been made of this point by those across the Benches. My heart goes out to absolutely any family, from all sides and none, who lost a loved one. However, the issue today is collusion and the killing of civilians and others by state actors. That is exactly what we are looking at today. The tsunami of evidence that has been provided in recent cases suggests and proves to us that collusion is no longer an illusion. Collusion was a practice that was:

"endemic and tacitly approved at the highest levels of Government."

Those are not Sinn Féin's words but the words of an editorial in the 'Belfast Telegraph' this week. Edwin Poots took issue with Sinn Féin lecturing. Again, I will use other people's words. After his reports, Sir John Stevens recommended the arrest and prosecution of 24 RUC Special Branch and British Army officers. Sir Hugh Orde said that Gordon Kerr should have faced trial. The de Silva review revealed that 85% of all intelligence in the hands of loyalists was provided by the British Army and the RUC. Former RUC CID officer Jonty Brown said that, when solving a crime, he feared RUC Special Branch more than he feared the IRA. Former head of the RUC Special Branch Raymond White will tonight reveal, I think somewhat alarmingly to some people across the House, that, when sitting down with the British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, he was more or less told to carry on and not get caught. Those are not Sinn Féin's words, Mr Poots; they are the words of a lot of people who have looked at this issue. The only logical conclusion to this is to have an independent inquiry into collusion, and, if unionists are confident that British military and security forces are not up to their eyes in this policy, they have absolutely nothing to fear in a public inquiry. Indeed, they should themselves be calling for that.

That we are today talking about this policy is positive proof that the policy of collusion failed and failed miserably. Sadly, though, it came at a very high human cost, and many were killed and injured as a result. It is to the memory of those people and their families that we owe this debate this evening. I want to make specific reference to the case of the Loughinisland families. Paul Frew said that agents and informers saved lives. Brian Nelson and the Ministry of Defence brought vz. 58 rifles into this island, killing more than 200 people. They did nothing to save any lives in Loughinisland in June 1994. They killed people. They killed Adrian Rogan. They killed Barney Greene. They killed Dan McCreanor. They killed Eamon Byrne. They killed Malcom Jenkinson, and they killed Patsy O'Hare. They did not save lives in Loughinisland. Guns used on the night were brought in by the Ministry of Defence. The getaway car was provided by an RUC agent and was driven by unmasked RUC agent. When the car was found only hours later, the same RUC agent had already been into a Belfast police station and received his get-out-of-jail-free statement. The RUC destroyed the car within 10 months. [Interruption.] The RUC failed to apply DNA testing to any of the 177 recovered exhibits, including all the balaclavas, boiler suits, gloves, guns and, indeed, the car. The RUC proactively destroyed all interview notes of those arrested in the first two years. There have been 22 arrests since 1994, 13 of those in the first two years. All those notes have now been destroyed. The police have actively ignored, disregarded and destroyed vital evidence, all of which, might I add, was given to them by the public. Senior police figures know exactly who was responsible for Loughinisland. That is why they have never been charged.

Today, it is less about who pulled the trigger and more about who was pulling the strings. The twisted logic of collusion meant that every nationalist was a target and every Catholic was a suspect. Agencies of the British Government, such as the British Army and the RUC Special Branch, the UDR, their intelligence services MI5 and MI6, the Military Reaction Force, the Force Research Unit and, of course, the UDA and the UVF, were quite literally up to their necks in summary executions.

As I mentioned before about the Stevens investigations, the reports spanned a 14-year period. That was then the largest investigation in British police history, but the British Government blocked its publication and allowed only a miniscule portion of the report to be published. Even that sample makes for shocking reading. Stevens interviewed 210 loyalists, and he found that 207 were either agents of the British Army or the RUC. Of the 120 killings of the Glenanne gang, every single one had a former or serving member of the British Army, the UDR, the RUC or the former B-Specials actively involved. In the massacre at the Ormeau Road bookies, the guns were used under the control of RUC Special Branch.

Mr Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Hazzard: It is time for a public inquiry —

Mr Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Hazzard: We have nothing to fear.

Mr Speaker: I call Mr Alban Maginness. I am afraid that I have only three minutes until I call the Minister.

Mr A Maginness: Thank you, Mr Speaker, I appreciate that. There is nothing wrong with the Sinn Féin motion, but there was plenty wrong with Ms Ruane's address to this Assembly. She abandoned any attempt to look at the truth. She abandoned any attempt to be objective.

It behoves us all in this Chamber to be objective about what happened. Yes, there was collusion — Stevens says there was; other reports have said there was; future reports will say there was — but the narrative that is put forward is of collusion only between loyalists and the British Army and the police. The reality is that there was collusion between agents in the republican movement and British intelligence and the RUC Special Branch. The same people who were involved in collusion were also involved in criminal activity — [Interruption.] — in murder. That is unacceptable; unacceptable in a civilised democratic society. That is what we in the SDLP hold dear —

A Member: Will the Member give way?

Mr A Maginness: I cannot — the value that should underpin any democracy, which is the rule of law. That is what is required, and that is why we support the legacy institutions under the Stormont House Agreement, but they do not go far enough in our opinion. They are only half of what Haass proposed. We believe that there should be a thorough process.

Let me say this to Ms Ruane and the other Sinn Féin Members: there is a blindness in what they say and in their view of what happened. What about Freddie Scappaticci? What happened to Caroline Moreland? What happened to Joe Mulhern? They were murdered by the IRA, by people acting within the IRA — acting, one would suggest, on behalf of a British agent. It was accepted that Mr Scappaticci was an agent, but what does Sinn Féin say about that? What does the IRA say? They turn a blind eye. They are totally silent about his activities. Indeed, when he was revealed as an agent, they said that he was a republican in good standing. Is he still a republican in good standing?

A Member: Denis Donaldson.

Mr A Maginness: Yes, there were other agents as well.

It is important, if we are going to get at the truth, that there is a truth. Mr Kelly has talked about Sinn Féin wanting the truth. Well, tell us the truth about those people who were in the IRA and acted in such a manner, carrying out murders, perhaps to cover up —

Mr Speaker: Thank you.

Mr A Maginness: Perhaps to cover up their own roles in that organisation.

Mr Speaker: Thank you. I call the Minister of Justice, Mr David Ford.

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): Thank you, Mr Speaker. I was going to start by saying that I agree with the wording of the motion, although, like Alban Maginness, I find myself in total disagreement with the way in which it was proposed. I also have no problem with the wording of the amendment, which creates a slightly more balanced approach.

There is no doubt that the recent 'Panorama' and 'Spotlight' programmes, and indeed the prime-time programme tonight, provide further poignant reminders of the toxic effect that the past continues to have on our society and of the pressing need to deal, effectively and comprehensively, with the legacy of our troubled past. I trust that, once we get the heat out of this type of debate, it will be possible to start to look at some of the ways in which we can do that. The way in which the motion was proposed, and the fact that the proposer refused to take a single intervention, shows something of the confidence she had in the speech she was making. To listen to her speech, you really would think that the majority of deaths in the Troubles were caused by the RUC and not by terrorists from different backgrounds.

The events outlined in the two programmes we have seen so far occurred a considerable time ago, in the decades long before the establishment of a devolved Department of Justice. Thankfully, they in no way reflect the current nature of policing in Northern Ireland. Clearly, in the past, there were examples of collusion. They involved state actors from both North and South.

They involved people from terrorist groups of different backgrounds. For either side of the Chamber to suggest that it was only the other side would be entirely incorrect. A focus on collusion does absolutely nothing to recognise what the reality was and does a significant disservice to those who sought to uphold the law when they were given responsibility, whether they were in the RUC or the army, the Garda Síochána or the Irish armed forces or were civilians throughout these islands. Yes, there was collusion, but let us not suggest that the majority of deaths arose because of that.

Those deaths cannot be brushed aside and ignored. We need to ensure that we investigate, we need to resolve those issues and we need to acknowledge the role that the institutions, including my Department, have today. Resolution involves treating all deaths as worthy of investigation, and all victims have rights to information and justice where that is possible. The claims that were detailed in those programmes are very serious, and complaints relating to several of the incidents are already under investigation by the Police Ombudsman. It would therefore not be proper to detail anything to do with that or for me to comment on them at this point, but, when those reports are completed, I will give the ombudsman's considerations very careful consideration on my part in the Department of Justice.

The Chief Constable, George Hamilton, recently stated clearly that:

“where people have operated outside of the law, where people have been involved in crimes such as murder, that is utterly unacceptable and those people should be investigated, no matter how long ago those crimes were committed.”

When the Chief Constable said that, he meant all those who operated outside the law, and I entirely agree with him that those crimes must be investigated. However, the practices described in the 'Panorama' programme in particular occurred at a time when there was no regulatory framework governing the handling of intelligence sources. Since the PSNI policy on covert human intelligence sources became governed by the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act 2000, it is now fully compliant with human rights legislation and in a very different place.

It is the case that such programmes make us stop and think. They require us to question how justice was dispensed in the past, but they are tethered to the past and have to be seen in the context of the huge and very significant changes that have happened in Northern Ireland since those times, changes involving, of course, the devolution of policing and justice powers to the Assembly, significant progress in ensuring greater accountability of the police and significant progress in building confidence in the Police Service right across the community.

The past has been an area where the justice system could go only so far without a wider political solution. That has to be what now comes from the Stormont House Agreement, which is the best vehicle to take forward a thorough and independent investigation of matters falling to it under the agreement. Otherwise, we are condemned to an endless cycle of “whataboutery”. Whilst some Members of the House may be content with that, I, as Minister of Justice, am not content. I am committed to implementing the elements of the agreement that fall to my Department as quickly as possible. Given the urgency of establishing the new institutions, I look forward to seeing that carried forward through a Westminster Bill this autumn. Otherwise, there is a danger that the past will continue to create huge difficulties for the justice system of the present.

It is important to emphasise the necessity of creating systems that are fully compliant with article 2 of the ECHR. The historical investigations unit is being set up as just such an independent organisation. It will be vital to ensure that that independence is maintained and it is seen to fully deliver on article 2 investigations. Work has already begun in preparation for the recruitment of a director designate for the HIU to ensure that the director is fully involved in key decisions on the operational workings of it. The justice system is committed to learning from both the best and the worst of our previous attempts to deal with these issues. We must learn from the mistakes of our past. We must also move forward in a positive, transparent, just and human rights-compliant manner. When Gerry Kelly said that that impunity still exists today, I believe that he was fundamentally wrong and that it is not a recognition of reality as applies in the justice sphere in 2015.

I am clear that solutions must be built on cooperation and partnership with all the relevant interests. That applies today, and it applies as we look at the past. My Department will consult on the key aspects of the Stormont House Agreement that fall to the justice system as soon as possible in advance of the legislation being laid.

That commitment to engage is reflected in the ongoing engagement and dialogue that my officials have already had with key stakeholders, the victims' forum, a variety of victims groups, the voluntary sector and academic interests. That is very much in keeping with the spirit of the Stormont House Agreement and the importance that it gives to a victim-centred approach.

I believe that the new bodies that will come out of the Stormont House Agreement represent a real and genuine opportunity to deliver information, justice and support services to victims and survivors. We all know that it will not be possible to get justice for all. At the very least, we should be able to ensure that we get as much information as possible and that the necessary support services are provided. Inevitably, the passage of time will mean that it will be difficult in many cases to give victims all that they want, but we owe to them to provide that resolution as soon as possible.

The inquest system also has a crucial role to play in dealing with the past. We recognise the huge challenges that are faced by coroners. In that respect, Mr Poots suggested that the Kingsmills families were still waiting for documents from the Republic of Ireland. My understanding is that the first batch of information was supplied by the Irish authorities to the coroner last week. Therefore, a degree of progress is now being made in that respect. No doubt, Mr Poots would say that it is rather late — better late than never.

The Stormont House Agreement recognises that we need to look at how the legacy inquest function is conducted to comply with article 2 of ECHR. In conjunction with the Chief Justice, my Department is taking steps to do so. Improvements are being progressed to enhance the way in which legacy inquests are conducted. The Legal Aid and Coroners' Court Act (Northern Ireland) 2014 provides for the Lord Chief Justice to be present at the Coroners' Courts. We are working on the planning for that to improve leadership and direction for the Coroners Service. As president of the Coroners' Courts, the Lord Chief Justice will be able to introduce improved judicial case management for legacy inquests and to allocate the most complex inquest cases to more senior judges than has been the case heretofore. It has already been agreed that the existing County Court judicial complement will be increased for that purpose.

Work is also under way to establish a legacy inquest unit in the Coroners Service with additional legal, investigative and administrative support. Taken together, these reforms will provide significantly improved arrangements for dealing with legacy inquests. We should consider that there are currently over 50 legacy inquest cases relating to a significant number of deaths that are still outstanding. The victims — the bereaved in those cases — deserve to see the institutions established and the Coroners Service working better and better resourced around inquests in the past to ensure that some measure of comfort can be delivered to those who have suffered from that.

Some of the developments that I have outlined will take time to put in place and become fully operational. Progressing these developments is a key priority for my Department, and I am committed to seeing them through to their delivery. That requires agreement by the parties in this Chamber. It requires detailed work to ensure that the Westminster Bill is correct. It requires that we deal with the impasse over finance and welfare reform and actually put into practice the commitments that so often come from all parts of the House about our concern for dealing with victims of crime, whether past or recent, to ensure that we actually deliver for them, live up to the deal to make a deal that we agreed in December 2014 at Stormont House, put that in place and show that the House, instead of engaging in "whataboutery" across the Chamber, can actually put the needs of victims and the bereaved first.

Mr Craig: I rise to support the amendment that we have proposed. I listened with interest to what the proposer of the motion actually had to say: it was all about collusion. More importantly, it was all about their version of collusion and the fallacy that the only people involved in collusion were state forces. I have bad news for that individual: it was not just "state forces", as she calls them. Every paramilitary grouping that was out there was buried up to its neck in collusion. There was collusion with state forces and the police. Worse still, that Member will also have to face up to the reality that the IRA had a lot of collusion as well. It was up to its neck in it with the Garda Síochána in the Republic of Ireland, as was clearly pointed out by the Smithwick inquiry.

So, collusion did take place. Was it systematic, as Mr Kelly alleges? He also makes the allegation that it was not only systematic but that the evidence is out there. That raises loads of questions in my mind.

First, when the former Police Ombudsman, Dame Nuala O'Loan, made allegations that hundreds of people in the former RUC and other organisations were in collusion with paramilitaries, I have to ask the question: what on earth was Dame Nuala O'Loan doing as Police Ombudsman? How many of those people were brought to book when she was in position as Police Ombudsman in Northern Ireland? It was her duty to investigate them.

It is easy to make allegations; it is very difficult to investigate, find evidence and prosecute. The simple truth is that, during her years as Police Ombudsman, they did not find that evidence. Other ombudsmen since have not found that evidence either. However, as my colleague, quite rightly, pointed out, that does not mean that there was no collusion. There were bad apples out there. If they are out there, they deserve to be investigated and, with whatever evidence can be found, brought to book.

I have spoken to families from all sides of Northern Ireland who feel that collusion in some shape or form played a part in the death or murder of their family member. The House will be surprised to learn that it does not come from just republican households. There are loyalists out there who feel that collusion played a part in their loved one's death. Oddly enough, there are republicans who feel very strongly that collusion between the Provisional IRA and state forces led to the death of their loved one. I do not hear Sinn Féin jumping up and down about those allegations and demanding inquiries and investigations.

The difference is that, if we look at what the RUC, the army and others did down the years, we will find that the truth is out there. It is buried in the 6.3 million documents held by the security forces in Northern Ireland. It can be found and looked at, and anyone who was involved in something that they should not have been can be brought to justice, but let us look at collusion on the paramilitary side. Where do we find the evidence for that? It is certainly not in documents kept securely in Northern Ireland or any other part of Ireland. The simple truth is that the evidence of the outcomes of their collusion was buried in the bogs of Ireland, North and South. We all saw the consequences of that for the families involved — an absolute disgrace.

Cherry-picking the agreement will not work. It is the whole agreement or no agreement. Get that into your heads.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Beidh mé ag labhairt i bhfabhar an rúin. When Cairtriona Ruane opened the debate, she, quite correctly, reminded us all that there are many families — I am talking about all families — still grieving and in a grieving process. We have to be very sensitive to their feelings. I leave it up to those who spoke to decide whether they lived up to that standard.

On a number of occasions, parties have, quite correctly, tabled motions on a single incident, a collection of incidents or a theme. That is appropriate. It would have been churlish had any of us got up and said, "You are singling out one over the other", because that is not the way to proceed. It is also churlish for anybody to suggest that British state collusion with loyalist paramilitaries, or, indeed, unionist militias, is not worthy of discussion. I do not know where they are living, given the recent commentary. The debate was very interesting. It seemed that a number of contributors had failed to read the motion. That is for them to decide.

There is absolutely no doubt that the families who are striving very hard to expose collusion and search for the truth have had a very difficult year. I have no doubt that part of that has been the result of the legal processes that they have gone through, which have been obstructively slow. There is no doubt that the recent 'Spotlight' and 'Panorama' programmes have added to that. Indeed, the RTÉ programme tonight will no doubt be part of that process as well. That documentary has been trailed on a variety of media outlets over the last number of days, and I think that we are increasingly dealing with the reality that there was collusion. Some are still in denial and are just not dealing with the fact that collusion existed. Most accept that there was collusion and that we are now dealing with its extent.

Whoever was involved in collusion — any form of collusion — should be exposed. There should be no hiding place for them, and they should all be held to account. In the debate, we had the opportunity to decide what we want to do, as an Assembly, to take it forward, and that was through the institutions that were agreed at Stormont House last December. We have to do what we have to do to make them work in the way that they are designed. That will not be without challenges, and Gerry Kelly and others talked about those challenges. There will be challenges for republicans, for other people and for other combatants, but we must face those challenges. If we do not, the families who are seeking the truth will not get the truth.

Sinn Féin has long contended that collusion was a policy that was central to the British Government's approach to dealing with the political conflict in Ireland. It was a policy that was sanctioned at the highest level of the British Government. It was a policy that was used as a form of repression, and it came along with many other policies of repression, such as internment, torture, Castlereagh and emergency legislation. Those were all denied at the time, we had all the theories about rotten apples in the barrel, and every one of those was exposed.

Alongside that form of repression came the culture and apparatus of denial and impunity. We have seen how that had many guises and how it was particularly facilitated by policing and justice agencies. Thankfully, the damage that was done by that has, in some way, been restored or addressed through the Good Friday Agreement. We have also seen the political denial, which was very obvious today.

To understand the nature and extent of the culture, you have only to read the Stevens report number 3 — even much of that was redacted — Judge Cory's report after the Weston Park Agreement and the de Silva review, a lot of which focused on the killing of Pat Finucane. In themselves, those reports were perhaps far from complete and do not give us the full picture, but they certainly highlight how collusion as a policy was initiated, nurtured and employed by the British state and its agencies.

John Stevens informed us all that 210 people were arrested, 207 of whom were paid British agents. When the de Silva report referred to Brian Nelson and the fact that he was a paid agent, it described him as an employee of the state. People have said that it was not systematic, but 207 people take a lot of handling and organisation, so people really need to realise the fallacy of the idea that it was not systematic.

In case people believe that collusion started and ended with the Brian Nelson affair, one only has to read Nuala O'Loan's report on the Mount Vernon UVF — others referred to it — and look at Operation Ballast. It is all there to be seen. It did not just take place in the 1980s and 1990s. There was the Glenanne gang and McGurk's Bar, and it stretched right across the island with the Dublin and Monaghan bombings and the killing of Eddie Fullerton. They are all there.

In the aftermath of the de Silva review, which most people accept was only a surface investigation with no powers of questioning or rebuttal, it was so obvious that collusion was endemic that no less than the British Prime Minister David Cameron was compelled to admit liability in the British House of Commons. He said that there were "shocking levels" of collusion between unionist paramilitaries and the British state and that that was demonstrated "beyond ...doubt". All those who talk about collusion being alleged or not proven should quote and read the British Prime Minister.

He went on to state areas such as identifying Pat Finucane as a target, supplying the weapon that killed him, facilitating its disappearance and deliberately obstructing the subsequent RUC investigation, and that British Army officers lied to the investigators. So, when people ask, "Did collusion exist?", David Cameron certainly believed that it did. Indeed, he apologised on behalf of the British Government and, in his words, on behalf of his country.

Having read the Hansard report of that speech, I note that there was not a single dissenting voice. All the MPs present seemed to accept what David Cameron said. Not one of them ever accused him of misleading the House and we all know the consequences of that. Indeed, many observers have commented that in any other place, indeed, even in Britain in the past, Governments have fallen for far less. That is what we are dealing with.

The families of those who were affected by collusion have stated that their focus is on the truth and that, for them, that can only come about through an independent and thorough investigation process. Confidence has been dented because of the way in which the agencies of the British state have responded to date. The culture of denial and delay is an attempt to slow down that process. I was a bit perturbed that the Minister referred to the lack of regulatory impact. You do not need any regulatory impact to decide what is right and wrong, and to try to defend what happened then through the lack of regulatory impact is a bit rich. [Interruption.] The families are to be commended for their dignity and the resolute manner in which they have confronted that culture of silence and denial. The challenge was made and people said that they would not relent to Sinn Féin and that Sinn Féin will not get its way on this particular issue. Take Sinn Féin out of it; the people you are dealing with are the families of those affected. They will not be going away, because they have exposed the nature of the British state in relation to collusion.

I was a bit annoyed — maybe that is too strong a word — that Stewart Dickson linked this to welfare reform. It is absolutely outrageous that we are going to have a process where people are trying to identify and seek the truth and they are going to be told that they cannot have it until the rest of us deal with welfare reform. That is a bit silly. The accusation was made in the past — and the Minister needs to be careful about this — that his Department was the NIO in drag, and some of the statements that were made today give some credence to that.

We all remember the arrogance and dismissive attitude that was displayed to families when they were told that collusion was an illusion. We can all look to those families and say that they disproved that collusion was an illusion. It was a reality in everyday life and a reality in their lives that saw their loved ones being assassinated by a unionist militia that was paid and controlled by the British state.

That is why this motion is important and it is why we focused on the issue. We can have an issue about the causes of the conflict and who was involved in the conflict; that is what the Stormont House Agreement will allow us all to do, but it was wrong for anyone to say here today that British state collusion in relation to unionist paramilitaries was not an issue worth discussing. Anybody who tried to sidetrack it with another issue was doing a disservice not just to the truth but to the families who are sitting in the Public Gallery and who are looking for leadership from this institution to ensure that they get the truth. We pledge our support to them and we will continue on in that search.

Main Question, as amended, accordingly agreed to.

Resolved:

That this Assembly shares the serious concerns about collusion, as reported in the BBC 'Panorama' programme broadcast on 28 May; as well as the 'Spotlight' programme broadcast on 9 June 2015 and the criminal actions of paramilitary organisations highlighted in both programmes; and calls for the implementation of the Stormont House Agreement, in full, as a matter of urgency to afford victims and survivors the opportunity to pursue justice in the near future.

Adjourned at 7.40 pm.

Northern Ireland Assembly

Tuesday 16 June 2015

The Assembly met at 10.30 am (Mr Speaker in the Chair).

Members observed two minutes' silence.

Assembly Business

Mr Speaker: Before we proceed to today's business, I remind Members that, due to unforeseen circumstances, the Minister for Regional Development was not able to attend Question Time yesterday. The Minister for Social Development, who was due to answer questions today, took his place, and questions to the Minister for Regional Development will commence at 2.00 pm. All Members were notified of that change last Friday.

Ministerial Statements

North/South Ministerial Council: Plenary

Mr M McGuinness (The deputy First Minister): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. In compliance with section 52C(2) of the Northern Ireland Act 1998, we wish to make the following statement on the twentieth meeting of the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) in plenary format, which was held in Dublin on Friday 5 June 2015. The Ministers who attended the meeting have agreed that we can make this report on their behalf.

Our delegation was led by the Finance Minister, Arlene Foster MLA, and me. In addition, the following Ministers were in attendance: Minister Durkan; Minister Farry; Minister Ford; Minister Hamilton; Minister Kennedy; Minister Ní Chuilín; Minister O'Dowd; Minister Storey; junior Minister McIlveen; and junior Minister McCann

The Irish Government delegation was led by the Taoiseach, Enda Kenny TD. The following Irish Government Ministers were also in attendance: Tánaiste and Minister for Social Protection, Joan Burton; Minister for Foreign Affairs and Trade, Charles Flanagan; Minister Noonan; Minister Howlin; Minister Fitzgerald; Minister Reilly; Minister Varadkar; Minister White; Minister Donohoe; Minister Humphreys; Minister of State Hayes; and Minister of State Sherlock.

The meeting started with a discussion on the challenges facing both Administrations and the policies being implemented to support economic growth and job creation and to improve living standards. That included discussions on foreign direct investment (FDI) and working together to build trade links with key developing markets. I think that we are all pleased with the positive signs in both economies, but, of course, it is important that we work to support the recovery.

We then had a good discussion on the various EU funding opportunities that are available. Ministers noted the discussions that have taken place across all NSMC sectors in relation to EU funding opportunities and the identification of relevant programmes that are available for collaborative funding applications. There is a real opportunity for us to work together in this area, and Ministers agreed to continue to examine opportunities and progress in drawing down collaborative EU funding.

Approval of the INTERREG V programme by the European Commission was welcomed, and the Council looked forward to the early finalisation of the Peace IV programme. Ministers welcomed the early indications of good progress towards reaching the joint target of €175 million in cross-border collaborative drawdown under the Horizon 2020 programme and the work of InterTradelreland and the all-island steering group in raising awareness of the programme. The Council agreed that a further update on EU funding opportunities will be brought to the next plenary meeting.

The next item on the agenda was sectoral priorities. The Council noted that sectoral priorities were discussed at the NSMC institutional meeting on 25 February 2015 and that new sectoral priorities will be an agenda item at future institutional meetings. The Council also noted the decision that was agreed at the NSMC institutional meeting that Ministers would review their current work programmes and that endorsement of any changes will be sought at a future NSMC plenary meeting. Ministers agreed that the matter of sectoral priorities and the current review of work programmes will be kept under active review.

Ministers then went on to have an extensive discussion on cross-border smuggling and fuel laundering. The issue had been raised at previous plenary meetings and at recent NSMC environment, agriculture and transport meetings. Ministers noted the ongoing efforts by both jurisdictions to tackle the serious issue and noted the introduction of the new fuel marker in both jurisdictions. The Council noted that the issue is also of concern at EU level. The Commissioner for Environment, Maritime Affairs and Fisheries has been in correspondence with Environment Ministers, North and South, concerning latest developments and actions taken to address the issue. The Council recognised the importance of closer cooperation between agencies in tackling and combating cross-border smuggling and fuel laundering and agreed that the topic be revisited at a future meeting.

An update was then provided on the north-west gateway initiative. The Council noted the continued engagement between officials from the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade and the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister with stakeholders concerning the future development of the north-west gateway initiative and the ongoing discussions on arrangements to hold a meeting of relevant Ministers in the north-west. The Council further noted the current work by Donegal County Council and Derry City and Strabane District Council to develop new and collaborative cross-border arrangements at local government level to promote the development of the north-west region consistent with the aims of the north-west gateway initiative. Ministers noted that these arrangements aim to place cross-border cooperation in the north-west on a more formal basis in local government-led structures and will allow for the development of the future direction and priorities for the region in cooperation with central government and other stakeholders. Ministers also noted the ongoing work on the A5.

The Council then noted that, in line with the decision taken at the NSMC institutional meeting on 25 February 2015, the joint secretariat has consulted sponsor Departments and board members of the implementation bodies and Tourism Ireland Limited regarding the proposal to extend the existing terms of appointment of board members for 12 months. This consultation is ongoing. The Council agreed that decisions on board appointments will be made before the expiry of the current board members' terms of office in December 2015.

Next, the Council noted the progress report prepared by the NSMC joint secretaries on the work of the North/South bodies and in the other NSMC areas for cooperation and welcomed the following key developments. Cooperation continues with regard to EU-related transport issues. At their recent meeting in April 2015, Ministers noted the opportunity to strengthen the Trans-European Transport Network (TEN-T) application process through the development of cooperation statement templates that will support project applications.

Ministers also noted the position with regard to the INTERREG programmes, including the update on the INTERREG IV funding of the Belfast-Dublin Enterprise service upgrade and Drogheda viaduct works.

At the NSMC health and food safety meeting held at Altnagelvin Area Hospital on 15 April 2015, Ministers discussed ongoing cooperation in healthcare. They welcomed the presentation by the Western Health and Social Care Trust representatives on the radiotherapy unit and had the opportunity to view the construction under way on the unit, which they were advised is on target for completion within the agreed time frame.

At the NSMC agriculture meeting on 25 February 2015, Ministers noted the recent developments in plans for the implementation of the Common Agricultural Policy reforms agreed in 2013, including administrative measures for direct payment schemes.

The Middletown Centre for Autism successfully hosted a major international conference on the theme of enabling education, targeted at professionals and parents of children with autism. The event, attended by in excess of one thousand delegates, was opened by both Education Ministers and featured a range of eminent speakers from across the globe. Progress continues to be made by the two Departments and the centre in facilitating the expansion of the centre's range of services.

At the NSMC environment meeting on 13 May 2015, Ministers received an update on the agreed repatriation of waste programme for 2015, under which two illegal waste landfill sites will be addressed. The issue of fuel laundering was discussed, and Ministers expressed concern at the impact of fuel laundering and stressed the importance of closer cooperation between agencies to tackle the issue.

At their meeting in January 2015, Ministers noted the various support structures put in place by InterTradelreland to assist with the jointly agreed €175 million target for cross-border applications under the Horizon 2020 research and innovation programme. Ministers also noted that early results were positive, with 45 cross-border applications to the programme and an economic value of €8.8 million for successful cross-border Horizon 2020 collaboration at that time.

The draft Peace IV and INTERREG programmes 2014-2020 were submitted to the European Commission on 22 September 2014, in line with the regulatory deadline. The INTERREG programme was formally adopted on 13 February 2015, with calls expected to launch in early summer. A number of outstanding issues still remain in the Peace IV programme, and high-level discussions are ongoing between the member states and the EU Commission. It is hoped that the Peace IV programme will be approved shortly and be open for calls later in the year.

At the NSMC health and food safety meeting in April 2015, Professor Chris Elliott of Queen's University Belfast gave a presentation on the topic of "Food safety and traceability: an all-island imperative", which provided Ministers with valuable insight into this important subject.

Ministers welcomed reports on the activities of the Loughs Agency in promoting and marketing Foyle and Carlingford loughs, in particular marine leisure infrastructural developments, outreach and community activity, and promotion of local seafood products.

Progress continues on the publication of the new English-Irish dictionary flagship project, and an app for the new English-Irish dictionary will be available in the near future. Progress continues on the Ulster-Scots community impact programme, which has been extended for a second year following a positive evaluation.

In February 2015, Minister Heather Humphreys announced the approval of the restoration by Waterways Ireland of a 2.5 kilometre stretch of the Ulster canal, connecting Castle Saunderson International Scout Centre to the Erne basin at an expected cost of approximately €2 million.

Finally, the Council noted that last year was another great year for tourism. Total overseas visitors to the North for the first nine months of 2014 grew by 3% year on year. Overseas visitors to the island of Ireland increased by 14% in the January to March 2015 period when compared to the same three-month period a year earlier. The council also noted the very successful greenways and blueways information-sharing and networking event hosted by the joint secretariat on 30 April 2015.

10.45 am

Ministers then noted the current position on a North/South consultative forum.

The meeting ended with the Council approving a schedule of NSMC meetings proposed by the joint secretariat, including a NSMC institutional meeting in Autumn 2015 and the next NSMC plenary meeting in November 2015.

Mr Nesbitt (The Chairperson of the Committee for the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister): I thank the First Minister for that update. Paragraph 6 states that there was a "discussion", paragraph 7 states that there was a "good discussion" and paragraph 14 states that there was "an extensive discussion". Are those officially defined terms? With regard to the discussion that was neither good nor extensive, what were the positive signs in both economies.

Mr M McGuinness: I think that a bit of nitpicking is going on. Obviously, we had a very thorough discussion in relation to the ongoing economic situation North and South. We were able to record what is good news for us, the fact that we have had steadily decreasing unemployment figures over the last 28 months.

At the same time, we recognise that we are facing huge challenges in relation to the difficulties we are having to deal with as regards the austerity agenda that is coming at us from London. Effectively, something like £1.5 billion was taken out of our Budget over the lifetime of the last Conservative Government, and further cuts are predicted by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. That leaves us with a very challenging situation. The fact that, even against that backdrop, we have been able to record unprecedented levels of foreign direct investment is obviously good news.

The South were also amplifying their decreasing unemployment figures. During the meeting, they made the case that their economic situation was steadily improving, to which I asked, "When is the election?". All I got was a smile in return and fingers pointing towards the Taoiseach.

Overall, the economic discussions that take place at these meetings are of great importance to all of us.

Mr Moutray: The deputy First Minister is no doubt aware that many of those involved in fuel smuggling, especially along the south Armagh border, are former IRA members. Many, like me, believe that they act with relative impunity to this day. What tougher measures would the deputy First Minister like to see introduced to help tackle this crime, given that, to date, no one has served a custodial sentence for it?

Mr M McGuinness: As far as I am concerned, the people involved in fuel smuggling and fuel laundering in south Armagh are criminals who need to be arrested and brought before the courts. My party fully supports the authorities North and South that are charged with the responsibility for tackling this.

Quite apart from everything else, people involved in fuel laundering are endangering the lives of the people who live in the community. The environmental fallout from the activity is disastrous for the local community, endangering people's health and animal health. During the meeting, we were very encouraged by the fact that there is a new marker in the fuel, which makes it much more difficult for people to be involved in fuel laundering. We welcome that very much. We also welcome the fact that in the region of 100 illegal fuel-laundering plants have been detected and put out of business.

So, my party is absolutely of the view that anybody involved in this type of illegal activity is a criminal who needs to be arrested and brought before the courts.

Ms McGahan: Go raibh maith agat. What discussions took place regarding the efforts to resume the A5 project?

Mr M McGuinness: We had a useful discussion on the prospects for the A5. The issue comes up at all of the meetings that we have and at the margins of the meetings. As I said, we did have a useful discussion on the prospects for the A5 project being resumed.

The next step is now for the Regional Development Minister to publish the draft orders. I understand that, in response to a question for written answer on 24 April, the Minister stated that he would be bringing a new Executive paper on the way forward for the A5 within weeks. I also met the Minister on 30 April, when he confirmed his intention to publish the draft orders imminently. I welcome that commitment and, given the time frame that he has outlined, expect to see the new Executive paper in advance of the summer recess.

This is a vital project for the west and for all of the counties in the west from Derry right through Tyrone into County Fermanagh. It is a project that will not just supply a first-class route in the northern stretch to link up with a first-class route in the southern end to Dublin; it is also a vital route for people in County Tyrone travelling to Belfast to link up with the M1 at Ballygawley. The sooner that we see this project moving forward the better, and I look forward to the early announcement of the draft orders.

Mr Ramsey: I thank the deputy First Minister for the statement to the House, and I very warmly welcome the more determined approach in terms of the north-west gateway initiative. I want to ask the deputy First Minister about the apathy felt in the north-west and Derry and Strabane, which have the highest levels of unemployment and economic inactivity. Will the economic development of the north-west, including third level education and access to more employment opportunities, be the focus of any future deliberations?

Mr M McGuinness: I absolutely agree with the Member. That is one of the reasons why the First Minister and I agreed that we would form a subgroup of Ministers to deal with the very strong perception — it is more than a perception — that there are areas of the North that are not getting their fair share. Quite clearly, that was a declaration of both his and my intent to ensure that the subgroup would tackle the unacceptable, high levels of unemployment that exist, particularly in the Derry and Strabane area. There was to be a meeting of the north-west gateway initiative, but it did not happen for unforeseen reasons, and the health of the First Minister intervened on the second occasion. We are hoping that that meeting will happen very shortly.

Obviously, we accept that the combined efforts of the Ministers involved in the north-west gateway initiative and the ministerial subgroup that we have formed need to tackle the whole of issue of, for example, Magee university and the numbers of students there. The expansion of the university is absolutely critical for the importance of future economic development in the city. Of course, the whole issue of infrastructure is of major importance, so the A5 and the A6 are very much in the forefront of all our minds. Obviously, these contribute to the ability to attract foreign direct investment.

Mr Lyttle: Can I ask the deputy First Minister what the outstanding issues with the EU Peace and Reconciliation Programme IV are? How will those be overcome, when will the programme open and how will it be linked with the OFMDFM regional good relations strategy, Together: Building a United Community?

Mr M McGuinness: Obviously, this is something that has contributed tremendously for all of us in recent years. The new Peace programme has not yet been finalised, and officials, North and South, are making every effort to reach agreement. Minister Foster and Minister Howlin had a bilateral meeting on the morning of the NSMC plenary to discuss the Peace IV programme, and I know that there is a strong desire on both sides to get the programme agreed as quickly as possible. Delays at the start of the programme will place us under pressure to meet spending targets later, so it is very important that we reach agreement as soon as possible.

As I recorded in the initial statement that I made, it is also very important for us to continue the work of maximising the success of Horizon 2020.

Good progress has been made by officials and Ministers, North and South, on that issue in relation to drawdown.

Mr Spratt: I thank the deputy First Minister for his statement. I notice from the joint secretaries' progress report that cooperation on transport issues and opportunities to strengthen TEN-T applications continues. Exactly what progress has been made and what project applications are being considered for TEN-T?

Mr M McGuinness: The Minister for Regional Development advises that his Department submitted four applications under the Connecting Europe Facility call for funding, launched in October 2014. Two of the applications submitted are for rail projects: track refurbishment and upgrade work on the Belfast to Dublin lines and upgrading work on the Coleraine to Derry line. The other two are road projects: works relating to the A26 dualling scheme and studies for the Newry southern relief road. In total, those projects are seeking up to £34 million of co-funding.

The upgrade to the Enterprise service is important to improve rail services between Dublin and Belfast, and we understand that the supply issues that had the potential to delay the project have been resolved, and NIR and Irish Rail are confident that the lost time can be recovered. The total cost of the project, which is funded by INTERREG, is approximately £17 million, including the refurbishment of the Drogheda viaduct. Once completed, this project will be a further positive example of North/South cooperation and will be of real benefit to rail users from both jurisdictions.

As many people know, there is a lot of focus on the Juncker plan, which has been much discussed recently, and we are continuing to explore how that can be exploited in our interests.

Mr Lynch: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Gabhaim buíochas leis an Aire as a ráiteas. I thank the deputy First Minister for his statement. I noted, Minister, that you alluded to a meeting of the north-west gateway initiative. How soon do you think it can take place?

Mr M McGuinness: It should take place before recess. It did not happen, due to unforeseen circumstances, but there is a strong commitment that the meeting should take place. There is clear recognition that the north-west gateway initiative and the work of the ministerial subgroup is a priority in beginning the process of redressing the difficulties faced by people west of the Bann.

Mr D McIlveen: I, too, thank the deputy First Minister for his statement. Deputy First Minister, of the projects in this list, some are aspirational, some have commenced, and all have a degree of cost attached to them. On the basis that the Assembly continues to haemorrhage over £10 million a month due to the failure to implement welfare reform, did the Ministers of the Irish Republic offer to pay for these projects?

Mr M McGuinness: The Member will be as aware as we are that we had a commitment from the Irish Government on shared funding for the development of the A5. Their commitment was to something in the region of £400 million in match funding for our side of the bargain. Of course, the offer was withdrawn due to economic circumstances. That was apart from the difficulties that the A5 then faced from the fallout of the judicial review, which we hope will be remedied shortly.

The challenges we face with the issues and the projects that we deal with on the North/South Ministerial Council are real. Although some may be described as aspirational, they are very important for future development on the island, for the benefit of everyone on the island.

There was a bit of political point scoring in relation to funding. People have to remember that this is about protecting the most vulnerable, marginalised and disabled in our society, and, yes, that comes at a cost.

11.00 am

Mr McElduff: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. My question follows on from those raised by Bronwyn McGahan and David McIlveen. Is the deputy First Minister satisfied that Minister Paschal Donohoe and an Taoiseach, Enda Kenny, remain fully committed to the A5 project from the Dublin Government side? I note the comments by the deputy First Minister on the expectation that a paper from Minister Kennedy on taking the project forward will come to the Executive in the coming weeks.

Mr M McGuinness: The next stage in the process is the publication of the draft orders. As the Minister for Regional Development indicated, both in an answer to a question from a Member and in a meeting that he participated in with me, he intends to do that within weeks. For us, that is the next stage of the process.

How we will fund the road obviously represents a challenge for us, North and South, but the £50 million commitment that the Taoiseach made, which, of course, falls short of the £400 million, is still on the table. I hope that, in the context of, as the Irish Government describe it, an improving economic situation in the South, if we can get the green light to proceed with the road, they will recognise their responsibilities to come up with their side of the bargain. It is a commitment of the North/South Ministerial Council.

Mrs D Kelly: I thank the deputy First Minister for his statement. Were any specific measures discussed or opportunities identified for EU funding to provide better high-end job opportunities and real employment opportunities and/or training for our young people to address the high levels of youth unemployment across the island?

Mr M McGuinness: We are all very conscious of the challenges that most European countries face in addressing what are unacceptable levels of youth unemployment. The key to all of that is for all of us to continue to bear down on the unacceptable unemployment figures out there. Given the report that I gave earlier to the Assembly and the improving economic situation recorded at the meeting by Irish Government representatives and by us, based on a steady decrease in unemployment figures over 28 months, there is a big focus North and South, and, indeed, in the rest of western Europe, to recognise that young people are disproportionately affected by the unacceptable unemployment levels.

So, yes, there are projects that both Governments are pursuing, through DEL and DETI at our end and the relevant Departments in the South, to ensure that we continue to bear down on the figures with some degree of success, but we have to accelerate that success over the coming period.

Mr Campbell: The deputy First Minister referred to extensive discussions on cross-border smuggling and fuel laundering. Given that, over the past number of years, I and others have endeavoured to get the deputy First Minister to own up to having known people or to personal involvement that he would have had in terror-related activities in the distant past, is he now prepared to own up to knowing any former colleagues, whom he is bound to know of, who would be involved in fuel smuggling and laundering in border areas? His denials are quite implausible.

Mr M McGuinness: I do not think that that is a question that featured in the course of the North/South Ministerial Council meeting.

Mr Allister: Will the deputy First Minister elaborate on the reference to the EU's interest and involvement in the fuel smuggling issue? What exactly does that amount to, and are infraction proceedings a possibility on foot of that? Given the inextricable links between fuel smuggling and the republican movement, does the deputy First Minister know any fuel smugglers, and has he identified any to the authorities?

Mr M McGuinness: No, I do not personally know any fuel smugglers. In my earlier answer, I described any people involved in fuel smuggling or fuel laundering as criminals. That is what I regard them as. I believe that people who are involved in that type of activity need to be arrested and brought before the courts. I give my wholehearted support to the authorities North and South in that endeavour. As I said, I welcome very much the new marker that has gone into fuel, as it will make it very difficult for anybody to continue with fuel laundering. I very much welcome that over 100 illegal fuel laundering plants have been shut down.

At the end of the day, in my opinion, the authorities North and South are well aware of who the fuel launderers and smugglers are. It is not my job as the deputy First Minister to investigate that. It is certainly my job to support the authorities in apprehending those criminals.

Dr McDonnell: I note that paragraph 9 mentions Horizon 2020. Can the deputy First Minister perhaps elaborate on the all-island steering group or how we might gain more from the Horizon 2020 programme? It has long been a bugbear of mine that we are drawing down only a fraction of the amount of research and development money in that context and that only three or four major players, like Queen's, the Ulster University and Shorts, were drawing down that money. To my mind and in my opinion, it is vitally important that we exploit that opportunity to ensure further economic development here.

Mr M McGuinness: As indicated, we had a discussion at the meeting on the opportunities that are presented by the Horizon 2020 funding programme. We are committed to increasing our success in Horizon 2020, and we have agreed a joint target of €175 million with the Irish Government for projects that have a cross-border element.

We recognise that this is a very competitive programme, but we see real opportunities for increased cooperation between companies and universities from both jurisdictions to drive greater success. Between January and September 2014, there were 12 successful cross-border proposals. The economic value of that cooperation is €14.9 million. The average award per partner for a cross-border project is €450,805, which is higher than that for a Northern project partner at €330,509 or a Southern project partner at €373,432. The current focus is on establishing, developing and extending cross-border partnerships to ensure that we achieve the target of €175 million. I share the Member's view that we need to continually examine how we can exploit those opportunities for our mutual benefit.

Mr Swann: I thank the deputy First Minister for his statement. He covered quite a number of topics. I note that both Health Ministers were there. Were any updates either sought or given on the recommendation that was made by the international working group on children's cardiac surgery? Are we still on track to being able to provide those surgeries in Dublin for Northern Ireland children, as recommended in that working group's report?

Mr M McGuinness: I absolutely understand the Member's interest in this issue. We all recognise the challenges that we face in ensuring that we provide first-class services for children who are affected by this medical condition. I understand that good progress is being made with implementing the international working group's recommendations. The Executive have allocated £1 million from their change fund towards the cost of establishing the all-island congenital heart disease network.

The network board has met twice since 1 April 2015. It has formed subgroups to plan and implement the phased transfer of surgery and cardiac catheterisation to Dublin from Belfast and to strengthen the cardiology hub in the network at Belfast children's hospital. However, we remain reliant on the majority of elective procedures being carried out by specialist heart centres in England until sufficient capacity has been developed in Dublin to accommodate our patients. Therefore, we look forward to the expansion of the service in Dublin. Once in place, like the new radiotherapy centre at Altnagelvin, it will be a further example of how close cooperation can deliver improvements to public services North and South.

Mr Speaker: Thank you, deputy First Minister. That concludes questions on the statement.

Before we move to the next item of business, I would like to inform Members that as today's sitting is likely to be quite late, the Whips have agreed to a shorter lunchtime suspension. We will, by leave of the Assembly, be suspending at 12.30 pm until 1.30 pm.

North/South Ministerial Council: Aquaculture and Marine

Mr McCarthy: On a point of order, Mr Speaker. I am sorry for intervening, but I was looking for a statement earlier on. Has it been published? Where is it? We know nothing about what is going to be said. Did anybody get it?

Mr Speaker: I am informed that the statements were, in fact, lodged in time. I just cannot explain if you have not been able to access it at this point in time.

Mr McCarthy: So they are available, Mr Speaker?

Mr Speaker: Yes, they are indeed.

Mr McCarthy: Thank you.

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I can confirm that the statements are in the pigeonholes. Apologies if maybe they were late into the pigeonholes but, as you said, they were there on time.

With your permission, a Cheann Comhairle, I wish to make a statement in compliance with section 52 of the 1998 Act regarding the twenty-seventh meeting of the North/South Ministerial Council (NSMC) in aquaculture and marine sectoral format, in Armagh on Wednesday 27 May. The Executive were represented by Minister Mervyn Storey and myself. The Irish Dublin Government were represented by Joe McHugh TD, Minister of State at the Department of Communications, Energy and Natural Resources. We received apologies from Minister Alex White, who was unable to attend. I chaired the meeting. Minister McHugh offered his best wishes to the First Minister and wished him a speedy recovery. This statement has been agreed with Minister Storey and I am making it on behalf of us both.

Ministers received a progress report on the work of the Loughs Agency from its chairperson, Winston Patterson, and its chief executive, John Pollock. We welcomed the report on the activities of the agency and noted its ongoing conservation and protection efforts and continued participation in the climate change adaptation initiative. We were pleased to learn that the Loughs Agency has successfully prosecuted across a range of offences, including illegal fishing, pollution and removal of gravel. Thankfully, enforcement staff have not faced any violent threats.

The Council was given an update on the survival of the native Lough Foyle flat oyster. The spring stock assessment has been completed. All oyster beds in Lough Foyle were surveyed. Initial findings suggest that the spat that settled last autumn has survived well, with very little evidence of mortality. We were pleased to note that there was no evidence of any unusual mortality in the adult oyster stocks last winter. We were also pleased to hear that the Loughs Agency has already engaged with local fishermen in the run-up to the opening of the fishery and that further communication with these stakeholders is planned. Tribute was paid to the chair, the chief executive and their team for making the decision to partially reopen the oyster beds at the end of last year.

We were provided with an update on the management agreement. The ongoing jurisdictional issue has been discussed with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office (FCO), and an exchange of views has occurred. Further communication from the FCO is awaited. Minister McHugh undertook to raise the matter with the Minister for Foreign Affairs and Trade. Minister Storey and I offered our support in an attempt to expedite the outstanding issues.

In parallel with the ongoing discussions on the jurisdictional issue, the Loughs Agency continues to engage with other relevant agencies in developing an implementation plan that will address the operational issues. The Council noted the progress made in relation to the agency's financial statement for 2013 and its business plan for 2016.

The NSMC welcomed the successful completion of the €8 million EU INTERREG IVa-funded IBIS project. That was marked with a two-day event in Newry hosted by the agency and its project partners the University of Glasgow and Queen's University Belfast. Students presented their research findings, which covered a wide range of topics, such as aquaculture and fisheries management.

Ministers received a very informative presentation on the sustainable development fund. This small grants scheme provides support for small-scale capital investment, training and events. The Council acknowledged the significant contribution that the scheme has made in providing sustainable social, economic and environmental benefits to the communities of the Foyle and Carlingford areas. We were impressed with the detailed report that was given on the activities of the Loughs Agency in promoting and marketing the Foyle and Carlingford areas, including angling development initiatives, marine tourism, education and outreach events.

We paid tribute to the agency for its efforts and the partnerships that it has developed with funding partners and others to promote and develop the Foyle and Carlingford areas. We also noted its success in securing EU funding and its plans to avail itself of future funding initiatives.

11.15 am

The Council noted the Loughs Agency's annual report and draft financial statements for 2014. It also noted that, following certification of the financial statements by the Comptrollers and Auditors General, they will be laid before the Assembly and both Houses of the Oireachtas. Ministers approved the continuation of the framework that is designed to support the Loughs Agency in dealing with emergencies, such as a serious pollution incident, for a further period of one year with effect from 20 July this year. Ministers agreed to review the operation of that procedure, including its possible renewal, based on a report from the Loughs Agency and the sponsor Departments, before 20 July next year.

The Council agreed to meet again in aquaculture and marine sectoral format in the autumn.

Mr Irwin (The Chairperson of the Committee for Agriculture and Rural Development): I refer the Minister to paragraph 11 of her statement and the management agreement between the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and the Department of Foreign Affairs and Trade in Ireland. She will know that that agreement is required to enable the agency to carry out its job fully. Will she outline what progress has been made since the issue was last discussed in the Assembly during the ministerial statement in February 2015?

Mrs O'Neill: The Member will be aware that that issue has been going on for a number of years and that we are obviously anxious to resolve it. Licensing is one of the functions of the Loughs Agency, and, to date, it has not been able to assume that function due to jurisdictional, legal and policy issues. We discussed that during our meetings, and, at the recent NSMC meeting, we had quite a lengthy exchange on the actions and on trying to put as much pressure as we can on the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. We have had some communication with that Department, and Minister McHugh said that he will raise the issue with the relevant Minister in the Dáil. We need progress on that issue.

We will continue that conversation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office. Alongside that work and in parallel with the ongoing discussions on the jurisdictional issues, the Loughs Agency continues to engage with other relevant agencies to develop a management agreement. The outworkings of that will address the practical and operational issues that may arise.

Mr McMullan: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for her detailed presentation. Minister, the statement shows that the Loughs Agency has had successful prosecutions. Will you give us more detail on that?

Mrs O'Neill: I start by saying that we are pleased that the Loughs Agency staff have not faced any threats of violence or any incidents over the last number of years. I am sure that everybody in the Chamber will agree that we want that situation to continue.

The Loughs Agency has been very successful with prosecutions. Currently, 19 outstanding cases that date back to 2014 are being pursued by the agency. Those cases can be broken down into the five categories of oyster, netting, angling, obstruction and pollution cases, and the agency is proactively pursuing all of them. As I said, I certainly want to put on record the fact that Loughs Agency staff have not faced any violent threats in recent times. We can all welcome that.

Mrs McKevitt: I thank the Minister for her statement. I want to point out the two-day conference that was held in Newry. The Minister spoke about its success and the fact that it celebrated 70 years of scientific research that has been undertaken through the IBIS project. There have been successes with that €8 million EU-funded project, with objectives delivered and information generated, particularly on shellfish resources. Paragraph 20 of the statement notes the Loughs Agency success in securing EU funding and:

"its plans to avail of future funding initiatives."

Will the Minister give any details on whether further research, through a project similar to IBIS, will be available through that funding?

Mrs O'Neill: That is certainly the plan. The IBIS project has been extremely successful, and it was right and proper that we celebrated those successes. The agency has been really successful in drawing down EU funding, and I expect that to continue into the future.

You will probably be aware of some of the other significant EU funding opportunities that it has availed itself of. Those include around €4 million for marine tourism and angling development and the €8 million that it received for the IBIS project. It is certainly looking to strengthen that work and to work in partnership, particularly with local councils, communities, businesses and stakeholders, on further opportunities and research opportunities. The agency will look at all the EU opportunities, but particularly at INTERREG funding, Peace funding, the rural development programmes and funding for marine affairs and fisheries — the EFF. There are plenty of opportunities. It is actively working up those plans, and I have no doubt that it will be as successful in future years as it has been in the last number of years.

Mrs Dobson: I thank the Minister for her statement also. Looking to the future, what percentage of her Department's savings does she intend to realise from the Loughs Agency?

Mrs O'Neill: The Loughs Agency, like every other agency, has been tasked with finding efficiencies and has done so very successfully. Just recently it has been working towards its 2015-16 budget, which will be finalised in the coming period. I do not have the actual figure as a percentage of the budget, but I will be happy to provide that to the Member. Like every other agency of the Department, the Loughs Agency has been asked to find where it can be more efficient and do things better.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Minister for her statement, late though it may have been. She said that:

"Ministers received an informative presentation on the sustainable development fund."

Is this fund widespread or is it simply for the Foyle and Carlingford areas? What is the value of the small grant?

Mrs O'Neill: It is particularly for the Lough Foyle and Carlingford areas so that projects can be developed to work in partnership with communities and business. The sustainable development fund grant goes up to £7,500. Some of the projects featured in the presentation that we received benefited from the fund. Those are fantastic projects, which are about enhancing activities on the lough, developing business opportunities for people on the lough and working with young people on the water, canoeing and so on. Quite a range of projects have benefited from the fund, but it is specifically for those areas.

Mr Anderson: I thank the Minister for her statement. She mentioned an implementation plan to address operational issues. Will she elaborate on the other relevant agencies that are involved and the timescale for the completion of that implementation plan?

Mrs O'Neill: As I said in my answer to the Committee Chairperson, we are working our way through the jurisdictional issue and the problem that we have of the Loughs Agency assuming its full role, which it should be playing. Alongside that, while we are trying to get that issue resolved — it has been ongoing for quite a number of years — we are working in parallel with all our partners on the ongoing operational and practical issues on the ground. We are working with fishermen, angling organisations, councils and a range of partners that the Loughs Agency engages with regularly.

Mr McAleer: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Does the Minister share my view and, indeed, the view of many that the Loughs Agency can and does play an important role in maximising the value of natural assets for angling development, education and wider community benefit?

Mrs O'Neill: Yes, I absolutely concur. The agency continues to provide support to a range of community and business projects, not just through the sustainable development fund but in its everyday work. The Member will be aware of a quite significant body of work that the Loughs Agency got involved with in his constituency at Lough Macrory, where we had the water recreation activities and where the angling club launched its world championships, I think, in 2013. That clearly shows the Loughs Agency's track record in wanting to engage with local communities. The agency is very keen to do a lot more of that and, through the sustainable development fund, to engage in practical working on the ground with young people to educate them about fishing activities and the potential of the water courses. I am quite sure that that work will continue into the future.

Mr Dallat: I hope that the Minister will not claim that I am pushing the boat out too far. She will be aware that there is a ferry service across the Foyle that has carried over two million passengers since its inception and gets not one brass penny of public money from the Republic or from this Assembly. Will she use her ingenuity at a future meeting to find out why one ferry service here gets no funding while the other two get something like £10 million? Perhaps she will remind Mr McHugh that he is part of the solution.

Mrs O'Neill: I am happy to take up any issue that a Member raises. It is not something that we have discussed in the NSMC in the past, but I am happy to take a look at it to see whether there is potential for the Loughs Agency in that regard. One of its key objectives — it is key to what it is all about — is to develop the Foyle and everything to do with the Foyle. I will be very happy to explore that further.

Mr Rogers: Thanks to the Minister for her statement. I apologise for missing the start of it. Minister, a couple of months ago in Clare, an oyster fisherman tragically lost his life when the tides came in on him. As you know, good communication between land and sea is vital, but, with competing phone signals in the likes of Lough Foyle and Carlingford lough, the mobile phone is not an answer. Is there any opportunity in the small grants programmes to provide grant aid for a responder device for our oyster fishermen?

Mrs O'Neill: I do not believe that it is within the remit of the sustainable development fund, but I am happy to explore it further. Obviously, the safety of fishermen on the lough is something that Loughs Agency concerns itself with. I know that it has partnered with organisations such as Seafish around life jackets and different safety equipment.

I have not been privy to any kind of conversation about responder devices in the past, but I am very happy to explore that because, as I said, Loughs Agency really wants to work with all the stakeholders, particularly the anglers and fishermen who use the lough. If there is scope and potential for Loughs Agency to be involved in that, perhaps in partnership with the likes of Seafish, I am sure that it would be very happy to explore that.

Water and Sewerage Services Bill: First Stage

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development):

I beg to introduce the Water and Sewerage Services Bill [NIA 51/11-16], which is a Bill to amend, and to confer power to amend, the Water and Sewerage Services (Northern Ireland) Order 2006; and for connected purposes.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Health and Social Care (Control of Data Processing) Bill: First Stage

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I beg to introduce the Health and Social Care (Control of Data Processing) Bill [NIA 52/11-16], which is a Bill to make provision about control of data processing in relation to health and social care.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Mental Capacity Bill: Second Stage

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): I beg to move

That the Second Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill [NIA 49/11-16] be agreed.

In recent weeks, I have been setting out my vision for the future of health and social care in Northern Ireland. That vision involves, and, indeed, demands, reform, transformation and innovation across the sector. The Mental Capacity Bill delivers on all three of those. Developed jointly by my Department and the Department of Justice, the Bill is a first example of how, when we work together, we can overcome challenges and do things that will bring about real change for the better. I pay particular tribute to Minister Ford and his Department for all the hard work and dedication they have contributed in bringing the Bill before the Assembly today.

As far as I am aware, the Bill adopts an approach that has not been attempted anywhere else in the world. It has been a hugely complex and challenging process. As many Members will know, the Bill has been a long time in development. The reasons for that are clear and will, I think, emerge from our debate today.

The Bill provides a framework that will govern some of the most serious decisions that professionals in the health and social care sector and others make on a daily basis; decisions such as whether it would be best for someone to have a major operation that they are unable to consent to, or whether to place restrictions around a person's care or treatment to the extent that the person is, in fact, being deprived of his or her liberty.

As the scrutiny process begins, the Assembly can have confidence that the Bill has had the benefit of extensive stakeholder engagement and input, initially by those involved in the Bamford review, and, in more recent years, by the various stakeholder groups that met on many occasions to consider papers and proposals from both Departments. I thank everyone on those groups for their contribution to the development of the Bill and those who took the time to respond to the various consultation exercises and attend the many events held throughout Northern Ireland last year after the draft Bill was published for consultation. Many of the innovations in the Bill began with our extensive, transparent and responsive approach to consultation. The Bill, as introduced, is all the better because of that engagement.

The Mental Capacity Bill seeks to create a single piece of law that puts people's rights first when decisions, big and small, need to be made about their lives.

11.30 am

Respect for the choices and decisions that we make about our own life is something that many of us take for granted. However, for some, it is far from the reality of their day-to-day life. The Bill seeks to change that. The principles in Part 1 on the key concepts of capacity and best interests are the starting point. Significantly, these principles take account of developments since the Bamford review, such as the ratification of the United Nations Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities. They include a requirement up front for people to be given every practicable help and support to make decisions for themselves. This is because by far the best outcome when it comes to making decisions about our own healthcare, treatment or even our money is for each one of us to make those decisions for ourselves.

The Bill recognises that decisions based on informed consent are not always possible, so there is a need to provide for situations when judgements need to be made about what would be best for someone. However, crucially, this can occur only when it is properly established that a person lacks capacity to make a particular decision by themselves. In other words, the onus is on the person intervening to prove a lack of capacity, not the person themselves.

Under the Bill, assumptions cannot be made about someone's capacity on the basis of any condition "or any other characteristic" that they might have. It is expressly stated in clause 1 that whether a person has capacity to make a decision can be determined only by reference to clause 4 and his or her inability to make that decision because of an impairment or disturbance in the functioning of the mind or brain. This could be caused by any number of things, temporary or permanent, but the key point is that it does not matter what causes the impairment or disturbance. It is the inability to make a decision because of it that matters.

Part 1 also contains the principle that anything done for a person who lacks capacity to make a particular decision must be done in his or her best interests. Clause 7 sets out the list of factors that must all be balanced in order to comply with this principle. I do not intend to go through them all today, but I want to highlight to Members that it specifically requires "special regard" to be given to what the person's "wishes and feelings" might be. This was one of the key changes made to the draft Bill following the consultation.

Part 2 is the core of the Bill. It gives doctors, nurses, social workers, carers and others legal cover for things that they do every day in relation to people's care, treatment or personal welfare. These are things that would require people's consent if they had capacity, such as dressing them, taking them for a dental appointment or giving them an anaesthetic or injection of some kind. This legal cover is not new. It already exists in common law, but it has been found wanting by the courts when relied on in the past to do some of the more serious things in a person's life: for example, things involving placing significant restrictions on a person's movements to the extent that a person is being deprived of their liberty. Part 2, therefore, requires additional safeguards to be put in place in relation to serious interventions in someone's life. They include requiring a formal assessment of capacity to be carried out or a second opinion to be obtained; consulting with someone's nominated person or an independent advocate; and getting very serious interventions authorised by the relevant health and social care trust.

Finally, Part 2 also provides a right to seek a review by a tribunal of any authorisation. Safeguards such as nominated persons, for example, do not exist under the current legal framework, nor do the safeguards in Part 8 that deal specifically with research involving a person who lacks capacity to consent to it. They therefore represent a major change in the law — a significant change for the better that many of our people will stand to benefit from if the Bill is made law.

This brings me to perhaps the most ambitious change that the Bill will bring about. The new legal framework in the Bill will apply to all adults. Importantly, this includes those whose choices about their care and treatment can currently be overridden by professionals acting under the powers in the Mental Health Order. Other jurisdictions have retained their separate mental health legislation when legislating for adults who are unable to make decisions for themselves. This Bill takes a very different approach for two key reasons: first, it avoids the confusion that having two sets of rules inevitably brings; secondly, and vitally, it will help to reduce the stigma felt by those who have, for many years now, been treated differently because they suffer from mental disorder. This fused approach is what the Bamford review strongly advocated and what stakeholders have repeatedly told us is the right way forward. It is that which makes the Bill unique and innovative. Other jurisdictions will watch the Assembly with interest as the Bill progresses through its legislative stages.

However, it is not just people in the health and social care sector who will need to be aware of the Bill. There are also significant safeguards contained in Parts 5 and 6 to do with making decisions about money that are relevant to banks, building societies, post offices and the legal profession. The new lasting powers of attorney system provided for in Part 5 will allow anyone over 18, if they have capacity, to appoint someone they trust to make decisions about their finances. That new system will replace the existing enduring powers of attorney system and will be extended to decisions about health and welfare matters. Under Part 6, the High Court will also have powers to take one-off decisions or, where there is a need, to appoint a deputy to make ongoing decisions.

That leads me to Part 7, which also involves the justice system. Part 7 requires the Department of Justice to appoint a public guardian. That officer will have a number of functions, including establishing and maintaining a register of attorneys and deputies and supervising the activities of deputies.

Parts 9 and 10 also deal with matters falling to the Department of Justice. Part 9 creates powers for police constables to remove a person from a public place and take him or her to a place of safety. Those powers will replace the current powers in the Mental Health Order and will apply if the person appears to be in need of immediate care or control. Once in a place of safety, the police can detain the person there.

The police will also have powers, under Part 9, to transfer people between places of safety. Certain conditions will apply before those powers can be exercised. The police constable must reasonably believe that the person lacks capacity to make the decision around their removal or, as the case may be, their transfer or detention. They must also reasonably believe that the removal, transfer or detention is in the person's best interests. Those conditions are new. The current powers also allow a person to be detained in a place of safety for up to 48 hours. The new powers reduce that to 24 hours. Finally, provision is also made to ensure that further protections, based on those in the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989, are afforded to any person detained in a place of safety under the powers in Part 9.

Part 10 replaces the current court powers in the Mental Health Order around remand and sentencing, including in “unfit to plead” cases. Unlike the current powers, the new powers take into account, where appropriate, a person’s capacity to make decisions about their medical treatment. That reflects the recommendations made in the Bamford review.

The current hospital orders in the Mental Health Order will be replaced by new public protection orders, which can be made with or without restrictions. The purpose of the public protection order is to provide flexibility to the court in cases where a person has been convicted of a crime but is not considered culpable enough to be sent to prison, but if not detained in an appropriate place, would pose a risk of serious physical harm to other people. That risk, however, must be linked to the person having an impairment or disturbance in the functioning of the mind or brain.

Part 10 also creates a new court disposal on conviction, which is known as a hospital direction. A hospital direction can be made by the court if it is considered that a custodial sentence is appropriate but the person requires medical treatment. In those circumstances, the court can direct that the person be taken to hospital and be detained there. If the person recovers sufficiently to no longer require hospitalisation, he or she must be returned to custody to serve the rest of the sentence also imposed by the court.

Part 10 also makes provision for the conveyance to hospital of individuals who are detained in prison, the young offenders’ centre and the juvenile justice centre. Like the new court powers, the new transfer powers take account of a person’s capacity to make decisions about their medical treatment, where it is appropriate to do so. Any person subject to detention under the powers in Part 10 has the right to seek a review of that detention by the review tribunal that I referred to earlier.

Finally, Mr Speaker, I want to cover briefly the remaining parts, Parts 11 to 15. Part 11 carries forward the current facility to transfer patients who are detained in hospital between Northern Ireland and the rest of the United Kingdom. Part 12 makes amendments to the Mental Health Order for persons aged 16 and under. Those amendments add to the safeguards that already exist for children in that order and in other legislation, such as the Children Order.

Part 13 creates new offences, such as the offence of ill-treatment or neglect of persons who lack capacity. Parts 14 and 15 contain miscellaneous and supplementary provision. For example, Part 14 gives effect in Northern Ireland to the Convention on the International Protection of Adults. It also makes clear that there are some decisions that are just too personal to fall within the scope of the Bill, such as consenting to marriage.

It will, I hope, be abundantly clear to Members at this point that the Bill, all 295 clauses and 11 schedules, is one of the largest ever to come before the Assembly. It may also be the most far-reaching in scope and potential impact, but the Bill itself is only one part of the jigsaw. The accompanying code of practice will be a key document. Work has already begun on that, and on the training and awareness-raising programme needed to make the changes happen on the ground.

I do not underestimate the scale of the challenge that the Bill presents. In particular, I am acutely aware of the exceptionally difficult financial situation that we face. However, those challenges should not deter or deflect us from the crucial task of reforming our health and social care system. Indeed, the need to reform and modernise is more vital now than ever before. We should also not lose sight of the fact that, with this Bill, we are leading the way on a global stage, with what is widely recognised as being one of the most forward-thinking pieces of social legislation to be brought before any legislature.

I conclude by commending the Assembly for the early establishment of the Ad Hoc Joint Health and Justice Committee, which has already met to hear directly from officials about the Bill’s detail. The Committee has my and Minister Ford’s full support and cooperation, and that of our Departments, as it takes on the important and difficult job of scrutinising the Bill. I look forward to hearing what the Committee and Members have to say.

Mr Ross (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Joint Committee on the Mental Capacity Bill): As the House is aware and the Minister has just said, the Ad Hoc Committee, comprising members of the Justice Committee and the Health Committee, has been established by the Assembly to consider the Mental Capacity Bill. The Committee has met on five occasions so far, and we began our work by taking introductory briefings from both Departments on the various aspects of the Bill.

As many Members will be aware, the background to the Bill is primarily the Bamford review, which, in 2007, concluded that there should be a single legislative framework to reform the existing mental health legislation and introduce capacity legislation to Northern Ireland for the first time.

Mental health law is broadly concerned with the reduction of the risks flowing from mental disorder to the patient and other people, while mental capacity law is designed to empower people to make decisions for themselves wherever possible and to protect people who lack capacity.

The key purpose of developing a single legislative framework to cover both mental ill health and mental capacity is to attempt to reduce the stigma and inequalities that sometimes flow from having specific mental health legislation. However, the production of such legislation is in no way a straightforward task, and, as the Minister acknowledged, Northern Ireland is the only place in the world to attempt such an approach. For example, while England brought in the Mental Capacity Act in 2005, it does not cover the treatment of mental illness. England has maintained two distinct legislative frameworks. The closest that anywhere in the world has come to contemplating the approach that we are moving ahead with is in Victoria in Australia. Its legislature considered the issue of bringing together mental health law and mental capacity law in 2012 and produced a report on the issues. However, it decided not to proceed further and concluded that it was a matter for ongoing debate. The difficulty that it encountered was in coming to a position on whether having separate mental health legislation amounts to unjustifiable discrimination against people with a mental illness or whether it in fact constitutes a special measure for the benefit of people with a mental illness.

Therefore, it is important to note up front the complexity of the task that we are facing in fusing mental health and mental capacity legislation, given that it will bring about a fundamental change to the way in which people with a mental illness receive treatment. Indeed, it strikes me that the decision, made by the Health and Justice Ministers, to be the first in the world to try that approach might be described by Sir Humphrey Appleby as a “very courageous decision, Minister”.

Given the complexities of the issues, and the fact that there is nowhere else in the world where this type of legislation has already been introduced that we can look to as a model, there are genuine concerns around the timescales associated with the Bill. It has been introduced in the Assembly for scrutiny during the fifth year of what was originally to have been a four-year mandate. Since the start of this mandate, the timescales have continually slipped back. At one stage, the Health and Justice Committees were informed by their Departments that the Bill would be introduced no later than December 2013. We are now 18 months past that date. I therefore think that it is a legitimate question whether the introduction of the Bill in this mandate was the preferred option for both Departments and whether it will result in the best outcomes for the legislative process.

However, as is often said in these parts, we are where we are, and the Bill has been introduced nine months before the end of the mandate. The Committee will need to report on it by the end of January at the very latest to allow the completion of the other legislative stages before dissolution. When we take out the recess periods, that allows only about four months for scrutiny of a Bill with, as the Minister said, 295 clauses and 11 schedules to it and that aims to create a legislative framework that is so complex and so controversial that the rest of the world has decided against doing it.

While the Committee fully understands and accepts its scrutiny responsibilities, it is concerned about the short space of time it has been left with to complete its task. There are also concerns about the level of consultation that has taken place on some aspects of the Bill prior to its introduction to the Assembly.

In May 2014, the Health and Justice Departments launched a public consultation providing draft clauses in relation to how the Bill will relate to civil society. Stakeholders therefore had the opportunity to make comments about specific clauses relating to things such as the principles of the Bill, protection from liability, safeguards, the role of independent advocates, lasting powers of attorney and so on. However, on the justice side, draft clauses were not provided as part of the public consultation. Instead, the Department of Justice provided its proposed policy approach for those subject to the criminal justice system, covering the following three key areas: first, police powers to remove persons from a public place to a place of safety; secondly, court powers to impose healthcare disposals at remand and sentencing, or following a finding of unfitness to plead; and thirdly, the powers by which the Department of Justice can transfer prisoners for inpatient treatment in a hospital.

The Departments’ analysis of the responses to the public consultation on those issues indicated a range of views, some supportive and some expressing reservations or opposition to particular proposals. However, given that the first time stakeholders will have seen the detail of the clauses proposed to deal with the three key issues was last week, when the Bill was introduced, it could be anticipated that those will generate a lot of discussion and debate when we reach Committee Stage of the Bill.

There also appears to be an over-reliance on regulations and code of practice in the Bill. Those have not yet been consulted on and will be introduced through regulation, without the same level of scrutiny by the Committee or the Assembly and, of course, without the ability for the Committee or Assembly to amend. Given that other Bills have faced similar criticism of late, this is something that both Ministers may wish to consider. The lack of detail, coupled with the fact that stakeholders have not had much time to examine the current draft Bill will, in turn, add to the task of the Committee in trying to come to a position on issues that really, to date, have been consulted on only in a very broad sense and at a very late stage in the day.

If we look beyond the detail of the Bill itself, there are major question marks around how and when this piece of legislation will be implemented. The Departments have estimated that between £75 million and £129 million is required in year 1, and between £68 million and £102 million for recurrent costs on an annual basis. I will repeat that: the outworkings of the Bill could cost the Executive an additional £100 million each and every year. While the Committee will, of course, wish to challenge the robustness of those costings and whether they are accurate figures, it needs to be concerned at the order of magnitude we are talking about and whether that is where the Executive’s priorities — and indeed where the Justice and Health priorities — will be in the next number of years.

Even the lower estimate of annual costs, at around £70 million, represents a significant pressure on the budgets of both Departments, which seems unattainable at this juncture. Given the current financial climate, and the likely financial climate in the next four to five years, the question genuinely arises as to whether Northern Ireland will be able to afford the implementation of this piece of legislation. If we cannot afford it, what happens? Will we end up rushing through a piece of legislation that could end up not being commenced until a number of years down the line, if at all?

I now want to address some of the key aspects of the Bill itself, beginning with the principles upon which it is based. The Bamford review recommended that any new legislation should be based on agreed principles, which should be explicitly stated on the face of the Bill. There were four principles outlined by Bamford; namely autonomy, justice, benefit and least harm. The Departments’ approach has been to take autonomy as the leading principle, in that the fundamental premise of the Bill is the presumption that all adults have capacity to make their own decisions unless the contrary is proven. However, in instances where it is determined that a person does not have the capacity to make their own decision about a matter, the principle of best interests governs the course of action that is decided on, on behalf of the person who lacks capacity.

The principles of the Bill are not without controversy, particularly around the concept of “best interests”, which some stakeholders believe conveys an unhelpful sense of paternalism. Other stakeholders have referenced the emerging impact of the UN Convention on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities, which was ratified by the United Kingdom in 2009. They have suggested that the focus on substituted decision-making and best interests in the Bill has the potential to impose discrimination against people with disabilities and advocate a move towards a legal capacity support model.

Therefore, right from the very start of the Bill, from Part 1, we, as a Committee, will consider a whole spectrum of views, ranging from those who wholeheartedly endorse the principles to those who have some reservations and those who oppose them outright.

There are also concerns coming forward from the legal community around the practical outworkings of the Bill in terms of things such as lasting powers of attorney, which will replace the enduring powers of attorney provisions. Organisations such as the Law Society, which held a very useful briefing in Parliament Buildings last Wednesday which I attended, have pointed out that the making of a lasting power of attorney could cost a person in the region of £500, compared to the £100 that it currently costs to make an enduring power of attorney. If the ability to make an enduring power of attorney is done away with as is proposed under the Bill, the fear is that people will be put off making a more expensive lasting power of attorney because of the cost.

The Law Society posed this question: why can we not offer people the choice of whether they wish to have an enduring power of attorney, which could be extended to health and well-being, or a lasting power of attorney, which is a more expensive model? Those types of practical outworkings of the Bill and how they will impact on the public will require the Committee's careful consideration, as will the higher-level concepts around the principles of the Bill.

I will turn to children and young people. There are a range of concerns about how the Bill will impact on children under 16 and on young people aged 16 and 17. A range of organisations have questioned the fact that the majority of the provisions in the Bill will only apply to those aged 16 or over in terms of presumed capacity. Some people have suggested that a lower age could be used, although I think that it is fair to say there is no consensus on what that age would be. Some organisations that advocate a lower age have not made any specific proposals. Others have come at the issue more in terms of the practical impact of under-16s who have mental health problems not being able to access certain safeguards that the Bill will provide for adults who lack capacity to make certain decisions.

The Department of Health has attempted to address some of those concerns by proposing a range of amendments to the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, which will still apply to under-16s. While some of the concerns may have been addressed, there is little doubt that this will continue to be a contentious issue as we move forward, and the Committee will look closely at the provisions in the Bill and how they impact on children and young people.

To conclude, the Committee does not underestimate the task that it has in front of it in the coming months. We take seriously our responsibility to scrutinise what is the probably the most complex piece of legislation ever to come in front of the Assembly. Equally, we expect both Departments to work with us and to provide us with all the information that we require in order for us to produce our report on the Bill for the Assembly. Most of all, the whole House wants to hear whether there is a genuine possibility of getting the Bill into law, given the huge financial pressures that we are under at present and the estimated cost of enacting the legislation.

Ms McCorley: Go raibh maith agat, a Cheann Comhairle. Ba mhaith liom fáilte a chur roimh an Bhille seo. I welcome the introduction of the Bill.

The Ad Hoc Committee has recently begun the task of scrutinising the Mental Capacity Bill, which has arisen out of the Bamford review of 2007, the main recommendation of which called for a single comprehensive legislative framework for the reform of mental health legislation and for the introduction of capacity legislation in the North. The report concluded that that would help reduce the stigma attached to mental health being dealt with in separate legislation. It would also allow for improving the protections for people who lack capacity and find themselves in a situation where they cannot make their own decisions in regard to their health and/or personal circumstances. It would also give protection to those who are within the criminal justice system.

Bheadh cosaint ann fosta do na daoine úd atá sa chóras choiriúil. It will seek to improve the current legal framework, which does not have stand-alone mental capacity legislation. Mental capacity issues come under common law here in the North, which provides for an acceptance generally that anyone aged 16 or over has capacity. A test of incapacity and protection against liability when required to make an intervention in another person's life as long as it is reasonable to assume that the person lacks capacity and that the action to be taken will be in the person's best interests.

Is soiléir, fiú ag an phointe luath seo, an saghas na castachtaí a thiocfaidh chun cinn maidir leis an Bhille seo. Even at the early outset, the sorts of complexities that will arise out of the Bill are clear. How, for example, do you determine what is reasonable? How do you define that? That is one of the challenges that will arise. What dictates how you come to a decision on another person's best interests? The Bill will throw up various legal questions that will, no doubt, be very interesting to explore. However, they place a very onerous task on those carrying out the scrutiny as these minutiae are all connected to a person, and these decisions will have implications for the health, treatment or personal affairs of that person. We, as a Committee, have an obligation to ensure that we consider all the foreseeable eventualities that could come from this.

The Mental Health Order 1986 currently governs decisions relating to mental health issues, and it gives statutory powers to remove and detain people in certain circumstances where assessment and treatment of a mental health disorder is required, whether or not a person has capacity. It is now recognised that this runs contrary to the right to personal autonomy, and so it is clear that reform of the legislation is a positive move forward. The Bill spells out an approach that will join mental capacity and mental health law in one piece of legislation — something that has never been attempted before in any jurisdiction and has been described as groundbreaking. Initially, the Department thought about dealing with this via separate legislation, but it became clear from the consultation responses that the desire was overwhelmingly in support of having one comprehensive framework, as envisaged by Bamford.

This is complex legislation, as we have all said. Throughout Committee Stage, there will be an opportunity for close scrutiny of the clauses to ensure that it fulfils the needs for which it is being created. Even at an early stage, some issues are coming to light. Cause 1, for example, states that whether a person is able to make a decision is not: that they may have. The Committee is exploring the use and implications of the word “merely” in that context: for example, does that word appear in the 2005 Act in England? An bhfuil an focal sin in Acht 2005 i Sasana, mar shampla? Likewise, clause 4 states that a person can be judged as “unable to make a decision” if they cannot “use and weigh” information as part of the process of making the decision. The Committee’s task here is to examine how, in practical terms, one person would be able to judge whether another person had used and weighed the information before coming to their final decision on any matter.

“determined merely on the basis of any condition”

Clause 7 refers to a person’s “rights and freedom of action”. How is the term “rights” being used here? Does it refer to a person’s rights in reference to any particular existing legislation? If not, how will it be interpreted legally? Those are the questions that the Committee will seek clarity on as it moves through Committee Stage.

In a general sense, the Bill will facilitate people making plans for their future in case a time should arise when they no longer have the capacity to make decisions for themselves. That would include decisions relating to healthcare and treatment, property and finance. Currently, people can avail themselves of making such arrangements through an enduring power of attorney (EPA), which allows for the appointment of a person chosen by an individual to make decisions relating to property and affairs — an arrangement that would continue in the event of loss of mental capacity. The new legislation will seek to replace the existing EPA with lasting powers of attorney (LPA). The main difference is that an EPA covers property and financial affairs, whereas the LPA will be more wide-ranging so as to include matters relating to health treatment and care.

In the event of the new legislation taking effect, an EPA will no longer be available, although people who have an existing EPA arrangement can continue with that. It has also been flagged at this stage that the LPA will be more costly and complex than an EPA, so that will be taken into account as well in the consideration.

Last week, we had a very interesting presentation from the Law Society, which explained these arrangements by providing human examples of what that can mean. It was shown how life can become extremely complicated when certain circumstances arise, as in the case of a sudden debilitating illness or a serious accident that could result in a person no longer having the capacity to make decisions and where there are no legal provisions in place to cover that. In a very accessible way, the examples flagged the need for all of us to consider our own arrangements and how we would like our wishes to be fulfilled in such circumstances.

12.00 noon

Those are the pertinent questions and matters to which we should be giving serious consideration at a time when we are capable of making such decisions. We should think about people who may be lying in a vegetative state or in a coma and are now unable to communicate, let alone convey their deepest wishes. Those are the circumstances that we need to prepare for in advance. It is very similar to a situation where someone might die without leaving a will and the complications that can arise from that.

In some circumstances, there can be the risk of fraud as well. There can also be cases where someone who may not have been the person’s choice may be able to step in and apply for power of attorney. So, again, it is about people putting in place arrangements that will lay out how they want their wishes to be carried out. As I said, those are very weighty decisions, and they are always made simpler when the correct legalities have been put in place. Where no prior arrangement is in place, such matters will fall to the courts to decide on property and financial matters.

Where a person’s care, treatment or personal welfare are concerned, where no such arrangement is in place, the Bill seeks to place the common law doctrine of necessity on to a statutory footing and, further to that, to provide new safeguards to allow for different types of interventions.

There have also been concerns raised about another aspect of the Bill, which is that children under the age of 16 will be excluded from its scope. The worrying aspect of that is that the new safeguards and protections being created will not apply to children. It has been said that the Mental Health Order 1986 will be amended to cater for under-16s, pending a review of the Children Order 1995. That could take a very long time, and, meanwhile, children may be subject to less favourable regulations, including being formally detained.

Bamford also recognised that the Mental Health Order was not fully ECHR compliant. Is gnéithe dáiríre iad seo den Bhille ar chóir scrúdú grinn a dhéanamh orthu lena chinntiú go mbeidh na socrúithe is fearr in áit do gach duine — do pháistí agus do dhaoine fásta araon. Those are very serious aspects of the Bill that must be fully scrutinised to ensure that the best possible arrangements are put in place for all people, children and adults alike.

As I said, the Ad Hoc Committee has a hugely complex piece of legislation to consider. It will reflect on all the relevant questions and on concepts such as safeguards; formal capacity assessments; nominated persons; deprivation of liberty; powers of attorney; appointment of deputies; public guardian; the power of the police to remove a person to a place of safety; and criminal justice issues, like remand to hospital and all the added complex issues that surround all those subjects.

I recognise the difficult work that we will face as a Committee, and I look forward to hearing the presentations and listening to all the expert opinions so that we can arrive at the best and most comprehensive legislation for the protection of people in the North. Molaim an Bille. I commend the Bill.

Mr McKinney: As SDLP health spokesperson and a member of the Health Committee, I support the general principles of the Bill. The wide scope of the Bill is to be welcomed. It will directly impact on every day and more serious decision-making for many vulnerable groups, such as those linked to health, welfare and finance.

Just to give some statistics, in Northern Ireland, we have almost 20,000 people suffering with dementia, 1% of the population suffering from schizophrenia, some 13% suffering from depression and almost 214,000 carers here for people who may lack capacity. All those people and many others may need important decisions to be made on their behalf, or they may need to make decisions for other people. It is in that context that we see how important today's Bill will be for those with mental illness and their families and extended families.

For decades, Northern Ireland has lagged behind the rest of the UK in not having a fully tailored legislative framework for mental capacity. Instead, we have relied on the antiquated Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order, which wraps mental capacity around mental health disorder in the common law, relying on the outdated principle of necessity. The concerns of those with mental illness have historically been separated from the treatment of capacity in general. That remains the case in England, Wales and Scotland, which have proceeded with developing legislation that has been enacted for a number of years. We have been lagging behind due to the absence of an exhaustive framework. That has proved problematic in developing the quality of services that we want, and it has not helped to promote public confidence around a very sensitive issue.

It is important to take this opportunity to commend all those involved in bringing forward today's Bill. It has been an arduous task by any measure, and I am sure the scrutiny by the Committee — it has had five meetings — reflects that. We should praise all those stakeholders who have engaged with politicians and the consultation exercises and the Ad Hoc Committee deserves recognition, as I have said.

As we all know, the development of the Bill has been a long process, starting back in 2002 with the Bamford review, which was commissioned to examine the best possible way to provide services to people with mental health issues or a learning disability. It was finalised in 2007 and recommended a single piece of legislation that would provide a framework for reform of mental health legislation.

It is appropriate at this point to mention that the SDLP previously noted its concerns over the Bamford action plans and the appropriate funding being made available to implement them. To stress that point: they have not been successfully funded by successive Health Ministers, and there is a broad spectrum of individuals who do not receive the appropriate level of care or support that they need. It is important that the Assembly reflects on that today. However, it is positive, in the context of today's debate, to see some outcome from the Bamford action plans.

I welcome the general principles of the Bill, as I have said, and its aim of empowering vulnerable adults with impaired mental capacity to make as many of their own decisions as possible. I welcome the fact that adequate legislative measures and safeguards are in place to ensure the individual is protected when decisions have to be made on their behalf. As I have already reflected, it is also positive to see David Ford and the Health Minister embracing the Bamford report to this point and its recommendations by bringing forward the single piece of legislation.

With this Bill, we have an opportunity to be world leaders in setting the best standards achievable for vulnerable adults who may lack, even intermittently, the capacity to make important decisions for themselves. The Bill has been described as representing a paradigm shift in the approach to the care and treatment of individuals with mental disorders. No longer will they be treated or seen as a separate class of individual. Capacity will no longer be defined differently among people, which has to be recognised as a positive move.

Some of these issues have been addressed, but it is important to reinforce them. There are issues that need to be resolved in this Bill, even at the outset. As has been reflected, there needs to be clearer provision for people who are aged under 16. That group will not have rights under the Bill's provisions, and there needs to be clarity over what action will be taken to ensure that young people benefit from having effective safeguards and protection in place on issues relating to capacity. There are issues involving parental responsibility and its interaction with existing legislation. That will need to be clarified.

Also, we must ask whether the provisions of the Bill reflect the particular needs of certain groups in society. Considering the prevalence of dementia in our society, the scale of which I have outlined, and other age-related mental conditions, coupled with the fact that we have an ageing population, we must ensure that action is taken that protects and provides safeguarding and proofing for older people. In that regard, the Bill calls for suitable and adequate support to be given to individuals when all decisions relating to capacity are taken. I welcome that approach, but, in fleshing out the guidance, we have to ensure that there is a clear measure of support available, whether that is through minimum standards or otherwise. We need to ensure that when older people are making important decisions about their future, which often happens in urgent or time-critical situations, they are given the best opportunity to make their own choices.

At this stage, I will focus on the practicalities of the Bill. Last year, there were serious concerns highlighted by the House of Lords over the implementation of the Mental Capacity Act 2005 in England and Wales, which the Health Minister referred to. The review concluded that existing cultural and organisational practice amongst all professionals involved in the care of vulnerable adults must change, because they were failing to implement the ethos of the Act. This concern must also be reflected here today, and the issues of ageism and existing perceptions about learning disabilities must change. The process of implementing this legislation needs thorough consideration, as it requires a significant amount of education and training across levels of care, including health and social care staff; capacity assessors, as outlined in the Bill; and specialist professionals such as social workers, doctors, hospital staff and all those involved in the criminal justice system. I would like the respective Ministers to give an indication of what plans exist for facilitating such training and give assurances around funding.

There is an obvious need to ensure at the outset that the various bodies and individuals operating under the Bill are adequately funded and resourced. The Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee referred to finance and the extra cost, and I am sure that it would be beneficial to have some sort of an economic audit carried out on that because, while some people see everything as cost, could there be savings to be had as well? Budgets will be cut, and that has been reflected. We need assurances that the principles of this Bill will be deliverable once the scheme of practice is implemented.

To finish, the SDLP is supporting the general principles of this Bill. We believe that it is a step in the right direction in giving autonomy to and protecting some of the most vulnerable in society. However, as we have reflected, some improvements can be made, and we look to further analysis, if you like, by the Ad Hoc Committee and scrutiny of the Bill and the Consideration Stage next in this Chamber.

Mrs Dobson: As the Ulster Unionist Party's health spokesperson, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this important legislation. However, as already has been mentioned, it is regrettable that it has taken so long for this Bill to come to the Floor, especially as it was proposed as long ago as 2009, following the Bamford review. This delay not only allowed the two Departments to prevaricate as to their own responsibilities, leading in turn to what I believe was an overdue consultation process, it meant that the Bill faces a challenging legislative timescale. As the Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee has already said, the problem with passing it through the House at the latter end of the term is that it will inevitably get caught up in a raft of other Bills, especially after the summer recess. Whilst I think that the Ad Hoc Committee will be able to perform its role, it is regrettable that the Assembly more generally will have less opportunity to examine this important legislation than it would have had if the Bill had been introduced a year or even six months ago.

Nevertheless, there is no doubt about the significance of the Bill and what it proposes. As has already been said, the Bill develops a single legislative framework, in turn completely overhauling a raft of existing mental health legislation and practices. Some people looking in may be concerned that the Assembly, along with two of the largest Departments in the Executive, appears to be passing legislation that seeks to determine whether an individual does or does not have the capacity to make crucial decisions affecting them. There is no doubt that this is a very sensitive area, much like all legislation relating to mental health. However, I trust that the public, along with those professionals who ultimately will have to engage with this legislation, will be satisfied that there are sufficient provisions in place to ensure that people will be given the maximum support to exercise their own capacity.

The statutory assumption of capacity must always be to the fore of this Bill and its subsequent implementation. Up until now, whilst the support has been extensive, I do think that, in some circumstances, it will have been too all-encompassing. We all know from our own constituency work that people with poor mental health often cannot be defined or pigeonholed in a single category. Circumstances are often complex, emotional and ever-changing. The blanket protections currently in place have not always recognised this, so, again, I welcome the requirements to always assess the level of capacity.

There are a number of other provisions in the Bill that I and my party very much welcome. In particular, we welcome the proposed introduction of a new offence of ill-treatment or neglect of a person lacking capacity. As legislators, we should and must seek to protect the most vulnerable in society. We hear, all too often across the United Kingdom, horror stories of people with serious additional needs being abused, whether in care settings or in their own homes. Thankfully, such incidents are rare in Northern Ireland, but given the scale of poor mental health we face as a society, it is essential that we have robust protections in place.

It is important, too, that this Bill provides protections not only for those who lack capacity to make decisions but for those around them, including their loved ones and medical or legal practitioners. Some of the issues in the Bill will, of course, be more challenging than others. For instance, the term, "effective advance decision", used in relation to refusals of medical treatment, will need to be handled with great care. I am aware that the Departments are of the opinion that it is better for courts to determine the rules with regard to advance decisions. However, my fear is that in the meantime this will only lead to a period of uncertainty while awaiting the outcome of the first test case, so I ask the Minister whether it is possible to elaborate, in the code of practice or elsewhere, on how his Department envisages the term will be applied.

Another aspect of the Bill that has already generated quite a bit of debate, especially among organisations engaging with the Ad Hoc Committee, is the proposed exclusion of under-16s. I know that this has been covered by most of the Members who have spoken today. At the moment, I can see why the Department has been keen to exempt young people. I face the same issue with my organ donation Bill, which I hope to introduce to the House very shortly. Whether we are talking about organ donation or legislating for capacity, complexity and sensitivity are always heightened when children are involved. Nevertheless, whilst the Department may have what it thinks to be a valid reason for exempting children from the Bill, I believe that an opportunity has been missed to strengthen the protections.

As has been said, the Mental Health Order 1986, rather than the new system in this Bill, will still apply to children, but the Department has also said that it intends to modify the Order. The proposed changes to the Order should have been brought forward at the same time as the Bill to allow for all the changes to be looked at holistically as well as, importantly, to provide reassurance to those concerned about the safeguards for children.

In conclusion, Mr Speaker, I too will end with the theme of implementation. The Bill proposes a major transformation of our mental health laws: not just reform for reform's sake. It is essential, therefore, that it is properly implemented both in terms of swiftness and resources. I am fully aware of the funding pressures that the Minister is grappling with; they are probably worse than he envisaged when he had the easier job of giving out the funding. However, the historical underfunding of, and underinvestment in, mental health services are still having a major impact on the wider population across Northern Ireland. Improvements have been made, especially from 2007, but given the scale of the problem, I suspect that it will be many more years before we get to the position we need to be in.

The Bill attempts to update a key element of our existing legislative framework. I have my concerns about certain aspects of the Bill, some of which I have mentioned, but for now I am satisfied that the Ad Hoc Committee and the Department will continue to ensure that the final legislation is informed, effective and best meets the needs of the people it ultimately applies to.

Mr McCarthy: On behalf of the Alliance Party and as a member of the Health Committee and Ad Hoc Committee, I warmly welcome the Mental Capacity Bill. I am pleased — in fact delighted — that it has now reached its Second Stage in the Assembly and has been moved today by our Health Minister, Simon Hamilton.

The Bill is a key component of the implementation of the Bamford review on mental health and learning disability. Members will be aware of my special and particular interest in this vital legislation. It will provide a single statutory framework for decision-making and care for physical and mental health conditions. I also welcome the very strong and important collaboration between the Department of Health and the Department of Justice in bringing forward the legislation. It proves that Departments can and do work together.

The introduction of mental health-specific legislation first took place almost a century ago. Since then, people with a mental health difficulty or learning disability have been treated under the law in a fundamentally different way compared with all other health issues such as physical illness. That has been particularly so on issues to do with consent and the withholding of consent. Through the Mental Capacity Bill, Northern Ireland has the opportunity to introduce historic legislation that will be a world leader, and I am so proud to be part of that.

The Bill has brought into one piece of legislation the usual provisions of mental health law and mental capacity law. It is the first time that that fusion approach has been considered anywhere in the world. If and when these proposals find their way onto the statute book, they will replace the current Mental Health Order for those over the age of 16. It will bring an end to discriminatory detention and the overriding of people's refusal of treatment if they retain the capacity to refuse. Those decision-making rights will be on a par with the rights that individuals enjoy at present in common law regarding physical health treatment.

People in Northern Ireland, whether they have mental health difficulties or/and physical health problems, will now have equal rights to make decisions about their treatments. The new legislation will require that, if people have capacity, they can make their own decision about their treatment and that all possible support to make a decision will be provided. Northern Ireland will be the first region in the world to achieve such legislation, and it is hoped that other countries around the world will follow our lead. It is a good news story and shows that together we can produce legislation that can and will be a world leader.

There is a presumption that all persons aged 16 and over have the capacity to make decisions for themselves and, indeed, should be supported to do so. However, if a person lacks capacity and has not put in place alternative decision-making arrangements, important safeguards should be in place for that person before the state can intervene. Decisions can then be made regarding a person's health, welfare and financial issues.

The integrated approach is particularly welcome and significant. The Bamford review recommended that a single Bill should cover mental health and mental capacity issues, as other Members said. A single Bill will provide safeguards for all people who lack capacity at any point in their lives, whether from a physical condition or a mental health condition. That means that there will no longer be any discrimination for those who lose capacity for reasons of a mental health difficulty. That will be in place for all of us and our families so that, when one of us or one of our family members suffers from a lack of capacity at any time in our lives, there will be non-discriminatory legislation in place, no matter what the source is of our lack of capacity. Our approach in Northern Ireland, therefore, stands in contrast to the situation in England and Wales with the Mental Capacity Act 2005, and in Scotland with the Adults with Incapacity (Scotland) Act 2000.

Notwithstanding the efforts and commitment of many people and organisations, stigma and discrimination for people with a mental health problem still persist, unfortunately, in our society. Discrimination against people with a mental health problem is entrenched in existing mental health legislation, with double standards on loss of liberty. Those in the general population have the right to refuse treatment should they wish to do so, but mental health service users do not. The inherent stigma and discrimination in having separate mental health legislation is completely unacceptable. It is unequal. We need to and must provide equality for all.

We are also aware that there is much work to do on this. Society as a whole and government need to take clear responsibility for ending such discrimination. It is incumbent on us all, whether professionals or members of the public, to do everything in our power to eliminate such stigma and discrimination. This makes the introduction of this game-changing Bill all the more imperative. People with a mental health difficulty will no longer be under separate mental health legislation.

There is currently no capacity legislation in Northern Ireland. A golden opportunity has been grasped to ensure that this unique new capacity legislation will be for all in our society. We now have a single piece of legislation for people who have a physical health problem and lose capacity; people with a mental health problem who lose capacity; people with physical and mental health problems who lose capacity; people who are vulnerable; and all, including those in the criminal justice system, who lack capacity. No group in society is excluded from the capacity legislation. Northern Ireland will be the only place in the world where this happens. That is historic indeed.

The Bill is, therefore, for all of us. At any point, any one of us, whether in the Assembly or in the community, could find ourselves lacking the capacity to make decisions on our health, welfare or finances. The Bill provides protection for all of us, and, in particular, it will provide non-discriminatory protection when we are at our most vulnerable. At one stage, it seemed that we, too, in Northern Ireland would revert to having separate Bills, so I am pleased that we are adopting the more innovative and potentially transformative approach instead.

How did this all come about? The very important work involving very many people commenced at the start of the century with the vision of Professor David Bamford and his colleagues. In October 2002, the Health Department initiated a major wide-ranging and independent review of law, policy and provision affecting people with mental health needs or a learning disability in Northern Ireland, which, nowadays, is referred to as the Bamford Review of Mental Health and Learning Disability. I can well recall being at the launch of the Bamford report some time ago and feeling euphoria and excitement. We are now on the journey to implement what Professor Bamford and his colleagues called for. I pay tribute to the vision of Professor Bamford, who, sadly, passed away before his work was completed. His role as chair was taken over by his colleague Professor Roy McClelland OBE, professor of mental health at Queen's University, who, subsequently, chaired the board of experts appointed by the Minister to champion the Department's response to the Bamford proposals. He is also a member of the project board overseeing the development of the new mental capacity legislation. Arguably, no other legislation has come to the Assembly after so much preparation and engagement with experts, service users and other key stakeholders.

Equality lay at the heart of the Bamford review, and its vision was about valuing all who have mental health needs or a learning disability. That included rights to full citizenship, equality of opportunity and self-determination. The Health Department and the Department of Justice have responded to the challenge, and we welcome that. The Bill maintains a high degree of fidelity to the Bamford vision, including the fundamental rights to equality and dignity and in how the officials have conducted their work, particularly their accessibility, inclusivity and openness.

The Bill's ethos is to provide equality in all circumstances and for all aspects of a person's needs — financial, welfare and health, including mental health. The proposed legislation is also principle-based. Those principles are set out at the start and underpin the entire Bill, and the Minister mentioned them in his introduction. The first is that a person is assumed to have capacity unless it is established otherwise. That enshrines in statute what is referred to as the common law presumption of capacity. Nobody should be deemed to lack capacity unless all practical help and support has been given to an individual to make a decision for him- or herself without success. Making an unwise decision does not mean that a person lacks capacity. The second principle is establishing and acting in a person's best interests. The person intervening in someone's life must take into account the person's past and present wishes and feelings, his or her beliefs and values and any other factors likely to influence the person's decision if he or she had capacity. In addition, under the best interests principle, the person making the determination must, in relation to any act or decision that is being considered, have regard to whether the same purpose could be achieved in a way that was less restrictive of the person's rights and freedom of action.

While the legislation will be ground-breaking, we also have to recognise that, in the absence of the legislation, we are falling behind many other jurisdictions. There is a real imperative to ensure the progression of the Bill as quickly as possible and delivering its passage before the conclusion of this mandate. I have every confidence in us all being able to conclude and deliver this important legislation for the benefit of those in our community with mental health problems and learning disabilities.

In implementing the Bill, education in the form of special training and raising public awareness will be essential. Training will need to be provided for health and social care staff, including specialist staff such as capacity assessors.

It will be important for that requirement to be fully supported with the necessary resources and the views of the full range of stakeholders taken on board. That will ensure that the full benefit of the Bill can be achieved. I commend the commitment of all involved in bringing the Bill to this stage. I look forward to progression to the next stage of this important Bill.

Mr Speaker: The Business Committee has arranged to meet immediately after the lunchtime suspension. I have received agreement from the Whips to reduce the lunchtime suspension to one hour. I propose, therefore, by leave of the Assembly to suspend the sitting until 1.30 pm. The first item of business when we return will be the Second Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill. The next speaker will be Mr Alex Easton.

The debate stood suspended.

The sitting was suspended at 12.33 pm.

On resuming (Mr Principal Deputy Speaker [Mr Newton] in the Chair) —

1.30 pm

Mr Easton: I welcome the Second Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill, which is being scrutinised by the joint Ad Hoc Committee made up of Health Committee and Justice Committee members. The Bill has 295 clauses and 13 Parts.

While mental capacity legislation has been introduced in other parts of the UK, mental capacity issues in relation to health and welfare interventions largely continue to be governed by the common law in Northern Ireland. That provides for a presumption of capacity in persons aged 16 and over, a test of incapacity and protection from liability when intervening in somebody's life, providing that it is reasonably believed that the person lacks the capacity to consent to the intervention and it is in his or her best interest. Those rules do not, however, apply to decisions governed by the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, under which there are clear statutory powers to remove and detain people for the assessment and treatment of mental disorders, provided that certain criteria are met, regardless of whether the person has capacity.

A number of factors have been driving the need for legislative changes in this area in Northern Ireland. We are out of step with other parts of the United Kingdom, and there is no mental capacity legislation in Northern Ireland. That was highlighted in the report 'A Comprehensive Legislative Framework', which was published in 2007. That was one of a series of reports that came out of the review commissioned by the Department of Health of the delivery of mental health and learning disability services across Northern Ireland. That review was known as the Bamford review.

The key recommendation in that 2007 report was:

"There should be a single comprehensive legislative framework for the reform of Mental Health legislation and for the introduction of Capacity legislation in Northern Ireland."

The report concluded that that would help to reduce the stigma associated with having separate mental health legislation and would provide an opportunity to enhance protections for persons who lack capacity and are unable to make specific decisions about their health, welfare or finances, including those subject to the criminal justice system. The report also recommended that the new single legislative framework should be based on agreed principles that have regard to the dignity of the person and provide equality in all circumstances in which a person's autonomy might be compromised on health grounds.

The objective of extending a mental capacity approach to healthcare decisions to the criminal justice system is to comply with the recommendations of the Bamford review. The Bamford review recommended a legislative framework that integrated capacity and mental health legislation that was applicable to all in society, including those in the criminal justice system. With that framework in mind, the review made specific recommendations on the various interfaces between the health and criminal justice systems. The Department of Justice therefore chose to draft criminal justice provisions on the basis of those recommendations. That meant the creation of a capacity-based approach to care, treatment and personal welfare for those aged 16 or over who are subject to the criminal justice system. In addition, where possible, the Department of Justice aimed to build a legislative model that did not contain potentially stigmatising references to mental disorder. As part of that last comment, I ask the Minister why the Bill does not include those who are below the age of 16. Does that not complicate the Bill for the future?

Taking account of the interfaces between the mental health and criminal justice systems, the Department of Justice also sought to retain the existing statutory powers available within the system to transfer individuals to the health service for medical treatment. Those powers include police powers to remove persons from a public place to a place of safety; court powers to impose particular healthcare disposals on offenders at remand, sentencing or following a finding of unfitness to plead; and departmental powers to transfer prisoners for inpatient treatment in a hospital. While the Department of Justice wishes to retain those powers, it also sought to create provisions that respect the autonomy of individuals who retain the capacity to make decisions about their medical treatment, while providing safeguards and protections for persons who lack the capacity to make those decisions.

The Department of Justice also considered amendments to the civil law to take account of any introduction of capacity legislation. Those changes include the introduction of a new office of the public guardian, additional powers for the High Court and the restructuring of the mental health review tribunal. A joint public consultation on the draft civil provisions and policy proposals on the criminal justice aspects of the Bill was launched in May 2014. The consultation closed in September 2014, having received 121 formal responses. Five public events were held across Northern Ireland as well as approximately 40 additional meetings or events organised by key stakeholders.

Initially, the Department took the view that the Bamford review's legislation proposals could be delivered through separate mental health and mental capacity legislation but with an overarching set of human rights-based principles. That was largely in line with the approach already taken in many parts of the United Kingdom and, at that time, was considered to be the only realistic way of delivering legislative reform. However, the overwhelming view expressed in the responses to the consultation was that the Department should instead take the time to develop the single comprehensive frameworks envisaged by the Bamford review. Consequently, in September 2009, it was decided that the Department would bring together mental capacity and mental health law in a single Bill in a groundbreaking approach not attempted in any other jurisdiction.

In July 2012, the Department of Justice publicly consulted on the basis of the existing criminal justice provision in the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 and posed a series of questions to determine how the existing legislation could be revised to take account of a capacity-based approach. Following the consultation exercise, the Department of Justice developed a policy proposal on the basis of the responses received. The policy proposals were included in the joint consultation that was launched in May 2014. The criminal justice provisions in the Bill have been drafted in accordance with those proposals, taking into account the responses received in the joint public consultation.

I have a few areas of concern that I hope the Minister will clarify. The first is to do with the independence of the person who makes the decision to appoint an independent advocate and to ensure that they do not experience undue time and resource pressures. I also want to ask for clarification on the safeguards for those who experience mental health issues and come into contact with the PSNI. I want to know whether those who decide the need for the care, treatment or social welfare of such individuals, such as custody sergeants, will be trained for that purpose. Thirdly, I want to know where the money is coming from to implement the Bill. Finally, I ask the Minister to address the concern that I raised earlier about persons under the age of 16.

Mr Poots: I welcome the Bill and commend the Ministers for ensuring that it was brought before the House today. I do not intend to repeat much of what has already been said because that will not be of much benefit to us. However, we all know that the Bill flows from the Bamford review's recommendations. Much of the implementation of the Bamford review has now been carried out, which is to the good. This is a critical and essential part of the Bamford review, and, therefore, as a Government, we have accepted Bamford's recommendations. It is only right and proper that we fulfil those recommendations in completing this work. The Mental Capacity Bill will create greater opportunities for people who have mental capacity issues. It is critical that we show people respect and courtesy and enable them to have a greater say in their own life. That is a key component of the Bill.

One issue that caused me concern, which I raised in Committee yesterday, was the implementation costs. Let us make it clear at the outset that the Bill is about people, not processes. It is not about establishing new all-singing, all-dancing offices; it is about people. We must ensure that we serve the people well and that they get the appropriate and proper support and care. We may be able to do that without going overboard in spending public money and still ensure that we deliver the appropriate resource so that people have the correct opportunities.

I want to place on record something that I would like the two Ministers to address. Whatever we create, we must ensure that it does not become a Civil Service monstrosity that will cost huge amounts of money to implement.

Rather, it must be something that will make a real difference to the lives of people. That should be the main focus of the Mental Capacity Bill. It should make a transformational difference to people's lives; it should not be something that will have lots of staff and civil servants carrying out particular duties. Let us focus on the people who need the service.

Mr McGlone: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome the opportunity to contribute to this very important Second Stage debate on the Mental Capacity Bill. I do so as a member of the Ad Hoc Committee formed to consider the Bill and as a member of the Justice Committee.

The Bamford review of 2007 highlighted the need for change in this area. Mental capacity here is governed largely by common law, which involves an incapacity test and the application of a reasonableness principle. Collectively, that has been referred to as the common law doctrine of necessity. However, it is now clear that that alone is not enough. We have seen that Scotland, Wales and England have all moved to legislate for mental capacity. In that context, I am glad that we have reached the Second Stage of the Bill today, but it is clear that a number of areas require closer scrutiny and clarification before the Bill can become law. I intend to discuss a few of these today, namely the issue of children under the age of 16, issues around powers of attorney, possible jurisdictional considerations and the practicalities of implementing the legislation.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and the Department of Justice have excluded under-16s from the Mental Capacity Bill. The rationale behind that decision is based around the fact that, due to their developmental stage, children under the age of 16 cannot be subjected to the same tests included in the Bill as adults. Instead, it has been suggested that the Mental Health Order 1986 be retained, possibly with an amendment of some sort, as an interim measure to cover mental capacity issues for those under the age of 16, until a new legislative solution can be found, possibly through an adjustment of the Children (NI) Order 1995.

The House must ask itself today whether that is an acceptable state of affairs and whether the Bill as presented is the appropriate vehicle for dealing with capacity issues for those under the age of 16. The Ad Hoc Committee has reflected on the matter. I look forward to hearing more evidence from stakeholders such as the Children's Law Centre and MindWise pointing to the fact that there are further considerations around the issue of under-16s when we look to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, particularly article 2, which concerns non-discrimination; article 3 — the best interests of the child; article 6 — the right to survival and maximum development; article 12 — the right to be heard and have views taken into account; article 23 — the right of a disabled child to a full and decent life; and article 24 — the highest attainable standard of healthcare.

A reasonable argument may be made that the exclusion of those under the age of 16 from the Bill goes against the very ethos of the Bamford review. Instead of safeguarding children in a legislatively binding fashion, we are relying on a 20-year-old piece of legislation that we may have to refine to bring it up date in any case. At the same time, obviously a balance must be achieved, as there are delicate considerations when probing the issue of parental consent and, especially, the vulnerability of the child. In many cases, they are frail and vulnerable, and we are dealing with very sensitive mental health issues and the protection of individuals.

The Committee has touched on and has received briefings on the proposal in the Bill to remove enduring powers of attorney (EPA) and replace them with lasting powers of attorney (LPA). I have spoken to the Law Society of Northern Ireland around the potential merits and detriments of both. For example, the cost of making an LPA, based on figures in England and Wales, can be up to three times the amount of making an EPA: £500 plus VAT, with a further court fee of £110. However, some believe that the introduction of an LPA can provide further safeguards for individuals from fraud than an EPA can do.

The question for the House and the relevant Departments is whether both versions of powers of attorney need to be mutually exclusive. Perhaps a system can be incorporated where choice is available to an individual and either EPA or LPA can be used to best suit the needs of the particular case. I remain to be persuaded one way or the other as to what options may be operable.

1.45 pm

One further consideration that I brought to the attention of the Committee and other stakeholders is based around the law as applied or as it may apply. At the Ad Hoc Committee on Monday — and I see some of the officials here — I raised the issue of how the law on mental capacity may apply and be interpreted in different jurisdictions. It is my understanding, subject to further clarification, that the Bill proposed here may differ slightly to the Mental Capacity Act in England. What considerations have the responsible Departments and others given to the regulations around capacity if a person moves between jurisdictions? The assets may continue to be in different jurisdictions, and how the mental capacity legislation is applied, or otherwise, to access those assets can lead to difficult situations, as quite often others can emerge from the woodwork. Will it negate any prior arrangements that have been made here if, for example, the person moves to another jurisdiction? I look forward to some clarification around that because it is clearly an issue that has to be worked through in the best interests of the individual who may be determined as being incapacitated at that time.

Whilst we are dealing primarily with the principles of the Bill today, we must keep one eye on how each of these principles will be delivered in practice. Compulsory detention, for example, is often essentially a “must do” under very extenuating, difficult and fraught circumstances. Quite often, due to convenience, a person may be detained under the 1986 Order and subsequently brought to a police station. I made it clear, and I make it clear again today, that I find absolutely no fault whatsoever with the authorities on that point. Very often, it is the police who have to deal with the very tricky, delicate and difficult situations of trying to bring in a person who is in a very fraught and fragile mental state and deal with all their sensitivities.

Due to the sensitivities often involved in such cases, I throw out this question: is it reasonable to suggest that a police station is the appropriate place to take a person who is in such a frail and fragile mental state? I am thinking particularly of vulnerable young people. To my mind, it could exacerbate their fragile state of mind if they feel they are being arrested or detained. All the stress that can build up, and goes with that, in a normal situation where a person is in good health can be compounded where the person is in difficult and fraught circumstances and has very fragile mental health.

As a result, it may be instructive to create a code of good practice for the police when carrying out detention orders to ensure the best care of the person concerned; that the best interests of the person suffering from poor mental health can be protected; and that they can be treated through a proper practice that is universal for the police, who find themselves in these difficult situations. The police are doing their job and are trying to protect the individual, but, with the best will in the world, they are not the people best placed to make the call as to that person’s state of mind.

Mr Ross (The Chairperson of the Ad Hoc Joint Committee on the Mental Capacity Bill): I thank the Member for giving way. I know we are at Second Stage and are talking about broad principles, but, on a similar theme, an area that we, as a Committee, identified is that where a person is deemed to lack the capacity to make a decision that may then harm them, and is brought to a place of safety, that person has the right to seek legal advice. However, the assumption is that they will have regained their capacity in order to make that decision. The Committee may feel that it would be valuable for legal advice to be given as a matter of course as opposed to being something that people have to request. It very much relies on the individual having the capacity to take a decision that might be in their best interests.

Mr McGlone: I thank the Chair for that intervention. As I talk, I am trying to get my own head around these matters. Is that person competent to take and accept legal advice? It is an obvious requirement, as is an automatic medical intervention if the person has been determined to be incapacitated.

Often, the difficulties arise when people are not known to police or anyone around and may well not have been reported as being missing from a social services location or, indeed, a mental health hospital. They just pop up, and the police are placed in the invidious and very difficult position of trying to make the call about how to deal with the situation. There should be a code of practice for police officers who find themselves in such situations, as was referred to on Monday at the Ad Hoc Committee. There should be automatic routine practice for police to follow when faced with those situations and when dealing with all the sensitivities that have to be faced at the time.

That brings me on to my next point. At this stage, it is merely a cautionary note, but the principles and associated actions contained in the Bill will no doubt place greater financial burdens on DHSSPS and DOJ, particularly, as I raised the other day, around what is determined to be a place of safety for someone. If we are saying that police stations may not be the best place to which to take people who are frail or vulnerable on the mental health front, should it be determined that that safe place is in a hospital? Some of us might view a hospital as being a safe place, but I do not think that A&E is a safe place to which people who may be very distraught should be brought. They would be being brought somewhere where there are other people suffering from physical disabilities and physical health problems. That might create difficulties for both parties — the individual who is mentally distraught and those who are in A&E awaiting attention and treatment. This is something to be worked out with DOJ and the Department of Health, but I think that the safe place should be a convenient and calming environment in a hospital. Such a place could be made available to individuals for their treatment, to bring them down and to help calm them as much as possible in such circumstances.

At this stage, we do not know how much that might cost, but we can infer from the work carried out by the Committee that there should be, and will be, an additional cost. How much consideration has been given by both Departments to the funding of the implementation of the Mental Capacity Bill? That is important to know if we are to get it right, and get it right in the interests of all parties, particularly those who have fallen into difficult health circumstances at that moment in their life.

From the reduction in the Budget for 2011 onwards and in the current financial context, we have seen that, quite often, plausible initiatives fall by the wayside owing to the necessity to save money and a climate of cuts. A good example of that is Transforming Your Care. We have to look at the issue in the round, because some of the people at whom Transforming Your Care was directed were people who had been in long-term institutional care, particularly in some of our mental health hospitals. Those people may find that they have slipped through the net because of the incapability of the system, through Transforming Your Care, to deliver support for them. They may well be the exact same people who come through the system's revolving door and wind up in difficult circumstances. I am very well aware of a case in which the police were the first port of call and had to deal with the situation until they eventually got the person to the safe place, which was a local hospital. That safe place had been got as a result of the forward thinking and planning of the people associated with the hospital.

I hope that the Department of Health and the Department of Justice are examining their budgets against the contents of the Bill so that, when the time comes, the money and manpower will be available to deliver.

In conclusion, the SDLP is broadly supportive of the Bill and thanks those who initiated it and brought it before us for our consideration. We are broadly supportive of what the legislation seeks to achieve. However, we need to consider some of the issues that I highlighted — I am sure that there is a multiplicity of others — before the Bill's provisions can become operational here.

Mrs Cameron: I appreciate that we are coming up to 2.00 pm, so I will be brief.

I welcome the opportunity, as a member of the Ad Hoc Joint Committee to Consider the Mental Capacity Bill, to speak on the matter today. Following on from the recommendations of the Bamford report, it has been recognised that we in Northern Ireland require reform of our mental health law to include provision recognising an individual's mental capacity. Whilst our current position centres on the individual's best interests, the new legislation will add to the protection given to that person and will no longer rely on the assumption that people with limited or restricted mental capacity cannot take responsibility for major life decisions.

The Bill will bring together mental capacity and law and ensure that an individual's right to make decisions is protected in a way that will ensure that they are primarily kept safe. The provision within the Bill to allow individuals to participate in and contribute to their care process is to be greatly welcomed. The provision recognises the fact that mental capacity in those people experiencing mental health issues is often not a one-off episode but may vary on a day-to-day basis. In providing help and support in making decisions as to how they would like to be cared for during periods of mental distress, people will undoubtedly feel empowered and more in control of their situation. Without doubt, this approach will be less traumatic for those suffering conditions such as schizophrenia and depression. Being in control may assist quicker and longer-term recovery.

I appreciate that, at times, it is necessary to make serious and often life-altering decisions on behalf of people when their mental capacity is diminished. I am pleased that that area has also been given a framework to allow health and social care professionals to make those decisions in order to protect the individual and those making the decisions.

In serious interventions such as major surgery or moving someone to a sheltered dwelling, for example, it is vital that decisions are made in a person-focused manner. The Bill will provide a system of checks and balances to ensure that the thorough steps have been followed to confirm that the level of mental capacity has been firmly and indisputably established. Again, the best interests of the individual in question will be at the heart of any decisions, and their right to make decisions for themselves will be safeguarded.

It would be remiss of me not to acknowledge that there have been some concerns raised in relation to the omission of under-16s from the Bill. In addition, I understand that there is apprehension surrounding the independence and training of those who have responsibility for assessing capacity. I trust that, as we in the Ad Hoc Committee scrutinise the Bill, we will be able to alleviate those concerns and build into the Bill the insertion of further protection for children into the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986.

The Bill contains many legal and medical intricacies, largely due to the fact that we are dealing with the vastly complex issue of mental capacity and how it affects each individual in an often unique way. It must be said that the projected costs of this Bill and its implementation are huge. Both Departments have their work cut out for them in managing those vast costs in our rapidly depleting budgets.

The Mental Capacity Bill will provide greater autonomy, independence and ownership for those with mental health difficulties by giving them the ability to manage their own treatment and all aspects of their daily lives. I support the general principles of the Bill.

The debate stood suspended.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: It is time for questions to the Minister for Regional Development. I ask the House to take its ease while we change the top Table.

2.00 pm

Oral Answers to Questions

Regional Development

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We will start with listed questions.

Noxious Weeds

1. Mr Irwin asked the Minister for Regional Development whether, given the responsibility placed on farmers for the control of noxious weeds on farmland under the Noxious Weeds (Northern Ireland) Order 1977, the current condition of roadside verges will accelerate the spread of noxious weeds to adjoining farmland. (AQO 8392/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): At the outset, I express my gratitude to the Speaker and his office, and to my ministerial colleague Mervyn Storey, the Minister for Social Development, for swapping oral questions today because of personal family circumstances. Thank you very much indeed.

My Department's policy and procedures on weed control are aimed at ensuring the safety of road users, preventing the deterioration of the road pavement and meeting statutory obligations to control noxious weeds so that they do not spread to adjoining farmland. As Members will be aware, however, my Department is facing a very significant £60 million resource budget pressure in 2015-16, more than half of which has fallen to Transport NI. Due to these pressures, my Department is able to provide only a skeleton routine maintenance service at present, at some financial risk to my Department. As a consequence, weed control is one of the areas affected.

Although my internal workforce has limited capacity to carry out chemical weed control, it will endeavour to undertake that type of treatment to ensure that the Department meets its legislative requirement for noxious weeds. It is not the service that my Department wishes to provide, but it is a direct consequence of the current very challenging budgetary position. In June monitoring, I have bid for additional resources to restore routine maintenance activities to normal levels, and I hope that the Member and the House will robustly support my Department's bid.

Mr Irwin: I thank the Minister for his response. Does he accept, given that farmers can be fined under cross-compliance for having noxious weeds on the ground, that it should be a priority for him and his Department to ensure that noxious weeds do not seed and spread over farmers' land?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for his supplementary question. Let me reassure him and, indeed, the entire House that this is not a situation that we want to be in and that every care and consideration will be given to ensuring that there is no impact on farmland or farmers' property. Local section offices work very closely with farmers in an area. We are not aware of any widespread difficulty, but, of course, if there are issues that farmers or landowners wish to discuss with my officials at section office level, they will be very happy to do so. Ultimately, I want to be in a situation in which we can properly fund all these important services.

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Has the Minister done an assessment of the additional cost to the Department as a result of not cutting the grass verges earlier in the season?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member, but there is a fundamental issue with the current budget allocations. There is a blockage, and, as is well known, it is a political blockage. The Member is a member of a party that is central to the blockage in very necessary funds that could assist my Department and other Departments as they confront the very serious financial challenges at this time. As well as asking me to look at the situation, the Member and his party need to look closely again at a situation that is costing the Executive £2 million a week.

Mr Gardiner: Will the Minister outline the Department's approach to Japanese knotweed and other invasive species?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for his question. Members will know that special efforts are required to control giant hogweed and Japanese knotweed by poisoning. In those instances, Transport NI generally treats invasive weeds such as Japanese knotweed found growing on land in its control using chemical treatment.

That is generally done using specialist contractors, following advice from the NIEA, as required.

June Monitoring Round: DRD Bid

2. Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline his Department's bid in the June monitoring round. (AQO 8393/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The outcome of the 2015-16 Budget leaves my Department facing cuts and pressures of some £60 million on its resource budget, which is around 18% of the 2014-15 baseline. Whilst I have worked with my officials to try to absorb some of those pressures internally, the extent to which that is possible, without impacting on public safety and core public services, is limited. Therefore, I have identified eight other resource non-ring-fenced bids totalling £39.8 million and 13 capital bids totalling £141.1 million, which my Department has now submitted to DFP.

The main bids that I have put forward in June monitoring are for essential road and street lighting maintenance activities, including winter service; addressing the shortfall in the funding of NI Water to bring it to the level recommended by the Utility Regulator in its final determination; addressing the continuing pressure on concessionary fares and the delay in implementing the Translink efficiency programme to allow further consultation with the unions in an attempt to minimise the impact on services; and funding to support community and rural transport services.

I have also submitted 13 capital bids, including a bid of £104.4 million to meet the substantial shortfall in the current structural maintenance budget, which stands at over £100 million less than the independently recommended requirement. I have also included a bid of £15 million to address the shortfall in capital funding to NI Water to bring it up to the level of funding recommended by the Utility Regulator in the PC15 final determination.

Mr Hussey: I thank the Minister for his response. Will he give more detail on the Transport NI component of the bid?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member, and, as I indicated in the initial response and the previous response, the brunt is, unfortunately, being borne by Transport NI. Its resource budget has a shortfall of £38.5 million compared with the 2014-15 opening budget and a further shortfall compared with the funding required for an optimum service. As a result, the budget is sufficient to fund only the street lighting and traffic signal energy requirements and associated electrical inspection and testing requirements. I have, therefore, agreed that Transport NI should undertake a skeleton road maintenance at-risk service until the bids can be made in June monitoring. Transport NI has submitted resource bids totalling £23.4 million in the June monitoring round. They include a £14.8 million bid for a skeleton service for street lighting, road maintenance and to fund the winter service for the at-risk period and the remainder of the year. There is a £6.6 million road maintenance minimum requirement for traffic, patching and routine maintenance, including for the operations and maintenance division and its overheads. That is in addition to the skeleton service bid. There is £2 million to cover street lighting, including restoring normal service, for inspection and testing, and for repairs and maintenance to electrical and structural hazards. That is also in addition to the skeleton service bid.

Mr Spratt: Minister, you referred to Northern Ireland Water and capital money for that project. Is it on your mind to provide capital money for the Duncrue Street Northern Ireland Water facility, which is at full capacity at present and in danger of not allowing any more development in the docks area?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for his supplementary. He will know that there are significant pressures on capital schemes in NI Water. As well as the Duncrue one that he mentioned, there is an issue at Sicily Park and other places.

We need to ensure that proper capital and resource funding is made available to NI Water; otherwise we face considerable infrastructure issues that are not in anybody's interest. The Utility Regulator has set out the bare minimum that she wants and expects us to meet in the water and waste water services that we provide, so it is important that we address that. I have done as much as I can within the current financial limits open to me to ensure that that happens. There is still a shortfall. We are bidding, as I have indicated, for capital and resource to address the situation, and it would be very helpful for the Member and his party to support those bids.

Mr Ramsey: I welcome the Minister's response, particularly on street lighting. With regard to your bid for community transport, I think that you would want me to acknowledge the contribution that Disability Action and community transport make to the lives of disabled people and their families across Northern Ireland. Will the Minister ensure that those aspects of Disability Action and disabled people's access are also a bid in this monitoring round?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for his supplementary question. I understand and entirely agree and want to pay tribute to all the providers of community and rural transport services. They fulfil an important task, and the Assembly, the Executive and the Department need to ensure that they are properly and fairly funded. We have sought to do that. There are challenges, and we have made a bid to the June monitoring. However, I am getting smoke signals from the Department of Finance and Personnel, and from around the Executive table, as to whether, first of all, we can agree a Budget, let alone whether there will be any moneys available for June monitoring. Frankly, I am in Old Mother Hubbard land here. We are already providing services at financial risk, and we can see the skeleton service that is available. We are in a dire financial situation, and it is time for parties around the Executive table and parties in the Assembly to face political and financial reality, and that includes your own party.

Ms Sugden: Like Mr Ramsey, I also welcome the Minister's intention to bid for more provision for community and rural transport. In his answer to Mr Ramsey, he alluded to challenges. Will he outline what those challenges are in respect of that group?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for her question. Basically, it is one thing to bid in June monitoring for additional funds; it is another thing to receive them. That is the challenge. There is no guarantee. Simply, a bid does not do it in and of itself; it needs to be followed up. Talk is cheap, but it takes money to buy whiskey.

NI Water: Environmental Obligations

3. Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of NI Water meeting its environmental obligations over the next three years. (AQO 8394/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Northern Ireland Water's environmental compliance has steadily improved over the last seven years. This has led to NI Water achieving the best ever waste water compliance in recent years of 98%, which can be attributed to significant investment in sewerage services and improvements to the management and operation of waste water assets. The number of pollution incidents attributed to NI Water over this period has also declined significantly.

The NI Water business plan for the price control 15 (PC15) period, which runs from 2015 to 2021, sets out the approach for NI Water to continue to improve its compliance and meet environmental obligations over the next six years. This approach is based on the DRD 'Social and Environmental Guidance for Water and Sewerage Services' that I launched in 2014.

NI Water will strive to continue to meet its environmental obligations over the next three years. However, due to the reduced funding allocations received by my Department, I am unable to fully fund the determination made by the Utility Regulator in relation to the levels of investment required in water and sewerage infrastructure for this financial year.

Should the situation continue, it may adversely impact on NI Water's ability to build on its success in improving on its performance. It is clearly an area of concern, and I will continue to bid for additional funding for NI Water through monitoring rounds.

2.15 pm

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Minister for his answer. Will he accept that the start of infraction proceedings regarding the Ballycastle waste water treatment works demonstrates that vital provision in this region is not being provided by his Department and that it has been an abject failure of the Department not to provide that for Ballycastle?

Mr Kennedy: It is very easy for the Member to say that it is an abject failure on the part of the Department. Actually, it is not. I am happy to update him now on the current situation in respect of Ballycastle waste water treatment works. I got a sense from his question that he was hoping for infraction proceedings. I am actively working to make sure that we are not subject to infraction proceedings, and that includes the Ballycastle situation.

Ballycastle waste water treatment works is one of 17 sites throughout the UK that is the subject of infraction proceedings by the European Commission for failing to meet objectives under the urban waste water treatment directive. It is the only one in Northern Ireland. Meeting our European obligations is a key priority in social and environmental guidance, and the Commission expects those obligations to be met in a timely manner. As a result, Ballycastle has been identified as a priority for NI Water. The timescale for completion of the upgrade, subject to satisfactory completion of the procurement and construction processes, would be late 2017. That information has been communicated to DEFRA and the Commission, and, to date, the proposed way forward has satisfied the Commission and no further action has been taken.

Mr Eastwood: I appreciate what the Minister said about Ballycastle, but given the current financial pressures and impending further financial constraints, is the Minister confident that we are not looking at potential infraction proceedings on any other sites across the North?

Mr Kennedy: I thank the Member for his question. It will be incumbent on me to protect NI Water and the Department against any such proceedings, but, again, we are down to the issue of finance. We have to ensure that the infrastructure work that needs to be done on the ground to upgrade water and sewerage facilities is made available so that we can avoid any situation, anywhere in Northern Ireland, in which there is a risk of infraction proceedings. Those things are taken seriously in Europe, and they are taken seriously by DEFRA and the UK, and let me assure you that they are also taken seriously by me and NI Water.

Coleraine to Londonderry Line: Phase 2

4. Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline how he will redistribute funds from within his departmental budget to facilitate phase 2 of the Coleraine to Londonderry track renewal project. (AQO 8395/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My commitment to the Coleraine to Londonderry rail line has always been clear, and I have worked hard to ensure that the line has remained open. The project is a key Programme for Government commitment and is evidence of the Executive's determination to invest in our rail network. It also signals our continuing commitment to invest in the north-west and improve connections and frequency of service between Belfast and Londonderry.

In November 2014, I commissioned an independent review of the project following concerns that the original cost estimate for the scheme was significantly underestimated. The outcome of the review provided me with the assurance to press on with the project. It confirmed that there might be limited interest in the signalling procurement due to the scale of railway investment being carried forward in Great Britain. Translink has now awarded the contract to Babcock, which is a company renowned for its engineering excellence.

The overall cost, at £46 million, is higher than originally envisaged but reflects the market that we are competing in. The profile of expenditure on the Coleraine to Londonderry project is such that there will be no additional budget requirement in this financial year. As you will be aware, budgets beyond 2015-16 have not yet been agreed. I will be prioritising this project in my capital planning for the next budget period to provide cover.

Mr Easton: I thank the Minister for his answer. As he knows, I am fully supportive of what he has done here.

This project is earmarked to happen over two financial years, and he has given a commitment on the funding for the first year. Can he give a commitment that, if the money is there, the funding will continue into the second financial year? There is a possibility that it could slip into a third financial year, so can he give a commitment that those two years will be covered?

Mr Kennedy: I thank the Member for his mild encouragement. I appreciate it. This is a priority not only for my Department and Translink but is an Executive commitment. I am not sure where he got the idea that it might slip into a third financial year. As he will know from previous statements that I have made, the works are due for completion by the end of next year, and I very much anticipate that that target can and will be met.

Obviously, whilst budgets are not set for next year, let alone this year — let us not even go there for this question — it is inconceivable to me that I would receive nothing. I know that sometimes I am Oliver Twist, in that I am always looking more, but to receive nothing would be jolly unfair. My expectation is that we will receive sufficient to ensure that Coleraine/Londonderry phase two is completed and paid for.

Mr Dallat: May I add my congratulations to the Minister? Will he please tell the House that the £6 million additional is a mere drop in the ocean compared with the money that could not be spent on the A5 and was spent on the A8 and A2? Will he promise not to lose any sleep over the additional money that he has invested in our railways?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member. I do not think that the notion of me losing sleep would appeal to any Member; therefore, I am comforted by his remarks. There have been issues in getting phase two under way, but we are now in a better position and are moving forward. We will have the work undertaken, begun and completed hopefully in time and in budget. I think it will benefit hugely the increasing numbers of people who want to use the rail service between not just Coleraine and Londonderry but Belfast and Londonderry. We have seen remarkable and astonishing figures in relation to that — an increase of 12% over the past year — so we are doing the right thing, and we will continue to work at it until it is satisfactorily and fully finished.

Mr Cree: Someone once said that all politics is local. Can the Minister outline bus and rail investment in north Down?

Mr Kennedy: I am very grateful to the Member for his question, lest anybody think it was a plant.

In the past two years, over £240,000 has been directly invested on bus and rail in north Down. This year, some £1.5 million will be invested, including £1.1 million for Bangor park-and-ride. Additionally, this year around £5.6 million will be invested in a number of other projects across the wider bus and rail programmes, which will benefit north Down. I hope the Member draws comfort from that.

York Street Interchange: Budget Impact

5. Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the impact of the budget crisis on future capital projects, including the York Street interchange. (AQO 8396/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has a capital allocation of £328.3 million in 2015. That is some £70 million less than projected expenditure in 2014-15. However, we are still taking forward a substantial capital programme. I am pleased to inform the Member that development work on the York Street interchange is progressing well. This important project will alleviate the existing bottleneck on the strategic road network, which affects the M1/Westlink, M2 and M3. It will reduce congestion, improve the reliability of journey times and improve access to the regional gateways from the eastern seaboard corridor.

A considerable amount of work is required to take the scheme through the public inquiry process, scheduled to start on 10 November 2015, and the necessary budget has been set aside in this financial year to complete this task. The scheme has already received EU funding towards design development. I am hopeful about being successful in attracting further EU funding for construction. I continue to engage with EU officials to secure further funding for this and other important projects.

If there were to be any cuts to my capital budget as a consequence of the current austerity measures, I would, of course, have to review the capital programme, including the Yorkgate interchange. However, any decisions would be informed by the extent of budget reductions and a review of the progress on schemes and capital commitments existing at that time.

Mr Dickson: Minister, thank you for your answer so far, particularly in relation to an actual date for a public inquiry, one at which I will certainly be supporting the project. One key element of the York Street interchange is the opportunity to provide a dualling of the railway track across that section; but it is a once-in-a-lifetime opportunity, as the consultants have advised that it can be done only at the same time as construction of the roadworks. Will the Minister confirm that that is true and that he will use his best endeavours to ensure that the work for the rail track is done at the same time as the roadworks?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for the point that he raises. I understand it entirely, and it appears that, from an engineering point of view, that is the case. Clearly, it would be sensible that two schemes could run parallel to each other. I say to him directly, and not in any aggressive way, that I think the difficulty and challenge will be, clearly, that the financial implications of both in terms of capital are substantial. We will have to look at those issues and other capital projects, which have also been waiting for some considerable time. Members will be quick to raise particular capital projects that are of interest to them. I understand the point he has raised, but I see challenges in bringing forward a track scheme of that nature in the immediate period that we are facing.

Mr G Robison: Can the Minister outline whether budget allocations will affect the Gortcorbies climbing lane project on the Broad Road between Coleraine and Limavady or Limavady and Coleraine?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member, and I join with other Members to congratulate him on being a recent recipient in the honours system. Enjoy the moment.

I am aware of the scheme that the Member speaks of. Indeed, there are a clutch of other similar schemes for improvements that would give considerable benefit to areas and, indeed, communities. It was always my intention that we would somehow create a pocketful of money to carry out schemes of that nature. That might even perhaps be useful to improve the reputation of the Assembly and the Executive for what they are able to deliver, but the financial situations we find ourselves in are very constrained. Whilst that scheme remains active on the books, we are not able to indicate at this stage how quickly it will further develop.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We will now move to topical questions.

2.30 pm

Finaghy Bridge: Improvement Plans

T1. Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister for Regional Development, given his pride for his reputation as a bridge-builder, for an update on any plans to improve the eyesore that is the Finaghy bridge, linking west and south Belfast, which has managed to evade all efforts to improve it over recent years. (AQT 2651/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member, and I accept, even as a backhanded compliment, the reference to me as a bridge-builder. The Member has raised this through correspondence. It is not so much a topical question as a typical question. We will provide an update with the detail as quickly as possible.

Mr Ó Muilleoir: Go raibh maith agat. Mo bhúiochas leis an Aire. Thank you, Minister. As it is some years since we met about it, perhaps we could return to that discussion. We welcome the ambitious plan to put a £3 million bridge over the Lagan at Ormeau, but a £25,000 cosmetic exercise is required at Finaghy bridge, which is more redolent of Belfast in the 1970s or the green zone in Iraq than the great city Belfast is today.

Mr Kennedy: I note the Member's comment, and I recall the meeting. The issue is not so much the structure or soundness of the bridge but its aesthetic value. I wish that I was in a position to worry about the aesthetics of the services I provide, but I will engage with him, and perhaps we can meet to discuss the issue further. Tarring up bridges is not so high a priority as maintaining bridges and ensuring that their structure is sound and remains safe.

A2: Update

T2. Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the A2 between Silverstream Banks and Seapark in Carrickfergus and to state when it might be fully functional. (AQT 2652/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member. I confirm that work is progressing well on the A2 Shore Road scheme at Greenisland. Work on upgrading three and a half kilometres of single to dual carriageway began in March 2013 and is programmed for completion in September of this year. Along the online section of scheme between Jordanstown Road and Station Road, the new carriageway in the Carrickfergus-bound direction has been substantially constructed and a contraflow traffic arrangement is currently in operation. The existing road is now being reconstructed to become the Belfast-bound carriageway. That work is nearing completion, and, later this month, traffic will revert to it while the final surfacing is completed on the Carrickfergus-bound carriageway.

Mr Hilditch: I thank the Minister for the update. It should be acknowledged that the scheme has been managed very well during the two years, with minimal disruption and upset to the vast majority of users. Tribute should be paid to all those involved. Has the scheme come in within budget and have some of the minor issues regarding cyclists and bus lanes been sorted out as well?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for his positive comments on the scheme. Indeed, I want to endorse them and will certainly relay them to my officials, the consultants and the contractors. There will always be ongoing issues in matters of finer detail. Those charged with carrying forward the scheme on the ground hope to continue to resolve such issues as easily and practically as possible. This is a scheme of huge benefit to the east Antrim area and that region, and I look forward to seeing it finalised as quickly as possible.

A5: Draft Orders

T3. Mr Murphy asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he has a confirmed date for the publication of the draft orders for the A5 dual carriageway. (AQT 2653/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for his question and welcome him back to the House, perhaps unadvisedly as a constituency colleague.

I am currently processing the situation around the A5 and the new statutory approvals that need to be issued, and I hope at some stage to update Executive colleagues on that situation.

Mr Murphy: I thank the Minister for his welcome. He will be aware that the project has been delayed, causing great dismay in the north-west region. He has a number of weeks left between now and the summer recess to apprise his Executive colleagues, and then the opportunity for that will pass on until the autumn. Will he have an opportunity or be in a position to bring it to Executive colleagues this side of the summer recess in order to progress the project as quickly as possible?

Mr Kennedy: I am not in a position to confirm that at this stage. We are still working through some of the detail. I could be uncharitable and say that some of the delay issues were caused while he was Minister for Regional Development, but I will not do that. We will continue to see what progress can be made on the A5 scheme.

Copeland and North Woodburn Reservoirs

T4. Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the maintenance work at the Copeland and North Woodburn reservoirs in Carrickfergus, which have been lying empty for most of this year, and to state when the reservoirs will come back into service. (AQT 2654/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for his question. NI Water has advised that there are seven reservoirs in the Carrick area that are being refurbished as part of an ongoing routine maintenance programme over the past 18 to 20 months. Water levels have been lowered in the reservoirs to allow that work to progress. Work on five reservoirs has been completed, and work on the remaining two — Copeland and Lower South Woodburn — is due to be completed by the end of July, after which they will be refilled. Again, the rate of refill will depend on the weather.

Mr Beggs: I thank the Minister for his answer. June is, thankfully, predicted to be a relatively dry and summery month. We do not know what lies beyond that, but can the Minister assure us that there are sufficient stocks of water in the other reservoirs that serve the wider east Antrim area to carry us over the summer?

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for his supplementary question. I can say that the five reservoirs where work has been completed are progressively refilling naturally. Of course, the rate of refilling depends on weather and rainfall. I can be challenged about many things, but providing additional rainfall is probably not one of them. The same principles will therefore apply on the remaining two: Copeland and Lower South Woodburn. We hope that that will deal with the situation.

Grass Cutting: Review

T5. Mr Girvan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there will be a review of the current grass-cutting policy, which allows for one cut only and is causing some concern. (AQT 2655/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am grateful to the Member for his question. He will have heard me consistently say that this is not the service that I want to provide as Minister, nor do I believe that it is the service that people expect, but I have to say that the skeleton service that I have in place, which is at financial risk, even at this point, is the maximum that I can provide without further relief. I appeal to him again to use his considerable political influence within his party and therefore on the Executive to ensure that, either through June monitoring or through other sources, the Department can be properly and fully funded for the important front-line services that it undertakes.

Mr Girvan: I thank the Minister for his answer. I appreciate that it is not additional contractors that are being brought in to undertake that work; it is staff from the Department. Have any been laid off? What duties are being carried out by those who were trained to do such a function?

Mr Kennedy: I say to the Member that this is hugely frustrating for my officials and other staff throughout my Department. I have taken the opportunity to meet front-line service staff in the Armagh area and the Antrim area, close to the Member's constituency, to hear at first hand their frustrations and about the impact on morale. These are highly dedicated and professional staff who want to carry out and provide the best possible service, and the maximum service, when it comes to grass cutting, gully emptying, street lighting and road defects. It is hugely frustrating for them to find themselves in this situation.

There have not been any lay-offs at this point. That will obviously be an absolute last resort, but, in the absence of affording proper materials for them to do their job, it does rather put staff in a very difficult and challenging position. They have to deal with the frustrations that are being expressed by the general public. Indeed, I think that all constituency offices and advice centres, including my offices in Markethill and Tandragee, are subject to people raising legitimate concerns and complaints about the lack of road maintenance and associated work. I hope that that message can trickle down not only to the Assembly but to the Executive to get them to move on, unblock the financial issues and move forward in such a way that we can properly fund front-line services.

Community Transport Networks: Funding Assessment

T6. Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline how the community transport networks were assessed for the funding that they receive for the services that they provide. (AQT 2656/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I thank the Member. She has been assiduous in trying to raise concerns on the issue.

I have to say that, in view of the severe budget outcome — I have outlined this in the recent past — I was forced to reduce funding in that area by some £2 million. I believe that, through continued efficiencies and use of all the financial resources available to them, providers should be able to minimise the impact on service users. I have bid for additional funding in the June monitoring round to mitigate further the impact on services. Those decisions were not easy or soft options in any way. We have sought to mitigate their impact as much as possible. We will continue to work with the groups that provide those important services to see whether we can further alleviate the impact.

Ms Sugden: My understanding is that some networks have had the impact mitigated more than others, to the point where those that run a very efficient service have been told to tap into their reserves. Is it appropriate, or even its business, for the Department to look into those networks' finances and reserves? After all, a group may have a 10-year-old whiskey, but the Department should not necessarily pressure it to drink it, particularly if there is not another bottle coming any time soon.

Mr Kennedy: I think that the Member's reference is a veiled one to the comment that I made earlier about it taking money to buy whiskey. It does indeed. At this stage, even watered whiskey would be a help. That might be of some benefit.

My Department's officials will continue to work with the groups and transport providers out there to try to manage the situation and offset some of the impacts that we are already aware of to front-line services. The important thing is that it is ultimately about the customer. People will debate whether it is proper for reserves to be used in such situations. Will their use reduce any negative impact that there is on people who use the service? If the answer to that is yes, and I believe that it is, we have got to stretch ourselves to do that.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Time is up.

2.45 pm

Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: We will start with listed questions.

Farm Animals: Abandonment

1. Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline her Department's role in tracing the owners of abandoned farm animals. (AQO 8419/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. If farm animals are properly identified, their keepers can normally be identified from data held on the Department's customer and animal information databases. The Department will share that information according to DARD's privacy notice and in line with data protection legislation. The Department assists the PSNI to trace the owners of farm animals found abandoned on a public highway. If abandoned animals are not properly identified, it is often impossible to establish who is responsible for them.

Mr Moutray: I thank the Minister for her answer, but I am going to press her. Who is responsible for abandoned horses on private land when animal welfare is not the issue?

Mrs O'Neill: For horses, councils and animal enforcement officers are clearly in the lead in being able to go out to try to identify the owners. The Department will work, not only for horses but for all animals, with the PSNI or councils, depending on the circumstances. However, councils have principal responsibility for horses.

Mr Sheehan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Just to expand on that point, will the Minister tell us the legal position on abandoning animals?

Mrs O'Neill: It is illegal for cattle, sheep or pigs to be sold or moved off a farm unless they are properly identified. If the identity of bovine animals cannot be established within 48 hours, the Department will seize and destroy them without delay under the provisions of the cattle identification regulations. My Department does not have the power to detain or destroy unidentified pigs or sheep, but it does have the power to prohibit their movement.

Mrs McKevitt: Are there links with or a role for the likes of the USPCA to make the protection of abandoned animals and the identification of owners more fluent?

Mrs O'Neill: I am not sure whether there is a role for the USPCA in that instance. Certainly, there is a role for partners to work together to be able to identify owners and hold people to account, particularly in cases of animal cruelty or abandonment.

As I said, councils are strongly in the lead for horses. For farmed animals, that is obviously the Department's role. The PSNI takes control on criminality and other aspects. There is always a grey area, particularly in areas where there are high numbers of horses. However, councils are in the lead, in conjunction with the PSNI, to try to identify owners.

When it comes to farmed animals, the Department will use whatever systems it has, within the limits of data protection, to try to identify owners and work with all stakeholders.

Mrs Overend: Will the Minister give an assessment of the scale of the problem of abandoned horses across Northern Ireland and provide an update on the consideration being given in her Department of the redefinition of a horse from a domestic to a farm animal, which would greatly enhance the welfare of abandoned horses?

Mrs O'Neill: I know that the Member has a keen interest in horses and has tabled a Bill on the definition of a horse. I have had numerous conversations with the equine industry on whether we should change the designation. I was not convinced of the merits of doing so at that time, but I am always open to considering it further if there ever was a change or new arguments put forward for consideration. At this time, I am not convinced of the need to change the definition.

Problems with horses are a council issue, and councils take the lead, so it would be better if they gave you an assessment of particular problems. Some areas have more of a problem than others. It is not coming to or being tabled with me as a key area of concern, but I have dealt with the issue in my constituency on numerous occasions and understand that it is frustrating for people who constantly encounter abandoned horses on the roads and the car accidents that can result from horses being wild on the roads.

It is important that we are clear about who is responsible for what, which is what we try to do. I encourage people with concerns about horses to talk to their council animal enforcement officers.

Lamb Labelling

2. Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline any discussions she has had with other Governments to find a solution to the current problems in relation to lamb labelling. (AQO 8420/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I have been concerned about the impact of the new EU country of origin labelling rules on the trade of sheep reared in the North and slaughtered in the South. I am doing everything in my power to support solutions to the current situation and to head off any potential problems for other products.

I have been in regular contact with Minister Coveney in the South and his Department on labelling issues that have an effect right across the island to seek a resolution to the specific issues in the sheep sector. My officials had a constructive meeting with Department of Agriculture, Food and Marine officials recently and met EU Commission officials in Brussels on the matter, as well as DEFRA and Food Standards Agency officials here in the North.

I also discussed the impact of country of origin labelling with Commissioner Hogan during his recent visit. I have written to the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs and to the EU Commission to outline the unique circumstances of agrifood businesses on this island, and I am making the case for greater flexibility in labelling our local products. Elizabeth Truss, Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, replied positively to my letter, and I am pleased that she offered her support in finding a solution to the problem. I still await a reply from the EU Commissioner.

Ahead of today's meeting of the Agriculture and Fisheries Council in Luxembourg, at which labelling is likely to be raised during any other business, I have contacted my English, Scottish and Welsh counterparts to reiterate my view that we need flexibilities for farmers in the North. I remain fully committed to finding a solution to labelling difficulties that works for everyone, and I will continue to press for flexibility for our local products.

Mr McAleer: Go raibh maith agat. I thank the Minister for her answer. Will she outline what impact country of origin labelling has had on any other sectors?

Mrs O'Neill: Since it came into play last year, we have had the so-called nomadic cattle and the issues that they caused with the labelling of meat. The beef trade was quite significantly affected in 2014. The voluntary term "Irish" could be used to label beef derived from cattle born in the South and imported into the North for direct slaughter or for finishing and slaughter.

I am aware of the recent Commission report on the feasibility of extending country of origin labelling to other products, including milk. I understand that reports have concluded that the cost of extending mandatory country of origin labelling to additional food products, including milk and milk products, would outweigh the benefits to consumers, but that voluntary labelling should be allowed. Given the negative effect on beef and lamb, I would not support a further extension of country of origin labelling to other products such as milk. The potential exists for a very damaging effect on our milk industry, as we currently send about 23% of our milk to the Twenty-six Counties for processing. I will continue to press for maximum flexibility on labelling for our products because this will have an impact on all other sectors, not just the beef and lamb that have been affected to date.

Mr Swann: Minister, there is a perception among farmers that processors are taking advantage of the issue to lower prices for lambs across the border. Can she do anything to allay those suspicions? Has she met processors to discuss and raise those concerns?

Mrs O'Neill: There will always be concerns from farmers, particularly about the volatility of pricing in the market and the controls used by processors and the retailers who buy their products. That is an ongoing concern of mine, and I have raised it with the Agri-Food Strategy Board. I want to work on that and produce initiatives over the next number of months, particularly in relation to the whole supply chain and how we can work together. When the Agri-Food Strategy Board was established, I sent a strong signal and message to it about the need for fairness in the supply chain, and for clear and full communication with the industry, from the farmer right through to when a product is placed on a supermarket shelf. Unless we have that, we will damage our agrifood sector and, potentially, cause future problems for the industry. It is a priority and an issue that I continually raise with the Agri-Food Strategy Board, NIMEA and the other processor organisations when I meet them.

Lamb prices have dropped significantly, and there are the other impacts of market forces such as supply and demand or even the euro rate. All have compounded the problem. Moving forward, we need to remove any barriers at an EU level, such as the country of origin labelling. If we have voluntary labelling, processors cannot use that as a stick to beat farmers.

Mr Irwin: I welcome the fact that the Minister has made efforts to resolve the labelling saga. Does she feel that we are any nearer to a resolution?

Mrs O'Neill: As far as approaching Europe is concerned, there is provision for a voluntary label. I have made all the right approaches. We had positive feedback from DEFRA in England, and I very much welcome that. I raised it with George Eustice, Minister of State for Farming, Food and the Marine Environment, when I spoke to him last night. We have ongoing discussions with Minister Coveney in the South because we need agreement from the three parties to take the voluntary label forward. We are making significant progress, and the sooner we get to that point, the better.

It is only one of a number of issues that affect the industry, but we need to remove any trade barriers or obstacles. There is traditional trade across the island, whether in lamb, beef or other sectors including, obviously, milk, with nearly a quarter of all the milk that we produce going to the Twenty-six counties for processing. Anything that places barriers in the way of that all-island trade or restricts our market opportunities has to be taken very seriously, and I assure you that I take it very seriously.

Local Action Groups: Funding

3. Mr Girvan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether there will be any additional allocation of funds for local action group boards. (AQO 8421/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. Regarding the 2007-2014 rural development programme, there are no additional funds to distribute as, I am pleased to announce, we have achieved a 100% project spend at a programme level for LEADER. I take the opportunity to thank all those involved in achieving this great result. It is a first for any LEADER programme in the North, and, considering that it was done against the backdrop of an economic downturn, it is an even bigger achievement. This investment has so far resulted in 839 full-time equivalent jobs being created in rural areas at a time when they are sorely needed.

Regarding the new LEADER element of the 2014-20 rural development programme, I announced on 22 October 2014 what each of the new local action group (LAG) areas was being allocated. That has not changed; indeed, I have maintained these allocations despite the difficult financial climate in which we find ourselves. No additional funds are available for allocation.

Mr Girvan: I thank the Minister for her answer. Were any calculations made for areas of deprivation in the criteria for the new programme?

Mrs O'Neill: Absolutely, 100%. The rural development programme is the only show in town for rural communities. When it came to allocating funding across each LAG area, I was mindful of the need to tackle deprivation, as it is a focus for my Department and me. We looked at categories such as rural population, levels of deprivation, income deprivation and employment deprivation. We used a range of comparators to make sure that funds were distributed on a fair and equitable basis. I am content that that is what I have achieved.

Mr McMullan: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I thank the Minister for her answers so far.

When does she anticipate the call for applications will open?

Mrs O'Neill: Our programme is with Europe at the moment. We have had very positive feedback, and we are tidying up some of the elements. We hope by the end of this month or very early in July to have formal approval from the European Commission. The animation process was launched at the Balmoral show and will continue over the summer. We are actively working with groups, organisations and businesses that may have ideas and want to consider bidding into the show. Given the timescale that we expect to achieve for formal sign-off by the Commission, I would want to open official calls for full applications in September this year.

Ms Sugden: Will it be in the Department's power to decide what guidelines it will set to ensure that the appropriate people receive the right money?

Mrs O'Neill: One of the beauties of the LEADER programme is that it is a bottom-up approach. Local elected representatives along with community representatives decide how funding should be distributed, but it is benchmarked against criteria. It is all very open and transparent, and all applications are scored by way of a scoring mechanism. We have been working up all that detail, but it will be consistent right across the board. All LAGs will use the same criteria, but each LAG will have the opportunity to look at priorities in its area. One of the advantages that we have is that councils are pulling together their new community plans. The LAGs will also pull together their rural development plans, and those two things will dovetail, so we are in a good position. While the criteria and benchmarking will be the same across the board, each area may have a different focus on how it decides to distribute funding through each measure.

Mr Elliott: Was the appointment process for the new boards under the new programme subject to section 75 assessments?

Mrs O'Neill: When the appointment process was taken forward it was very important to me that we got a good spread across the board. The process was taken forward in conjunction with the rural community networks, which did all the work on the ground, animating, working with groups and encouraging people to apply. We have a fairer balance because the previous make-up of the LAGs was not sufficient and there were not enough women or young people. We have addressed that imbalance, but we still have a way to go. The calls were made, and all the members who came forward were able to vote for the people who were appointed. We have a better make-up this time round, but there are still improvements to be made.

3.00 pm

DARD HQ: Relocation Update

4. Mr Cree asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the proposed relocation of her departmental headquarters. (AQO 8422/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The relocation programme involves four different moves, with fisheries division relocating to south Down, Forest Service to Fermanagh, Rivers Agency to Cookstown and the rest of my Department headquarters to Ballykelly. I am delighted to be able to report that the first of those relocations has taken place: the headquarters of my fisheries division was relocated to the Downshire Civic Centre in Downpatrick last Monday, 8 June. That represents a major milestone in the relocation programme.

In respect of the move to Ballykelly, another key milestone was reached recently when my officials submitted a planning application for the new building to the Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council on 30 April. It is hoped that planning approval will be granted by August — in a few months' time. Work is well under way at the other two relocation projects, with Forest Service expected to be in Inishkeen House in Fermanagh by the end of September and Rivers Agency in its new accommodation at Loughry by mid-2016.

Mr Cree: I thank the Minister for her response. Given that she is pushing ahead without a genuine business case and despite the concerns of several senior officials in her Department and DFP, she is clearly not worried about value for money, but can she give us an update on cost at this point in time?

Mrs O'Neill: The costs are as I have previously outlined: we are talking about £30·8 million in capital and £14·3 million in resource. As for concerns from officials in either DFP or my Department, I assure you that my Department and all my officials are working to my policy objective, which I have set out. The programme board has been working consistently over the last number of years. We are working closely with staff to make sure that we make the transition as easy as possible. There is an outline business case in place; that is all done. The Executive have signed off on the process and the move to relocate. I am happy to rehearse all the arguments around the benefits to rural areas, the economic knock-on effect of the footfall for rural areas, the construction jobs that the build will create and the fairer distribution of public-sector jobs. That is what this is about. I am certainly very committed to taking it forward, and I assure you that my officials are tasked with doing that also.

Mr G Robinson: Has the transfer of all the staff to the proposed new site been completed?

Mrs O'Neill: I assume that the Member means the transfer of fisheries division.

Mr G Robinson: Yes.

Mrs O'Neill: Yes. The fisheries move happened last Monday, 8 June. All the staff have moved out. Obviously, there may be a few teething problems while everything gets smoothed out, but the office is open and the staff, in the main, are there. I am sure that it will take a couple of weeks for everything to bed in.

Mr Dallat: I support the decentralisation of public-service jobs to Ballykelly. I hope that other Departments do likewise and contribute to the decongesting of our motorways. Does the Minister agree that, irrespective of its previous use, it is one of the most idyllic and beautiful spots in County Derry, overlooking Lough Foyle and Inishowen? Does the Minister agree that there should be a master plan for the remainder of the site so that best use is made of the 900 acres, rather than flogging it off to the highest bidder?

Mrs O'Neill: I certainly agree that it is a beautiful site. I look forward to the Department headquarters being completed there. The site should sell itself; it is a fantastic location. OFMDFM surveys show that, because we have become the anchor tenant, there is significant interest in the site. The strategy for taking that forward will come down to that Department. It is keen to make sure that we maximise the benefit for the Executive and, in turn, public services and the Departments, and that will ensure that we deliver for the people who elect us. I do not have a crystal ball to foresee what businesses or types of industry will want to move to the site, but, nonetheless, there is significant interest, which is very positive in itself.

Cattle: Missing/Stolen in Upper Bann

5. Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many cattle have been reported as either missing or stolen in Upper Bann since 2011. (AQO 8423/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Under the Cattle Identification Regulations 2012, keepers must report cattle that are lost or stolen in writing to DARD within seven days of the event being noticed. Information on stolen animals or animals reported missing is kept on the Department's database: the animal and public health information system (APHIS). APHIS does not differentiate between missing, lost or stolen animals.

Those two categories are recorded collectively on APHIS, and that information is not kept by constituency. The majority of the Upper Bann constituency is in the Armagh divisional veterinary office (DVO) area. The number of cattle reported missing or stolen in the Armagh DVO area was 497 in 2010-11; 342 in 2011-12; 389 in 2012-13; 629 in 2013-14; and 666 in 2014-15. That totals just over 2,500 over the last five years. The PSNI actively investigates reports of stolen cattle. I encourage any keeper who suspects that an animal has been stolen to report it to the PSNI as soon as possible so that a full investigation can be carried out.

Mr Gardiner: I thank the Minister thus far. Can the Minister give her assessment of the problem of the illegal meat trade in Northern Ireland? In particular, what is she doing to clamp down on it in border areas, where the problem is especially rife?

Mrs O'Neill: Obviously, I condemn any criminality, particularly in the meat trade, given the implications that are felt by the wider agrifood industry if people are involved in that type of criminality. It has a knock-on effect, particularly on consumer confidence, even though all the products that go through our system are fully traceable, they are wholesome and we can stand over them when instances such as food fraud occur. This is something that affects the industry.

However, food fraud is a problem right across Europe. It is an issue that we seriously need to tackle. It is an issue that is given a lot of priority at European Commission level and one that I have given priority to. I will continue to work with the PSNI in particular, as well as with our environmental health officers, our people who work in the abattoirs and our veterinary enforcement team. I think that everybody has a role to play to make sure that we drive out what is essentially a criminal problem that needs to be dealt with because of the impact it has on the rest of the trade.

Ms D Kelly: Have you had any correspondence with Minister Coveney in the light of the suspected BSE breakout over the border in Louth?

Mrs O'Neill: Yes. I have spoken to him on the phone, and my officials are regularly engaged on any updates. There was an identification of a classic BSE case in County Louth last Thursday. It was identified through the ongoing surveillance systems that are in place, so it showed that those systems and practices are actually working. The animal was not presented for slaughter, so there was no opportunity for it to enter the food chain. Confirmatory tests are being undertaken, and we have been advised that it will take up to a week to get the results.

The one message that I want to be clear on and to give an assurance on is that our beef remains a quality product and safe to eat. The Department of Agriculture, Food and the Marine (DAFM) in the Twenty-six Counties and my Department are liaising daily, and more than once a day on this particular issue. We will hopefully have confirmed results this week that I hope will point to the fact that it is an isolated case.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: I call Mr Declan Boylan. [Laughter.]

Mr Boylan: Go raibh maith agat, a Phríomh-LeasCheann Comhairle. Could I ask the Minister what —

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: My apologies, Mr Boylan.

Mr Boylan: — action her Department has taken to try to reduce the number of stolen cattle?

Mrs O'Neill: That was a great merging of two individual MLAs.

My Department has been involved in a number of joint initiatives with the PSNI, including the Farmwatch scheme and the Crimestoppers campaign. The central enforcement team of the veterinary service works closely with the PSNI in conducting joint inspections and investigations. The DARD veterinary service enforcement branch (VSEB) is involved in ongoing training of PSNI officers on animal identification requirements and the associated documentation that is required when livestock are being moved.

Our VSEB has also attended on-farm workshops organised by the PSNI to discuss those issues and what officers should look out for at roadside checkpoints. The PSNI reports cases of stolen livestock to DARD, and descriptions of stolen livestock are immediately passed to veterinary staff in meat plants right across the island. The veterinary service central enforcement team works closely with the special investigations unit in the Department of Agriculture, Food and the Marine, sharing intelligence and conducting joint investigations. APHIS is available live in all markets and abattoirs. If an animal has been reported missing or stolen and subsequently appears on these premises, it cannot be processed for sale or slaughter without a DARD investigation.

Agrifood Research: Strangford

6. Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what specific research projects, planned over the next five years, are designed to benefit the agrifood industry in the Strangford constituency. (AQO 8424/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I remain committed to supporting local research and recognise its importance to the agrifood sector's plans for growth. Although the benefits of research projects funded by DARD are designed to improve sustainability of the agrifood sector across the North, I will give particular focus to those that are benefiting the agrifood industry specifically in your constituency.

DARD funds research through postgraduate studentships, the industry-led research challenge fund (RCF) and the DARD-directed AFBI research programme. DARD is currently funding 26 studentships directly relating to DARD's priority evidence and innovation needs and providing high-level training to underpin the science base here. Currently, two of those studentships are being conducted in aquacultural research in the Strangford area, with a further two PhDs to commence in the autumn. Three of those studentships are based jointly at Queen's University's marine laboratory, Portaferry and AFBI.

DARD's research challenge fund encourages collaboration between rural enterprises and the research community. Recently, a three-year project to improve the breeding efficiency of suckler cows was commenced on farms across the North, including beef farms in the Strangford constituency. It is anticipated that a further tranche of the RCF will be launched later in 2015.

Through the DARD-directed AFBI R&D programme, work is being undertaken to provide estimates of overall carrying capacity for the diverse pot fisheries in Strangford lough and to determine the susceptibility of the seabed to pot fisheries. AFBI has been successful in obtaining funding under Horizon 2020 for a programme on water quality for aquaculture systems and, under the European fisheries fund, for work on the sustainable management of lobster fisheries.

Finally, the DARD-directed AFBI R&D programme is funding a range of projects underpinning competitiveness, animal health and welfare and sustainable environment across the land-based agrifood sectors in the North. New research programmes are in the final stages of commissioning and will commence later in the year.

Mr McNarry: I thank the Minister for her comprehensive response. I was not expecting that when I asked the question. In further benefiting Strangford and all farmers, does the Minister welcome the rejection of proposed EU caps on methane emissions and consider that to be a huge relief for the farmers and, not least, the livestock?

Mrs O'Neill: It is an issue of ongoing discussion. I have a scheduled meeting with my officials, and we will also talk to the Ulster Farmers' Union (UFU) around what it means for the local industry.

Mr Poots: Does the Minister accept that it is very difficult to have specific research projects to assist the agriculture industry when research is continually cut? Will she agree to look once again at the research sector and follow what they are doing in Scotland and the Republic of Ireland and identify greater levels of resource to ensure that there is qualitative agriculture research?

Mrs O'Neill: I think it is fair to say that we have a significant body of research ongoing. That could be seen in the answer I gave to the substantive question. We have a significant portfolio with AFBI, which was, I think, £40 million last year. I am currently working with AFBI around research priorities and R&D potential, and looking at R&D and innovation and at what opportunities we have to attract additional funding from the EU in particular. Since my recent visit to China, the Chinese agriculture and science institute is very keen to work with us around potential research projects. So, I think we need to look towards what other opportunities there are for us.

To be clear, my officials and I have been working with AFBI around identifying the priority industry needs and the path forward. Recently, I had sight of its strategy for up to 2020. We are working our way through that with AFBI. I understand and think that there is some misinformation out there in relation to AFBI and the challenges, particularly in relation to budget. I understand that a figure of 26% has been quoted as representing the extent of cuts to AFBI. That is not the case. On a like-for-like basis, when you use the same methodology that is employed by my Department and across the public sector, the reduction to AFBI's budget is, in fact, 11.5%. That compares favourably with what I have tried to find, internally, in DARD, which is just over 15%. So, when you set that against AFBI's overall cost base, the reduction equates to only 7.5%.

Are there challenges? Yes. Do we need to prioritise the work we are doing in research, development and innovations? Yes. I will continue to work with AFBI around its priorities and the areas towards which we will be able to look for other funding opportunities for research, development and innovation.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: That ends the period for listed questions. We move now to topical questions.

Ballykelly: Transport Infrastructure

T1. Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether she has had any discussions with the Minister for Regional Development about the transport infrastructure to and from the Ballykelly site earmarked for her Department's relocation. (AQT 2671/11-15)

3.15 pm

Mrs O'Neill: Yes, it is an issue that a party colleague raised with me, particularly in relation to a possible railway halt. I am very keen to see that happen. I think that it would help to open up the entire site, particularly if we have other companies and industries moving onto the site. I have discussed it with the Regional Development Minister. He has highlighted challenges. However, we have an ongoing conversation about whether there is any scope or potential opportunities for us to be able to secure that method of transport, which, I think, would be very beneficial to the site.

Mr Middleton: I thank the Minister for her answer and welcome the fact that there have been discussions in relation to a stop there. The Minister will be aware that there is quite significant traffic on the roads between Londonderry and the Ballykelly site. Will she outline how far those discussions have progressed? Will she continue to press the Regional Development Minister on funding that type of proposal?

Mrs O'Neill: I will continue to have such conversations. We have had a number of conversations at ministerial level and also at official level. My project team, which is working very hard to deliver the project in Ballykelly, has obviously factored in, to all the considerations, the transport issues, the access road and all those things. We are working our way through that. We are on target to be on site, as I have previously set out. We do not perceive any problems in relation to that, but, obviously, transport issues, and making sure that the site is accessible to the staff who decide to go there, is a key consideration.

Red Meat Export Markets: Maximised Potential

T2. Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of how successful she has been in maximising the potential of red meat export markets. (AQT 2672/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Since taking up office, I have very clearly said that this Department is an economic Department, and that is why I worked with the Enterprise Minister to establish the Agri-Food Strategy Board, which has now come up very clearly with a vision; a strategy for the industry, up to 2020, for all sectors, whether beef, lamb, milk, poultry or any other. In particular, we have worked very hard with our colleagues in the DAFM and DEFRA on opening up market opportunities. We had some success with beef in South Africa towards the end of last year. I have recently returned from China, where we had another very successful round of engagements, and we hope to have very positive feedback as that market, hopefully, opens up over the next number of weeks.

There is an ongoing collective effort at Executive level, with the Enterprise Minister and me, for the agrifood industry, going out, taking on and working with whatever Administration it may be to open up new markets. So, yes, we have had success, particularly in relation to beef. The strategy clearly sets out that we have so many more opportunities that we need to consider. We look towards New Zealand, America and Asian countries. The scope is massive, and it is there for us to embrace, but we need fairness in the supply chain, and we need to assist the industry to grow, if we are to be able to do all that.

Mr Nesbitt: With regard to red meat specifically, does the Minister accept that the export figures confirm that, under her watch, the Republic of Ireland has been allowed to pull well ahead in developing new export markets and, ultimately, that is to the detriment and disadvantage of local producers?

Mrs O'Neill: There is a whole load of different reasons as to why some markets would open up for the Twenty-six Counties but not for us. Disease status is one reason, and there is quite a range of other issues. However, we have a very strong trade working group, both at official level and between myself and Minister Coveney, trying to work together to open up market opportunities. Obviously, I have to work with DEFRA in England on securing access to markets, but I think that I have been very productive.

The Member might like quick wins, but, in opening up new markets, these things do not happen overnight. That is particularly so in relation to the Chinese market. I have just returned from my third trip to China. That is what you have to do to build relationships with these people to achieve market access. So, we have very clear, ambitious plans, and I think that we will see all that come to fruition over the next number of months as we start to see more and more markets open up for us.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Mr Campbell is not in his place.

Rural Payments Agency: Contingency Plans

T4. Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the discussions she has had with the Rural Payments Agency and the contingency plans her Department is drawing up in light of a possible budgetary crisis, given that she will be aware of her colleague the Finance Minister's comments about single farm payments and the possibility of having to use the Rural Payments Agency to make those payments. (AQT 2674/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I have not had any discussions with the paying agency, because I am confident that I can make the payments.

Mr McCallister: I should declare an interest as a recipient of single farm payment. Surely the Minister must know the very difficult financial situation that farmers face. Our dairy sector is in real crisis at the moment; there are problems with beef; sheep are in difficulties; grain is in difficulties. Many farmers will be in financial desperation and in need of the single farm payment. Surely it is incumbent on her to have a contingency plan to make sure that single farm payments are paid on time to every farmer this year.

Mrs O'Neill: I do not think it is helpful to scaremonger. I am not suggesting that the Member is scaremongering, but farmers have a difficult enough time without being dragged into the middle of politics and what is, in my opinion, a nonsense statement that you could not make the single farm payment. Year on year, we have made progress on reaching our targets of getting more people paid in December. I want to build on that again this year, even though we have come through all the challenges that we have in relation to CAP reform.

It is a nonsense to say that single farm payments will not be paid, and it is not helpful to the farming industry to start scaremongering. As I said, I am not suggesting that is what you are doing, but whenever we have these conversations in public, the farmers will start to get frightened about what it means for them come December. The payment comes from Europe. We make an application to Europe, saying what applications have come forward and the amount that we need to pay. That money is paid directly to DARD and it then goes out to farmers. There is no ambiguity: it is very clear that the payments will be made, regardless of whether I am in office or not.

Fishing Industry Task Force: Progress

T5. Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline what progress has been made in the six months since the fishing industry task force reported at the end of last year and to state whether she is satisfied with that progress. (AQT 2675/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Yes. Out of the interim report that we received in December, all of the recommendations have been acted on. That in itself is very positive, and we have also started to look at inshore fisheries. It has been a very useful piece of work, and we need to have an ongoing discussion with the fishing industry about their needs, what they feel the Department needs to do and how we can exploit the opportunities that are there through the European maritime and fisheries fund (EMFF). The task force's work has been really helpful, but I want to continue the conversation, even though we have delivered on some of the key asks that the fishing industry has put forward.

Mr McCarthy: I thank the Minister for her response, but I refer to recommendation 11, where it talks about fishing opportunities and future negotiations. We are shortly coming to the annual Brussels saga. Can the Minister give us any encouragement that reports that come back will be more progressive this year than in previous years?

Mrs O'Neill: I think that we have done well in previous years. We have done well to stave off some of the ridiculous cuts that have been proposed by the Commission in terms of quotas. We are not at the stage yet where we start to build our case, because we go out to Brussels in December. Come October, we will take a look to see what the scientists at the International Council for the Exploration of the Sea (ICES) have said. We will then talk to the industry and identify our priorities. I decide the priority in conjunction with the industry and, as with every other year, we will go out fighting the corner for the local industry, particularly in relation to quota, which is the key decision at the December Fisheries Council.

Glenariff Forest Park: Mobile Phone Mast

T6. Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what assistance her Department has given to maintain the mobile phone mast at Glenariff forest park. (AQT 2676/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I thank the Member for raising that issue with me. The current leaseholder, Arqiva, formally notified Forest Service on 22 April last year that it intended to terminate the lease for the site at Glenariff from 31 October. Since receiving that, Forest Service wrote to the current mobile service provider, Everything Everywhere (EE), inviting it to meet to discuss any proposals to continue the service beyond October 2015. That would involve EE entering into the new legal arrangements directly with Forest Service for the lease of the site. The meeting took place on 4 June, and EE confirmed its interest to continue mobile service provision beyond the end of October.

Both parties agreed to work towards a new legal arrangement under which EE could lease the site directly from Forest Service. Ultimately, it will for EE to determine the commercial viability of doing so, but discussions were very positive, and Forest Service is up for working in conjunction with EE and coming to a new service provision agreement.

Mr McMullan: I thank the Minister for that. Can Forest Service provide any further assistance for the community in that area in the time ahead?

Mrs O'Neill: Yes. In relation to the mobile phone mast, Forest Service has agreed to forward a draft lease to EE as soon as that is available from the Departmental Solicitor's Office (DSO) so that it can consider it together with the valuation information to enable it to complete its business case consideration. We will hopefully be able to come to a resolution of the issue very shortly. In the area generally, Forest Service has been working carefully with the local community, and some very successful projects have been taken forward under the tourism initiative to which Forest Service contributed. We have had the repairs done at Glenariff and a new camping site. There is an ongoing body of work being done by Forest Service and the local community.

Mr Principal Deputy Speaker: Time is up. Members will take their ease while we change the Table.

Rural Crime

T7. Mr Ross asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what work she is engaged in to tackle rural crime and whether she is working with the rural community, given that she may be aware that the Justice Committee recently held a business crime event at which the Federation of Small Businesses in particular mentioned rural crime. (AQT 2677/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: We work in partnership with the PSNI, which is in the lead when it comes to tackling crime. The Department gets involved in issues that relate to the welfare or identification of animals. For me, tackling rural crime has to be taken forward through a partnership approach. I regularly engage with the Minister of Justice and with the Chief Constable on the PSNI's priorities for tackling crime and issues of concern in different areas. That is an ongoing, joined-up approach, and we have seen very positive improvements in the working relationship across all the agencies involved in tackling crime.

Mr Ross: The Minister will be aware that the perception in the rural community is that the situation is getting worse. I appreciate the Minister saying that the relationship is good, and that is something that can be worked on. Does she believe that the existing structures for communication between rural communities and their local police force and, indeed, at a higher level are adequate to address the issue? Could any improvements be made to increase confidence in rural communities that the issue is being taken seriously by the police?

Mrs O'Neill: We are straying into the realm of policing issues, which are not directly my responsibility. There is obviously room for improvement. All districts will have community police on the ground. In some areas, there will be strong relationships but, in others, maybe not so much. Those are issues to be taken up with the local policing partnerships. At ministerial level, the Chief Constable and I regularly communicate on key issues of interest at the time and key issues for rural communities. As I said, we have enhanced and improved communication across all the agencies involved, but the PSNI is ultimately in the lead on rural crime.

Fish Stocks: Lough Neagh

T8. Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to advise how her Department manages the fish stocks in Lough Neagh, particularly pollan and Lough Neagh eel, whether an estimation exists of the numbers and whether there has been a decline in recent years. (AQT 2678/11-15)

Mrs D Kelly: I am pleased to say that I was able to ensure that reducing rural crime was a target in the policing plan.

Mrs O'Neill: That issue is dealt with by DCAL; it is not within DARD's remit. However, with the change in Departments next year, that remit will come to DARD. That will be beneficial for the entire industry, in that fishing will be dealt with in one Department and environmental issues will be dealt with in one Department. The lough will be able to avail itself of the benefits.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Dallat] in the Chair)

Mental Capacity Bill: Second Stage

Debate resumed on motion:

That the Second Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill [NIA 49/11-16] be agreed. — [Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety).]

Mr McCallister: I have only a few brief comments about the Bill. I welcome the Bill, despite the time that it has taken to develop it. It has been a long time in getting to this stage: during the 2007-2011 Assembly mandate, I served on the Health Committee, and we took evidence back then. At one stage, it looked like there would be two Bills, and we have narrowed that down to one Bill. However, it is a huge piece of legislation with a lot of ramifications. Compared with other areas of the UK, this is slightly different with regard to mental capacity legislation, and we are in a stronger position than the rest of the UK with the creation of a single comprehensive framework for reforming mental health legislation and capacity legislation.

I recognise Members' comments today about the need to reform the legislation, but we should not lose sight of the fact that this is the power of devolution and the benefits of the Assembly. If the Assembly were to collapse or were not here, we would not be doing this. This much-needed legislation would go, and that is worth looking at. When we see the development of legislation like this, we see the very best of the Assembly in scrutinising and progressing it through its stages. We look at the impasses and the politics that make this place work. We need to be sure that we can deliver this legislation, because huge numbers of people are affected and are depending on it. I welcome the fact that the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety is working so closely with the Department of Justice.

One core aspect of the Bill is to promote the ability and to support people with mental health and mental capacity issues to make decisions for themselves, and that is extremely welcome. Another core aspect explores the role of the state when it considers that individuals do not have the mental capacity to advocate for themselves and the role of the state in acting in the best interests of those people.

While I do not want to go into the detail of the Bill today, the core focus of our scrutiny should be to ensure that the right legal framework is in place to ensure that decision-makers acting on behalf of the state and, subsequently, in the best interests of individuals have the ability and training and are accountable for making decisions on behalf of other people and in their interests.

The Bill talks of safeguarding. I suggest that Members be cognisant of recent incidents, primarily in health services, in which vulnerable people who perhaps do not have mental capacity issues have been abused by those who work for and on behalf of the state. To some, this may seem slightly outside the scope and tone of the debate, but, in my mind, it is crucial to it. We are exploring the role that the state will have in helping people to come to decisions that are in their best interests and, in some cases, making decisions for them.

We should be very mindful that the state is taking on a huge responsibility — at times, maybe rightly so. However, we have to be aware that, in many instances in the past, in this jurisdiction, in other parts of the UK and in the Republic of Ireland, the old adage, “The road to hell is paved with good intentions”, applied. The state took on more responsibilities but did not have the ability or accountability to manage them. So, in my mind, the training, ethics and scrutiny to which the state subjects itself are crucial to delivering what is genuinely in the best interests of vulnerable people.

I encourage members of the Ad Hoc Joint Committee to ensure that the clauses relating to the ability to have a case referred to a tribunal result in a process. That is not overly onerous or debilitating for individuals or their advocates, but the principles of ability, expertise and accountability must run through the Bill, from the police to court judges.

I remind the House that the role of overseeing and reviewing the implementation of the Bill at a later stage may well fall to us or to a successor Assembly, so we all have to be very mindful of that. It would probably have been preferable for this huge legislation to be introduced earlier. However, I think that the single-Bill approach, with an Ad Hoc Joint Committee, which has members of the Health and Justice Committees, looking at this very closely and being mindful of the huge responsibility that the state has the potential to take on, is the right way to progress.

Mr McGlone aired the under-16s issue. The Ad Hoc Joint Committee, the Justice Committee, the Health Committee and the Departments of Health and Justice might want to look at that to see whether there are any other solutions or whether we will be dependent on legislation that is now almost 30 years old. Is that as relevant today as it was in 1986, for example, or are there alternatives and perhaps better options more relevant to the age that we live in today?

I am more than happy to support the very broad principles of the Bill, but we must be ever mindful of the huge responsibilities that the state will take on should it progress and become law. Where are the checks and balances on that power when it comes to monitoring the police and making decisions about capacity? It is incumbent on us all to make sure that we get that balance right.

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): It is pretty clear from today's debate — the array of Members who spoke and the very considered contributions made from all corners of the House — that the Bill is, as I outlined in my earlier contribution, far-reaching and has the potential to touch upon the lives of a great number of people in Northern Ireland.

If I have sensed the tone of Members' contributions accurately, they would agree that it is critical that we get this legislation right. A lot of points were raised expressing concerns about clarity, not least by Mr McCallister, who made the last contribution in the debate. There is a need for further clarity and the hollowing out of some issues; that is why we have the process that we have in this House. I hope that the Bill passes its Second Stage, and I look forward to the Ad Hoc Committee getting its teeth into it and having those debates.

I welcome Members' contributions today and thank them for them. I also thank those on the Ad Hoc Committee in advance for the taxing and time-consuming work that they will do on the Bill when it enters its Committee Stage. I will attempt to turn to as many of the issues that were raised in the debate as possible. To be fair, many of them were raised by a selection of Members, so forgive me if I ascribe points to a particular Member because many were raised by virtually everybody who spoke. I appreciate that, in my response, I may not be able to pick up on some of the issues that were raised, but I will endeavour to write to any Member who raised points that I do not get an opportunity to respond to.

Mr Ross spoke in his capacity as Chair of the Ad Hoc Committee, and he and many other Members welcomed the fact that this was an innovative, ground-breaking piece of legislation. Mr McCallister was right in his opening comments to remark that this would not have been done in any other way and that the fact that no other legislature has attempted this means that it is bold. He is right that if we had still been under direct rule, we would have had some of the changes that would have gone through in the Mental Capacity Act, on which there is agreement that it does not go far enough and certainly does not do what we are attempting to do in the Bill.

Mr Ross is right to talk about how good it is to be innovative, and I want to see, across our health and social care system, us being increasingly embracing of innovation. If we are to meet the demands on our health and social care sector, we need to be continually innovative and build on the successes that we have had in the past, but being innovative, as Mr Ross pointed out, brings with it challenges. It is, as he described, "a complex test", because it is a fundamental change. He used that great line from 'Yes, Prime Minister' about it being "very courageous". I always preferred the episodes where Hacker got the better of Sir Humphrey, even though they were few and far between.

I understand the points that Mr Ross was making on behalf of the Committee. It is bold and, perhaps, courageous to do what we are doing. To be the first anywhere in the world to do something sometimes poses the question: "If nobody else has done it, why are we doing it?", but somebody has to try things first. That in itself is not a justification, but what is a justification for doing what we are doing is that the status quo — to do nothing and have no mental capacity legislation for adults in Northern Ireland — was not an option. We had to do something.

Our legislation needs to be changed to address some long-standing court judgements that have not looked favourably on the system that we have in Northern Ireland. It is right that we proceed along these lines; in doing so we are being innovative, which is something to welcome.

He mentioned the "tardiness" in bringing such a huge piece of legislation forward. He pointed out that there are 295 clauses and that it is the biggest Bill ever to come before the House. To do so late on in a term — a point that I will revisit later in response to other Members' comments — is perhaps not best practice and I think that is a fair point. All I can say is that I signed off on an Executive paper on this to go to colleagues on 12 May, which happened to be the second day I was in office, so I was certainly quick to get things progressing.

It has perhaps taken longer than we would have hoped. A lot of effort has been made by a series of officials and others down through the years, and there has been engagement with people outside the system too. If I can offer an explanation, it is a novel approach, there have been extensive consultations down through the years and there have been extensive engagements with stakeholders that, I believe, have served to improve the legislation that is before us. That probably shows that it was worthwhile perhaps to take a little more time.

3.45 pm

I take the point, having been a Chair of a Committee towards the end of the last mandate and having seen a raft of legislation coming forward. I am now looking at the Chair of my scrutiny Committee opposite, and she will know that there is a significant amount of legislation coming through from our Department. It seems to be an unfortunate habit that all Departments get into in this place, but there is still time to scrutinise it, even though it is extensive legislation. Of course, as the Member would expect, I have every faith in the Chair to steward the Committee in the work that it will do over the coming months.

Mr Ross raised, as many Members did, an issue around the cost of implementation of the legislation if and when it passes. From dealing with the many budget challenges that I face as Minister of Health, I understand the concerns that others have, and I welcome their concern about anything that would have significant cost pressures on what is already an under-pressure budget. Mr Ross quoted figures of a year 1 implementation cost of around £70 million to £118 million and, thereafter, ongoing costs ranging from £64 million to £92 million. It is probably worth putting it on the record that those are estimates of costs as opposed to definitive costs, and, as you would expect, there is a pushing back, if I can use that phrase, on the trusts, which have provided many of those figures, to ensure that those figures and estimates of costs are as robust as possible. I expect that, in pushing back, that sees a significant reduction in the cost of implementing the legislation.

It is perhaps a most opportune time for the Minister of Finance to walk into the Chamber, when we are talking about costs. To paint a slightly negative scenario, if, for example, I am not successful in the comprehensive spending review in getting the requisite funds to implement the legislation, there is always the option under the legislation to phase or delay commencement of various stages. There may be some elements that we want to bring forward early to ensure that we adhere to certain international standards, but there may be others that are obviously desirable and things that we want to do that we may, because of cost implications, have to delay or phase the introduction of. I would be open to doing that in circumstances where we were not successful in securing appropriate resources through a comprehensive spending review and subsequent Budgets.

Mr Ross and other Members, including Mr McGlone, raised the issue of lasting power of attorney and the change away from the current situation. He made the point that this may be costly and that, because it is costly, it may put people off getting a lasting power of attorney. I can understand the point that is made. I think that it is accepted and acknowledged that there is a difference between what is proposed through lasting powers of attorney versus enduring powers of attorney and that lasting powers of attorney cover care, treatment and personal welfare as well as property and affairs. Mr Ross and others floated the idea of perhaps having two systems. I am keen to look at what implications there might be and what confusion having two systems might lead to. I am certainly happy to look at the issue in the context of the Committee's scrutiny of it, what evidence it receives and whether there are perhaps other options that we can consider.

Mr Ross and virtually everybody who spoke raised the issue of a perceived gap in protections for those who are under 16. If I may, I will take some time on this point, because it was the issue that was most talked about and that most exercised Members in their contributions. It is worth beginning by pointing out that there is and will remain legislation in place in the Mental Health Order and the Children Order, but there is no provision for adults who lack mental capacity. There is already a difference between the systems for adults and children.

The Children Order has special protections and reflects the important role that parents play in decision-making relating to their children, which you would expect to be the case. The Mental Health Order has further protections for children who need compulsory assessment or treatment. The Bill would amend and enhance those protections. For example, the new best-interests principle will be a primary consideration, and the views of the child will be taken into account. There will also be an amendment to have an independent advocate to support children who are admitted to hospital voluntarily or under the Mental Health Order, as well as a new duty to provide age-appropriate accommodation. Whilst I understand the points that Members made, it is not a matter of us doing nothing for children; there will be amendments proposed and changes made that will enhance the protection of and care for children.

Rosaleen McCorley asked why we were not doing a review of the Children's Order and having a separate project on children. I understand the point and why she was making it. The response I would offer is as much practical as anything else: there are simply no available resources and arguably no time to undertake such a wide-ranging project at this moment. Unlike what we have done with the Mental Capacity Bill, I suppose, I also understand that there is no consensus across stakeholders or government about what changes are actually required, so I do not believe that it would be simple or straightforward work to undertake anyway. Even if we had the resources to do it, it is possible that there would be no definitive or clear outcome on where we would head from that point. We need to be mindful of those points before we undertake such serious work. Even though the Bill does not propose to do what Members think it should, it is not the case that safeguarding children is any less a priority than it was before. The fact that we are seeking to amend the Children Order and the Mental Health Order by putting in other duties shows that the issue is taken very seriously by the Department.

I do not like to be perceived as warning Committees about what work they should do, but there is perhaps a need for caution. I heard some Members talk about wanting to address the issue by tabling amendments at Committee Stage. It is, of course, the right of the Committee to do so if it can agree to it. As I said, I look forward to that scrutiny, which I anticipate will enhance the Bill, but, in the context of the lack of a considered and shared view, I caution the Committee about seeking to be too radical. There is always a risk. There is a reason why there is that old saying about legislating in haste and repenting at leisure. I caution against going too hard, too far and too fast by making significant changes to issues that affect children and perhaps not getting it right at this time. It may be better to take a bit more time to get it right in the longer term, even though that might frustrate some people.

Mr McKinney raised the need to support older people in making decisions. A key principle underscoring the Bill is giving people all the practical help and support we can to enable them to make their own decisions. That includes providing information about the decision and explaining the options in good time and in the right environment. Whilst I understand the points that Mr McKinney raised, it is worth pointing out that our Bill goes much further in that area than the English Mental Capacity Act.

Mr McKinney also raised funding of the Bamford action plan. Of the 76 actions in the action plan, which covers the period from 2012 to 2015, all but a dozen are well on track, and the remaining actions will be completed, albeit with some delay. Funding is always an issue in health, as I am starting to learn and discover very quickly, but, in my view, there has been strong implementation of the plan. An evaluation of the plan and its outcomes is under way, and it has been extended for a year to allow for that.

Finally on Mr McKinney's points, he asked about training — I think Mr Easton also asked about training issues — in the health and social care sector, the cost of training and cost savings. Approximately £27 million in year 1 — that is at the higher end of the estimated costs for the health sector — is assigned to training people across the health and social care system. Early work is under way in developing that. Current thinking is that training will be delivered on what would be a stepped or layered basis, so, for example, everyone in the health and social care system, whether they be porters or receptionists, would receive general awareness training. Going up a level, staff in acute wards would receive intermediate training, and social workers, consultant psychiatrists or psychologists would receive very detailed training. There is obviously, therefore, a need to deliver training of one degree or another to 65,000-plus people across HSC and to do so with no disruption in service. That will clearly present some challenges.

Mrs Dobson, speaking on behalf of the Ulster Unionist Party, excoriated me for prevarication and asked why the Bill had taken so long to get to where it is. I will just caution her that arguing about prevarication and delay in bringing the Bill forward will elicit the question in response of who the Health Minister was between 2007 and 2010, when, of course, key decisions were taken that resulted in delay. Many would argue, me included, that it was positive delay, but decisions were taken around the 2009-2010 period to fuse mental capacity and mental health legislation into a single Bill. That obviously added to complexity in the Bill and to time.

I am glad that Mrs Dobson has arrived in the Chamber to hear further points. She also made an interesting point, following on somewhat from Mr Ross's point, about the introduction of far-reaching, significant legislation late on in an Assembly mandate. Those are comments that, particularly for her, are worth reflecting on. Mrs Dobson also raised an issue around the code of practice. There will be a general code that will cover main principles. An early draft of that is under way, as I said. We are also looking at developing some settings-based codes as well as a general code, for example for acute staff and domiciliary care staff, and will pick out the more salient points for those workers from the general code of practice.

On the issue of advance decisions, which the Member raised, the Bill makes it clear that decision-makers cannot give a person treatment if it conflicts with a valid advance decision made by that person. If they do so, they will not have legal cover under the Bill. I can assure the Member and, indeed, the whole House that the code of practice will elaborate on what is a valid advance decision.

I have already addressed some of the points that Mr Easton raised, but he also asked a very pertinent question around how we could ensure that independent advocates were actually independent. The requirement for the advocate to be independent from the decision-maker is in the Bill. It is also reflected in the departmental guidance issued to trusts in 2012 on the commissioning of advocacy services in health and social care. Further guidance will be provided in the code of practice and in regulations.

Mr McGlone raised some concerns he has with differences in the Mental Capacity Act in GB and what would happen with people moving between jurisdictions. On the broader point about differences between the legislation that is in place and active in England and our proposed legislation, I understand that the Committee has requested a comparison of the two, and that will obviously be provided in due course. On the particular issue of lasting powers of attorney and people moving to other jurisdictions, I think it is a pertinent and relevant issue that Mr McGlone has raised. I am happy to work with the Committee during its scrutiny to tease out how that might be addressed.

I will move to conclude now. I appreciate, as I said, that there may be some points that Members have raised that I have not touched on directly. I will endeavour to correspond with anybody who has raised points that I have not addressed, but I think that most of the broad themes that characterised most Members' contributions have been touched on. The debate has been a valuable opportunity for me to hear at first hand the views of Members on what is novel and incredibly important legislation.

The Bill sums up what I want to see happening right across the health and social care sector, which is reform, transformation and innovation. It represents a once-in-a-generation opportunity to reform this important area of law. It is about transforming how decisions are made when people are unable to make them for themselves in respect of their care, treatment or money. It has the potential to put us ahead of many other jurisdictions across the world by adopting an innovative approach.

It is clear that the interest that the Bill has generated outside the Chamber has been reflected in the debate today. I would like to wish the Committee well as it begins its crucial scrutiny of the Bill.

4.00 pm

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Second Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill [NIA 49/11-16] be agreed.

Budget (No. 2) Bill: First Stage

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel):

I beg to introduce the Budget (No. 2) Bill [NIA 53/11-16], which is a Bill to authorise the issue out of the Consolidated Fund of certain sums for the service of the year ending 31 March 2016; to appropriate those sums for specified purposes; to authorise the Department of Finance and Personnel to borrow on the credit of the appropriated sums; to authorise the use for the public service of certain resources (including accruing resources) for the year ending 31 March 2016; and to repeal certain spent provisions.

Bill passed First Stage and ordered to be printed.

Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill: Second Stage

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): I beg to move

That the Second Stage of the Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill [NIA 50/11-16] be agreed.

I welcome the opportunity today to speak about my proposals for changes to the current arrangements relating to certain aspects of the regulation of lawyers, in particular how complaints against lawyers are handled and overseen. The Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill will set out a new statutory framework for complaints handling and will introduce strengthened oversight of that framework. It is the culmination of work that commenced with an independent review of regulation of the legal profession and brings, in my view, a proportionate change in this area, which will benefit consumers and be helpful to users of legal services.

Before I look at the provisions of the Bill, I want to say something about how we have arrived at this stage today. The Bill has at its genesis, as I have noted, a report that was published back in late 2006 by the legal services review group, which was chaired by Professor Sir George Bain. The Bain report, as it is sometimes referred to, was commissioned by the then direct rule Government as a follow-up to work that was being carried out in England and Wales and which ultimately led to the Legal Services Act 2007 in that jurisdiction.

Professor Bain and his team spent almost a year examining the various facets of regulation of the legal profession. The report produced a total of 42 recommendations relating to complaints, regulation and competition. The Bill implements much of that report and its recommendations, with a particular focus on what Bain described as its principal proposals, that being reform of the complaints handling system.

The Bain report found that the existing complaints handling system for lawyers, whilst operating reasonably effectively, would benefit from measured reform; what the group described as a “copper-bottoming” of procedures. Its key recommendation in regard to complaints was that the emphasis should be switched from professionals — solicitors and barristers — judging their own members to a system of lay-majority participation with lay chairpersons being able to deal with complaints.

In this regard, Bain considered how best to achieve this end result. The review team had at its disposal the option to take the complaints handling function entirely away from the relevant professional bodies and place it into the hands of a fully independent complaints handling body. This had happened elsewhere, most notably in England and Wales as a result of the Legal Services Act 2007 and also in Scotland, which now has the Scottish Legal Complaints Commission.

Bain considered this option carefully in the context of a number of factors that the team met during its work on the review. First, it noted that Northern Ireland is a separate jurisdiction with a legal profession that is set up in a different way to others. It found that the professional bodies, namely the Law Society and the Bar Council, had a relatively good record in relation to regulation, and there was not the same regulatory maze that had been identified in other jurisdictions.

Secondly, it observed that the number of complaints against lawyers here was relatively small; figures back then showed 200 to 300 complaints per year on average against solicitors, and far fewer against barristers. It concluded, and I direct Members to the review group’s report, that a fully independent complaints handling body would not be a proportionate recommendation in need or cost.

Alternatively, it proposed that the functions should remain with the professional bodies but subject to significant changes. As I mentioned, complaints are currently heard by committees chaired by a lawyer and with a significant majority of lawyers as members. Bain recommended lay chairs and lay majorities, and that complaints committees be functionally separate from the professional body. In addition, it recommended that the powers available to that lay-led committee should be enhanced, including the power, which currently does not exist, to award compensation.

Underpinning that main set of recommendations was an enhanced level of oversight. Current arrangements are restricted to the office of the Lay Observer for Northern Ireland. The Lay Observer has a fairly narrow remit and can examine only how complaints against solicitors are handled by the Law Society. The Lay Observer has no remit in relation to the Bar. Bain recommended that the oversight be beefed up, and suggested the creation of the post of Legal Services Oversight Commissioner. It proposed that the majority of their influence relate to the complaints handling system, with, amongst other things, the power to set targets and plans for the professional bodies, to monitor action against those plans, and to have robust powers where the professional bodies were not meeting those targets and plans.

Bain also recommended that the Legal Services Oversight Commissioner should have a consultative role in relation to other aspects of regulation — rule-making by the professional bodies in matters such as education, training and competition — and be able to examine other such areas if asked to do so by Government.

Those recommendations represent the cornerstone of the Bill. I place on record my appreciation of Professor Bain and his team for all that work. It has taken some time for the proposals to reach the Floor of the Assembly, for various reasons. In acknowledging the significant passage of time, last year, my Department consulted once again on the proposals in the draft Bill in order to establish that what they were proposing was as relevant today. That exercise cemented the Bain work, with a clear message coming from the consultation that the Bain recommendations were still valid eight years on.

The Bill has 55 clauses, five schedules and three Parts. The House will be relieved that I do not intend to provide a narrative on each and every clause and schedule, but there are a number of points that I would like to draw the attention of Members to.

Part 1, which encompasses clauses 1 to 10, deals with the proposed Legal Services Oversight Commissioner. Clause 1 states that the office holder will be appointed by my Department after consultation with the Lord Chief Justice, and is underpinned by the contents of schedule 1. In broad terms, the Commissioner will be a layperson and subject to terms and conditions consistent with other appointments of this nature.

Clause 2 sets out the office holder's key powers, which, as I mentioned, are based on proposals by the Bain group. Those powers will provide a proportionate and effective level of oversight of how complaints against lawyers are handled. While the Legal Services Oversight Commissioner will be able to apply a monetary penalty on a professional body that fails to fulfil its obligations, I expect that professional bodies will recognise their additional responsibilities in relation to complaints and work closely with the Legal Services Oversight Commissioner, and that that penalty will be a tool of last resort.

Clauses 3 and 4 relate to the expanded role of the Commissioner in relation to other aspects of legal regulation. Complaints handling forms but one part of that process, and there are many other things that a professional body does in making rules and regulations to govern its members. Those include education, entry to the profession, professional development and training. It is important that there should be a degree of transparency for those functions as well. These clauses seek to provide that.

Clauses 5 and 6 deal with how the office of the Legal Services Oversight Commissioner will be financed. I am of the view that the public purse should not be used to pay for the new arrangements. In keeping with other jurisdictions, I recommend that the office be funded by a levy on the professional bodies. How that will be determined will, in part, be a matter for the professional bodies, working with the Department and the commissioner. Subsequent regulations will add more detail.

I also ask Members to note that clause 9 will abolish the office of the Lay Observer. The commissioner will have much deeper powers than that office, and I very much want to record my gratitude to the incumbent of that office, Mr Alasdair MacLaughlin, and his predecessors for the work that they have engaged in. They have all been engaged in worthy work, at a minimal cost, and with access to very modest resources, over a lengthy period.

I turn now to Parts 2 and 3 of the Bill. They are broadly the same, setting out new complaints procedures for barristers at Part 2 and solicitors at Part 3. Why the barristers come first, I am not quite sure, but anyway. It was obviously drafted before I came into office. Parts 2 and 3 are supported by the provisions in schedules 2 and 3.

There are a number of key points to note. For barristers, the Bar Council currently has the main role when it comes to complaints. It will still have a role to play. Clause 11 states that it must make provision for all barristers to participate in procedures for resolving complaints, but the maintenance of the formal Bar complaints committee will vest in another arm of the professional body, the Benchers of the Inn of Court.

Regulation of barristers is quite a complex arrangement, and I do not propose to go into a lot of detail about that. All barristers are members of the Inn of Court of Northern Ireland, and their representative body is the Bar Council. Bain considered that, for the process to be functionally separate from the representative role of the profession, the Benchers of the Inn of Court, which has no representative function, should have responsibility for the formal complaints-handling role. That is catered for in clause 12 and schedule 2.

The provisions are broadly the same for solicitors.

Schedule 3 notes that no members of the council of the Law Society may serve on a complaints committee. Again, the purpose is to maintain functional separation from the representative body.

The complaints committee to be set up for barristers by the Benchers and for solicitors by the Law Society must contain, in keeping with Bain, a lay chair and a lay majority. The relevant schedules ensure that that will indeed occur. That was a central plank of the Bain proposals, and I believe it is right and proper that the emphasis move from professional-led complaints committees to lay-led complaints committees.

A number of clauses on the scheme for barristers and that for solicitors relate to the jurisdiction of the relevant complaints committee and how it should be used. I draw Members' attention to the following points. First, I believe that the strength of the new arrangements will be to place a greater emphasis on good client-care relationships. The system has, as its focus, the person who goes into his solicitor's office, or has an interface with a barrister, and does not receive the level of service expected. The Bill will allow that person the chance to remedy that in a measured manner. Clause 14, for barristers, and clause 32, for solicitors, emphasise that the first step in that process should be for the lawyer and the client to try to resolve the problem informally.

All solicitors are now required to have an informal complaints procedure that is designed to resolve matters early. Clause 32 underpins that, whilst recognising that there will be times when it will not always be appropriate to use such a process. Only when that process does not work, or is inappropriate, will the solicitors complaints committee be required. Clause 14, for barristers, together with clause 11, will ensure that the Bar Council has a process in place for complaints to be considered before they are elevated to the Bar complaints committee.

Clauses 17 and 36 will place the procedures and methods of working of the relevant complaints committees with the lay-led committees themselves. So the lay majority committee will be in charge of issues such as the investigation, determination and consideration of complaints and can make appropriate rules for the range of relevant matters relating to the complaints-handling process.

4.15 pm

Clause 19, for barristers, and clause 38, for solicitors, set out a broader range of powers that relate to the determination of complaints. One of the points raised by Bain during its work was the lack of appropriate redress for complainants. These clauses set out, in statutory terms, the range of options that the complaints committee will have about complaints, and they vary in effect and scope. Sometimes, for example, complainants are simply looking for an acknowledgement that something has gone wrong and that it is not their fault. A simple apology may suffice — a point that was welcomed by, amongst others, the Lay Observer in his response to the consultations — but, at other times, it is appropriate for the level of response to be stronger. One of the weaknesses of the existing system is the inability for compensation to be paid in appropriate cases. So, as well as including provisions that will allow complaints committees to determine fees that should be payable, the Bill provides that the committees may be able to award compensation.

Bain considered that there should be two aspects to this. First, when a complainant has suffered inconvenience or distress due to the poor service of his or her lawyer, Bain considered that it was reasonable for compensation to be paid. The complainant may have suffered loss, and it is right that he or she should be compensated. Secondly, Bain recommended that, when loss was suffered by a complainant due to the negligence of the lawyer, it would be appropriate for a complaints committee to award compensation when the loss was of a relatively modest nature. This would provide a quicker and more cost-effective method of redress, obviating the need for a complainant to take his or her lawyer to court for negligence.

The Bill provides for the relevant complaints committees to pay compensation in these cases. Bain had initially recommended that the level of compensation should be restricted to £3,500. That point was raised during the recent consultation, and it led to different views. In England and Wales, for example, the limit in the scheme is £50,000. However, I am concerned that the initial rationale presented by Bain of providing a simple, quick and user-friendly scheme for complainants could be compromised by complaints committees having such levels of compensation at their disposal. Insurance companies would have to be involved, and that would, to my mind, defeat the purpose of the recommendations.

With the figure of £3,500, I have borne in mind the lapse of time since Bain, and I am persuaded that a figure of £5,000 strikes the correct balance. In particular, with this amount being below the excess of the solicitors' master policy, it is unlikely that insurers will be exercised by this, at least for solicitors, and I would expect that the average award figure will be significantly lower. Indeed, in England and Wales, even with the £50,000 cap, the average award was recently noted to be less than £1,000. In any case, clauses 20 and 39 provide that my Department can vary this amount if the evidence following implementation considers it necessary.

Most of the other provisions in Parts 2 and 3 are supporting in nature, giving the relevant complaints committee the powers to access relevant information and enforce these requirements. I do not propose to go into detail on those clauses. As I mentioned, the Bill will be supported by subsequent regulations and will, when enacted and implemented, result in a significant improvement in how complaints against lawyers are handled and discharged. I consider that it is a proportionate response to the issues that have been raised during the work of the legal services review group and the subsequent consultation carried out by my Department on the draft Bill. I believe that the relevant professional bodies have a key role to play in how this new system will operate, and I have every confidence that they will react in a positive and responsible manner. Ultimately, the rights and needs of all those who use legal services will be enhanced. Therefore, I commend the Bill to the Assembly.

Mr McKay (The Chairperson of the Committee for Finance and Personnel): Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. In anticipation of this important Bill being introduced to the Assembly, the Committee for Finance and Personnel has been endeavouring to gather evidence proactively on its policy aims and has commissioned research into the approaches being taken in other applicable jurisdictions on the regulation of the legal profession and the handling of complaints.

I welcome the fact that the Bill has finally been introduced to the Assembly, especially given the significant delay in moving things forward since the legal services review group, chaired by Professor Bain, reported with its policy recommendations in 2006. I echo the Minister's earlier acknowledgement of work carried out by Professor Bain and the group on behalf of the Committee.

It was noted that, in August 2010, the then Finance Minister, Sammy Wilson, indicated that, while he believed that the review group's recommendations were a step in the right direction, he had some reservations that they did not go far enough. At that time, he stated:

"Users of legal services should have access to a complaints system that is open, transparent and independent and I hope that any future legislation will reflect those aims. It cannot and must not be left to solicitors to regulate themselves."

I mention that at the outset because it is important that the detailed provisions are carefully scrutinised at Committee Stage to ensure that they are sufficiently robust in that regard. It has already been noted during Committee discussions that a power relationship exists between lawyer and client. We need to be careful to factor that in when identifying and assessing evidence. Obviously, the consumer perspective can, to a certain extent, be gauged through representative bodies. However, the question arises of whether such channels receive only the most persistent of complainants in that area.

While we must ensure that a balance is struck and that the new arrangements are proportionate, they also need to command the confidence of the general public. To achieve that, we need three things. First, we need to be sure that we have the full picture of the level and scale of complaints on the ground, particularly those that go unresolved. Only then can we be confident that we are striking the correct balance in making informed decisions on the issue of proportionality. The lack of certainty on this was highlighted in comments by the Law Centre in a written submission to the Committee. In reflecting on the apparently low number of complaints here, it cautioned:

"This may reflect high levels of satisfaction with the work of solicitors, a lack of awareness of the complaints mechanisms or a lack of faith in a solicitors' body investigating its own members. There is no empirical evidence of which it is."

The Law Centre also queried whether the legal profession had ever done any surveys of consumer confidence in complaints-handling procedures, and, if so, what the outcomes were.

Secondly, the complaints system needs to be easily accessible and transparent. Thirdly, we need to be sure that the oversight commissioner will have the necessary powers and duties to fulfil the role effectively.

On behalf of the Committee, I take this opportunity to thank departmental officials and other stakeholders, including the Law Society, the Bar Council and the Lay Observer, who have contributed with their evidence to date. I look forward to that continuing as the Bill progresses through the House.

Subject to the Bill passing this stage today, I am sure that the Committee will build on the preliminary scrutiny to produce an evidenced-based report to the Assembly, with robust conclusions and recommendations for Members to consider in advance of Consideration Stage. As indicated, it will be important that the Committee explores how the views of the end users, including hard-to-reach groups, might be heard directly, thereby ensuring a balanced body of evidence on which the Committee can base its recommendations.

In terms of the principles of the Bill, the explanatory memorandum describes the chosen option as:

“A copper-bottoming of the existing complaints-handling process of both professional bodies, with the move away from professionally-led control to a system of lay Chair, lay majorities with enhanced powers, given suitable strengthened oversight by way of a LSOC with greater authority and power”.

The Department argues that this approach, as opposed to fully independent structures for complaints and regulation, is proportionate for this jurisdiction. The Committee has not, at least not at this stage, disputed that assertion. It has noted that the Law Society and the Bar Council state that barristers and solicitors receive few complaints. However, members also noted that, in the case of solicitors, for example, information on such complaints is not recorded by the Law Society until it becomes involved in the process.

The system, therefore, works on the basis of complaints being filtered upwards. This, in itself, may be appropriate, but I believe that, in tailoring the new arrangements, we need to be clear on the quantum of complaints and that the Oversight Commissioner is not just seeing the tip of the iceberg of issues that go unresolved.

Given that we are debating only the principles of the Bill today, I will not go into detail on the Committee's deliberations to date. However, the headlines are that the Committee has raised queries on a range of key issues, including the scope for a robust mechanism for recording all complaints, not just those that are logged once the later stages of the complaints process has been instigated; the role and functions of the Oversight Commissioner, including the adequacy of the various powers and duties provided for in the Bill; the potential for the Bill to apply some aspects of the model in Scotland for handling conduct and service complaints; how the Oversight Commissioner will be appointed and the term of office; how a complaint can be defined to ensure consistent application by both professions; how laypersons will be appointed to the respective complaints committees in the Bar Council and the Law Society and how this will be overseen by the Oversight Commissioner; the funding arrangements for the Oversight Commissioner; and the rate of levy applicable and how that will be proportionate to the size of the legal practice.

These, and other issues, remain to be teased out in more detail at Committee Stage. The Finance Committee will issue its call for evidence and invite formal written submissions from all who have an interest. I expect that it will also wish to commission further research and look more closely at any lessons that we may be able to apply from how the arrangements in Scotland have worked in practice and what is proposed under the new legislation in the South.

To conclude, a LeasCheann Comhairle, on behalf of the Committee, I welcome this important Bill to the House today, and I have no doubt that the Committee will ensure that it plays its part in the robust scrutiny of the detailed provisions of the Bill as it is referred for Committee Stage.

Mr Girvan: I support the Second Stage of the Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill. We had the opportunity to visit the Law Society and the Bar Council on 29 January 2014. I appreciate that some of the points that the Chair has just alluded to are some of the issues that were brought forward. They relate to determining how complaints are logged and controlled and ensuring, as has already been stated, that this is not just the tip of the iceberg and that confidence is given to members of the public who are not in the legal profession and who feel that it is not right to complain because it is something of a cartel operated by solicitors and barristers, present company excluded. It is relevant that they have the confidence to believe in the independence of the investigation and the thorough delivery of it.

I appreciate that some weighting could be put in to ensure that the spokesperson and the chairperson of the panel are laypeople, that there would be a balance in favour of those who are not necessarily looking at it totally from a legal perspective, and that they do not just protect their colleagues or those whom they have affiliations with. They would be there to ensure that justice is not just seen to be done but is done and that a complaint is dealt with in a fair and equitable fashion.

As a consequence, we have the bones of something on which to work. I appreciate that there will be further scrutiny of the Bill at Committee. There will be an opportunity to receive additional evidence from those who want to contribute; they will be called before the Committee, and that will be of help. What we have is some way of balancing it. There is concern about the delay in something as important as this coming before us, considering that the review took place in 2006 and we are just getting it in 2015. It has been somewhat dragged out; that is all I will say.

I will maybe use our court system as evidence of how things can be somewhat dragged out and not always the most efficient in some ways. Perhaps the efficiency or inefficiency of our court process and system is a debate for another day; it is another matter. As it stands, we are here to support the moving on of the Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill. I feel that there is an attempt here to address what has been very much an oversight.

4.30 pm

Mr A Maginness: On behalf of the SDLP, I support the Bill. The Bill strikes a fair balance; I think that that is the important aspect of it. The Minister has described it as proportionate. I agree with the Minister in that regard.

The Bill, of course, finds its genesis in the report of Professor Bain, who did a thorough piece of work in relation to the legal profession, particularly legal complaints against professionals within both branches of legal services here in Northern Ireland. The report by Professor Bain was, I think, a very fair and balanced report, and one which recognised the differences between here and England and Wales. I think that that was an important contribution to the analysis of what needed to be done here, because, in his view, the approach that was taken in England and Wales was not the appropriate approach to be taken here. He specifically found that there was a very different legal system here in Northern Ireland, compared with that in England and Wales, so the Clementi-type solution was not suitable.

We are indebted to Professor Bain. His contribution to public life here has been very significant and, in relation to this piece of work, I think, very valuable. It is a pity that, although the report was compiled in 2006, it has taken nine years for the matter to get to the Assembly in its present form. Nonetheless, one welcomes the fact that the Bill is before the House now and will be considered thoroughly in due course by the Finance and Personnel Committee.

It is important to establish the principle that complaints by the public against professional bodies should not be exclusively arbitrated or judged by that professional body. Whether it be complaints against solicitors or barristers, there should be a significant lay element involved in assessing and dealing with those complaints. The Bill requires a greater involvement of laypeople and greater participation in the process of analysing and dealing with complaints. That is to be welcomed. The idea of a profession simply policing itself is wrong in principle. We are now addressing that aspect of the complaints system, and I think that it is very, very important to remember that.

The legal profession, whether it be barristers or solicitors, I believe, is supportive of the approach in the Bill. When the Committee comes to consider the Bill in detail, it is important that it is closely examined in relation to how that profession proposes to deal with the new system. I think it is important to have positive engagement with the legal petitioners on the Bill.

Professor Bain found that the professional bodies had a reasonably good record of self-regulation, but, despite that, he was insistent and recommended that there be greater transparency and oversight of the function. Thus we have the commissioner, who I believe will exercise a very important role. If the new system does not work, it will be subject to public scrutiny and to further scrutiny by the House and the Executive. I think it is important that that be noted, because if this system fails, we will have to look afresh to see how it can be improved.

However, I am fairly confident that this new system will receive the support of the public, as well as of the professions, and I think it is important that we encourage a close and critical examination of the new system by the public at large. I also think that legislators within this House should seriously examine every aspect of this so that we get it right from day one.

I do not want to go over the ground that the Minister very meticulously outlined. I agree in the main with what she said. I think that she is striking the right approach to compensation. I believe that we can look forward to a good piece of legislation that will enhance both branches of the legal profession and the confidence of the public that those professional people are carrying out their work properly and take complaints seriously. I think that that is very important within our society.

I will leave it there, and I look forward to further proceedings on the Bill. I give apologies on behalf of Dominic Bradley, who is unable to attend today for family reasons.

Mr Cree: I rise as the Ulster Unionist member of the Committee for Finance and Personnel. The difficulty now is that so much has already been said, and I pay tribute to the Minister for her very full résumé of the Bill, aided and abetted by my colleagues in the House.

Just by way of overview, the Bill sets out to improve complaints-handling systems and is the result of some 10 years of consideration and consultation. It builds on the existing processes of both professional bodies and seeks to appoint a legal services oversight commissioner. That post would be financed by a levy to be applied to the relevant professional bodies. The Department of Finance and Personnel will also have the power to pay or defray certain costs of the commissioner. A very important issue is that there is an appeal function to the High Court in the Bill.

As the Bill has been under consideration for a long period, I understand that its clauses are acceptable to the professional bodies. It will improve on the existing situation and will be of benefit to the public at large. Therefore, on behalf of the Ulster Unionist Party, I welcome the Bill and am happy to see it proceed to the next stage.

Ms Boyle: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill, which is before the House today. I will do my best not to rehearse what has been said.

I, too, thank those who came to the Committee to brief members on the new reforms, which will mean that members of the legal profession can be held to account on complaints in an open and transparent manner.

It has already been alluded to that, in 2006, Professor Bain carried out a review to regulate lawyers and solicitors here. Substantial evidence was gathered for Professor Bain to make his 42 recommendations, which covered complaints, regulation and competition. In presentations to the Committee, what stood out above all the rest was the way in which complaints were handled and processed in this jurisdiction. There was a different process here for handling complaints, and there was evidence that what worked well in England and Wales was not appropriate for here.

Briefings to the Committee indicated that the general public were almost reluctant to make a complaint against the legal profession, and that they seemed to have little confidence to make a complaint, as complaints were normally dealt with in-house. Complainants were not fully aware of how or what the system and process were, in the current framework, and there was lack of communication between solicitors and clients, which came across in the briefings to the Committee. Most people making a complaint fell at the first hurdle due to the complexity of the system. They were not aware of how to take the issue further, due to their lack of understanding of how the framework and system operated, and therefore the nature or seriousness of complaints was never revealed, due to the lack of data and proper recording of complaints. The Bill will go some way to addressing those issues.

The legal services oversight commissioner and lay chairs will be independent from the legal profession, which has to be welcomed. The commissioner will have the power to ensure that there is transparency throughout the complaints-handling procedure. The commissioner will also be able to make recommendations on how the laypersons and their committees receive training for the job, which is vitally important. It will be the duty of the commissioner to review and report on any issues pertaining to regulation or organisation of the Law Society or the Bar that may be directed for consideration by the Department of Finance and Personnel. Any such reports should be published by the commissioner. That is also a welcome step.

As this part of the Bill is for consideration, I believe that the Bill will go some way towards instilling confidence in the public that they will be able to achieve the outcomes they wish for when making a complaint or going through the appeals process. For many, this may be too little, too late. The Bill will, however, address the outdated complaints system that we currently have in place. I, like others, look forward to working with members of the Committee on the core focus of the Bill, which sits at the heart of the best interests of the public. Therefore, I support the Bill.

Mr McCallister: I will be fairly brief since, as a member of the Finance and Personnel Committee, I will have the opportunity to scrutinise the Bill, provided it gets through this stage. We have rushed so fast at the process — I think Mr Cree said that it has only been 10 years. So, in the best traditions of the Assembly, we are rushing this through.

There is much to welcome. Despite all the difficulties we are having with welfare reform and possible Budget difficulties, today is a great reason as to why the Assembly should be here. We are debating mental health and capacity, and now the Bill on legal complaints, and that is what the Assembly should be about. It is at its best when it is scrutinising legislation.

The broad principles of the Bill before us are about separating out regulation, which I think is an important step forward. It is an improvement and something that is long overdue. I recognise the work of the Minister and others in getting to this stage, and of Alasdair MacLaughlin and people before him, for moving it on and progressing it and giving a sense of independence. That is something that we should embrace and look forward to.

I also look forward to any improvements and changes that the Committee can make in its call for evidence and in scrutinising the Bill. I am happy to support the Bill today.

4.45 pm

Mrs Foster: I thank Members for their contributions to the debate on the Bill today. It has been useful and has raised some interesting issues, and I reiterate at the outset that the Bill has come around, as has been referred to, after considerable work. Yes, it has taken some time to get to here, but we have been consulting with interested parties, and I think that there is a body of support for it to now move forward.

I want to refer to a number of issues. The Bill will now go for more detailed scrutiny, and there will be an opportunity to look at some of the issues that have been mentioned around the House. Mr McKay, as Chair, broadly welcomed the Bill and its principles but indicated some concerns about knowing the full picture of complaints on the ground. He is right in saying that we do not know why we have fewer complaints here in Northern Ireland than in other similar jurisdictions. It is important that we try to get to the bottom of that, and I hope that the Committee will be able to look at that and at the empirical evidence and perhaps hear from some people who have been through the process. The new oversight commissioner will have an important role to play in relation to the points that Mr McKay made.

It is important that we are making the change from self-regulation to more involvement of the lay representatives, but it is also important that the professional bodies continue to be involved in the complaints system as well, so that they can have a role in trying to resolve some of those complaints at an early stage, because, often, as I indicated in my opening remarks, it is not about compensation or about a long, drawn-out affair but is about acknowledging that things did not go right and apologising for that. Sometimes, that is all that the customer or the client will want.

What level will the penalty against the professional bodies be set at? The maximum level will be set by subsequent regulations, and I have yet to finalise a figure for that. It is important that it is a proportionate figure and, indeed, is commensurate with the size of the legal profession in Northern Ireland. Of course, those regulations will be consulted upon and laid in draft at the Assembly to allow those who want to comment on them to do so.

Mr Girvan and others referred to the delay in this matter. The Bill was considered by the previous mandate, but, for a number of reasons, mainly political, it did not proceed. My predecessors in this mandate, Mr Wilson and Mr Hamilton, did further work on the Bill, and I thought that, given the lapse of time, it was right that the Department went out to consult on the provisions to see whether the conclusions that Bain came to are as relevant today as they were in 2006. I hope that explains that. The fact is that the Bill is now before the House. I welcome the consensus that it is proportionate and has a fair balance. Mr Maginness and Mr Cree commented on that.

Ms Boyle referred to the fact that public knowledge about the complaints process and about complaining about solicitors is not as high as she would like it to be or as high as it should be. I do not disagree with that, and I hope that the process of the Bill will increase the knowledge of people's rights. I know that the Consumer Council and the Federation of Small Businesses are content with the process that we have set forward under the Bill, and I look forward to others coming to the Committee and raising their voices in relation to the process. Even the fact that we are having this discussion around the new Bill will raise the profile of regulation and of the fact that people can make complaints if they are unhappy about the services that they have received from either their solicitor or barrister.

We look forward to scrutinising the Bill in detail. In my opinion, this is an important Bill. It will significantly improve how complaints are handled against the legal profession, be that solicitors or barristers, and it will lead to a more open and transparent system. I think that that is what the House should be engaged in and, in doing so, it will help users of legal services right across Northern Ireland. Therefore, I commend the Bill to the Assembly.

Question put and agreed to.

Resolved:

That the Second Stage of the Legal Complaints and Regulation Bill [NIA 50/11-16] be agreed.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Members will take their ease before we proceed to the next piece of business.

Justice Bill: Further Consideration Stage

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): I call the Minister of Justice, Mr David Ford, to move the Bill.

Moved. — [Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice).]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): Members will have a copy of the Marshalled List of amendments detailing the order for consideration. The amendments have been grouped for debate in my provisional grouping of amendments selected list. There are three groups of amendments, and we will debate the amendments in each group in turn.

The first debate will be on amendment Nos 1 to 5, 8 to 10, 13, 14, 16, 18, 19 and 22, which are consequential and technical amendments relating to domestic violence and child protection, committal reform and the powers of the Department in respect of secondary legislation. The second debate will be on amendment Nos 6 and 7, which deal with early release conditions and sentencing proposals. The third debate will be on amendment Nos 11, 12, 15, 17, 20 and 21, which deal with firearms.

I remind Members intending to speak that, during the debates on the three groups of amendments, they should address all of the amendments in each group on which they wish to comment. Once the debate on each group is completed, any further amendments in the group will be moved formally as we go through the Bill, and the Question on each will be put without further debate. If that is clear, we shall proceed.

Clause 6 (Consequential amendments)

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Dallat): We now come to the first group of amendments for debate. With amendment No 1, it will be convenient to debate amendment Nos 2 to 5, 8 to 10, 13, 14, 16, 18, 19 and 22. These amendments are consequential to the decisions made by the House at Consideration Stage. There is one non-departmental amendment in the group in relation to vulnerable witnesses in committal reform.

The rest of the group comprises departmental amendments to facilitate the inclusion in the Bill of amendments relating to domestic violence and child protection, committal reform and the powers of the Department in respect of secondary legislation. Amendment No 3 is mutually exclusive with amendment No 4. Amendment No 14 is consequential to amendment No 1. Amendment Nos 13, 16 and 19 are consequential to amendment No 9. Amendment No 22 is consequential to amendment No 2.

I call the Minister of Justice Mr David Ford to move amendment No 1 and to address the other amendments in the group.

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): I beg to move amendment No 1:

In page 4, line 40, at end insert

“(2) The Department may by order make such supplementary, incidental or consequential provision as it considers appropriate in consequence of, or for giving full effect to, this Part.

(3) An order under subsection (2) may amend, repeal, revoke or otherwise modify any statutory provision.”.

The following amendments stood on the Marshalled List:

No 19: After schedule 6 insert

“SCHEDULE 6A

DOMESTIC VIOLENCE PROTECTION NOTICES AND ORDERS

Power to issue a domestic violence protection notice

1.—(1) A police officer not below the rank of superintendent (“the authorising officer”) may issue a domestic violence protection notice (“a DVPN”) under this paragraph.

(2) A DVPN may be issued to a person (“P”) aged 18 years or over if the authorising officer has reasonable grounds for believing that—

(a) P has been violent towards, or has threatened violence towards, an associated person, and

(b) the issue of the DVPN is necessary to protect that person from violence or a threat of violence by P.

(3) Before issuing a DVPN, the authorising officer must, in particular, consider—

(a) the welfare of any person under the age of 18 whose interests the officer considers relevant to the issuing of the DVPN (whether or not that person is an associated person),

(b) the opinion of the person for whose protection the DVPN would be issued as to the issuing of the DVPN,

(c) any representations made by P as to the issuing of the DVPN, and

(d) in the case of provision included by virtue of sub-paragraph (8), the opinion of any other associated person who lives in the premises to which the provision would relate.

(4) The authorising officer must take reasonable steps to discover the opinions mentioned in sub-paragraph (3).

(5) But the authorising officer may issue a DVPN in circumstances where the person for whose protection it is issued does not consent to the issuing of the DVPN.

(6) A DVPN must contain provision to prohibit P from molesting the person for whose protection it is issued.

(7) Provision required to be included by virtue of sub-paragraph (6) may be expressed so as to refer to molestation in general, to particular acts of molestation, or to both.

(8) If P lives in premises which are also lived in by a person for whose protection the DVPN is issued, the DVPN may also contain provision—

(a) to prohibit P from evicting or excluding from the premises the person for whose protection the DVPN is issued,

(b) to prohibit P from entering the premises,

(c) to require P to leave the premises, or

(d) to prohibit P from coming within such distance of the premises as may be specified in the DVPN.

Contents and service of a domestic violence protection notice

2.—(1) A DVPN must state—

(a) the grounds on which it has been issued,

(b) that a constable may arrest P without warrant if the constable has reasonable grounds for believing that P is in breach of the DVPN,

(c) that an application for a domestic violence protection order (“a DVPO”) under paragraph 4 will be heard within 48 hours of the time of service of the DVPN and a notice of the hearing will be given to P,

(d) that the DVPN continues in effect until that application has been determined, and

(e) the provision that a court of summary jurisdiction may include in a DVPO.

(2) A DVPN must be in writing and must be served on P personally by a constable.

(3) On serving P with a DVPN, the constable must ask P for an address for the purposes of being given the notice of the hearing of the application for the DVPO.

Breach of a domestic violence protection notice

3.—(1) A person arrested by virtue of paragraph 2(1)

(b) for a breach of a DVPN must be held in custody and brought before the court of summary jurisdiction which will hear the application for the DVPO under paragraph 4—

(a) before the end of the period of 24 hours beginning with the time of the arrest, or

(b) if earlier, at the hearing of that application.

(2) If the person is brought before the court by virtue of sub-paragraph (1)(a), the court may remand the person.

(3) If the court adjourns the hearing of the application by virtue of paragraph 4(7), the court may remand the person.

Application for a domestic violence protection order

4.—(1) If a DVPN has been issued, a constable must apply for a DVPO.

(2) The application must be made by complaint to a court of summary jurisdiction.

(3) The application must be heard by the court not later than 48 hours after the DVPN was served pursuant to paragraph 2(2).

(4) A notice of the hearing of the application must be given to P.

(5) The notice is deemed given if it has been left at the address given by P under paragraph 2(3).

(6) But if the notice has not been given because no address was given by P under paragraph 2(3), the court may hear the application for the DVPO if the court is satisfied that the constable applying for the DVPO has made reasonable efforts to give P the notice.

(7) The court may adjourn the hearing of the application.

(8) If the court adjourns the hearing, the DVPN continues in effect until the application has been determined.

(9) On the hearing of an application for a DVPO, Article 118 of the Magistrates’ Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 (summons to witness and warrant for arrest) does not apply in relation to a person for whose protection the DVPO would be made, except where the person has given oral or written evidence at the hearing.

Conditions for and contents of a DVPO

5.—(1) The court may make a DVPO if two conditions are met.

(2) The first condition is that the court is satisfied on the balance of probabilities that P has been violent towards, or has threatened violence towards, an associated person.

(3) The second condition is that the court thinks that making the DVPO is necessary to protect that person from violence or a threat of violence by P.

(4) Before making a DVPO, the court must, in particular, consider—

(a) the welfare of any person under the age of 18 whose interests the court considers relevant to the making of the DVPO (whether or not that person is an associated person), and

(b) any opinion of which the court is made aware—

(i) of the person for whose protection the DVPO would be made, and

(ii) in the case of provision included by virtue of sub-paragraph (8), of any other associated person who lives in the premises to which the provision would relate.

(5) But the court may make a DVPO in circumstances where the person for whose protection it is made does not consent to the making of the DVPO.

(6) A DVPO must contain provision to prohibit P from molesting the person for whose protection it is made.

(7) Provision required to be included by virtue of sub-paragraph (6) may be expressed so as to refer to molestation in general, to particular acts of molestation, or to both.

(8) If P lives in premises which are also lived in by a person for whose protection the DVPO is made, the DVPO may also contain provision—

(a) to prohibit P from evicting or excluding from the premises the person for whose protection the DVPO is made,

(b) to prohibit P from entering the premises,

(c) to require P to leave the premises, or

(d) to prohibit P from coming within such distance of the premises as may be specified in the DVPO.

(9) A DVPO must state that a constable may arrest P without warrant if the constable has reasonable grounds for believing that P is in breach of the DVPO.

(10) A DVPO may be in force for—

(a) no fewer than 14 days beginning with the day on which it is made, and

(b) no more than 28 days beginning with that day.

(11) A DVPO must state the period for which it is to be in force.

Breach of a DVPO

6.—(1) A person arrested by virtue of paragraph 5(9) for a breach of a DVPO must be held in custody and brought before a court of summary jurisdiction within the period of 24 hours beginning with the time of the arrest.

(2) If the court finds that the person has breached the DVPO, the court may—

(a) order the person to pay a sum not exceeding £5000; or

(b) commit the person to prison for a fixed period not exceeding 2 months.

(3) Payment of any sum ordered to be paid under sub-paragraph (2)(a) is enforceable in the same manner as payment of a sum adjudged to be paid by a conviction.

(4) If the matter is not disposed of when the person is brought before the court under sub-paragraph (1), the court may remand the person.

(5) In section 44(5) of the Judicature (Northern Ireland) Act 1978 (appeals relating to punishment of contempt and other defaults) in paragraph (c) after “Article 112 of the Magistrates’ Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981” insert “or paragraph 6 of Schedule 6A to the Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 2015”.

Further provision about remand

7.—(1) This paragraph applies for the purposes of the remand of a person by a court under paragraph 3(2) or (3) or 6(4).

(2) The court may remand the person—

(a) in custody, that is to say, commit the person to custody to be brought before the court at the end of the period of remand; or

(b) on bail, that is to say, take from the person a recognizance conditioned for subsequent appearance before the court.

(3) If the person is remanded in custody, the court may give its consent to the person being remanded on bail in accordance with sub-paragraph (2)(b) in which event the court must fix the amount of the recognizance with a view to its being taken subsequently.

(4) Subject to sub-paragraphs (8), (11) and (12), the period for which a person is remanded in custody must not exceed—

(a) in case where the person is before the court and consents, 28 days;

(b) in any other case, 8 days.

(5) The period for which a person is remanded on bail must not exceed 28 days unless both the person and the relevant police officer consent.

(6) For the purposes of sub-paragraph (5) the relevant police officer is—

(a) in the case of a remand prior to the hearing of an application for a DVPO, the authorising officer;

(b) in any other case, the constable who applied for the DVPO.

(7) In the case of a person over the age of 21, the power to remand in custody includes power, on an application made by a police officer not below the rank of inspector, to commit that person to—

(a) detention at a police station; or

(b) the custody (otherwise than at a police station) of a constable.

(8) The period for which a person is remanded under sub-paragraph (7) must not exceed 3 days.

(9) A person shall not be committed to detention at a police station under sub-paragraph (7)(a) unless there is a need for the person to be so detained for the purposes of inquiries into a criminal offence; and, if a person is committed to such detention—

(a) the person shall, as soon as that need ceases, be brought back before the court;

(b) the person shall be treated as a person in police detention to whom the duties under Article 40 of the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 (responsibilities in relation to persons detained) relate; and

(c) the detention of the person shall be subject to periodic review at the times set out in Article 41 of that Order (review of police detention).

(10) A person shall not be committed to the custody (otherwise than at a police station) of a constable under sub-paragraph (7)(b) unless there is a need for the person to be kept in such custody for the purposes of inquiries into a criminal offence; and if a person is committed to such custody, the person shall, as soon as that need ceases, be brought back before the court.

(11) If the court has reason to suspect that a medical report will be required, the power to remand a person may be exercised for the purpose of enabling a medical examination to take place and a report to be made; and if the person is remanded in custody for that purpose, the remand may not be for more than 21 days.

(12) If the court has reason to suspect that the person is suffering from mental illness or severe mental impairment within the meaning of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, the court has the same power to remand a person under Article 42 of that Order (remand to hospital for medical report) as it has under that Article in the case of an accused person (within the meaning of that Article).

(13) The court may order a person to be brought before it at any time before the expiration of the period for which the person has been remanded.

(14) The court may, when remanding the person on bail, require the person to comply, before release on bail or later, with such requirements as appear to the court to be necessary to secure that the person does not interfere with persons likely to give evidence at the hearing or otherwise obstruct the course of justice.

Guidance

8.—(1) The Department may issue guidance relating to the exercise by a constable of functions under this Schedule.

(2) A constable must have regard to any guidance issued under this paragraph when exercising a function to which the guidance relates.

(3) Before issuing guidance under this paragraph, the Department must consult—

- (a) the Chief Constable,
- (b) the Policing Board, and
- (c) such other persons as the Department thinks fit.

Interpretation

9.—(1) In this Schedule—

“associated person” means a person who is associated with P within the meaning of Article 3 of the Family Homes and Domestic Violence (Northern Ireland) Order 1998;

“the authorising officer” has the meaning given by paragraph 1(1);

“a DVPN” has the meaning given by paragraph 1(1);

“a DVPO” has the meaning given by paragraph 2(1)(c);

“P” has the meaning given by paragraph 1(2).

(2) In calculating—

(a) when the period of 24 hours mentioned in paragraph 3(1)(a) or 6(1) ends, or

(b) when the period of 48 hours mentioned in paragraph 4(3) ends,

Christmas Day, Good Friday, any Sunday and any day which is a bank holiday in Northern Ireland under the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971 are to be disregarded.

(3) In calculating the length of any period of remand, the period is to be taken as beginning on the day after the person is remanded.

Pilot schemes

10.—(1) The Department may by order provide for any provision of paragraphs 1 to 9 to come into operation for a period of time to be specified in or under the order for the purpose of assessing the effectiveness of the provision.

(2) Such an order may make different provision for different areas.

(3) More than one order may be made under this paragraph.

The Justice and Security (Northern Ireland) Act 2007 (c. 6)	Section 3.

— [Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice).]

Mr Ford: As you indicated, Mr Deputy Speaker, amendment No 1 stands in my name. As you also indicated, there are a considerable number of amendments in the group covering a number of issues, all of which are designed to deal with matters raised at Consideration Stage. I will outline the different areas in turn and trust that I have the support of the House for them.

Amendment No 1 creates a narrower, more focused alternative arrangement for supplementary, incidental or consequential provisions following the removal of clause 86 from the Bill at Consideration Stage. Amendment No 14 is a direct consequential amendment flowing from amendment No 1. I am sure that I do not need to set out again how and why I felt the need to include clause 86 in the original Bill, but the issue now is how we move on from here. I remain of the view that the Bill is complex and we need to mitigate the risk that we have missed something crucial to the policy intentions. Clause 86 has, however, gone, and the question is how to mitigate the risk that remains.

(Mr Deputy Speaker [Mr Beggs] in the Chair)

I am grateful to the Office of the Legislative Counsel (OLC) and to the Committee for their efforts and support in bringing forward this alternative approach, including the fact that the Committee held a special meeting to consider the issue last week. The amendment that I propose contains two specific changes from clause 86 as it was. First, it is limited to Part 1. I want to recognise that that was a suggestion made by Paul Frew. He asked about the possibility of doing that, and the amendment recognises that suggestion. Part 1, which relates to the single jurisdiction provisions, is where the risk is most likely to arise. Secondly, the amendment is limited in scope compared with clause 86 in order to take account of the Committee's concerns. With the Committee's support, I was pleased to table the amendment before the House today. I hope that it addresses its concerns while allowing me some much-needed flexibility to give effect to the provisions in Part 1.

Let me now consider the amendments relating to committal reform, which are amendment Nos 2, 3, 18 and 22. They make specific amendments relating to preliminary investigations and mixed committals and consequential amendments to schedules 1 and 8. In the context of addressing my amendments, I will also address amendment No 4 in the name of Mr McCartney and colleagues.

On the amendments made at Consideration Stage to clauses 7 and 8, I have to say again that I was surprised that they were supported by the House, given the Committee's previous consideration. I have given thought to the impact, and I remain concerned about the situation that we are now in. I am grateful again for the consideration given by OLC to the issue over the past few days. I believe that the clauses in the Bill as it now stands require significant amendment. That is, in part, because they take no account of how the revised process will work in practice.

Clauses 7 and 8, as amended at Consideration Stage, are oversimplistic and simply impose a new statement of law on top of an existing body of law without any attempt to reconcile the two. The conventional approach to amending an existing body of law is to do so by way of textual amendment to the parent legislation. That enables a complete, coherent and consistent statement of the law to be found in one place. More fundamentally, the clauses ignore the position of victims. I spoke about that at Consideration Stage, and other Members, most notably Mr McCartney and Mr Elliott, also questioned the position of vulnerable victims and witnesses. Indeed, I briefed the Justice Committee last week on the work needed to resolve the issue.

5.00 pm

My amendments are intended to operate within the framework of the interests of justice test. That was the will of the Assembly at Consideration Stage. I am seeking to amend the Magistrates' Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 to provide that a preliminary investigation will be held only in the interests of justice. All other cases will be dealt with by way of a preliminary inquiry. An accused may apply to the court for direction on whether a preliminary investigation is to be held or whether oral evidence at a preliminary inquiry is necessary in the interests of justice. Court rules will set out the application procedure. An application will have to set out the grounds on which the application is made. The rules will also set out the procedure to be followed in determining the application. The prosecution and the accused will be able to make representations to the court. The court, after considering the application and any representations made to it, may grant the application only if it is satisfied that that is necessary in the interests of justice. In reaching that decision, the court must give regard to the nature of the offence or offences charged and the interests of the persons likely to be witnesses. The amendments will help to protect the needs of vulnerable victims and witnesses, and I commend them to the House.

I will speak briefly to amendment No 4, which is in the name of Mr McCartney and those of his colleagues and proposes an alternative amendment to clause 8. I entirely understand the sentiment behind it and accept that it is a well-intentioned alternative to my proposals. I remind the House that we are in this territory only as result of the amendments that were made to the Department's proposals at Consideration Stage, when the matter of committal was discussed. However, amendment No 4 does not achieve what the Members who tabled it want to achieve, and a number of issues would need to be addressed if it were to work properly. The amendment applies only to the giving of evidence on oath at mixed committals, not to preliminary investigations. It also includes the word "vulnerable", which is problematic. Although "vulnerable" has an ordinary meaning, it would need to be specifically defined in the context of this legislation. Also, the amendment is limited to victims of rape and sexual assault. I have to ask why the line has been drawn there. What about other crimes, such as domestic violence, other crimes of personal violence and other matters that would put individuals at specific risk and specific fear?

It is not clear what account is to be taken of the use of special measures under the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 in relation to the giving of evidence by witnesses, which allow a witness to give evidence and prevents certain witnesses being cross-examined in person by the defence in sexual offence cases and cases involving children. I also believe that "Violent sexual assault" would also have to be defined. Thought would have to be given to that and care taken that the definition did not inadvertently impact on any existing legislation that deals with sexual assault. In addition, as I explained to the House, clauses 7 and 8 need to be significantly amended to ensure that the provisions can work within the existing framework of the Magistrates' Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981. The Member's amendment would not resolve that problem; indeed, it might compound it.

My amendments provide that, when the defence makes an application that oral evidence is needed in the interests of justice, the court must consider the matter with regard to the nature of the offence and the interests of the witnesses likely to give evidence. That will apply to every offence and every potential witness, and it provides greater protection than is proposed in the amendment tabled by Mr McCartney. Therefore, I cannot support amendment No 4. I believe that my amendment is a better way of resolving the issue and covering a wider range of crimes.

Amendment No 5 will make some minor amendments to clause 48, which was inserted into the Bill at Consideration Stage on the proposal of Mr Frew and Lord Morrow. It allows for arrangements to disclose conviction information in respect of those who pose a risk of harm to children. I emphasise that there is no change of substance to the objective of the provision. The amendments are largely of a technical nature and are designed to allow for the provision to sit more easily within the current legislative framework for multi-agency risk assessment and management, as set out in Part 3 of the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008.

The first amendments to the clause will insert a number of definitions into article 49 of the 2008 Order to provide legislative clarity. They include the following definitions of “child” as a person under 18; “conviction” as including both findings of the court and police cautions; and “relevant previous conviction” as a conviction for either a sexual or violent offence as specified in the guidance to agencies that was issued by the Department under article 50 of the 2008 Order. The remainder of clause 48, which amends article 50 of the Order, has been reworded to take account of the definitions and to remove reference to the information being:

That phrase was considered unnecessary, given that you cannot disclose information that you do not possess. It was also potentially misleading by suggesting that all agencies specified in article 49 have information to disclose. I understand that the Members who tabled the clause at Consideration Stage are content with those minor changes — for the sake of Hansard, I am looking across the Chamber at Mr Frew, who is nodding at me, so I will take that as assent. I believe that, when my officials briefed the Justice Committee on this last week, the amendments that I was proposing were acceptable to the Committee, and I hope that the House can agree today to make them.

Clause 90, as amended at Consideration Stage, creates a general duty to progress criminal proceedings in an effort to avoid delay. Mr Jim Allister spoke to the clause at Consideration Stage and suggested that juries could be captured by the current wording of the clause and potentially feel under pressure:

“to reach a just outcome as swiftly as possible”.
— [Official Report (Hansard), Bound Volume 105, p114, col 1].

As I indicated to the House at Consideration Stage, that was not the policy intent of the clause — that was most certainly not the intention. I also stated that the duty is appropriately framed to ensure that reaching a just outcome is patently the primary consideration. However, in the interests of legislative clarity, I have tabled amendment

No 8 to make it absolutely and abundantly clear that only the court, the prosecution and the defence will be subject to the general duty. There will be no application of the general duty to juries. I trust that that reassures Mr Allister and any Members who had sympathy with the points that he put forward.

I turn to amendment No 9, which introduces new clause 95A and new schedule 6A to allow for the introduction of domestic violence protection notices and domestic violence protection orders in Northern Ireland. Amendment Nos 13 and 16 are consequential to amendment No 9. Members will be aware that, following an amendment tabled but not moved by Mrs Dolores Kelly at Consideration Stage, I committed to tabling alternative amendments at this stage. I am pleased now to speak to the detail of the powers that I have put forward. The provisions give the police the power to issue a domestic violence protection notice and to apply to the courts for a domestic violence protection order for the purposes of protecting a victim of domestic violence where it has been assessed that they may be at risk of immediate harm and danger. It also provides for the courts to grant a domestic violence protection order for a maximum period of 28 days, which will provide immediate emergency protection for the victim, allowing them protected space to explore the options available to them and to make informed decisions about their safety.

The amendment ensures proportionality, consistency and appropriate use of the processes. The police, when considering the need to issue a domestic violence protection notice, will use their professional judgement to determine whether the measures are required to protect a victim. Similarly, the court will assess the evidence provided to it to ensure that it is satisfied on the balance of probabilities that the perpetrator has been violent towards or has threatened violence towards an associated person. Additionally, the court must believe that making the domestic violence protection order is necessary to protect that person from violence or threat of violence by the perpetrator.

We have discussed domestic violence in the Chamber on many occasions. We all acknowledge that it is a dreadful crime and that, when it happens, victims need to be fully protected from any potential further violence. The legislation offers victims — women and men — the immediate protection that they need in circumstances where they are often very traumatised, vulnerable and need assurance that, for a time, the perpetrator will not be able to enter their home and violently abuse them again. At present, non-molestation orders and occupation orders offer protection for victims of domestic violence. However, it is up to the victim to apply for them. In the circumstances following domestic violence, a victim may be emotionally affected and, as a result, may not be capable of seeking the protection that is needed. Therefore, the measures under the proposed legislation will clearly demonstrate to the victim that the statutory agencies are initiating action on their behalf in order to protect them. I firmly believe that the measures will enhance our suite of public protection arrangements for victims.

Members will be aware that amendments tabled by the SDLP at Consideration Stage contained elements of a domestic violence disclosure scheme, but they were also not moved.

This aspect was not moved by agreement, on the understanding that I would consult on the introduction of a domestic violence disclosure scheme for Northern Ireland as soon as is practicable. Since Consideration Stage, the Justice Committee has received briefings from my officials and the PSNI on the matter. Legislation is not required to operate a domestic violence disclosure scheme, and the consultation will allow me to consider all relevant aspects of introducing such a scheme, including human rights issues. I am pleased to inform the House that my amendments and my approach of consulting on a domestic violence disclosure scheme have the support of Mrs Kelly and her colleagues. She is likewise nodding, and I trust that the House will also vote in favour of these changes.

Finally, I turn to the last amendment in this group, amendment No 10, which I have brought forward at the request of the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to correct an issue with the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Criminal Justice and Support for Victims) Act (Northern Ireland) 2015, otherwise known as Lord Morrow's Act. In seeking to implement the provisions of the Act for an independent guardian service, DHSSPS officials identified that, as section 21(4)(a) of the Act was drafted, only those charities registered under section 16 of the Charities Act (Northern Ireland) 2008 would be eligible to apply to provide those independent guardian services. I understood, from working with Lord Morrow to bring forward the Act, that he specifically sought to have the guardian service provided by a charity, principally to maintain a level of independence from the statutory sector. The definition of a charity is therefore very important.

To date, only 1,695 charities are currently registered under section 16 of the relevant 2008 Act. Most are not health and social care charities, and registration will not be completed for some time, potentially for another couple of years. A specific problem emerges in that some charities, which operate across all three jurisdictions of the United Kingdom, are not required to register in every part of the UK. Those already registered in England, for example, will not be required to register separately in Northern Ireland; but the wording of section 21(4)(a) of the Human Trafficking Act means that those charities that are registered elsewhere but which operate in Northern Ireland cannot provide guardian services here. I cannot believe that that was the intent of the House when the Human Trafficking Act was passed, and I certainly do not believe that it was the desire of Lord Morrow or of the Department.

To fix the problem, therefore, section 21(4)(a) of the Human Trafficking Act 2015 needs to be amended, and amendment No 10 does so by redefining the meaning of a registered charity to include charities that are registered in England and Wales and in Scotland. Clearly, some of the major children's charities are registered technically only in England, but operate here as well. As a result, the provision of an independent guardian service will be open to all relevant charities registered anywhere in the United Kingdom or on the deemed list in Northern Ireland. I am pleased to commend this amendment to the House with the support of Lord Morrow to ensure that his Act operates successfully.

That covers all the amendments in group 1, with the exception of Mr McCartney's amendment, which, as I have highlighted, I believe is not as effective as my amendment to the same clause. I commend the amendments to the House.

Mr Ross (The Chairperson of the Committee for Justice): First, I will address amendment No 1. The whole House will be relieved to hear that I do not intend to rehearse the arguments that we had when we decided to remove what used to be called clause 86 from the Bill. Suffice it to say that the Committee's rationale for its removal was accepted and supported by the entire House. I am sure that most Members will feel that it was a useful exercise of the Assembly's ability to question and scrutinise the power of the Executive.

Following Consideration Stage, the Minister requested a meeting with myself and the Deputy Chairman of the Committee to discuss the matter, at which he outlined his belief that some mechanism was required to deal with Part 1 of the Bill and mitigate the risk that losing clause 86 has created for the Department. Part 1, which deals with single jurisdiction for County Courts and Magistrates' Courts, covers a large number of pieces of legislation, some of which date back to the 1840s and, as the Minister has outlined, is the part of the Bill that the Department is most concerned may need minor amendments later on if relevant pieces of primary legislation are identified that have not been covered in the Bill.

The Minister stated that the intention was for an amendment to provide narrowly defined powers linked only to Part 1, and we agreed that if the Minister provided further information on the proposed amendment the Committee would meet to consider it. The Minister subsequently provided the rationale for and the text of the proposed amendment, and he attended the Committee on 9 June with his officials to discuss it with members.

5.15 pm

The wording of amendment No 1 is significantly limited in scope and effect compared to the original clause 86. It also only relates to Part 1 of the Bill. On that basis, the Committee agreed that it is content with the amendment. When we were considering clause 86, members recognised that Part 1 was the area of the Bill that might require some minor amendments once the legislation was passed, given the volume of other legislation that is affected by the introduction of the single jurisdiction. Indeed, when officials attended to discuss clause 86, the Committee suggested that the Department should narrow its scope to cover only those parts of the Bill that it believed were most necessary. That is now the approach that seems to have been adopted by the Minister and the Department.

While I am sure that the Minister will not agree with me, I believe that the scrutiny the Committee brought to clause 86 and the debate that we initiated has been useful and, hopefully, will serve to ensure that all Departments fully consider the scope of the powers that they require and the justification for their inclusion in primary legislation rather than including provisions that provide very wide-ranging powers. I have no doubt that other Assembly Committees will pay much more attention to what are often termed "technical provisions" in Bills in the future.

Moving on to amendment Nos 2 and 3, which have been brought forward by the Minister, and amendment No 4, which has been brought forward by Mr McCartney, these aim to provide additional protection to vulnerable victims and witnesses and avoid the necessity of them having to give evidence twice, following the Assembly's decision to retain of PIs. When the Committee considered the original proposals by the Department to abolish preliminary investigations and mixed committals, it noted that, while the proposals aimed to streamline the procedure for moving business from the Magistrates' Court to the Crown Court and were expected to result in some improvement in efficiency, the Department's stated primary driver was to reduce the impact on vulnerable victims and witnesses. From its inquiry into the criminal justice services available to victims and witnesses, the Committee is fully aware of the concerns raised and the difficulties experienced by victims and witnesses in relation to having to give evidence twice. Members are therefore supportive of the principle of those amendments. Given that they are mutually exclusive, I assume that agreement can be reached about which will be moved at the end of the debate.

Finally, turning briefly to amendment No 5, which relates to child protection disclosures and the amendments that introduce domestic violence protection orders and notices, the Committee recently received from departmental officials and the Police Service of Northern Ireland a very useful briefing on the purpose and intent of both schemes. Members explored how both schemes would operate in practice and play a part in protection. We were also reassured that account has been taken of lessons learnt from the operation of such schemes in other jurisdictions.

Amendment No 10 was not discussed at the Committee, although I am quite sure that Lord Morrow will say that it will make his great Bill even better by ensuring that charities that are registered in Great Britain will still be able to provide the services required. Perhaps it would be useful if the Minister would provide some clarity over whether that means that internationally based charities would also be able to provide similar services or whether it would be limited to those within the United Kingdom.

I will make no further comment and support the amendments in the group.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I just want to speak to a number of the amendments. The Chair, on behalf of the Committee, provided the commentary on most of them. When the Minister was speaking about amendment No 1, I think there was an acceptance. The Chair laid out clearly, on behalf of the Committee, the reason why we had our reservations about clause 86. The Minister described the amendment as narrower and more focused, and I think we would agree with that. It allows us to say — I think it was Paul Frew who brought it up at the Committee — that Part 1 was perhaps the area that needed the latitude and flexibility, given the large number of Acts that the Bill would affect, stretching right back to 1840, as the Chair said. We will support amendment No 1.

In relation to amendment Nos 2, 3 and 4, I will just speak briefly on amendment No 4, which is tabled in my name, Sean Lynch's and Chris Hazzard's. The Minister described it as well-intentioned and then started to point out the deficiencies in it, which I think we would accept. We were trying to demonstrate with that amendment the Minister's concern, which he was right to mention, that sometimes when you are defining something, each party or person might have a concept of it but that when you are legislating, you have to have a clear definition. The term "interests of justice" was not clear. Taking note of concerns that were raised to the Committee during the inquiry on victims and witnesses, we were trying to be very clear about the idea of vulnerable witnesses unnecessarily having to give evidence twice, particularly in sexual violence or rape trials and, indeed, perhaps in other trials. I think that the amendments as laid out by the Minister provide the protection of what we believe is the necessary part of the PE, PI and mixed committals. We think that they serve a useful purpose and that they are now protected. However, protections are also built in to ensure that you do not have that two-stage approach to some witnesses. We are content to support amendment Nos 2 and 3. Obviously, we accept that, if they are carried, our amendment would fall. That is fine.

Some of the other amendments have been described as "technical" and, certainly, they add to the work from Consideration Stage and, indeed, to another Bill. An amendment was tabled to perhaps tighten up the intent of that tabled by Paul Frew at Consideration Stage. I think that it adds to the intention, which was well laid out and well discussed at Consideration Stage.

Similarly, with regard to the amendment dealing with the Human Trafficking Act, as it is now, given Lord Morrow's intent, I think that he is happy, as the idea of the charities was missing. This amendment will now, if you like, add to that Bill. We are certainly more than content to support that. Similarly, Dolores Kelly articulated what she was trying to do with amendments that she tabled at Consideration Stage. She accepted that the Minister and the Department could do more work on that. She obviously feels that the amendments that have been tabled today fulfil her intentions. We will therefore support them as well.

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): Order. I wish to advise the House of a development. I understand that a valid petition of concern has been received in relation to amendment No 7, which is in the second group of amendments. The debate shall therefore continue on group 1 and will then go on to group 2 in this Further Consideration Stage debate on the Justice Bill. Decisions will be taken up to and including the Question on amendment No 6. The vote on the Question on amendment No 7, if moved, will not take place today and will be on a cross-community basis. The scheduling of the rest of this Further Consideration Stage would then have to be notified to Members in due course.

Mr A Maginness: I suppose there is not an awful lot more to be added on this Bill. I congratulate the Minister on his acceptance of the substance of amendment No 1 and for bringing it to the Assembly. I think it is a good example of how a Committee can influence and reshape legislation and do so in a very constructive way with the Minister. I think that he quite properly acted on the advice and concerns that were expressed by the Committee. I think that congratulations are due to him for reacting in that constructive and very positive way.

Incidentally, it may also inform other pieces of legislation, because other Ministers will, of course, be bringing similar provisions in other Bills. This Bill could well act as a template for future legislation.

I move on to amendment Nos 2 and 3. The Minister has accepted the will of the House. I know that he does not agree with the position adopted by the House in relation to committal proceedings, but he has, quite properly, accepted that position and moved significant amendments, as he described them, in amendment Nos 2 and 3.

He quite rightly said that there was a requirement for textual amendments. I accept that, but I hope that in putting forward those amendments the Department and Minister are not attempting in some way to blunt the effect of the decision of the Assembly in relation to committal proceedings. The important issue is the interests of justice test. That is the abiding rule, or test, for the use of preliminary investigations. I hope that the amendments that the Minister brought forward will not undermine that in any way. I ask the Minister to reassure me on that at the conclusion of this part of the debate.

I accept that there is a necessity that the Magistrates' Courts rules be amended, consistent with the position that the Assembly has adopted. I accept that a written application and a representation should be made to the court where necessary and that a case is established, essentially, that this is in the interests of justice.

However, I would hate to think that in some way the intent of those amendments is to create a situation in which it would be more difficult for a defendant to bring an application in relation to the commencement of a preliminary investigation. I just seek reassurance from the Minister on that. That is a proper position for me, as an MLA and a legislator, to adopt.

I also ask the Minister to clarify the position in relation to amendment No 2, which introduces article 29A(5)(b), which states:

"the interests of the persons likely to be witnesses at a preliminary investigation."

I presume that the intent of that provision within the amendment is to provide protection for vulnerable witnesses. I ask the Minister to clarify that and indicate to the House that he has considered that that provides the protection that witnesses would require in circumstances where they may be faced with a preliminary investigation. I seek an assurance from the Minister on that.

5.30 pm

The other aspect that I would like the Minister to clarify relates to amendment No 2 and clause 7(6), which states:

"Where a person is charged with an extra-territorial offence"

Does that mean that the law would not provide, in any circumstances, that a person charged with such an offence would be permitted access to a preliminary investigation? Will the Minister clarify that position in his summing up of this group of amendments?

I take it that the intent in amendment No 3, which will amend clause 8, is to address the situation in relation to mixed committals. I want reassurance in relation to that.

Amendment No 4 was tabled by Mr McCartney, Mr Lynch and Mr Hazzard. I am very sympathetic to that amendment, but I am not certain that it addresses the issue of vulnerable witnesses, in totality anyway. It certainly would seem to address the situation of a rape victim or the victim of violent sexual assault, but there is a problem with the definition of "violent sexual assault" and what it actually means. That might be a deficiency in that amendment.

I and my party would be very sympathetic to that amendment, but I am not certain that it provides the necessary cover or protection that the Committee wanted to be afforded to vulnerable witnesses. I know that Mr McCartney cannot answer those questions, but I make those points by way of constructive criticism. Having sympathy is insufficient; the Member obviously seeks support. However, given the fact that amendment Nos 2 and 3 address the protection of witnesses, in those circumstances, it may well be that amendment No 4 is not required in any event, even though, as I said, I am very sympathetic to it.

My colleague Dolores Kelly will address the other amendments in this group, particularly those that deal with domestic violence and protection notices and orders. We are obviously grateful to the Department and the Minister for tabling those amendments and reflecting the propositions and the needs of vulnerable people in those circumstances and delivering on the assurances that the Minister gave to the House and my party, the SDLP, on the last occasion. I end my contribution there.

Mr Dickson: Like others, I welcome the opportunity to speak on the Further Consideration Stage of the Justice Bill as it moves through the Assembly. The reform of our justice system, which has developed, some might say haphazardly, over many centuries is, of course, not a straightforward task. We need to commend the Minister for the work that he and his Department have done in maintaining a very steady and clear pace of reform.

Most of the amendments in group 1 are departmental in origin with the exception of amendment No 4, which I will come back to later. It was mentioned previously that this is a complex piece of legislation and, therefore, it would create a considerable and undue difficulty at the implementation stage were we to tie the Department's hands completely with regard to making alterations to previous statute.

As we know, the Assembly chose to remove clause 86 from the Bill at Consideration Stage because of concerns that it gave too much power to the Department. I do not share those concerns, but that is where we are. It was clear that these changes in statute would have to come to the House anyway. However, to ensure that the Department still has sufficient flexibility, particularly in the area of single jurisdiction, the Minister has brought forward amendment No 1, which I hope has the broad agreement of the Committee for Justice and the House.

Respecting the concerns of the Committee and the Assembly, the Department has clearly restricted the scope of its powers in that area. In fact, only Part 1 would be affected by a power to make supplementary, incidental or consequential provisions and, of course, that would be with the consent of the Assembly. The Department and the Committee, of which I am a member, deserve credit for the work that has been done in reaching agreement on these contentious issues. Going forward, this means that the Department will be provided with at least some remedy in the unlikely event that something has been overlooked in the primary legislative process.

Moving to the proposed amendments with regard to preliminary investigations (PIs) and mixed committals, I am still convinced that preliminary investigations are, in fact, superfluous to a modern justice system. That has been clearly proven by their abolition in many common law jurisdictions, notably England and Wales. Evidence, in fact, suggests that these exercises are harmful for victims of crime, especially the most vulnerable people. For those recounting events it is traumatic and, further, it results in delays to our justice system in holding people to account. Nonetheless, by a majority, the Assembly has decided to retain preliminary investigations; where this is in the interests of justice it will, in itself, be a difficult term to define. The Minister's amendment will refine and support the retention of PIs in certain circumstances, including the crucial element of how it will operate in practice. Safeguards and a robust application procedure to ensure that PIs are only used in exceptional circumstances rather than continuing as the norm must be in place to protect the considered needs of vulnerable witnesses and victims.

I now turn to amendment No 4, which was put forward by Mr McCartney on behalf of Sinn Féin. The proposed amendment is clearly a compassionate attempt to ameliorate the impact of the retention of preliminary investigations and mixed committals on vulnerable witnesses and victims of crime. However, it is worth noting that the proposed amendment, as it is attached to clause 8, would only apply to mixed committals, meaning that preliminary investigations would not be affected by the amendment.

Furthermore, the amendment appears to exempt vulnerable witnesses from giving evidence under oath but sets a higher bar for victims, as they must be a victim of rape or sexual assault for the exemption to exist. I am quite sure that that was not the intention of the proposer; I am sure that he would consider victims of non-sexual violent crime such as intimidation, for example, as potentially vulnerable victims who would and should be generally exempt from recounting their experiences numerous times in front of a court. It is for that reason that I am not in a position to support amendment No 4.

Personally, I feel that the proper abolition of preliminary investigations and mixed committals is the best that we can do for victims of crime. Indeed, many of those victims have told us that directly.

The Assembly has decided against that, and I respect that decision. Nonetheless, to ensure that a robust system is in place, I call on all to support the Minister's amendments today.

Further proposed amendments are departmental. Again, they refine much of what was added at Consideration Stage. I commend the Department and MLAs, particularly Mr Frew and Mrs Kelly, for the work that has been done to bring about those developments, particularly on child protection disclosures and domestic violence protection orders. Those measures will further ensure that the reform of our justice system helps to deliver for everyday people and, crucially, that we have a robust system with preventative measures in place that are accessible to the public and help to keep people safe. That is what this is about.

I intend to support the amendments in group 1 from the Department. They refine and support amendments made at Consideration Stage. Centrally, they get on with the work of reforming our justice system to deliver one that is fit to meet the needs of all our citizens.

Mr Elliott: My apologies for being out for part of the Minister's opening remarks. I heard quite a bit of them, but I had to leave for some of them.

I will deal with amendment Nos 2 and 3 first, as well as amendment No 4 from Sinn Féin. Amendment No 4 is positive, in the sense that it is trying to deal with vulnerable witnesses. I just wonder whether its intention is for the provision to be used solely for those named in the amendment or whether it can be used on a much wider basis.

I am slightly concerned about amendment No 2. Mr Allister brought forward an amendment at Consideration Stage that received support from the House and was made. I am concerned that amendment No 2 would slightly weaken Mr Allister's amendment. I said at Consideration Stage that his amendment was a halfway house between what we had then and what the Minister was bringing forward at that stage. It appears now that the Minister is creating another halfway house between Mr Allister's amendment from Consideration Stage and what he was proposing in the original Bill. It is weakening the clause to some extent, but, by and large, it is still getting us to a similar position.

Amendment No 5, which concerns child protection, and amendment Nos 9 and 19 are follow-ups to amendments from Consideration Stage. Mr Frew's amendment at Consideration Stage was on child protection. I therefore consider this to be a tidying-up process. To be fair, amendment Nos 9 and 19, which concern domestic violence, originally came from the SDLP. The Minister has worked with that party, which I am pleased about, to bring forward positive and comprehensive amendments. I view that as only being good for the Bill and for society in Northern Ireland. Hopefully, the amendments will help people who are caught up in domestic violence. There are a lot of positive aspects to them, but I would like to hear the Minister, in his summing-up, talk about amendment Nos 2 and 3. I view amendment No 3 as being slightly more wide-ranging than amendment No 4 from Sinn Féin. Obviously, I have support for both, but I do not see the two being able to sit together. I am reasonably content with both amendments, but I do want to hear from the Minister when he is summing up.

I am also interested to hear what Mr Allister's thoughts are. I think that he was described as a traditional barrister or lawyer during the previous debate. Mr Maginness was lumped in there as well. I am interested to hear what the traditional lawyer's voice has to say about amendment No 2. Is it weakening his original idea or complementing it?

5.45 pm

Mr Frew: With amendment No 1, I can remember very clearly that, in the House that night, the Justice Minister was very aggrieved and annoyed at the petulance of the Justice Committee in having done this. I would hate for him to have the powers of Henry VIII because I do not know what would have happened to individual members of the Justice Committee. However, it goes to show that the Justice Committee takes its role in the scrutiny of legislation very seriously. There was a principle at stake that we managed to drive home. That led to the Minister taking it in good grace and then amending —

Mr Ford: As usual.

Mr Frew: Sorry, Minister? OK. I thought that you wanted me to give way.

It is good that the Minister, the officials and the Justice Committee can work together in a good spirit to bring forward amendments that satisfy all of us and the House.

There has been much debate on amendment Nos 2 and 3 from the Justice Minister and the amendment from Sinn Féin's Raymond McCartney, which speaks to that. We understand the spirit of and the intention behind the amendment. We understand that the Minister's amendments would go much further and be tighter. We certainly welcome the spirit of and intention behind those amendments.

That leaves only amendment No 5, which is close and dear to my heart. I pay tribute to Lord Morrow — he has just stepped out of the Chamber — for his work on the issue to date. Before I even took the matter on, he had asked questions about it to build up a knowledge base to take it forward. I also commend the DOJ officials for working with me on getting an agreement and a form of words and the Minister for amending it here today to make it tighter and a much better fit in the Northern Ireland context. I also commend the staff in the Bill Office for their help throughout the process. They are a very able and worthy band of people who work quietly behind the scenes and do tremendous work for us all. We had a session on the subject with DOJ officials in Committee. They were able to reassure members on the procedural aspects and how it will work in practice, which is very important.

I commend the NSPCC for the work that it did with me. The NSPCC is part of PPANI. It is only well and good that the PPANI organisations are the administrators and managers. They are the experts and the people who manage and monitor. They are best placed to make decisions on disclosure. Of course, this was adding to that disclosure scheme. We already have disclosure in Northern Ireland whereby, if the PPANI organisations deem there to be a risk or threat to a person, they can disclose, so allowing a two-way process. Anyone who wishes to apply for disclosure will be able to do so. It is all based on and geared around the protection of a child. Members recognised that and saw that this could go some way to enhancing that protection. I pay tribute to the PPANI organisations. They are the people who do this daily to keep us all safe and reduce the risk to all of us, in particular our children. We must be cognisant of children. We must make sure that children, given that they are vulnerable, are placed in the safest place possible at any given stage of their lives.

I also pay tribute to Dolores Kelly and the SDLP for the amendments that they had brought forward but have withdrawn in the knowledge that they will come before us again.

I certainly will have no hesitation in supporting them. I recognise the spirit in which they were tabled and understand exactly what they would have done. They were also intended to enhance the protection of vulnerable people, which must be commended to the House.

I will end there, but, again, I thank everyone for supporting my amendment at Consideration Stage and, hopefully, supporting this amendment at Further Consideration Stage so that it can be enacted in law.

Mrs D Kelly: I am delighted to be able to speak to the amendments to clause 19. As others have said, the Minister has delivered on his commitment to our party by tabling amendments on the domestic violence protection notices (DVPNs) and the domestic violence protection orders (DVPOs), which are, as other Members said, designed better to protect victims of domestic violence. I thank all Members for their support and comments. As Mr Frew said, the Minister acknowledged the disclosure scheme by giving a commitment for wider consultation later in the summer or in the autumn. I look forward to that. As a party, we will certainly respond to that consultation, and I urge all Members to have their say.

What has been particularly exciting about the Justice Bill is the first group of amendments because they are primarily designed to afford better protection to victims of crime and, indeed, witnesses of crime. I commend Members who tabled amendments with that spirit and intent, today and at Consideration Stage.

As an Assembly and Executive, we will need to work in a much more collaborative way on resourcing better counselling services and better investment in refuges etc for victims of domestic violence, but that is, perhaps, a debate for another day.

Having spoken to some of the organisations and victims of domestic violence, I know that they are heartened by the way in which parties have approached this most sensitive of matters and by the party support for the principles behind these amendments.

I will not delay the House as I know that there is, potentially, a long evening ahead of us. I place on record my thanks to my policy staff, colleagues, the staff in the Bill Office — primarily Aoibhinn, once again — and the Minister. I ask the Minister to convey my thanks to his colleagues in the Department of Justice for working so closely with us in ensuring that the amendments meet the principle and the spirit that I had hoped they would contain when I first tabled them. I thank you all for that.

Mr Allister: I apologise at the outset that I was not here during the Minister's speech. I had to attend another event within the precincts.

I want to speak primarily to amendment Nos 2 and 3. It is patently clear to me that the Minister has sought to dilute, as close to the limit that he can, the amendment on PIs and mixed committals that I tabled and the House accepted. The Minister and his Department, having concealed the actual wording from the Committee, and not delivering it, I understand, until after the deadline for amendments had passed, likewise concealed it from me in that sense. I would have thought it not unreasonable, in the period between Consideration Stage and the tabling of amendments, for the Minister's officials to have at least liaised with me and advised me of the intended road of travel. However, it is quite clear that they did not wish to do that and that they wished to spring upon the House, after the closure of Further Consideration Stage amendments, their amendment as the sole amendment that the House effectively could consider. I think that that is a message that speaks to the departmental intent in itself.

Coming to the content of the amendment, I say that it dilutes — it certainly does — but it does more than that. It seeks to raise hurdles and hoops to make it quite prohibitive to attain that which the House approved: the retention of a PI or a mixed committal if that was in the interests of justice. It does that in a number of ways. It does it first by the very wide ambit of requiring:

“an application to set out grounds”, imposing a layer of bureaucracy that really is not necessary for these things, and to prescribe that the grounds — which this House has not seen and will not see at a point where it can change them — must:

“contain such other information as may be prescribed”.

That is the import of paragraph 3(a). So, the Department is holding to itself the capacity in the magistrates’ rules to set the bar as high as it can in order, in the rather telltale words of Mr Dickson of the Alliance Party, to ensure that a PI is only ever held in exceptional circumstances. The will of this House was that a PI would be held when it was necessary in the interests of justice. The purport of this amendment is to make sure that it can only ever be held in exceptional circumstances. And so the hurdles and hoops required to be passed through are made as wide as they can.

Then we come to some amazing language in paragraph 4:

“The court, after considering the application and any representations made to the court, may direct the holding of a preliminary investigation if (and only if) the court is satisfied that a preliminary investigation is required in the interests of justice.”

This is meant to be a piece of legislation; it is not a speech. The language “if (and only if)” is totally foreign to a legislative format. It is the tautology and emphasis that you would expect in a speech, but it is not the language of legislation. This legislation would have the same legal effect if it said, “may direct the holding of a preliminary investigation if the court is satisfied that a PI is required in the interests of justice”, but to use language like “if (and only if)”, what does that mean? What is the relevance of that to a clause in legislation?

“If (and only if)” might be relevant, as I say, to a speech; it is certainly not relevant to legislation. It is a very poor reflection, I think, on whoever drafted it, to think for one minute that that was appropriate to put in legislation. Of course, what it is trying to do is set the barrier as high as it can to intimidate a magistrate with language like “if (and only if)” then can you allow a preliminary investigation.

It goes on, in paragraph 5, to say:

“In determining an application under paragraph (2) the court shall in particular have regard to—

(a) the nature of the offence ... ;

(b) the interests of the persons likely to be witnesses”

That is in the context in which the principle is that you have a PI if it is in the interests of justice.

6.00 pm

Now we move to language that the court shall “in particular” have regard to these other matters. The import seems to be, “Let us deploy this as a mechanism to trump the interests of justice by emphasising that the court shall ‘in particular’ have regard to these matters”. Where was the problem in saying, “the court shall have regard to” the nature of the offences or the interests of the persons likely to be witnesses? Again, there is this unnecessary gilding of the lily — “if (and only if)” and “in particular” — to drive home the point to a magistrate, “Well dare you give a preliminary investigation”. Never mind that the proper test is in the interests of justice: this is the new test that the Minister wants to set.

The Minister has gone too far in his amendment in that regard, and he has gone too far in seeking to defy the considered wishes of the House at Consideration Stage. As I said at Consideration Stage, I have no difficulty with the amendment being tidied up, with it being amplified, or with making things clearer than in the few short clauses that were already there. I have no difficulty with that, but I take considerable exception to the concerted effort to dilute and change in this radical fashion that which the House had approved. The same applies in amendment No 3, because it too resorts to “if (and only if)” and “in particular” to do the same thing.

Turning to amendment No 4, tabled by Sinn Féin. I understand the thrust of it, but my difficulty with amendment No 4 is with the last clause where it talks about:

“a victim of rape or a violent sexual assault”.

The problem there is that during the trial process — indeed, in the pre-trial process — you cannot assume, and therefore cannot talk about, “a victim”. No crime has yet been proven in the process. Therefore, I would have thought that the amendment should have talked about “a complainant” in a rape case, or “a complainant” in a violent sexual assault. Those are the people that could be covered by this. There are some legal difficulties in shaping the amendment by expressly defining individuals as victims at a point before there has been a conviction of anyone. I understand what is intended, but it rather puts the cart before the horse. The language needs to refer to complainants.

Amendment No 18 purports to amend schedule 1 to change the fact that it says:

“A magistrates’ court has jurisdiction ... to conduct a preliminary inquiry into any indictable offence”.

to say that a magistrates’ court has jurisdiction to conduct a preliminary inquiry “or a preliminary investigation”.

That is fine, but I am surprised that it does not go on to say, “or a mixed committal”. We have three categories of disposal in the return for trial process. We have the preliminary investigation, a preliminary inquiry or a mixed committal. That is the infrastructure of the Magistrates’ Courts Order and all things attendant upon it. I am surprised that, when it came to amending the schedule, it did not say, “PI, PE or mixed committal”. I really think it needed to say that, but I will be interested to hear from the Minister why it does not. Maybe there is some reason for it that escapes me for now.

Mr Ford: Until the last contribution, I was beginning to think that there was going to be universal praise for everybody in sight. Before I criticise some aspects of what Members said, perhaps I should start off by praising the Committee and thanking its staff, my officials, legislative counsel, the Bill Office and the Members who have contributed and made specific comments. To disrupt that happy mood and given that there was such general agreement until the last contribution, I will go through some of the points that Members raised.

I have to disagree slightly with Mr Ross in the spirit of maintaining the fact that we do not entirely agree on the abolition of clause 86. He graciously acknowledged, as did others, the work that has been done to deal with that, but I think that there are real issues around legislation. The fact that similar provisions to those in the original clause 86 have been included in a significant number of Bills that have been before the House and have been mostly allowed through without any question suggests that there are reasons why that is done. They are not reasons of laziness. The fact that we now have 34 pages of legislation being amended in schedule 1 alone is an indication of the detail that has to be gone into.

It is also slightly ironic that, if we had not had the Bill before the House at this stage, it would have been necessary to amend the provisions of the human trafficking Act in respect of charities through a procedure in that Act that was passed by the House without any dissent or disagreement. That would have been necessary to make the provisions on charities, had we not had this Bill before the House at the appropriate time. There were reasons why it was done. It was not done out of laziness, and we need to be careful that we do not throw out proverbial babies with proverbial bathwater in that respect.

As I said, I recognise that we have had a constructive discussion, including direct engagement with the Committee on how we deal with that, with particular reference to Part 1 and the vast amount of legislation going back to 1842 that had to be amended because of the single jurisdiction issue. We have seen a lot of positive work done on that, so, whilst I will happily agree with the Chair that we perhaps need to look at the necessity of provisions like amendment No 1 and the previous clause 86, I do not think that we should automatically assume that we can do without it in all circumstances. I also thank the Chair for his recognition of the positive work that is being done on disclosure issues relating to adults and children, including the briefing that my officials and the police gave to the Committee last week. I think that it shows progress in that respect.

Mr Ross also asked about international charities and their potential role. The amendment on the specification of charities makes it clear that we are talking about charities that are registered under the laws of England and Wales, Scotland or Northern Ireland. I am not quite sure whether there are international charities operating in any part of the UK that are not registered in any part of the UK, but, as the law stands and as the amendment stands, they would not be permitted to carry out functions under the human trafficking legislation unless they are international charities that are registered in one or other of the UK jurisdictions.

Mr McCartney made similar points as vice-Chair — as he frequently does in backing up the Chair, especially when there is some modest criticism going on of the Minister — around clause 86, so I shall not repeat them. I liked his reference to his amendment around committals being “well intentioned but ill defined” and the grace with which he accepted that possibly my amendment was equally well intentioned but slightly better defined. It is an indication that we can do constructive work with many people in the House across a variety of issues. I trust that that has been recognised and that we are able to deal with the issue in a better way.

Alban Maginness again got in the point about amendment No 1 and congratulated the Minister for accepting the will of the House. I mouthed “as usual” across the Chamber to Paul Frew but did not make a formal intervention because I am well aware of the role of the Committee, which, I believe, still stands in the 1998 Act as being to advise and assist the Minister. Even if its advice is not always requested and its assistance is not always forthcoming, the general principle applies between the Justice Committee, departmental officials and, I trust, the Minister that there is still a fairly cooperative arrangement given the difficult issues we have to deal with. Even if we all have our tongue slightly in our cheek, I welcome the fact that it was a genuine comment from Mr Maginness about the work that was being done.

Mr Maginness hoped — his fellow member of “Traditional Lawyer’s Voice” went a little further later on — that the intentions of the amendment were not to blunt the will of the House. That was absolutely not the intention of the amendments. However, a number of Members pointed out issues around the exact impact of the interests of justice on victims. Indeed, I could embarrass him by quoting what the vice-Chair of the Committee, Raymond McCartney, said at Consideration Stage:

“What we are looking to see ... is ... it being up to someone to convince the magistrate that it was in the interests of justice for”

a witness

“to be called, rather than the reverse.” —
p118, col 1].

That is an indication not of backpedalling on the concept of the interests of justice but of ensuring that, in taking account of the interests of justice, we take account of the interests of those who may be required to give evidence, particularly vulnerable victims and witnesses who might be required to give evidence twice if there were a preliminary investigation but who do not need to do so in the interests of justice. By the fact that we balance the nature of the charge and the interests of victims and witnesses, I believe that this is the right balance between the two, not in an attempt to blunt — I think I have a fairly clear record of accepting the will of the House, including, frequently, when I disagree with it slightly — but to ensure that we put matters into practical sense to ensure that we move things forward as to how things can go ahead. I think that we have shown that the amendment, which was very largely encouraged by a number of Members of the House who recognised the difficulties that there were, would be able to deal with this in a way that is realistic, proportionate and practical. I trust that this will show that we can move forward around this area in a way that protects the most vulnerable.

Mr Maginness asked specifically about the provisions for extraterritorial cases. It is my understanding that, at this stage, the defendant does not have the right to object to a preliminary inquiry in those cases and this is merely a replication because of slight changes in the wording of the already extant provision; it is not any change in it. He also asked about whether the references in clause 8 are to a mixed committal. They are, in fact, references to a mixed committal on the basis that they are matters where some people are required to give evidence at what is a preliminary inquiry. That is a mixed committal in practical terms, so it covers the particular issues raised there.

Mr Dickson, of course, joined in the usual roll call of those praising the Minister. I am grateful to him, and it would be slightly worrying if I did not have one person sitting behind me who was positive and constructive. He made the interesting point that preliminary investigations had been abolished elsewhere in other common-law jurisdictions. He highlighted England and Wales, and it is also the case that they have been abolished entirely in the Republic of Ireland. We are not seeking to abolish; we are seeking to ensure that they are used where appropriate in the interests of justice, and the interests of justice include the needs of victims.

So there are positive changes within that. We established that we have got that right by looking at the balance of the first round of speakers.

Mr Elliott referred, in the context of the committal proceedings, to having thought that Jim Allister's previous amendments were a kind of halfway house and that, to some extent, I was dragging matters halfway back again. I am sorry but I do not recognise that as being the position. Indeed, I know that there are those who are even better acquainted with the courts than me or, perhaps, Mr Maginness or Mr Elliott who believe that, as I said at Consideration Stage, the practical effects of the amendments put forward by Mr Allister would be virtually no change.

I think that the wish of the House to deal with the needs of victims has been fully covered by these amendments, and the comments around the House have largely reflected that. It is not a matter of taking a halfway house and pulling it back. The amendments tabled and passed at Consideration Stage would have meant virtually no difference in practice. In accordance with the remarks of many Members around the House, it is about the need to ensure that those vulnerable people who might be required to give evidence were suitably protected.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Minister for giving way. It is merely a query around amendment Nos 2 and 3. Is amendment No 2 necessary when you have amendment No 3, which deals with the evidence on oath, which is around vulnerable victims or vulnerable complainants, as Mr Allister highlighted? I just wonder whether it is necessary to have amendment No 2 if you have amendment No 3.

Mr Ford: The answer is straightforward and simple. We need amendment Nos 2 and 3 because we have clause 7 and clause 8 in the Bill, which deal with different issues and both are required to be covered in the amendments. They are similar issues but they are different issues. Therefore, we have to ensure that we get things covered carefully in that respect.

Mr Frew suggested that the Minister sounded a bit annoyed, and he somehow managed to equate me to Henry VIII, which is deeply worrying since, not that long ago, I was told that I was not as bad as Henry VIII. So, I will go with the remarks made about me at Consideration Stage and ignore Mr Frew in that respect. However, I think that it is an issue where we have shown that the Department and this Minister do not always agree with everything that comes from the Committee. I am entitled to disagree on the basis of information that I have before me, but I am also required to take account of the views of the House and to seek to work constructively with the Committee. So, if Mr Frew thought that I was about to behead him or throw him in the tower— [Laughter.] — I can assure him that I have no such powers, and, if I had them, I would not use them against him when he is working constructively with me. There are practical issues where, frankly, we disagree at times, even though a lot of what we do is positive, constructive and engaging.

Mr Frew then went on to praise everybody, including, most notably, Lord Morrow for his role as he worked on the disclosure issues. I will happily register a slight smile at Mr Frew's allegations about me and pass on and continue to be constructive. I noticed that he made one very significant point about the disclosure issues, which is that those are building on the existing PPANI arrangements. That is the key factor; not that we are upsetting the provisions that we have, not that we are dealing with major radical change, but that we are building on good work already being done by the police, probation and other agencies within PPANI and refining it that little bit to make it that little bit better. When we talk about promoting this, we should not suggest that there were not good arrangements in place previously, because I think that that would be doing a disservice to many dedicated public officials who have worked extremely hard over the years on the PPANI arrangements, and I appreciate the fact that Mr Frew is, again, nodding in response to something that I said, even if he laughs at Henry VIII references.

I am also grateful for the fact that Mrs Kelly commented that she believed that the Minister had delivered on his commitments in the Bill and in the forthcoming consultation. I think that recognises the practical reality of the cooperation. She and her colleagues bear a part of that practical cooperation for the work that they have done. It was also very significant when, in the penultimate contribution of the debate before my final winding-up speech, Mrs Kelly said that this group of amendments is about the protection of victims and witnesses. I believe that that is the case in every aspect of what we are looking at, whether we are looking at committal reform or the specific issues around disclosure. There is a lot in this that is about ensuring that people are better protected and better looked after across the justice system generally. We should be grateful for that, as we look at issues like domestic violence, protection orders and protection notices, as we look at disclosure and as we look at the way in which committal is run. It is about protecting victims and witnesses, which has been a key aim of the Committee since justice powers were devolved. On that issue, there has been good partnership, which is absolutely correct.

In the final contribution, Mr Allister ensured that all was not sweetness, light and harmony in the Chamber. First of all, he admitted that he was not here to hear my opening contribution. It is slightly difficult when you do not know exactly what was said in the opening remarks. When he said that it was clear to him that the Minister wished to dilute the will of the House, he contradicted every other Member of this House who has recognised that there has been good and close working partnership between Members of the House, particularly members of the Justice Committee, and the Department, whether it is the officials or the Minister. That was absolutely not the case. The case was to take account of what was said at Consideration Stage and ensure that we put things right.

I was accused of springing an amendment on the House by someone who produced an idea without any discussion with anybody that, on advice from legislative counsel, did not sit easily with existing legislation. He produced that without notice at Consideration Stage and then he accused me of, in my response, springing something on the House. It was absolutely clear, from the discussion at Consideration Stage and with the Committee afterwards, that there was a will to make amendments to the amendments that were provided on the issue of committal. If I am asked to choose between taking advice on what is proper drafting from legislative counsel or from Mr Allister, I will choose the advice of legislative counsel. If I am asked about what the effects will be on the court, I will take advice from those who have specific experience of how it runs.

What we have put forward in the first group of amendments is a reasonable and workable programme that will ensure that the changes that were made at Consideration Stage are made better, that we deal with the specific issue of the charity recognition to ensure that we can better protect the victims of human trafficking, and that everything else we are doing is designed to improve our overall commitment to improving services for victims and witnesses across the justice system. With the exception of Mr McCartney's gracious recognition of the difference between amendment No 3 and amendment No 4, I commend all the other amendments to the House.

Amendment No 1 agreed to.

Clause 7 (Preliminary investigations)

Amendment No 2 made:

In page 5, leave out lines 7 to 12 and insert

"7.—(1) The Magistrates' Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 is amended as set out in subsections (2) to (5).

(2) After Article 29 insert—

'Committal proceedings for indictable offences

29A.—(1) Committal proceedings in a magistrates' court in relation to an indictable offence are to be conducted—

(a) in a case where the court directs under this Article that a preliminary investigation is to be held, by way of a preliminary investigation;

(b) in all other cases, by way of a preliminary inquiry.

(2) An accused may apply to the court for a direction that a preliminary investigation is to be held.

(3) Magistrates' court rules may make provision in relation to an application under paragraph (2), including provision—

(a) for an application to set out the grounds on which the application is made and contain such other information as may be prescribed;

(b) requiring an application to be made before a prescribed time;

(c) for the procedure to be followed in determining the application (including provision for representations to be made to the court by the prosecution or the accused).

(4) The court, after considering the application and any representations made to the court, may direct the holding of a preliminary investigation if (and only if) the court is satisfied that a preliminary investigation is required in the interests of justice.

(5) In determining an application under paragraph (2) the court shall in particular have regard to—

(a) the nature of the offence or offences charged;

(b) the interests of the persons likely to be witnesses at a preliminary investigation."

(3) In Article 30 (preliminary investigation) for paragraph (1) substitute—

"(1) This Article applies where committal proceedings are conducted by way of a preliminary investigation following a direction under Article 29A."

(4) Omit Article 31 (preliminary inquiry at request of prosecution).

(5) In Article 32 (preliminary inquiry: service of documents)—

(a) in paragraph (1) for the words from the beginning to the end of sub-paragraph (a) substitute—

"(1) A reasonable time before the day fixed for the conduct of committal proceedings, the prosecution shall—

(a) provide the clerk of petty sessions with copies of the documents mentioned in sub-paragraph (b); and";

(b) in paragraph (1)(b) omit—

(i) the words "a copy of that notice together with"; and

(ii) the words "a reasonable time before the day fixed for the conduct of the preliminary inquiry";

(c) omit paragraph (3).

(6) In section 4 of the Criminal Jurisdiction Act 1975 (trial of extra-territorial offences) for subsection (3) substitute—

"(3) Where a person is charged with an extra-territorial offence so much of Article 29A of the Magistrates' Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 as affords to the accused a right to apply for a direction that a preliminary investigation is to be held shall not apply, and the procedure shall be by way of preliminary inquiry under that Order, and not by way of preliminary investigation."

(7) Section 3 of the Justice and Security (Northern Ireland) Act 2007 (committal proceedings for trial without a jury) is repealed."— [Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice).]

Clause 8 (Mixed committals: evidence on oath at preliminary inquiry)

Amendment No 3 made:

In page 5, leave out lines 14 to 16 and insert

"8.—(1) Article 34 of the Magistrates' Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 (giving of evidence on oath at preliminary inquiry) is amended as follows.

(2) After paragraph (1) insert—

"(1A) The prosecution or the accused may apply to the court for leave to require a person to attend and give evidence on oath in accordance with paragraph (2).

(1B) Magistrates' court rules may make provision in relation to an application under paragraph (1A), including provision—

(a) for an application to set out the grounds on which the application is made and contain such other information as may be prescribed;

(b) requiring an application to be made before a prescribed time;

(c) for the procedure to be followed in determining the application (including provision for representations to be made to the court by the prosecution or the accused).

(1C) The court, after considering the application and any representations made to the court, may give leave to the applicant if (and only if) the court is satisfied that the interests of justice require it.

(1D) In determining an application under paragraph (1A) the court shall in particular have regard to—

(a) the nature of the offence or offences charged;

(b) the interests of the persons likely to be required to give evidence at the preliminary inquiry.

(1E) Where leave is granted to one party under paragraph (1C), the court may (without any application) grant leave to the other party to require a person to attend and give evidence on oath in accordance with paragraph (2)."

(3) In paragraph (2) for the words from the beginning to "may each require" substitute "The court (of its own motion), the prosecution (if granted leave under paragraph (1C) or (1E)) and the accused (if granted such leave) may each require".— [Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice).]

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): I will not call amendment No 4 as it is mutually exclusive with amendment No 3, which has been made.

Clause 48 (Child protection disclosures)

Amendment No 5 made:

In page 35, line 1, leave out subsections (2) to (4) and insert

"(2) In Article 49 (1) (interpretation of Part 3)—

(a) after the definition of "agencies" insert—

" "child" means a person under the age of 18;

"conviction" includes—

(i) a conviction by or before a court outside Northern Ireland;

(ii) any finding (other than a finding linked with a finding of insanity) in any criminal proceedings that a person has committed an offence or done the act or made the omission charged;

(iii) a caution given to a person in respect of an offence which, at the time when the caution was given, the person has admitted;"

(b) after the definition of "specified" insert—

" "relevant previous conviction", in relation to a person, means a conviction for a sexual or violent offence by reason of which the person falls within a specified description of persons;"

(3) In Article 50 (guidance to agencies on assessing and managing certain risks to the public) after paragraph (2) insert—

"(2A) Guidance under this Article must contain provisions about arrangements for considering the disclosure, to any particular member of the public, of information concerning any relevant previous convictions of a person where it is necessary to protect a particular child or particular children from serious harm caused by that person; and the guidance may, in particular, contain provisions for the purpose of preventing a member of the public from disclosing that information to any other person."

(4) In Article 50(3) for "Paragraph (2) does" substitute "Paragraphs (2) and (2A) do".— [Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice).]

New Clause

Mr Deputy Speaker (Mr Beggs): We now come to the second group of amendments for debate. With amendment No 6, it will be convenient to debate amendment No 7. Members will also note that a valid petition of concern has been received this afternoon to amendment No 7, so the vote on that amendment will not be taken today and will require cross-community support.

We will continue with the Further Consideration Stage of the Justice Bill up to and including the Question on amendment No 6. I will then ask whether amendment No 7 is to be moved. If amendment No 7 is moved, we will be unable to proceed beyond that point today. If that is clear, we will proceed.

Mr Ross: I beg to move amendment 6: After clause 81 insert

"Unpaid community service after early release

81A. In Article 19 of the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008 after paragraph (1) insert —

"(1A) The Department may by regulations, having consulted the Probation Board, provide for a community service scheme, under which a person released under paragraph (1) may be required to engage in unpaid community service for the remaining period of the fixed term they would have served but for their early release."."

The following amendment stood on the Marshalled List:

No 7: After clause 89 insert

"Sentencing for violent offences against older people

89A.—(1) This section applies where an individual is convicted of a violent offence and that individual was aged 18 or over when the offence was committed.

(2) The court shall impose a custodial sentence for a term of at least seven years (with or without a fine) unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify its not doing so.

(3) For the purposes of this section "violent offence" means an offence which leads or is intended or likely to lead to the death of a person aged 65 years or more or to physical injury to a person aged 65 years or more and includes an offence which is required to be charged as arson (whether or not it would otherwise fall within this definition).

(4) If there are exceptional circumstances which justify—

(a) the imposition of a lesser sentence than that provided for under subsection (2), or

(b) the exercise by the court of its powers under section 18 of the Treatment of Offenders Act (Northern Ireland) 1968, the court shall state in open court that it is of the opinion that such exceptional circumstances exist and the reasons for that opinion.

(5) Where subsection (4) applies the Chief Clerk shall record both the opinion of the court that exceptional circumstances exist and the reasons stated in open court which justify either the imposition of a lesser sentence or the exercise of its powers under section 18 of the Treatment of Offenders Act (Northern Ireland) 1968 as the case may be.

(6) For the purposes of subsection (2) “custodial sentence” shall not include a sentence in relation to which the court has made an order under section 18 of the Treatment of Offenders Act (Northern Ireland) 1968.

(7) For the avoidance of doubt, an offence falling within the definition of subsection (3) is a violent offence for the purposes of this section whether or not there is evidence that any individual who is convicted of such an offence knew or suspected that any person who dies or sustains physical injury, or any person who is intended or likely to die or sustain physical injury, is aged 65 years or more.

(8) In section 36 (reviews of sentencing) of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 in subsection (9)(d) after “2015” insert the words—

Mr Ross: I noticed that Mrs Kelly spoke about how excited she was about the first group of amendments. Given that she is not here now, perhaps she does not find the second group quite as exciting. Perhaps she will make an appearance later on.

I will speak to amendment No 6 in my name and make some general comments on amendment No 7, which stands in the name of my colleagues Mr Poots and Mr Givan. As the Committee will know, since taking up post, I have been keen to examine how we can take a more innovative approach to justice, making the criminal justice system in Northern Ireland quicker, fairer and more accessible and, ultimately, one that makes us safer by protecting the public and rehabilitating criminals.

As I have said many times before, just as the global downturn forced private-sector organisations to improve their levels of efficiency and look at doing things differently to ensure that outcomes improve, so too should government and the public sector use the environment of public-spending reductions as a springboard for reform and innovative approaches to policy. I am keen to look at how we can deliver better outcomes in justice through being more cost-effective, ensuring that rehabilitation reduces the chance of reoffending and ensuring that victims and the general public are content that offenders are punished appropriately for the crimes that they commit.

By way of background to my amendment, on 28 May, at my request, Department of Justice officials briefed the Committee on the commencement of articles 19, 20, 26 and 30 of the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008. That followed similar briefings received by the Committee back in February and May of 2012, at which Committee members considered the consequences of commencing the named articles.

Article 19 provides the Department with a wide-ranging discretionary power to release prisoners early if it were so minded, without the need for any recourse to the Assembly or the Justice Committee. I think that it is prudent to establish that the bar is set very high for those prisoners who would meet the criteria and that any prisoner who is in any way a risk to society will not be eligible. That includes perpetrators of serious crimes such as violent or sexual offenders; those with terrorist convictions or who are in prison for an extended custodial sentence; a prisoner who is subject to a hospital order or a transfer direction under the Mental Health Order 1986; a prisoner who is liable for removal from the United Kingdom; or a prisoner who has been released on licence under the article and recalled subsequently during the currency of the sentence. However, if we are of the belief that prison serves the dual role of punishment and rehabilitation, we should recognise that, in limited circumstances, the Department may consider it appropriate to provide for a conditional early release of a prisoner. Whilst it is unlikely that the types of offences that we are envisaging under the scheme will have resulted in any direct victims as such, if the offender committed a crime in which there was an individual victim, that victim should be fully informed and, indeed, be part of the process.

Articles 26 and 30 of the order are commenced at the same time as article 19 and provide for individuals to be subject to a curfew and recall during the early release period. Although the current law allows for prisoners who are deemed to be low risk, with excellent behaviour while in prison, to apply for early release, the way in which the order is currently drafted means that, although attendance at AA or anger management meetings can be applied, the Prison Service, the Department of Justice or the Probation Board cannot, as part of the early release scheme, compel individuals to see out the remainder of their sentence in a community service scheme or unpaid work programme. Although I am personally open to the idea of looking at alternatives to custodial sentences for low-level first-time offenders, I also believe that, if individuals are sentenced to a particular length of time, they should serve out that period.

I therefore offer amendment No 6 to the House in the hope that it does two things. First, I hope that it will ensure that those who are sentenced to a period in which they lose their liberty see out that sentence but, secondly, that it will allow for the end of their sentence to be in the form of a community service, with a graduated return to normal life. That not only ensures that those successful in getting conditional early release must still pay back their debt to society in a more meaningful way but transitions them into normal life and work and, importantly, ensures that the taxpayer does not have to keep them in prison unnecessarily.

6.30 pm

Conditional early release is not in itself a novel concept and is utilised in the rest of the United Kingdom and, indeed, in the Irish Republic. In fact, the model that I propose is similar to that operating in the Irish Republic. Officials here have already indicated that they and the Probation Board are keen to examine the possibility of introducing the scheme to Northern Ireland.

The Irish Republic's scheme came about following the report of the Thornton Hall project review group in July 2011. That report, amongst other things, noted the powers of the Irish Government to release a prisoner early to reintegrate that prisoner into society and suggested that, as a positive step, the Justice Minister should introduce a form of earned temporary release with a requirement for community service to prepare prisoners for release on completion of their sentences. The introduction of community service orders, therefore, required an offender to perform an activity in the community, such as unpaid work, which allows offenders to repay their debt to society and to pursue reform, rehabilitation or reparation in the community.

Evidence suggests that this is a successful programme that reduces reoffending rates and is a more cost-effective way to rehabilitate offenders. Whilst reducing the prison population should not be the primary motivation, there could be modest cost savings from the scheme. I appeal to the House to support amendment No 6 to ensure public confidence in the requirement for prisoners who are eligible for early release to see out their sentence in the form of community service and to help to transition low-risk offenders into the general population.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Member for giving way. I just have a query. He has put forward a very interesting amendment. Has he had any discussions with the Probation Board or any of the other criminal justice agencies about the proposal? It would be interesting to hear what they have to say.

Mr Ross: There have been two levels of contact. First, in Committee, when officials briefed the Committee, and I raised the issue with them directly — they said that they were interested and were certainly supportive of a move towards a scheme similar to that in the Irish Republic — and, secondly, informally, through discussions that I have had with members of the Probation Board, who also support it. The Minister is also generally supportive, although it would take time to work out some of the detail. Those whom I have spoken to about this scheme have been very supportive.

I turn to amendment No 7, in the names of my colleagues, which deals with violent offences against older people. I am aware that a petition of concern has been lodged against this. I am sure that all of us, at some stage in our work, have had to visit elderly constituents who have been attacked in their home or robbed on the street close to their home. Indeed, I recall visiting one elderly woman in Monkstown who had been mugged for only a few pounds and a gold necklace and was terrified to leave her home in case she was attacked again. The public are quite rightly outraged at this type of attack against vulnerable members of our community and want action taken against those who perpetrate such despicable acts. This undoubtedly motivated the two Members to bring forward their amendment.

I believe that violent offences should carry a heavy sentence, and anyone who attacks people incapable of defending themselves deserves to be put behind bars for a significant period. It is clear that, as public representatives, we have a responsibility to act on behalf of the wider community, and I have no doubt that most members of the public will support the motivation behind this amendment. However, I also respect the separation of powers, which respects the independence of the judiciary when determining appropriate sentences, and, for that reason, I am always cautious of the imposition of mandatory minimum sentences by a legislature.

This amendment, however, in many ways, seeks to find a middle ground between the expectations of the public and the independence of the judiciary. Most Members should at least acknowledge that this evening. Clause 89A(2) provides the discretion for the courts that I believe is fundamental to ensuring that justice is served. It states:

“The court shall impose a custodial sentence for a term of at least seven years ... unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify its not doing so.”

That discretion means that a judge can take into consideration the personal circumstances of the alleged offender when handing down a sentence. In circumstances in which a person was abused by someone now over the age of 65, whom he confronts, leading to a physical altercation, the context of the altercation is fully taken into consideration.

I know that Members who tabled a petition of concern this evening will argue either that they are opposed to mandatory minimum sentences in principle or that they believe that seven years is too high, but I would have thought that they would at least acknowledge that Mr Poots and Mr Givan, in the wording of their amendment, have addressed the unintended consequences that could flow from the —

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Ross: Yes.

Mr B McCrea: I am interested in the argument that the Member has put forward, but the amendment, with so many caveats in it, seems to be meaningless, in that there are so many exceptions. If he supports the amendment, can he tell us why and what difference it will actually make?

Mr Ross: What is clear from the amendment is that it is almost like a starting point. The legislation on minimum sentences, including that in Great Britain, has a starting point. It is the legislature saying that, because of the type of offence that we are talking about, there is a public concern, and this is a sentence that the legislature thinks appropriate. However, I also firmly believe that there needs to be discretion for the judiciary to allow for certain circumstances, and that is the point that I made. For Members concerned about a minimum sentence, I think that the inclusion in the amendment of discretion for the courts is a responsible one that should ease concerns that there would not be such discretion.

A clear message is being sent out that we take attacks against the elderly very seriously. It makes sure that there is some comfort for elderly members of the community who are very nervous about being attacked in their own home, and it sends out a strong message to those who would target the vulnerable that those issues are taken very seriously. It provides a framework for the judiciary as well. However, as I said, there is a petition of concern on it. That is unfortunate, but we will listen with interest to the contributions from Members explaining why they are opposed to it.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Ross: I will give way. I was just about to sit down.

Mr Allister: The amendment is not clear on whether it is supposed to apply to all courts, whether it is just the Crown Court or whether it is also the district courts. Could that be clarified?

Mr Ross: It is my understanding that the district court would not be able to deal with these issues, so that would not be appropriate, but, as I said, the amendment is not in my name. Perhaps the individuals who tabled the amendment will wish to elaborate on that for Mr Allister. I have made general comments on it from my point of view, but I suspect that Mr Poots will address that in more detail when he moves the amendment in his name.

Mr McCartney: Go raibh maith agat, a LeasCheann Comhairle. I will speak first on amendment No 6, which is tabled in the name of Alastair Ross, and we will support it. I think that, in outlining the reasons why he brought the amendment to the debate today, he put it in context. The Department briefed the Committee on a number of occasions about a procedure that it will use to release prisoners early from their sentence. The Chair, Alastair Ross, spoke about the bar being set and how it will be done to ensure that the people who are released early pose absolutely no risk to the public. Rightly, he identified a gap: whereas other stipulations can be put on a prisoner on release, there was a gap in relation to community service. I think that this was an appropriate mechanism to address that.

The wording of the amendment allows a degree of latitude for the Prison Service and the Probation Board so that it does not become a stipulation. That is in case there are other things that prisoners might do on release. They might take up full-time employment, and community service, if not a hindrance, might certainly reduce their prospects of that. What it is designed to do, in much the same way as if someone was given a sentence that included a probation order, is give rise to conditions that will assist that. In that context, we will support it.

We will oppose amendment No 7, tabled in the name of Paul Givan and Edwin Poots.

Further Consideration Stage is not the appropriate time to bring this type of new clause in front of the Assembly, given the breadth and depth of it and perhaps the discussion that is needed on it. Attacks on older people and how they are treated by the justice system are something worth discussing, certainly worth highlighting and therefore definitely worth campaigning for. However, my party's opinion is that the remit and intent of the clause is such that it would require the full scrutiny process of the Assembly to ensure that we do the right thing with regard to any legislative process.

Mr Givan: Will the Member give way?

Mr McCartney: I will indeed, yes.

Mr Givan: Will the Member concede that this is the very same point that he made about an amendment on the regulation of private abortion clinics and that when we did that, the Members opposite issued a petition of concern? Sometimes, it does not really matter what we are going to do: if you are opposed in principle, you will use these arguments, but they are not actually substantive.

Mr McCartney: During the recent debate, we said that the approach taken was the principle of full scrutiny, but we also outlined reasons why we opposed the intention of that amendment at that time, so it was a two-pronged approach. This is a two-pronged approach as well. Who knows what our approach would be if this were brought through full scrutiny. We have reservations about minimum sentencing. I will go into that shortly. The reason why I said it was that, this afternoon, the Health Minister moved the Second Stage of the Mental Capacity Bill in the House. He talked about the long process of framing that Bill. He talked about the long process of scrutiny that the Ad Hoc Committee, of which I am a member, will give to the Bill. He cautioned the Committee about amendments — I suppose, from his point of view, correctly — and that sometimes, even after full scrutiny, the intention of an amendment can take a Bill in the opposite direction. He said that when you legislate in haste, you sometimes have to repent at leisure. That is an appropriate observation, if you like, for this amendment.

A number of people pointed out the deficiencies, from their point of view, in the way in which this has been proposed. Only two Members have spoken, so I assume that others, when they speak, will look at it in a number of ways. We believe that to come at this stage of a legislative programme with a proposal like this, with no scrutiny process, does not allow the issues to be considered by the stakeholders involved: the justice agencies, the PSNI and, I suppose, even the Sentencing Council. Their views would, in my opinion, allow us to inform ourselves better of how we should take this forward and, in particular, how we deal with the issue.

I have elderly parents. I accept that the vulnerability of older people is something worth discussing. It is worth reminding ourselves that perhaps they do not feel as protected as they should. The process to take us to the conclusion is not to come in at Further Consideration Stage. I think that we all accept that Further Consideration Stage is the part of the process where you tighten up deficiencies after all the scrutiny. While the proposers may be well intentioned, I think that, in many ways, this is a process of circumventing the system. The point can be made — I will make it here, too, to the Justice Minister and, indeed, to any other Minister — that sometimes when a Bill is so broad, and we had a discussion about this previously, it nearly becomes a miscellaneous Bill. When it becomes a miscellaneous Bill, you lay the ground for this type of clause or amendment to be brought in at the last stage. It is totally legitimate with regard to the process, but with regard to the outcome, it is far from that.

If this ever resurrects itself in another guise, and so that I am not accused of saying that we should have full scrutiny but that we still POC'd it at the end, I want to say that there are issues around minimum sentences. We have discussed this before. There have been other motions in the House and indeed circumstances when legislation was seeking minimum sentences and we spoke against them. I well remember a private Member's motion dealing with this issue. A number of Members said that a minimum sentence did not allow for judicial discretion or the circumstances to be taken into account.

There is even the framing of this amendment. Many would ask, "Why 65? Should the same protections not be offered to 64-year-olds?" The amendment may be well-intentioned to try to deal with an issue that we need to deal with, but, in our opinion, this is not the way to do it. With that in mind, particularly around the principle of no scrutiny, we were certainly willing to sign a petition of concern.

If it is brought back to a Committee, we will certainly raise the other points around clarity, minimum sentences and even whether it is an idea to pick an arbitrary figure and say that some will be protected at that age and others will not. That is something that we will discuss at that stage, but for the purpose of tonight's debate, we are supportive of the concept and use of the petition of concern. Go raibh mile maith agat.

Mr A Maginness: The SDLP is supportive of amendment No 6, and we commend Mr Alastair Ross for bringing it to the Committee and the House. The amendment will fill a gap that he spotted. It does not exclude the possibility of a prisoner who is released early from, if it is appropriate, getting gainful employment. In any circumstance, one would desire that to happen, and it is important that this is permissive rather than mandatory.

In a way, that helpfully leads into amendment No 7, on sentencing for violent offences against older people.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr A Maginness: Yes, indeed.

Mr B McCrea: Just before you move on to amendment No 7, I am interested in your thought processes regarding the permissive nature of amendment No 6. It seems that these terms are quite loose: that people "may be required". If it is such a good idea, should we not be a wee bit more exacting in the matter? Why does the Member favour that form of the amendment?

Mr A Maginness: First, it fills a gap, and, secondly, it provides a flexibility that is helpful in dealing with the early release of prisoners. In circumstances where a prisoner has gained early release, we have to provide, in my view, an environment in which that person can constructively live in the community and, to some extent, pay for the harm that he did to the community.

I believe that Mr Ross and his colleagues intend for this provision to do that, and that is a worthwhile objective. It remains to be seen how it would work in practice. Nonetheless, it is better that a person who is released from prison early, who is carrying out work in the community gratis, without being paid for that, is provided with discipline and a structure to their lives that might otherwise be absent. It does not exclude a person, where an opportunity arises, from taking up gainful employment. I will give way to Mr Ross.

Mr Ross: I thank the Member. He is explaining very well the rationale behind the amendment and its importance to someone who has been released from prison. We are talking about very low-level people who have had model behaviour in prison but who have the opportunity to turn their lives around and contribute to society. He is absolutely right on that point.

The other point is that the flexibility that the amendment offers is important. It allows the Probation Board, which is ultimately the organisation that is responsible for monitoring offenders, to work with the Department to ensure that the detail on this is adequate. I think that it is important that we allow the Probation Board, the Prison Service and the Department to work together to bring that forward. I am sure that the Minister would commit to consulting with the Committee as the detail of this is worked out. However, I think that the principle of this is something that everybody should be able to support.

Mr A Maginness: I am not sure whether our combined efforts satisfy Mr McCrea. As I said, the fact that it is not mandatory is a useful entrée into the next amendment, amendment No 7, which is mandatory and which we in the SDLP oppose.

People are quite rightly outraged by violent offences against older people. That goes without saying, and I think the whole House would defend older people against violent attacks. That is right and proper, and the SDLP, amongst other parties, supports that. However, I have to say that there are other violent crimes against other categories of individuals. Violent crime is something that is repulsive and something that all of us condemn, but there are other categories of people that we could select as being extremely vulnerable, such as vulnerable adults, those with learning difficulties, those with mental health difficulties —

Mr McGlone: I thank the Member for giving way. I hear entirely what the general thrust of the amendment is about. I think that Members will recognise this, as they have sat through the evidence-taking sessions on the Mental Capacity Bill and heard of the frailties and vulnerabilities of people who find themselves in those situations. They could equally be regarded as vulnerable and as subject and more susceptible to violent acts, and, indeed, as people on whom others prey. While I hear the general thrust of what you are saying, and I agree with it up to a point, you have to say that there are others who would equally fit the bill of being prone, vulnerable and susceptible to violent acts.

Mr A Maginness: I could not have put it better myself. The point that has to be made is that the authors of the amendment — I do not, in any way, impugn their motives — have selected the category of older persons. That is a category that is deserving of protection and support, but as Mr McGlone said, there are other categories. Children are, of course, one such category. We have talked about older people, and we could talk about children, who particularly require protection, help and support.

There is no opposition to the general thrust of amendment No 7, but it is focused on one particular group. Our objections to amendment No 7 are much wider than its selective nature, no matter how deserving that category. Our objections are, in essence, to the mandatory nature of the amendment. It means that a mandatory minimum sentence of seven years will be imposed on somebody who is convicted.

As a party, we take the view that mandatory minimum sentencing is not in itself a good thing. There are certain exceptions where it, in fact, is done. In excess alcohol cases, for example, you will lose your licence for six months, a year or whatever. Those are mandatory minimum sentences, but they are the exceptions. Murder, of course, carries a mandatory life sentence, although that is an expansive term. A life sentence is an elastic term because it can mean a wide range of years of imprisonment. Mandatory minimum sentencing is a very limited thing, and we should proceed cautiously in creating a new mandatory minimum category that, effectively, ties the hands of the court in exercising its judicial discretion. I listened carefully to what the proposer said in relation to exceptional circumstances and understand that that, to some extent, qualifies the mandatory nature. Nonetheless, from our point of view, it is still not an acceptable proposition. We do not believe that you should constrain the discretion of the court to the extent that the amendment does.

The other point I want to make on this is that the tariff is seven years. I do not know how the supporters of the amendment arrived at seven years. You could easily have arrived at five years, four years, 10 years or whatever. There is no visible rationale for arriving at what I would suggest is an arbitrary figure of seven years. I recognise that it is a fairly substantial sentence, but where is the rationale for arriving at the specific figure of seven years? That has to be fully examined.

Proposed new clause 89A(3) states:

“For the purposes of this section ‘violent offence’ means an offence which leads or is intended or likely to lead to the death of a person aged 65 years or more or to physical injury to a person aged 65 years or more and includes an offence which is required to be charged as arson (whether or not it would otherwise fall within this definition).”

I quote that, but the material point I want to make is that the offence relates to:

“physical injury to a person aged 65 years or more”.

Now, if Mr McGlone were over 65 — he is not; he is a very young man — and I gave him a clout on his head, which of course I would never do, and he sustained injury, would I be within that category if I was found guilty? Would the court then decide or feel obliged to impose a seven-year sentence? My point is that physical injury in the context of the amendment is ill defined; in fact, it is not defined at all. I understand the proposer’s intent, which, I assume, is to deal with a much more serious injury than simply giving Mr McGlone a clout on the side of the head. It is something that I would have thought would cause some sort of serious injury. That requires definition, but that definition is not contained in the amendment. The amendment is defective, at least in that regard. I could explore that even further, but I will not do so. It is sufficient to raise that point, which shows a specific and, I would say, fatal weakness in the amendment.

I will make one further point, and it is a point of substance. The amendment — I know that it is well intentioned, but it is ill thought-out — should really have been discussed at the Justice Committee thoroughly in detail. We should have heard evidence in relation to the proposal. Mr McCartney made a fair point on that. That did not take place. It is such a serious proposition and such a point of substance that it requires further examination, and it would have required the full attention of the Committee in a series of meetings and discussions. That reason also makes the amendment something that should not be acceptable to the Assembly.

The final point is this: we employ judges to make decisions and to exercise judicial discretion. We put a lot of faith and trust in judges. Sometimes, they get it right; sometimes, they get it wrong. The point is that we appoint people to judge and to exercise a judicial discretion. What we are doing in the amendment is removing that judicial discretion. It is something of value. We could replace our judges with computers and just feed in the information to the computer and get the result, but we do not do that; we employ a human being who is experienced and legally trained to exercise judgement and discretion. We should leave it at that. The amendment, whilst well intentioned and based on a need to protect the vulnerable in our society, particularly the elderly, is ill thought-out and defective. Therefore, we in the SDLP cannot support it.

Mr Elliott: These are some of the more controversial amendments at Further Consideration Stage today. Mr Allister’s amendment No 6, which concerns unpaid community service, is quite interesting. Who has heard of that for some time? It is a positive contribution, in fairness, to the justice system. We want to give alternatives, different mechanisms and means as opposed to custodial sentencing. That is one option. It is an interesting project and proposition, and it will probably find support around the House. I was interested to know about the discussions that he has had, particularly with the Probation Board. He outlined the informal discussions, and, when some people gave evidence at Committee, he probed on that. It seems to be one that will gather momentum. There are some outworkings to be carried out in relation to how it would progress, but that is an opportunity for another day. The principle of what Mr Allister proposes is probably well grounded.

There is somewhat more controversy on amendment No 7. I hear what Members are saying around the Chamber. I listened to Mr Maginness intently when he said that people were rightly outraged by attacks against older people. He is absolutely right in that, but many people are outraged at the lenient sentences that are often handed out by the courts. People are equally outraged by that.

Mr A Maginness: I thank the Member for giving way. From time to time, people are outraged by lenient sentences, but we have not heard any evidence in the House today or at the Justice Committee on the issue of lenient sentences, particularly in relation to violence against older people. That is why I suggest that the amendment is based on what I would suggest is a false premise. We have not been able to properly analyse the problem that the amendment is supposed to address. If the Member has evidence in relation to lenient sentences that is more than simply anecdote, he should present that evidence to the Assembly.

Mr Elliott: I thank the Member for that. We do not have to think back too far: although it was not for violence against older people, there were lenient sentences for the people who mistreated the dogs. There was actually a campaign. We hear on a regular basis about the courts handing out lenient sentences —

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Elliott: I will give way in a moment.

I am happy to take evidence, but it is somewhat remote of us to say that we should not bring it forward at this stage. I accept the point that it probably would have been better to have a discussion in Committee — I do not disagree with that — but we have another group of amendments coming later that have not been to Committee that the SDLP has co-signed. They have been to Committee on a different aspect but not for the Justice Bill.

Mr B McCrea: I thank Mr Elliott for giving way. On his point about leniency and how the public are not happy, does he agree with Mr Wilson that judges are a bit out of touch with the rest of society, or does he take a different view?

Mr Elliott: I thank the Member for that. I am sure that some people would say that politicians are out of touch with society as well. People of all shades will indicate that some judges may be out of touch. I am not saying that they are; I am not making any judgmental decision on that. All that I am saying is that, at times, people are frustrated at lenient sentences. People in whatever profession will always come in for criticism. A car mechanic will often get criticism for not changing some part on your car. It is natural that people will get criticism, whether they are judges or anyone else.

Mr Maginness also raised the issue of needing to look at other aspects as well as violence as against older people and said that maybe we needed to look at violence against vulnerable people. Maybe we do. I am not one for putting a carte blanche process in place whereby there is a minimum sentence for everything, but there are some aspects where there is a requirement for minimum sentencing. Maybe violence against vulnerable people is another of those. I certainly think that serious violence against older people is one.

There are a couple of queries in the amendment that I would like to hear clarified. I know that the Members who tabled the amendment have not yet had the opportunity to speak, but I will put it on record now that subsection (3) of the new clause reads:

“For the purposes of this section ‘violent offence’ means an offence which leads or is intended or likely to lead to the death of a person aged 65 years or more or to physical injury to a person aged 65 years or more and includes an offence which is required to be charged as arson”.

Is the point about arson linked to the aspect of physical injury, or are they separate issues? I am looking for some clarity on that. Also, subsection (4) talks about “exceptional circumstances”. I would be interested to hear the Members’ views on how wide those exceptional circumstances will carry.

I know that somebody said earlier that, if there are so many exceptions, what is the point of putting it in. I do not accept that point. I think that you can, and should, have exceptions. All that I am looking for is for the signatories to the amendment to put on the record in the House what those exceptions are.

By and large, I do not give minimum sentencing carte blanche support, but I think there is a point to having it in certain cases. I think that the public are outraged that there is such violence against older people and such lenient sentences handed down in some cases of violence against older people, and, indeed, in other cases.

Mr Dickson: I welcome the opportunity to speak to the second group of amendments. They relate to early release conditions and some sentencing proposals, as we have heard in the debate. I do not intend to go much beyond what at least two of the Members who spoke said this evening, but I want to contribute to the debate on amendment No 6, which was proposed by Mr Ross.

There is considerable merit in what he is proposing. It seems to me that he is taking us in a restorative and positive direction, although I have some concerns that bringing forward such an amendment may veer into the realm of departmental policy. Therefore, I think it is important that, as we work this through, collaborative work is done by the proposer and the relevant agencies and the Department to see the amendment’s practical workings.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Dickson: Yes.

Mr B McCrea: It is interesting that the Member is supportive of amendment No 6. Will he outline some of the detail behind it?

Mr Dickson: That is the very point that I was making. When such an amendment comes forward, it is important that we have an opportunity to go through the detail of it. That is why I was suggesting that it veers into the realm of departmental policy. We as Committee members will receive that policy and see in detail the practical workings of those things. Having been at the meetings that Mr Ross referred to, and given that there are agencies out there that can deliver on prisoners being provided with that type of work on release, I am generally satisfied that it is a road that we should continue down, and continue down in the Bill.

Mr B McCrea: Will the Member give way?

Mr Dickson: Yes.

Mr B McCrea: When I was on the Justice Committee, there were discussions about community service, and suggestions were made that people should wear clothing that is easily identified. Does the Member think that that is an area that we ought to be going into? Do we need to look at that in more detail?

Mr Dickson: I well remember the debate about the type of clothing. I found that to be a particularly offensive aspect of it. Certainly, having listening to Mr Ross, I do not believe for one second that that is the area that he is intending to veer into in any respect. In fact, the discussion about those prisoners who are going on early release and who, for example, have gained remunerated employment in the community would be facilitated.

The issue has been substantially worked through in the Republic of Ireland. This might be an opportunity for the Committee and its Chair to deal with and explore those issues further. There, a requirement is placed on the Minister to look at it as an alternative, and it requires the Department to work up an appropriate scheme to deliver it.

I will turn to amendment No 7. It is the area that causes me the greatest concern. Put simply, if implemented, it is my belief that amendment No 7 will make for bad law. Any violent crime against any person is unacceptable, regardless of that person's age or circumstances. We have heard Mr Maginness and others provide us with long lists of many people who are vulnerable, or who perhaps are not vulnerable but become vulnerable as the result of a violent crime against them. While there have been horrendous circumstances in which people who are perhaps older have been traumatised by violent crimes against them, to single out those who perpetrate crimes against older people as a particular section for a particular type of sentence is very difficult.

Indeed, to draw an arbitrary line at the age of 65 causes me concern. One of my party colleagues is 65 tomorrow, so if she were violently assaulted today, a judge might award a three-, four-, five-, six- or seven-year sentence against the perpetrator, but tomorrow they would have to implement a seven-year sentence. The judge would have no discretion whatsoever to take into account the circumstances of the event. We should allow the judge to do what none of us in this Chamber can do. We can hypothecate for as long as we like, but until we hear the actual circumstances and the detail of what has gone on, it is impossible to provide the appropriate sentence and regime for dealing with the matter that occurred.

It is perhaps even less wise that we attempt to usurp the position of judges by sticking an amendment onto legislation that bears little resemblance to the legislation in the first place. One could, indeed, conjugate any number of circumstances that would mean that a person could go to prison as the result of a minor scuffle due to the loose wording of this poorly drafted amendment.

Violent crime against any member of society is, as I said, unacceptable. We must do what we can, and what we should do is prevent it through good crime prevention. When such crimes happen, we should rely on our judges to deliver justice. The proposed amendment will not do that. It will cause confusion, and that is an inappropriate way to deal with this matter. Like others, my party and I have concerns about mandatory sentences for the very reasons that I outlined. Once we make law, it is our role to pass that to the judiciary, and it is for that arm of the law to determine the appropriate sentence for the crime that has been committed. In the circumstances, therefore, I will not support the amendment, and I call on the House to oppose it.

Mr Douglas: I support amendment No 6, which has been tabled by my colleague the Chairman of our Committee. I will make a few general comments, because there seems to be some consensus among Members present.

We are not debating a new idea in conditional early release. It has been utilised for some time in other jurisdictions, as ideas on how best to rehabilitate and resettle offenders change and develop.

We are talking about an extensive early release scheme, such as exists in Great Britain and the Republic of Ireland. England and Wales, for example, together with Scotland, operate home detention curfew arrangements, while the Irish Prison Service launched a community return scheme in 2011. Those schemes see sizeable numbers of prisoners released early from the custodial parts of their sentences. In the Republic of Ireland, the community return programme is an incentivised scheme that provides for earned temporary release, under which offenders who are assessed by the Irish Prison Service are offered early temporary release in return for supervised community service. Officers of the Probation Service assess offenders as to suitability and motivation to complete the community work.

I suppose that, in one sense, we all recognise that people who receive a custodial prison sentence have been found guilty of breaking the law and are being punished by being deprived of their freedom, but here we are talking about a small number of prisoners who present a low risk of reoffending and have been model prisoners during their time in custody. Their release is under strict licence conditions. I certainly believe that it is important to reward hard work and exemplary behaviour to help low-risk offenders to reintegrate into society more quickly.

The scheme must be deliberately restrictive because we need to maximise public confidence in it, and in the wider criminal justice system, so we are targeting the release of low-risk, model prisoners. In a previous role, I worked with ex-prisoners, and I have a question to which maybe the Minister or someone else will provide a response. Certainly, in those days, some prisoners were released early because they got a job. Are we including in early release only people who are able to take up a paid job, or are we talking about those who will take unpaid community work? No takers? OK.

Article 19 already provides the Department with quite a wide-ranging discretionary power to release prisoners early, and, certainly, the Minister has that power. I welcome the departmental proposals, including:

"a number of tests, which have been drawn up to ensure that only those offenders who have demonstrated that they pose a low risk of reoffending, have been well behaved whilst in custody, have approved, stable and supportive accommodation in the community and have complied fully with all conditions imposed during any early periods of temporary release would qualify to be considered for early release."

The Bill must ensure public confidence in the scheme, and I am pleased that the Department has further tightened the original qualifying criteria. Maybe the Minister will outline the tightening-up of the criteria. The Department said that it has included:

"offences that will give rise to the presumption that a prisoner is unsuitable for early release."

The Department is clear:

"These exclusions follow closely those offences that are already applied in Great Britain on a non-statutory basis and that deem the applicant to be presumed unsuitable for home detention curfew. They identify prisoners who have been convicted of a crime, the serious nature of which makes them unsuitable for consideration for early release, and who, if so released, could undermine public confidence in the scheme and, by association, the wider criminal justice system. While these excluded offences will not preclude an individual from applying for conditional early release (CER), their existence will deem the applicant unsuitable for release unless they are able to convince the governor that exceptional circumstances exist to support their release and that such a release will not have an adverse effect on public confidence."

I want to finish by saying that I welcome the fact that the licence will also provide a curfew condition, provided under article 26 of the order, which will require a released prisoner to remain at a particular place for a set period each day during their early release period. That period cannot be less than nine hours in any one day, and prisoners who fail to comply with the licence conditions may be recalled to custody at any time before the custody expiry date is reached. I am sure that there will be some sort of review of the scheme, and I ask the Minister to detail what the process and extent of that review will be. I support the amendment.

Mr Poots: One can consider the issues in a very clinical way, or one can look at the circumstances of our elderly people and the care and protection that society should provide for them. That is a significant duty that falls upon us. It falls upon us as a legislature, and it falls upon the Police Service, the Public Prosecution Service and the Courts and Tribunals Service. We all have to act in unison to ensure that we protect our elderly so that they do not become prisoners in their own homes. We must ensure that, as a society, we cherish and care for them.

I was reading through transcripts from my local paper from days gone by and came across the headline, "Elderly couple attacked in their home". The article states:

"A couple in their 70s were attacked and beaten by a gang of masked men who stole two guns from their home in Lisburn."

Another article states:

"An elderly couple have been rescued from a deliberate fire at their Lisburn home."

Another states:

"The elderly couple were tied up while the robbers ransacked the house."

That attack happened at Blacks Road. I can recall very vividly when a couple on the Causeway End Road in Lisburn were attacked and the man was badly beaten. Indeed, he died a relatively short time thereafter.

We need to take into account that those things are happening in our community, and we need to do something about them. The Programme for Government recognised that and indicated that more needed to be done to protect our elderly. Indeed, a motion was passed in the Assembly in November 2011 calling for tougher sentencing for those who attack our elderly. Here we are, almost four years later, and that has not happened. I know that the courts have been doing bits and pieces, but the legislature has not taken action on the issue. That action has not happened in the Executive.

Sadly, in 2013, 4,766 crimes were perpetrated against our elderly people. I will repeat that: 4,766 crimes. Of those, about 200 involved violent attacks, 54 were robberies, 27 were sexual offences; there were 150 cases of fraud and 1,154 burglaries. And so it goes on. That is clearly unacceptable, but it is even more unacceptable that only 4% of those cases were brought to court. Does anybody honestly believe that we are doing enough to protect our elderly population? I do not.

I was somewhat surprised when I heard that a petition of concern was launched today, because who are we seeking to protect through the amendment? Elderly, vulnerable people in our community who have been subjected to violent attacks, normally by thugs or some other person who cares little for the well-being of our older population. To lodge a petition of concern on that issue is significant abuse. In the past, this party has sometimes been lectured by others about abusing petitions of concern, but it is a significant abuse of the petition of concern process to use it to stop legislation that would offer greater protection to our elderly population and community.

Mr Maginness raised the issue of the level of assault. I know that he has practised in the Bar for many years while he has not been in politics. I do not need to explain to him the difference between common assault and assault occasioning actual bodily harm. We are talking here about assault occasioning actual bodily harm. This is not about common assault; it is about violent offences against older people. That should be quite clear as it is written up in paragraph (3). I know that Mr Maginness understands that very fully.

Mandatory sentencing is not peculiar or odd. Sinn Féin has stated the position that it is generally not keen on mandatory sentencing. As Mr Givan rightly pointed out, it is using the excuse that this is coming at Further Consideration Stage and, therefore, it is expressing its views through the petition of concern. Mr Givan indicated during the abortion debate that Sinn Féin said that its approach was two-pronged and that its approach on this one is two-pronged and that Sinn Féin is against mandatory sentencing per se. We have mandatory sentencing for drunk driving here. If someone is massively over the drink-driving limit, they will lose their licence for at least 12 months; if someone is over the drink-driving limit by a minuscule amount, they will lose their licence for at least 12 months. That is mandatory sentencing in effect. I have not heard a public outcry saying that we need to get away from this mandatory sentence that is imposed on people who drink and drive. It is widely and strongly supported, and Members would do well to recognise that.

7.30 pm

In England and Wales, there are prescribed mandatory sentences for certain offences, including firearms offences, repeat drug trafficking, domestic burglary offences and certain offensive weapons offences. In Scotland, there are mandatory minimum sentences for some firearms and drugs offences. In the United States of America, federal law has mandatory sentences for certain immigration offences; identity theft; sexual offences against children; production, possession or use of fire or explosives; airplane hijacking; obstruction of justice; illegal food stamp activity; kidnapping; hostage taking; bank robbery; racketeering and organised crime; fraud, bribery and white-collar crime; piracy; certain types of assault or battery; assault of a US serviceman; interference with Civil Service examinations; stalking and violation of a restraining order; treason; failure to report seaboard saloon purchases; practice of pharmacy and sale of poisons in China; navigable water regulation violation; deposit of refuse or obstruction of navigable waterways; deposit of refuse in New York or Baltimore harbours; violation of the Merchant Marine Act; refusal to operate railroad or telegraph lines; and so it goes on. What we are calling for is mandatory sentences for violent attacks on the elderly. I would have thought that violent attacks on the elderly were considerably more important than dumping waste, for example, in Baltimore harbour. That is accepted in other areas.

For aggravating factors in sentencing guidelines, research has identified that, in federal law again, sentencing guidelines allow for victim-related adjustments to be made. The guidelines provide that, if the defendant knew that the victim of the offence was a vulnerable victim, the sentence should be increased by two levels. A vulnerable victim is defined as a person who is unusually vulnerable due to age, physical or mental condition or who is otherwise particularly susceptible to criminal conduct. Similarly, the Minnesota sentencing guidelines include among aggravating factors the fact that the victim was particularly vulnerable due to age, infirmity or reduced physical or mental capacity and that the offender knew or should have known of that vulnerability. Very clearly, in other places, minimum sentences are not unusual and, indeed, offences that have involved the elderly are taken into account.

Other countries that have minimum sentences include Canada, Australia and New Zealand; countries that are not regarded as being particularly draconian but where good practice is followed in law.

Mandatory sentences reflect a societal judgement that certain offences demand a specified minimum sanction and ensure that anyone who commits such a crime cannot avoid punishment. It recognises that legislatures are very often better positioned than judges to make types of judgements on penalties and that legislatures have the authority to make moral and empirical decisions about how conduct should be sanctioned. Mandatory minimum sentences address two widely acknowledged problems: sentencing disparity and unduly lenient sentences. Mandatory minimum sentences prevent crime because certain and severe punishment has a deterrent effect whether we like it or whether we do not. They are an important law enforcement tool, supplying the police and prosecutors with leverage to secure cooperation and testimony of low-level offenders against more senior confederates. Imprisonment reduces the number of future victims of crime and reduces that cost that the rest of society would otherwise suffer. Those are the main reasons for mandatory sentencing.

I see that Mr Allister is amongst us, and he raised a very important issue the last time. That is why, when I brought this amendment to the House, I brought it forward as a presumptive mandatory sentence.

He raised the case, and the exceptionality clause is there when, for example, an individual may have been engaged in an act of sexual molestation against a young person.

That young person's father may have decided to take the law into his own hands, wrongly, and attacked that elderly person, who may have been 66 or 67 years of age. Of course the judge should have the ability to give consideration to the exceptionality of a case like that. There are many other cases that could be cited in which it should be left to the wisdom of judges, but those things should happen in exceptional cases.

Mr Maginness asked this question: why seven years? Why not two years, four years or 10 years? This is not going to go through tonight because of the petition of concern, but I would be quite happy to debate those issues, as we are going to have another piece of justice legislation coming to the House. I welcome that this is now being debated and that these views are being aired. There may well be a sentencing Bill coming to the House as well. So, I will be happy to test the appropriate time, but I certainly think that the lower end of the scale does not give the indication of support to our elderly community. It does not have the deterrent factor that a period like seven years would have. Therefore, I think that that is an appropriate sentencing period.

I noted that in British Columbia, a civil liberties group carried out a piece of work that was very critical of mandatory sentencing and sought to run it down. One of the cases that it made was that mandatory sentencing had increased costs by 66% whilst driving down crime by only 30%. I would consider that to be a price well worth paying. In the next Assembly mandate, I would love it if we were able to achieve a 30% reduction in crime and, in particular, a significant reduction in crime against our elderly population.

We all have a vested interest — I always said this in my previous job — in looking after the elderly, because unless we happen to die whilst we are relatively young, we will make it at some stage to being elderly ourselves. We should do everything in our power to provide that care and support for and to show that respect to our elderly community.

I have heard quite a few people saying tonight that the amendment is ill-thought-out. I have not heard the arguments to support that. I have heard a little bit of nitpicking, but I have not heard of qualitative arguments to oppose it. As I said, I am hugely disappointed that a petition of concern was used to block this particular amendment, which is about protecting vulnerable, elderly people who have supported us and provided for us over the years and who we should be providing support and care for now that we are in a position to do it.

Mr Allister: I will address myself to amendment No 7. I will begin by saying that I think that it is wholly inappropriate that a petition of concern is being used to address this matter. This is something that the Assembly should be able to debate rationally and to reach a decision upon and decide the matter on its own merits or demerits. If a proposition deserves to be defeated, it deserves to be defeated on its demerits, not because of a petition of concern. I think that is an important point to make.

I will vote against the amendment, because I think that there are always dangers when politicians put themselves in a position where they think that they know better than the judges on legal issues and when they think that the judge who might have sat and listened to a case for three or four weeks is not the person in an unfettered way to decide upon conviction what the appropriate sentence should be, but that we, who have never heard a day of the case, should sit in this House and postulate into the future and say, "This crime should and must attract a mandatory minimum sentence". That, in principle, is foolish and wrong, and we should allow judges to do the job that they are there to do.

Also, there is some muddle in this amendment. Proposed clause 89A(3) states:

"For the purposes of this section "violent offence" means an offence which leads or is intended or likely to lead to the death of a person".

I want to stop there. It classes all those together and says that if a violent offence leads to, or intends to cause, death then a minimum sentence of seven years will apply. A very pivotal and critical component of our criminal justice system is that there is a distinction between the crime where you set out deliberately intending to inflict grievous bodily harm or kill and the crime that does not have that intention but has that eventual outcome. The law has always rightly recognised that there are gradations in sentences on issues such as that. Right at the outset, this amendment blends all that together and says, "Whether you intended it or whether it just happened, you are subject to the same minimum sentence." In principle, that is hopelessly flawed.

It then goes on to categorise in the same bracket, and I am paraphrasing, an offence that is intended to lead to the death of a person aged 65 years or more or that leads to physical injury to a person aged 65 or more. They are all the same within this amendment. Whether you actually intend the death of the senior citizen or whether you do not intend it but the offence leads to the physical injury of the person, the two are just bracketed together. That cannot be right, because the physical injury that we are talking about could be something that would not even amount to assault occasioning actual bodily harm. If someone is pushed in a scuffle, falls and breaks a finger, they have suffered physical injury. The person who did that, under this amendment, is to be subject to the same minimum sentence as the person — that the legislation even anticipates — who set out intending to kill someone. That cannot be right.

Mr Poots said that this is all about assault occasioning actual bodily harm. Is it? All it talks about is physical injury. Let us say that it is assault occasioning actual bodily harm that this is looking at. It is saying that if you occasion actual bodily harm to a senior citizen, the minimum sentence is seven years. Here is part of the muddle of this amendment: under the law, as it stands, the maximum sentence for occasioning actual bodily harm in Northern Ireland is seven years. This amendment is saying that, without purporting to amend or alter at all the Offences Against the Person Act or the Criminal Justice (No. 2) Order 2004, which increased the threshold to seven years, we are now going to import the same minimum sentence as the law provides as the maximum sentence for the offence of occasioning actual bodily harm. That just does not add up.

If it is some other offences that are intended, let us remember that there are basically four gradations of assault from common assault, assault occasioning actual bodily harm, inflicting grievous bodily harm under section 20 of the Offences Against the Person Act to causing GBH with intent, which is covered in section 18 and for which a life sentence is available. If you go out intending to cause the death of a person, whether they are aged over 65 or under 65, you are not likely to be charged with assault occasioning actual bodily harm. You are likely to be charged with attempted murder or something of that order, where the life sentence is available.

I do have to say that, no matter what way one reads this amendment, it does strike me that it is riven with muddle and confusion about what it actually would achieve. It then says that, in exceptional circumstances, the judge can set all that aside. What is the point then? What is the point in circumstances where our judges today have the full discretion as to how they sentence someone, into which they will weigh and measure the background of that person and the nature of their victim, which can be an aggravating factor, and come to a decision on what the appropriate sentence will be? That is the way that it should be. It is not for this House to apply one size fits all and say, "You will have a minimum sentence for any violent offence to a senior citizen".

Mr Givan: I thank the Member for giving way. The Assembly passed the Human Trafficking Act, which has the same exceptionality as there is in this amendment. I cannot recall whether the Member voted in favour of that. He may well have done so. I know that other people on the opposite Benches did vote in favour of that. The exceptionality is based on the same premise that the Assembly has already passed, so this is not a precedent.

Mr Allister: I may well have voted for that, but that is not the point. The point is that judges, as they presently operate, give weight to the particular and exceptional circumstances of any case. That is how they measure the sentence. This proposition wants to turn that on its head and say that you shall, in default position, impose a minimum sentence, and that, if you do not want to, you have to circumscribe the special circumstances that justify you not doing so. That is, in my view, totally undermining the judicial function and doing it in such a way that we really are getting ourselves to the point of asking the question, "Why have we got judges at all?". Why do we not just issue them with a sheet that says that assault occasioning actual bodily harm is seven years? That is really how foolish, I think, a road this is to head down.

You have to give judges the right to impose what, in their considered opinion, is the right sentence. If it is the wrong sentence, it will be capable, as a serious matter, of referral to the Court of Appeal. If it is capable of referral, the Court of Appeal can issue a guidance judgement on what sentence it expects in cases of that nature. There are many guidance judgements that set the parameters on most of these things. We are, therefore, tackling a job we do not need to tackle. We should leave it where it is.

The final point I want to make is about the muddle of this. It seems to me somewhat incongruous that someone can commit a criminal offence and then after the event, when they discover that the victim was 65, suddenly they face very different consequences. This amendment says that, whether you knew the person was 65 or not, it is an absolute liability. If they are over 65, you are hit with a minimum sentence. That seems to me to be another dimension of politicians meddling too far in the sentencing process. I do not think anyone would suggest that I am some sort of liberal on too many issues.

Mr B McCrea: Heaven forbid. [Laughter.]

Mr Allister: However, there are important principles at stake in how we operate our criminal justice system. Meddling to this prescriptive extent is to take matters far too far.

Mr B McCrea: I certainly would not call Mr Allister a liberal — I am sure he will be pleased about that — but I did listen, as I do to all his contributions, and his argument was cogent. It appears to me that these amendments are for the optics. They are a stunt. They change relatively little — in fact, nothing.

I give Mr Ross the benefit of the doubt, because I know, having inquired, that he raised these matters at the appropriate stages in Committee, and perhaps there is some merit in amendment No 6. But I was disappointed, I have to say, when I heard learned Members in the SDLP and the Alliance Party eulogising an amendment that gave no detail. I think that you should look at the detail in these cases. If we are going to pass legislation, then we ought to know what it means and what we are going to do with it.

There are so many caveats to amendment No 6: “the Department may”, “having consulted” and “may be required”. It is so open, we can just give it a by-ball and have a look at the departmental policy when we get it, as Mr Dickson said. However, I have to say that there are areas that are fraught with danger. The whole issues of probation and how we manage prisoner release and reintegration into society are important and not to be taken trivially.

Mr Ross: I thank the Member for giving way. Perhaps if he had still been a member of the Justice Committee he would understand better that article 19 of the Criminal Justice Order currently gives the power to the Minister. The Minister at present is able to allow prisoners out on early release from prison. He has this power at present, without any recourse to the Committee or to the Assembly. Most Members who are coming at this amendment from an educated position have appreciated that there is a gap in the legislation. That gap is being filled by an amendment that will allow the Minister to ensure that people who get early release from prison still serve out the remainder of their sentence in a more productive way, whether that be through community service or through getting paid employment, as some Members pointed out. The Member may view it as a minor change, but, actually, it is a significant change. It is something that the Probation Board wants to see, and that is why it is important that it works up the detail of the amendment with the Minister. It is also something that I think can benefit wider society, and certainly benefit those of us who wish to see reoffenders be rehabilitated.

Mr B McCrea: I am grateful to the Member for clarifying the position. As I said, I am happy to listen to the viewpoint that he puts forward. The point that I was making is that such matters should not come forward uninformed or unchallenged. We will take a position that it is enabling, I guess. Therefore, let us see whether we can do something with it in future. My concern when I saw the amendment was around whether we had looked at the implications and thought them through. I did not know, because it has not been stated in the debate yet — perhaps it was earlier, and I missed it — that the Probation Board was asking for those changes. Those are matters that we have to take into consideration. If I take it that there is some consensus forming around the amendment, there is no point in me going on about it, but I do think it is important that at least some people stand up and say, “Are you sure about this?”.

Let me move on to a point about which I was also disappointed. It concerns an area in which I am in agreement with Mr Allister. The thought that our justice system should abolish the judiciary and end up with this group of people making decisions fills me with horror. The idea that Mr Givan and Mr Poots are going to legislate for mandatory sentences for everything is appalling. I heard Mr Maginness say that judges sometimes get it wrong. Fair enough, but there is the Court of Appeal. There is an entire process in which people go through and review what the situation should be.

Mr A Maginness: Will the Member give way?

Mr B McCrea: Yes.

Mr A Maginness: The process for getting to the Court of Appeal is that the Attorney General looks at what is described as a lenient sentence and determines, in his opinion, that it is. It goes to the Court of Appeal, which can then look at that in depth. That is the mechanism that we have created, and we should use it.

Mr B McCrea: That is the point. I am in agreement with that. I do not support the view put forward by Mr Givan about some cultural warrior wearing a wig in a courthouse, nor do I support the view of Mr Wilson that judges are out of touch. Judges are an essential part of our democracy. There is a balance between legislation and the judicial system. We look at that situation with the full rigour of legislation, but to try to say that we do not need the judiciary or some type of group of people who can take all the facts together is frankly appalling.

I do not know whether the signatories to amendment No 7 looked at this issue, but I looked at a decision by the Court of Appeal on 15 January 2015 regarding one Edward Stuart Cambridge. I will read out what the offence was:

“In the early hours of 30 June 2013 a 58 year old woman”

— not a 65-year-old woman but a 58-year-old woman —

“suffering from numerous medical conditions which included spinal problems, arthritis and asthma was at home in her apartment in sheltered accommodation for the elderly or infirm. The appellant entered her flat shouting ‘Where is your money?’ and asking for her bank account details.”

He said other things, including:

“I am going to kill you”.

After that process was gone through, what was the statement? What did the Court of Appeal say?

It wanted to take the opportunity to state — Mr Poots brought up this issue — that the following principles applied: the starting point for robbery of households where violence is used should be 10 years — not seven years but 10 years — and this would increase depending on the age, vulnerability or infirmity of the occupiers. This would increase the sentence to approximately 15 years, which would not be regarded as excessive. There is this notion that we should introduce seven years: why are you being so lenient? Why are you seeking to reduce this? Do you not care about the elderly and infirm? Do you not want to see the full rigour of the law against those who perpetrate violence on vulnerable people? Why are you identifying only some sections of the community? Why are you not looking at the most base attacks against women, those with mental health issues and those who are vulnerable? This is a stupid amendment. It has been tabled for some sort of optics or to get some sort of advantage.

8.00 pm

Mr Speaker: Can the Member address his remarks through the Chair?

Mr B McCrea: Mr Speaker, I am addressing my remarks through you, sir.

Mr Speaker: Be careful about using the word “stupid”.

Mr B McCrea: Mr Speaker, sir, this is my assessment of the amendment. It is not derogatory; it is my assessment of what has been put in front of me. I am entitled to that view. I will move on.

I will talk about the Judicial Studies Board for Northern Ireland’s sentencing in cases of manslaughter, attempted murder and wounding with intent. There is an entire body of evidence on what people consider appropriate. You get issues. I will just mention one at random: 10 years when a defendant committed an unprovoked attack on a defenceless, vulnerable 71-year-old man in poor health. All the case studies are here. The judiciary does not take this lightly and does not ignore the aggravating factors. It also looks at other issues that maybe should be taken into account, such as diminished responsibility. It sets out in great detail how much weight should be given to those issues. Through you, Mr Speaker, I put it that the amendment is not worthy of support. It is not the right way to go forward.

Mr Allister, I think, challenged the petition of concern. I signed the petition of concern, and let me tell you why: a bad amendment has been put forward that will not assist anybody. It is trying to use and abuse the process by coming in at Further Consideration Stage. Had this been properly investigated, reviewed and peer reviewed, you might consider it, but, coming in at this stage, it is for optics. This is about people who have a career based on attacking the judiciary. This is people saying that they do not trust the judiciary or the legal system. Let me tell you that, if you end up in that type of country, you will regret it. The pillars of our society and our civilisation are built on an independent judiciary. You meddle with it at your peril.

A lot in the amendment is not clear, so let me say in conclusion that I am still not sure whether it involves issues to do with common assault or matters that go through the magistrates. I am looking at the Offences Against the Person Act 1861: for the summary offence of assault where no injury is caused or where the injury is minor and non-permanent such as bruising, the starting point is a community order plus a compensation order. If you are over 65, of course, it will be seven years. There is no clarity about what the amendment actually seeks to do. That is because it is poorly thought-out and poorly written and is poor law. I can go through all the issues. It has brought me to the stage at which I am forced to sign a petition of concern because I cannot take the risk that this will go through. Do you know what made me decide to do that? It was the knowledge that the Ulster Unionist Party was going to support the amendment. The Ulster Unionist Party — the party that used to pride itself on being the party of law and order — will support the amendment. That is appalling. It shows that you have no independent thought, and that is why I had to sign a petition of concern to defeat the amendment.

Ms Sugden: I welcome the opportunity to speak on the group 2 amendments. I will briefly refer to amendment No 6, which is a progressive way of looking at rehabilitation, so I congratulate the Member for thinking outside the box.

On amendment No 7, I will start with the point that Mr McCrea finished on — the petition of concern. I do not sign petitions of concern — they are an abuse of democracy — but tonight I signed my first petition of concern. I do not see it as an abuse in this case. I see it as a way of limiting people who think that they know better. They can say that this is the will of the House — Mr Allister referred to that — but it is not the will of the House; it is the will of the guy who comes round, gives them the whip and tells them what to do. This is a case where I felt that we needed to sign a petition of concern.

I struggle to find the parliamentary language for “stupid”, Mr Speaker — I apologise for that — but the amendment is stupid and ill-informed. It disrespects the entire sector. Mr Poots says that we are protecting the older sector: we are not protecting the older sector. If Mr Poots felt that we were protecting the older sector, he would know that the Commissioner for Older People Act (Northern Ireland) 2011 defines older people as those aged 60 and above. In some circumstances, someone aged 50-plus can be defined as an older person. If we are really to respect the sector and do what we intended to do, let us put some facts to it. To be honest, even the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister does not know how to define older people — it cannot get its active ageing strategy off the ground. I have difficulty when a party tables an amendment to protect the rights of older people while dragging its heels on other issues that make more sense.

I recognise the sentiments in the amendment. In my constituency, we have had cases of older people being dragged from their home. By all means, their attackers should be punished; I do not disagree with that. What irks me about this amendment is that disabled people, ethnic minorities, children and other vulnerable people who are abused — in fact, everyone who has had an offence committed against them — should have the same satisfaction of knowing that the offender will be held to account. Generally, we disrespect older people by saying that they should be elevated in that way. I do not agree with that.

The Members who tabled the amendment lazily try to define a “violent offence”. I take exception to that, too. They laboured the point about sexual abuse. Should a sex attacker not experience the same repercussions as someone setting out to kill someone? It is just a very lazy attempt at legislation.

The amendment leaves out mental abuse. Across Northern Ireland, we have heard of older people being mentally abused in care homes. That can be just as bad a crime as physical abuse. The huge holes in the amendment also disrespect the sector.

I will not claim to know law in the same way as people in the House who have worked in the profession know it, but they have demonstrated that the figure of seven years is completely uninformed.

If we are to protect the rights of older people, let us do it right; let us not tag it on to a Further Consideration Stage.

I agree with other Members: the sentiment is there. However, if you really meant it, you would have tabled it at Consideration Stage and we would have had the opportunity to amend it at this stage. I get the sentiment, but I do not quite accept the intention.

I signed the petition of concern on the amendment, and I think that I had a valid reason for doing so. It highlights the inability of some Members to draft legislation, and that is a bigger crime than any of the other abuses of the petition of concern in the past. I will not support the amendment.

Mr Givan: I do not intend to cover the ground that my colleague Mr Poots covered; he articulated very coherently the rationale behind what we have proposed. I note that nobody sought to make any interventions to him and, indeed, Mr McCrea and Ms Sugden spent the entire time talking to each other. I can understand why they are still ill informed about what is being proposed. Maybe when they get some manners, they can get a little more informed.

Mr Allister made the point about the petition of concern being an abuse, and it is. My party does it, and we will defend the times when we decide to use it. However, other people should not now lecture the DUP about abusing the petition of concern mechanism. We are all now the guilty parties: Mr Lunn signed one for the first time and Ms Sugden signed one of the first time; we seem to have a lot of firsts recently when it comes to petitions of concern. We are all at it. Mr Allister is shaking his head profusely; he has not done it. Sorry, Mr McCallister has also continued with the principles that he founded in NI21, which once had a principled position on that. Like other principles, it seems to have departed from that organisation.

This party could have used the petition of concern against Mr Allister's amendments on preliminary inquiries. I regard preliminary inquiries as an abuse of vulnerable witnesses, and that is why I did not vote for them. I believe that people are put in the box and interrogated by lawyers, barristers and so on to put the frighteners on them so that they will not proceed. I regard those inquiries as an abuse of those individuals; that is my position. We could have tabled a petition of concern on those amendments, but we did not. Therefore, it was the will of the House for the amendments to pass, and I accept that. Interestingly, others tabled a petition of concern on this issue and sought to block the will of the House. Whether it would have passed, I do not know.

The crux of the argument that a number of people intimated was around mandatory minimum sentencing; that seems to be a principled issue, and it certainly was for Mr Allister. He is someone whom I regard as being very much to the right on a lot of issues, and I am there with him on a lot of those issues. However, I cannot agree with him on the premise that he articulated about the judiciary having a discretionary power and being able to decide on all those issues on sentencing. It is something that a parliamentary, democratic institution has within its preserve to consider and, if we feel it appropriate in circumstances, to legislate on. We did that on human trafficking, and I think that Mr Allister admitted that he voted for that. He voted for a mandatory two-year sentence but with an exceptionality clause. Mr Maginness also voted for that. I cannot recall Sinn Féin's position.

Mr McCartney: Against. Totally against.

Mr Givan: Mr McCartney said that he was against it, so they were principled on it. Other Members argued about mandatory minimum sentences, but, in other circumstances, they take a different position.

It is right to have presumptive mandatory sentencing in certain circumstances, and my colleague outlined other countries where mandatory minimum sentencing is the norm on a lot of issues. This is not a mandatory minimum sentence; it is a presumptive mandatory sentence. Other jurisdictions do that. They have judges, and they have not abolished the judiciary in any of those countries — in the United States, New Zealand, Canada and so on. So, the farcical argument that Mr McCrea put forward about us somehow abandoning the judiciary in Northern Ireland is just not a proper, articulate position that anybody with any credibility can sustain or put forward.

8.15 pm

I would have some sympathy with Mr McCrea or Mr Allister's arguments were they to bring forward legislation to repeal the Northern Ireland schedule 2 to the Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006, which imposes a 10-year minimum sentence on those who are convicted of offences involving dangerous weapons. That is a minimum sentence; there is no presumption and no discretion for the Northern Ireland judiciary. If you are convicted of offences involving dangerous weapons, you go to jail for a minimum of 10 years. Under article 70 of the Firearms (Northern Ireland) Order 2004, certain firearms offences carry a minimum sentence of five years for adults and three years for those aged 21 and under. There is some differential between the two, but they are minimum mandatory sentences, not presumptive. There is no exceptionality; it is a minimum, and this happens in Northern Ireland. When I listen to some Members argue that, somehow, this is a new departure from the norm, it simply is not the case, and they are wrong to put that proposition forward.

Of course I respect the judiciary. You can go through repeated speeches that I have made commending Sir Declan Morgan for having brought the judiciary to engage more publicly on all these issues and the way in which he engaged with the Justice Committee when I was a member of it. Of course, there is a role for the judiciary, but there is a role for Parliament, and even Mr McCrea articulated that a balance needs to be struck. The difference is that I believe that the balance needs to be more towards democratically elected and accountable politicians who can set the legal framework. He believes that it should be for unaccountable judges, who the Attorney General described, in the current framework of appointing judges, as judges appointing themselves to these jobs. Mr McCrea believes that they should be the ones left to decide on these issues. I think that that balance is not the correct one because we, as politicians, can respond to the public's demands on these issues, and we can take forward legislation on them.

Claire Sugden spoke about this being an abuse, but I just do not accept that. When we consider the cases of elderly people who have been attacked, it is right that we respond. Our senior citizens have said that this is an issue of concern to them. Claire Keatinge, the Commissioner for Older People, intimated as such a number of years ago when she spoke about our senior citizens becoming a specified vulnerable group, which would mean that that would be a specific aggravating factor. That is something that could have been taken forward but has not been, despite there being a Programme for Government commitment on it and despite there being a vote in the Assembly in 2011. There are other things that could have been done that have not been done. We have specified a range of offences in Northern Ireland that are hate crimes against particular sections of our community, and I believe that our older population should be considered among specific vulnerable groups. I think that our argument is well made.

I will close with a case from July 2014, when it was reported that an individual in Northern Ireland who was found guilty of attacking two elderly people of 72 and 75 years of age, leaving them bloodied and bruised, was given a deferred sentence for one year. No custodial sentence was imposed. The case was handled by the Ballymena Magistrates' Court and was reported last year. This individual did not go to jail. The judge said that what he had done was an absolute disgrace and that it was despicable how he had attacked these elderly people, yet he did not go to jail. Do the judges get it wrong? They most certainly do get it wrong, and I think it is right that this Parliament would legislate on this particular issue.

Mr Allister: Will the Member give way?

Mr Givan: I will give way to Mr Allister.

Mr Allister: If I follow, the Member's amendment could not possibly apply to a Magistrates' Court case. He did not tell us what the individual he cited was charged with, but he must have been charged with an offence that was a summary offence, for which the Magistrates' Court has a maximum power of giving 12 months. He could not possibly have attained seven years even under the Member's amendment, because, presumably, it can only apply in the Crown Court.

Mr Givan: My colleague highlighted that, of course, if the sentence is going to be seven years, these cases would need to be heard in the Crown Court as opposed to the Magistrates' Court. I would have no difficulty with it being heard in the Crown Court, because it warrants being dealt with at that level.

Let us be clear: legislation can and should be used to send a very clear message. It can be a deterrent. It should be a deterrent in these cases, because violent attacks on our older population are the least detected and least prosecuted offences that exist.

I believe that there is a failure in the system and that this amendment is an effort to try to remedy that. However, it is going to be blocked, so let us see how other parties will now engage in this. If people believe that we have got it wrong through some of the technicalities in it, let us see how we, collectively, can come up with a better system than the one that currently exists. If anybody believes that the current system is working, they are not listening to our older population.

Mr Ford: It is interesting that, when we have been talking a lot about what sympathy we have and who has the most sympathy for older people who are the victims of crime, we are also conscious that today we might have sympathy for those who are bereaved and those who were injured by the balcony collapse in Berkeley, California. That involved a significant number of students from this island, although we do not know exactly from where at this stage.

I will start with the easy one. I have some slight concerns about the process of Mr Ross's amendment, otherwise known as Mr Allister's amendment, because of the early release conditions. To some extent, it means that we are putting legislative authority in place before we have actually done the policy work. However, that said, and aside from that little bit of nitpicking from the Minister, the wording is helpful. If introduced, it would give the Department a discretionary power, rather than a mandatory requirement, to require unpaid community service to be undertaken. It clearly builds very positively on the experience that we have seen across the border. Anything that comes from the DUP supporting Irish policy is clearly to be welcomed, as it shows the openness of its approach in that respect.

In light of the severe budgetary pressures on my Department, I hope that Members will understand that any decision to introduce such a measure will need to be subject to a detailed cost-benefit analysis. I need to give some measure of caution, and, certainly, I will not be in a position to rush to implement the amendment. We would need to look at the potential effects on the Probation Board in terms of how it would sit alongside its community service programme, and we would need an analysis of the Department's employability strategy, so there are a number of issues.

The Prison Service employability strategy is a public commitment to support individuals in custody to develop the qualifications, skills and experience they need so that they can obtain employment when they leave. There has been a lot of progress on that. I have reported recently on the partnership between the Prison Service, the Belfast Metropolitan College and the North West Regional College to provide education and training opportunities to those in custody. Improving prisoners' educational attainment and employment prospects will most certainly help to reduce the risk to the community by reducing the risk of reoffending and supporting a general desistance from crime. There are real possibilities in that area.

Mr Douglas asked me specifically about matters relating to his experience of seeking to promote employment. It is absolutely the case that I wish to see employment opportunities provided where possible. He also asked about offences that would be seen as outside article 19. The current list, as I have it, is that excluded from those provisions will be those serving life sentences, those serving extended or indeterminate sentences, those subject to notification requirements under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 and other prisoners convicted of more serious offences. Obviously, that will be on the basis of individual risk assessment in many cases.

Whilst I certainly support the use of unpaid placements to support rehabilitation, my preference is that, where at all possible, we should be encouraging those leaving custody to obtain paid employment and to make their contribution that way. However, I am happy to accept the amendment and to consider how a community service scheme might work as part of the package of services that we provide to those leaving custody in the future. I think that that is a recognition of the reality as we seek to work through the detail of it.

If that was the easy one, amendment No 7 is certainly not easy to consider. My starting position is certainly to agree with the comments made from all parts of the Chamber that said that, although all crime is to be condemned, crimes against older people and other vulnerable people are particularly abhorrent. However, we also need to be careful that we do not make older people become more fearful about their safety. I think that, at times, we exceeded that in this evening's discussion. As I said at Question Time yesterday, statistics show that people aged 65 and over are the least likely to be victims of violent crime. They accounted for less than 2.2% of such victims in 2014-15, even though they constitute 15.5% of the population. We know, of course, particularly given the effects on anyone who is vulnerable, that one crime is one too many. I appreciate that the aim of the amendment is to send out a message that such crimes will not be tolerated. While I agree with that message, I cannot agree with the amendment. It is flawed, it will not work within the existing legislative framework, and I believe it is not necessary.

The Programme for Government demonstrates the Executive's commitment to ensuring that older and vulnerable people are able to live their lives free from the fear of crime. That commitment is reflected in a range of measures that my Department has taken forward to address sentencing issues and fear of crime and to reduce offending. These include funding projects delivered by Age Sector Platform and Linking Generations Northern Ireland to, for example, raise awareness of existing crime prevention support and promote the benefits of intergenerational work. Policing and community safety partnerships also deliver a range of initiatives aimed at tackling crime against older people. Those include a number of schemes involving home security and a variety of crime prevention projects.

However, the thrust of this amendment is focused on sentencing. The reality is that substantial custodial sentences are available to the judiciary under the current legislative framework for those convicted of violent crime. Indeed, the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008 introduced public protection sentences where offenders who are considered to pose a risk of serious harm can be detained indefinitely — indefinitely — and decisions on release are made by the parole commissioners and not by the sentencing judge.

For murder, a life sentence is mandatory. For attempted murder or manslaughter, sentences up to life imprisonment are available. For robbery and aggravated burglary, again life sentences are available. For assault occasioning actual bodily harm, penalties of up to seven years maximum can be given. Sentencing decisions within this legislative framework are a matter for the judiciary, taking account of all the factors pertaining in individual cases. In making those decisions, judges are guided by sentencing guidelines, which already indicate that the courts should treat the age and vulnerability of the victim as an aggravating factor when assessing the appropriate sentence to be imposed.

Let me quote a further bit from the same Court of Appeal judgement that was quoted by Mr Basil McCrea earlier. It is the judgement delivered, I believe, by Lord Justice Gillen on behalf of the court in the Crown v Cambridge in January. As well as the point highlighted by Mr McCrea, it was said:

"There is an unbroken line of authority to the effect that in Northern Ireland the starting point in cases of robbery of householders where violence is used should be 10 years and in appropriate cases a sentence of 15 years is not excessive".

It further says in that judgement:

"Aggravating factors will include ... Deliberate targeting of vulnerable victim(s)."

Where the law stands and the opportunities that we have are absolutely clear. One of the purposes of sentencing has to be to act as a deterrent. I know from the regular discussions I have with the Lord Chief Justice that judges take that responsibility seriously. There has been considerable work done on guideline judgements, and the Judicial Studies Board has made a number of recommendations to colleagues. That is significant work that is ongoing.

It is absolutely clear that older people are regarded as being, potentially, particularly vulnerable and, therefore, worthy of particular consideration. Perhaps we should not be considering just older people, although Claire Sugden made an entirely reasonable point as to whether older people are those who are older than me, at 65, or include me, at 60. That is a point that this particular proposal is slightly inconsistent on; although, given the difficulties we have in getting any older person's strategy through OFMDFM, it is perhaps not surprising that we have not got that defined. We should perhaps also consider those who are physically disabled and those who suffer from learning disability. There are issues of vulnerability that are not easily stated by regarding just one particular group of one particular age.

As an illustration of what the courts consider around older people as a particularly vulnerable group, let me quote another point from a Court of Appeal guideline judgement:

"It must be brought home to offenders who violate the privacy and security of old people in their homes and expose them to violence that immediate and heavy sentences will follow their detection of conviction."

I believe that that shows the judiciary responding. I also believe strongly that judges are best placed to take account of the specific circumstances in each case and to sentence appropriately.

I have said many times that it is fundamental to our system of justice that judicial discretion is maintained and that sentences are imposed on a case-by-case basis by those who hear the entire case, not by those who read very limited reports in the media of what may be very long cases.

8.30 pm

The Assembly knows my views on mandatory minimum sentences. I have always argued that they make no allowance for the exceptional case, and there is always the possibility of such cases. I acknowledge that this clause allows for a lesser sentence to be imposed in exceptional circumstances, but what those circumstances might be is unclear and will have to be determined by case law. Mr Poots said that mandatory minimum sentences would ensure consistency. There is no suggestion that they would ensure consistency; they would merely ensure a mandatory minimum.

When we look at the issue of exceptionality, there may be specific cases. We have had highlighted, previously, the case of the paedophile pensioner, which Mr Allister mentioned on a previous occasion. However, the reality is that we could see large numbers of cases of little more than, or possibly not even, common assault being considered under this. It would be very bad law to have exceptionality considered in so many cases.

We cannot be sure that this clause, in its operation, would not impact unjustly on an offender before the courts. The framework in legislation usually sets out the maximum penalty, not the minimum sentence, for an offence. Of course, there are discrete exceptions for specific offences, but the proposed minimum seven-year sentence in this amendment would apply not to specific offences but to all violent offences, as defined in the proposed clause, at the very serious end of the spectrum and, more worryingly, offences that fall within the very broad definition of:

“an offence which leads or is intended or likely to lead ... to physical injury to a person aged 65 years or more”.

A very broad range of offences would be covered, including incidents of very minor physical injuries and, indeed, cases where there was no injury whatsoever. Whatever was said by Mr Poots, physical injury does not mean grievous bodily harm with or without intent; it does not mean actual bodily harm. It would include common assault. It would lead to anything that led to a physical injury. Indeed, during the first Assembly mandate, I was assaulted in the Chamber by another Member who squeezed my arm to the point at which it was painful. That would qualify as physical injury on the definition that is given and, therefore, would be covered by a mandatory seven-year minimum sentence, had I been over 65 at the time.

The outworking could mean that, if two people aged 65 or over had a minor physical altercation — perhaps they had drunk too much on an evening out — both would be liable to seven years' imprisonment unless they could show to the court that there were exceptional circumstances. That shows the potential difficulties of legislating without the normal policy and scrutiny processes being carried through.

I first saw this clause, as other Members did, when it was tabled on 10 June, which clearly did not allow time to properly consider all of the legislative issues or all of the possible unintended consequences. However, I must confess that Jim Allister and Alban Maginness have identified some, and it certainly appeared by the speech he made that Basil McCrea is seeking to join traditional lawyers' voice and is researching for a career at the Bar, because he also spotted some.

Mr Frew: What type of bar? [Laughter.]

Mr Ford: It is clear that there would be many potential difficulties in the application, if this were passed. For a start, the provisions are not restricted to trial on indictment, in the Crown Court. Given all the problems that we have in managing courts, I find it difficult to believe that, when Mr Givan suggests that it is reasonable that all such cases be remitted to the Crown Court for trial, that it would be a realistic and reasonable use of resources, particularly if we consider cases like two 70-year-olds who fall out outside the pub and push each other a bit.

The usual maximum term of imprisonment for a summary offence is six months; in some cases, a maximum of 12, where allowed by law. So, if passed, how would a district judge in a Magistrates' Court enforce these provisions? He or she simply could not do it within existing law. So does that mean that the district judge would be passing up to the Crown Court matters that do not justify hearing in the Crown Court, which would produce significant clogging up of business there and, potentially, end up with Crown Court judges saying that there are exceptional circumstances in a great number of them? As others have said, the clause would also impose a minimum sentence that is not within the range of sentence permitted by law. The definition would require a seven-year sentence to be imposed for some offences with a maximum of two years' imprisonment.

All those issues mean that I cannot support this amendment, not because I believe that those who commit violent crimes against the elderly should not be punished appropriately, but because I believe that the courts are best placed to do this and because the draft revisions are not competent. The “violent offence” reference is far too wide; the reference to “the court” does not deal with the issue as to what level of court; and tabling an amendment at this stage of the Bill is not an appropriate way to introduce legislation on such a complex issue. It is without consultation, consideration or scrutiny by Committee. Changing laws in this way is not, I believe, the correct place for this Assembly. It is not how good law is made. As Justice Minister, I have to consider the integrity of the criminal law as a whole and ensure that it is fit for purpose and not liable to dysfunctional outcomes. There is also, I believe, a similar responsibility on the Assembly. So, whilst I am happy to support Mr Allister's amendment, Mr Ross, I am quite happy to say that it is not possible to accept with any credibility the second amendment on mandatory minimum sentences.

Mr Ross: Just to save the blushes of Mr Allister, in his contribution, Mr Elliott got somewhat confused between the Member for East Antrim and the Member for North Antrim, but I think that we all understood what he meant nevertheless.

I do not intend to respond to all the points that have been made by Members in relation to amendment No 7, not least because a petition of concern has been lodged against it, and also because Mr Givan has adequately addressed some of the criticisms that have been made against it. All I will say is this. In my opening comments, I said that I was always cautious around minimum sentencing, but I will make this point: some of those who waxed lyrical today about opposing minimum mandatory sentences on principle should, perhaps, be invited to examine their own voting records on other Bills, just to see whether they have been entirely consistent in their approach.

I move on to address some of the comments made on amendment No 6, which is the amendment in my name. The Deputy Chair, Raymond McCartney, gave his support to amendment No 6, for which I am grateful. He talked about the amendment being required to fill the gap that there is in allowing for community service. He talked about it being productive in allowing for rehabilitation. I think that Members across the House want to see that to ensure that there is rehabilitation, as well as punishment, for offenders. Alban Maginness also spoke in support of the amendment and talked about the opportunity that there is for employment. That is a point that Mr Douglas made as well. What we want to see is people who have served their time in prison being able to get out and go into meaningful employment. None of us wants to see them living on welfare at the taxpayers' expense. We want to see them be productive, turn their lives around and get into work. That is something that Members across the House support.

Mr Elliott called the amendment "interesting", which always gives me a little bit of concern, but I think that he was generally supportive. He said that it was a positive contribution and he talked about the need for examining alternatives and different means of punishment and sentencing. In the justice seminars that we have been running over the last number of months, the idea of looking for suitable diversions, if the offence is of a low enough magnitude, has been discussed. Alternatives to prison are something that may be appropriate for very low-level, first-time offenders. It is an interesting area that, undoubtedly, the Justice Committee will look at again in the future: what works best for outcomes and what is most cost-effective for the taxpayer as well.

Mr Dickson, in his support, talked about the early release conditions, and that is something that we will have to work out. He talked it being a restorative approach, and I think that it is probably right to ensure that the end of a sentence can be carried out in the community, but still paying back that debt to society and still seeing out the full term of the sentence, which is important. He talked about the need for collaboration; that is hugely important no matter what we do. In this instance, we need to see collaboration between the Department, the Probation Board and the Prison Service, and that is exactly the type of model that I will be proposing.

Mr Sammy Douglas talked about the strict licence conditions and how we should get low-risk offenders back into society by transitioning them. That is the very point that we are trying to make with this amendment: it is a way of transitioning offenders back into normal life in a way that is managed by the Probation Board and allowing offenders to repay their debt to society in a meaningful way. He then went on to discuss some of the other articles of the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008. Article 26 is about curfew and article 30 about recall. It was the discussion that we had on those articles that inspired the amendment in the first instance.

We then had a contribution from Mr McCrea in the corner.

There is an old saying that a little knowledge is a very dangerous thing, and Mr McCrea certainly tried to demonstrate his little knowledge when it came to amendment No 6 and, of course, in other contributions that he made during interventions. He said that the amendment did not do very much. At present, there is a gap under article 19 of the Criminal Justice Order 2008. There is no provision in it for the Department or the Probation Board to ensure that somebody who is released early from prison has to do something productive. That is why the amendment was tabled, and, rather than doing very little, it is a significant change that informed Members have supported this evening. He talked about a lack of detail on what it actually does. He mentioned the need to consult the Probation Board and asked "Why?". It is important that we consult the people who know what they are doing. The point that he tried to make on amendment No 7 was that we should not interfere with the judiciary because they know better than we do: why does he not see the same merit in amendment No 6, through which we will talk to the Probation Board because it has on it the people who know best and are there to monitor offenders? I think it entirely appropriate that the Minister and Department consult the Probation Board to ensure that the conditions of any early release are absolutely watertight.

The Member also said when addressing amendment No 7 that we should not be prescriptive yet criticised the lack of prescription in amendment No 6. That is not particularly consistent. He then said that he did not know anything about the amendment and what it would do. I draw his attention to three documents, the first of which is the Hansard report of the meeting that we had with officials on the issue. It is not some sort of secret document; it is on the Internet and is available in the Library, should he have wished to consider the matter further. I draw that to the Member's attention, and I will furnish him with the documents after the debate, if he wishes. I draw his and perhaps other Members' attention to a part of the transcript in which we dealt specifically with the Probation Board. Mr Doran, responding to a question that I put to him about the requirement for some sort of community service, said:

"If there are conditions on their licence, they will be required to do it. However, if there are no conditions, because they are still technically prisoners on early release, we cannot compel them to undertake a programme. They will be subject to curfew, as Alan said."

He went on to say:

"Our colleagues in the South have a scheme for undertaking reparative work. They have legislation there; Alan referred to community return. I met colleagues from the South last week, and it is a very impressive scheme, through which people get early release and undertake community service. We do not have the legislative authority to do that. It is something that PBNi would be keen to see at some stage in the future, but it is not available at the moment."

The amendment is offered because the Probation Board has said that it is something that, it thinks, would be valuable in the future.

The second document that I draw the Member's attention to is a report of the Thornton Hall project review group, which is also available on the Internet. Again, it is not some sort of secret document. It goes into some detail about the Irish scheme, which is called earned temporary release into community service. The report talks about the reason that you would have such a scheme. It goes into detail on what the scheme would look like and some of the conditions that would be attached to it. I will furnish the Member with that as well.

The third document is the legislation in the Irish Republic. The Minister suggested that it was unusual for the DUP to look to the Irish Republic for a model, but I can assure the House that I will look anywhere in the world where I think there is an innovative approach to justice issues. If it is something that, I think, we can replicate in Northern Ireland, I will certainly give consideration to it. I will furnish the Member in the corner with that legislation as well.

The Member also made a rather bizarre intervention in which he tried to envisage a scene from 'Cool Hand Luke' in which there were people in chain gangs having to do work in, I think he said, easily identifiable uniforms. Bringing it down to that level adds little value to the debate. We are having a proper discussion that every other Member sees value in and views as a progressive policy that is tackling a real issue, yet the Member tries to bring in such spurious points. Of course, Mr McCrea is not opposed to uniforms: I remind the House that this is the man who wore a red tie as a uniform for about three or four years when he was first elected, so he knows something about it.

The contribution from Mr McCrea really was of little value to the House. If he had wanted to make a proper contribution on amendment No 6, he should at least have tried to inform himself on its detail.

Mr B McCrea: What colour of tie are you wearing, as a matter of interest?

Mr Ross: Indeed. With my red tie, I have clearly been inspired by Mr McCrea.

Mr Allister: Is that Basil's tie?

8.45 pm

Mr Ross: I will ensure that I never wear it in the House again, if that is the comparison that is being made.

Ms Sugden talked about the policy being progressive. Some people are perhaps uneasy with that terminology. I think that it is a progressive policy, but the value in the amendment is that it ensures that prisoners have to see out their entire sentence. That gives confidence to the community, who could be concerned that prisoners will be released early from prison without having to see out their sentence. It also transitions an offender into normal life in a managed way, and, of course, the increased value is that the taxpayer does not have to pay for that. It is a progressive policy, and most people in society will see value in it.

The Minister talked about this being the easy amendment to deal with. I am glad that that is the case. He said that it was useful, and, as a Committee, we would be interested in working with him and the Probation Board in the future to work up some of the detail. I certainly think that there is merit in it. I am pleased that there has been support from all sides of the House for the amendment, and, at the risk of losing any support, I shall stop there, and we can proceed to the votes.

Amendment No 6 agreed to.

New clause ordered to stand part of the Bill.

New Clause

Amendment No 7 proposed:

After clause 89 insert

"Sentencing for violent offences against older people

89A.—(1) This section applies where an individual is convicted of a violent offence and that individual was aged 18 or over when the offence was committed.

(2) The court shall impose a custodial sentence for a term of at least seven years (with or without a fine) unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify its not doing so.

(3) For the purposes of this section 'violent offence' means an offence which leads or is intended or likely to lead to the death of a person aged 65 years or more or to physical injury to a person aged 65 years or more and includes an offence which is required to be charged as arson (whether or not it would otherwise fall within this definition).

(4) If there are exceptional circumstances which justify—

(a) the imposition of a lesser sentence than that provided for under subsection (2), or

(b) the exercise by the court of its powers under section 18 of the Treatment of Offenders Act (Northern Ireland) 1968, the court shall state in open court that it is of the opinion that such exceptional circumstances exist and the reasons for that opinion.

(5) Where subsection (4) applies the Chief Clerk shall record both the opinion of the court that exceptional circumstances exist and the reasons stated in open court which justify either the imposition of a lesser sentence or the exercise of its powers under section 18 of the Treatment of Offenders Act (Northern Ireland) 1968 as the case may be.

(6) For the purposes of subsection (2) 'custodial sentence' shall not include a sentence in relation to which the court has made an order under section 18 of the Treatment of Offenders Act (Northern Ireland) 1968.

(7) For the avoidance of doubt, an offence falling within the definition of subsection (3) is a violent offence for the purposes of this section whether or not there is evidence that any individual who is convicted of such an offence knew or suspected that any person who dies or sustains physical injury, or any person who is intended or likely to die or sustain physical injury, is aged 65 years or more.

(8) In section 36 (reviews of sentencing) of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 in subsection (9)(d) after '2015' insert the words—

'and a sentence required to be imposed by virtue of section 89A of the Justice Bill 2015'.— [Mr Poots.]

Mr Speaker: A valid petition of concern was tabled today in relation to the amendment. In accordance with Standing Order 28(1), no vote may be held on a matter that is the subject of a petition of concern until at least one day after the petition of concern has been presented. The business on today's Order Paper, therefore, cannot be completed tonight. The Business Committee met this evening and agreed that unfinished business from today's sitting would be concluded at the start of business on Monday 22 June 2015.

Mr Allister: On a point of order. In light of that announcement, can you clarify whether it will now be possible to table further amendments on the undebated parts of the Bill by Thursday morning?

Mr Speaker: It is an interesting point, but Monday will be a continuation of today's business, so there will be no further opportunity. We are concluding today's business, as it happens, on Monday.

The debate stood suspended.

Adjourned at 8.47 pm.

Employment and Learning

Launch of Consultation on Part-Time and Postgraduate Student Finance Arrangements

Published at 12.30 pm on Tuesday 9 June 2015

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): I wish to inform the Assembly that I am today publishing a consultation on the student finance arrangements for part-time and postgraduate higher education students.

Background

Prior to the budget settlement for 2015-16, my Department had been undertaking a wider review of higher education funding policy. A review of student finance arrangements, with a particular focus on part-time and postgraduate students, was a key theme of this review.

However, as a result of the budget settlement my Department is now dealing with unprecedented levels of budget reductions. Given that almost half of my Department's budget is used to fund higher education, these reductions have had a significant knock-on impact for the sector. Grant funding for our higher education institutions is reducing by over 8% in the incoming academic year, which amounts to over £16 million, and the indications are that finance will remain constrained in the next Assembly term.

In this context, I decided the higher education funding review in its much more comprehensive form was simply no longer sufficient or appropriate. Instead of a focussed review of specific areas of funding policy I intend to facilitate a much wider conversation about the basic financial sustainability of our higher education sector. I will be launching this "big conversation" in September and I look forward to updating members in the near future.

However, I am still progressing with several aspects of the previous higher education funding review on a separate basis, including the review of certain elements of the student finance system. This consultation is part of that revised approach, and in the near future I will also, in response to calls from key stakeholders, be launching a separate consultation on the frequency at which higher education students receive their maintenance support payments.

The Student Finance System

The Student Loans Company administers a wide range of student support services to Northern Ireland domiciled higher education students on behalf of my Department. These services are a crucial enabler of higher level study for many students, and they help to ensure that access to higher education is based on the ability to learn, not the ability to pay.

But our focus around higher education in Northern Ireland has traditionally centred upon traditional full-time undergraduate students, and this is reflected in the student finance system. These students have access to significant levels of standard support for both their tuition fees and their general maintenance costs, not to mention a range of targeted support measures to help with things such as childcare and travel costs.

Indeed, almost 99% of student finance paid to Northern Ireland students in the last academic year was in respect of full-time undergraduate students, which is really striking when we consider that they account for only about 60% of the higher education student population. Importantly, full-time undergraduates are the only student group from Northern Ireland with access to the student loan system.

By comparison, the majority of part-time undergraduate students are not eligible to access the student finance package on offer. This package consists mainly of a means tested and intensity-based tuition fee grant, available only to students from very low household incomes. Furthermore, as part-time undergraduate tuition fee levels are not capped, even the maximum grant available is often not sufficient to cover the full cost of tuition fees charged.

Meanwhile, the majority of postgraduate students have no access to any kind of standard student finance package, with the exception of the Disabled Students Allowance. However, at present, distinct from the student finance system, my Department funds a highly competitive postgraduate awards scheme. This scheme is now funding over 700 awards for postgraduate students, covering tuition fees of almost £4,000 and providing almost £14,000 in stipends to support students with their living costs. But these awards are allocated by our universities in the main to PhD students. Very few funding opportunities exist for taught postgraduate students, and the Masters degree has, regrettably, been described as a "broken bridge" between undergraduate study and research.

Indeed, even for PhD students the postgraduate awards are limited in number and allocated on a highly competitive basis; in the main postgraduates at both the taught and research levels must finance their own studies.

Drivers for Change

Evidently the principle of fair access is not adequately extended beyond the full-time undergraduate. For most part-time and postgraduate students, access to higher education is, under present arrangements, absolutely dependent on the ability to pay. This is borne out through data collected by the Higher Education Statistics Agency on students' main sources of tuition fee support.

But supporting these students is not only a matter of social justice; it is an economic imperative.

The top priority of this Executive is to grow our economy, and it is clear that this can only be achieved through a sustained and prioritised focus on skills. Our skills forecasts could not be any clearer: they consistently reveal a significant and growing requirement for higher level skills in our workforce, ranging from sub-degree to postgraduate qualifications. And these requirements will only intensify under a lower rate of corporation tax; new investors will gravitate to Northern Ireland first and foremost for the quality of our people and their skills.

What is also clear is that these demands will not be met by current levels of supply. Importantly, with the vast majority of the 2020 workforce having already left formal education, they will not be met through the traditional supply of 18-21 year old school leavers either. A renewed strategic focus on up-skilling and re-skilling our existing workforce is required.

To this end, flexible part-time provision is paramount. It is, in the main, through part-time provision that people who have already left formal education and entered the working world will be able to return and build upon existing skills. It is through part-time provision that they can balance work and other responsibilities with their studies. And it is through part-time provision that my Department's new model for apprenticeships will flourish at the higher levels.

Similarly, our skills forecasts reveal a rapidly growing requirement for postgraduate qualifications, such as Masters and PhDs. The stock of jobs requiring postgraduate qualifications is in fact forecast to rise faster than the requirement for any other qualification type in a lower corporation tax environment. Yet we continue to enrol significantly fewer postgraduate students, relative to our population, than any other country in the UK.

Our economic growth aside, we must also acknowledge that we operate within a UK wide higher education sector. Traditionally about 30% of our students choose to study in other parts of the UK each year.

A more comprehensive and non means tested tuition fee support package is now available to part-time undergraduates from both England and Wales, and the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills has recently consulted on its intentions to offer loans to English domiciled postgraduate students from the 2016/17 academic year onwards.

In many ways these emerging differences are part and parcel of devolution, and there are many obvious areas in which our students benefit from different student finance arrangements. But, in other areas, we have a responsibility to seek to ensure that our students are not placed at a significant disadvantage compared to their counterparts from other regions.

The Consultation

The consultation sets out several policy options designed to improve access to both part-time and postgraduate study. Given the current financial challenges, I believe it would be irresponsible and unrealistic to consider any options with significant resource budget implications. All of the options have therefore been designed within the parameters of the student loan system.

As student loans are ultimately expected to be paid back, they are not paid out of the Northern Ireland Block. Cover can be provided to us by Her Majesty's Treasury on an annual basis, and this is also provided to acknowledge any impairment on the loans issued.

For part-time students the options revolve around support for tuition fees. The consultation considers options to: (i) extend a non means tested tuition fee loan to part-time students, on the same basis as the loans available to full-time undergraduates; and (ii) to "top up" the existing part-time grants with loans.

To ensure the support provided can cover the full cost of fees charged in Northern Ireland, options are also considered within the consultation to cap part-time fee levels, again on the same basis as full-time fees. Several other design issues around eligibility and repayment arrangements are also considered.

For postgraduate students the options again largely revolve around non means tested tuition fee support, either for: (i) taught postgraduate students in economically relevant subject areas; or (ii) all taught postgraduate students. A third option is also considered to replicate the proposals recently set out by the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills for a "contribution to costs" loan of £10,000, paid directly to the student to assist with whatever costs required. This option would require a student to take out an entirely separate student loan, repaid concurrently with their existing undergraduate loan.

As with the part-time options several other design issues, including options to cap fee levels for postgraduate students, are also considered. The merits of a similar "contribution to costs" loan for postgraduate research students are considered within the consultation.

Of course all of these options rest heavily on the existing student loans system, on the approval of Her Majesty's Treasury and on the capacity of the Student Loans Company. Some will carry greater costs and more risks than others, and all of these issues are laid out in the document. Any new policies potentially emerging from the consultation will carry significant lead-in times for a range of legislative and administrative reasons and will not be in place until the 2016/17 academic year, at the earliest.

The consultation period will run for approximately 14 weeks until 11 September 2015 and I encourage all members to engage with myself and my Department during that period.

The consultation can be viewed at: www.delni.gov.uk/part-time-and-post-graduate-student-finance.

Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Update on Actions to Take Forward Recommendations from the Report of the Inquiry into Child Sexual Exploitation in Northern Ireland

Published at 1.00 pm on Thursday 28 May 2015

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The purpose of this statement is to provide you with an update on the actions to take forward recommendations from the "Report of the Inquiry into Child Sexual Exploitation in Northern Ireland".

In former Minister Wells' oral statement to the Assembly on 18 November 2014 he advised the House that a Health and Social Care Child Sexual Exploitation (CSE) Response Team would be established to consider each of Professor Marshall's recommendations from the report as they relate to health and social care.

The Response team, led by my Department, has now been established and is made up of senior representatives from the Health and Social Care Board, the Public Health Agency and each of the five Health and Social Care Trusts. It is supported by an Implementation Group, led by the former Director of Children's Services of the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust, Bernie McNally, OBE.

With the agreement of the Ministers of Education and Justice a Senior Officials Group has been established, made up of representatives from all three departments. The senior officials group is responsible for taking forward those recommendations which are cross-departmental.

I have today published an Implementation Plan, which sets out very clearly how the HSC will implement each of Professor Marshall's recommendations over the next few years through to November 2017. Implementation is being undertaken in three phases and it is my intention to implement a significant proportion of the recommendations in Phase 1, that is, within one year of the publication of the Marshall Report. Implementation of some recommendations will take longer, particularly those relating to service developments.

I remain committed to implementing all of HSC recommendations as quickly as possible and in full. I will work with Ministers Ford and O'Dowd to ensure that we collectively deal effectively with child sexual exploitation in Northern Ireland where it exists and more importantly, minimise the risk of it occurring in the first place. Without doubt, we will need the support of elected members, parents, carers and the wider community and I am confident that it will be provided.

A copy of the HSC Marshall Implementation Plan will be provided to all Members and it will be published on my Department's website.

Regional Development

Coleraine to Londonderry Track Renewal Project — Phase 2

Published at 11.30 am on Tuesday 2 June 2015

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development):

Members of the Assembly will, I am sure, be aware of the issues surrounding the progress with Phase 2 of the Coleraine to Londonderry Track Relay. The purpose of this statement is to provide an update on the project which is a key Programme for Government commitment and clear evidence of the Executive's commitment to invest in and reinvigorate our rail network. It also signals our commitment to invest in the North West and improve connections between Belfast and Londonderry. I am in a position to announce today that after a number of difficulties the project will go ahead creating an infrastructure which allows for more frequent train services to and from Londonderry.

Background

1. The rail track between Londonderry and Coleraine has suffered for years from underinvestment. The original preference was for a complete relay and signalling to be carried out in a single project. However, funding constraints meant that the project could not go ahead at that time. In October 2011 following my intervention we approved carrying out the relay in 3 phases. Phase 1 relayed the worst parts of the track and was completed ahead of schedule in March 2013 and within its budget of £26.7m.
2. Phase 2 involves the full re-signalling of the Coleraine to Londonderry line section and the addition of a passing loop originally to be completed by the end of 2015 and estimated to cost £19.9m based on analysis at that time. It was originally envisaged to be a single Design and Build project. However, the initial tender exercise for this procurement produced only one bidder in 2013. It was judged that this bid did not represent value for money and carried unacceptable risks that costs could be open ended.
3. As a result the procurement strategy for the Phase 2 Signalling and Telecommunications was reviewed. Translink decided to split the project into two distinct packages. Passing loop work was separated from the Signalling and would be tendered separately. This delayed the project completion from late 2015 to late 2016.
4. Following the adoption of this revised procurement strategy a detailed signalling design produced in 2014 suggested that the original cost estimate for the project was seriously underestimated and out of date.
5. I expressed my disappointment at this and informed members at the time. I directed my officials to work closely with Translink to resolve this and commissioned an independent Project Assessment Review (PAR) of the project at that stage.

Progress

6. The review confirmed that the current supplier base in the UK for this type of project is very overstretched and those companies who may have been expected to bid for this project are already heavily committed in Network Rail projects in Britain. This created a clear risk to the procurement process for signalling works in Phase 2.
7. Translink subsequently prepared and approved a fully-detailed pre-tender estimate, independently assured, prior to the formal commencement of the formal procurement process. This identified a cost of £40m. The PAR report had made it clear that due to the scale of the market in Great Britain and the relatively small scale of the Phase 2 project there was a risk that it might not attract sufficient interest from suppliers. There were commercial sensitivities around this and the release of the PAR report which are now resolved.

Market Response

8. Four GB-based firms initially expressed sufficient interest to participate in the Pre-Qualification Questionnaire stage of the process but ultimately only one, Babcock Rail, submitted a tender. Translink held robust negotiations with Babcock which ultimately resulted in a best and final offer for the Signalling and Telecomms part of the project that was reduced by over 10% against the initial price submitted.
9. However, the increased overall project cost of £46.4m creates a difficulty. Prior to the second tender a revised, independently assured estimate of £40.1m was produced. This covered both the Signalling and Passing Loop elements. Neither the Translink Accounting Officer nor my Accounting Officer could sign off the bid as representing Value-For-Money (VFM) although they both agreed that the proposed project was the best public policy option.

Options

10. As a result I issued a direction to my Permanent Secretary that Translink should proceed to conclude the contract with Babcock. In line with Managing Public Money (NI) this direction was approved by the Minister for Finance.
11. I am pleased to inform this Assembly that the contract for the signalling element of Phase 2 is now in place between Translink and Babcock – a well recognised and respected supplier nationally and internationally. This will enable Phase 2 to be substantially completed by December 2016.
12. At a time of financial constraint this has not been an easy decision, but I believe it is the right one and demonstrates that this Assembly can deliver on its promises to take decisions which will benefit our citizens. I believe the investment that has taken place in our railways is tangible proof that we can deliver change and deliver on our promises. Rail passenger journeys continue to grow year on year particularly on the Londonderry line. Improvements to our infrastructure create the environment to grow our economy, create tourism opportunities and better connect our two largest cities. I know all members will support me in this.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Mr McGimpsey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether they have considered their Department ceasing to be a service delivery department and instead becoming a co-ordinating office of the centre.
(AQO 7342/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): In accordance with the Stormont House Agreement, the Executive agreed at its meeting on 22 January 2015 to the reduction of the number of Northern Ireland Civil Service Departments from 12 to nine.

On 2 March in a Statement to the Northern Ireland Assembly, the First Minister outlined the proposed functions of the 9 new Departments.

Mr Hussey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the St Lucia Barracks site.
(AQO 7898/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Ministry of Defence recently advised OFMDFM that it had resolved the legal impediment relating to the ownership of the historic barracks, which forms part of the St Lucia site.

Our officials have been engaged in discussions with organisations that have an interest in potential future uses of the St Lucia site, including Omagh District Council and the Department for Social Development.

The intent of transferring the sites under the Hillsborough Agreement was to provide additional resources to the Executive and for the benefit of people here.

Officials are currently investigating the potential costs that would be incurred by the Executive, if the historic barracks was to be transferred. In the current financial climate, we need to ensure that ownership of this part of the site would not place an unnecessary drain on the Executive's resources.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how much has each member of the Maze Regeneration Board been paid since its inception.
(AQW 44561/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Maze/Long Kesh Development Corporation (MLK DC) Board was constituted on 12 September 2012.

The Chair of the MLK DC Board receives £30,000 per annum plus reasonable expenses. Board Members receive £6,000 per annum plus reasonable expenses.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how often the Maze Regeneration Board has met in each of the last two years; and how long did each meeting last.
(AQW 44562/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Maze/Long Kesh Development Corporation (MLK DC) Board met on 10 occasions in 2013/14 and on 10 occasions in 2014/15.

Each meeting lasts approximately three hours.

Mr Eastwood asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by Private Finance Initiative in Foyle in 2013/14; and the cost of each project.
(AQW 44705/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: OFMDFM do not have any capital infrastructure projects financed by Private Finance Initiative. OFMDFM annually collects data on Private Finance Initiative projects from departments and their Arms Length Bodies as part of a wider exercise to collect data across the UK.

A copy of this data has been placed in the Assembly Library and published on the OFMDFM website at <http://www.ofmdfmi.gov.uk/economic-policy-regeneration-section.htm>

Mrs Cameron asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on proposed age discrimination legislation relating to the provision of Goods, Facilities and Services.

(AQO 8009/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We made a statement on 19 February giving a commitment to extend legislation to give legal protection from unfair age discrimination, to those aged 16 years and over, by those providing, goods, facilities and services. The statement also announced the intention to bring forward a consultation document setting out proposals for legislation.

Our officials have met with departments and key stakeholder organisations to progress the development of the proposed consultation document.

On 15 April, Junior Minister Bell and Junior Minister McCann appeared before the Committee for OFMDFM to update Members on progress on the proposed legislation, including the development of the consultation document.

Subject to Executive agreement, we intend to issue the consultation document in the near future.

Once the consultation is complete and a robust policy agreed, we will then consider all the options available to us for bringing any proposed legislation before the Assembly.

Mr Flanagan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what assessment has been made of the capacity to provide safe resettlement to present and future refugees from Syria.

(AQO 8012/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The only formal programme under which we might receive Syrian refugees is the Vulnerable Persons Relocation scheme. This scheme aims to identify those left most vulnerable by the conflict and resettle them where they can get the quality of care they need.

If we are to take responsibility for what would be an extremely vulnerable group of people we must ensure we can offer the same quality of life as would be provided elsewhere. Refugees must have access to appropriate services; healthcare, housing, community support, religious facilities, and appropriate opportunities. They must be able not only to survive but have a life and a future here.

Taking all these factors into account, we continue, in partnership with Non Governmental Organisations which are active in this area, to examine the possibilities and implications, and all options remain on the table. Our guiding principle however is that we must balance our potential to improve the lives of vulnerable refugees with our ability to keep them safe and well.

We are aware that a small number of Syrians have already made their own way here to seek asylum. Some of the groups funded by our Department through the Minority Ethnic Development Fund have been crucial to providing them with support as they seek to make a new home here.

Mr F McCann asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what impact welfare cuts will have on their ability to implement the Disability Strategy.

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The issue of welfare reform remains under consideration by Executive party leaders. We remain committed to implementing the Disability Strategy.

Mr Ramsey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, following the announcement from the PSNI that there has been a significant increase in race hate crime in the last year, for an update on the Racial Equality Strategy.

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Following a public consultation officials are finalising their work on analysing the responses received.

Officials continue to meet with representatives of the sector to clarify certain key issues that arose during the 16 week public consultation exercise.

Publication will follow once the Strategy is considered to be sufficiently robust to deliver on the needs identified in the consultation exercise and elsewhere.

The Strategy, of itself, will not eliminate race hate crime but should help to focus our efforts on tackling the views and attitudes that give rise to it.

Mr Douglas asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the progress on the implementation of the Stormont House Agreement.

(AQO 8017/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: An implementation plan was drawn up in early January following the Stormont House Agreement. Work is continuing on a wide range of commitments and Executive party leaders meet weekly to discuss progress on implementation.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what bids she is preparing to submit for the June monitoring round.

(AQW 45702/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): In line with previous years my Department's June Monitoring Round proposals are scheduled to be discussed with the Agriculture and Rural Development Assembly Committee before they are shared with other stakeholders. As this briefing is due to take place on 2 June 2015, it would not be appropriate to disclose my Department's bids at this stage.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action her Department has taken to increase awareness of the general risk factors linked with Bovine Tuberculosis.

Mrs O'Neill: Increasing awareness among herdkeepers of risk factors linked with Bovine Tuberculosis (bTB) is an important part of our TB eradication programme. When herdkeepers are aware of the risk factors, they can employ appropriate biosecurity measures to reduce the exposure of their herds to these risks. Bovine TB is an important issue for me and that is why, when I announced the TB Strategic Partnership Group on 17 September 2013, I made it clear that I want a strategy to address, among other issues, improving biosecurity, and improving communications with farmers. The Group is due to submit to me its long-term TB eradication strategy, and associated implementation action plan, in December 2015.

To encourage better biosecurity, the Department publishes information for use by all herdkeepers and provides specific advice to those who have a TB herd breakdown.

DARD makes available to all herdkeepers the leaflet Biosecurity measures which help protect your herd against TB. This leaflet discusses in very clear terms the risks from bought-in cattle; contact with cattle from other herds; contact with badgers and deer; contact with people and equipment; and slurry from other farms. DARD also provides the leaflet Wildlife Biosecurity, which discusses the risks from badgers and deer and how to mitigate these risks.

Since July 2013, DARD staff have been providing these leaflets to herdkeepers at annual or biannual biosecurity visits in accordance with a communications plan. This means that every herdkeeper should have received these leaflets at least once by mid 2016. In addition, when a TB breakdown occurs on a farm, the herdkeeper is visited by a Veterinary Officer, who provides the herdkeeper with copies of these leaflets. Face-to-face biosecurity advice is also given at these visits. The leaflets are also freely available at Divisional Veterinary Offices and on the DARD website, together with other DARD publications containing Biosecurity advice. DARD staff also meet with herdkeepers at the Balmoral Show and the Winter Dairy Fair and discuss risk factors face-to-face.

In recent years DARD has commissioned research into the risk factors linked with Bovine Tuberculosis to build the evidence to help deal effectively with disease risk factors and reduce TB further. Examples of this research are the TB Biosecurity Study, a Literature Review on the role of slurry in spreading bovine TB and the Badger Cattle Proximity Study. This research was carried out by the Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute and the concluding results have been made available on the DARD website.

The Rural Development Programme 2014-2020, as currently proposed and submitted to the EU for approval, also includes training measures aimed at improving farmers' understanding of the importance of good biosecurity, not just in relation to bovine TB but also other diseases.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, in preparation for the implementation of the Reservoirs Bills, whether her Department has estimated the costs for the repair of local reservoirs covered by the Bill.

(AQO 8255/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: During Consideration Stage of the Reservoirs Bill on 28 April 2015 I moved a group of amendments, which were accepted, and have the effect of introducing the Bill in two phases.

The provisions in Phase 1 allow for the registration and designation of reservoirs and require an inspection of High and Medium Consequence reservoirs. This inspection will establish if any works are required in the interests of safety and provide cost estimates.

In preparation for the implementation of this new legislation my Department also commenced gathering condition information informally by inviting reservoir managers in the public, private, and not-for-profit sectors to supply the Department with the required information by commissioning an engineer to inspect their reservoir. Those reservoir managers who do not wish to commission an inspection have the option of allowing the Department to survey their reservoir.

To encourage the co-operation of reservoir managers, I have made financial assistance available to private sector and not-for-profit organisations that will help with the cost of obtaining the required information.

I am pleased to report that reservoir managers have reacted positively and this information gathering is on track for completion by March next year which will enable my Department to present a report on the condition and cost of repair of reservoirs to the Assembly by July 2016.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what role her officials have in tracking and recovering stolen livestock.

Mrs O'Neill: I am very aware of the real concerns that the levels of crime are causing amongst the farming community, including the number of livestock thefts from farms.

I have met the PSNI Chief Constable and the Minister of Justice on a number of occasions and made them aware of my concerns. I explained the real worry this was causing in rural areas and highlighted the need for something to be done.

Responsibility for tackling rural crime, including livestock theft, lies primarily with the PSNI, however DARD, through its Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch and CAFRE, works closely with the PSNI in relation to the detection, tracing and recovery of stolen livestock. Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch has been using sophisticated DNA profiling techniques to verify the ownership of recovered animals.

I am aware of some local PSNI initiatives to prevent rural crime, and these are to be welcomed. I am also aware of joint work being taken forward by the PSNI and Garda Síochána to combat crime in border areas. DARD welcomes this multi-agency approach which recently has resulted in the recovery of stolen animals and in arrests and convictions in the north and in ongoing prosecutions the south. The PSNI's latest quarterly update on agricultural and rural crime showed that the number of offences relating to agricultural activity has decreased significantly in the last year.

I would encourage farmers to participate in these initiatives and to do all they can to secure their properties. Anyone who has information which might help us combat this threat to rural businesses should report their suspicions to either DARD, the PSNI, the Garda Síochána or the Investigations Division of the Department of Agriculture, Food and the Marine.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what negotiations her Department has been having with stakeholders in relation to the bird nesting season.

Mrs O'Neill: I have not had any negotiations with stake holders specifically in relation to the bird nesting season. However in October 2014 the Ulster Farmers Union asked me to review the Cross-Compliance hedge cutting closed period with a view to allowing hedge cutting in certain circumstances during August.

As part of this review Officials from my Department met with representatives from the organisations that expressed an interest in this issue during the Cross-Compliance Good Agricultural and Environmental Condition consultation exercise carried out in March 2014. The stakeholders involved were the Ulster Farmers Union, Royal Society for the Protection of Birds and NI Environment Link.

Having considered the outcome of the review I intend to introduce the possibility to apply for a derogation which would allow hedge cutting from 15 of August to facilitate farmers wishing to plant oilseed rape or reseed grasses or other herbaceous forage (clovers, Lucerne, sainfoin and forage vetches) on arable land. The derogation would only apply where no nesting birds are present in the hedge and therefore is designed to help enable flexibility for farmers whilst protecting priority species.

The derogation process will be tightly controlled and if applications are received from areas classed as high risk in terms of late nesting birds a rapid field visit may be undertaken to assess the risk associated with granting the derogation.

The need for a derogation process will be reviewed in two years.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the review of the implementation of the Welfare of Animals Act 2011.

(AQO 8258/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Following the adoption of a Private Member's Motion on animal cruelty on 31 March 2014, I initiated a Review of the Implementation of the Welfare of Animals Act 2011. My officials are taking this Review forward in conjunction with the Department of Justice and an Interim Report was published on 26 February.

The Interim Report shows the progress of the Review to date across the four themes examined; Sentencing, Delivery Structures, Working Together and Serving the Public. It sets out the proposed recommendations which include increasing the maximum sentences available, establishing a single animal welfare website to bring together information from all three enforcement bodies and a publicity campaign to increase public awareness of who to contact if concerned about the welfare of an animal.

The Review Steering Group initially undertook an eight week public consultation exercise on the Interim Report to allow members of the public and interested stakeholders an opportunity to submit their views on the emerging recommendations and any further evidence. The consultation documents were available on the DARD and DOJ websites. Given the level of interest in dog breeding issues I extended the closing date for the consultation on the Interim Report to 21 May 2015 to provide additional time for people to submit their comments.

The Review Team are currently reviewing the responses received from the consultation on the Interim Report. Following this process, my officials may find it useful to meet certain respondents to discuss their suggestions to assist in preparing a Final Report, which is due to be published later this year. When I receive the Final Report I will consider the recommendations including any financial or resource implications for my Department.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action she has taken to seek a resolution to the difficulties with country of origin labelling for lamb.

Mrs O'Neill: The sheep sector makes a very important contribution to the local agri-food industry. It is vital that the sector remains competitive and profitable. Traditionally the south of Ireland has been a very important market for our lamb and I would like to see this trend continue.

New EU rules mean that lamb meat can only be labelled "Origin: Ireland" if the lamb was born, reared and slaughtered in the south. I am concerned that there has been a significant drop in demand from meat plants in the south for live exports of lamb from the north, and that the recent changes to the EU rules on country of origin labelling could be a factor in this.

The Euro/Sterling exchange rate is also having an adverse impact on trade. Sterling has seen a 20% reduction in recent years which makes our lambs relatively expensive when compared to our counterparts in the south.

I agreed with Minister Coveney that work is undertaken to examine the options for additional voluntary labelling for meat from pigs, sheep, goats and poultry. I have spoken again recently to Minister Coveney and we have tasked our Permanent Secretaries with getting a solution for locally produced meat. My officials had a constructive meeting with DAFM officials recently and they also met Jim Nicholson MEP, and Commission officials.

I have written to the DEFRA Secretary of State and to the EU Health and Food Safety Commissioner Andriukaitis about this matter. Unique circumstances face agri-food businesses on this island and the Commission needs to understand the case for greater flexibility in labelling.

I will continue to do what I can to support improved, transparent communications on pricing and market requirements. The industry needs to work together to ensure that all partners along the sheep supply chain are sustainable and profitable.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what tree re-planting schemes are in place within the Craigtlet area, following the recent felling of trees due to Phytophthora ramorum in a number of woodlands.

Mrs O'Neill: 25 hectares of woodland were felled at Ballysallagh to control the spread of P. ramorum disease of larch. Forest Service will regenerate the 22 hectares that it manages through a combination of planting and natural regeneration. Prior to the disease the woodland contained approximately 25% broadleaved trees. Once regeneration is complete this will increase to about 40%.

3 hectares is privately owned. Felling carried out under a Statutory Plant Health Notice in private woodland does not require a felling licence and there is no requirement for the land owner to regenerate this site. However I understand that the owners have indicated to local residents their willingness to replant the affected area as soon as practical with native tree species.

Unfortunately it looks as though we will need to continue work with tree diseases for some time to come. Therefore, I intend to make support available under a Forest Protection Scheme so that owners can restore their woodlands rather than abandon them. This Scheme is contained within the draft Rural Development Programme 2014-20 and, subject to European Commission approval, I expect the Scheme to open later in 2015 in readiness for the 2015/16 tree planting season.

Mr Brady asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how her Department's focus on broadband provision has benefited the rural community of Newry and Armagh.

Mrs O'Neill: My Department has now invested £7.5m in rural broadband in total. This investment has already helped some 17,000 rural dwellers, farms and businesses to access broadband services. The NI Broadband Improvements Project, which is led by DETI, and to which I am contributing £5m, has been responsible for an additional 14,000 rural premises being able to connect to broadband if they wish.

In the Newry and Armagh area 4,591 premises have been connected through this investment giving rural dwellers in the area the same opportunities as those living in urban areas.

Broadband is a priority of mine and I want to see all rural dwellers in the north being able to connect to broadband if they wish, to this end I am investing a further £1m in the NI Broadband Improvement project and allocating £2m of the next rural development programme to tackle the harder to get at areas that will still not have access to broadband. I now want to encourage as many rural people as possible to make more and better use of broadband and I have asked officials to carry out a scoping study to see how my Department can encourage more and better use of broadband so that rural businesses and farmers can benefit from the wide range of government services now available on line.

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what progress has been made in relation to the problem of labelling sheep meat products, which has been blamed for depressing spring lamb prices locally over recent months.

Mrs O'Neill: The sheep sector makes a very important contribution to the local agri-food industry. It is vital that the sector remains competitive and profitable. Traditionally the south of Ireland has been a very important market for our lamb and I would like to see this trend continue.

New EU rules mean that lamb meat can only be labelled "Origin: Ireland" if the lamb was born, reared and slaughtered in the south. I am concerned that there has been a significant drop in demand from meat plants in the south for live exports of lamb from the north, and that the recent changes to the EU rules on country of origin labelling could be a factor in this.

The Euro/Sterling exchange rate is also having an adverse impact on trade. Sterling has seen a 20% reduction in recent years which makes our lambs relatively expensive when compared to our counterparts in the south.

I agreed with Minister Coveney that work is undertaken to examine the options for additional voluntary labelling for meat from pigs, sheep, goats and poultry. I have spoken again recently to Minister Coveney and we have tasked our Permanent Secretaries with getting a solution for locally produced meat. I will continue to do what I can to support improved, transparent communications on pricing and market requirements. The industry needs to work together to ensure that all partners along the sheep supply chain are sustainable and profitable.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list the respondents to the recent consultation on library opening hours.

(AQW 46084/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): Details of the respondents to the recent consultation on library opening hours are held by Libraries NI which undertook the exercise as part of a wider opening hours policy development process. Its list of respondents comprises both names of private individuals and names of organisations and public representatives.

Names of private individuals constitutes personal information. During the consultation Libraries NI did not advise these respondents that this personal information may be made public nor did it seek their permission to do so. Consequently, these details are exempt from disclosure in accordance with Freedom of Information and Data Protection requirements. The names of organisations and public representatives that responded have been published by Libraries NI and are listed at Annex A.

Annex A

Organisations and Public Representatives

- Action Ability Group (Whiterock)
- Armagh, Banbridge and Craigavon District Council

- UUP (Leslie Cree MLA, on behalf of the UUP)

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what criteria her Department used in reaching the proposal to reduce the opening hours at Portrush Library from 40 to 28 hours per week.

(AQW 46148/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The decision to reduce the opening hours at Portrush library was taken by the Board of Libraries NI and was based on criteria that were endorsed by the public during a recent consultation on a new Libraries NI opening hours policy.

The publicly endorsed criteria are as follows:

- Opening hours to be based on historic levels of use;
- Allocated hours to be used in a way that best meets customer need;
- Allocated hours should be sufficient to provide a range of opening hours to suit different customer groups and to allow a minimum range of programmes to be delivered;
- Opening hours should be affordable; and
- Opening hours should be sustainable.

None of the criteria exceptions agreed (i.e. substantial deprivation or rurality) applied in this instance.

Libraries NI is currently consulting with users to determine the best pattern of opening hours to meet customer need. It is Libraries NI's intention to seek to ensure that the pattern of opening hours in Portrush, Portstewart and Coleraine are complementary as far as possible, depending on customer response.

Department of Education

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education how many parents chose not to accept a nursery school place in each of the last two years,

(AQW 45628/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The Chief Executive of the Education Authority has provided the following information which shows the number of children whose parents chose not to accept a pre-school place, in a setting of their choice, after it had been offered to them:

Region	2013/14	2014/15
Belfast	122	145
Western	29	37
North Eastern	242	166
South Eastern	61	50
Southern	121	47

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education how many funded nursery and primary schools in East Belfast were oversubscribed after stage 1 of the application process for 2015/16.

(AQW 45697/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: At the conclusion of stage 1 of the pre-school admissions process on 17 April and the conclusion of the primary schools admissions process on 29 April 2015, when letters issued to parents advising them of the setting in which their child has been placed in September, there were 13 pre-schools and 6 primary schools in the East Belfast constituency which were oversubscribed with first preference applications.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Education how much funding is provided to Irish medium schools, broken down by council area; and of these, how many have fewer than the Bain recommended numbers for rural and urban primary schools.

Mr O'Dowd: The Sustainable School Policy (SSP) was published in January 2009 and it incorporated many of the recommendations from the Bain Review including the minimum enrolment numbers for urban and rural schools. The SSP outlines six criteria which provide the framework for assessing the sustainability of schools. The criteria are quality education experience, stable enrolment trends, sound financial position, strong leadership and management, accessibility and strong links with the community. It should therefore be noted that enrolment numbers is one of six criteria that must be examined when assessing the sustainability of a school.

Funding data for Irish Medium schools, broken down by new 2015 Council Area, is provided in the table below. The latest Financial Year for which complete audited financial data is currently available is April 2013 to March 2014.

The table also provides details of the number of schools which, at the October 2014 Census, have fewer than the Bain recommended numbers for rural and urban schools although as already noted the enrolment numbers are only one of the six criteria to be examined when assessing sustainability.

Irish Medium Primary Schools

2015 Council area	Total Funding for 2013/14 Financial Year	Total No of Irish Medium Primary Schools	No of Schools Under the Bain Threshold for Urban and Rural Schools
Belfast	£ 5,415,468	9	5
Causeway Coast and Glens	£ 1,448,948	3	3
Antrim and Newtownabbey	£ 771,534	2	1
Mid-Ulster	£ 1,520,331	5	4
Derry and Strabane	£ 2,219,075	4	3
Fermanagh and Omagh	£ 746,693	2	1
Newry, Mourne and Down	£ 965,823	3	3
Total	£ 13,087,872	28	20

Note: The Bain thresholds disregard nursery unit enrolments however funding data provided reflects allocations for the entire primary school including, where appropriate, nursery units within the school.

Irish Medium Post-Primary School

2015 Council area	Total Funding for 2013/14 Financial Year	Total No of Irish Medium Post-Primary Schools	Under the Bain Threshold Years 8-12	Under the Bain Threshold Years 13-15

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of parental requests for statutory assessment for Special Educational Needs which have been (i) denied; and (ii) accepted by Education and Library Boards in each of the last three years. (AQW 45722/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that the number of parental requests for statutory assessment of special educational needs which have been (i) accepted and (ii) declined by the Education and Library Boards over the last three years is as follows:

	Apr 2012 - Mar 2013		Apr 2013 – Mar 2014		Apr 2014 - Mar 2015

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Education how his Department is working with schools to address the problem of cyber bullying. (AQW 45822/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Cyber-bullying is a complex problem and tackling it requires a multi-faceted approach. The Department is working to increase awareness of the problem, educate pupils about this issue and promote greater use of best-practice by schools in responding to cyber-bullying incidents.

ICT is a compulsory cross-curricular skill and as part of this pupils receive teaching on e-safety and acceptable online behaviour. At the school level, School Governors have responsibility for pupil welfare and all schools are required to have in place policies on the safe and effective use of the Internet and Digital technologies.

As part of the C2k managed ICT service, all schools use common eSafety services and have access to eSafety information and resources via a dedicated C2k eSafety Zone. C2k uses its 'News Desk' service to promote issues of online safety directly to pupils and provide links to relevant web resources. In May 2015, C2k, in conjunction with UK Safer Internet, will also run a series of eSafety Conferences which will include the issue of cyber bullying. Over 400 school representatives are expected to attend.

The Department funds the local Anti-Bullying Forum (NIABF), which aims to tackling cyber-bullying through its own awareness raising activities, such as the annual Anti-Bullying Week (ABW), and by providing practical support, resources and guidance to schools, parents and pupils. The Forum makes a range of anti-bullying resources, including some on cyber-bullying, available through its website. It also developed and distributed a school resource pack, "Effective Responses to Bullying Behaviour", which highlights best-practice for schools to follow.

As part of its 2015-16 work programme, DE has asked NIABF to update its cyber-bullying resources and prepare an insert for the "Effective Responses" resource pack to provide specific guidance for schools on cyber-bullying. This will also take account of the ongoing work of the Safeguarding Board for NI (SBNi) on this issue.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education how his Department is addressing bullying in schools.

(AQW 45880/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department works in partnership with schools and other stakeholders to tackle bullying in a broad, holistic manner.

At primary level, as part of the Personal Development and Mutual Understand area of learning, all children are encouraged to develop an awareness and understanding of their own and others' feelings and emotions and of how their actions affect others. They are also taught strategies and skills for keeping themselves healthy and safe.

At post-primary level, the Learning for Life and Work area of learning teaches young people to develop strategies to promote personal safety including learning about different forms of bullying. At Key Stage 4 this includes understanding of how pupils can maximise and sustain their own health and well-being.

The Department has produced guidance for schools in developing effective anti-bullying policies which includes practical initiatives and case studies to support schools to tackle bullying. The guidance "Pastoral Care in Schools: Promoting Positive Behaviour" is available on the Department's website at <http://www.deni.gov.uk/ppbehaviour-4.pdf>. The effectiveness of a school's anti-bullying measures is monitored through the regular cycle of school inspections.

My Department funds the local Anti-Bullying Forum (NIABF), a grouping which brings together over 25 statutory and non-statutory organisations involved in tackling all forms of bullying. The Forum delivers awareness raising activities, such as the annual Anti-Bullying Week (ABW) and provides practical support, resources and guidance to schools, parents and pupils. In 2013 it released its own resource pack for schools "Effective responses to Bullying Behaviour" which highlighted best-practice and suggested a number of approaches which schools could use in responding to bullying incidents.

The Independent Counselling Service for Schools (ICSS) has been accessible to young people of postprimary age in mainstream schools since September 2007 and to postprimary aged pupils in special schools from January 2011. This allows pupils to speak to a trained counsellor about their concerns or fears around bullying.

The Department's "iMatter" Programme is intended to support the entire school community to be engaged in promoting resilient emotional health for all pupils. Under the programme a suite of homework diary inserts and posters on topics of concern to young people such as self esteem and coping with stress, worry, anxiety and bullying, and outlining sources of help are prepared and distributed annually.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many applicants in stage one for nursery places in 2015/16 failed to achieve a placement, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 45884/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have been advised by the Chief Executive of the Education Authority that the information requested is not collected on a constituency basis. A manual exercise to extract it would result in disproportionate cost.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education to detail his Department's forecast numbers for children reaching post-primary enrolment age over the next five years, within the Magherafelt catchment area.

(AQW 45887/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department produces pupil projections at an overall Northern Ireland level; however, it has been possible to produce regional year group estimates for the purposes of this AQ.

Please note that these estimates are based purely on population patterns. Other factors, such as new schools being built or school closures are not factored into this analysis.

Estimates of the number of pupils reaching post-primary enrolment age resident in the (former) Magherafelt LGD, 2015/16 – 2019/20

2014/15 (actual)	614
2015/16	620

2017/18	655
2018/19	684
2019/20	698

Sources: NISRA NI population projections; NI school census

Notes:

- 1 Estimated figures refer to pupils that would be in year 8 in post-primary schools in each year or who are aged 11 attending special schools.
- 2 Estimates are based on pupils resident in the (former) Magherafelt LGD. It does not factor in pupils that may attend schools in Magherafelt but live outside.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education to detail the benefits of the Magherafelt Learning Partnership.

(AQW 45888/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Through working together in Area Learning Communities (ALCs), such as Magherafelt Area Learning Partnership, post-primary schools are able to offer all pupils in the area access to more courses at Key Stage 4 and post-16 that interest and engage them. New and innovative courses that have clear progression pathways for young people in areas of economic growth, and that otherwise would have been difficult for individual schools to offer, are now accessible through the partnership arrangements. Young people in Magherafelt, as elsewhere, have opportunities to study alongside each other and learn from each other. Schools have built up excellent working relations that enable them to come together and plan provision for the young people of the area, put together solutions to challenges and share best practice. In the most practical of ways, ALCs such as Magherafelt Area Learning Partnership, support schools in putting pupils first.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education to detail the level of engagement (i) his Department; (ii) the Education Authority; and (iii) schools generally have with Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful; and whether he will increase this engagement.

(AQW 45894/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education (DE) has no direct engagement with Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful.

The Education Authority's (EA) main engagement is through support for the Eco-Schools Programme. A number of regional EA staff provide environmental assessments for those schools wishing to achieve an Eco-Schools award; while the Curriculum Advisory Support Service also provides support and educational advice to the charity.

All schools in the north of Ireland are involved with various environmental programmes supported by the charity. 1178 schools are currently registered with the Eco-Schools Programme, while 237 schools participated in the 2014 Big Spring Clean. 42 schools participate in the Adopt a Spot Programme and eight schools have participated in the Eco-Home programme.

The establishment of the single EA will ensure a greater level of consistency with regard to engagement and a meeting is planned for June between the Chief Executive of the EA and the Chief Executive of Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education whether he will review the criteria used to assess a child's pre-school full time provision in areas where a number of preferred full time providers have been unable to offer places.

Mr O'Dowd: Available evidence from the Effective Pre-School Provision in NI (EPPNI) found no discernible difference in children's cognitive development at the start of primary school between those who attended full-time and those with part-time attendance.

All admissions criteria are set by pre-school providers themselves: however legislation requires that the top criterion for each provider prioritises children from socially disadvantaged backgrounds. Learning to Learn – a Framework for Early Years Education and Learning includes an action to implement remaining actions from the Review of Pre-School admissions including one to examine the definition of socially disadvantaged circumstances with a view to reflecting changes to the benefits system especially relating to low paid working parents. Proposals for the way forward will be informed by any changes resulting from Welfare Reform.

Learning to Learn also includes an action to, over time, standardise patterns of attendance in the Pre-School Education Programme. I have placed a moratorium on any new or conversion to full time pre-school education until such times as a review of the current levels of full-time provision, existing research, and the needs of children being served by it can be carried out.

Any proposed changes to patterns of attendance will require a comprehensive analysis of the potential implications for existing settings; an evaluation of the impact of changes on the early years estate and associated funding requirements and potential amendments to Article 22 (4) (b) of the Education (NI) Order 1998 which defines full and part-time pre-school education.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children in each Education and Library Board area which have had a request for statutory assessment for Special Educational Needs (i) rejected; and (ii) undertaken in each of the last three years.

(AQW 45943/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that the number of requests for statutory assessment of special educational needs which have been (i) accepted and (ii) declined by the Education and Library Boards over the last three years is as follows:

	Apr 2012 - Mar 2013		Apr 2013 – Mar 2014		Apr 2014 - Mar 2015

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education whether it is standard practice to include water fountains in all new buildings for primary or post-primary schools.

(AQW 45948/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The School Building Handbooks (Primary and Secondary) provide advice and guidance on the planning and design of new school buildings and the standard to which they should conform. Requirements in relation to the provision of drinking water supplies are included in these handbooks.

The Primary School Handbook recommends that chilled fresh water dispensers should be appropriately located in circulation areas. The Secondary School Handbook has not yet been updated but in the interim, professional consultants engaged in the provision of new-build schools are instructed to locate chilled water dispensers in appropriate positions in circulation areas.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education what steps he has taken to encourage secondary schools to avail of free Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation training offered by the British Heart Foundation.

Mr O'Dowd: I very much welcome the dedicated work of the British Heart Foundation (BHF) and other organisations which promote the teaching of emergency life support skills, including cardiopulmonary resuscitation.

The Department delegates as much funding and decision-making as possible to schools which are best placed to assess the needs of their pupils and we take the view that it is very much a matter for schools themselves to reach a judgement on whether or not a resource provided by an external body might enhance their teaching and learning.

Having stated that, the Department of Education will be taking forward the implementation of some of the recommendations from the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety's Community Resuscitation Strategy. This includes facilitating the availability of CPR training resources through the C2k ICT managed service and issuing a circular to all schools to advise them of the availability of these resources – including the BHF training.

The Strategy also suggested that schools should be encouraged to provide CPR training to pupils twice during their school career: once while in primary school and once in post-primary education. We will therefore encourage this in the circular that we issue to schools in relation to available CPR training resources.

The Department will be represented on the Community Resuscitation Strategy Training Working Group, which has been set up to take forward relevant recommendations.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many pupils with hearing loss have been funded to attend a secondary school outside of Northern Ireland, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 45967/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that the number of pupils with hearing loss, funded to attend a secondary school outside of the north of Ireland, in each of the last five years, is as follows:-

April 2010 – March 2011	8
April 2011 – March 2012	8
April 2012 – March 2013	8

April 2013 – March 2014	7
April 2014 – March 2015	8

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what percentage of pupils with hearing loss attending Jordanstown School achieved 5 GCSE passes or more, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 45968/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department does not hold validated, school-level examination performance data for special schools. Such data are only available for mainstream grant-aided schools.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what percentage of pupils with hearing loss in mainstream schools have achieved 5 GCSE passes or more in each of the last five years; and to outline how this compares to the percentages for pupils who do not have hearing loss.

(AQW 45969/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The answer is contained in the table below.

Percentage of school leavers achieving at least 5 GCSEs at grades A*-G (including equivalents), 2009/10 to 2013/14^{1,2}

	Hearing Loss ³		No Hearing Loss

Notes:

- 1 Data exclude special and independent schools.
- 2 School leavers detailed in the above table may have other special educational need types in addition to, or in isolation of, hearing loss.
- 3 Percentages derived from base numbers of less than 100 should be viewed with caution to avoid drawing unwarranted conclusions from the data.

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education whether his Department, the Education Authority, or Middletown Centre for Autism keeps a database of teachers or schools who have accessed teacher training for autism issues; and what action has been taken to encourage schools who have failed to avail of this training opportunity, to do so.

(AQW 46015/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) and the Middletown Centre for Autism (MCA) have advised that both bodies keep databases of teachers and schools that have availed of teacher training for autism. DE does not hold such a database.

The EA has advised that teachers and schools are routinely directed to training and are actively encouraged to attend training where specific needs in relation to autism are identified in schools. When referrals for support are received by the EA, officers will review the status of training within the school and the school will be supported in meeting identified training needs as required.

MCA has advised that it forwards marketing materials including training opportunities to every school in the north of Ireland twice a year.

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education whether the new Education Authority will conduct an audit on the availability of youth psychology across Northern Ireland, as waiting times for assessment are increasing.

(AQW 46020/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that it plans to create a regional educational psychology service. As these regional structures are being put in place, the Authority will continue to monitor waiting lists for educational psychology services.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education how many children have been seen by educational psychologists in each of the last five years.

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that the number of children who have been seen by an educational psychologist in each of the last five years is as follows:

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of how far his Department is succeeding in adhering to the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence guidelines on autism.

(AQW 46025/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The National Institute for Health and Care Excellence (NICE) develops guidelines and provides advice in order to support the delivery of health and social care services across England, Scotland, Wales and the north of Ireland.

The provision of educational support to children and young people on the autism spectrum in the north of Ireland is based upon the individual learning needs of each child and is not dependent on the child having a medical diagnosis. As a consequence, this educational support is developed and delivered independently of the NICE guidelines.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education what innovative actions, and with what effect, have been taken since the introduction of the Autism Strategy.

(AQW 46028/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Since the launch of the cross-Departmental Autism Strategy and Action Plan in January 2014, DE has worked closely with the Education Authority (EA) and the Middletown Centre for Autism (MCA) on the implementation of the education-specific actions to develop support and provision for children and young people with autism. These include delivering training programmes by both the EA and MCA for teachers, educational professionals, youth workers and parents and providing ongoing effective support for pupils with autism.

The EA and MCA will continue to build the capacity of schools to support the needs of children with autism through both their delivery of autism specific training and the capacity building work delivered as part of the specialist direct support offered to children with autism by the MCA.

DE is represented on the Autism Strategy Implementation Group which is collectively responsible for monitoring progress against the actions and reflecting how implementation is progressing. The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has overall responsibility for the preparation of a subsequent report that will also consider the impact of the Strategy's actions over time which will be laid before the Assembly by December 2016.

I am confident that the education-related actions in the Action Plan will help to ensure that children and young people with autism are provided with high quality education services that evolve to meet their needs as they progress through the education system.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what consideration his Department has given to providing bilingual teaching (oral and sign language) for classes of deaf children.

Mr O'Dowd: All deaf children should have access to a broad and balanced school curriculum to enable them to develop their full potential. I recognise, however, that deaf children are a diverse group and that not all do, or indeed should, fit into one form of provision.

While the general aims of bilingual education are shared by the Education Authority it considers that the range of strategies outlined in my response to your previous AQW 46052/11-15 provide the best opportunity for support to be tailored to meet the individual needs of each child with hearing loss.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the academic attainment gap between deaf and non-deaf pupils.

(AQW 46051/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The data outlined in my response to previous AQW 45969/11-15 shows that there is not a substantive difference in the academic attainment of school leavers, with or without a hearing loss, in mainstream schools.

I remain confident that the strategies employed by the Education Authority continue to provide a comprehensive level of support to help pupils with a hearing loss achieve their full potential.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the strategies being pursued to reduce the academic attainment gap between deaf and non-deaf pupils.

(AQW 46052/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) provides a comprehensive level of support, tailored to the individual needs of each child, to help hearing impaired children across the ability range achieve their full potential. Support is available from diagnosis and on a continuing level throughout school, appropriate to the pupil's needs. Support can include whole school training and advisory support for relevant school staff with specific advice regarding:

- the pupil's hearing loss and the implications on learning;

- maintenance of hearing aids and associated equipment;
- management of the pupil within the classroom;
- strategies for developing the pupil's attention and listening skills;
- strategies for maximising linguistic opportunity;
- strategies for improving memory skills;
- strategies to assist the pupil access the curriculum
- strategies to develop social skills and self-esteem.

Attainment is not, however, solely influenced by hearing loss but can also be attributed to a range of factors including age of diagnosis, use of prescribed amplification devices and the pupil's cognitive ability.

The EA has advised that in addition to the wide range of measures provided to support young hearing impaired people from diagnosis to school leaving age, appropriate access arrangements at GCSE level may also be provided including:

- a modified examination paper and/or extra time;
- Special Educational Needs Co-ordinators (SENCOs) and examination officers will be reminded of special access arrangements available to the pupil;
- a live speaker in an aural examination;
- a sub-titled version of a video/film.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education for an update on the Home to School Transport Review; and what consideration he has given to the feasibility of providing free public transport for all school pupils.

(AQW 46065/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As you may be aware, I launched an independent review of home to school transport in December 2013. One of the elements I asked the panel of experts to consider was the feasibility of providing free public transport for all pupils. The panel presented me with their final report in August 2014; however, the panel did not include free public transport for all pupils as one of their recommendations.

I intend to consult on the policy issues raised in the report later this year. I have an open mind in relation to the recommendations but first want to hear the views of the public and stakeholders in the upcoming consultation before reaching any decisions on the way forward. A number of operational issues will also be taken forward separately with the relevant public bodies.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education what are the projected enrolments for each post-primary school in Coleraine for the 2015/16 and 2016/17 academic years.

(AQW 46126/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Projected figures are collected from each school individually for the subsequent year only as part of their school census return. The table overleaf details these projected figures for 2015/16 alongside the actual enrolments for 2014/15 for purposes of comparison. Projected figures for 2016/17 are not available.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to outline his Department's timeline for the review and revision of Community Relations, Equality and Diversity Policy.

Mr O'Dowd: The review of the Community Relations, Equality and Diversity policy has been completed. It is anticipated that the revised policy will be available by the end of 2015.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education whether the new logo for the Education and Skills Authority will include languages other than English; and if so, what consideration has been given to the equality implications.
(AQW 46204/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I refer the Member to the answer to AQW 45330/11-15. The logo for the Education Authority is available in two versions:

- English only; and
- English with Irish and Ulster Scots translations.

The Authority is mindful of accessibility issues and will make documents available in minority languages and other formats as appropriate and as reasonably practicable. This is consistent with the approach taken by my Department and I do not believe that there are any equality implications.

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the impact of the lack of ESF provision in East Belfast, North Down and Fermanagh and Tyrone.
(AQW 44978/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): My Department has offered funding to organisations who have indicated that they will be delivering provision in the relevant areas, as outlined below:

ESF Priority Strand	East Belfast	North Down	Fermanagh and Tyrone
Disability	11	5	11
Unemployed / Economically inactive	7	4	9
Youth / NEETs	7	3	6
Community Family Support	1	1	1

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many of the G5 Projects that were successful in receiving funding under the ESF Programme are having difficulty in securing match funding.
(AQW 45035/11-15)

Dr Farry: Successful applicants offered funding through the European Social Fund Programme will have until 30 June 2015 to confirm that match funding has been secured. To date my Department has received no formal notification from any successful applicant that match funding has not been secured.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many of the 27 applicants who appealed the ESF Phase 2 decision passed the quality scope threshold.
(AQW 45049/11-15)

Dr Farry: Fourteen applicants passing the quality score threshold appealed the European Social Fund Phase II assessment process decision.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the financial income received by St Mary's University College, Belfast.

Dr Farry: The latest set of financial statements produced by St. Mary's University College dated 31 July 2014 details the following information:

Government Grants	4,867,883
Tuition Fees	3,162,747

Research Grants and Contracts	1,312
Other Income	1,011,755
Total Income	9,043,697

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning pursuant to AQW 45015/11-15, to detail (i) what steps he intends to take to improve engagement with people in the target groups and (ii) a time-line for the completion of this stage.

(AQW 45442/11-15)

Dr Farry: Improving voluntary engagement with the people in the target groups is critical to the success of 'Enabling Success'. The strategy proposes to do this through a number of projects.

The first project, the development of an outcomes framework (Project A), has already commenced with the establishment of an expert Design Team. The Design Team aims to develop an end-user focused outcomes framework using a co-design approach to inform and guide the competitive pilot testing process (Project B) going forward.

The second project is to undertake an innovative regime of competitive pilot testing (Project B) to identify, develop and test a range of approaches to improve outcomes for the target groups. Successful approaches, such as more effective ways to improve engagement with the target groups, will then be developed and evaluated further and potentially upscaled.

This is a major project which will be run in three phases over a four year project lifecycle. The project will be initiated at the earliest possible opportunity, subject to my Department securing the necessary resources to take the work forward.

In addition, the Department for Social Development is currently taking forward a geographically focused pilot in 2015/16 (Project C). This pilot is aimed at early engagement with one of the key target groups and improving employment outcomes through early intervention.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail how the Management Authority ensures that the ESF Programme addresses the Department's responsibility under the Gender Equality Strategy.

(AQW 45560/11-15)

Dr Farry: All interventions on the ESF programme are open to men and women to help them overcome personal barriers to entering employment, education or training.

Project providers are required to assess the needs of individual participants and address those specific needs.

Under Thematic Objective 8(i), a range of support is offered to economically inactive and unemployed people. Under the economically inactive category, support has been allocated to projects supporting women only. A socio-economic analysis of Northern Ireland which was undertaken as part of the development of the ESF Operational programme found that there was a disproportionately high level of economically inactive people in Northern Ireland when compared with the rest of the UK. Within this category was a high proportion of lone parents, the majority of whom are women.

Thematic objective 9 addresses families in need, a high proportion of which are lone parent families. Evidence from the pilot Community Family Support Programme showed a high percentage of women on this Programme. A total of 1,321 participants were supported over the three cycles of the Pilot, of which 887 (67.1%) were female and 434 (32.9%) were male. This support will continue in the 2014-2020 Programme.

Through Thematic Objective 10, ESF funding provides support for apprenticeship training. Implementation of the new Apprenticeship Strategy in 2016 will include the development and testing of a range of measures to support gender participation across all occupations.

All project providers must, as part of the conditions of the award of funding, agree to collect information on all nine categories of the Section 75 legislation, including data on gender.

They are required to describe at the application stage how equality of opportunity will be promoted and monitored throughout the programme. In addition, the Northern Ireland Statistics & Research Agency will collect Section 75 data for monitoring purposes. All monitoring data collected by project providers must be broken down by gender.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for a breakdown of the hospitality spend by (i) his Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies, in 2014/15.

Dr Farry: The total cost of hospitality provided by my Department in 2014/15 was £43,777. The total cost of hospitality provided by my Department's arm's-length bodies in 2014/15 was £146,424.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning when does he expect (i) that the pilot testing process of the Enabling Success Strategy will begin, and (ii) to detail a time line to completion of this stage.

(AQW 45598/11-15)

Dr Farry: Improving voluntary engagement with the people in the target groups is critical to the success of 'Enabling Success'. The strategy proposes to do this through a number of projects.

The first project, the development of an outcomes framework (Project A), has already commenced with the establishment of an expert Design Team. The Design Team aims to develop an end-user focused outcomes framework using a co-design approach to inform and guide the competitive pilot testing process (Project B) going forward.

The second project is to undertake an innovative regime of competitive pilot testing (Project B) to identify, develop and test a range of approaches to improve outcomes for the target groups. Successful approaches, such as more effective ways to improve engagement with the target groups, will then be developed and evaluated further and potentially upscaled.

This is a major project which will be run in three phases over a four year project lifecycle. The project will be initiated at the earliest possible opportunity, subject to my Department securing the necessary resources to take the work forward.

In addition, the Department for Social Development is currently taking forward a geographically focused pilot in 2015/16 (Project C). This pilot is aimed at early engagement with one of the key target groups and improving employment outcomes through early intervention.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning why his Department has not brought forward proposals similar to those in the Higher Education Act 2004 requiring the appointment of an independent body to deal with student complaints. (AQW 45614/11-15)

Dr Farry: As part of my Department's Higher Education strategy, Graduating to Success, an outcome from Project Five is that there will be a clear and standardised internal grievance procedure throughout the sector and that the remit of the Ombudsman may be extended to include higher education learner grievances. This latter commitment has been superseded by the work of the Committee for the Office of the First and deputy First Minister on the Northern Ireland Public Services Ombudsperson Bill, which proposes bringing complaints of maladministration from students and former students of Queen's University Belfast and Ulster University within the remit of the Ombudsperson.

I will fully consider the content of the Bill and respond to the Ad Hoc Committee accordingly.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Employment and Learning as a result of the campus move from Ulster University from Jordanstown to Belfast city centre how many staff in all categories, including ancillary staff, will be (i) affected by the move; (ii) made redundant as a result of the move; and (iii) how many jobs in all categories, including ancillary, will be created by the move.

(AQW 45717/11-15)

Dr Farry:

(i) (ii) Ulster University is an autonomous body and therefore the management of staffing issues resulting from the move to the new campus is entirely a matter for the University.

In terms of how many staff will be affected by the move and how many staff will be made redundant, I can advise that the University has indicated that, as the move comprises a transfer of activity from Jordanstown to Belfast, it is currently envisaged that staff positions will not be directly affected by the move.

(iii) In terms of the creation of jobs as a result of the move, Universities are recognised as key drivers for economic growth and the potential regenerative impacts of the development for the north of the city are therefore significant. The development has the potential to help to bring education closer to the business community, enhance the current skills base and provide both short term employment opportunities and longer term sustainable employment opportunities. The development will have a significant impact on the local economy, with the University estimating that there is the potential for between 5,000-8,000 jobs to be created by the project across construction and other sectors.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what action his Department is taking to further encourage young people to explore careers in STEM (science, technology, engineering and mathematics) subjects.

Dr Farry: My Department's Careers Service provides impartial, professional careers guidance to young people in school at key decision points, for example when choosing GCSE subjects and when deciding on post 16 year old and post 18 year old options. Careers Advisers emphasise the potential risks and rewards of career choices so that clients can make informed decisions about their career paths. Advisers are aware of the need to promote STEM sectors as one of the areas most likely to produce the best prospects of future job growth. Formal partnership agreements are in place with nearly all post primary schools in Northern Ireland, and over 93% of all year 12 pupils avail of one to one guidance interviews with Careers Advisers before making decisions about post 16 options.

The Careers Service recently hosted a number of Careers Awareness Sessions for parents during which Careers Advisers highlighted the current and future job opportunities in STEM related sectors. Young people and their parents are encouraged to fully explore opportunities in this area before making career decisions.

Additionally, my Department has led on the production and implementation of the STEM Strategy, 'Success through STEM', which was produced in conjunction with five other local Departments and endorsed by the Executive in March 2011. The Strategy details 20 recommendations to promote STEM and outlines how Government and business intend to encourage more of our young people to study and pursue a career in STEM in Northern Ireland.

To support the implementation of the Strategy and encourage more of our young people to explore careers in STEM, my Department has taken forward various activities and initiatives. This includes funding successful programmes such as 'Tasty Careers', 'Bring IT On', 'IT Code Camps' and 'It's Your Choice', all of which promote the merits of STEM and help set a strong foundation for the future. My Department also funded the inaugural Science Festival in Northern Ireland, which featured over 100 events and focused on providing young people, adults and families with a wide range of interactive workshops, inspirational talks, project displays and hands-on activities to promote STEM. Total audience figures were over 43,000 and total social media reach was over 2 million people. In July 2014 I also arranged for eight further education students to attend a prestigious STEM summer camp in Worcester Polytechnic Institute in Massachusetts, USA to gain a global perspective on STEM.

I have created an additional 1,419 undergraduate places and 234 PhD places in STEM and economically relevant subject areas since 2011. My Department has also provided 18 industry backed scholarships in ICT and Engineering, with Queens University and Ulster University, which commenced in September 2014. I have worked closely with employers in creating alternative, innovative 'academies' in important areas such as Data Analytics, Cloud Computing and Software Testing. These academies are also open to non-STEM graduates from various disciplines. To date, 64 students from the Software Testers Academy, 44 from Data Analytics and 11 from Cloud Computing have gained employment.

My Department has funded the 'STEM Business Co-ordinator' post since November 2012. The Co-ordinator works closely with businesses to take forward actions to promote STEM. This has included innovative work to encourage more females to pursue STEM and the publication of several 'STEM Careers and Courses' supplements in local newspapers. These publications use local role models to highlight the numerous opportunities available in STEM and are released at key subject decision making times in the academic year.

I trust that you can appreciate the breadth of work my Department is undertaking to promote STEM subjects. If you would like any further information on any of the initiatives or programmes listed above, my officials would be pleased to help.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the current number of apprenticeship trainees in North Down. (AQW 45769/11-15)

Dr Farry: As of October 2014, ApprenticeshipsNI programme occupancy in the North Down Parliamentary Constituency was 277.

A full breakdown of occupancy by apprenticeship framework and level is included at Table 1.

The latest full ApprenticeshipsNI Statistical Bulletin can be found by following the link below.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the difference in the numbers of full and part-time lecturers employed at the Ulster University, Coleraine between 2009 and 2014.

(AQW 45906/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department provides funding to the higher education institutions for teaching, learning and research purposes. The employment of staff is the responsibility of individual institutions and my Department does not hold the information requested. You may, therefore, wish to seek this information from Ulster University directly.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the (i) availability of; and (ii) requirement for, quality hotel and guest house accommodation on the Causeway Coast and wider North West area in the run up to the staging of the Open Championship at Royal Portrush.

(AQW 45644/11-15)

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): Royal Portrush Golf Club (RPGC) has been invited to join the rota to host the Open Championship. It is hoped that the first event will be hosted in 2019, however this is still to be confirmed.

The potential staging of The Open Championship presents an excellent opportunity for accommodation providers in the North Coast and the Causeway Coast and Glens Council area.

In the Causeway Coast and Glens Council area, there are 204 serviced accommodation providers (Hotels, Guest Houses, Guest Accommodation and B&Bs) providing 1518 rooms and 3814 bed-spaces. Of these providers, 33 are members of the quality grading scheme providing accommodation between 1-5 stars. As well as serviced providers, the self-catering sector would also benefit from the event.

Tourism NI is always keen to see the provision of high quality, well designed and managed tourist accommodation that meets or exceeds modern visitor expectations and will continue to work closely with other government agencies, including Invest NI, to deliver additional capacity into the area in advance of any event.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what guideline he has issued to the new councils on their responsibilities and activities for tourism development.
(AQW 45700/11-15)

Mr Bell: Tourism Northern Ireland has been engaging closely with the 11 new Councils to determine tourism development priorities in each of the new Local Authority areas.

This is in line with key recommendations from the Hunter Review which point to the need to strengthen relationships within the tourism sector and for Tourism Northern Ireland to develop new strategic partnerships with Councils. Tourism Northern Ireland is working with the Local Authorities to establish clarity on the roles and responsibilities of the respective bodies in developing tourism at a local and national level, with the intention that these roles and responsibilities will be underpinned by Memoranda of Understanding between the organisations.

As a statutory partner Tourism Northern Ireland supports the new Councils in developing their Tourism Plans as part of their Community Planning role. The Community Plans will identify the long term objectives and will be aligned to tourism destination plans and development themes reflecting Northern Ireland strategic tourism priorities.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to list the grants and funding streams which his Department (i) has facilitated for applications in 2014/2015; and (ii) intend to open for applications in 2015/2016.

In addition, I have asked my officials to scope the potential for a Northern Ireland specific Air Route Development Fund for routes commencing from 2016/17.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what are the criteria by which his Department distinguishes between conventional and unconventional extraction of oil and gas.

Mr Bell: There is currently no oil or gas extraction in Northern Ireland, conventional or unconventional, but my Department would distinguish between these two terms largely on the basis of reservoir type, hydrocarbon trapping mechanism, and production methodology.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 45355/11-15, to place a copy in the Assembly library of the visitor research presented at the recent Fermanagh and Omagh District Council meeting.

(AQW 45761/11-15)

Mr Bell: The research requested is publically accessible by other means.

The statistics presented were produced by The Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency (NISRA) and these are publically available via the latest statistics bulletin at:

http://www.detini.gov.uk/local_government_district_tourism_statistics_2011-2013.pdf?rev=0.

The destination specific information relating to visitor attitudes of Northern Ireland and Fermanagh specifically is available via Tourism Northern Ireland's website at: <http://www.nitb.com/Portals/2/downloads/Visitor%20Attitude%20Survey%202014.pdf>

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for (i) an estimate of his Department's spend on petroleum exploration licence administration in the last three years, including estimates for meetings, shale gas regulators functions, education, the provision of information to the public, and the addressing of public concerns; and (ii) how much has been received from licence fees and rental fees.

(AQW 45778/11-15)

Mr Bell: The information sought is not readily available and may only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

In the last three financial years £1,000 has been received in licence fees.

The current Regulations do not make provision for rental fees to be paid to the Department.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Enterprise Zone in Coleraine.

(AQW 45897/11-15)

Mr Bell: The UK Government's Economic Pact, published on 14 June 2013, set out 3 commitments in relation to Enterprise Zones, focusing on Enhanced Capital Allowances (ECAs), which permit 100% first year allowances for qualifying plant and machinery expenditure. The pilot Enterprise Zone announced in the Chancellor's Budget statement in March 2014 will only offer ECAs as an incentive. The decision to designate a particular area offering ECAs is ultimately for Treasury.

My Department's role in establishing the pilot Enterprise Zone in Coleraine has been as a facilitator to ensure designation of the Enterprise Zone by Treasury once all negotiations have concluded between relevant stakeholders.

Those discussions have not yet concluded. However, my Department has held a number of meetings with the relevant parties in recent months to highlight the importance of resolving any outstanding issues quickly, and remains hopeful that formal designation can be requested from HM Treasury in the coming weeks.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what action InvestNI has taken to help enhance employment in rural areas.

Mr Bell: In the five years from 2009-10 to 2013-14 Invest NI promoted 8,794 new jobs in rural areas through extensive support to start-up and established businesses through a range of programmes like the Selective Financial Assistance (SFA) scheme, the Jobs Fund, Regional Start Initiative, and work with councils to support the needs of local businesses through the ERDF supported LED Measure of the EU Sustainable Competitiveness Programme. Since 2011 Invest NI has now approved assistance for 99 Council projects with total investment of approximately £38.3 million and total Invest NI assistance of approximately £25.1 million, of which £17 million is ERDF.

Further, Invest NI's Regional Offices provide advice to businesses across Northern Ireland to help them identify and bring forward viable projects.

For example in 2013-14 Minister Foster announced a £5 million investment by Dungannon-based Linden Foods, which will create 179 new jobs. Invest NI has offered assistance of £520,000 to support the company's plans for growth within the food retailing sector. Also later in 2013-14, Invest NI offered £444,000 support to Omagh-based engineering firm Telestack Ltd in a £3.1 million expansion which promoted 40 jobs.

Finally, the economic benefit of any company's investments project is not limited to the Parliamentary Constituency Area or District Council Area of that project. Indeed, the 2011 Census shows that 44% of people travel to work outside of the area they live in.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the cross-departmental funding grants paid to the NW200 event in the last five years.

(AQW 45937/11-15)

Mr Bell: Tourism NI has supported the North West 200 in each of the last 5 years through the Tourism Events Funding Programme as follows:

Year:	Amount Awarded: £
2011/12:	65,000
2012/13:	90,000
2013/14:	70,000
2014/15:	160,000
2015/16:	100,000
Total:	485,000

Department of the Environment

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 36325/11-15 to, to detail (i) how restoration could have taken place in the absence of any approved restoration schemes; (ii) whether such practice is consistent with minerals planning policy; and (iii) the checks his Department carried out to establish if the submission given by the applicant/agent was accurate.

(AQW 43579/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): Restoration schemes are normally considered by the Department through condition of planning approval. The physical restoration of a site that does not benefit from planning approval may in its own right not require permission depending on the nature and extent of the actual works. However restoration involving significant landfill is development requiring planning permission and would not be consistent with minerals planning policy without the necessary permission.

Checks made by the Department have demonstrated that unauthorised deposition of waste has occurred in these sites and this is the subject of on-going investigations by the Environmental Crime Unit.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment what is the scale of cuts, in both actual and percentage terms, being implemented in his Department's budget in 2015/16, specifying the level of cut in each programme.

Mr Durkan: Under the final Budget for 2015-16, my Department's non ring-fenced Resource DEL budget was reduced by 10.7% to £104.2 million, the highest percentage reduction of all the Departments. However, once an adjustment was made to ensure payment of the statutory amount of De-rating grant due to local government, the cut to the rest of my Department's budget exceeds 15%.

Implementing a cut of this scale at very short notice has required immediate and significant reductions across all my spending programmes. The table below outlines the reductions made in both actual and percentage terms.

There are a number of the Department's spending programmes which cannot be cut rapidly in the short to medium term. The DOE salary budget, whilst having been constrained as much as possible, none the less has to accommodate monthly salary payments due to the staff employed by the Department. The annual pay bill cannot be reduced ahead of the outworking of the voluntary exit scheme later in the year. Similarly the costs for a number of related contracts, such as HR Payroll, ICT support and Accounting systems, whilst already subjected to rigorous scrutiny, cannot be reduced at this time by the same level as the overall resource DEL cut.

This has resulted, by consequence in a larger reduction in the budget available for Environmental support programmes.

As noted above with the Local Government De-rating grant not being subject to reduction the impact on the Local Government Support Programme has been less than the overall resource DEL cut.

The Road Safety Support Programme has been subjected to significant review and the budget available for contracted advertising curtailed. The 2015/16 public facing campaign will be supplemented by new promotions developed and delivered through in house resources.

	Reduction £m	Reduction %
Local Government Support Programme	3.6	8%
Environment Support Programme	6.5	17%
Road Safety Support Programme	1.4	35%
	11.5

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 44897/11-15 and in respect of the section which states that, in many of the instances where taxi touting is reported, it has not been possible to take enforcement action as the alleged offender has not been a taxi driver and therefore their actions are not considered to be illegal, why this is not immediately reported to PSNI as a person operating as an illegal taxi driver given that this is a criminal offence and potentially dangerous to passengers; and to clarify whether his staff engage regularly with PSNI in order to prevent such activity.

(AQW 45603/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Under current provisions only taxi drivers are prohibited from touting, calling out or importuning a person to be carried for hire and reward in the vehicle. In many of the instances where touting has been reported, the alleged offender has been soliciting business on behalf of other taxi drivers and has not been operating as an illegal taxi driver themselves. In this regard a criminal offence will not have been committed and therefore would not necessitate a report to PSNI.

I can, however, confirm that the Driver & Vehicle Agency regularly conducts enforcement operations with the PSNI in pursuance of a wide range of illegal taxi activities and will take the requisite enforcement action where offences have been detected.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the cost to the public purse of all operations relating to the clean up of the major pollution incidents near the River Faughan at Campsie, Londonderry since June 2013.

(AQW 45635/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Works by my Department at the Mobuoy Road waste sites from June 2013 to date have focused on; (a) removing controlled waste materials from the licensed materials recovery facility (MRF) at the City Industrial Waste (CIW) site, (b) leachate removal primarily from the lagoon on CIW site, (c) installation of new measures to manage surface water and surface leachates from impacting water quality in the local tributary that leads to the River Faughan, (d) completion of a Geophysical survey and Habitat report, (e) installation of 39 new boreholes to monitor groundwater, leachate and landfill gas across both waste sites and (f) monitoring surface water quality in the local tributary and the River Faughan.

Costs incurred by my Department to date in undertaking these works are in the region of £920,000.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department's Strategic Planning Division, erred when it failed to realise the proximity, or consider the likely environmental effects, of incinerator approval Z/2014/1346/F on Belfast Lough Special Protection Area.

Mr Durkan: In response to your question AQW 45197/11-15, which specifically referred to the EIA determination undertaken for this application, I outlined the information that was available to my officials when undertaking the determination. My response to your question AQW 44208/11-15 explained the rationale for concluding that an Environmental Statement (ES) was not required. I would wish to clarify that a determination under the Environmental Impact Assessment Regulations is not a planning decision.

The information that was available for the EIA determination was also taken into account in reaching the planning decision and it included a range of information from various sources relating to Belfast Lough. The ES detailed the distance from the site to Belfast Lough SPA. The Habitats Regulations Assessment undertaken by NIEA and available to officials also highlighted this information. NIEA concluded that there were unlikely to be significant adverse effects on Belfast Lough SPA subject to mitigation. The Development Management Report that was before me also highlighted the location of Belfast

Lough to the west of the site. The mitigation requested by NIEA was included as planning conditions on each of the planning permissions.

Also material to the planning decision was the previous grant of permission for the larger development on the site and that there were no objections to either planning application.

Therefore I do not accept that my Department failed to consider the proximity or impact of the development on Belfast Lough SPA.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of the Environment what bids he is preparing to submit for the June monitoring round.
(AQW 45708/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The return date for my Department's submission to DFP for June Monitoring is 4th June 2015. Prior to this date I will be considering the contents of the submission in terms of bids and any possible reduced requirements. The Environment Committee will also need to be advised of the content of the June Monitoring submission prior to the DFP stated return date. Once DFP have received all Departmental submissions, the Finance Minister will produce an Executive Committee paper for discussion and approval probably around mid June. Then once the Executive Committee has agreed the outcome of June Monitoring, details of all bids will be available.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment if he has been invited, has visited or has any plans to visit any unconventional gas development sites in North America, including (i) the sites; and (ii) from whom he received an invitation.
(AQW 45721/11-15)

Mr Durkan: On 13 March 2014 I visited the offices of the Environmental Protection Agency in Washington to discuss Fracking and other Environmental issues. My predecessor Minister Attwood undertook a similar visit under his term as Minister of the Environment in March 2012 and March 2013.

I have no future plans at this moment in time, to visit any unconventional gas development sites in North America.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment whether representations to planning applications, which are submitted after the specified two week time period, will be accepted and given due consideration.
(AQW 45774/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Although there is no legal definition for a representation in planning, it is held to be a comment, objection or expression of support in relation to a planning application that has been submitted to the council or, as the case may be, the Department.

Section 45 (3) of the 2011 Planning Act requires that in determining any application for planning permission the council or the Department must take into account any representations relating to that application which are received by it within such period as may be specified in a development order.

The prescribed period is set out in accordance with Article 8 (1) (d) and Article 8 (2) (f) of the Planning (General Development Procedure) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015. The Department shall not determine the application before the expiration of 14 days from either: the date on which notice of the application is first published in a newspaper; or the date stipulated on the notice to any identified occupier issued under the statutory neighbour notification procedure; or the date on which the application is first published on its website, whichever date is the later or latest. There are also particular requirements where representations are received from those who have a legal interest in the land.

The Act places a duty on the planning authority not to determine applications within the specified period but does not specify a timescale in which representations must be submitted. In practice therefore, representations can be submitted and must be taken into account up until the point at which the decision is made.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment how much his Department has contributed, or is projected to contribute, to the joint North South Unconventional Gas Exploration and Extraction research being administered by the Republic of Ireland's Environmental Protection Agency and being carried out by CDM Smith.
(AQW 45777/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department is contributing €246,000 to the overall Research Programme, which is being led by CDM Smith Ireland Ltd in partnership with Queen's University Belfast, British Geological Survey, University College Dublin, University of Ulster, AMEC Foster Wheeler and Philip Lee Solicitors.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 44217/11-15, whether his Department equates the application of the precautionary principle with the requirement of evidence of environmental harm.

Mr Durkan: Recourse to the precautionary principle is not needed if evidence of environmental harm exists, it is only relevant where there is doubt about the impacts of a proposal or there is insufficient information to ascertain the probability of risk and degree of harm. The Department applies the precautionary principle appropriately and in line with guidance and the European Commission Communication on the use of the principle.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment for assessment of the twelve development control investigations carried out on behalf of NIEA by Queen's University Belfast Centre for Archaeological Fieldwork as part of planning regulations. (AQW 45797/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Records held by my Department indicate that during the period from January 2014 to December 2014 the Queen's University, Centre for Archaeological Fieldwork (CAF) undertook eleven development control investigations on behalf of the DOE. The investigations were undertaken on the small number of proposed development sites throughout Northern Ireland in order to comply with planning requirements. Nine of them were undertaken in order to offer some financial support for archaeological mitigation to be carried out in line with Paragraph 3.8 of Planning Policy Statement 6 where the developer was a registered charity or similar non profit-making body, or in the case of 'ordinary individuals' who did not have the means to fund such work. The Department is empowered to do this through Article 24 of The Historic Monuments and Archaeological Objects (NI) Order. Two of the eleven investigations were undertaken by CAF on the DOE's own behalf on sites at Roe Valley Country Park and Dunluce Castle. I have attached an appendix to this letter which gives an assessment of the eleven development control investigations undertaken, in order of date.

Appendix 1 – The eleven development control investigations carried out on behalf of the DOE by CAF in 2014 as part of planning regulations: -

1 Roe Valley, Co. Londonderry. March-April 2014

As part of the NIEA hydro-restoration scheme at Roe Valley Country Park, archaeological monitoring was required during the laying of a penstock pipe (c. 200m long). The pipe was laid underground, from the existing mill race, past a number of old buildings near the country park visitor centre, and terminated in the original turbine house/inlet tunnel. No features of archaeological significance were encountered.

2 Dunanney, Co. Antrim. April 2014

Planning Reference: D/2014/0072/F. Substantial extension to a dwelling on a farm where there is reported to be a souterrain (small underground complex of rooms and tunnels dating to the early medieval period). The souterrains precise location is unknown. It is therefore a potential health and safety issue within any new build scenario. No features of archaeological significance were encountered.

3 Dunluce 'D Field', Co. Antrim. July 2014

As part of the NIEA: Dunluce Project; Dunluce Castle Visitor Centre, Option Site D underwent test trenching. An archaeological evaluation was carried out in a field to the west of Dunluce Castle, village and gardens (ANT 002:003 and ANT 002:008). The work was requested by the NIEA Innovation and Strategies Division to evaluate any potential archaeological impact should this field be chosen as the location of a proposed new visitor centre. Eighteen mechanically excavated trenches (each 2mx30m) were opened, targeting possible geophysical anomalies and a representative sample of the site where no anomalies were detected. Three of the eighteen trenches contained features, although, on investigation, none of these proved to be of archaeological significance.

4 Chapel Lane, Armagh. June and July 2014

Planning Reference O/2009/0387/F. St Vincent de Paul's charitable development in Armagh. The site was monitored and the possible remains of a ditch were observed at the northern corner of the site; however, due to the health and safety concerns it could not be investigated fully. It was preserved in situ. Remains of 19th-century buildings were also uncovered.

5 Demesne of Down, Downpatrick, Co. Down. October 2014

Planning Reference S/2012/0252/F. A proposed new footpath to link the Mound of Down (DOW 037:028) and Well Lane in Downpatrick. The application site is within the historic landscape associated with the Mound of Down. The footpath was monitored and nothing of archaeological significance was encountered.

6 Vianstown Road, Bonecastle, Co. Down. October 2014

Planning Reference R/2013/0043/RM. This application site for a single dwelling is adjacent to the site of Bone Castle (DOW 037:041) described in the NISMR as having occupied a rock outcrop. The location is annotated 'Site of' Bone Castle from 2nd Edition Ordnance Survey map. Large flat slabs with lime mortar were found during the construction of a large silo in the 1980s. However, nothing of archaeological significance was encountered in 2014.

7 Cranfield, Kilkeel, Co. Down. November 2014

Planning Reference: P/2011/0681/F. Two linear features had been exposed in a previous evaluation for a single dwelling. Both of these features were exposed, and determined to contain sherds of post-medieval pottery.

8 Raffrey, Co. Down. November 2014

Planning Reference R/2014/0250/F. Application site for a new dwelling located adjacent to a recorded archaeological site (DOW023:010). Nothing of archaeological significance was encountered.

9 Drumscollop, Co. Fermanagh. December 2014

Planning Reference L/2014/0467/F. This application site for a single dwelling contained the possible below ground remains of an enclosure and suspected archaeological remains (FER191:101). No remains of the enclosure were identified during the works.

10 Dunloy, Co. Antrim. December 2014

Planning Reference D/2014/0139/F. Proposed site for a dwelling located adjacent to Knockaholet raised rath (ANT 018:020), which is scheduled for protection under the Historic Monuments and Archaeological Objects (NI) Order 1995. Although the rath has been previously landscaped in the past, there is a possibility of associated remains in the adjacent field. However, this evaluation did not uncover archaeological features.

11 Ballydarrog, Co. Londonderry. December 2014.

Planning Reference B/2014/0223/F. Sizeable extension to a housed was located within 25m from a recorded archaeological site (LDY 016:004). Nothing of archaeological significance was encountered.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to provide a list of all planning application references related to the Airport Road incinerator
(AQW 45997/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The following is a list of applications that relate to the site at 7 Airport Road, Belfast where permission has been granted for a combined heat and power generating station for the treatment of refuse derived fuel (RDF) by gasification.

Z/2012/1387/F

- Proposal: Construction and operation of a combined heat and power generating station for the treatment of refuse derived fuel (RDF) by gasification.
- Location: 7 Airport Road, Belfast, BT3 9DY.
- Decision: PERMISSION GRANTED - 22.01.2014

Z/2014/1346/F

- Proposal: Construction and operation of a combined heat and power generating station for the treatment of refuse derived fuel (RDF) by gasification - amendments to layout and design of facility and plant from that previously approved under Z/2012/1387/F
- Location: 7 Airport Road, Belfast, BT3 9DY,
- Decision: PERMISSION GRANTED - 16.02.2015

Z/2014/1473/F

- Proposal: Construction and operation of combined heat and power generating station - variation of Condition 6 (which restricted throughput to 120,000 tonnes per annum); and variation of condition 7 (which relates to the Transportation Service Management Plan) approved under planning reference Z/2012/1387/F.
- Location: 7 Airport Road, Belfast, BT3 9DY,
- CONSIDERATION ONGOING

LA04/2015/0301/F

- Proposal: Construction and operation of combined heat and power generating station - variation of condition 6 (which restricted throughput to 120,000 tonnes per annum); and variation of condition 7 (which relates to the Transportation Service Management Plan) approved under Planning Reference Z/2014/1346/F
- Location: 7 Airport Road, Belfast, BT3 9DY,
- APPLICATION RECEIVED

Department of Finance and Personnel

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what communication his Department has had with the Northern Ireland Hotels Federation regarding VAT rates; and whether he has plans to raise the issue of a separate VAT rate for the Northern Ireland tourism/hospitality sector with HM Treasury.
(AQW 40452/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): Departmental Hospitality

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what was (i) her Department's spend on hospitality and (ii) each of its arms length bodies in 2014/15 and (iii) what was the breakdown thereof.
(AQW 45615/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Audited figures for the total spend on hospitality by the Department of Finance and Personnel in 2014-15 are not yet available.

As a North/South Body, the Special European Union Programmes Body (SEUPB) prepares its financial information on a calendar year basis. The total cost of hospitality provided by the body in 2014 was £2k. The SEUPB costs for hospitality are funded on a North/South basis. The Department of Finance and Personnel is responsible for 50% of this cost.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel pursuant to AQW 40452/11-15, what communication has her Department had with the Northern Ireland Hotels Federation regarding VAT rates and what plans she has to raise the issue of a separate VAT rate for the Northern Ireland tourism/hospitality sector with HM Treasury.

Mrs Foster: I understand AQW 40452/11-15 was posed to my predecessor, and I will now answer this question in my capacity as Finance Minister in conjunction with AQW 45655/11-15.

While I have not had any communication with the Northern Ireland Hotels Federation, they have raised the issue of a reduced VAT rate for tourism and hospitality products and services with me in my previous Ministerial role.

EU law largely prohibits a regional variation in VAT rates, and as such, any reduction would need to be applied across the UK. That said, I firmly believe that such a measure would be hugely beneficial, not only for the Northern Ireland tourism industry, but for that of the UK as a whole. This is a matter my predecessor raised as recently as February this year with the then Financial Secretary to the Treasury, David Gauke MP where he urged the Treasury to consider how a reduced rate of VAT could be used and targeted to improve the competitiveness of the UK tourism industry. In his response, the Financial Secretary rejected the call for such a reduction citing the cost to the Exchequer.

I will continue to press the case for such a VAT reduction and I intend writing again to Mr Gauke following his re-appointment as Financial Secretary in the new Government.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the estimated amount of rates lost as a result of the inability to identify ownership of empty residential property.

(AQW 45809/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The total amount of rates written-off as a result of the inability to identify ownership of empty domestic property, between the period of 1st October 2011 and 31st March 2015, was £1,044,772.

It should be noted that LPS continues to attempt to trace those liable for this written-off debt.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the figures and calculations that indicate that the introduction of Welfare Reform, the ending of Treasury fines and a reduction in benefit fraud would provide sufficient funds to underwrite an increase in wages for teachers, nurses, ambulance personnel and fire-fighters.

(AQW 45839/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Implementation of Welfare Reform is central to ensuring that the Northern Ireland Executive budget is sustainable going forward. If not implemented, the UK Government will continue to reduce our DEL budget to compensate for the additional costs of the welfare system in Northern Ireland. We will also forgo the financial package negotiated as part of the Stormont House Agreement, including the £700 million of RRI borrowing needed to transform our public sector.

A reduction in benefit fraud in Northern Ireland would deliver saving to AME budgets and would not directly impact on the level of resources available to the Executive.

It will be for Ministers to agree future pay settlements for public sector workers in line with public sector pay policy applicable at the time.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) what action she intends to take against Departments which fail to meet their efficiency savings and (ii) if she has decided on an acceptable percentage slippage level for Departments failing to meet their efficiency savings.

(AQW 45840/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In Budget 2011-15 savings were deducted from departments' baselines at the outset and departments, therefore, had to deliver the necessary savings and live within their allocated budgets. Therefore, an 'acceptable percentage slippage level for departments' was not and is not countenanced.

Limits on spending were set by the Assembly in the subsequent Budget Acts and each department accounts to the Assembly for their expenditure in their annual Resource Accounts. Any excess expenditure would be reported by the Comptroller and Auditor General.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether the procurement of goods and services are discussed, encouraged or made a mandatory requirement when negotiations are being undertaken with a promotion company of other third party in relation to an event being held within Stormont Estate.

Mrs Foster: Organisations who apply to hold an event on the Stormont Estate are responsible for the procurement of any goods and services necessary for the event. DFP does not discuss, encourage or make mandatory the use of any particular goods or services for such events.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel does the Executive have the flexibility to use £700 million of capital borrowing to fund a Voluntary Exit Scheme and can her Department detail the estimated time-scale for the Scheme in 2015/16.

(AQW 45850/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Stormont House Agreement provided the Executive with flexibility to use £700 million of capital borrowing over the next four years to fund a voluntary exit scheme. As access to this funding forms part of the Stormont House Agreement, it is critical that there is sufficient progress on implementation of Welfare Reform to ensure the Executive can access this funding.

At this stage it appears the £200 million for year one will be oversubscribed. First allocations are due to be agreed by the Executive as part of June monitoring (subject to Welfare Reform and subsequently an Executive Budget being agreed).

Work has continued pending, budgetary agreement, based upon the need to make progress within previously agreed timescales.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to confirm that Special Advisers whose service is terminated by a ministerial reshuffle are not entitled to an annual salary pay progression at the 1st August following their reappointment.

(AQW 45852/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Where Special Advisers are reappointed within one week of their previous NICS employment being terminated, they are considered to be in continuous employment.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the salary bands applicable to all grades within the Civil Service.

(AQW 45853/11-15)

Mrs Foster: This information is available on the DFP website at the following link: <http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/pay>

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQT 2111/11-15 for an update on the civil service pay claim.

(AQW 45946/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The matter remains with the Executive for consideration.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether Special Advisers' pension and contribution arrangements are in line with those prevailing in the Northern Ireland Civil Service Pension Scheme.

(AQW 45951/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Special Advisers' pension and contribution arrangements are in line with those prevailing in the Northern Ireland Civil Service Pension Scheme.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many contracts have been (i) awarded; and (ii) advertised to provide ambulance or patient and client transport services to providers other than the NI Ambulance service, in each area and in each of the last three financial years; and to detail the value of each contract awarded.

(AQW 43290/11-15)

Mr Wells (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): The information in the table below has been provided by HSC organisations and refers to purchases of independent sector ambulance services, taxi services for patient and clients and air ambulance services. Contracts may cover a period of several years.

Area	Number of contracts awarded	Total value of each contract awarded	Number of contracts advertised

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety (i) how many Neurological Care Advisors will be put into post; (ii) where they be based; and (iii) whether Huntingdon's Disease will be one of the conditions covered under these posts.

(AQW 45070/11-15)

Mr Wells: Six neurological care advisors will be put into post.

These are regional posts which will be based in the Belfast Trust providing outreach to other Trusts.

The care advisors will provide advice, support and information to people living with neurological conditions, including Huntingdon's Disease.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of the number of children on waiting lists for diagnosis for Autism Spectrum Disorder, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust area.

(AQW 45072/11-15)

Mr Wells: Table 1 below contains a breakdown of the number of children on waiting lists for a diagnosis for Autism Spectrum Disorder by Health and Social Care Trust area at 31 March 2015.

Table 1

Health and Social Care Trust area	No. of Children
Belfast	663

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many patients with multiple sclerosis are currently receiving (i) Tecfidera; (ii) Interferon Beta; (iii) Lemtrada; (iv) Aubagio; (v) Copaxone; and (iv) Fingolimod; and how many patients are currently waiting to access one of these treatments.

(AQW 45138/11-15)

Mr Wells: Information on the number of patients with multiple sclerosis currently receiving Tecfidera; Interferon Beta; Lemtrada; Aubagio; Copaxone; and Fingolimod at 31st March 2015 are shown below. Belfast HSC Trust has also provided information on the number of patients with multiple sclerosis currently receiving other disease modifying therapies and these have also been included below.

Specified disease modifying therapies:	Number of patients receiving treatment at 31st March 2015
Tecfidera	190
Betaferon	72
Aubagio	20
Copaxone	286
Fingolimod	61
Lemtrada	0
Other disease modifying therapies:
Rebif 22	175
Rebif 44	258
Avonex	383
Extavia	16
Tysabri	119
Total	1,580

At 31st March 2015 there were 31 patients waiting to start one of these disease modifying therapies. Of these, 8 were waiting to commence Tysabri, and 5 Lemtrada. The remaining 18 patients had not yet indicated which of the treatments they wish to start from a choice of Copaxone, Rebif, Betaferon, Anonex, Extavia

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, in relation to the Business Service Organisation, Payroll Shared Services Centre, how much has been spent on (i) the acquisition of new computer equipment, systems and programs; and (ii) the maintenance of computer equipment, systems and programs by the Health and Social Care Board in the last three years.

(AQW 45160/11-15)

Mr Wells: The new system for HR, Payroll, Travel and subsistence (HRPTS) was acquired as an integrated system and it is therefore not possible to segregate the cost of the payroll only element of it.

There were 24 reported complaints in the last twelve months regarding payroll issues associated with payments processed by the Business Service Organisation, Payroll Shared Services Centre.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of reported complaints in the last twelve months regarding payroll issues associated with payments processed by the Business Service Organisation, Payroll Shared Services Centre.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the waiting time for a routine appointment with a urology consultant in Fermanagh; (ii) the waiting time for patients from Fermanagh to travel to see a urology consultant, including whether specific days are dedicated to patients from Fermanagh in this clinic; and (iv) what consideration has been given to offering urology clinics in the South West Acute Hospital.

Mr Wells: The waiting time information specifically for Fermanagh patients is not held by my Department. The latest statistics for waiting times in this specialty is available at <http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/statistics/hospital/waitingtimes/waitingtimes-outpatient.htm#outpatients>

- (ii) All urology patients including Fermanagh patients are offered appointments chronologically. Appointments are offered to patients either in South West Acute Hospital or in Craigavon Area Hospital, whichever is sooner.
- (iii) A consultant urologist from Craigavon Area Hospital provides a full day urology outreach clinic in the South West Acute Hospital twice monthly.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how many Northern Health and Social Care Trust staff have been affected by delays in receiving wages as a result of the transfer of payroll to the Business Services Organisation (BSO) in the last six weeks.

Mr Wells: A total of 164 Northern Trust staff in March 2015 (0.67% of total staff paid) and 699 staff in April 2015 (3.47% of total staff paid) received off-cycle payments in relation to issues with their regular pay/wages.

BSO Payroll Shared Service Centre (SSC) representatives met with the representatives of the Northern Trust Domiciliary Care Management team on Monday 27 April. It was agreed that SSC Payroll representatives would hold a further workshop with line managers to review payroll issues within the next few weeks. In the interim, the staff were provided with SSC contact details so that any queries can be addressed and SSC management has committed to monitoring payments to this group of staff for the next three months, which will include a full review of every line submitted in staff timesheets. If staff have suffered losses (e.g. bank charges and failed direct debits) as a result of not receiving net pay and allowances as expected, these will be considered on their individual merits and where it can be clearly demonstrated that any such loss was due to employer errors, then a resolution should be agreed between staff and the HSC employer.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action should be taken by Northern Health and Social Care Trust domiciliary care staff affected by delays in receiving wages as a result of the transfer of payroll to the Business Services Organisation (BSO) in the last six weeks.

Mr Wells: A total of 164 Northern Trust staff in March 2015 (0.67% of total staff paid) and 699 staff in April 2015 (3.47% of total staff paid) received off-cycle payments in relation to issues with their regular pay/wages.

Mr B McCreagh asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the process for nursing homes securing a top up rate for higher dependency residents.

(AQW 45283/11-15)

Mr Wells: Each year the Health and Social Care Board (HSCB), following discussion with representatives from independent sector providers, establishes a regional rate for residential and nursing home care. This rate is used by HSC Trusts as a guide price as to what is fair and affordable.

If a nursing home owner/manager believes a review of tariff rates is required for individual residents assessed as having a higher level of dependency, they should approach the relevant Trust to request a meeting to consider their particular circumstances.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action is being taken to increase service provision for people under the age of 18 who require help with drug addiction.

(AQW 45318/11-15)

Mr Wells: It is important to note that research shows that the majority of young people who use substances are not addicted or physically/psychologically dependant. That is not to say they do not experience difficulties or harms related to their substance misuse, however they therefore require a different level of clinical response than adults who are dependent. Those young people who use drugs or alcohol problematically are likely to be vulnerable and experiencing a range of problems, of which substance misuse is one.

There is a range of general services provided across all sectors responding to the needs of children, young people and families. All the Health and Social Care Trusts provide family support services and work in partnership with voluntary and community sector organisations to support the prevention and early intervention agenda, including the need to reduce and minimise the significant harm caused by both legal and illegal use of drugs and alcohol. The range of organisations providing family support services is listed in the Family Support website which can be accessed at www.familysupportni.gov.uk.

Young people may also require specialist substance misuse services, ranging from information, education and awareness raising through to treatment and support. Under our alcohol and drug strategy, the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs Phase 2, a range of services covering these tiers of response is commissioned across Northern Ireland and these are outlined on the Public Health Agency Website at: <http://www.publichealth.hscni.net/publications/drug-and-alcohol-directories-services>. The PHA is currently in the process of re-tendering for a range of services and these are due to come on-stream in July 2015.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 43733/11-15, to detail all suppliers of private ambulances, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.
(AQW 45341/11-15)

Mr Wells: The table below indicates the independent ambulance services (private and voluntary) used by each Health and Social Care Trust. The British Red Cross, Order of Malta and St John Ambulance Service are voluntary ambulance services.

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether an equality impact assessment has been completed in relation to gender imbalance of social work staff employed in each Health and Social Care Trust's (i) Family Intervention teams; (ii) Central Gateway teams; and (iii) Court Children's Services teams.

(AQW 45394/11-15)

Mr Wells: HSC Trusts have confirmed that they have not completed Equality Impact Assessments in relation to gender within social work staff.

Social work, in common with the other caring professions, tends to attract more women than men. Initiatives have been undertaken, on occasion, to try to increase the proportion of male applicants to professional social work training courses, with limited success.

Currently around 19% of the registrants on the Social Care Register are men.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on any feasibility study his Department has completed on the introduction of an air ambulance service.

(AQW 45400/11-15)

Mr Wells: The Health and Social Care Board has submitted a report to my Department on the feasibility and the appropriateness of establishing a dedicated Helicopter Emergency Medical Service in Northern Ireland. I am currently awaiting the report of the Emergency Aeromedical Support service group, established by the Republic of Ireland's Department of Health to consider the provision of a dedicated Emergency Aeromedical Support service. This will include recommendations in relation to the potential for expansion of the geographical reach of the service, including an all-island service. When the report is received, I will consider its recommendations in conjunction with the Health and Social Care Board's study before making a decision on this matter.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he intends to increase the numbers of medical graduates training in General Practice, as recommended by reviews of GP workforce on repeated occasions over the last several years.

Mr Wells: The number of GPs per head in Northern Ireland remains comparable with that in England and Wales. However, GP services in Northern Ireland remain under pressure given an increase from 7.2m GP consultations in 2004 to 12.7m consultations in 2014.

There are a number of strands of medical workforce planning under way at present. The Centre for Workforce Intelligence (CFW) has been appointed to review the medical workforce including undergraduate intake levels. In addition, the Health and Social Care Board are currently undertaking some work specifically on GP workforce planning (e.g. examining initiatives to improve the recruitment and retention of trained GPs and including areas such as part time working and child care arrangements). No final decision will be taken until the Department has considered the findings of these reviews. Any increase to the number of GP trainees would require increased funding and any decisions would need to take account of the overall funding position for health.

On 1 April 2015 a wide ranging package of investment in GP services, totalling in excess of £15m was announced. Whilst this will not deal with all the challenges we face from rising demand it will help us address and plan for the current and future challenges that we face, including implementing Transforming Your Care.

Included in the package is:

- Up to £3.1million of investment in Out Of Hours GP services.
- Up to £1.2million of investment helping GPs meet demand for blood tests and other diagnostic work in the community delivered through GP Federations.
- Up to £300,000 to recruit and retain GPs.
- Releasing up to £10million of funding for GP Practices to borrow to upgrade and expand their premises and £350,000 to meet the ongoing costs of these new premises.

The package of measures announced will also reduce the level of bureaucracy facing our GPs, so they can spend more time with their patients and less time filling in forms. Consideration is also being given to how GPs wishing to return to practise in Northern Ireland can be facilitated to do so on a timelier basis.

Over recent years the Department and the HSC have been active in deploying innovative eHealth solutions to support the service transformation programme. This can potentially reduce the number and type of consultations a patient needs with their GP. Likewise, telemonitoring and telecare programmes are both provided regionally through the Telemonitoring NI service and have the potential to alleviate some of the burden on primary care providers.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why he has consistently refused to take action on a looming GP workforce crisis which is now threatening out of hours GP services, with shifts being left unfilled, and which has started to lead to GP practices being unable to recruit for vacant positions.

(AQW 45422/11-15)

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how a further review of medical workforce will help to tackle the immediate problem of inadequate numbers of GP trainees being trained.

(AQW 45423/11-15)

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he can equate the lack of action on increasing GP workforce with the policy of Transforming Your Care which envisions patients being cared for increasingly at home rather than in hospital and with the ageing demographic of the population who require increased GP consultations, longer consultation times and more home visiting.

(AQW 45424/11-15)

Mr Wells: The number of GPs per head in Northern Ireland remains comparable with that in England and Wales. However, GP services in Northern Ireland remain under pressure given an increase from 7.2m GP consultations in 2004 to 12.7m consultations in 2014.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he will ensure that GPs who continue to rent from the Health and Social Care Trusts will be able to extend their reimbursed clinical space to keep pace with provision of services to an increasingly elderly population and the shift of service provision to the community.

(AQW 45425/11-15)

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of Staff Nurses across Health and Social Care Trusts who received a 1 per cent pay uplift during 2014/15; and whether this uplift is permanent. (AQW 45434/11-15)

Mr Wells: Information on the number of Staff Nurses across Health and Social Care Trusts who received a 1% uplift during 2014/15 and whether this uplift is permanent is not readily available and can only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

However, most qualified nursing staff would have received at least a 1% increase in pay, either due to incremental progression (if eligible) or due to a 1% non-consolidated award. The only nursing staff not eligible for at least a 1% increase would be new staff or those not meeting performance requirements.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what evaluation has been made of the impact that reintroducing prescription charges would have on (i) people with a long term condition; (ii) emergency hospital admissions; and (iii) economic productivity of those with long term conditions. (AQW 45435/11-15)

Mr Wells: The consultation on the evaluation of the Individual Funding Request process which recently ended, sought views on the re-introduction of prescription charges to support the establishment of a Specialist Medicines Fund. Responses to that consultation are currently being analysed and will inform any further consultation on the reintroduction of prescription charges. Relevant impact assessments will be undertaken as part of that process.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what (i) discussion; and (ii) meetings his Department has had with organisations representing patient groups with long term conditions regarding the impact of reintroducing prescription charges. (AQW 45436/11-15)

Mr Wells: Following the issue of a consultation document on the outcome of the evaluation of the Individual Funding Request process, which included a recommendation that prescription charges should be reintroduced to support the establishment of a Specialist Medicines Fund, officials participated in consultation events around Northern Ireland. Representatives from a range of organisations representing patient groups, including some for people with long term conditions, attended those events.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he plans to deliver Transforming Your Care and care for the ageing demographic when the number of district nurses have been cut. (AQW 45451/11-15)

Mr Wells: I recognise the role of District Nurses as one of the key health professionals helping deliver the home as the hub of care, by caring for patients in their own home and keeping them out of hospital. In support of this, my Chief Nursing Officer has undertaken a review of District Nursing Services, and a draft service development framework, 'A District Nursing Service for Today and Tomorrow' is in the final stages of development. This has been framed to reflect the vision and principles of Transforming your Care, and will ensure that we develop and transform our District Nursing Service with the right nurses, with the right skills, in the right place to deliver safe and effective person centre care. In addition significant investment has been made in District Nursing of approximately £2.5 million recurrent. The numbers of district nurses in training have increased each year since 2012 and I intend to increase the numbers in training again for 2015/2016.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the current level of unpaid hours worked by Health and Social Care staff, as unpaid overtime; and what consideration has been given to quantifying and providing payment for this work. (AQW 45454/11-15)

Mr Wells: The current level of unpaid hours worked by Health and Social Care staff, as unpaid overtime, is not collated centrally by individual HSC Employers and is therefore unknown.

Part 2 Section 3 of the Agenda for Change Terms and Conditions of Service provides for additional hours worked to be accumulated as time off in lieu (TOIL) and converted to payment if TOIL is not able to be taken within a reasonable timeframe, normally 3 months.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when a decision will be made in relation to the Infrastructure Grant; and for what purpose the fund will be designated. (AQW 45486/11-15)

Mr Wells: The 67 voluntary and community organisations that receive core support from my Department were advised in December 2014 to expect changes in the way that funding is provided to the sector. Details are being finalised for 2015/2016 and I hope to be in a position to make an announcement in the coming weeks.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of social work staff employed in the Central Gateway Teams in each Health and Social Trust by (i) gender; (ii) grade; and (ii) location.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of social work staff employed in the Family Intervention Teams in each Health and Social Care Trust by (i) gender; (ii) grade; and (iii) location.

Mr Wells: I refer the Member to the response given to AQWs 45391, 45392 and 45393.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of social work staff employed in the Court Children's Service Teams in each Health and Social Care Trust by (i) gender; (ii) grade; and (iii) location.

Mr Wells: I refer the Member to the response given to AQWs 45391, 45392 and 45393.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether an equality impact assessment has been completed in relation to gender imbalance of social work staff employed in each Health and Social Care Trust's (i) Family Intervention teams; (ii) Central Gateway teams; and (iii) Court Children's Services teams.

Mr Wells: I refer the Member to the answer given to AQW 45394/11-15.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the current waiting times for (i) assessment; (ii) diagnosis; and (iii) treatment of children following a referral for suspected autism spectrum disorder.
(AQW 45508/11-15)

Mr Wells: The information requested is not held centrally and was requested from the Health and Social Care (HSC) Board. In line with ministerial standards, the HSC Board monitors waiting times for the commencement of assessments and the commencement of intervention post diagnosis. The HSC Board does not currently monitor diagnostic waiting times.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what value of construction work funded from the capital budget his Department intends to start in the 2015/16 financial year.

Mr Wells: The total value of construction work which includes enabling works funded from the capital budget in 2015/16 is £117,360,194. This includes 10 capital projects which are due to commence construction/enabling works in 2015/16 with a value of £5,235,345.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 45053/11-15, for his assessment of the level of support provided to paramedics in such circumstances or whether changes should be made to make their responses, more closely aligned with the approach taken by the Fire and Rescue Service.

Mr Wells: My Department has not carried out an assessment of the level of support provided to paramedics who have been at the scene of a fatal road traffic collision. Any decision to change the current support arrangements for frontline Northern Ireland Ambulance Service staff would be a matter for the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service HSC Trust.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 44923/11-15, to detail the discussion he has had with his counterparts in the Republic of Ireland concerning the banning of psychoactive substances in Northern Ireland.

Mr Wells: As these three questions are related, I propose to answer these together.

The issue of New Psychoactive Substances is an area that my Department has raised through both the British-Irish Council and the North-South Ministerial Council, and I will ensure it remains on the agenda of these key groups. Previous Ministers at this Department have raised this issue with the Home Secretary on a regular basis, seeking a more robust and consistent approach and advocating a legislative approach similar to that effectively adopted by the Republic of Ireland.

Following this lobbying, the Home Office established an Expert Panel to look at the UK's legislation. The Panel reported in late 2014, and its main recommendation was that the UK Government brings forward legislation to undertake a general ban on the sale of psychoactive substances – providing exemptions for existing products like alcohol, prescription medicines, etc. I understand this proposal is similar to the legislation already brought forward in Ireland.

I am pleased that the UK Government has broadly accepted this recommendation and the Home Office is currently working with us and the other Devolved Administrations to develop appropriate proposals. I hope this legislation can be brought forward early in the life of the new UK Government. My officials and I will continue to work with the Home Office to see this brought forward as soon as possible, and I would ask that all parties' MPs in Westminster support this work as it goes through the legislative process.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 44923/11-15, for his assessment of the Republic of Ireland's approach to the banning of all psychoactive substances; and whether his Department has considered such an approach whilst leasing with the Home Office concerning the issue.

(AQW 45588/11-15)

Mr Wells: As these three questions are related, I propose to answer these together.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 44923/11-15, for his assessment of the effectiveness of the Criminal Justice (Psychoactive Substances) Act in the Republic of Ireland which has substantially lowered the supply of novel psychoactive substances in closing 102 premises which supplied such substances. (AQW 45589/11-15)

Mr Wells: As these three questions are related, I propose to answer these together.

The issue of New Psychoactive Substances is an area that my Department has raised through both the British-Irish Council and the North-South Ministerial Council, and I will ensure it remains on the agenda of these key groups. Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the planned financial reductions in the current year, within which the Fire and Rescue Service will be expected to operate. (AQW 45613/11-15)

Mr Wells: The proposed 2015/16 current expenditure allocation for the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) is £69,777,855, which represents a reduction of £4,061,145 (5.5%) from the opening 2014/15 position.

NIFRS has been asked to prioritise its savings proposals based on those that minimise the impact on service delivery and ensure the continued safety of the public and firefighters who provide the service. Discussions between Departmental officials and NIFRS senior team regarding the savings proposals are ongoing to ensure these principles are met.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the waiting list time for hip replacements in the Western Health and Social Care Trust. (AQW 45616/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of people waiting, in weeks, for hip replacement surgery in the Western HSC Trust, at 31st December 2014, the most recent quarter for which official statistics are available, is detailed in the table below.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether there will be any change to the strategic priorities in health spend as outlined by his predecessor; and for his assessment of the current strategic priorities, following his recent appointment to the post. (AQW 45647/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My strategic priority is to build a world class health and social care service for Northern Ireland. I believe this can be achieved through reform, transformation and innovation – including a more integrated and cohesive infrastructure; using the skills and experience of frontline staff to drive change; the adoption of new approaches and technologies; partnership with industry; and a culture of openness to new ideas.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the progress of the Transforming Your Care plan, including the implementation of the 99 targets.

Mr Hamilton: As highlighted by Sir Liam Donaldson in his report, 'The Right Time, The Right Place', progress in respect of the delivery of the service changes envisaged by the Transforming Your Care Review has been slower than anticipated. Whilst acknowledging the constrained financial context in which we are working to deliver TYC, I believe that it is essential that we continue the implementation of the service model envisaged by TYC.

My Department is currently preparing a progress report on the 99 proposals outlined in the 2011 report 'Transforming Your Care: A Review of Health and Social Care in Northern Ireland' and I will provide an update to the Northern Ireland Assembly once that work has been completed.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the Transforming Your Care plan remains his Department's core strategic document in reforming the delivery of health services from institutional settings to community settings closer to the patients home.

(AQW 45650/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I can confirm that 'Transforming Your Care: A Review of Health and Social Care in Northern Ireland' continues to guide the reform of health and social care service delivery.

As I stated on taking up post as Health Minister, I am committed to continuing with the transformation agenda including the TYC vision for the future model of health and social care delivery. I believe that this will ensure services are structured and delivered in a safe and sustainable manner making best use of all resources available to us.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department is supporting young people with mental health issues in East Londonderry.

Mr Hamilton: Table 1 below contains a breakdown of the number of children on waiting lists for a diagnosis for Autism Spectrum Disorder by Health and Social Care Trust area at 31 March 2015.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will bring forward proposals to implement the 1 per cent pay increase for Health Service employees.

Mr Hamilton: I refer the Member to the answer provided to AQO 8187/11-15

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail, broken down by specialism, (i) the period during which elective surgery was suspended during the last winter period; and (ii) the estimated number of operations which were unable to take place.

(AQW 45711/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: It is assumed this question refers to cancellation of non-urgent elective operations due to increased pressures on hospitals. Such cancellations may be considered by HSC Trusts at times of increased unscheduled care pressures, as part of their escalation plans to improve patient flow and ensure sufficient bed capacity to accommodate unscheduled admissions.

Information is not collected on periods during which elective surgery is suspended. The number of operations cancelled because of unscheduled care pressures will vary across individual sites and dates and some sites will be unaffected.

The table below indicates the number of operations cancelled because of hospital pressures during the period January to March 2015. Information is not centrally available on the breakdown by specialty.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why radiographers in Northern Ireland did not receive the 1 per cent pay rise recommended by the Independent Pay Review Body and secured by their colleagues in England, Scotland and Wales.

(AQW 45720/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Under the 2014/15 HSC Pay Award, radiographers employed under the Agenda for Change (AfC) Terms and Conditions of Service were rewarded with either the incremental progression or a 1% non consolidated payment but not both.

England, Wales and Northern Ireland rejected the NHS Pay Review Body's recommendation. The Scottish Government accepted the recommendations in full.

Northern Ireland adopted the same approach to that taken in England in relation to the 2014/15 pay award.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the rationale for the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust's decision to end the registration of activity based summer and childcare schemes; and what impact this will have on families who can no longer use childcare vouchers with these schemes.

Mr Hamilton: I refer you to my answer to AQW 45695/11-15.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the waiting time for a review appointment for Haematology and Oncology patients in the Bridgewater Suite in Belfast City Hospital, for each of the last three years.

(AQW 45775/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: A review appointment is different from a first appointment in that it is scheduled for a 'clinically appropriate' time, which can range from weeks to years depending on the patient's individual case.

Consequently the time waited beyond this clinically appropriate time has been provided rather than the total time waited.

Information on the time waited beyond the clinically appropriate time for a consultant led outpatient appointment in the Haematology specialty in the Bridgewater Suite, is provided in the table overleaf.

Review clinics for Oncology patients are not held in the Bridgewater Suite in Belfast City Hospital. The Belfast HSC Trust has advised that review clinics in the Oncology specialty are held in the Cancer Centre, Belfast, and other cancer units in Northern Ireland.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of incidents the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service responded to, broken down by command unit, in each of the last five years.

(AQW 45805/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The table below details the number of incidents the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service responded to, by Area Command, in each of the last 5 years.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what departmental support is available for young people from North Down with a mental health problem.

(AQW 45883/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Services of this nature are commissioned by the Health and Social Care Board and delivered by the Trusts.

Child and Adolescent Mental Health Services (CAMHS) in Northern Ireland are provided through a stepped care model, based on the clinical needs of the individual. Services are provided by four CAMHS teams, with Belfast HSC Trust providing services to both the Belfast and South Eastern HSC Trust areas, including North Down.

Inpatient care for young people, when required, is provided in Beechcroft, the Regional Child and Adolescent Inpatient Mental Health Unit at the Forster Green Hospital site in Belfast.

CAMHS in the North Down area are provided by a local community-based team in James Street, Newtownards. This is a multidisciplinary team which specialises in the assessment and intervention for under 18s with mental health needs, and their families/carers.

Services for children and young people presenting in crisis, and requiring assessment and intervention within 24-48 hours, are provided by a mobile Crisis Assessment Intervention Team, available 7 days per week to GPs and Emergency Departments.

There are also specialist services for young people with eating disorders or drug and alcohol issues. A number of voluntary sector organisations also provide support to young people with mental health problems.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he will meet with the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) as a matter of urgency in order to discuss the serious shortfall in the NIFRS budget and the resulting safety concerns as raised by the service.

(AQW 45919/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My predecessor met with both the NIFRS Chair and the Fire Brigades Union (FBU), who represent the majority of NIFRS operational personnel, to discuss the NIFRS budget.

Engagement between my Department's senior officials and NIFRS senior team regarding the savings proposals has been extensive and is ongoing.

I will not preside over unsafe services and any changes to service delivery must ensure the continued safety of both the public and the firefighters who deliver the service.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his Department's bids to the June monitoring round.

Mr Hamilton: In the constrained financial context of 2015/16, my Department will seek additional current and capital expenditure funding through the In Year Monitoring processes in order to avoid service consequences and to provide additional services and treatments for patients.

If successful, additional income from June Monitoring would enable me to address a range of critical front line service pressures in areas such as elective care, mental health, learning disability, specialist drugs, children's services, TYC, public health and unscheduled care. It would also help address the shortfall in capital funding across a number of areas including major projects, general capital/Maintaining Existing Services, Medical Equipment and ICT.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when white cars operated by the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service and used in emergency activities will be fitted with high visibility chevrons to clearly identify them as emergency vehicles operating at high speed.

Mr Hamilton: From 2014-15 all rapid response cars (now red in colour) purchased by the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service (NIFRS) have been fitted with chevrons and battenburg. This specification will be used for any subsequent procurements as existing vehicles are replaced, and NIFRS estimate that all rapid response cars will be fitted with the new livery by 2018/19.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on negotiations with the Royal College of Midwives and Health and Social Care trade unions, seeking to deliver a 1 per cent pay increase for local midwives and maternity support workers; and to indicate when he anticipates this matter will be appropriately resolved.

(AQW 45940/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Departmental officials met with representatives from the Royal College of Midwives (RCM) and other Health and Social Care Trade Unions on 28 April 2015. A further meeting with the Joint Secretaries of the main HSC Trade Unions is scheduled for 2 June 2015.

I would anticipate that these discussions will help inform an affordable pay/settlement for 2015/16.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many children have been born en-route to the South West Acute Hospital from the Omagh area since the new hospital opened.

(AQW 45952/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Western Trust have confirmed that six babies from the Omagh area have been born before arrival at the South West Acute Hospital since the hospital opened on 21 June 2012.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much the Western Health and Social Care Trust spent on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years.

(AQW 45975/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend by the Western Health and Social Care Trust on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £5,136,916
- 2013/14 - £5,586,034

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 25912/11-15, to detail (i) when the Southern Health and Social Care Trust will recommence permanent admissions to statutory residential homes, including Crozier House; and (ii) when Skeagh House will reopen.

(AQW 45982/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board has recently agreed Trust proposals for reform, which will now be subject to public consultation by individual Trusts. The position regarding permanent admissions to homes will be maintained until this process has been completed and final proposals for change have been agreed.

I am not therefore in a position to comment on the proposals for Skeagh House until the outcome of this consultation process is known.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what immediate steps are being taken to ensure that all Northern Ireland recipients of the Independent Living Fund receive information about plans for changes to the administration of their awards.

(AQW 45983/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: All ILF recipients in NI will receive a letter at the end of May 2015 from ILF UK explaining the change of administration from ILF UK to the Scottish Independent Living Fund. I anticipate that ILF recipients will enjoy a seamless transfer to the new system and the payment of their awards will continue to be made using the existing method of payment.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he will ensure that current data for recipients of the Independent Living Fund (ILF) in Northern Ireland is transferred securely and safely to the Scottish Independent Living Fund Infrastructure, as successor to the UK Independent Living Fund .

(AQW 45986/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My officials have liaised closely with senior officials from ILF UK and they are currently drafting an agreement with ILF UK in respect of the secure transfer of ILF NI users' data to the Scottish Independent Living Fund (via the Scottish Government).

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the future of the Cottages Children's Respite facility in Derry.

(AQW 45999/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Western Health and Social Care Trust's review of its respite services has been extended until after the summer holiday period. This will ensure further engagement with all of the key stakeholders in respect of the proposed service model.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, considering the new Independent Living Fund will be administered through the Scottish Individual Funding Request infrastructure, whether there will be any impact on payments that recipients of this fund will receive.

(AQW 46002/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: All ILF recipients in NI will receive a letter at the end of May 2015 from ILF UK explaining the change of administration from ILF UK to the Scottish Independent Living Fund. I anticipate that ILF recipients will enjoy a seamless transfer to the new system and the payment of their awards will continue to be made using the existing method of payment.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the attention deficit hyperactivity disorder services that are available for adults.

(AQW 46003/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The clinical needs of adults with ADHD who have resulting or associated mental health issues are met through generic mental health services.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the current waiting time for an autism assessment in each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46004/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The figures requested are not held centrally and have been sourced from the Health and Social Care (HSC) Board. Table 1 overleaf details waiting times at, 30th April 2015, for children waiting for an assessment for autism by HSC Trust and length of time waiting.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what his Department has done to increase the number of defibrillators in public spaces and in training people in their use.

Mr Hamilton: My Department has developed a Community Resuscitation Strategy for Northern Ireland. The strategy was launched in July 2014 and aims to increase the number of people trained in CPR. The promotion of public access defibrillation is an integral part of the strategy, and one of the objectives of the strategy focuses on how to improve the availability of, and access to, the automated external defibrillators that are in place across Northern Ireland. The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety has no statutory responsibility to ensure that defibrillators are placed in public spaces or to offer training to individuals or organisations that purchase their own defibrillators.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much the Patient and Client Council spent on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years.

(AQW 46037/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend by the Patient Client Council on travel expenses in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £68,806
- 2013/14 - £51,634

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why Northfield House, Donaghadee is included in the list of residential care homes being considered for possible closure.

(AQW 46043/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: All Health and Social Care Trusts, including the South Eastern Trust, used regionally agreed criteria to evaluate each of their residential care homes and to develop proposals for their future use. A summary of the South Eastern Trust proposals is available at - http://www.hscboard.hscni.net/board/meetings/May%202015/Making%20Choices%20%20Proposals%20on%20Statutory%20Residential%20Care%20Homes/index.html#P-1_0

The Trusts presented their proposals to the Health and Social Care Board, who agreed on 19 May that each Trust should proceed to publicly consult on their individual proposals for change. I re-iterate my commitment that no-one will be required to leave their home against their wishes.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the future of the Northfield House Residential Home in Donaghadee.

Mr Hamilton: The future role and function of statutory residential care homes is currently under review and no final decisions have yet been made. The Health and Social Care Board recently approved Trust proposals for reform, including the South Eastern Trust's proposal for Northfield House. However, these remain proposals at this stage and will be subject to public consultation by individual Trusts.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how the revised care standards for nursing homes are being incorporated and used by the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority.

(AQW 46076/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Revised care standards for nursing homes were published on 13 April 2015 and are used by the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority as the basis of their registration and inspections of these establishments effective from the date of publication.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether any of the £6.25m funding from the Atlantic Philanthropies/Delivering Social Change Dementia initiative has been allocated within the Northern Health and Social Care Trust area.

(AQW 46078/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Implementation of the Atlantic Philanthropies/Delivering Social Change Dementia initiative is being taken forward on a regional basis by a project team led by the Health and Social Care Board and the Public Health Agency, and working in close collaboration with all five Health and Social Care Trusts, including the Northern Trust.

Over the lifetime of the project, investment is planned on a public information campaign, developing and rolling out dementia specific training for HSC staff, providing additional support for carers, and development of innovative models of respite. These measures are designed to benefit people with dementia and their carers across Northern Ireland.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the rationale behind his decision to transfer the administration of the Independent Living Fund to Scotland; and detail the projected savings his Department will make as a result of the move.

Mr Hamilton: My decision to implement these new arrangements is underpinned by the outcome of my Department's public consultation on how Independent Living Fund (ILF) users in Northern Ireland would be best supported after the closure of the ILF. It was clear that the majority of respondents preferred the creation of a successor body to the ILF UK.

I consider that these new arrangements are the most cost-effective solution to ensure that ILF recipients in Northern Ireland continue to be supported and I am very pleased that I have been able to work with the administration in Scotland to achieve this agreement. The cost of administering these new services will be the same as for the current service provided by ILF UK

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the actions his Department, and his Scottish counterparts, will take to facilitate transferring the administration of the Independent Living Fund to Scotland.

(AQW 46085/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Independent Living Fund (ILF) Scotland and ILF Northern Ireland are currently working in conjunction with ILK UK regarding the secure transfer of ILF NI users' data to the Scottish ILF (via the Scottish Government) in relation to the administration and management of this process.

ILF UK has been integral in the training of newly appointed staff in ILF Scotland to ensure consistency of service that replicates the service that is currently provided to try and ensure a seamless transition.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the proposed closure of the 20 bed GP ward at Bangor Community Hospital.

(AQW 46132/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The consultation exercise on the future of intermediate care in the North Down and Ards conducted by the Southern Eastern Trust area ended on 29 April 2015.

The Trust is currently analysing the consultation responses.

Department of Justice

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many cases are currently in the court system involving unlicensed or illegal taxi provision, and any related charges, broken down by court division.

(AQW 45687/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): The number of cases currently in the court system involving unlicensed or illegal taxi provision, and related charges, broken down by court division are set out in the table below.

Court Division	Number of Cases
Antrim	1
Ards	2
Armagh And South Down	3
Belfast	3
Craigavon	1
Fermanagh And Tyrone	3
Londonderry	1
Total	14

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice what strategy his Department has in place to address crime in rural areas in North Antrim

(AQW 45741/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department has brought forward Building Safer, Shared and Confident Communities: A Community Safety Strategy for Northern Ireland 2012-2017. The Strategy contains a commitment to make rural communities safer by reducing opportunities to commit crime.

My Department chairs a multi-agency rural crime delivery group, which consists of representatives from the PSNI, NFI Mutual and the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development.

The group has developed an action plan which contains a range of actions being taken forward to tackle rural crime. The action plan and progress reports on delivery of this commitment at a strategic and local level are available on the DOJ website.

Examples of local measures currently being delivered to address crime in rural areas of North Antrim include: the Farm Watch scheme, the Ballymena Secured programme, rural wardens project, mobile CCTV and Neighbourhood Watch schemes.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment on the effectiveness of Sexual Offences Prevention Orders; and what amendments will be made in the forthcoming Justice Bill to these Orders.

Mr Ford: The sexual offences prevention order (SOPO) is a civil order which can be imposed by the court to assist in managing the risks posed by individual sex offenders living in the community. It can be a useful risk minimisation tool both in its own right and when used in combination with other measures addressing the specific risks posed by the most serious offenders being managed on a multi-agency basis under the public protection arrangements (PPANI).

SOPOs are widely used for public protection purposes. In 2014, 141 orders were handed down by the courts and 573 SOPOs are currently in force. In 2014, the police returned 38 orders to court on breach, where the offender faced criminal charges carrying a maximum penalty of five years imprisonment. In the event of a very serious breach, the court has the ability to impose an extended sentence for public protection, if it considers this necessary.

There is significant evidence that the PPANI arrangements have been successful in managing the risks posed by offenders, as demonstrated by the Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland report in 2011.

There are no amendments to the SOPO provisions in the forthcoming Justice Bill.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Justice to outline (i) what action his Department is taking to appoint a state pathologist on a full time permanent basis; and (ii) when he expects the position to be filled.

Mr Ford: A further recruitment competition is being planned with a view to an appointment of a State Pathologist by the end of the year.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45351/11-15, to detail the cost to the Probation Board for Northern Ireland of compiling the pre-sentence report and the number of staff involved.

(AQW 45804/11-15)

Mr Ford: A Pre-Sentence report for a Magistrates' Court is prepared by Probation Board to assist the court in determining the most suitable method of dealing with an offender.

PBNI has advised that a Pre-Sentence Report for a case of this nature would have been prepared by a Probation Officer and cost in the region of £102.00

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Justice to detail the current levels of sickness absence within Northern Ireland Prison Service staff broken down by (i) category of staff; (ii) duration of sickness absence; and (iii) type of sickness absence.

(AQW 45823/11-15)

Mr Ford: Official information detailing levels of sickness absence across the entire Northern Ireland Civil Service (NICS), including the Northern Ireland Prison Service, is compiled by the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency and published annually. The most recently published report 'Sickness Absence in the Northern Ireland Civil Service' which provides an analysis of sickness absence data for NICS staff over the 2013/2014 financial year was published in October 2014 and can be downloaded via the following link: http://www.nisra.gov.uk/publications/Sickness_in_the_nics.html

The 2014/2015 report is due for publication later this year.

A more detailed analysis could only be provided at a disproportionate cost.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Justice to detail the ratio of administration staff to discipline staff in the Northern Ireland Prison Service in each month of the last three years.

(AQW 45824/11-15)

Mr Ford: The ratio of administration staff to discipline staff in the Northern Ireland Prison Service in each month of the last three years is shown in the following table:

Table: Ratio of Full Time Equivalent staff at Admin Grade to Prison Grade

2012/2013	Ratio	2013/2014	Ratio	2014/2015	Ratio

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prison officers on duty at Magilligan Prison during the (i) day; and (ii) night shift.

(AQW 45932/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is not possible to provide an exact figure on the number of staff present at Magilligan Prison as this figure fluctuates on a daily basis. Staffing levels are influenced by a number of factors including the regimes available, the shift patterns, annual leave and staff sickness.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Justice what steps his Department is taking to utilise technological advancement to improve the efficiency of the justice system.

(AQW 45936/11-15)

Mr Ford: There are many areas where my Department is using a wide range of advanced technologies to improve the efficiency of the justice system:

- Forensic Science (FSNI) has implemented a new DNA system which can accurately and more efficiently analyse results against much smaller DNA samples.
- Video links are widely used across the Criminal Justice organisations to reduce the movement of prisoners and to improve the efficiency of giving evidence in court.
- The Prison Service is running a pilot using Skype to facilitate foreign national and family virtual visits.
- AccessNI have just completed the implementation of a new public online system to process criminal record checks.
- The Causeway Data Sharing Mechanism generates and maintains the Northern Ireland Criminal History Database using electronically shared information and provides secure controlled web based access to view the Criminal Records across the justice system.
- The Courts and Tribunal Service (NICTS) operate an Integrated Court Operating System which integrates with Causeway and speeds up the justice system through the improved flow of information.

In addition, a number of new technology initiatives are underway:

- The Legal Services Agency is implementing a new public online system to handle the entire Legal Aid application process.
- FSNI are implementing a new integrated Case Management System which will speed up the processing of evidence submitted by the PSNI.
- Compensation Services are implementing a new public online system to process criminal injury and damage claims.
- NICTS are replacing the Court Funds Office system with new technology to streamline and improve the service to clients.

My Department is considering options to enhance the Causeway system to make optimum use of the latest technology and to support digital working initiatives such as support for the increased use and sharing of video evidence; increased use of digital courts and the sharing of digital case files with all parties.

These are some key examples of both existing and future use of technology to improve speed and efficiency of the justice system in my Department.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45105/11-15, to detail (i) the cost of damage caused, (ii) what equipment will have to be replaced; and (iii) if those responsible have been charged with criminal offences and whether it will be dealt with by the courts or the Prison Service.

(AQW 46046/11-15)

Mr Ford: The cost of damage to Roe House integrated recreation room was £4702.89. Damage was sustained to a pool table and running machine, and a 32" TV set will require replacement. A current PSNI investigation is ongoing regarding this incident.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice to outline the benefits that having the National Crime Agency fully operational will bring to North Antrim.

(AQW 46061/11-15)

Mr Ford: The National Crime Agency will be able to use its powers across Northern Ireland. Its officers already had powers in respect of immigration and revenue and customs offences but, from 20 May 2015, they also have powers of a constable, subject to the agreement of the Chief Constable, and can undertake civil recovery in the devolved field. This will undoubtedly assist our law enforcement effort in tackling serious and organised crime.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the Independent Review of the Prosecution of Related Sexual Abuse and Terrorism Cases conducted by Sir Keir Starmer.

(AQW 46218/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Starmer Review is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions. That said, the Report is clearly a thorough and well-considered review. I welcome the Director's decision to publish the Report in full and to accept all its findings without reservation. I also welcome the programme of change that is underway based on Sir Keir's recommendations and that the Director has offered a sincere apology to the three victims involved in the cases in question.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the findings of the Independent Review of the Prosecution of Related Sexual Abuse and Terrorism Cases conducted by Sir Keir Starmer.
(AQW 46290/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Starmer Review is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions. That said, the Report is clearly a thorough and well-considered review. I welcome the Director's decision to publish the Report in full and to accept all its findings without reservation. I also welcome the programme of change that is underway based on Sir Keir's recommendations and that the Director has offered a sincere apology to the three victims involved in the cases in question.

Department for Regional Development

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development what cycling provision will be included in the Dublin Road improvement scheme.
(AQW 45622/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): My Department will shortly be commencing a road maintenance scheme on the Dublin Road, where resurfacing works are being undertaken but no alterations to the existing road layout are proposed.

I can, however, confirm that my Department is currently developing a number of cycling schemes elsewhere in Belfast City Centre.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the reported £170,000 taxi costs for Translink staff, to list (i) the average journey in miles and cost; (ii) the frequency of such average journeys each month; and (iii) the ten longest journeys, shown by miles and cost.

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that invoices raised in relation to such activity average 250 per month. They stipulate a pick-up and set down location, but not specific mileage. They are therefore unable to provide the level of detail requested. However, we can advise that over the last 3 years an estimated 9,000 individual trips were made.

Without analysis of the individual invoices I can however advise that the longest taxi operations carried out in the past were for Conductors being transported between Belfast and Londonderry Depots. The circumstances where this would be necessary are where spare Coleraine and Londonderry Conductors are not available, spare staff from Belfast are utilised. In order for these staff to be in place for the start of services from Londonderry, taxis are required to depart Belfast at 04.30 prior to public transport services being available. The Conductor then returns to Belfast by train after finishing his / her duty in Londonderry. The road distance in this instance is 72 miles and an average taxi cost is £86.00.

By way of context, 11 such journeys were made between Belfast and Londonderry in the last year.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development whether an objection to a disabled parking bay application would prohibit the implementation of the bay.
(AQW 45743/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: When considering an application for a disabled parking bay, my Department must adhere to the requirements of Schedule 4 of The Road Traffic Regulation (NI) Order 1997 and its well established criteria and procedures for assessing applications for disabled parking bays. If an objection is received after the neighbourhood notification, or after the required Notice of Intention has been published in the media, my Department must give full consideration to this, and will attempt to resolve it as quickly as possible.

My Department's procedures require that a withdrawal of an objection must be confirmed in writing by the objector. If an objection cannot be resolved, and my Department wishes to proceed with a disabled parking bay proposal, a submission is made by the relevant TransportNI Divisional Manager to my Department's Director of Transport Strategy, Policy and Legislation, with a reasoned recommendation as to why the proposal should proceed without recourse to a Public Inquiry, or why a Public Inquiry should be held.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development whether (i) there is any connection between the firm with exclusive use of the taxi rank at Central Station and the provision of taxis for use by Translink staff; (ii) all taxis for staff are pre-booked in line with regulations; and (iii) records of taxis booked for staff are maintained.

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that the contract for the provision of taxi services for passengers to / from the taxi rank at Central Station awarded to Value Cabs also included the provision of a taxi service for NIR operational requirements for staff and NIR clients, as required.

All staff taxi requirements are pre-booked in line with regulations and a record of all such bookings is maintained.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the risk to road users and pedestrians following the decision to carry out only one cut of grass beside roadways and carriageways in North Down rather than the previous five cut cycle.

(AQW 45762/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is facing a £60 million Resource budget pressure in 2015/16, more than half of which has fallen to TransportNI. This budget pressure has created an immediate impact on the delivery of routine maintenance services right across Northern Ireland, including North Down.

The budget allocation currently available to TransportNI is only sufficient to cover our fixed costs and since 1 April 2015 there has been no funding available to engage external contractors to carry out routine maintenance activities, including grass cutting.

I share your concerns about the impact this could have on road safety but I will not be allowing road safety related maintenance to be stopped altogether and our internal workforce will be providing a skeletal routine maintenance service. In relation to grass cutting, this will allow all areas to be cut once between April and October with sightlines at bends and junctions being cut more frequently as required for safety reasons.

For the rest of this year TransportNI will be entirely dependent upon funding allocations from monitoring rounds to deliver its full range of maintenance activities, including grass cutting services provided by Councils. Should the financial position improve following the outcome of subsequent monitoring rounds, I will, of course, review this position.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development how many complaints NI Water has received relating to disrupted water supplies for each of the last three years in Upper Bann

(AQW 45764/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water does not hold information according to constituency boundaries. The information available relates to the overall number of complaints relating to properties within Northern Ireland affected by water supply interruptions (e.g. no water, water quality, low pressure etc), split by domestic and non-domestic properties.

Type of Supply	Number of Complaints
	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Domestic	27,222	28,709	32,469
Non-Domestic	5,914	5,940	6,892
Total	33,136	34,649	39,361

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development how much his Department has spent in each of the last five years dealing with disruptions to water supplies.

(AQW 45765/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Disruptions to water supplies are an operational matter for NI Water. Such disruptions can be caused by a wide variety of issues outside the company's control. However, I am advised by NI Water that its expenditure over the past five financial years repairing broken, leaking or burst water pipes (all part of public infrastructure for which it is responsible) is as follows:

- 2010/11 £6.4 million
- 2011/12 £6.3 million
- 2012/13 £5.5 million
- 2013/14 £5.2 million
- 2014/15 £4.5 million

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline his Department's planned capital investment in Upper Bann between now and the end of this Assembly's mandate.

(AQW 45766/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's planned capital investment in Upper Bann for the financial year April 2015 to March 2016 is some £15.3 million, subject to appropriate project approvals.

While the actual spend on some projects/schemes may be within one council area or constituency, the benefits of such schemes are not confined to the council area or constituency in which they are located.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the number of vehicle damage claims received by each area section office in the last ten years; and (ii) the amount of compensation awarded for these claims during this time. (AQW 45802/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of the number of compensation claims for vehicle damage received by TransportNI Section Office area, in each of the last ten years, are set out in the table below. As my Department's Claims Unit's database does not link to the Government accounting system, details of the amount of compensation paid out for these claims could only be obtained at disproportionate cost as it would necessitate an extensive manual search of relevant files by clerical staff.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to increase the number of evening train services on the Belfast-Dublin line.

Mr Kennedy: There are currently no plans in place to increase the number of evening train services on the Belfast-Dublin line. You will be aware that a project to refurbish the Enterprise fleet is expected to be completed later this year.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 38793/11-15, of the total number of 22,399 new meters installed, (i) how many meters were installed in new build properties; (ii) how many meters were installed in non-domestic properties; (iii) how many new boundary boxes were installed; and (iv) how many new non-domestic customers were added to the NI Water billing system as a result of the Phase 3 metering contract, in each year.

(AQW 45825/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The table below sets out:

- the number of meters installed at new build properties
- the number of meters installed at non-domestic properties
- the number of new boundary boxes installed during the Phase 3 metering contract

With regard to the number of new non-domestic customers added to the billing system, the data requested is not held in a manner which allows NI Water to differentiate between new non-domestic customers added to the billing system through unmeasured charges introduced from 1 April 2007, (with subsequent transfer to measured charging) and those new non-domestic customers added to the billing system solely as a result of metering activities undertaken through the Phase 3 metering contract. This position was previously advised in the reply to AQW 38798/11-15.

Year	Number of meters installed at new build properties	Number of meters installed at non-domestic properties	Number of new boundary boxes installed
2007/08	3,220	2,154	1,174
2008/09	11,460	4,886	2,325
2009/10	3,945	933	621

 This is the number of new boundary boxes installed at existing premises. At new build properties the boundary box is installed as part of the new connection process and not part of the Phase 3 metering contract.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 38793/11-15, for a breakdown of the costs paid to Enterprise Managed Services Ltd by NI Water in 2006/07, prior to the contract commencing on site; and to which part of the tendered price does this money relate.

(AQW 45828/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The contract for meter installation activities was awarded to Enterprise Managed Services Ltd in January 2007, with meter installation work commencing April 2007. The period between January 2007 and April 2007 was designated as the mobilisation period. During this period the contractor was required to establish an office, assemble and equip a workforce, establish data exchange arrangements, prepare data files, and prepare customer notifications. The costs paid to the contractor in accordance with the contract pricing schedule are set out in the table below.

Pricing Schedule Section	Activity Description	Costs paid
1	Implementation and set-up (office set-up, assemble and equip workforce, vehicles)	£44,000
2	Survey (data files, data exchange arrangements, work batches)	£33,000

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 38793/11-15, what percentage reduction to its original tender the successful tenderer applied to each section 1-4 of the pricing schedule in the tender contract documents.

(AQW 45830/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Phase 3 metering contract was procured through a tendering process which included a bidding auction. Through the auction process, tenderers were invited to review and revise their prices. The percentage reductions in each section of the pricing schedule offered by the successful tenderer at the close of the auction are set out in the table below.

Pricing Schedule Section	Activity Description	Percentage Reduction offered through tender auction %
1	Implementation	0
2	Survey	27

Pricing Schedule Section	Activity Description	Percentage Reduction offered through tender auction %
3	Meter Implementation	4.4
4*	Automated Meter Reading Installation	Excluded from auction
5	Uplift Charges	0

* The pricing schedule in the released tender documents included a section 4 which related to Automated Meter Reading installation; however a decision was taken to not proceed with this part of the contract and this was excluded from the bidding auction.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the cost of (i) land purchase; (ii) architectural fees; and (iii) building work for the terminal buildings at (a) Dundonald; and (b) Cairnshill Park and Ride facilities.

(AQW 45835/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of costs of land purchase, architectural fees and building works for the terminal buildings at Dundonald and Cairnshill Park and Ride facilities respectively are set out below:

Dundonald Park & Ride

Land costs for the full Park & Ride site	£1,515,000
Architectural/design fees for terminal building	£5,000
Construction costs for terminal building	£305,000

Cairnshill Park & Ride

Land costs for the full Park & Ride site	£6,250,000
Architectural/design fees for terminal building	£33,000
Construction costs for terminal building	£200,000

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the reported £170,000 taxi costs for Translink staff, what is the criteria for staff to avail of this service; and by what level of staff is this most used.

(AQW 45854/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that these taxi costs relate to various operational circumstances. For instance, taxis are sometimes required to move train crews between depots (inter-depot working). Inter-depot working allows for major depots to cover smaller country depot staff requirements without the requirement for localised overtime.

Also, employee taxi hire arises on occasions when train crews are required to be transferred from one location to another. The end location for a working day may differ from the member of staff's starting location. Likewise, there may not be appropriate public transport links to where they need to go at the time of day they require to travel, i.e. very early starts/late finishes. Some depots/sign-on points are not located on public transport routes.

Equally, taxis are also used during service exigencies, e.g. security alerts, line closures and other service requirements, e.g. accidents, when there is a requirement to reinstate services promptly and ensure reliability of the timetable as far as is possible. In such instances, train crews often need to be re-positioned following completion of their shifts.

The categories of staff that would most often be required to use such facilities are Conductors and Train Drivers.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45227/11-15 and given this contract is approaching six years in existence, (i) what was the stated duration of the tender when advertised in 2009; and to list the other tendered for contracts in his Department and its arm's-length bodies over the last three years.

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that the contract in question commenced on 12/10/2009, with the initial period running until 11/10/2012. There were also contract extensions which allowed the contract to continue to 11/10/2015, when it is scheduled to be retendered.

My Department does not hold the information requested, Central Procurement Directorate would retain information on tenders that it managed for my Department.

Translink has however volunteered a copy of the list of Matters for Approval from April 2012 – March 2015 will be made available in the Assembly Library. This list does not solely relate to tenders but also includes Economic Appraisals and other approvals submitted to Translink's monthly Executive Committee meetings and Board Finance & Project Tracking Committee meetings.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development for a breakdown of the £170,000 Translink expenditure on taxi provision for staff, shown by facility.

(AQW 45861/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that they do not have readily available the level of detail requested.

Invoices received cover multiple journeys, depending on activity during the relevant period being reported. They identify pick-up and drop-off points, which are sometimes, but not always, the 'facility', i.e. the operating depot to which the query refers.

There is no separation on invoices of those journeys undertaken by staff and those taxi services provided for passengers, as required in the event of exceptional operational circumstances.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the grass cutting schedule for 2015 in North Down.

(AQW 45866/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Due to budgetary pressures in 2015/16, my Department is only able to provide a skeleton routine maintenance service at the present time.

With regard to grass cutting, my Department's internal workforce will carry out one full cut of all areas under its maintenance control. This cut has commenced in the North Down area and it is anticipated that it will be completed by mid July 2015.

Subject to in-year funding and resources, grass areas classified as sightlines may receive additional cuts.

This is not the service that my Department wishes to provide, however it is a direct consequence of the challenging budgetary position.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the safety provisions for (i) spectators; and (ii) participants at this year's North West 200.

(AQW 45899/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Responsibility for safety at road race events rests with the event organiser. My Department's involvement extends only to making the necessary road closure orders to facilitate motor racing events on public roads.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development what changes have been made in the past twenty years to the manned handover system for trains at the Coleraine Rail Crossing, Bushmills Road.

(AQW 45907/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has assumed that the query relates to what is known within the organisation as the 'token block' system.

The system would have last been altered 26 years ago when Coleraine Station was re-signalled in 1989. The tablet instruments would have been interfaced with the new route relay Interlocking which remains unchanged to the present day.

Once the construction work on the new signalling system is complete, the token exchange for trains travelling to and from Londonderry will no longer be a requirement, as the sections will be track circuited and therefore the trains will not have to stop. However, trains travelling to and from Portrush will still be worked under the current arrangements, as this is not part of the Coleraine to Londonderry project.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Regional Development what contingency plans have been put in place should the River Faughan become contaminated with toxic leachate from illegal landfill sites; and at what additional cost to the public purse.

Mr Kennedy: NI Water has contingency plans for all of its water treatment works, including Carmoney which treats water abstracted from the River Faughan. These plans have been formulated to provide a framework for dealing with and limiting the impact of a total loss of supply from the water treatment works. The contingency plan for Carmoney identifies that in the event of total loss of production, provision of all of the required water supply would be achieved by increasing production at other water treatment works.

The cost of implementing the contingency cannot yet be calculated but would, based on the requirements of the plan in the particular circumstances, include pumping costs associated with the transfer of water from the alternative water treatment works during the period of loss of supply from Carmoney Water Treatment Works. There may also be costs associated with the re-establishment of Carmoney Water Treatment Works into supply along with the possible need for additional treatment.

NI Water also has in place Drinking Water Safety Plans (DWSP) for all its water treatment works and associated supply areas, including the Carmoney Treatment Works. The DWSP for Carmoney Water Treatment Works identifies the potential for risk to the water quality of the raw water supply to the Works from waste sites within the Faughan River catchment area. NI Water continues to work closely with the Department of the Environment's Northern Ireland Environment Agency to minimise any potential impacts on drinking water quality and keep under review any risks identified to inform the DWSP risk assessment process.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45405/11-15, how much income has been generated since the commencement of the contract; and how this income has been utilised by Translink to off-set costs or subsidise public transport services, broken down by financial year.

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that the income derived from this contract is £15,000 per annum. Therefore cumulatively this amounts to £90,000 over the six years that the contract has been running to date.

The money generated is utilised to offset funding required to operate public transport services but cannot be aligned to a specific service.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development whether group bookings are accepted for travel on the Derry-Belfast train service before 9.30am

(AQW 45992/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that group bookings will be taken subject to supply, during both peak and off-peak periods. Many of NIR's peak services have very high levels of demand, and as a result they would not take group bookings as this would result in regular commuters being displaced.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development whether group bookings for the Derry-Belfast train service can be purchased on the Translink website.

(AQW 45993/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that all group bookings (10+ customers) must be purchased through NIR Travel and are not available on-line.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the occupancy levels on each of the Derry-Belfast train services for each of the last three years

(AQW 45994/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that NI Railways do not measure occupancy levels on a daily basis. However seat occupancy was last reviewed in early November 2014. The table below highlights the high levels of seat occupancy on 'early morning' Belfast-bound trains:

Train Departure	Seat Occupancy
06:05 ex Londonderry	91%
06:20 ex Coleraine	115%
07:13 ex Londonderry	116%
07:19 ex Coleraine	127%
09:19 ex Coleraine	85%
09:33 ex Londonderry	85%

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the rationale behind the use of cameras to identify and penalise motorists who use bus lanes in Belfast City Centre.

(AQW 46010/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Over recent years, my Department has made significant improvements to the road network to give buses greater priority through the introduction of bus lanes, bus-only streets and bus gates. These measures are aimed at reducing journey times and improving the reliability of buses and are in keeping with my Department's policy of encouraging a modal shift away from private to public transport.

Whilst the majority of drivers do not abuse the bus priority measures, surveys undertaken in 2007 and 2013 found that a significant number of unauthorised vehicles do so. This reduces the effectiveness of the bus priority measures and frustrates the majority of drivers who do not drive in bus lanes. Therefore, my Department has introduced cameras to improve the enforcement of bus lanes, bus gates and bus-only streets with effect from 1 June 2015.

Before introducing the cameras, the bus lanes were enforced solely by the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI), as time and resources permitted. Following the introduction of the cameras, the bus lanes will continue to be enforced by the PSNI as a criminal offence, with my Department enforcing them as a civil offence.

To allow drivers to get used to the new enforcement measures, my Department will issue "warning letters" to unauthorised drivers recorded as driving in bus lanes, bus gates or bus-only streets for an initial three week period following the introduction of the enforcement cameras. Thereafter, unauthorised drivers will be issued with a £90 Penalty Charge Notice, which will be reduced to £45 if paid within 14 days. An appeals procedure is also in place.

Further Information on the enforcement of bus lanes is available on NI Direct at www.nidirect.gov.uk/bus-lane-cameras

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45294/11-15 and AQW 45024/11-15, to clarify (i) how there is no safety issue, when fully wheelchair accessible public hire taxis have no safe place to drop off or pick up disabled passengers at Central Station, Belfast, given the prohibition of use of the exclusive rank; and (ii) if this is breaching the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, by failing to ensure both the choice of, and adequate access to, fully accessible wheelchair taxis at all times.

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that the Public Hire taxi rank at Mays Meadow is adequate to facilitate safe drop off / pick up of wheelchair users at Central Station.

Public hire taxis that are fully wheelchair accessible may also avail of the bespoke set-down area within the car park at Central Station, or indeed the specifically designated disabled parking spaces. The car park operates a policy of providing free parking for the first 20 minutes, which facilitates those simply dropping passengers off but not intending a lengthy stay.

The drop-off and disabled parking areas are adjacent to the pedestrian exit from the car park, immediately across from the May's Meadow entrance to the station building where lift access to the main entrance / concourse is readily available.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there is a provision for the use of taxi services included in some Translink staff member contracts to transport them to and from work; and if so, what percentage of staff benefit from this provision.

(AQW 46048/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that provision of taxi services for staff is not incorporated into any staff contracts.

Department for Social Development

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Social Development in relation to Disability Living Allowance appeals, to detail the total cost of (i) venue hire; and (ii) panel payments, per division, in (a) 2012/13; (b) 2013/14; and (c) 2014/15.

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): The information cannot be provided in the format requested. The Appeals Service arranges for all types of benefit appeals to be heard at venues throughout Northern Ireland based on the postal district within which the appellant resides. Therefore, a breakdown of the venue hire costs and panel member fees and expenses for Disability Living Allowance (DLA) appeals is not available.

However the tables below detail the cost of venue hire by tribunal district for all benefit appeals; the total cost of panel members fees and expenses; the total number of appeals that have received a tribunal hearing; and the proportion of which relate to DLA appeals.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development how many unfair dismissal cases have been brought against his Department over the last two years.

(AQW 45540/11-15)

Mr Storey: In the past two years there have been four claims of unfair dismissal brought against my Department.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Social Development when he intends to conduct a review of the Caravans Act (Northern Ireland) 2011.

(AQW 45640/11-15)

Mr Storey: Section 4(6) of the Caravans Act (NI) 2011 commits the Department to review Parts 1 and 2 of the Schedule to the Act not later than five years after it has come into operation and at least once in every period of five years thereafter.

As the Caravans Act came into operation in September 2011, it is therefore due to be reviewed before September 2016.

Parts 1 and 2 of the Schedule deal with the implied terms in agreements for residential occupiers. However, the review will consider the whole Act.

The Department is currently collecting data to support the review of the Act.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Social Development when the decontamination of the Fort George site will be completed.

(AQW 45663/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department cannot appoint a contractor to undertake the decontamination works at Fort George until Outline Planning Permission has been secured for the Development Framework. I anticipate that a Planning decision will be made by my Ministerial colleague Mark H. Durkan in the near future.

The decontamination works are expected to take between 12 and 18 months to procure and complete. This means that if Outline Planning Permission is granted now, the works will not be completed before 31 March 2016. My officials will therefore continue to work with Council to determine the best approach to, and timetable for, the remediation of Fort George.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Social Development (i) to detail whether the Programme for Government commitment of delivering 2,000 social homes in 2014/15 was delivered; and (ii) for a breakdown of new social home builds per constituency.

(AQW 45683/11-15)

Mr Storey:

- (i) The PfG target to secure 2000 new social housing starts during the 2014/15 Programme year was not only met but exceeded. In total, housing associations started work on 2013 new units of social housing during the period April 2014 to March 2015.

Across the 4 year PfG period, work has commenced on 6101 new social housing units, thereby exceeding the PfG starts target of 6000 new social starts.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to outline any changes in his Department's commitment to the Paisley Park Project in recent months.

(AQW 45740/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department officials are continuing to work collaboratively with Paisley Park Sports Development Company Ltd and Belfast City Council to ensure the future of the Paisley Park Sports Complex. This may involve the provision of a lease or licence on the facility by either my Department, or Belfast City Council following transfer of the asset under Reform of Local Government.

Proposals for the redevelopment of the complex have been drawn up by the Company, and my Department has been asked to consider funding some elements of the proposal.

The budget my Department would use to support this type of capital work is to transfer to local Councils under Reform of Local Government. As a result, the Department's Capital Programme for 2014/15 and 2015/16 has been focused on the practicalities of delivering projects before the planned transfer, now April 2016.

Due to the scale of the work related to the proposals and the risk of slippage beyond the planned transfer dates it has not been possible to consider funding at this time.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development how many Freedom of Information requests the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland has received in the last two years; and of these, how many remain unanswered.

(AQW 45789/11-15)

Mr Storey: In 2013-14 the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland received 13 Freedom of Information requests, all were responded to. In 2014-15 the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland received 46 Freedom of Information requests, all were responded to.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department will bring forward legislation to effectively regulate the payment of upfront fees in the private rental sector.

(AQW 45811/11-15)

Mr Storey: The 'Tenancy Deposit Scheme' introduced by my Department in April 2013 safeguards tenancy deposits paid by a tenant at the start of a tenancy. In the first two years of operation over 40,000 deposits have been protected.

Protecting tenants from fees charged specifically by letting agents is one of a number of issues being considered under the review of the role and regulation of the Private Rented Sector which is currently underway. Developments in other jurisdictions, in relation to letting agents, will be considered under the review. A discussion document will issue before Summer to garner views. A consultation paper, on proposals for change, will issue before the end of 2015. Any legislation that will need to be introduced will be taken forward during 2016/17.

The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment can investigate any unreasonable charges under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contract Regulations 1999.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of how the transfer of powers for economic redevelopment, to new local councils, is likely to impact the community and voluntary sector.

(AQW 45838/11-15)

Mr Storey: At this time I am unable to make an assessment of how the transfer of powers for economic redevelopment to the new local Councils is likely to impact on the Voluntary and Community Sector. However, I have met with all the Councils to discuss the transfer of powers. I, and my Department are keen to support Councils to take on board their new powers and I consider that Councils are best placed to determine how to implement the powers and to maximise benefits for the Voluntary and Community Sector.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Social Development, in considering the potential passage of the Regeneration Bill, what formula his Department intends to use to distribute the Community Infrastructure Fund between councils.

(AQW 45981/11-15)

Mr Storey: Subject to the successful passage of the Regeneration Bill a total of £56.5 million will be transferred to councils on 1st April 2016. In order to determine the percentage of this £56.5m that should be allocated to each Council my officials devised the funding allocation model. The allocation awarded to each Council in the model is largely determined on the following basis of apportionment:

- Income deprived population settlements bands A to G for tackling disadvantage;
- Total population for physical development;
- Income deprived population of district for community development, and
- Programme costs excluding Laganside for salaries and GAE.

The budget in relation to the Community Investment Fund is included in bullet point three above, community development and will be allocated on the basis of deprived population within a council area.

It is important to note that the funds will be transferred as a single unit and it will be for Councils and their locally elected representatives to decide how best to address the needs of their areas.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Mr A Maginness asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the number of staff employed (i) directly by their Department; and (ii) by its agencies, who currently earn less than the living wage.
(AQW 39030/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): Based on net hours worked, there are no staff employed (i) directly by our Department and (ii) by its Arms Length Bodies, who currently earn less than the living wage.

Ms Lo asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when the next round of the Ethnic Minority Development Fund will be available.
(AQW 40551/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: A public call for applications for the 2015/16 Minority Ethnic Development Fund was opened on 27 March 2015 and closed on 27 April. All applicants were informed of the outcome of their application on 8 May.

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the organisations that have (a) applied for; and (b) received funding as part of the Ethnic Minority Development Fund for Tier 1 and Tier 2, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 41301/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Following the recommendations of an evaluation of the 2003-2011 Minority Ethnic Development Fund three tiers of funding were introduced in the 2013/14 financial year. Accordingly, the information requested exists for the last two financial years.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the children's budgeting pilot.
(AQW 43430/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Research is being undertaken for the Northern Ireland Children's Commissioner (NICCY) by the Social Research Unit (SRU) in Dartington to identify the extent and effectiveness of direct public funding being provided for services impacting on the well-being of children and young people.

OFMDFM officials have been involved in providing data for this project. Junior Minister Bell and Junior Minister McCann updated the Delivering Social Change (DSC) Programme Board on 21 January 2015, encouraging all departments to work with NICCY in collating the necessary data for this research.

We await follow-up from NICCY to assess how this work can inform the approach we will take to any budgeting pilot taking account of available resources in light of budgetary constraints.

Mr Agnew asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether the issue of female genital mutilation will be included in the Racial Equality Strategy.
(AQW 43771/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Officials are currently completing the analysis of the 16 week consultation on the revised Racial Equality Strategy. Many issues and concerns were raised within the context of the consultation including female genital mutilation.

The issue of FGM engages a number of different departments. The Department of Finance and Personnel, for example, has produced Multi-Agency Guidelines.

The guidelines set out a multi-agency response and strategies to encourage agencies to co-operate and work together on the issue. The Department of Justice is taking forward proposals to include provisions relating to FGM in the Serious Crime Bill.

The Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and the Department of Education also have a key role to play in tackling this matter.

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the outcome of the children's budgeting pilot.
(AQW 44263/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Research is being undertaken for the Northern Ireland Children's Commissioner (NICCY) by the Social Research Unit (SRU) in Dartington, to identify the extent and effectiveness of direct public funding provided for services impacting on the well-being of children and young people.

OFMDFM officials have been involved in providing data for this project, and other departments have been encouraged to work with NICCY.

We await the outcome from NICCY to assess how this work can inform the approach we will take to any budgeting.

Mr McCausland asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister how their Department engages with stakeholder organisations in relation to international human rights commitments such as the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child.

(AQO 8010/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: OFMDFM has lead responsibility for a range of United Nations Conventions.

In each of these areas our officials work with officials in appropriate Whitehall departments to provide input to UK state reports, mid-term reports and briefings for delegations attending UN oral examinations.

When preparing inputs, OFMDFM officials consult with appropriate departments and relevant stakeholders to identify issues which may be of particular interest to the UN.

In regards to the United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child there is ongoing formal and informal engagement with stakeholders. This engagement supported our contribution to the recent State Party Report on UNCRC. In addition, OFMDFM is currently funding the development of an NGO report on UNCRC.

Mr Maskey asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Child Poverty Strategy.

(AQO 8014/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Executive's first Child Poverty Strategy 'Improving Children's Life Chances' was published in March 2011. Three Annual Reports have been published, most recently the Third Annual Report on 2 March 2015, providing updates on progress against the Strategy.

Mr Buchanan asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when the Executive plan to consider the recommendations submitted by the Minister of Finance and Personnel in relation to equal pay claims for PSNI and NIO staff.

(AQW 45255/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Executive business and all aspects of the Executive decision making process are confidential.

Ms Fearon asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the programme of summer camps in 2015 as part of Together: Building a United Community.

(AQO 8114/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Summer Camp Pilot Programme 2015 has been widely promoted. It was advertised in the 3 main daily newspapers the Belfast Telegraph, the Irish News and the News Letter - on 15 April. It was also advertised on the Department's website, was tweeted from our Twitter account and was placed on our Facebook page.

Over 2,500 stakeholders were also advised when the Programme opened and other key partners including the Community Relations Council, Department of Education, Department of Culture Arts and Leisure, Rural Community Network, Education Authority and local Councils were asked to circulate to their stakeholders.

The Programme closed for applications on 8 May and the assessment and selection is on track to meet our target of delivering 100 Camps in 2015.

The Programme is about building positive relationships among young people aged 11 to 19 from diverse backgrounds across all parts of our community. Camps should be fun and offer a range of age appropriate activities according to young people's interests but good relations-based learning must be at the heart of Camps.

Camps must be run on a cross community basis and can be at local or regional level. They will offer young people an opportunity to get to know other young people from different parts of our community, to have fun, to try new experiences and to help to build longer term relationships.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 44681/11-15, to detail the number of applications received for strand 1 and strand 2 funding streams, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 45591/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Summer Camps Pilot Programme 2015 closed for applications at 3pm on 8th May 2015. A total of 154 applications were received by the Programme Administrator, the Education Authority by that date.

Information is not held on the breakdown of applications by constituency but, from the information provided by the Education Authority, the following table shows the number of applications received by each of the 5 Education Authority regions for Strand 1 and Strand 2 funding.

	South Eastern Region	Western Region	Belfast	North Eastern Region	Southern Region	Total
Strand 1 Applications	10	25	45	28	10	118
Strand 2 Applications	7	7	14	2	6	36
Total	17	32	59	30	16	154

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 44682/11-15, to detail each of the key stakeholders indicated.

(AQW 45592/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Key stakeholders included representatives from the Equality Commission for Northern Ireland, the Northern Ireland Commissioner for Children and Young People, the Commissioner for Older People for Northern Ireland, the Children's Law Centre, Age NI, the Age Sector Platform and the Northern Ireland Youth Forum.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 40568/11-15, to detail the Area Plan projects that were informed by the Steering Group within the Social Investment Fund Northern Zone that their applications had not been successful.

(AQW 45654/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: In November 2013, the Northern Zone's Steering Group deemed 97 concepts ineligible for SIF support and it was the responsibility of the Steering Group Chairs to inform those involved of the decisions. The remaining 10 projects were prioritised and of these six projects will be funded within the Zone's £9million funding allocation. Details of these are available on the OFMDFM website. The ineligible Area Plan projects comprised 64 capital and 33 revenue concepts and details of each have been placed in the Assembly Library.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether the report on the delivery of the Disability Strategy for 2013/14 is available in the public domain.

(AQW 45872/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The first annual report on the delivery of the Executive's Disability Strategy, setting out the actions that all departments have undertaken, is currently being finalised and will be published in the near future.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the activities undertaken by her Department to influence and monitor the progress of the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership negotiations, including the nature and outcome of analysis regarding potential risks and opportunities for the local agri-food industry, rural communities and the wider economy.

(AQW 45757/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): The Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP) negotiations are very important for farmers in the north of Ireland. I and my officials are monitoring developments closely. A potential TTIP agreement offers both opportunities and potential threats for the industry here.

The implications of a deal depend very much on what is negotiated and I believe that any TTIP agreement needs to be balanced between creating opportunities for growth and offering protection to vulnerable sectors. While growth in the economy is certainly to be welcomed, I remain cautious as to the figures being quoted to support the TTIP. Along with my concerns about potential impacts on the environment, workers rights and public services, I also have some trepidation regarding prospective negative impacts on the agri-food industry.

My Department has not commissioned research specific to the possible impact of a TTIP deal between the EU and US. However, it has commissioned two research projects over the last ten years which have examined the impacts of reducing EU import tariffs. This research shows that the beef industry would be the one most affected by the more extreme tariff reduction scenarios. Therefore, I am taking a close interest in the progress of the TTIP negotiations and am keen that the needs of the beef industry in particular are properly considered. I am aware that local beef exporters are very keen to gain access to the US market, citing the fact that the prices paid there for manufacturing meat are higher than those on offer in the EU. However, in our own market, our farmers would be going into direct competition with US producers. In my view, it is absolutely essential that all imports into the EU meet the high health, environmental and animal welfare standards required from EU producers. In addition, any agreement must include proper recognition for our Protected Geographical Indication for food products.

Export markets have always been important for our industry and significant progress has been made in recent months to secure important new export opportunities. A recent inspection by the Chinese officials of our pork processors went well. We are also making good progress on negotiating access for our beef and poultry exports to China. My officials have been working closely with industry to prepare for a range of other inward approval inspections by the Philippines, Australia and US across a range of commodities. A TTIP deal could further increase the opportunities to expand exports, but there is a need to tread carefully.

I have used the avenues open to me to make the case for balance and fairness in any potential TTIP deal. TTIP is regularly discussed at meetings between Defra and Devolved Ministers. My officials liaise on this issue with Defra and Department of Business, Innovation and Skills officials through working groups and regular contact and we have provided briefing to MEPs and the Joint Ministerial Committee (on Europe). It is very unlikely that a TTIP deal will be concluded in this calendar year, but I will continue to monitor developments and to exert further influence when most needed. Where necessary, I will push for safeguards for vulnerable local industries such as the beef sector and seek an outcome that properly balances the risks and opportunities for the agri-food sector.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for her assessment of the (i) extent; and (ii) impact of meat importation on local farmers and the wider economy.
(AQW 45818/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill:

- (i) Figures available from the HMRC trade website indicate that the value of meat and meat preparations imported by firms registered in the north of Ireland were worth almost £380 million in 2014. Of this total, almost £16 million were imports from non-EU countries. Sales of meat by food processing firms in the north of Ireland were estimated to be worth almost £2,300 million in 2013 (latest DARD figures available).
- (ii) A proportion of this imported meat will have been subject to additional processing before resale. This value-adding activity creates employment and contributes to the local economy.

The meat industry in the north operates within a single European market with free movement of goods, services, capital and people. Given this context, there is no prima facie reason why meat imports would have any particular long term differential impact on local farmers compared with farmers elsewhere in the EU.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how her Department is working with the Department for Regional Development to deliver the commitment to tackle poverty and social isolation, through providing rural community transport and protecting the existing services.
(AQW 45834/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Through the Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation Programme my Department continues to fund the Assisted Rural Travel Scheme (ARTS) working in partnership with the Department for Regional Development (DRD). This Scheme provides free or half fare travel to those rural dwellers with a SmartPass (mainly the elderly and disabled) on Rural Community Transport Partnership vehicles across the north of Ireland.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what strategy her Department has in place for sustainable development, particularly in relation to the food industry.
(AQW 45900/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Whilst policy responsibility for sustainable development currently sits with OFMDFM, my Department has published a Departmental Sustainability Statement and taken the lead in delivering Strategic Objective 4.2, Promote Sustainable Land Management, of the NI Sustainable Development Implementation Plan.

Key actions undertaken by my Department in support of sustainable development include:

- Implementation of the Nitrates Action Programme and the Manure Efficiency Technology Scheme;
- Development of Flood Risk and Hazard Maps, and Flood Risk Management Plans;
- Development of the Rural Development Programme 2014-2020 in line with the Europe 2020 strategic objectives of smart, sustainable and inclusive growth, incorporating action on the environment and climate change as cross cutting objectives; and
- Delivery of the Woodland Grant scheme, supporting the creation of new woodland.

The Agri-Food Strategy Board, appointed by the DETI Minister and myself, has also identified sustainable growth as a key theme in its strategic action plan for development of the agri-food sector, Going for Growth.

In its response to Going for Growth, the Executive has welcomed the Board's commitment to sustainable growth and my Department has undertaken to progress various actions in support of this approach including:

- Establishing an Expert Working Group to develop an Agricultural Land Use Strategy which will detail a series of principles and practical actions to assist land owners, land managers and government in pursuit of sustainable land use;
- Developing a new Environmental Farming Scheme which will include measures to sustain and enhance biodiversity, improve water quality, increase woodland creation and help mitigate against climate change; and
- Funding a range of relevant R&D and knowledge exchange programmes, including work on Green House Gas emissions in local food production systems and genetic improvement.

Looking to the future, as part of the restructuring of Executive Departments which will come into operation following next year's Assembly elections, the new Department of Agriculture, Environment and Rural Affairs will take on OFMDFM's current policy responsibility for sustainable development strategy.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the level of funding her Department has provided to the Young Farmers' Clubs of Ulster in each of the last four years.

Mrs O'Neill: The Young Farmer's Clubs of Ulster (YFCU) was provided funding by DARD through a Letter of Offer for a three year period (2011-2014) to the value of £75K per annum (£225K in total). This period of funding ended on 31 March 2014. The programme of work was completed within the timescales and met all of the monitoring requirements.

Following completion of this programme, the YFCU submitted a new proposal and received a Letter of Offer for grant in aid of £75k per year for a two year period (2014-16) amounting to £150K in total. To date, £60K has been paid and a further £15K will be paid on submission of a satisfactory annual report in June 2015. An interim verification check was carried out in January 2015 and the organisation is on target to meet its objectives in line with the agreed delivery schedule.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the action her Department is taking to tackle animal cruelty on farms.

(AQW 45911/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The welfare of animals here is protected by the Welfare of Animals Act 2011. The Act includes significant powers to protect animals from unnecessary suffering, including domestic pets and horses. It allows action to be taken before an animal actually suffers, as opposed to after the event. The 2011 Act also recognises that causing unnecessary suffering to any animal is a very serious offence and it contains tough penalties which reflect this.

Since the 2011 Act came into operation I have introduced the Welfare of Farmed Animals Regulations 2012, which lays down the standards for the protection of animals kept for farming purposes, and the Welfare of Animals (Permitted Procedures by Lay Persons) Regulations 2012.

My Department plays an important and active role in implementing this legislation in the north of Ireland. To ensure compliance, Veterinary Inspectors carry out a rigorous on-going programme of farm animal welfare inspections. These are programmed as part of the statutory cross compliance surveillance to assess whether on-farm welfare meets the standards laid down in the legislation. Welfare inspections are also carried out as a result of complaints from members of the public or are targeted as a result of information produced by vets working in meat plants.

My Veterinary staff work closely with our colleagues in CAFRE (Collage of Agriculture Food and Rural Enterprise) to promote an active role in educating livestock keepers in good farming practice and standards of welfare for farmed animals. In addition, my Department published Codes of Practice setting out the standards of care required for sheep, beef cattle, meat chickens, dairy cows, pigs and laying hens.

The Member will be aware following the adoption of a Private Member's Motion on animal cruelty on 31 March 2014, I initiated a Review of the Implementation of the Welfare of Animals Act 2011. My officials are taking this Review forward in conjunction with the Department of Justice and an Interim Report has now been produced and consulted on. The Review has considered the implementation of the 2011 Act across four themes; Sentencing, Delivery Structures, Working Together and Serving the Public. The Review will take account of any views on the Interim Report and any new evidence it receives through the consultation process as it prepares its Final Report which is due to be published later this year.

My Department gives high priority to the welfare of animals and operates a rigorous enforcement policy to ensure full compliance with regulatory requirements. Any breaches are investigated thoroughly and offenders prosecuted as necessary

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the meetings her Department has been engaged in this year on animal welfare.

(AQW 45912/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Details of meetings regarding animal welfare, held between 1 January 2015 and 19 May 2015, which have involved my Department and external organisations, are set out in the table below. Meetings between my Department's Veterinary Service and individual farmers have not been included.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how many (i) veterinary; and (ii) other staff have been permitted to designate their headquarters to regional offices, while they continue to travel to Dundonald House, with resulting entitlement to travel expenses to Dundonald House; and what are the resulting reimbursed travel costs for these staff.

(AQW 45956/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Staff within Veterinary Service and the rest of the Department are not permitted to designate their headquarters to regional offices while they continue to travel to Dundonald House. Any decisions on where staff are headquartered are made and authorised by senior management taking account of factors such as the business need of the Department or to meet DDA or welfare adjustments.

All staff who travel on official business and comply with the terms and conditions of the Travel and Subsistence section of the NICS Staff Handbook are entitled to claim the appropriate expenses. DARD has a number of staff from other offices that are required to regularly attend meetings in Dundonald House. In such instances they are required to submit a claim which is assessed against the travel and subsistence guidelines before being approved by a more senior manager.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on any funding opportunities for farm modernisation and investment.

(AQW 45972/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The proposed Farm Business Improvement Scheme (FBIS) is an important part of the draft Rural Development Programme (RDP) 2014-2020 which was formally submitted to the European Commission on 14 October 2014. The proposed FBIS includes a package of measures aimed at knowledge transfer, innovation, cooperation and capital investment.

Since receiving the European Commission's observation letter on the draft RDP on 31 March 2015, my officials have been engaged in a process of negotiation with the Commission to address the comments raised and gain approval for our Programme as quickly as possible.

In parallel, my officials are continuing to work on the necessary business cases and the design of schemes so that we can start to open schemes once the necessary EU and business case approvals are in place.

The recent Whole Farm Needs Assessment survey exercise has offered farmers an opportunity to inform us of the barriers they face in meeting their business objectives and will provide very useful information to help my Department shape the FBIS to best meet their needs.

In rolling out the proposed FBIS, the early focus will be on making advice and support available to farmers to help them clearly identify their needs and make the right decisions about developing their business.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the steps her Department has recently taken to improve farm safety.

(AQW 46011/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Farm Safety is a cross cutting element of my Department's work. I am committed to the safety of our farmers.

My Department works as a member of the Farm Safety Partnership (FSP) which was formed in May 2012. The partners include representatives from the Health and Safety Executive (HSE), Ulster Farmers Union, Young Farmers Clubs of Ulster, National Farmers Union Mutual and NIAPA.

On 7th April, 2014, the FSP's second action plan was launched. It reflects, and seeks to build, on progress on the earlier Plan and the new aim is "to influence future behaviour so that farmers, their families and their employees are capable, motivated and able to work safely to reduce accidents on farms".

This year my Department has continued its support of the Farm safety Partnership. In June Monitoring, 2015/16, my Department transferred £90k to HSE as part of the ongoing commitment to the multimedia campaign of the FSP. This campaign is hard hitting and all indications are that it has been very successful in raising awareness in our farming community to the dangers on our farms.

As part of the 2014/2020 Rural Development Programme (RDP) officials are currently developing programmes under the Knowledge Transfer measure. Knowledge Transfer will incorporate Business Development Groups that will focus on Farm Safety as one of their discussion topics. In addition, through the Farm Family Skills component of the measure, officials are developing programmes that will focus on Farm Health and Safety.

My Department continues to maintain the FarmSafeNet on line training package. This package allows Farmers to go online and complete Farm Safety related training. On completion of the FarmSafeNet training participants are provided with a unique code that they can quote as evidence that they have completed the course. Since its launch in July 2014 over 950 farmers have completed the FarmSafeNet package.

Officials in my Department are working with colleagues in HSE to develop the Make It Safer tool. This is a tool that will allow farmers to assess the dangers on their individual farms and record actions to make their farms safer. It is hoped to launch this tool later this year.

My Department has also engaged with FSP colleagues via the Slurry Working Group. This group has been set up to look specifically at the dangers associated with slurry handling. The work of the group is ongoing.

In CAFRE Farm Safety is an integral part of all courses and training is provided to students and industry.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how her Department promoted the fact that musical bands were eligible to apply for equipment through the micro grant scheme.

(AQW 46060/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Rural Micro Capital Grant Programme opened for applications on 13 April 2015 and closed on 22 May 2015. The Programme is designed to provide financial support to rurally based community-led voluntary organisations to help improve or develop their facilities or assets which in turn will contribute to alleviating poverty or improving social inclusion within their local community. The Rural Support Networks (RSNs) have been engaged to promote and deliver the Micro Grants Programme on a sub-regional basis to ensure as wide a reach and impact as possible.

The Programme was promoted through printed media, social media and on the DARD and RSNs websites. All applicants were recommended to contact their local RSN to discuss the suitability of their project and were also provided with Guidance Notes that set out the eligibility criteria for the Programme. The Programme was open to application from a broad range of rural groups and did not involve targeting organisations involved in specific activities. The key message relayed through promotion of the Programme was the importance of funding projects that can strengthen community links, tackle poverty and reduce social isolation.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to list the grants and funding streams which her Department (i) has facilitated for applications in 2014/2015; and (ii) intend to open for applications in 2015/2016.

(AQW 45747/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): The information you request is set out in the attached schedules. I should point out that the North South Bodies operate on a calendar rather than a fiscal year basis.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether her Department's arm's-length bodies are included in the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

(AQW 45783/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Public Sector Transformation Fund comprising £700m over 4 years, is designed to enable NICS departments and arm's length bodies (ALBs) to resource the various staff reduction schemes across the public sector. The Stormont House Agreement states that the fund is available for voluntary exit schemes (VES) across the public sector.

NICS employees, below Permanent Secretary (and analogous) grade were eligible to apply for exit under an NICS-wide VES which was launched on 2 March 2015.

Staff in the wider public sector, including my Department's ALBs, were not eligible to apply for exit under the NICS Scheme launched on 2 March. ALBs were however invited to implement their own VES and were eligible to apply for funding from the 15/16 Transformation Fund for the implementation of the scheme, in the same way in which the NICS-wide VES did.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the amount of funding made available through the City of Culture Legacy Fund.

Ms Ní Chuilín: Between January 2014 and March 2015, my Department invested a total of £6,037,273 in City of Culture Legacy projects to maintain momentum after 2013.

This is in addition to the funding allocated through the Arts Council / Derry City Council Legacy Fund which provides a mechanism for continued investment in the arts and cultural sector following the City of Culture year.

The total value of the fund is £900,000 to be spent over 3 years (2014-2017).

This fund has been completely allocated.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what her Department has done to increase the number of defibrillators within sports clubs and other public areas; and to train people to use defibrillators.

(AQW 46008/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department is fully aware of its role in supporting the provision of Automatic Emergency Defibrillators (AEDs) not just for the use of those participants who take part in culture, arts and leisure activities but for the wider community at accessible venues.

Whilst there is currently a renewed focus on this issue my Department has a record of AED provision to the community through its arms length bodies, sports governing bodies, through specific funding programmes and as part of the legacy from major sporting events.

In terms of AED provision in Sport, for example, the IFA has provided 75 Defibrillators to senior, intermediate and junior clubs as part of a Health Programme funded through DCAL Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion provisions. Similarly the GAA has so far achieved coverage of 80% of its clubs with AED provision. As a legacy from the 2013 World Police and Fire Games, Heartsine Technologies Inc. gifted 45 defibrillators for distribution to local schools.

My Department is aiming to add to the provisions already made and currently Libraries NI is currently deploying 40 AEDs to its busiest Library locations. In addition, Sport NI has undertaken to carry out a 'mapping' exercise of AED provision across the sports sector. My Department will continue working to ensure that DCAL buildings and its ALBs sites have AED provision and trained volunteers.

My Department recognises the imperative of ensuring that there is appropriate training associated with each AED for those volunteers willing to be trained and willing to act in the event of a cardiac incident. The examples given above have all included relevant training for example GAA has an average of 6 trained volunteers for each AED and Libraries NI is training two staff for each of its AEDs.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what consideration has been given to extending the provision of classes in British sign language.

(AQW 46044/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Responsibility to provide free sign language classes cuts across a number of Departments.

Provision of British and Irish Sign Languages can be an effective early intervention for Deaf children and a rehabilitative action for people with acquired deafness to tackle the social isolation that frequently accompanies deafness. Health and social care, education and further and higher education therefore have a central role to play.

Although there is a clear distinction between my Department's remit to promote British and Irish Sign Languages as indigenous languages and the provision of free sign language classes for Deaf individuals and their families, I support their right to access free classes. My Department has funded various levels of BSL classes and continues to fund BSL Levels 1 and 2 for parents of Deaf children.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether she is preparing a bid for funding for the Confederation of Ulster Bands in the June monitoring round.

(AQW 46073/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am not preparing a bid for funding for the Confederation of Ulster Bands in the June monitoring round. However I will be submitting a bid for the Musical Instruments for Bands Scheme.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for her assessment of creative incubation spaces for business retail and exhibition; and whether she has any plans to develop such a space in East Londonderry.

(AQW 46074/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As the Government lead for the development of the Creative Industries I am aware of the importance of providing small local businesses in the sector with opportunities to develop.

The Department for Social Development has supported the North West Social Enterprise Hub in Derry which is working with a number of emerging social enterprises, including some in the creative sector. These include an art collective "The Social Study and Gallery" whose main focus is on contemporary art and defining photography. This collective has been provided with retail test trading incubation premises as part of the social enterprise hub programme.

The North Western hub is also currently providing mentoring and incubation space to two further creative social enterprise businesses; Culture Craft, whose business focuses on combining contemporary art and metal work, and Urban Visuals, whose social enterprise focuses on contemporary street art.

The Western Hub based in Strabane is currently working with a newly established craft collective that are trading from the test retail unit based at the hub. DCAL have also supported this project.

Through the North West Socio Economic Development Programme, a number of cultural hubs received funding to purchase high tech equipment and software. These included hubs in Coleraine, Portstewart and Limavady such as the Ballysally Youth and Community Centre, Flowerfield and the Glens Community Association. These hubs can provide a centre of gravity for localised and joined up approaches to cultural-led community engagement, growing the creative industries and wider economic and social development.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what innovative actions, and with what effect, have been taken by her Department since the introduction of the Autism Strategy.

(AQW 46116/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department supports the Autism Strategy through our commitment to establishing activity programmes that raise participation levels of people with autism through cultural, arts and leisure activities. My Department is also committed to raising awareness amongst staff and our service providers on the needs of people with autism, their families and carers. A wide range of initiatives and activities delivered by my Department and its Arms Length Bodies have contributed to the delivery of the Autism Strategy. These have included:-

- Sport NI providing funding of £6,261 to Autism Initiatives NI under the Active Awards for Sport Programme to provide Balance-ability training for two staff to deliver a 'Learn to Cycle' Programme for children under 16 years who have a diagnosis of Autism Spectrum Disorder (ASD). The Project delivered 3 programmes for a total of 90 children in 3 areas of the north of Ireland. This involved 44 participants. In the current round of Active Awards for Sport, Sport NI are assessing a further projects including an application from Autism Initiatives NI to develop and deliver autism specific swimming lessons for children.
- DCAL's Inland Fisheries Group has established a Community Outreach Team to increase participation in angling either directly or through Angling First Ltd. Inland Fisheries Group has provided £10k to Angling First Ltd to support the use of angling to address a range of issues including Autism. Groups reached so far include St Joseph Boys PS, Down Residential Project, Larchwood Care, Spring Meadows, Mountfern Adult Centre and Extern Fermanagh/Enniskillen.
- The Arts Council support the Drake Music Project which facilitates access to independent music making for children and adults with complex disabilities. This year they will deliver music programmes which use state of the art technologies to those with visual impairment, physical disability, hearing impairment, autism, learning disabilities, dyspraxia and ADHD. The workshops provide support to the carers, parents, peers and siblings associated with target groups.
- Drake Music also delivers outreach workshops in schools and daycentres with partnership groups such as Brian Injury Matters, Headway, Cedar Foundation and both the South Eastern Health and Social Services Trust and the Western Health and Social Services Trust. This initiative has a target of 126 attendees per week over the course of the year and a target audience of 1080.
- Autism NI has been National Museums NI's 'Charity of the Year' for the last two years. During that period, National Museums has raised awareness of Autism Spectrum Disorder through a range of initiatives including a Children's Art Exhibition at the Ulster Museum, a light show at the Ulster Museum during Autism Awareness month, prominent display of Autism NI merchandise at all sites and providing complimentary family passes for distribution to Charity members. Representatives of Autism NI delivered training to front-of-house staff to enhance the visitor experience for people on the autism spectrum.
- Libraries NI has run Music Therapy and Read Aloud sessions across a range of age groups and across a number of libraries. There are a number of other examples of local libraries working with individuals who are on the autism spectrum, autism units in schools and adult groups either regularly or on a one-off basis.
- On 21 January 2015 Belfast Central Library hosted the launch of a strategic partnership with the Cedar Foundation's and its new signposting and information service for people with autism. The service operates weekly from Belfast Central Library and also from libraries in Derry, Omagh and Enniskillen.
- At Armagh Observatory two individuals with ASD benefit from therapeutic work-experience 3-4 hours per week providing personal development such as improved communication and computer skills with the support of a job coach provided by Mencap. Armagh Planetarium offers free visits to all forty special schools in the north of Ireland. To date, twenty three schools have accepted the invitation, benefitting 447 children including those with autism.

To continue to raise awareness of autism, my Department has promoted World Autism Awareness Day on 2nd April 2015, by issuing an Autism Factsheet across the Department including all its ALBs.

My Department will continue to make a significant contribution to deliver the Autism Strategy and developments taking place across the north of Ireland with a view to identifying opportunities for further engagement and provision.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the Strategy for Culture and Arts.

(AQW 46140/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I am developing an Arts and Culture strategy to ensure recognition is given to the value that arts and culture has in enriching the lives of individuals, building the capacity of our communities, growing our economy and creating a more inclusive society.

I believe that arts and culture deserve a central place in society given their importance in contributing to positive health and well being and developing skills and confidence on an individual level. Arts and culture are also an inspirational driver for the creative industries, artistic excellence and make a significant contribution to creating a cohesive society and promoting tourism.

My vision for the strategy is that it is fully inclusive. It is vitally important that all stakeholders including arts groups, communities and individuals play an active part in the creative development of the strategy.

A Ministerial Arts Advisory Forum and Inter Departmental Steering Group have been set up to help inform the development of the Strategy and co-design events are taking place with stakeholders. The broad themes of the Strategy will be developed through this co-design phase leading to a public consultation starting in early summer 2015.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what bids she is planning for the June monitoring round to help alleviate the impact of departmental cuts to the arts sector.

(AQW 46141/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I plan to submit a number of composite bids in resource and capital in June Monitoring to help alleviate the impact of the Executive's cuts to the arts and other sectors within my remit.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the travel and subsistence costs incurred by her Department on trips outside Northern Ireland in each year since May 2011, broken down by the costs incurred by (i) the Minister; (ii) special advisers; and (iii) support staff.

(AQW 46156/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The information you have requested is provided in the table below.

Year	Travel And Subsistence Costs (£)
	Minister	Special Advisers	Support Staff
2011-12 (from May 2011)	3,247	0	6,147
2012-13	1,598	0	2,539
2013-14	244	0	294
2014-15	1,525	0	1,839

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail every ministerial direction issued by her Department since May 2007 including the (i) date; and (ii) the nature of each.

(AQW 46274/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department has not issued any Ministerial directions since May 2007.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the criteria for qualifying for a grant under the Department's tackling poverty initiative ; and what geographical criteria or restrictions apply to applications.

(AQW 46285/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: All of the activity supported by my Department is focussed on the Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion (PETPSE) agenda, aimed at improving the lives of those most in need. This includes the activity undertaken directly by the Department as well that of our Arm's Length Bodies.

There is no specific grant scheme administered by my Department in relation to PETPSE as this agenda underpins all departmental activity and is the central driving force to DCAL's core functions.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what is the 2015-16 budget for her Department's tackling poverty initiative and how much of this is capital funding.

(AQW 46286/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: All of the activity supported by my Department is focussed on the Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion (PETPSE) agenda, aimed at improving the lives of those most in need. This includes the activity undertaken directly by the Department as well that of our Arm's Length Bodies.

There is no specific grant scheme administered by my Department in relation to PETPSE as this agenda underpins all departmental activity and is the central driving force to DCAL's core functions.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure whether there is a closing date for applications for 2015-16 under the tackling poverty initiative.

(AQW 46287/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: All of the activity supported by my Department is focussed on the Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion (PETPSE) agenda, aimed at improving the lives of those most in need. There is no specific grant scheme administered by my Department in relation to PETPSE as this agenda underpins all departmental activity and is the central driving force to DCAL's core functions.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how much funding has been allocated through the Musical Instruments for Bands scheme in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46291/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Arts Council has awarded the following funding to the Musical Instruments for Bands Scheme in each of the last three years.

2012/13	£202,691
2013/14	£196,874
2014/15	£104,415

An allocation of £200,000 was made available to the Arts Council in 2014-2015. An amount of £104,415 was awarded due to a reduction in the number and quality of applications in that year.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline what assistance and advice her Department will give to bands given funding to the Musical Instruments for Bands scheme has been put on hold.

(AQW 46292/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Alternative funding sources for bands would be through the Arts Council's lottery funded Small Grants Programme and Equipment Programme which cover funding for equipment and tuition.

In addition, some individual musicians may qualify for an interest free loan for the purposes of purchasing their own musical instruments through the Arts Council's 'Take it away' scheme.

Bands can also apply for support from the Ulster-Scots Agency through its Music and Dance Tuition Programme, although this is not for the purposes of purchasing instruments.

A number of years ago my Department commissioned research into marching bands in the North of Ireland and the final study document is available on the Department's website. The accompanying guidance note, which can be found at the web address provided below, offers advice on fundraising which bands may find useful.

www.dcalni.gov.uk/marching_bands_in_northern_ireland_guidance_notes.pdf

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how much funding bands have received through the Arts Council's lottery funded Small Grants Programme and Equipment Programme in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46293/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Details of the funding provided to bands through the Arts Council's lottery funded Small Grants Programme in each of the last three years is provided below.

2012/13	£10,800
2013/14	£7,790
2014/15	£12,584

No grants were made to bands under the Arts Council's Equipment programme.

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the opening hours of every library in Mid Ulster for each of the last three years.

(AQW 46384/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The opening hours for each library in Mid Ulster for each of the last three years are set out at Annex A.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what are the estimated annual savings resulting from the reduction in opening hours of public libraries.

(AQW 46521/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI has informed me that the estimated savings in 2015/16 resulting from the reduction in opening hours in its libraries is £1.581 million. Savings beyond this period are currently not available.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what her Department has done to increase the capability of groups in rural protestant areas to access funding for cultural activities.

(AQW 46596/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Funding disbursed by my Department, its ALBs and DCAL funding administered by the local Councils in the case of the Community Festivals Fund ("CFF") is open to all relevant groups regardless of location or religious background. Funding programmes are widely advertised, particularly digitally and allow equal access for all.

The Arts Council and Ulster-Scots Agency ("U-SA") also participate in funding roadshows to raise awareness of funding opportunities, a large proportion of which are likely to be in rural areas. Each year the Arts Council identifies any local authority areas which do not appear to be applying for or receiving grants, and prioritises these when delivering roadshows.

The Arts Council has built into its decision-making processes a range of mechanisms which aim to ensure the needs of rural communities are considered when developing new policy or programme interventions. This is reflected in its Five Year Plan which aims to increase the proportion of arts activities in rural areas by creating greater opportunities for marginalised rural communities to engage in the arts, particularly through participation based planning and in its proposed Community Arts Strategy which commits to working with rural stakeholders to promote greater access and take-up of programme funding.

With regard to the CFF, local authorities must provide advice and assistance to help build capacity in festival organisations, for example, through the provision of training.

With regard to the U-SA, it seeks to increase the capability of groups in rural areas through funding the operation of the Ulster-Scots Community Network. This is an umbrella body committed to representing the interests of Ulster-Scots groups by supporting them, helping them to build capacity and working with them to promote individual activities.

In addition, my Department provides opportunities for groups in rural areas to access cultural activities free of charge. For example, NI Screen's Digital Film Archive has prioritised outreach work which involves presentations and learning programmes on a wide variety of subjects and has particularly focussed on community groups in rural areas.

After School Film Clubs are exclusively set up in the most deprived and hard to reach areas and provide pupils and teachers with an opportunity to participate in free weekly screenings, film reviews and film-making.

The Creative Learning Centres deliver a range of free programmes and services that focus on marginalised and disadvantaged schools and communities. Key priorities include the extension of the programme of activities into rural areas and hard to reach groups not previously covered by the centres with specific key performance targets relating to schools in rural areas.

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much departmental funding has been allocated to the Northern Ireland Tug-of-War Association in 2013/14 and 2014/15.

(AQO 8271/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I can advise that in 2013/14, my Department provided a grant of ten thousand pounds to the Tug of War Association to deliver a schools and community Tug of War training and participation programme as part of the 2013 World Police and Fire Games legacy.

In addition, the Tug of War Association received three hundred and eighty pounds in 2014/15, through the DCAL funded Together: Building a United Community cross community youth sports programme pilot project.

Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, has not provided any funding to the Tug of War Association in the last two years. However, Sport NI's Anti-Doping Officer has been providing specialist support to the Association regarding the International Federation requirements for drug testing provision at the 2015 European Tug of War Championships.

Furthermore, the Anti-Doping Officer has also been providing educational support to the NI Team competitors and a Pure Winner Clean Sport Workshop has been delivered to the team as part of their preparation for the European Championships.

The Championships will be held in Belfast from 3rd to 6th September and provides another great opportunity for the north of Ireland to show that it can host very successful international sporting events.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the Gaeltacht Quarter, including the support her Department has provided for it.

(AQO 8272/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Since I launched the Gaeltacht Quarter Action Plan in October 2013, my department has provided a total of £758, 801 (seven hundred and fifty eight thousand, eight hundred and one pounds) to support the implementation of the Gaeltacht Quarter Action Plan.

This funding has supported a number of key capital projects, a programme to celebrate and promote the heritage of the Quarter and the Irish language locally and beyond and staff costs for three posts in Forbairt Feirste.

Some of the projects include:-

- the development of a Gaeltacht Quarter mobile 'APP' aimed at the promotion of tourism in the area – this is due to be launched this summer; and
- the construction and delivery of a handball alley at Colaiste Feirste in partnership with Belfast City Council and Sport NI. This project completed in March 2015.
- My officials are currently working with Belfast City Council and An Ciste Infheistíochta Gaeilge on a capital project to redevelop the Cumann Chluain Árd Irish language learning and community centre and a proposal for a new build radio broadcasting facility for Raidió Fáilte.

I am placing a list of all the projects funded in the Assembly Library for information.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to outline the sub-regional facilities for soccer, GAA and rugby.
(AQO 8273/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Executive endorsed an investment of circa £36m for Sub Regional Stadium Development for Football as a priority in the next CSR.

A Strategic Outline Case (SOC) has been prepared and submitted to DFP for approval. The SOC outlines a proposed two phased approach for the roll-out of the Sub Regional Stadium Programme. Phase One will focus on soccer and GAA, with a second stage to be taken forward in the future to encompass rugby sub regional facilities.

It is acknowledged that sub regional work will be required for rugby as well as further work at sub regional level for soccer and GAA. This will be a separate programme subject to its own appraisal process and subject to funding availability.

My Department has been developing the Sub Regional Programme for Soccer and have worked closely with the IFA to ensure that the programme is aligned to the IFA Facilities Strategy, while ensuring the NI Executive and DCAL's priorities have been fully incorporated within the programme.

It is envisaged that the Sub Regional Programme for Soccer will be formally launched in Autumn 2015 and step through the assessment process including various audits of need, competitions and business case planned for 2015/16 with capital delivery to be undertaken in the financial years 2016-2018.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the Strategic Action Plan for the Creative Industries in West Tyrone, including any future plans for collaboration with other Departments.

(AQO 8274/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department is the lead within government for the development of the creative industries and has achieved a great deal to aid this fast growing sector across the North, including in West Tyrone.

The Creative Industries Innovation Fund operated from 2009 to 2015, supported nine projects in West Tyrone, with a total investment of more than £120,000.

In addition, in 2014/15 the North West Socio Economic Development Programme provided funding for a number of organisations in West Tyrone including the Churchtown Community Association in Castlederg, Strabane Ethnic Community Association and Sion Stables in Sion Mills.

I have set up a Ministerial Action Group on the Creative Industries which includes my Ministerial colleagues in Education, Employment & Learning and Enterprise, Trade & Investment. The inaugural meeting of this group took place in September 2014.

The purpose of the group is to provide a forum for stakeholders in the Creative Industries to engage with Government, to tackle barriers to supporting the growth of the sector and to provide the creative industries with a collective voice to highlight how the creative and cultural industries can support economic growth and wider social change.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when she was first made aware of safety concerns regarding the Casement Park Stadium Project.

Ms Ní Chuilín: I was aware that a project of this nature would have important public safety aspects to be considered throughout the development process.

I was aware that Safety Technical Group (STG) which established by Sport NI at the request of my Department was involved in discussions about safety – that was the purpose of the group from the beginning.

At no time was I aware of the allegations that safety concerns had been ignored and that the dialogue had broken down between the STG and the Department.

I was shocked to hear the concerns raised by the Chair of the STG on 30th April 2015 in relation to the proposed design of the redeveloped Casement Park and associated public safety requirement.

I am totally committed to delivering a first class modern stadium at Casement that meets the highest standards and I am determined that there will be no compromise on safety.

I have commissioned an independent Project Assessment Review to look at the technical issues associated with the programme and Casement Park in particular.

Dr McDonnell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on the provision of automated external defibrillators in buildings occupied by her Department and its arm's-length bodies.

(AQO 8276/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Department has a record of defibrillator provision through its arm's length bodies, sports governing bodies, funding programmes and as part of the legacy from major sporting events. My Department also recognises the importance of the associated training in using these devices.

Libraries NI is currently deploying forty defibrillators to its busiest Library locations. Other ALB buildings that hold defibrillators are Armagh Observatory, The AmmA Centre (NI Screen's multimedia creative learning centre), Waterways Ireland HQ in Enniskillen, the HQ of Outdoor Recreation NI and the Sports Institute.

National Museums has four defibrillators for use across its sites. For events which attract large audiences it engages first aiders from the Red Cross or St John's Ambulance Service ensuring that defibrillators are available.

Sport NI and Foras na Gaeilge have undergone a procurement exercise for the supply of defibrillators at locations including the House of Sport, Tollymore National Outdoor Centre and Foras na Gaeilge venues in Belfast.

The GAA reports that 80% of its clubs now have defibrillators. In addition, the IFA has provided seventy-five defibrillators through DCAL Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion through Sport Programme. As a legacy from the 2013 World Police and Fire Games, Heartsine Technologies Inc. gifted 45 defibrillators for distribution to local schools.

The provision of defibrillators in NICS buildings, including DCAL buildings, is currently under consideration. We are awaiting the outcome of a study by the Community Resuscitation Working Group / NI Ambulance Service on the way forward for the NI Civil Service and will comply with its findings.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how she will ensure that departmental officials engage with angling clubs to both plan for future work on rivers and enhance the sport of angling.

Ms Ní Chuilín: My Departmental officials are well aware of the importance of engaging with angling clubs as they are key stakeholders on river improvement works and the future development and promotion of the sport of angling.

Officials are keen to meet with angling clubs and can advise on the development of an action plan for the river concerned, local issues impacting on the river and proposed works to improve the situation.

My Department already informs angling clubs of proposed in-river works to be undertaken by government departments and agencies on waters under club control to ensure the protection of fisheries habitats. We are also seeking ways to involve angling club members in monitoring the water quality of their own waters.

My staff have also been directly involved on a number of fisheries habitat improvement projects on a number of rivers working along with the local angling club. My Department works with angling clubs in supportive breeding programmes for enhancing fish stocks.

Over the past year the Department has been engaging with angling clubs on the development of a Fishery Management Plan for Lough Neagh and its tributaries. A major consultation event on this was held in the Ecos Centre, Ballymena in June last year, with a significant number of local angling clubs in attendance.

My Department's Chief Fisheries Officer chairs the NI Angling Forum, which was established following the Strategic Review of Angling. The governing bodies of the different angling disciplines are represented on the Forum, together with Sport NI and the recently appointed Angling Development officer. The NI Angling Forum has an important role to play in the promotion and development of angling in the North. The angling development officer will assist angling clubs to develop the sport of angling and increase their membership.

Officials are continuing to develop an Angling Outreach Programme, which encourages angling clubs to become more involved and active in their local communities. A major part of this is encouraging children and young people, particularly those from disadvantaged backgrounds, to have a first experience of angling and it has been very successful to date with over 1100 new anglers in 2014. Participants at such events can learn new skills and continued involvement in angling can provide health and well being benefits for individuals and is a positive alternative to anti-social activities. The outreach programme can also enhance club membership, increase the community value of fisheries and improve awareness of environmental issues.

My staff help to develop good relationships between angling clubs and the communities they are based in by encouraging access to fisheries not only for angling but for other recreational uses such as walking and bird watching to maximise the use of these community assets.

My staff have introduced a policy whereby any angling club wishing to manage a Public Angling Estate Fishery will be required to engage with the local community to meet PETFSE targets.

Department of Education

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to provide details, for each Education and Library Board, on (i) the number of children that applied for nursery (ii) the number of children that were not allocated their first preference place at nursery last year and (iii) the number of additional nursery school places which were created this year to meet the demand.

(AQW 45844/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education):

- (i) A total of 23,452 applications were received for a pre-school place in the 2014/15 academic year.
- (ii) Of the 23,215 applications received during Stage 1 of the admissions process, 3,210 did not obtain a place in their first preference setting. This information is not recorded for those applications received at Stage 2 or late in the admissions process.

For 2014/15 admissions 99.9% of children whose parents engaged with the admissions process to the end obtained a funded pre-school place.

- (iii) The table below breaks down the information at (i) & (ii) by each region of the Education Authority:

Region	Total Applications 2014/15	Stage 1 Applications 2014/15	Not placed in 1st Preference 2014/15	Additional Places* 2015/16
Belfast	3723	3713	516	28
Western	3954	3904	517	68
North Eastern	5055	4973	525	21
South Eastern	5074	5024	810	70
Southern	5646	5601	842	73
Total	23452	23215	3210	260

* includes places created following approval of development proposals and additional places approved under the Department's Temporary Flexibility arrangements for 2015/16.

Each region of the Education Authority also allocates additional places to settings in the voluntary/private sector to meet demand as the admissions process progresses. The total number of additional places allocated to the voluntary/private sector for 2015/16 will not, therefore, be known until the start of the new academic year when all requests for places will have been met.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to provide details for this year and last year on (i) the total number of children with first preferences for each nursery in the Belfast Education and Library Board; (ii) the total number of children with first preferences for each nursery in the Southern Education and Library Board; and (iii) the total number of available places in each nursery in the Belfast Education and Library Board and Southern Education and Library Board.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many applicants for primary one places failed to receive a placement in stage one for 2015/16, broken down by constituency.

Mr O'Dowd: Over 24,000 applications were dealt with during the primary admissions process.

There were 80 children who were unplaced at the close of the primary admissions process on 29 April 2015. The constituency for these children is based on their home address.

The breakdown by constituency is set out in the following table (Constituency data for applicants not admitted to first preference school is based on the location of the school):

The Regional Offices of the Education Authority will continue to work with parents to ensure that all children are placed in a suitable school.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how many sign language interpreters have been provided for deaf pupils in local schools in each of the last five years.

(AQW 46053/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that the number of sign language interpreters provided for deaf pupils in each of the last five financial years is as follows:

- 2010/11 - 3
- 2011/12 - 2
- 2012/13 - 3
- 2013/14 - 3
- 2014/15 - 5

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether a parent is obliged to inform a primary school of a change of circumstances in the weeks following an application which would mean their child no longer meets the entrance requirements.

(AQW 46106/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Where a school is oversubscribed with applications it is required to rank the applicants based on the school's published admissions criteria in order to distinguish which children it can accept to the last available place. Places are allocated based on the information provided by the parent/guardian on the child's application form.

The Board of Governors has a duty to verify "qualifying information" contained within applications to its school if, at the point of applying the admissions criteria, it has "general knowledge or belief" of a problem with false information within applications. The duty to verify is established at the point where a school applies its admissions criteria. Parents are provided the opportunity to update application information during the application process, however there is no legal duty to do so. It is a matter for the school's Board of Governors to decide how to treat applications from children whose addresses changed post application.

The Board of Governors, as the admissions authority within the Open Enrolment process, is responsible for setting the admissions criteria that will be used to determine which pupils to admit. The Department plays no role in the setting of these criteria. The Department, however, provides guidance on the duty of a Board of Governors to verify application information by way of a Circular issued to all schools. This information can be found on the Departmental website at www.deni.gov.uk Circular 2013/24 'Guidance on a School's Duty to Verify Application Information'.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether a primary school can approve and then revoke a child's admission to the school if the child moved address post application, and no longer qualifies on the basis of distance.

(AQW 46108/11-15)

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether any guidance is given to primary schools when making admission decisions based on distance from the school, as to whether they should use an address given at the time of application, or an address at the time of decision if the applicant has subsequently moved.

(AQW 46112/11-15)

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to detail the travel and subsistence costs incurred by his Department on trips outside Northern Ireland in each year since May 2011, broken down by the costs incurred by (i) the Minister; (ii) special advisers; and (iii) support staff.

(AQW 46123/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The travel and subsistence costs incurred by the Department of Education on trips outside the north of Ireland in each year since May 2011, broken down by the costs incurred by (i) the Minister; (ii) special advisers; and (iii) support staff are detailed in the table below.

Financial year*	2011-12 £'000	2012-13 £'000	2013-14 £'000	2014-15 £'000
Minister	Nil	2	7	2
Special Advisor	Nil	1	6	-
Support Staff	Nil	2	3	1
Total	Nil	5	16	3

* Financial years have been reported since May 2011.

 Based on draft 2014-15 accounts, subject to audit.

Ministerial car fuel costs are not included in this answer as the cost associated with travel outside the north of Ireland cannot be identified.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 44685/11-15, to outline when this matter will be resolved.

(AQW 46133/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Staff in the Department and the Education Authority (EA) are working together to finalise the Education Authority (EA) pay remit business case as quickly as possible. Once finalised, it will be submitted to the Department of Finance and Personnel for its consideration, in accordance with the Executive's Public Sector Pay Policy.

Once the necessary approval is secured, the EA will undertake a two stage process to ensure eligible staff receive their pay rise. The first requires the processing of changes in basic pay, arising from any associated uplift (i.e. pay award and/or incremental progression for eligible staff) before the subsequent determination and payment of any associated pay arrears. This can take up to four months to complete, from the date of securing the necessary approval.

All staff will receive what is due to them, backdated to January 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Education what criteria is applied in Fermanagh to the schools that have applied for access to the Extended Schools Programme.

(AQW 46142/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Extended Schools programme is targeted at those schools serving the most socially disadvantaged communities. The programme is not subject to an application process; rather Extended Schools funding is made available to schools which meet set eligibility criteria which are indicators of disadvantage.

The current criteria, based on information from the Multiple Deprivation Measure (NIMDM 2010), apply equally across all schools and state that a school must have the following in order to qualify for Extended Schools funding:

- 51% or more of pupils drawn from a Neighbourhood Renewal Area or the 30% most disadvantaged wards/super output areas (using both the MDM and Education Domain); and/or
- 37% or more of pupils with a Free School Meal Entitlement or, in the case of Nursery Schools, pupils with parents in receipt of Jobseeker's Allowance at or above 37%.

Schools entitled to Extended Schools funding are identified by my Department via the data submitted by individual schools as part of the annual School Census exercise.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to list the non-statutory projects which CCEA progressed during 2014/15. (AQW 46159/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am informed by CCEA that in 2014/15 it spent £2,212,065 on non-statutory projects (based on CCEA's draft accounts for 2014/15 and may change during the finalisation of the year-end accounts process). Non-statutory projects may support statutory activity in the education sector and CCEA conducted the following in 2014/15;

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how much CCEA spent on hospitality in 2014/15; and to detail the savings anticipated in this budget area in 2015/16.

(AQW 46161/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am informed by CCEA that its hospitality spend in 2014/15 is £339,425. This figure is based on draft 2014/15 accounts which are still subject to audit completion. They are in line with the Department's definition of hospitality which is based on guidance provided by the Department of Finance and Personnel. Expenditure on hospitality includes refreshments for committees, meetings, training courses, conferences, etc. CCEA has an initial saving plan in place for 2015/16 and anticipates a reduction in expenditure in this area of £157,000.

CCEA holds a significant number of events and meetings in support of examinations, curriculum and assessment (in excess of 4,000 annually). These include training provided for teachers and meetings relating to the conduct of examinations. The number of events held is dependent on activity.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education how much CCEA spent on the printing and distribution of print resources in 2014/15; and to outline the anticipated savings that will result from utilising digital formats on 2015/16.

Mr O'Dowd: I am informed by CCEA that in 2014/15, it spent £1,752,229 on printing and distribution costs. The figure provided includes CCEA's total print costs, total courier costs and total postage costs including the printing and distribution of examinations papers and assessment material. The 2014/15 figure detailed is based on CCEA's draft accounts for 2014/15 and may change during the finalisation of the year-end accounts process.

CCEA's initial saving plan anticipates a reduction in expenditure of £157,000 in 2015/16 through the reductions in printing, distribution and postage. The plan will remain under constant review throughout the year.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Education to list the school bus routes that are paid for on a daily basis where the journey is less than 2 miles; and to detail the annual cost of providing such services.

(AQW 46165/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority informs me that all school bus routes operated within the Education Authority are over 2 miles. Consequently the annual costs for providing services within the category of under 2 miles is Nil.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the funding committed by his Department for (i) shared campus projects; (ii) shared education projects.

(AQW 46170/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Shared Education Signature Project is a £25m project, jointly funded by Office of First Minister and deputy First Minister (OFMdFM), Atlantic Philanthropies (AP) and Department of Education (DE). DE have committed £5m for the period up to June 2018.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education when the Strategic Review of Integrated Education will commence.
(AQW 46171/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am currently considering the advantages and disadvantages of a number of potential options for a future review of integrated education.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to outline the differences between an area plan and a strategic review of an area.
(AQW 46172/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The current area plans determine the future educational needs and requirements of pupils by the former Education and Library Board area, covering all school sectors. They are living documents that can be amended, enhanced and refined over time to adjust to changing needs and circumstances.

Following decisions I made on Development Proposals for Portadown Integrated and Clintyclay Primary Schools, I commissioned NICIE, CCMS and the former Southern Education and Library Board to carry out strategic reviews to determine the need for additional integrated places in both the Craigavon and Dungannon areas. I would expect the strategic reviews to have agreed terms of reference, scope, action plans with associated timescales for completion and detailed analysis and evaluation of where the actual demand from parents for integrated education is located. This would culminate in a report detailing the outcomes of the review along with options and recommendations for the way forward. These findings will help inform the relevant area plan and underpin the proposals for change highlighted in it.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Education what procedures are in place to ensure that schools which have been placed in formal intervention are provided with the required resources and support.
(AQW 46176/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The procedures relating to the Formal Intervention Process are set out in Annex C of Every School a Good School – A Policy For School Improvement and can be accessed via the following link:

http://www.deni.gov.uk/esags_policy_for_school_improvement_-_final_version_05-05-2009.pdf

In summary, when a school enters the Formal Intervention Process it is the responsibility of the school's Board of Governors to prepare and implement an action plan to address the areas for improvement identified by the Education and Training Inspectorate (ETI). In taking this work forward the school will be supported by the Education Authority and, in the case of catholic maintained schools, the CCMS.

The action plan will identify the support and resources required to address the areas for improvement. The Education Authority will provide guidance and support through its regional Curriculum Advisory Support Service (CASS). The Education Authority is also required to ensure that it is content that the actions proposed are capable of addressing effectively the areas for improvement.

The school's action plan is quality-assured by the ETI and the school's progress in addressing the areas for improvement identified in the inspection is monitored and reported on by the ETI.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education how his Department is working with officials in the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development to support and promote youth work in rural areas.
(AQW 46179/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development is a member of the stakeholder Regional Advisory Group, which has provided advice to the Education Authority and the Youth Council which has helped to inform the development of the 2015-16 Regional Youth Development Plan.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education whether his Department will update Priorities for Youth: Improving young people's lives through youth work, to compliment the new Education Authority.
(AQW 46180/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Schedule 2 (Paragraph 4) of the Education Act provides that any reference to a dissolved body in any statutory provision or document shall, from 1 April 2015, be construed as a reference to the Education Authority. This means that the Department does not need to make large numbers of amendments to regulations or documents merely to substitute references to the ELBs or Staff Commission with references to the Education Authority.

Priorities for Youth is currently being implemented, by the Education Authority and the Youth Council, collaboratively as appropriate, through a phased approach with full implementation expected by the end of 2016.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education how his Department is promoting and supporting youth work in rural areas, to reflect the aims and objectives of Priorities for Youth: Improving young people's lives through youth work.
(AQW 46181/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Priorities for Youth states that targeted youth provision will be supported to meet the needs of young people living in rural isolation as they may be at greater risk of social inclusion, marginalisation or isolation because they experience a combination of barriers to learning.

The future planning, funding and delivery of youth work will be based on composite assessment of local and regional need by the Education Authority and the Youth Council. A Regional Youth Development Plan for 2015-16, informed through stakeholder engagement in the form of the Regional Advisory Group, has been developed to address the Department's priorities in the regional and local context.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to outline the changes proposed by CCEA regarding invigilating examinations during 2015/16; and to detail the implications for schools.

(AQW 46185/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am informed that CCEA has issued a communication to schools stating that it plans to make changes to the invigilation of examinations for the January 2016 series. The communication also seeks the views of schools on options for the future of the invigilation service.

CCEA expects to finalise its plans on invigilation by September this year.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what coordination is taking place between his Department and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to ensure early intervention and help for parents of deaf children.

(AQW 46188/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I remain committed to the close collaboration between the Education and Health sectors, and other Departments, in supporting pupils with special educational needs, including those with a hearing loss.

As an example of coordination between the sectors to help ensure early intervention, The Education (NI) Order 1996, Article 14, places a duty on Health and Social Care Trusts (HSCTS) to inform the Education Authority, after consulting with the parent, that a child who has not attained the lower limit of compulsory school age has, or probably has, special educational needs (SEN). In addition, if the EA is to undertake a statutory assessment, it will seek the advice of the HSCT's in relation to children with a hearing loss.

To further facilitate intervention as early as possible close liaison is maintained at all times with all relevant parties, including Health professionals and parents, to ensure that an appropriate network of support is available as soon as possible following diagnosis by Health professionals, tailored to the individual needs of each child.

Once a child with hearing loss has been brought to the attention of the Education Authority, which may be through the New Born Hearing Screening Programme, specific support services will be provided by Qualified Teachers of the Deaf and other support staff for children and parents. Support for parents may include:

- Support to assist them in adjusting to deafness in a child;
- Provision of information on the nature and impact of deafness;
- Provision of information to inform their decision making about communication approaches and education options;
- Advice regarding the effective use and maintenance of hearing aids/cochlear implants at home;
- Co-ordinating and facilitating contact with other families with deaf children, professionals and voluntary organisations.

My Department will continue to work closely with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and other key Departments/Agencies to ensure that joined up working is effective for those children and young people with hearing loss who rely on the services of more than one sector.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what provision is in place, or being considered, to provide sign language training for the parents of deaf children.

(AQW 46189/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that while it facilitates limited training for parents of deaf children through the National Deaf Children's Society, its priority has been and will continue to be provision of direct support to children and young people with hearing loss.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education how many fines were issued to parents, or prosecutions taken forward, in each of the previous Education and Library Boards for truancy, in each year from 2007.

(AQW 46207/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department does not use the term truancy. Absence is classed as either authorised or unauthorised.

When a referral for absence is accepted by the Education Welfare Service the Education Welfare Officer will try to work with the children, young people and their families to facilitate improved attendance and thereby improve educational outcomes. When parents/carers refuse to engage with the service or continually hamper EWS engagement with them and their children, a decision may be made to progress the matter through the courts and a Parental Summons is sought. The parent/carer is then required to participate in the court process and commit to taking action to improve the child or young person's school attendance.

It would be important to note that parents are not prosecuted for a child/young person's absence from education. Rather parents are prosecuted for not co-operating with the Education Welfare Service who would want to support families who have been referred.

The Interim Chief Executive of the Education Authority has provided the information as follows:

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education for an update on discussions within his Department regarding the future criteria for eligibility for free school meals and any other passported benefits in advance of Welfare Reform.

(AQW 46208/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In advance of agreement of the Welfare Reform Bill in the Assembly, some preliminary consideration was given to the identification of potential options for determining eligibility for free school meals under Universal Credit. However, as no agreement has been reached to date on how Welfare Reform, including Universal Credit, will be implemented here, this work has not been progressed.

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Education, if a member of teaching staff has been reported for suspected substance abuse, to detail how tests are carried out by the Education Authority or his Department to discover whether illegal substances have been taken by the person under investigation.

(AQW 46250/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department does not employ teachers. This would be a matter for the Boards of Governors, as the employer, in conjunction with the relevant Employing Authority.

Employing authorities do not carry out tests on individuals to ascertain whether or not illegal substances have been taken. Their role is to provide appropriate advice, guidance and support in any case of suspected substance abuse.

The appropriate procedure for dealing with substance abuse is contained in the link below to the document TNC 2005/5, Alcohol and Drug Misuse Policy and Procedures for Teachers in Grant Aided Schools.

http://www.deni.gov.uk/alcohol_and_drug_misuse_policy_2005_5.pdf

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the percentage of primary school pupils in North Down that receive free school meals; and how this compares with the Northern Ireland average.

(AQW 46273/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In 2014/15, the proportion of primary school pupils resident in North Down entitled to free school meals is 21.5%. This compares to 31.7% in Northern Ireland overall.

These figures include pupils in nursery, reception and year 1-7 classes. Free school meal entitlement includes nursery unit pupils that are in receipt of Income Support (IM) or income-based Jobseekers Allowance (JSA). These are two of the benefits which determine eligibility for free school meals.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education how many children have received statements of Special Educational Needs in each of the last five years, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 46304/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: This information is not held by constituency. The Education Authority has advised that the number of children who received statements of special educational needs, broken down by region, was as follows:

April 2010 – March 2011

Belfast	389
North Eastern	296
South Eastern	368
Southern	327

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Education how many children requiring statements of Special Educational Needs have had previous statements from other UK jurisdictions, in each of the last five years, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 46305/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that four of the five regions do not hold this information.

The South Eastern region does not hold this information by constituency but has advised that the number of children who received statements in the north of Ireland who had previous statements in England, Scotland or Wales was as follows:

- 1 April 2010 – 31 March 2011 - 6
- 1 April 2011 – 31 March 2012 - 5
- 1 April 2012 – 31 March 2013 - 5
- 1 April 2013 – 31 March 2014 - *
- 1 April 2014 – 31 March 2015 - *

*denotes fewer than 5 pupils suppressed due to potential identification of individual pupils.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the amount of funding provided per child when temporary flexibility is applied in a pre-school playgroup or nursery setting; and (ii) if the 8:1 and 13:1 staff to pupil ratio is waived when temporary flexibility places are allocated.

(AQW 46338/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: 'Learning to Learn – A Framework for Early Years Education and Learning' introduced temporary flexibility in class size for nursery schools and nursery units up to a maximum class size of 30. It is designed to allow some flexibility, per class, where the school request it, and the relevant Pre-School Education Advisory Group (PEAG) recommends it. The maximum class size will otherwise remain at 26 and the approved class size will return to 26 at the end of the school year.

Temporary flexibility is not available to non-statutory pre-school education providers. Where places are allocated in non-statutory settings by the relevant PEAG as part of the Pre-School Education Programme, settings must meet the conditions of funding for the Programme, including the need to maintain a staff to pupil ratio of 1:8 as required by their registration with the Health and Social Care Trusts under the Children (NI) Order 1995.

DE issued guidance on temporary flexibility to schools in January 2015, which made it clear that:

- Temporary flexibility will only be approved to address a shortage of pre-school places for target age children within an area which cannot be met by any other pre-school provider in the Pre-School Education Programme;
- The flexibility is not designed to enable schools to admit additional pupils whose circumstances the Board of Governors did not sufficiently prioritise within the admission criteria in the first instance, or solely to meet parental preference for one setting; and
- A school requesting temporary flexibility must confirm that its premises and staffing structure can support the increase and maintain a staffing ratio of 1:13 adults to children and that the school can operate in line with the funding arrangements.

Approved additional places are funded on an equivalent per pupil basis in the next financial year. All pupil count and other funding arrangements, as outlined in the Common Funding Scheme, apply to the temporarily increased enrolment number for the school.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to outline the difference between a planning authority and a management authority.

(AQW 46352/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) and the Council for Catholic Maintained Schools (CCMS) are planning authorities.

The EA has a significant, overarching role to co-ordinate the planning relating to all publicly funded schools regardless of management type. Article 6(1) of The Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986 (the 1986 Order) places a statutory duty on the EA to "... secure that there are available in its area sufficient schools for providing primary and secondary education and the schools available for an area shall not be deemed to be sufficient unless they are sufficient in number, character and equipment to afford for all pupils opportunity for education offering such variety of instruction and training as may be desirable in view of their different ages, abilities and aptitudes, and of the different periods for which they may be expected to remain at school ..."

Article 142(1)(b) of The Education Reform (NI) Order 1989 places a statutory duty on CCMS to "promote and co-ordinate, in consultation with the Trustees of Catholic maintained schools, the planning of the effective provision of Catholic maintained schools". The plans drawn up by CCMS are factored into the overall planning co-ordinated by the EA.

The EA is the managing authority for controlled schools. Article 7 of the 1986 Order provides that the Authority "...may provide primary, secondary and special schools within its area and shall maintain and manage any such school ...".

The managing authority for a voluntary school (Catholic maintained, denominational or non-denominational) or a grant-maintained integrated school is the Board of Governors, and for an Independent school is the proprietor. Under Article 142(1)(c) of the 1989 Order, CCMS has a duty to "promote the effective management and control of Catholic maintained schools by the Boards of Governors of such schools".

The managing authority will deal with the day to day running of the relevant school and in some cases, will also be the employing authority.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Education to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by his Department in Foyle in 2013/14; and the cost of each project.

(AQW 46368/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: A total of four Major Capital Works Projects in the Foyle constituency were announced to be taken forward in planning in June 2012 and January 2013 and work was ongoing to progress these in 2013/14.

■ Eglinton Primary School	£2.6m
■ Ardnashee School and College	£7.4m
■ Foyle College and Ebrington Primary School	£31.45m
■ Craigback/Mullabuoy/Listress Primary Schools	£2m

Three School Enhancement Projects in the Foyle constituency were approved for funding in March 2014.

■ St Columb's College	£2.669m
■ Newbuildings PS	£1.923m
■ Broadbridge PS	£2.63m

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education for an update on the Atlantic Philanthropies Shared Education programme; and whether funding will be made available for the Together: Building a United Community commitment to roll out a nursery and primary school buddy system.

(AQW 46372/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Delivering Social Change Shared Education Signature Project is jointly funded by the Office of the First Minister and Deputy First Minister, the Department of Education and Atlantic Philanthropies. The first call of the application process closed on 18 December. Thirty two partnership applications involving seventy three schools have been approved with a further ten partnerships being invited to resubmit after addressing identified issues.

A second call for applications closed on 22 May. The Education Authority is currently assessing the applications prior to approval by the Project Board and it is anticipated that all applicants will be informed of its decision before the end of June.

The nursery and primary school buddy scheme is a separate commitment within Together: Building a United Community. The position on the implementation of this commitment remains as set out in my reply to AQW 45699/11-15.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 44944/11-15, why the Education Authority are bringing forward this guidance rather than his Department.

(AQW 46390/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (EA) has a statutory duty to ensure that efficient and effective primary and secondary education services are made available. As such, the EA is best placed to take forward the guidance. Departmental officials are assisting the EA in that process.

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Education how many primary and secondary school students with permanent addresses outside Northern Ireland are currently being educated in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 46412/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: According to the school census, there are 114 primary school and 442 post-primary school pupils with permanent addresses outside the north of Ireland that attend schools here.

These figures include boarder pupils and pupils in nursery and reception classes in primary schools.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education to estimate the extent of bullying in primary schools between 2009 and 2014. (AQW 46416/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There is currently no requirement for schools to report bullying incidents and no detailed figures for levels of bullying in primary or secondary schools are available.

DE collates annual statistics on the total number of suspensions and expulsions, including those occurring as a result of bullying behaviour. These are available at: <http://www.deni.gov.uk/index/facts-and-figures-new/education-statistics/suspensions-and-expulsions.htm>. These returns, however, only analyse the recorded cause for all suspensions / expulsions and do not distinguish between primary and post-primary schools.

The Department undertakes periodic research into the bullying experiences of pupils. The most recent research report (The Nature and Extent of Bullying in Schools in the North of Ireland, 2011) surveyed 60 primary schools and interviewed 904 Year 6 pupils. It found that 39% of the Year 6 pupils reported being bullied at school in the 2 months preceding the survey. This compares to previous reports which found 43% of Year 6 pupils surveyed in 2007 and 40% of those surveyed in 2002 reported being bullied.

This research uses a wide and inclusive definition of bullying and records behaviours which may have occurred only once or twice. The figures quoted should therefore only be considered indicative. The full report, which provides a much more detailed analysis, is available at: http://www.deni.gov.uk/no_56_report_final_2011.pdf

I believe the paucity of reliable, quantitative data on bullying in schools hinders each school's ability to monitor the problem and assess the effectiveness of their policies in addressing it. It also hinders the ability of DE to monitor the true scale and nature of the problem, identify emerging trends and ensure appropriate policies are in place to respond to this difficult issue.

I have therefore included a requirement for all grant-aided schools to monitor and record bullying incidents as part of an Anti-Bullying Bill which I will soon be introducing to the Assembly.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) how many funded primary school places are needed; (ii) how many funded primary school places are available; and (iii) where the funded primary school places are in East Belfast for 2015/16. (AQW 46424/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The information in the table below, provided by the Education Authority, shows the primary schools within East Belfast constituency, the approved admissions number (places available) and the number of funded places needed (number of 1st preference applications received).

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 44944/11-15, what is the legal status of guidance issued by the Education Authority.

(AQW 46439/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Guidance by its nature is indicative only and is intended to be helpful to parents to whom, in this case, it is directed. The guidance is likely to make reference to the relevant legislation currently in place.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 45594/11-16, what is the legislative basis for his answer.

(AQW 46440/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The legislative provisions for compulsory school age and funded pre-school include:

- i Article 45 and 46 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986
- ii. Article 17(8) of the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1998
- iii. Article 16 of the Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1996.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 44775/11-15, to detail the costs associated with the computer-based assessment pilot.

(AQW 46442/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I am informed by the Council for the Curriculum, Examinations and Assessment (CCEA) that the 2015/16 budget for the computer-based assessment pilot for autumn 2015 is £400k, of which £370k relates to fees for assessment suppliers and £30k relates to implementation costs covering information events, training support and resources such as guidance documents.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the projected enrolments for each post-primary school in North Down for the 2015/16 and 2016/17 academic years.

(AQW 46443/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Projected figures are collected from each school individually for the subsequent year only as part of their school census return. The table below details these projected figures for 2015/16 alongside the actual enrolments for 2014/15 for purposes of comparison. Projected figures for 2016/17 are not available.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the outcome of the discussions about the joint sixth form in the Lisanelly shared campus project.

(AQW 46455/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There are no plans for a joint sixth form for the schools moving to the Lisanelly Shared Education Campus. The schools will retain their own sixth forms with the intention that there will be significant educational sharing on the campus for appropriate year groups.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education for an update on his Department's review of their arm's-length bodies; and when will the findings be published.

(AQW 46456/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: On 1 April 2015, the 5 Education and Library Boards and their Staff Commission were replaced by the Education Authority (EA). In terms of the EA's remit, the only other matter currently under consideration is whether it might also deliver support and funding for all youth services.

In this regard, on 20 April, I launched a public consultation on proposals for the future of the Youth Council. The public consultation will run until 12 June, after which time I will consider the responses received before deciding on the best way forward. Any change in approach would require primary legislation to repeal the Youth Service (NI) Order, which would be subject to the legislative process within the Assembly.

Reviews of the governance and organisation structures of both CnaG and NICIE were carried out in 2014 and the recommendations of those reviews are currently being implemented. In addition, a review of the governance and organisation structures of CCMS is currently underway. I consider these to be part of the normal engagement between my Department and the bodies concerned, ensuring that they continue to be fit for purpose, particularly now that the EA is up and running.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education for a breakdown of the staffing levels for the Education Authority Delivery Directorate and the total cost of salaries.

(AQW 46457/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority Delivery Directorate comprises two teams: the School Amalgamations and Controlled Sector Support Team and the Education Authority Programme Management Office.

The Education Authority Programme Management Office is supported by four staff (3.25 full-time equivalents) as follows: 0.5 Grade 5; 1 Grade 7; 1 Staff Officer; and 0.75 Executive Officer 2. The total annual cost of salaries for the Programme Management Office, inclusive of national insurance and pension costs, is £178,963.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail how the different management types in (i) controlled; (ii) Maintained; (iii) Voluntary Grammar; (iv) Grant Maintained; and (v) Integrated sectors are funded.

(AQW 46458/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: All grant-aided schools (other than Special schools and Hospital schools), are funded under the Common Funding Scheme.

Under the Local Management of Schools funding arrangements, every school receives a delegated budget to meet their day-to-day running costs. It is the responsibility of the Boards of Governors and Principals of individual schools to determine spend, planning and the use of the available delegated funding to maximum effect in accordance with their school's own needs and relative priorities.

Schools are funded according to their relative need, using a range of measures (including pupil numbers, premises size, level of social deprivation and additional needs, etc.). Common monetary values are set for each factor within the relevant formula stream (one for Nursery and Primary and one for Post-primary schools), and these determine the size of the delegated budget for each school.

Controlled schools (which include controlled integrated and controlled Irish Medium), and Maintained schools (which include other maintained and Irish Medium maintained); are all funded through the Education Authority (EA). Voluntary Grammar schools (VGS) and Grant-Maintained Integrated (GMI) schools receive their funding directly from the Department. GMI and VGS receive reimbursement for non-recoverable VAT costs on a claims basis from the DE.

Separate funding arrangements apply to Landlord Maintenance (directly funded by EA for their schools and formula funded for GMI and VGS), and separate arrangements for Capital costs.

Schools may also receive funding from centre funds from their relevant Funding Authority. These include, for example compensation to prescribed limits for teaching and non-teaching substitutions and absenteeism, costs for statemented SEN pupils, rates etc. In addition there is specific programme funding – for example Extended Schools.

Certain costs for services are met by the EA, for example home-to-school transport, Curriculum Advisory Services, CIT costs associated with the C2K arrangements etc.

Finally all schools may receive funding from outside sources and all can generate voluntary contributions, Parent Teacher Association funds etc.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education for an update on the strategic review of additional integrated primary provision in the Portadown, Craigavon and Lurgan areas.

(AQW 46459/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Last year I commissioned the NI Council for Integrated Education (NICIE), in conjunction with the then Southern Education and Library Board (SELB), to carry out a strategic review of the need for additional integrated primary provision in the Portadown, Craigavon and Lurgan areas. I understand that NICIE and the Southern Region of the Education Authority are continuing to work on this review. An interim report on the work carried out to date was submitted to my Department on 2 June 2015.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the enrolment figures for each primary school in the Strangford constituency in 2014/15; and (ii) the projected enrolment figures for each primary school in the Strangford constituency for 2015/16.

(AQW 46489/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Projected figures are collected from each school individually for the subsequent year only as part of their school census return. The table overleaf details these projected figures for 2015/16 alongside the actual enrolments for 2014/15.

Notes:

- Projected figures are based on data provided by the school as part of its school census submission.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Education to provide (i) the names of the trustees of the Teacher's Pension Scheme; (ii) who they represent; and (iii) their length of tenure.

(AQW 46516/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The NI Teachers' Pension Scheme is an unfunded statutory public sector pension scheme managed by the Department of Education. It does not have trustees.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education how many and what percentage of children allocated a funded pre-school place for 2015/16 were granted their first choice.

(AQW 46519/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: At the end of Stage 1 of the pre-school admissions process on 17 April, 20,221 children (85.6%) were offered a place in their first preference setting.

Information on those children offered their first preference during Stage 2 is not recorded.

By the end of Stage 2, on 29 May, 23,257 (99.8%) of children whose parents stayed with the admissions process to the end received the offer of a funded pre-school place.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education how many of the 39 children who have not yet been awarded a funded pre-school place have one or both parents or guardians in work.

(AQW 46520/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: This information is not collected by the Education Authority.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Education what action his Department has taken to ensure the Board of Governors in schools of all management types are more reflective of the religious, cultural and socio economic makeup of the local population.

(AQW 46527/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: School Boards of Governors are comprised of different groups of people. Typically there will be individuals nominated by the Trustees or Transferors, individuals nominated or appointed by my Department, parent governors and teacher governors.

School governors are volunteers and those nominated or appointed by my Department self nominate in response to publicised opportunities. I recognise the value in having diversity amongst governors and to this end my Department, when re-constituting Boards of Governors, advertises governor opportunities widely in an effort to attract applications from all walks of life. All applications are welcome.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Education whether he will consider an alternative to the provision of a classroom assistant for pupils of secondary school age if a mentor is more appropriate for their needs.

Mr O'Dowd: A statement of special educational needs details the educational and non-educational provision, as agreed by all relevant parties, needed to meet the individual needs of the child concerned. The Education Authority is bound by legislation to provide the specific support detailed in the statement, including a classroom assistant if appropriate.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Education when he plans to achieve the Programme for Government commitment to ensure that at least one year of pre-school education is available to every family that wants it.

Mr O'Dowd: I have consistently achieved the Programme for Government commitment to ensure at least one year of funded pre-school education is available to every family that wants it.

The admissions process for 2015/16 has just concluded and parents whose children had not been placed at the end of stage one received letters on Saturday 30 May advising them if their child had been placed at stage two.

I am happy to advise members that for 2015/16 admissions, 99.8% of children whose parents stayed with the admissions process received the offer of a funded pre-school place

To set this in context: applications for 2015/16 admissions have increased by over 400; almost 450 more children have been placed and almost 200 more children placed in their first preference setting.

Places remain available in all regions and I would encourage the parents of children who have not been placed to stay in contact with their local region of the Education Authority.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education how his Department determines the priority for new builds for schools.

(AQO 8284/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Schools in the estate have differing and ever changing needs for investment. Changes to enrolment numbers, the condition and suitability of the premises to deliver the curriculum, the use of temporary accommodation and the social needs of the pupils all need to be assessed within the context of area plans at the point when announcements of projects to proceed in planning are made.

The last announced list of projects was in June 2014. The projects were selected from a long list of potential schemes submitted by Boards and school planning authorities and a protocol was applied. This protocol is available to view on the Departments website.

The protocol is revised and improved prior to each subsequent capital announcement. For the June 2014 announcement the schools were subject to Gateway checks including whether they were viable and sustainable in the context of my 'Schools for the Future: A Policy for Sustainable Schools'.

The criteria and weightings in the protocol have evolved as a result of learning from previous announcements and in support of the priorities for major capital investment. At the last iteration additional criteria were added to reflect social issues such as the percentage of children with a statement of educational need and those in receipt of free school meals.

The protocol identifies and prioritises the schools that are in most need of a new build subject to available budget in the year of announcement and beyond.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Education for an update on the furniture and equipment budget for St. Joseph's Primary School, Carnacaville, Newcastle.

(AQO 8285/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have committed almost £1.7m to the SEP project at St Joseph's. This will provide 6 new build classrooms a new multi-purpose hall and refurbish the existing school building.

As you know, the Executive's Budget has been cut by the Westminster Government by £1.5b over the last five years. As a direct result of this cut there is significantly reduced money to spend on frontline services such as Education. I have taken every action possible to protect Education funding and those frontline services within the Department of Education's (DE's) remit, ensuring that the priority is keeping teachers and classroom assistants in classrooms.

I have allocated a further £1.8m for F&E needs at capital projects on site, which will fully meet in-year needs on SEP projects, including St Joseph's.

DE officials have prepared an in-year bid to the Department of Finance and Personnel to address the remaining shortfall in funds for the F&E requirements of other capital projects currently on site.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Education for an update on the proposed hydrotherapy pool for Roddensvale Special School, Larne.

(AQO 8286/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The economic appraisal for the hydrotherapy pool at Roddensvale has been approved and the pool will be installed when capital budget becomes available.

As Roddensvale School is a controlled special school it is the responsibility of the Education Authority (EA). I understand that the scheme has been fully designed and a competition to appoint a contractor is underway however given the significant cut to the EA's minor works capital budget for FY15/16 it is not currently possible to confirm a projected date for delivery of this project.

Both I and the EA remain committed to this scheme but the timing of delivery remains dependent upon the available budget.

Mr Poots asked the Minister of Education to outline the latest projections for primary school enrolments over the next five years.

Mr O'Dowd: The actual 2014/15 primary school (years 1-7) enrolments are 165,548.

The most recent projected enrolments for grant-aided primary schools are published on my Department's website and are based on the 2013/14 enrolment data and population projections:

- The projected 2015/16 enrolments are 166,946.
- The projected 2016/17 enrolments are 169,334.
- The projected 2017/18 enrolments are 170,862.
- The projected 2018/19 enrolments are 171,350.
- The projected 2019/20 enrolments are 170,580.

The projected figures based on 2014/15 school census data and population projections will be published in August.

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Education when he wrote to the First Minister and deputy First Minister in relation to the exception of teachers from fair employment provisions as contained in Article 71 of the Fair Employment and Treatment (Northern Ireland) Order 1998.

(AQO 8288/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have not written to OFMdfM on this matter.

The Fair Employment and Treatment (NI) Order 1998 is the responsibility of OFMdfM.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Education for an update on the site of the proposed new build for Abbey Community College, Monkstown.

(AQO 8289/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Abbey Community College is one of the sixteen new build projects I announced to advance in planning in June 2014.

Abbey Community College is due to open in September 2015, following the closure of Newtownabbey Community High School and Monkstown High School. The new school will initially be located at the former Monkstown High School site.

In regard to the new build project, a site selection report was completed in September 2014 identifying three potential sites for the new school. These were: the site currently occupied by Newtownabbey Community High School; the current site of Monkstown High School; and a site owned by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

A feasibility study was recently completed and my Department is currently preparing the business case for the project that will identify the preferred option and hence the preferred site. It is anticipated that the business case will be complete in the summer of 2015

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Education what percentage of post-primary schools provide cardiopulmonary resuscitation training to pupils on an annual basis.

(AQO 8290/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department does not collate information on the specific topics that pupils are taught about in the classroom.

The minimum of what should be taught in our schools is detailed in legislation as high level Areas of Learning and within this framework schools can introduce topics, make connections and draw on a wide range of resources from a range of sources to meet the needs of their pupils.

The Areas of Learning provide opportunities for schools to provide cardiopulmonary resuscitation training for their pupils through Personal Development and Mutual Understanding in primary school and Learning for Life and Work in post-primary school but the decision to take up such opportunities is a matter for each teacher/school.

The Department of Education does recognise that this is an important issue and we will be working with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in taking forward implementation of its Community Resuscitation Strategy. This will include facilitating the availability of CPR training resources through the C2k ICT managed service.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of this year's pre-school nursery provision.

(AQO 8291/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As members are aware, the Executive has a Programme for Government commitment to ensure at least one year of pre-school education is available to every family that wants it.

The admissions process for 2015/16 has just concluded and parents whose children had not been placed at the end of stage one received letters on Saturday 30 May advising them if their child had been placed at stage two.

I am pleased to advise members that for 2015/16 admissions 99.8% of children whose parents stayed with the admissions process received the offer of a funded pre-school place:

To set this in context: applications for 2015/16 admissions have increased by over 400; almost 450 more children have been placed and almost 200 more children placed in their first preference setting. A total of 39 children, whose parents engaged with the process to the end remain unplaced.

Places remain available in settings in all regions and I would encourage the parents of children who have not been placed to stay in contact with their local region of the Education Authority.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the (i) development proposals awaiting decisions; and (ii) timescale for those decisions.

(AQW 46622/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: A list of published Development Proposals (DPs) awaiting decisions is available on my Department's website:

http://www.deni.gov.uk/index/schools-and-infrastructure-2/area-planning/14-schools_estate_devprop_pg/current_development_proposals.htm

As outlined in Circular 2014/21, I endeavour to make a decision on each DP as soon as practicable following the end of the statutory two month objection period. However, the time taken can vary depending on the individual circumstances of each proposal.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education to detail the protocol for schools seeking a temporary variation in their enrolment figures.

(AQW 46641/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The policy and procedure by which schools can seek a temporary variation of their admission and/or enrolment numbers is explained in detail in the Department's Circular 2015/03, which can be viewed on the DE website at www.deni.gov.uk.

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the current budget of St Mary's University College, Belfast.

(AQW 45371/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): Please see my answer to AQW45149/11-15 which you previously asked.

My Department's recurrent block grant allocation to St Mary's University College for academic year 2014/15 is £4,533,743.

However, the college's overall operating budget for the year will also include income from other sources such as student fees. My Department does not hold details of such income.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail what action is being taken to encourage mature students to enrol at local universities.

(AQW 45666/11-15)

Dr Farry: In academic year 2009/10 the total number of mature students enrolled at Northern Ireland's Higher Education Institutions¹ was 31,475. Latest figures available for 2013/14 show an increase in enrolments to 32,450. Although this increase is encouraging, we know that in order to grow our economy the traditional supply of skills from education will not be enough. With over 80% of the 2020 workforce already having completed their compulsory school education, more needs to be done to ensure higher education is accessible to learners of all kinds, including mature students and those already in employment. This is an express aim of my Department's Skills and Higher Education Strategies.

In addition, my Department is implementing Access to Success its regional strategy to widen participation in higher education which I launched in September 2012. The strategy has a strong focus on the creation of a more accessible sector in which the people who are most able but least likely to participate are given every encouragement and support to apply to, and to benefit from, higher education.

Significant progress has been made on a range of measures in the strategy. These include the launch in March 2014 of 'Reach Higher' a single, centralised and co-ordinated higher education awareness and aspiration raising campaign to better communicate the benefits of higher education to under-represented sections of the community including adult learners. Indeed, the subject of one of two television advertisements and a case study used in the campaign is a mature female learner with two children.

In addition, Access to Success introduced a requirement for higher education institutions to produce an annual Widening Access and Participation Plan (WAPPs) for approval by my Department. These WAPPs must include details of the institution's initiatives to widen participation among groups that are under-represented in higher education including adult learners.

The needs of mature learners in higher education can differ significantly from those of traditional school leavers. Mature learners are demonstrably more likely to have parental and caring responsibilities and my Department, through the student support package, provides a number of targeted grants to support Northern Ireland domiciled learners with such responsibilities. These grants include the Childcare Grant, the Parent's Learning Allowance and the Adult Dependents' Grant.

Evidence also shows that mature learners are more likely to study at the postgraduate level and on a part-time basis. My Department currently provides a student support package for Northern Ireland domiciled part-time learners to help in the main with their tuition fees, and it is targeted at students from lower income backgrounds. For individuals wishing to undertake postgraduate study, my Department funds the Postgraduate Awards Scheme, which has supported over 700 postgraduate places this year. However, no standardised student support package is available for postgraduate students similar to the package in place for full-time undergraduate students. Therefore, to continue to encourage mature learners into higher education, my Department will be launching a consultation in the coming weeks to explore enhanced support packages for both part-time and postgraduate students.

I trust you find this information helpful.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning following Mr Justice Horner's High Court judgement delivered on Thursday 30 April 2015 in the case known as CS, to detail what reviews have taken place and measures introduced to ensure there can be no repetition of a student under a Sexual Offences Prevention Order being permitted access as occurred on this occasion in the relevant facility and all similar facilities within his departmental remit.

(AQW 45689/11-15)

Dr Farry: Since the case in question, Queen's University has taken the following measures:

The General Regulations of the University have been revised to specify that students must notify the institution as soon as they are placed under investigation by police – this enables an immediate risk assessment to be undertaken to determine whether they may continue on their programme of study. Students who fail to report that they are subject to a police investigation will be referred to the University's Conduct Regulations.

Queen's University has also made contact with the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) expressing concern that it was not informed of the individual's police and court bail conditions, nor was it contacted as part of the police investigation. Discussions are ongoing with the PSNI and other statutory agencies in this regard, including protocols to ensure the timely sharing of information, in all similar cases, going forward.

Both St Mary's University College and Stranmillis University College adhere to the same Queen's University procedures.

Under the provisions of Ulster University's Student Admission's Policy all applicants/students are required to declare any criminal convictions. Applicants/students intending to engage in regulated activity with children and/or vulnerable adults are required to declare any existing convictions and to undergo an AccessNI enhanced disclosure check prior to the commencement of a programme of study. Applicants/students who do not consent to an enhanced check are not permitted to register at the University. The University's procedures for dealing with criminal conviction disclosures are outlined in the Admissions Policy.

Colleges have in place robust criminal convictions disclosure policies, which incorporate an operational working protocol with external organisations such as the Public Protection Unit of the PSNI, the Northern Ireland Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders and the Probation Board for Northern Ireland.

These policies and protocols, in combination with standard operating procedures, provide a framework through which informed decisions can be made regarding participation of students with criminal convictions. Colleges carry out risk assessments on all students declaring a criminal conviction. As an integral part of this process, all students are obliged to inform the college of a criminal offence upon enrolment, or immediately following the application of a conviction.

Colleges are not informed of all convictions imposed through the judicial system and can only take steps to assess the risk where they are made aware of criminal convictions either by the student, as required as part of the enrolment process, or by the appropriate agencies as part of college protocol.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the current strategies being pursued or proposed to be pursued to reduce the level of youth unemployment in North Down.

(AQW 45770/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department recognises the high social and economic cost of youth unemployment and is committed to creating and improving opportunities for our young people at a time when youth unemployment in NI remains higher than the UK average.

The Youth Employment Scheme (YES) was introduced to help young people aged between 18 and 24 years to develop the skills to compete for jobs and sustain employment. The scheme has proven to be very successful. For example, in the catchment area for Bangor JobCentre, a total of 206 young people participated on one or more elements of YES between July 2012 and March 2015. Latest figures show that, of these participants, 92 moved into subsidised or unsubsidised employment. Work is currently being progressed to introduce a refreshed scheme from June 2015 as part of the Employment Service Client Offer.

An example of the Employment Service's engagement with employers was an initiative with Bangor Chamber of Commerce and Charter NI that emanated in a Work Placement Event in Bangor's Kilcooley Estate, in November 2014. The aim was to help young people aged between 18 and 24 with employability skills. Ten employers and 93 clients from the Bangor area attended, with 110 placement/job opportunities available on the day. The event was very successful with 45 work placement opportunities filled, and eight clients entered employment.

My Department has recently introduced Into Work Training Support, which enables clients to undertake short accredited training courses and industry standard training courses to improve their employability. In addition, Enterprise Allowance, a new measure of support for those clients seeking to start their own business was made available in April.

My Department's main employment programme, Steps 2 Success (S2S) commenced on 20th October 2014. The programme is delivered in the Greater Belfast area, which includes North Down, by Ingeus; supported by a number of local organisations either as members of their direct end-to-end supply chain or as specialist providers.

Its primary purpose is the delivery of a flexible personalised service tailored to meet individual needs which will help people move into, and remain in, employment. S2S is available to all eligible jobseekers irrespective of their employability need or age. Clients who are in receipt of Jobseeker's Allowance and aged between 18 and 24 will be mandated onto S2S after 9 months on benefit.

As you will be aware, I have also undertaken a review of Youth Training and consultation on the interim report of the review closed on 10 February 2014. It is planned that the proposed new youth training scheme will be available to all young people aged 16-24, facilitating progression into an apprenticeship, further education or sustained employment. A series of pilot activities will be implemented throughout the 2015/16 academic year to test key aspects of the system, prior to its implementation in 2016/17.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the decision of Queen's University Belfast to cut bursaries for students from disadvantaged backgrounds by almost 70 per cent over four years.

(AQW 45870/11-15)

Dr Farry: As Minister with responsibility for higher education in Northern Ireland, your question has been transferred to me for a response.

Reductions in public funding for 2015/16 have resulted in a cut of £16.1m to the grant from my Department to the higher education institutions for the purposes of teaching and research. In response, I have introduced a range of measures to help to mitigate the additional financial pressures on higher education institutions, while at the same time asking institutions to protect, as far as possible, available student places. These measures include a phased reduction to the minimum level of reinvestment of additional student fee income that an institution is required to make on initiatives to widen participation in higher education. However, I have also sought assurances from the institutions that there will be no diminution of their commitment to, or outcomes for, widening participation.

Queen's University has decided to reduce the overall level of its expenditure on widening participation in 2015/16. However, you should note that this reduction in expenditure has allowed the university to protect approximately 380 undergraduate places which would otherwise have been lost to Northern Ireland students. Also, Queen's has demonstrated its continuing commitment to widening participation through increased investment in outreach initiatives aimed at raising the aspiration and educational attainment of the most disadvantaged in our society.

As part of our monitoring arrangements of support for disadvantaged students, my Department approves an annual Widening Access and Participation Plan with each higher education institution in Northern Ireland. These plans detail the amount of money each institution plans to reinvest in programmes to attract additional students from under-represented groups, and includes a requirement that each institution pay a minimum bursary of 10% of the tuition fee to students in receipt of the maximum maintenance grant.

In academic year 2011/12, Queen's University offered bursaries well in excess of the minimum expected level. However, since 2012 my officials have encouraged higher education providers, including Queen's University, to rebalance their expenditure on widening participation measures to spend more on outreach initiatives, while at the same time continuing to provide bursaries targeted at the most disadvantaged students. This is because there is clear evidence that outreach activities are a much better vehicle than bursaries to facilitate the participation in higher education of the under-represented groups identified in Access to Success, my Department's strategy for widening participation. From 2011/12 to 2013/14, Queen's expenditure on outreach activities almost doubled to £1.9m and is set to increase again in 2015/16.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning if a decision has been taken to remunerate governors at each of the six regional colleges.

(AQW 45915/11-15)

Dr Farry: A business case has been prepared by my Department which, with my approval, has been forwarded to the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) for consideration.

Under the terms of the Further Education (Northern Ireland) Order 1997, the amounts and conditions under which my Department may remunerate chairs and members require the prior approval of DFP.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 45689/11-15, and in light of similar earlier incidents at other college facilities, (i) what action was taken across all facilities under his departmental remit in the aftermath of the earlier cases; and (ii) whether this was enforced at Queens University at the time of the most recent incident of conviction in July 2014.

(AQW 45970/11-15)

Dr Farry: Since the case in question, Queen's University has taken the following measures:

The General Regulations of the University have been revised to specify that students must notify the institution as soon as they are placed under investigation by police – this enables an immediate risk assessment to be undertaken to determine whether they may continue on their programme of study. Students who fail to report that they are subject to a police investigation will be referred to the University's Conduct Regulations.

Queen's University has also made contact with the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) expressing concern that it was not informed of the individual's police and court bail conditions, nor was it contacted as part of the police investigation. Discussions are ongoing with the PSNI and other statutory agencies in this regard, including protocols to ensure the timely sharing of information, in all similar cases, going forward.

Both St Mary's University College and Stranmillis University College adhere to the same Queen's University procedures.

Under the provisions of Ulster University's Student Admission's Policy all applicants/students are required to declare any criminal convictions. Applicants/students intending to engage in regulated activity with children and/or vulnerable adults are required to declare any existing convictions and to undergo an AccessNI enhanced disclosure check prior to the commencement of a programme of study. Applicants/students who do not consent to an enhanced check are not permitted to register at the University. The University's procedures for dealing with criminal conviction disclosures are outlined in the Admissions Policy.

Colleges have in place robust criminal convictions disclosure policies, which incorporate an operational working protocol with external organisations such as the Public Protection Unit of the PSNI, the Northern Ireland Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders and the Probation Board for Northern Ireland.

These policies and protocols, in combination with standard operating procedures, provide a framework through which informed decisions can be made regarding participation of students with criminal convictions. Colleges carry out risk assessments on all students declaring a criminal conviction. As an integral part of this process, all students are obliged to inform the college of a criminal offence upon enrolment, or immediately following the application of a conviction.

Colleges are not informed of all convictions imposed through the judicial system and can only take steps to assess the risk where they are made aware of criminal convictions either by the student, as required as part of the enrolment process, or by the appropriate agencies as part of college protocol.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether there are any further developments in relation to the Ulster University Magee Campus acquiring the land at Foyle College following its move to the new site at the Waterside.
(AQW 46109/11-15)

Dr Farry: Ulster University signed an option to purchase agreement in December 2009. The option was exercised in December 2011. There is no firm date for Foyle College to vacate the site but I am advised that this is anticipated to take place in summer 2017. The University has confirmed that it would complete the purchase six months after Foyle College vacates the site subject to satisfactory compliance with all terms of the agreement.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any departmental plans to change the payment structure of Educational Maintenance Allowance payments to eligible students.
(AQW 46314/11-15)

Dr Farry: I can advise the member that my Department has no plans to change the payment of the £30 a week means-tested Education Maintenance Allowance, (EMA), every two weeks. The £100 bonuses will continue to be paid twice a year. My Department, and joint owners the Department of Education, carried out an extensive independent review of the EMA scheme, followed by a public consultation, launched on 30 July 2012, for fourteen weeks. The findings of the responses formed the policy changes introduced in academic year 2013/2014. I can confirm a change to how EMA is paid to the student did not form part of the stakeholder's responses to the consultation, nor has it been raised as an issue with my Departmental officials in the past.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the range of community education courses available in East Antrim.
(AQO 8299/11-15)

Dr Farry: The promotion of social inclusion through education and learning is a priority for my Department and all six Further Education Colleges. In the East Antrim area, the Northern Regional College is the main provider of community education courses.

The college is committed to providing a wide range of courses for adults in all of its main campuses, as well as in a number of community outreach centres.

Courses that are delivered in the community enable individuals and small groups to undertake training in an informal environment that will help them to gain the knowledge, skills and qualifications to develop their employment and career prospects, while others are more recreational in nature.

The college has developed a Community Strategy to ensure that the number of opportunities it can offer to learners in its catchment area can be maximised by working in partnership with a range of organisations, including Neighbourhood Renewal and the Big Lottery.

As lead partner in the "Living and Learning Together" Big Lottery Funded project, which is active in Antrim and Magherafelt, the college is providing a number of courses free of charge to learners in the community. These courses aim to enhance and develop skills, address health and wellbeing issues and develop social inclusion.

In the last academic year, the college delivered over 118 community based courses in the East Antrim area which included Essential Skills, counselling, food safety and creative crafts.

The college is also continuing to provide a wide range of Horizons programmes that have been specifically designed for adults with special needs a range of courses to help develop their skills and are delivered across a number of adult day centres.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline any departmental plans to resolve the pay dispute at Queen's University Belfast, where staff who participated in six hours of strike action over three days have had three days full pay withheld.

(AQO 8300/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department provides funding to the local Higher Education Institutions for teaching and learning and research purposes. The Institutions, however, are responsible for their own policies and procedures, including employment matters.

Although I have not been made aware of the issue, my Department does not have any remit to intervene in this matter.

Mr Craig asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the impact the Budget for 2015/16 will have on the work of the South Eastern Regional College.

(AQO 8301/11-15)

Dr Farry: The process to determine impacts on provision from individual college budget allocations for 2015/16 has not yet reached completion. Therefore, I am unable to provide a detailed and final assessment of the impact on the further education sector in general, or South Eastern Regional College, in particular, at this time.

Early indications from colleges are that part time places will be affected. Although individual college budgets have been set, these may need to be revisited.

There is no doubt that the cuts of £12m imposed on the further education sector will have a serious effect on the ability of the sector to maintain current levels of service. Undoubtedly, there will be reductions in both student places and staff numbers.

Crucial to mitigating against the worst impact of these cuts is the use of £6m End Year Flexibility, which my Department is seeking approval for from the Executive in the June Monitoring Round.

As the budget setting process comes to a conclusion, my officials will continue to work with the sector to ensure provision offered continues to meet the skills needs of current and future employers as much as possible within budget constraints.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline his departmental plans for launching a new youth training scheme.

Dr Farry: My Department is currently conducting a comprehensive review of youth training. An interim report was published in November 2014, setting out a range of proposals under four themes, namely; the core components of the youth training system; supporting young people; delivery and employer engagement structures; and ensuring quality.

A public consultation on the interim report, which closed in February 2015, confirmed support for a new youth training system at level 2 to deliver professional and technical training through a new, baccalaureate style award equating to five GCSEs at grades A* - C, including English and mathematics. All participants will have access to structured work-based learning, and it is intended that the system will be open to all 16-24 year olds requiring skills development, whether they are in employment, starting a new job role or currently not in employment.

Building upon the interim report proposals and stakeholder feedback, policy commitments are being finalised for the new youth training system and the strategy, with the attendant action plan, is expected to be published before the summer recess. Following publication it is intended that there will be piloting of elements of the proposed approach throughout 2015/16. It is anticipated that the new youth training system will commence in 2016/17.

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the new Steps 2 Success programme.

(AQO 8303/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department's main employment programme, Steps 2 Success, commenced on 20th October 2014. It is delivered across Northern Ireland by 3 Lead Contractors; supported by a number of local organisations. Evaluation of the programme will be based on official statistics which will not be available until Autumn 2015.

However, the Quality Improvement Team within my Department is responsible for evaluating the quality of the service delivery throughout the participant journey from referral to Steps 2 Success to sustained employment. An initial quality evaluation was conducted by the team which identified good practice within each Lead Contractor and supply chain.

Information obtained from the Department's systems indicates that between 20th October 2014 and 30th April 2015 a total of 22,861 clients were referred to the Lead Contractors of which 18,790 clients started. These are indicative figures that have not been validated by the Northern Ireland Statistics and Research Agency who are responsible for the production of official statistics in respect of the programme. The referral and attachment of more than 18,000 clients, in what was a relatively short period of time, indicates a positive start to the programme.

The programme's primary purpose is the delivery of a flexible personalised service tailored to meet individual needs to help people move into and remain in employment.

Two dedicated teams within my Department, Contract Management Branch and the Quality Improvement Team are already monitoring the programme delivery to ensure a high quality service is delivered to all participants.

Contract Management Branch monitors the performance of the Lead Contractors against the Performance Indicators. In circumstances where under performance is identified the Lead Contractors will be required to take remedial action.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the availability of defibrillators at each university and college campus.

(AQO 8304/11-15)

Dr Farry: Each higher education institution and further education college is responsible for its own policies and procedures, including the provision of defibrillators. My Department does not collate information on the availability of defibrillators however the member may wish to request the information directly from the institutions.

Mr Girvan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the number of apprentices in South Antrim.

(AQO 8305/11-15)

Dr Farry: Mr Speaker, with your permission I wish to group questions seven and fourteen, and would like to request an additional minute for the answer.

Latest published figures indicate that, at 31 January 2015, 461 apprentices from the South Antrim Parliamentary Constituency were undertaking ApprenticeshipsNI funded training in a range of subject areas. Engineering has the highest programme occupancy in any single area with 88 apprentices.

Of the overall number, 228 apprentices are working towards Level 3 apprenticeship framework qualifications, including 46 undertaking a Level 2 en route to Level 3 apprenticeship, and 233 apprentices are working towards Level 2 apprenticeship framework qualifications.

My Department is in the early stages of testing Higher Level Apprenticeships as part of the implementation of Securing our Success – the new Northern Ireland Strategy on Apprenticeships. Between 2013 and 2014, 106 people took up Higher Level Apprenticeships across Northern Ireland. However, it is not possible to determine how many people took up these apprenticeships in the South Antrim Constituency.

At present, seven pilot Higher Level Apprenticeships are underway across five occupational areas covering professional services; ICT; engineering; accountancy and life sciences.

Off-the-job training in respect of these pilots is being provided by four Further Education Colleges including the Northern Regional College who are working with six employers including Schrader Electronics, AES Limited and Michelin to deliver an engineering apprenticeship.

In total, there are now over one-hundred and twenty higher level apprentices working with forty six different employers across Northern Ireland.

My Department has been working with Further Education Colleges, Universities, employers and other stakeholders to develop additional pilot Higher Level Apprenticeships which will be available from September 2015. These additional pilots will broaden the range of occupational areas where higher level apprenticeships are being offered and will see a significant increase in the number of opportunities available.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to outline the current financial pressures facing local universities and colleges.

(AQO 8306/11-15)

Dr Farry: As a result of the budget reductions passed on to my Department by the Executive, the annual funding to the four higher education institutions in Northern Ireland has been reduced by £16.1m. This compounds the fact that the institutions are already underfunded when compared to English institutions by approximately £39m per annum.

With regard to the Further Education sector, there is no doubt that colleges are facing significant financial pressures ahead. In allocating budgets, I have tried to ensure that front line services are protected as far as possible. Unfortunately, it is inevitable that the required cuts will have implications for the range of provision offered and for staffing requirements in the colleges. Decisions regarding the specific curriculum offer and related staffing requirements are, however, a matter for each individual college.

The further education sector budget has been reduced by £12 million. This will be partially mitigated by proposed use of £6 million End Year Flexibility in June Monitoring, subject to the Executive agreement. This is, in effect, the use of college reserves. In addition to the budget cuts, colleges will have to factor in a range of inescapable inflationary financial pressures.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) how many potential foreign investors visited each constituency in the each of the last five years; and (ii) how many of those companies subsequently invested in each constituency in each year.

(AQW 45027/11-15)

Mrs Foster (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): A breakdown of inward investment visits by Parliamentary Constituency Area (PCA) over the last five financial years is provided at table 1 below. Please note that figures for 2014-15 are not yet available. The total number of visits by PCA will exceed the number of individual companies having visited due to the fact that companies can visit more than once per annum and each visit programme can include more than one PCA.

In relation to the specific data sought by part (ii) of the question it should be recognised that it is not possible to establish a direct relationship between individual visits and specific employment-related inward-investment projects. For example, a company may often visit a number of different locations within Northern Ireland before making a decision whether to invest and where to locate. It may also visit on a number of different occasions.

The number of inward investment projects in the last financial five years, broken down by PCA, is provided at table 2 below. Please note that figures for 2014-15 are not yet available.

Table 1: Inward Investment Visits by Parliamentary Constituency Area 2009-10 to 2013-14

Notes:

- 1) The number of visits to PCAs exceeds the number of companies to have visited due to the fact that companies can visit more than once and each visit programme can include more than one PCA.
- 2) A credible visit is defined as one where Invest NI can claim to have promoted a DCA or PCA by bringing a potential inward investor, who has an identifiable project proposal, to that area.
- 3) In addition to the above listed visits, Invest NI has also facilitated a number of visits by other organisations e.g. influencers, overseas governments and trade bodies, which serve to strengthen FDI & Trade links in overseas markets.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the (i) extent; and (ii) impact of meat importation on local farmers and the wider economy.

(AQW 45819/11-15)

Mr Bell: I am aware in the calendar year 2014 Northern Ireland imported £379 million of meat and meat preparations and exported £390 million. Historically the balance of trade between meat imports and exports had been in the favour of imports – 10 years ago we imported £178 million and exported £67 million. However I am pleased to now report that this situation has been dramatically reversed - over the last 5 years exports have grown by 58% and imports by 42%.

At present many categories of European meat are substantially cheaper to that produced in Northern Ireland. However as the UK is a member of the European Union we are obliged to fulfil the free trade policies of the EU. 88% of our meat imports are from countries within the EU free trade zone.

The task for Invest NI is to encourage and assist Northern Ireland meat processors to export more of its high quality meat products to global markets such as the Middle and Far East that are prepared to pay premium prices and thereby increase the growth in meat exports. Invest NI is continuously engaged with retail and food service buying organisations in many countries to fulfil this objective.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how his Department is helping to promote the capability and products of the local aerospace industry to the global market.

(AQW 45864/11-15)

Mr Bell: Invest Northern Ireland takes the lead in promoting the capabilities of Northern Ireland aerospace internationally through an integrated programme of inward and outward missions, participation at trade shows including Farnborough and Paris, and through participation in supply chain events. In the last three financial years Invest NI has supported 77 Northern Ireland aerospace companies to exhibit at global aerospace events.

Invest NI has also co-ordinated a number of inward visits from airframe manufacturers, including Boeing and Airbus, and companies involved in assembling major aerostructures to expose the aerospace supply chain in Northern Ireland to global opportunities. Northern Ireland is developing a strong reputation in the sector. Indeed Northern Ireland companies are involved in supplying all of the world's major aircraft programmes.

Through a programme of targeted support, Invest NI assists companies to undertake strategic investment in research, development, skills and facilities that can deliver greater competitiveness and enable Northern Ireland aerospace companies to extend their international reach. The industry has set the ambitious target of doubling turnover from £1 billion per annum to £2 billion and increasing employment from 8,000 to 12,000 high value jobs over the next ten years.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how his Department is assisting the manufacturing sector.

(AQW 45865/11-15)

Mr Bell: Invest Northern Ireland offers a wide range of assistance to the manufacturing sector with support for investment and job creation as well as a suite of programmes addressing all the key aspects of business development and competitiveness, such as training and skills enhancement, research and development, management and leadership, marketing, trade development, business improvement and access to finance.

Between 2010/11 and 2014/15, Invest NI offered £285 million of assistance to the manufacturing sector and this support contributed towards investment commitments of £1.9 billion and the promotion of 12,702 new jobs.

Recent examples of such support include assistance towards a £40 million investment by Delta Print & Packaging in Belfast, a £27 million capital investment by Dunbia in Dungannon to create 209 new jobs and support export growth; and the creation of 12 new jobs at Smith's Engineering Works in Ballymena.

My Department also works closely with the Utility Regulator to seek to address energy costs which are a key concern for manufacturers, large and small and with colleagues in the Department for Employment and Learning to enhance the skills available to manufacturing companies.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the benefits of an increase in the number of airline routes and frequency of flights at the George Best Belfast City airport.

(AQW 45935/11-15)

Mr Bell: To rebalance the Northern Ireland economy, we need to ensure quick and easy air access for Northern Ireland businesses, international investors and inbound visitors. George Best Belfast City Airport, along with Northern Ireland's other airports, plays a key role in providing connectivity to business and inbound tourism destinations.

I am encouraged by the recent re-entry of KLM to the Northern Ireland market and the expansion of the Flybe network from George Best Belfast City Airport. KLM's global network will provide Northern Ireland residents a greater range of destinations which can be accessed from Northern Ireland.

I am also convinced that the recent successful bid for Belfast to host the air route development conference Routes Europe in 2017 will provide a tremendous opportunity to showcase the Northern Ireland proposition to airlines and other regions in Europe and build mutually beneficial relationships.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 42410/11-15, given the oil and gas industry, and the Minister, define the shale layer (carboniferous viséan Murlough Bay formation), as an unconventional resource can he explain (i) how oil and gas exploration within this layer is considered a conventional process; and (ii) can he provide the legal precedence and source of this definition

(AQW 45965/11-15)

Mr Bell:

- (i) The relevant information is contained in the answers provided to AQW 42410/11. Exploration drilling is deemed a conventional process and does not distinguish between the type of rock it is moving through;
- (ii) No. I am not aware of a legal definition of the terms unconventional and conventional with respect to hydrocarbon resources.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) what meetings have taken place between the Health and Safety Executive and Bombardier subsequent to the approval of the waste gasification plant at airport road; (ii) what was the subject of these meetings; (iii) what was the outcome of the meetings; (iv) on what date did the meetings take place; and (v) which organisations were in attendance.

(AQW 46005/11-15)

Mr Bell:

- (i) HSENI have had 4 meetings with Bombardier in relation to this planning application.
- (ii) These meetings discussed the technical nature of the application for the development of the Combined Heat and Power (CHP) plant in this location, its proximity to the Calor site and management of the risks using the Dangerous Substances and Explosive Atmosphere Regulations (DSEAR) regime.
- (iii) The nature of these meetings was as follows:

On 14th June 2013 HSENI met with Bombardier's technical consultant to discuss the technical requirements arising from HSENI's responses to the planning service consultation. The outcomes agreed were:

- 1 Bombardier to consider perimeter gas monitoring;
- 2 Bombardier to review effluent retention pond design; and
- 3 Bombardier to prepare DSEAR Assessment.

On 10th September 2013 HSENI met with Bombardier to discuss comments in the initial consultations, including HSENI's comments in the reply to the planning service consultation. Those present were representatives of HSENI, Bombardier and their support team, DOE Waste Team, George Best City Airport, NIEA (various) and Belfast City Council. Proposals for the Addendum to the Environmental Statement were discussed and agreed at this meeting. The outcomes agreed were:

- 1 Changes to Environmental Statement;
- 2 Bombardier to consider perimeter gas monitoring;
- 3 Bombardier to review effluent retention pond design; and
- 4 Bombardier to prepare DSEAR Assessment.

On 28th January 2015 HSENI met with Bombardier to discuss Off Site Emergency Plan arrangements for Calor Gas, risk framework for Calor Gas, progress regarding actions at previous meetings and preparations being made for construction phase of the CHP Plant. The outcome agreed was that Bombardier should move towards preparing for the construction phase.

On 1st May 2015 HSENI met with Bombardier and their construction team, Belfast Harbour Commissioners and Calor Gas to discuss arrangements for CHP Plant construction phase. Discussions were had regarding the perimeter gas monitoring (Bombardier and Calor Gas), site access control, management of construction personnel (in particular arrangements for emergency evacuation) and DSEAR assessment. A path forward was agreed with a potential role for HSENI Construction Inspection team and likely construction schedule.

(iv) The dates of the meetings are as follows:

HSENI with technical consultant representing Bombardier on 14th June 2013

HSENI met with Bombardier on 10th September 2013, 28th January 2015 and 1st May 2015

(v) The organisations in attendance are listed in part (iii).

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the projected increase in aircraft production and the impact on the local economy.

(AQW 46007/11-15)

Mr Bell: The global aerospace sector is witnessing a period of unprecedented growth with market forecasts in the civil aerospace sector projecting the need for 29000 new aircraft by 2032. The aerospace sector in Northern Ireland is benefiting from this growth and the local sector has set the ambitious target of doubling turnover from £1billion per annum to £2billion and increasing employment from 8000 to 12000 high value jobs over the next ten years in response to these market conditions.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) whether the don't advise against permission instruction for the Health and Safety Executive in the Planning Advice for Developments near Hazardous Installations guidelines equates to a no objection response to a planning proposal; (ii) whether Health and Safety Executive advice to the planning service equated to no objection to planning application Z/2012/1387/F; and (iii) whether that advice was based on the addendum to the environmental statement.

Mr Bell: This reply concerns planning application Z/2012/1387/F for a Combined Heat and Power Plant at Bombardier, Airport Road, Belfast.

When an application comes to HSENI they apply the land use planning methodology - planning advice for developments near hazardous installations (PADHI). After application of this framework HSENI will respond that they "Advise Against" or "Don't Advise Against" the granting of planning permission on health and safety grounds that arise from the possible consequences of a major accident at the hazardous installation. Under PADHI, HSENI cannot issue a No Objection or Objection decision regarding a planning application. A Don't Advise Against decision does not equate to a no objection response as, if they feel it is justified, HSENI may suggest conditions on the granting of a planning approval or may make other comments if they consider them to improve public safety. It is up to the planning authority to decide whether or not to take the advice into account when it makes a decision on the planning application.

In the particular case of Z/2012/1387/F, the proposed development constituted an industrial facility within the Land Use Planning zones of the adjacent Calor Gas COMAH site. On application of the planning advice for developments near hazardous installations (PADHI) guidelines, a Don't Advise Against reply was appropriate. However HSENI recognised that it was in the public interest that the applicant should liaise directly with Calor Gas to minimise total risk and that at an early stage the applicant should carry out a full and formal risk assessment as required under the Dangerous Substances and Explosive Atmospheres Regulations, to minimise fire & explosion risks. To minimise costs and time delays, this Risk Assessment is best done at the design stage which is why this was mentioned in HSENI's reply.

There have been several changes made to the proposed development including those in the addendum to the environmental statement. HSENI were made aware of these changes, none of which have affected HSENI's reply of Don't Advise Against.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many jobs InvestNI has promoted in (i) Northern Ireland; and (ii) West Tyrone over the last three years.

(AQW 46029/11-15)

Mr Bell: In the 3 years between 1st April 2011 and 31st March 2014 Invest NI's support helped promote (i) 23,448 new jobs in Northern Ireland. Included in this figure were (ii) 1,228 new jobs in the West Tyrone constituency.

Information on the number of jobs promoted in 2014-15 will be published shortly by Invest NI.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many jobs InvestNI has created in (i) Northern Ireland; and (ii) West Tyrone over the last three years.

(AQW 46031/11-15)

Mr Bell: In the 3 years between 1st April 2011 and 31st March 2014 Invest NI's support helped create (i) 18,569 new jobs in Northern Ireland. Included in this figure were (ii) 727 jobs in the West Tyrone constituency.

Information on the breakdown of the number of jobs created in 2014-15 will be published shortly by Invest NI.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how much InvestNI has invested in (i) Northern Ireland; and (ii) West Tyrone in the last three years.

(AQW 46035/11-15)

Mr Bell: In the 3 years between 1st April 2011 and 31st March 2014 Invest NI offered assistance valued at (i) £423million, which contributed towards business development projects that planned to invest £2,076million in the Northern Ireland economy.

Included in this support was (ii) £11.3million, which contributed towards business development projects that planned to invest £63.2million in the West Tyrone constituency.

Information on the regional breakdown of support offered during 2014-15 will be published shortly by Invest NI.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what concerns the Health and Safety Executive has raised to each of the planning approvals related to the proposed incinerator at Airport Road, Belfast.

(AQW 46064/11-15)

Mr Bell: HSENI has received 1 planning consultation and an addendum from DOE planning in relation to a Combined Heat and Power plant for refuse derived fuel, Airport Road Belfast.

As a statutory consultee, HSENI, on receipt of the planning consultations for Z/2012/1387/F, applied the Planning Advice for Developments near Hazardous Installations Guidelines and informed planning service that a "Don't Advise Against" reply was appropriate on both occasions.

On the first response HSENI detailed further measures for consideration. These measures included:

- 1 Bombardier to consider perimeter gas monitoring;
- 2 Bombardier to review effluent retention pond design; and
- 3 Bombardier to prepare Dangerous Substances and Explosive Atmosphere Regulation Assessment.

On the second response to the DOE planning addendum, HSENI acknowledged that the changes made in the application and those assurances given during subsequent meetings indicated that the suggested measures are to be implemented.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of (i) new jobs promoted; (ii) new jobs created; (iii) assistance offered; and (iv) total investment in each of the 26 district council areas during the 2014/15 financial year, broken down by (a) locally owned companies; and (b) externally owned companies.

Mr Bell: The information you have requested is not currently available for the latest year (2014-15) as Invest NI's sub-regional results have not yet been released.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of visits facilitated by InvestNI for potential inward investors to each of the 26 council areas during the 2014/15 financial year.

(AQW 46068/11-15)

Mr Bell: The information you have requested is not currently available for the latest year (2014-15) as Invest NI's sub-regional results have not yet been released.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline the (i) number; and (ii) percentage of the jobs created by (a) locally owned companies; and (b) externally owned companies with Invest NI support in each of the 26 district council areas, during the 2014/15 financial year, which offer a salary above the Northern Ireland Private Sector Median

(AQW 46069/11-15)

Mr Bell: The information you have requested is not currently available for the latest year 2014-15 as Invest NI's sub-regional results have not yet been released.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the number of new jobs created from first time external investors that were supported by Invest NI during the 2014/15 financial year in each of the 26 council districts.

(AQW 46070/11-15)

Mr Bell: The information you have requested is not currently available for the latest year (2014-15) as Invest NI's sub-regional results have not yet been released.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment (i) where the proposed Avanti satellite pilot scheme will take place; (ii) when it will take place; (iii) how many (a) domestic; and (b) non-domestic customers will take part; (iv) what speeds will be involved; and (v) what the pilot will cost.

(AQW 46101/11-15)

Mr Bell: The Avanti project, which is attracting funding of £886,000 from the UK Government, will be implemented in Scotland and Northern Ireland with counties Fermanagh and Antrim chosen as the test areas in Northern Ireland due to their geography and clustering of premises.

Avanti has engaged with Fermanagh and Omagh, Antrim and Newtownabbey, Causeway Coast and Glens, Lisburn and Castlereagh, and Mid and East Antrim District Councils to secure their assistance in promotional activity commencing in June 2015. Up to 500 premises across the two counties will be selected to participate on a first-come, first-served basis and the breakdown between residential and business premises will therefore be determined by the registrations received.

Avanti will offer packages providing download speeds of up to 30 Megabits per second.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what action her Department has taken to ensure access to super fast broadband in rural areas of the Foyle constituency.

(AQW 46107/11-15)

Mr Bell: In recent years my Department has supported a number of projects, including one specifically targeted in the Foyle basin, aimed at increasing the footprint of fixed-wireless superfast broadband networks.

My Department also led on the deployment of Fibre-to-the-Cabinet technology to nearly 2,500 cabinets across Northern Ireland, including 162 serving the Foyle constituency, enabling the delivery of superfast broadband.

In February 2014, my Department contracted BT to deliver the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement project (NIBIP) which will, inter alia, extend the availability of superfast broadband to those who have limited choice across Northern Ireland and including exchange areas serving the Foyle constituency. Further details on the project can be found on the NI Direct platform at <http://www.nidirect.gov.uk/index/information-and-services/leisure-home-and-community/technology-and-online-services/broadband-improvement-project.htm>.

Recognising that NIBIP will not deliver superfast broadband to all premises, in February 2015, my Department awarded a further contract to BT for delivery of the Superfast Roll-out Programme, under which they will provide superfast broadband improvements for 38,000 premises across Northern Ireland, by December 2017, including in areas within the Foyle constituency. The project has commenced with an extensive survey and design process, which will take several months to complete. Further details on roll-out will be published to the NI Direct platform when available.

My officials are also assisting the Department of Culture, Media and Sport in its expansion of the Super-connected Cities Programme in Northern Ireland. Under the expansion, branded as Super-connected Northern Ireland, there is an opportunity for the new Super-Councils to deliver a voucher scheme, similar to those delivered in the Belfast and Derry & Strabane District Council areas, to support the installation costs of high speed broadband access for businesses, charities and social enterprises.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether he will hold discussions with the management of each of Northern Ireland's three airports to establish what realistic measures can be taken to reverse the numbers of local people travelling to Dublin airport for International flights.

(AQW 46127/11-15)

Mr Bell: As Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment it is my intention to work with all of Northern Ireland's airports to support their route development endeavours.

My Department is in ongoing dialogue with our airports to attract routes to destinations currently served by Dublin Airport and which could be served directly from Northern Ireland. Providing direct access to destinations such as Germany, Scandinavia and Canada would provide increased choice for Northern Ireland residents and improve our linkages to important business and inbound tourism markets.

Northern Ireland has recently been successful in attracting the air route development conference Routes Europe which will take place in Belfast in 2017, with over 100 airlines and approximate 1,200 delegates expected. This conference bid was jointly delivered by Invest NI, Visit Belfast and Tourism NI. I am confident this will provide a tremendous opportunity to showcase the Northern Ireland proposition to airlines and other regions in Europe, build mutually beneficial relationships and secure new routes to enhance our international connectivity.

My Department is also scoping the potential for a specific Air Route Development Fund for Northern Ireland.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many local jobs have been created since 2010.

(AQW 46130/11-15)

Mr Bell: Invest NI is only able to measure the number of jobs created since 2011-12. In the 4 years between 1st April 2011 and 31st March 2015 Invest NI's support helped create 19,606 new jobs in locally-owned businesses in Northern Ireland.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the travel and subsistence costs incurred by his Department on trips outside Northern Ireland in each year since May 2011, broken down by the costs incurred by (i) the Minister; (ii) special advisers; and (iii) support staff.

(AQW 46158/11-15)

Mr Bell: The Department of Enterprise Trade and Investment has published key information on ministerial trips overseas for the period April-September 2014 on its website. Further periods will be added at regular intervals. The link is http://www.detini.gov.uk/index/deti-about-home/financial_arrangements/deti_minister_overseas_travel.htm

The additional information asked for is not held on the departmental accounting system at the level of detail requested and could only be collated from other sources at disproportionate cost.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how many complaints have been made to the Health and Safety Executive regarding sub-standard electricity supplies in private sector tenancies.

(AQW 46174/11-15)

Mr Bell: The Health and Safety Executive for Northern Ireland (HSENI) receives a very small number of complaints about sub-standard electricity supplies in private sector tenancies. During the last 20 years HSENI estimates there have been 6 complaints, alleging sub-standard electrical work following bathroom or kitchen renovation work.

HSENI's enforcement remit for health and safety at work issues in domestic properties (which includes private sector tenancies) is confined to peripatetic work activities (workers who travel from place to place to work) or their effects.

Therefore the safety of the electrical installation in rented accommodation would not be a matter for HSENI unless it could be linked to the actual work activity of a peripatetic worker eg. electrician, heating engineer etc.

District Councils have been given new enforcement powers under The Private Tenancies (Northern Ireland) Order 2006 to ensure that unfitness and serious disrepair are addressed. Regulation 7 (1) (c) (i) of this Order requires the landlord to keep the installations in the dwelling- house for the supply and use of electricity in repair and in proper working order. This addresses the particular issue of the condition of the electrical installation in properties under private tenancy.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what actions InvestNI are taking to progress the expressions of interest that have been made by potential investors to locate their business at the InvestNI Business Park at Melmount Road, Strabane.

(AQW 46228/11-15)

Mr Bell: Since the opening of Strabane Business Park Invest NI has met with a number of businesses that had expressed an interest in locating within the estate.

It is then for each business to decide whether they wish to pursue their interest further and, if so, to ensure they have the requisite funding in place for their proposed development.

Whilst it is unfortunate that these interactions have to date not resulted in actual sales and investment Invest NI continues to engage with businesses interested in locating within the Park.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the local mobile technology industry.

(AQW 46397/11-15)

Mr Bell: Telecommunications policy is a reserved matter and the telecommunications market in Northern Ireland, as in other regions of the UK, is also fully privatised and independently regulated by Ofcom.

With regard to mobile coverage, obligations are established through licences issued by Ofcom which, as the regulator, is directly responsible for monitoring mobile coverage and performance of the Mobile Network Operators (MNOs). In that context, while my Department has regular contact with the MNOs, its influence is limited.

As you may be aware, the MNOs have been investing quite significantly in their 2G and 3G networks in recent years as well as commencing the roll-out of their 4G infrastructure. This has had a positive impact in Northern Ireland, particularly with regard to 2G services for which, according to Ofcom's infrastructure reports, coverage has increased by some 15% on the A & B roads across the region in the last year alone. I understand that the MNO investments are set to continue until 2017.

EE

EE has advised my officials that its network is in a 'robust state' across all technologies as they have ensured that there is sufficient availability and resilience built into their network to meet customer demands.

Vodafone

Vodafone expects its ongoing investment to lead to considerable improvements in its network in Northern Ireland, indicating that the upgrades will bring 2G coverage to over 99% of the population and, 4G coverage to somewhere in the mid-nineties by roll-out completion.

They have pointed to some barriers to network roll-out that are particular to Northern Ireland, most specifically around the planning process, and have advised that they have written to Minister Durkan in that regard.

Three

Three advises that in 2014 it has invested significantly in its network throughout Northern Ireland by increasing the number of mast sites, leading to a 19% increase in coverage on its network. All of Three's Northern Ireland sites have been upgraded with Advanced 3G technology and they are soon to commence the roll out of 4G.

In relation to dropped calls, Three has reported a substantial improvement since July 2014 as a result of its network upgrades. In addition, the introduction of its 'Feel at Home' service means that since August 2013, its customers have been able to use their phones when abroad at no additional cost in 18 countries, including the Republic of Ireland. This means that Three customers living and working in border areas should be able to use their voice and data allowances free from the worry of bill shock.

O2

Similarly, O2 is reporting that through its ongoing initiatives, including its network consolidation programme with Vodafone (Project Beacon) it expects outdoor coverage on its 2G, 3G and 4G platforms, in percentage terms, to reach the mid-high nineties by 2017.

Mobile Infrastructure Project (MIP)

Despite these market-led investments, everyone fully recognises that there are areas that still struggle with coverage and for that reason the UK Government is implementing the Mobile Infrastructure Project (MIP).

This project will see the deployment of up to 70 new mast sites across Northern Ireland designed to address the issue of complete voice, text and basic data 'not-spots' i.e. those areas where there is no coverage from any operator. The first site is expected to go live in the second quarter of 2015. While the project is focused on 2G technology, it is understood that the operators will future-proof the infrastructure being deployed, in order to further support 3G, 4G and beyond, where possible. My officials regularly provide assistance to DCMS colleagues on the implementation of the project locally.

Partial Not Spots

Furthermore, in December 2014, the UK Government announced that it had reached an agreement with the MNOs which will see the mobile industry investing £5 billion in UK infrastructure and increasing coverage by 2017 with a view to addressing the issue of 'partial not-spots' i.e. those areas where coverage is provided by just one or two of the four MNOs.

Roaming

With regard to mobile roaming, my predecessor wrote to Ed Vaizey MP, Minister for Culture and the Digital Economy, in the context of the ongoing negotiations on the European Single Market for Electronic Communications, registering disappointment that the ambitions around the removal of mobile roaming charges have been curtailed and replaced with a roaming allowance for consumers. As a result she has encouraged the UK Government to press for the highest allowance available to reduce the adverse impact of inadvertent roaming and I will continue to add my weight to that argument as negotiations progress.

Given this ongoing activity, I am of the view that the time is not yet right for my Department to consider any local intervention in the mobile market. However, my officials are maintaining a watching brief and, once the current initiatives have completed, will assess whether there is a need for any further government intervention.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how his Department plans to increase the number of Initial Public Offerings.

(AQW 46398/11-15)

Mr Bell: The decision on whether to become a public listed company rests with individual businesses.

As Enterprise Minister I am committed to promoting and supporting business development and creating the best economic conditions in which local companies can grow, compete globally and if appropriate become publically listed through Initial Public Offerings.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the Forthriver Innovation Centre.
(AQO 8318/11-15)

Mr Bell: Belfast City Council has made significant progress in its plans to develop an Innovation Centre on the Forthriver Business Park. A Contractor has been appointed and ground work is underway on the site.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the support his Department and InvestNI has given to Omagh and Strabane since 2011.

(AQO 8311/11-15)

Mr Bell: In the three years between 1st April 2011 and 31st March 2014, Invest NI's activity in Omagh District Council included three hundred and fifty six offers of support totalling seven point seven million pounds of assistance, contributing towards forty six point one million pounds of investment.

During the same period Invest NI's total activity in Strabane District Council Area has included two hundred and sixteen offers of support totalling three point seven million pounds of assistance, contributing towards seventeen point one million pounds of investment.

The development of Strabane Business Park has released approximately sixteen acres of new industrial land to support economic development not only within Strabane but also the wider West Tyrone area.

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the importance of an event such as the Giro d'Italia Gran Fondo for Northern Ireland.

(AQO 8312/11-15)

Mr Bell: The 2014 Giro d'Italia Grande Partenza was a tremendous success, showcasing Northern Ireland's spectacular scenery to a potential seven hundred and seventy five million viewers in one hundred and sixty four countries across the world and creating an economic impact of approximately two point five million pounds.

It attracted two hundred and twenty seven thousand visitors, vastly exceeding the one hundred and forty thousand target.

Through the Giro, we demonstrated our ability to deliver an outstanding event on the world stage and confirmed Northern Ireland's reputation as a wonderful place not only to visit, but to invest, do business, work and study.

Following this success, Tourism NI has secured a Gran Fondo, a unique sportive-style legacy event aimed at amateur cyclists.

Up to four thousand cyclists are expected to ride the choice of the one hundred and seventy seven kilometre Mourne route or the fifty eight kilometre Strangford route.

The Gran Fondo will increase awareness of Northern Ireland as a premium cycling and tourism destination and will have a positive economic impact with riders and their families filling local hotels and restaurants.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to outline any new initiatives designed to create job opportunities for young people.

(AQO 8313/11-15)

Mr Bell: The Regional Start Initiative is an Invest NI programme that provides support to locally focused entrepreneurs, including young people. The programme encourages entrepreneurs to produce a business plan which provides a template to plan and access sources of funds.

Under Local Government Reform responsibility for enterprise awareness, including initiatives to support young Entrepreneurs, transferred to the councils on the 1st April 2015. The Department in conjunction with Invest NI will work closely with Councils in the development of these initiatives.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what input his Department has in attracting Foreign Direct Investment for the development of businesses at the former Shackleton Barracks site at Ballykelly.

(AQO 8314/11-15)

Mr Bell: Invest NI will include the former Shackleton Barracks on visit programmes for potential inward investors as appropriate.

The final decision on investment location however rests solely with the investor.

Invest NI will market any suitable industrial property developed on the site to potential investors through its commercial property database. This can be accessed through the NI Business Information website.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of InvestNI's annual performance report in relation to its Programme for Government commitments.

(AQO 8315/11-15)

Mr Bell: The performance of Invest NI against the original Programme for Government targets of the agency is outstanding, with the agency significantly exceeding four of their five targets. This includes:

Thirty seven thousand two hundred and seventy seven jobs promoted against the original target of twenty five thousand new jobs;

Two point seven billion pounds investment promoted against the original target of one billion pounds;

Five hundred and twenty million pounds investment in R&D achieved against the original target of three hundred million pounds; and Thirty million pounds of loans made to SMEs through the Growth Loan Fund against a target of twenty eight million pounds.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the local economic benefit from the recent staging of the Irish Open at Royal County Down Golf Club.

(AQO 8316/11-15)

Mr Bell: I'm sure you will all agree that this year's Irish Open event was just as exciting as Portrush in 2012 which broke all previous records and became the only tournament to sell out in advance over the forty year history of the European Tour. With over one hundred thousand tickets sold, the event this year matched that success. Congratulations to Danish star Soren Kjeldsen who lifted the trophy after a dramatic play off hole.

The Irish Open provided Tourism Northern Ireland and Tourism Ireland with huge marketing and promotional opportunities, through hosting media and tour operator visits, celebrity participation in the Pro Am and a TV advertising campaign, the 'Unmissable Irish Open', which started airing in early March.

We pulled out all the stops to ensure that Northern Ireland staged a world class golfing event that will long be remembered by players and spectators alike. In May this year the eyes of the world were once again upon us.

The event helped grow overnight visitor numbers and spend, it provided a positive image of Newcastle and The Mournes internationally, and built on other recent high profile events to further demonstrate Northern Ireland's capacity to host major events.

Evaluation of the economic impact of the event is currently being undertaken and results are awaited.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the latest Northern Ireland Annual Tourism Statistics.

(AQO 8317/11-15)

Mr Bell: I am very encouraged by the latest tourism statistics published by NISRA which show a positive tourism performance last year, clearly demonstrating that the strong tourism momentum built up over the past few years continued into 2014.

With tourism spend in 2014 totalling seven hundred and fifty one million pounds we are now three-quarters of the way towards reaching our long term goal to make tourism here a one billion pound industry by 2020. It is also good news that overall visitor numbers increased by eleven per cent to four point five million in 2014, and I am particularly pleased that the number of external visitors continues to rise now reaching two point two million.

The latest figures point to continued overall growth in local tourism, a sector which is becoming an increasingly important driver for the Northern Ireland economy.

Our key Programme for Government targets for visitor numbers and tourism revenue have been achieved for 2014 and we are well on our way to achieving our 2015 targets.

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment if he plans to discuss the connection delays with Northern Ireland Electricity.

(AQO 8319/11-15)

Mr Bell: I am aware, generally, that grid constraints are impacting on connection times for developers and that the Member raised specific cases with my predecessor. Minister Foster called the players together to seek assurances that appropriate attention was given to developer concerns and to express the need for thought to be given to ways to improve connection times and problems. I sympathise with those who are affected and I intend to continue that dialogue. In the immediate aftermath of that meeting my Department has written to the Regulator and Northern Ireland Electricity asking for them to outline ways in which they can be innovative in managing investments under the existing Price Determination arrangements.

Mr Craig asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on any discussions he has had concerning direct flights and greater connectivity to European hub airports.

(AQO 8320/11-15)

Mr Bell: Hub airports provide important global connections to business and inbound tourism markets. Northern Ireland has good connectivity to Heathrow, the UK's hub airport, via British Airways and Aer Lingus.

The recent commencement of the KLM service from Belfast City Airport to Schiphol Airport in Amsterdam also provides important hub access in Mainland Europe. The new KLM service will improve Northern Ireland's connectivity to key markets in Europe, North America, Asia and the Middle East.

Department of the Environment

Mr Frew asked the Minister of the Environment how many planning applications in the Ballymena area were processed and concluded in March 2015; and of these, how many were (a) approvals; and (b) refusals.

(AQW 45345/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): The latest figures published by the Department are up to the end of December 2014 (Quarter 3). Figures up to the end of 31 March 2015 (Quarter 4/End of Year) are due to be published later this year.

To comply with the Statistics Code of Practice, the Department cannot release un-validated data into the public domain. Un-validated data is data which has been taken from a database which has not been subjected to rigorous data cleansing, checking and validating processes. To release such data would place the Department in breach of the Statistics Code of Practice. As such, the Department is unable to provide the requested information at this time. When the information is available I will ensure my officials provide it to you.

However, figures for Quarter 3 (October to December 2014), for the Ballymena local government district can be found in Table 1 below:

Table 1: Applications received and decided in Ballymena LGD for Q3 2014/15

Received	Decided	Approved	Refused
135	104	91	13

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment for a breakdown of the hospitality spend by (i) his Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies, in 2014/15.

(AQW 45569/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The total cost of hospitality provided by my Department in 2014-15 was £40,097. The total cost of hospitality provided by my Department's arm's-length bodies for 2014-15 was £4,804. Hospitality spend will cover the provision of refreshments for various meetings, workshops etc.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the location of the fourteen large-scale excavations carried out for the Northern Ireland Environment Agency by Queen's University's Centre for Archaeological Fieldwork.

(AQW 45745/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Our records indicate that during the period from January 2014 to December 2014 the Queen's University, Centre for Archaeological Fieldwork (CAF) undertook thirteen 'large-scale' excavations on behalf of the Northern Ireland Environment Agency. One excavation undertaken by CAF, at Cushendun sand dunes Co. Antrim, was not carried out on behalf of the Northern Ireland Environment Agency.

I enclose a list of these thirteen NIEA excavations and their locations as requested, in order of date: -

- 1 Tullaghoge Fort, Co Tyrone. January-February 2014
- 2 Carrickfergus Castle, Co Antrim. Inner & Outer Wards. February- March 2014.
- 3 Murlough Lower Beach, Sand dunes site. Co Down. March 2014
- 4 Arney Village, Co Fermanagh. Battle Site. April 2014.
- 5 Carnmoney, Co Antrim. Lime Kilns site. May 2014.
- 6 Dunluce Castle, Co Antrim. Gardens & Village. June to August 2014.
- 7 St Patrick's Wells at Struell, Co Down. June-July 2014.
- 8 Saul, Co Down. Medieval Shrine. June 2014
- 9 Tullaghoge Fort, Co Tyrone. September to October 2014.
10. Grey Point Fort, Co Down. October to November 2014.
11. Carrickfergus Castle, Co Antrim. Inner Ward. November 2014.
12. Dunboe, Co Londonderry. Early medieval Ecclesiastical enclosure. November 2014.
13. Dundrum Castle, Co Down. December 2014.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment what is the recognised definition of fracking applied by his Department.

(AQW 45753/11-15)

Mr Durkan: For any development for the exploration and/or production of hydrocarbons, the Department is guided by the definition set out in the recommendation paper published by EU Commission on the minimum principals for the exploration and production of hydrocarbons (such as shale gas) using high volume hydraulic fracturing.

In this paper, high volume hydraulic fracturing means injecting 1000m³ or more of water per fracturing stage or 10,000m³ or more of water during the entire fracturing process into a well.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment what are the criteria by which his Department distinguishes between conventional and unconventional extraction of oil and gas.

(AQW 45754/11-15)

Mr Durkan: In the oil and gas industry the terms conventional and unconventional are usually applied to the types of reservoir in which oil or gas may be trapped. In conventional reservoirs (e.g. sandstones, naturally fractured limestones) the oil or gas is trapped in well-connected spaces (pores) between the grains of the rock and flows readily from the rock into and up the well.

In contrast, in unconventional reservoirs the hydrocarbons may be adsorbed (attached) onto the grains or trapped in poorly connected micropores and fractures. In this case High Volume Hydraulic Fracturing (HVHF) is used to enhance the fracture network so that the hydrocarbons will flow from the reservoir into the well at the required rate.

The classification of underground resources is not a matter for DOE Planning. My Department is led by the advice provided by DETI Geological Survey who have the remit and expertise to classify the underground strata and resource potential.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment whether the public planning portal is being kept up to date in respect of the Ballinlea 2 planning application.

(AQW 45756/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The planning portal contains details of the application, associated documents submitted by the applicant, consultee comments and third party representations.

Following the transfer of planning functions to the local Councils the Department experienced a number of technical issues with its computer system. The planning portal was unavailable for DOE planning staff to upload data throughout most of April 2015 and records show that information was published from 1 May.

Access to the portal has now resumed and the portal is up to date.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment what monitoring is carried out to ensure that councils correctly apply the method of proportionality when distributing positions on council committees and outside bodies.

(AQW 45773/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The provisions in the Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 2014 (the 2014 Act) specify the procedures that a council must adopt to ensure that positions of responsibility and the membership of council committees reflects, as far as is practicable, the political balance on that council.

Section 6 of the 2014 Act specifies the positions of responsibility for a council. This includes appointment as an external representative of the council, where it is a nomination to serve as a member of any public body established by or under statutory provisions.

It is a matter for each council to determine the approach that it wishes to adopt for filling positions on outside bodies, over and above those specified as positions of responsibility under section 6 of the 2014 Act.

The 2014 Act provides that a council may use either the d'Hondt or Sainte-Laguë formula method or the Single Transferable Vote method for filling the positions of responsibility set out in section 6 of that Act. The d'Hondt method is specified as the default in Schedule 1 to the 2014 Act, which also sets out the operating procedures for each method. The 2014 Act also makes detailed provision, in Schedule 2, in relation to the procedures a council must use for appointing councillors to committees.

It is a matter for each council as a separate legal entity to determine the method that it wishes to adopt for filling positions of responsibility and for appointing councillors to committees, in accordance with the requirements specified in the 2014 Act. The Department, in November 2014, issued statutory guidance to councils on the application of each of the specified methods. It is a matter for each council to ensure the correct application of the methods it has adopted.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 44276/11-15, to specify the research which informed his answer that there is no available evidence to determine the threat posed by the cumulative effects of septic tanks on Lough Neagh Special Protection Area; and for his assessment of (i) the Northern Ireland Assembly 2009 investigation into the use of septic tanks in Northern Ireland, Briefing Note 103/09; and (ii) the Agri-food and Biosciences Institute 2011 report entitled Phosphorous Inputs into Lough Neagh.

(AQW 45779/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The process for obtaining a consent for a discharge of sewage effluent from a single domestic dwelling has undergone a significant review since the Northern Ireland Assembly Briefing Note, no. 103/09, entitled "An investigation into the use of septic tanks in Northern Ireland", was published. This provision provides for a much more robust assessment of applications and will ensure that any potential/existing impacts from single domestic treatment systems are fully assessed and addressed as part of the application process.

This process, introduced in January 2012 following an extensive period of public consultation, and as referred to in my response to AQW 44276/11-15, requires applicants for proposed systems, i.e. those systems not in place at the time of application, to provide evidence that the type of system to be installed complies with the appropriate British Standards. In addition, all applications for existing systems will be inspected by the Department prior to granting of consent to ensure that the system is operating correctly.

As stated in my response to AQW 44276/11-15, the Department does not have the evidence to determine the nature of the threat, if any, posed to water quality in Lough Neagh as a result of septic tanks. Indeed, within the section entitled "Environmental Damage from Septic Tanks" in Briefing Note 103/09, the report states, "There is clear evidence that there is in fact a great deal of environmental damage being caused by septic tanks in Northern Ireland particularly in key waterways like Lough Erne and Lough Neagh. However there is also a paucity of data on this subject."

The Agri-Food and Biosciences Institute has carried out a number of studies regarding the impacts of nutrients on freshwaters, including phosphorus inputs to Lough Neagh. However, reported estimates available for septic tanks are based on data for the period up to the late 1990s. Since this time, overall total phosphorus levels in Lough Neagh have declined. Also as stated in my response to AQW 44276/11-15, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) is aware of research and ongoing studies in other parts of the UK and Ireland. Evidence from these will be reviewed as and when completed to provide more up to date assessment.

Finally as previously stated in my response to AQW 44276/11-15, should a potential detrimental impact on water quality due to the effect of septic tanks at a catchment level be detected, NIEA will provide advice and guidance to the owners of any systems suspected of contributing to the impact to resolve any issues. There are, however, processes in place whereby enforcement action can be taken by NIEA depending on individual circumstances, should co-operation not be forthcoming.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 38686/11-15, to list the extant consents and permissions which are required to be reviewed under the requirements of the Habitats Regulations, including those which will remain the responsibility of his Department.

Mr Durkan: The Habitats regulations requires all competent authorities (bodies responsible for decision making) to review consents and permissions following the designation of a European protected site. For example, councils are responsible for reviewing all relevant extant planning permissions relating to a European site designated after 1 April 2015. The exception being those permissions relating to development that will remain the responsibility of the Department to determine.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the consultees in respect of the Ballinlea 2 planning application, including when each responded.

(AQW 45796/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Officials consulted with the following consultees. (Response dates are in brackets)

NIEA

- Water Management Unit (1st May 2015)
- Natural Heritage (16th April 2015)
- Landscape Architects (19th Mar 2015)
- Land Resource Management (31st Mar 2015)
- Protecting Historic Monuments (20th Feb 2015)
- Industrial Pollution Radiochemical Inspectorate (20th Feb 2015)

- NI Tourist Board (29th April 2015)

The Department issued a consultation to Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council on the 21st May 2015 and awaits the council's comments.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the fourteen large scale excavation works carried out on behalf of NIEA by Queen's University Belfast Centre for Archaeological Fieldwork.

(AQW 45798/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Records held by my Department indicate that during the period from January 2014 to December 2014 the Queen's University, Centre for Archaeological Fieldwork (CAF) undertook thirteen 'large-scale' excavations on behalf of the Northern Ireland Environment Agency. These were undertaken for a variety of reasons, centring on conservation requirements but included a significant outreach capacity and community involvement. Such projects saw the participation of school children, parents and other adult volunteers across Northern Ireland. In addition, as the attached information will show, these excavations supported my Department's aim to enhance visitor experience at heritage sites in Northern Ireland. I have attached an appendix to this letter which gives an assessment of the thirteen excavations undertaken, in order of date.

An assessment of the thirteen 'large-scale' excavations carried out in 2014 by CAF on behalf of HMU.

1 Tullaghoge Fort, Co Tyrone. January-February 2014

The primary aim of this excavation was to assess the presence and survival of archaeological remains close to the Tullywiggan Road at this site prior to the proposed development of new visitor facilities including a car park, toilet and picnic facilities. A total of thirty-three trenches were excavated which uncovered many finds within the topsoil, including a small corpus of post-medieval pottery sherds, probable prehistoric pottery, and flint artefacts. In addition, a circular feature was uncovered which contained charcoal rich strata and a substantial amount of charred grain and seeds. A sample was submitted for radiocarbon dating, the results of which indicate the feature dates to the 7th Century AD. It most likely represents the remains of a corn drying kiln similar to one uncovered closer to the Fort later in 2014 (discussed below at excavation 9). The stone footings for a wall were encountered in Trench 16, which are likely to represent a building shown on the 1st edition OS map. Evidence of Early Mesolithic activity, in the form of flint artefacts, was also uncovered. This is a relatively rare find and marks Tullaghoge as a place linked to some of the earliest settlers in Northern Ireland.

2 Carrickfergus Castle, Co Antrim. Inner & Outer Wards. February- March 2014.

This excavation took place over an eight-week period during February to April 2014. The primary research aims of the excavation were to aid in the enhancement of the visitor experience at the monument by establishing the nature, depth and survival of archaeological strata and masonry at various points in the castle. To this end eight trenches were excavated within the Inner Ward and four in the Outer Ward. Prehistoric, Medieval and Post-Medieval masonry, strata and artefacts were uncovered in the twelve manually excavated trenches. Results show that the first activity undertaken at this site dates to around 5,000-6,000 years ago in the Neolithic period. Among the other significant finds were the remains of a nineteenth century miniature railway used to transport cannon shot and ammunition into the castle grounds.

3 Murlough Lower Beach, Sand dunes site. Co Down. March 2014

This excavation was undertaken at the site of a reported metal detecting find of late 4th century AD personal items. HMU understand that the case is currently going through the Coroner's Court. Nothing else was uncovered by the excavation.

4 Arney Village, Co Fermanagh. Battle Site. April 2014.

These excavations were part of a community-led heritage project in this local area of Fermanagh, where DOE partnered with HLF and local cross-community groups to explore the latter's heritage. Local schoolchildren, their parents and adult volunteers took part in an excavation at a nineteenth century National School and adjacent brickmakers' cottage. Another part of the project saw the same breadth of participation in an investigation which found the site of the battlefield of the Ford of the Biscuits. This was a battle between an Elizabethan Crown army relief column (bound for Enniskillen Castle) and the Gaelic forces of Fermanagh lord Hugh Maguire. The battle dates to AD1594 and its location was wrongly located on modern maps until this successful project found the true location, some 1-2 miles away.

5 Carnmoney, Co Antrim. Lime Kilns site. May 2014.

This excavation took place at the site of disused nineteenth century lime kilns at Carnmoney. It was undertaken for conservation reasons as a joint project with the Belfast Hills Partnership and involved community volunteers and school children. The remains of the kilns were uncovered in order that subsequent conservation works would allow them to become a local feature and visitor attraction.

6 Dunluce Castle, Co Antrim. Gardens & Village. June to August 2014.

These excavations were undertaken in order to inform the conservation needs and presentational information requirements for the proposed DOE enhancement of the visitor experience at Dunluce Castle. The work involved the excavation of many small trenches throughout the DOE owned areas of the village and gardens. Apart from a wealth of information with regard to the structure of the village, its houses and gardens, the excavation also uncovered earlier settlement evidence. This evidence has been dated to the period AD1400-1600 and interpreted as representing, in the main, MacQuillan settlement at Dunluce prior to the plantation period.

7 St Patrick's Wells at Struell, Co Down. June-July 2014

This was a research excavation which took place over five weeks aiming to locate the early medieval church at Struell and provide further information for the visitor experience. Three trenches were opened with one revealing the location of the medieval church as represented by a sub-rectangular, stone-flagged floor (5m x 7m). Although no in-situ walls were uncovered, dressed sandstone fragments found amongst the disturbed floor flagstones must have come from the church architecture here. Fragments of carved sandstone mouldings also survive built into the Drinking Well and ladies bathhouse all of which can be dated to sometime between the thirteenth and fifteenth centuries AD. Two phases of human burials were identified. The first was represented by adult burials interred below the floor of the church. It seems probable that this occurred after the church had gone out of use but the evidence for this is equivocal. The second phase consisted of juvenile burials, which were later and interred within the primary post-abandonment layers that sealed the disturbed flagged floor of the church. The discovery of juveniles within the deposits overlying the flags, would suggest that the ruins and outline of the church were likely to have been visible when they were buried.

8 Saul, Co Down. Potential Medieval Shrine. June 2014

This research excavation investigated a stone built structure located within the graveyard at Saul Church. The dig also formed part of the Queen's University's undergraduate training excavation field school. The building was proposed by new research to have been a medieval port-hole shrine dating to the late 12th century, and to have originally contained relics of St Patrick, St Brigid and St Columba. This very significant possibility was investigated over the course of the two week excavation. The results of the dig demonstrated that it is likely that the structure was in fact built much later - in the late 16th century, or early 17th century - re-using stone from the abbey.

9 Tullaghoge Fort, Co Tyrone. September to October 2014.

This excavation was undertaken in order to inform the conservation needs and presentational information requirements for the proposed DOE enhancement of the visitor experience at Tullaghogue Fort. It followed the dig detailed at no. 1 of this list and involved a significant volunteer aspect from local Primary School groups as well as adult volunteers. Six trenches were excavated at various locations in the immediate vicinity of the fort, with one aimed at providing information as to the location of the O'Neill inauguration chair, a prominent fixture of the site in the Late Medieval period, but which was destroyed in AD1602. The location of the chair remains elusive but the dig did uncover the remains of a cereal-drying kiln which produced a radiocarbon date of AD 722-985.

10. Grey Point Fort, Helen's Bay, Co Down. October to November 2014.

This excavation was undertaken in order to inform the conservation needs and presentational information requirements for the proposed enhancement of the visitor experience at Grey Point Fort. It too involved significant participation from local Primary School groups. The dig uncovered parts of a trench system, dugout and machine gun emplacement which are thought to date to the First World War but are known to have been adapted and re-used during the Second World War. The remains of a defensive concrete block house were also investigated.

11. Carrickfergus Castle, Co Antrim. Outer Ward. November 2014

This excavation was undertaken following that of February-March 2014 in order to finalise the location of a temporary building required to receive visitors at the site. The excavation uncovered below ground remains of the Castle's middle ward defensive wall and have allowed the subsequent placement and erection of the temporary building without any unnecessary damage to archaeological remains.

12. Dunboe, Co Londonderry. Early Christian Ecclesiastical enclosure. November 2014

This excavation was undertaken in order to investigate several below ground anomalies identified during a May 2014 geophysical survey of land beside, and possibly within, a known early church site. The results showed that the anomalies were not archaeological in nature and no significant remains were uncovered.

13. Dundrum Castle, Co Down. December 2014.

This excavation was undertaken in order to inform the location of a proposed new visitor centre at Dundrum Castle. The excavation investigated two potential locations and uncovered a discreet area of probable Post-Medieval archaeological remains at one of the potential sites. This information will form part of future consideration and decision making at the castle site.

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the reasons for the delay in answering AQW 43579/11-15. (AQW 45832/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I can confirm that AQW 43579/11-15 was answered on 28 May 2015. Please accept my apologies for the oversight which was responsible for the delay in providing a response.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW38686/11-15 to advise if permissions which were extant at the time of designation of an European site, but have since been implemented because of his Department's failure to comply with the Habitats Regulations, will now form part of required reviews.

Mr Durkan: The Conservation (Natural Habitats) (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) Regulations 2015 amended the Conservation (Natural Habitats etc.) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1995 and conferred responsibility for reviewing planning permissions on councils.

The specific obligations on a planning authority to review such permissions are applicable unless the development to which it related has been completed; or it was granted subject to a condition as to the time within which the development to which it related was to be begun and that time has expired without the development having been begun; or it was granted for a limited period and that period has expired.

Therefore permissions extant at the time of a designation but have since been completed or have expired are not required to form part of the duty to review.

Whilst responsibility for reviewing planning permissions which are required to be reviewed now lies with councils, the transitional provisions in the 2015 Regulations enable any work done by the Department before 1 April 2015 in reviewing any permissions to be treated as if it had been done by councils thereby allowing them to take over from the Department and avoid duplication of effort.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW42654/11-15, why the figures he provided differ from those provided by the applicant on the P1 application forms for both Z/2012/1387/F and Z/2014/1346/F, (AQW 45843/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The figures previously provided in response to AQW42654/11-15 are from the addendum to the Environmental Statement (ES) dated October 2013. These are the figures that were considered when determining the planning application. These figures are lower than those in the P1 application forms as the facility originally proposed to treat 240,000 tonnes per annum of refuse derived fuel.

The addendum to the ES subsequently reduced the throughput to 120,000 tonnes per annum. Strategic Planning Division (SPD) did not consider it necessary to amend the P1 application form as the information was before the Department in the ES.

The ES for planning application Z/2012/1387/F and the supporting document for Z/2014/1346/F correctly identified that ash would be produced, including the relative quantities and advised that it would be transferred to a suitably licensed facility. SPD considered this adequate for the purposes of determining the planning application.

NIEA is responsible for the regulation of this facility and will ensure the recovery or disposal of the ash is fully compliant with regulatory controls.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW42739/11-15, why there was no requirement for the environmental effects of the disposal of toxic fly to be included as part of the overall Environmental Impact Assessment for planning approvals Z/2012/1387/F and Z/2014/1346/F. (AQW 45846/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The purpose of the Environmental Statement (ES) is to identify the main effects which the development is likely to have on the environment. In this case the ES identified that 30,000 tonnes of both bottom ash and fly ash will be removed from the site per annum resulting in 14 vehicle movements per day to remove the ash from the site. The traffic impact of the aspect of the development was therefore the main effect that was considered. The ES was subject to consultation with a range of environmental bodies and it was considered to be sufficient for the purposes of the EIA Regulations. There were no objections to either of the planning applications.

The fly ash from the facility is considered to be a hazardous waste and as such, its transport will be subject to a strict consignment note control which confirms its arrival at the authorised facility. The applicant has stated it will be taken off-site for disposal at a hazardous landfill or recovery at a suitably licensed facility. Whilst the final recipient of the ash is yet to be confirmed, my Department's regulation of the facility will ensure that the disposal or recovery of the ash is fully compliant with the requirements of the permit that issued to the applicant under the Pollution Prevention and Control (Industrial Emissions) Regulations (NI) 2013 (PPC).

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment whether the regulatory system is adequate to cope with unconventional oil and gas exploration and extraction. (AQW 45873/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department is co-funding an all island research programme into this issue. An investigation into the adequacy of the current environmental regulatory framework is a specific project strand within the overall programme.

The research programme is scheduled to report in the latter part of 2016 and will further inform my assessment of the regulatory system in relation to this issue.

My position, as stated publicly a number of times, is that there should be a presumption against the exploitation of unconventional hydrocarbon extraction until the Department is satisfied that there is sufficient and robust evidence on all environmental impacts.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment where is the policy set out against which applications for unconventional oil and gas exploration are judged. (AQW 45874/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The planning policy for minerals development is contained within 'A Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland' (PSRNI). This document sets out the current planning policy context for, inter alia, planning applications for unconventional oil and gas exploration and therefore such proposals fall to be considered on their own merits under the provisions of the PSRNI along with any other material planning consideration.

Minerals development policy contained within a PSRNI has been transferred into the draft Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS), where it has been consolidated and expressed strategically. The draft SPPS reaffirms my position that there should be a presumption against the exploitation of unconventional hydrocarbon extraction until there is sufficient and robust evidence on all environmental impacts.

My Department is co-funding an all island research programme into the environmental impacts associated with unconventional gas exploration and extraction. The research programme has been designed to produce outputs that will assist regulators in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland in fulfilling their statutory roles regarding any potential hydraulic fracturing activity. The research programme is scheduled to report in the latter part of 2016.

My Department's confirmed strategic planning policy position for minerals development, including that for unconventional oil and gas exploration, will be set out in the final SPPS which I intend to publish as soon as possible, following its consideration by Executive Committee colleagues.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment what permitted development rights exist in respect of oil and gas exploration.

(AQW 45875/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Permitted development rights for mineral exploration, including oil and gas, are provided for under Part 16 of the Schedule to the Planning (General Permitted Development) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015. These rights allow certain specified development on land in any period not exceeding four months consisting of drilling boreholes, carrying out seismic surveys or making other excavations.

There are also certain limitations and conditions associated with this temporary permitted development right including pre-commencement notification to the relevant district council giving details of the location, target mineral, details of plant and operations and anticipated timescale. A developer, should they wish to invoke these permitted development rights, must notify the district council of these details in order that a decision can be taken on whether or not the permitted development right should be removed and the proposal made subject to the full planning application process.

In addition to notifying the district council, the developer must also ensure that:-

- any operation is not within an area of special scientific interest or a site of archaeological interest;
- any explosive charge of more than 1 kilogram is not used; and
- any structure assembled or provided is not more than 3 metres in height where such a structure would be within 3 kilometres of an airport.

Part 16 permitted development rights also provide conditions which the developer must adhere to, including adequate sealing of any boreholes, protection of trees on the site and restoration of the land to its condition before the development took place.

Furthermore, permitted development is excluded where the proposed development requires environmental assessment. This means that where development is identified in either of the Schedules to the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015 and Environmental Impact Assessment is applicable, permitted development rights do not apply (Article 3(8) of the Planning (General Permitted Development) Order (Northern Ireland) 2015 refers).

In the interests of clarity, it is important to note that the temporary permitted development rights for minerals exploration do not allow the commercial extraction of minerals, including oil and gas. Such activity will be subject to the full planning application process as well as relevant Environmental Impact Assessment, licensing and environmental permitting arrangements.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment to detail on what conditions the European Commission did not take forward infraction penalties in regards to the Executive's failure to protect the reefs of horse mussels in Strangford Lough; and how the Executive is currently meeting each of these conditions.

(AQW 45889/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Responsibility for the protection of horse mussel reefs in Strangford Lough rests with DOE and DARD.

The European Commission closed the infraction case relating to the Strangford Lough horse mussel reefs in 2013 on the basis that both departments delivered on an action plan agreed by the Commission.

A Restoration Working Group was set up to monitor progress against the plan. In addition to officials from DOE and DARD the group comprises interested stakeholders including Ulster Wildlife, the complainant, to the Commission.

The group is satisfied with progress to date and has just completed its mid-term review of the plan. As a consequence, the plan is now being revised and the group hopes to ratify these revisions in June before seeking further approval from the Commission shortly thereafter. I understand from informal discussions between my officials and officials from the Commission, that the Commission is broadly content with the proposed changes.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment why, after writing to the Lough Neagh Sand Traders in September 2014 requesting that they cease dredging until the unregulated activities on the Lough are resolved, the unauthorised extraction continued to take place; and to detail what specific action the Department took in response to this.

(AQW 45890/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Having advised the sand traders that their activities were unauthorised I had hoped that the operators would have stopped dredging voluntarily pending the resolution of the matter. As it appears to my Department that this work has continued, my officials have since taken formal enforcement action through the issuing of Enforcement Notices.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on Northern Ireland's position in respect of the European Water Framework Directive.

(AQW 45891/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Water Framework Directive (WFD) is the key EU water Directive, requiring Member States to aim to achieve good ecological status or good ecological potential for waterbodies by Dec 2015. The Directive allows Member States to set alternative objectives for 2021 or 2027 in certain circumstances, such as where there are technical feasibility and/or disproportionate cost issues preventing the achievement of good ecological status by 2015.

To meet the requirements of the WFD, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency published River Basin Management Plans (RBMPs) in December 2009, which cover the period 2009-2015. The RBMPs stated that around 25% of river water bodies were at good status in 2009 and as a result of work undertaken during the first WFD cycle and some changes in the environmental standards the number of river water bodies at good status has increased to 32% based on classification assessments carried out in 2014. The overall percentage of all water bodies at good status at the end of 2014 was 37%.

To date, the Department has implemented measures and produced progress reports in accordance with the targets and timetable set out in the Water Framework Directive. The Department also provided details of the objectives of the first cycle RBMPs to EU officials in March 2010 and NIEA will submit a further progress report in 2016. In December 2014, the Department published draft second cycle RBMPs, which cover the period 2016-2021, for public consultation. Consultation on these draft RBMPs ends on 22 June 2015 and the draft plans will be further refined and amended, as appropriate, to reflect comments received during the consultation period. The final plans will be published in December 2015. These will set out the objectives for the second cycle based on progress achieved by the end of 2015, the assessment of pressures on the water environment and an assessment of what is achievable by 2021.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of the Environment whether he is aware of the Northern Ireland Executive currently facing the threat of infraction penalties from the European Commission for failing to comply with any environmental Directive.
(AQW 45893/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department will of course always seek to ensure the timely transposition and implementation of all European legislation and thereby avoid the threat of infraction penalties.

Where infraction proceedings are brought by the European Commission against a Member State it is because the Commission considers there has been an infringement of EU law, typically where the Commission believes that a Member State has failed to correctly transpose or implement an EU Directive or Regulation.

However prior to any formal legal referral to the European Court of Justice, and potential financial penalties, the initial stages of the infraction process involve the Commission setting out any concerns it may have and providing the Member State with an opportunity to respond addressing those concerns.

I am fully aware that the Commission has, through the infraction process, raised concerns with the UK, as Member State, regarding a number of environmental issues. As has been the case in the past, whether infraction proceedings relate to the UK as a whole or Northern Ireland in particular, we will either seek to demonstrate that compliance has been achieved or prioritise any actions necessary to achieve full compliance to the satisfaction of the Commission.

Given the sensitivities around the infraction process, which is quasi-legal in nature, and in line with protocol, correspondence between the Commission and the Member State on infraction cases is regarded by both parties as confidential between them. I can however assure you that my Department and I are taking all steps necessary to minimise the risk of any infraction penalties.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment how many illegal landfill sites are located within the Faughan catchment area; and what threats these sites pose to the River Faughan Special Area of Conservation and Derry's water supply.
(AQW 45944/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Northern Ireland Environment Agency is currently pursuing legal proceedings in the criminal courts, concerning two sites in the River Faughan catchment area where waste has been confirmed to have been deposited without the necessary authorisations. These sites are the former premises of City Industrial Waste and Campsie Sand and Gravel respectively, both located on the Mobuoy Road.

I remain committed to protecting the River Faughan. To that end, in January 2015, I instructed my Department to initiate a project aimed at mitigating the impact of leachate from the Mobuoy waste sites. This project will further inform the potential risks arising from the illegal waste deposits, implement both necessary short-term leachate management works and 12 months environmental monitoring and identify potential remediation options to manage the environmental impacts with whole life costs.

Short-term leachate management works were undertaken and completed in April at both the Mobuoy Road sites. This work will reduce the risk of direct entry of both leachate and leachate contaminated water into the tributary running along both waste sites that runs directly into the River Faughan.

Water testing at sites on the Faughan suggests good water quality in the river. However, I cannot comment on issues pertaining to the Derry City Council water supply.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment what is the safe level for emissions of fine and ultra-fine particles between PM2.5 - 0.1µ microns from the proposed Bombardier incinerator, East Belfast.
(AQW 45945/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Your question to the Department of Health, Social Service and Public Safety has been referred to my Department for answer.

My Department has already provided this answer in response to AQW 42653/11-15.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 37624/11-25, for an update on the discussions between his officials and PSNI road traffic police officers, in helping to determine whether such a scheme would be beneficial locally.

(AQW 45947/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials have discussed this matter further with PSNI officers, who have expressed significant concerns over how such a scheme would operate in practice. For example, while I understand that the personal information is folded into the display disc, it would be inappropriate to ask or require drivers to have personal information readily accessible in their vehicle which may raise concerns about identity theft. Another concern relates to circumstances where the person involved in a collision is not the regular driver of the vehicle. In such circumstances it is likely to be difficult to ensure that the disc information does not inadvertently cause confusion for paramedics attending the incident, which in turn may lead to inappropriate treatment. I understand that PSNI have also spoken to Ambulance and Fire Service contacts and that they share the same concerns.

Given this advice from the emergency services, I do not intend to take further action to pursue a scheme that would seek to have vacant tax disc holders used to house emergency contact and medical alert information.

Mr B McCreagh asked the Minister of the Environment what discussions he has had with the Minister for Regional Development on protecting biodiversity in grass verges.

(AQW 46019/11-15)

Mr Durkan: To date, I have not had direct discussions with the Minister for Regional Development regarding the protection of biodiversity in grass verges. However, at an operational level, my officials in the Environment and Marine Group have been liaising with officials from Transport NI since 2012 regarding the management of road verges for biodiversity.

Back in 2012, my predecessor, Alex Attwood MLA attended a meeting with An Carn (Carntogher Community Association) regarding their concerns about the cutting of wildflower rich verges and the spread of invasive alien species within their area. Following on from that meeting, my officials worked with An Carn and Transport NI on a Road Verge Pilot Project which was well received by both the local community and Transport NI staff.

Following on from the success of the pilot there was a desire to upscale the project. Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council, DOE, Transport NI and An Carn have been working in partnership to seek funding for the 'Don't Mow, Let it Grow' project which aims to challenge our desire for neat and tidy mown grass and to restore a number of road verges and public grasslands to flower-rich meadows. These will provide important additional sources of nectar for bees and other pollinators.

The Heritage Lottery Fund has earmarked £135,000 funding in support of the three-year 'Don't Mow, Let it Grow' project and has provided £9,000 upfront to help develop the plans in more detail for this innovative and community lead project.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether the addendum to the environmental statement accompanying Z/2012/1387/F was advertised in accordance with the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012.

(AQW 46022/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I can confirm that the addendum to the environmental statement for this planning application was received by my Department on 4 November 2013 and was advertised in accordance with the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2012 on 22 November 2013 in the Belfast Telegraph, Newsletter, North Belfast News, South Belfast News and Irish News and on 23 November 2013 in the Andersonstown News. No objections were received as a result of the advertisement.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of the Environment what strategy his Department has in place to tackle illegal sand extraction from Lough Neagh.

(AQW 46062/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials have taken formal enforcement action in respect of unauthorised sand extraction from Lough Neagh through the issuing of Enforcement Notices.

My officials will monitor that the notices have been complied with and should activity be seen to continue, there are further powers available to me if it is considered expedient to use them.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 45548/11-15, to detail the discovery and development phases of the Driver and Vehicle Agency's new driver licensing IT system; and whether it will reduce the cost of driving licences.

(AQW 46117/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The replacement driver licensing system is currently being developed utilising an 'Agile' development methodology, to replace the existing system. 'Discovery' and 'Development' are standard phases within Agile methodology.

The Discovery Phase of the new driver licensing IT system is about capturing information and creating a workable solution for the application. It involves determining the user needs that the service should meet, the constraints that exist, and the measures that will be used to evaluate and continuously improve the service.

The Development Phase is about developing a prototype of the new system while continuing to build upon the findings of the Discovery Phase. It involves selecting and testing technologies, and developing business scenarios identified as high priority during Discovery. During the development phase the solution is developed and delivered in phases to the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) who then has the opportunity to review the system and make any changes necessary. This allows for continual refinement of the new system in line with the needs of the business.

The first phase of the replacement driver licensing system is scheduled to go live in April 2016 and will deliver improvements to the customer experience, service efficiencies and other enhancements. The ability to reduce fees will be heavily dependent on the availability of a means to verify the identity of the user applying to use the service and subsequently the uptake of online transactions. Once the first phase goes live, this will provide an opportunity to review the fees currently charged for the processing of driver licences.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of the Environment to provide the (a) reference numbers, (b) capacity in megawatts and (c) location of all large scale ground mounted solar applications (i) approved since January 2013, (ii) refused since January 2013, (iii) lodged since January 2013; and (iv) pre-applications lodged since January 2013.

(AQW 46118/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Information regarding energy capacity and whether the solar photovoltaics are ground mounted are not always included in the description of a planning application for solar energy under Planning Policy Statement (PPS) 18 - Renewable Energy. This information is therefore not captured and recorded by the Department in the format requested. The Department does not hold information on pre-applications lodged for solar photovoltaics.

In order to provide assistance the following can be provided:

- A list of all solar energy applications received between January 2013 and March 2015;
- A list of all solar energy applications approved between January 2013 and March 2015;
- A list of all solar energy applications refused between January 2013 and March 2015.

The list includes description and location of the applications which may assist in identifying the specific information you require. By way of further assistance any application listed that refers to "ground mounted" or "solar farm" in the description is highlighted in bold.

Given the volume of records my officials will place a copy of the lists in the Assembly library.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister of the Environment what legislation is in place relating to trailers towed by motor vehicles and has there been any recent changes to this legislation.

(AQW 46125/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Article 4(4) of the Third Directive on Driving Licences (Directive 2006/126/EC) sets out requirements in relation to driver licensing; these include those relating to the size of trailer that can be towed by an individual with a category B driving licence. These requirements are transposed into NI legislation in regulation 3 of, and Schedule 1 to, the Motor Vehicles (Driving Licences) Regulations (NI) 1996. The Regulations came into operation on 19 January 2013.

At the start of 2015, an amendment was made to the Motor Vehicles (Driving Licences) Regulations (NI) 1996, where the upgrading of entitlements given after passing a second test were changed. Previously, drivers with entitlement to drive both a minibus (category D1) and a goods vehicle with trailer (category C+E or C1+E) were entitled automatically to drive a minibus with a trailer (category D1+E), without the need to take a further test. As this automatic entitlement is not permitted by the Third Directive it was removed by amendment SR 2015/6 of the 1996 regulations. The changes made by this amendment were not retrospective, so drivers who had the automatic entitlement still retain it but new drivers are now required to take an appropriate test.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment what evaluation was carried out in relation to the Natural Heritage Research Partnership between 2008 and 2015.

(AQW 46318/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Natural Heritage Research Partnership (NHRP) contract was awarded to Queen's University in 2008 after a competition advertised in the European Journal. From the outset the governance of the Project has placed a strong emphasis on evaluation. A NHRP Management Committee was established to assess and overview the progress of the contract. Individual project reports were submitted and scrutinised at monthly meetings. Each project had a Client Officer identified to assess projects and provide a Post Project Evaluation (PPE) on its completion.

Following the initial 4 year period of the NHRP the Department carried out a full PPE of the Contract. The work was assessed as being of high quality and was delivering on all of the Objectives listed while providing value for money. Based on this evaluation it was agreed to extend the contract for a further 3 years, 2012 – 2015.

Independent evaluation of the quality of the work was provided by peer review of scientific papers which were submitted to a variety of high impact international Scientific Journals. Sixty six scientific papers have been published so far as a result of commissioned research between 2008–2015. A further independent evaluation of the project is evident from the 'Research Excellence Framework Review 2014' of Queen's University. The Review system is used to rank UK Universities on their research outputs, including a 'Pathway to Impact' study. In Queen's School of Biological Sciences this review focused on the NHRP demonstrating 'impact beyond academia' (for example, on Government Policy or conservation action). Queen's scored 3* equating to an internationally excellent standard for this submission and contributing to Queen's achieving a top 10 position among the UK Universities for 'research intensity'.

A further Post Project Evaluation will be produced on completion of the current contract 2012-2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment whether a taxi company was granted a temporary licence or permit to operate a booking office for exclusive use at the Irish Golf Open in Newcastle, County Down; and if so, who granted this temporary licence and on what dates did it commence and conclude.

(AQW 46341/11-15)

Mr Durkan: No application has been received from a taxi operator to add an operating centre to their licence at the Irish Golf Open, Newcastle.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment to detail which beaches received the Seaside Award for good water quality in 2015.
(AQW 46389/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Seaside Award flag is awarded to beaches which meet mandatory water quality standards according to the EC Bathing Water Directive and are also clean, well-managed and safe. It is divided into two award categories which are Resort and Rural. Six Seaside Resort Awards and four Seaside Rural Awards were awarded.

Details of award winners for 2015 are as follows:

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 19199/11-15, for an update on the information provided.

(AQW 32812/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): The PEACE III Operational Programme names several target beneficiary groups, including both (i) ex-prisoners and their families and (ii) victims of the conflict.

The programme adheres to the legislative definition of a victim, and does not record data against the term “innocent victims”. Neither does the programme categorise grant recipients under the terms “victims groups” or “ex-prisoners groups”. For this reason, comprehensive details of funding awarded to target beneficiary groups cannot be readily provided.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel due to the non-domestic revaluation, could he detail the number of small business ratepayers for whom the rateable values have (i) risen and (ii) fallen.
(AQW 45848/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The impact of the non-domestic revaluation specifically on small business ratepayers cannot be assessed because businesses are classified as small or micro with reference to employee numbers; those with 49 employees or less. Over 98% of businesses in Northern Ireland fall into that category. My Department does not hold the precise information requested.

The Small Business Rate Relief (SBRR) scheme is confined to ratepayers occupying premises assessed at £15,000 Net Annual Value (NAV) or below. I can confirm that as a result of the Revaluation, 767 ratepayers who had previously qualified, have fallen outside the scheme limits, however, 1,351 ratepayers have come into the scheme. More now qualify, which explains why the Executive increased the available funding this financial year, a decision taken despite the NI Centre for Economic Policy’s recommendation to cap it at a lower level. Of the 25,146 properties currently included in the SBRR scheme, 14,971 have increased in value, 5,753 have decreased in value and 4,422 stayed the same.

It is important to note that the extent and direction of a value change at revaluation does not convey the actual impact on the ratepayer because of the need to compare two distinct tax bases: one assessed at 2001 values, the other at 2013 values which are on average higher. The Regional Rate poundage actually went down correspondingly to ensure it was revenue neutral. Furthermore, the level of SBRR entitlement may have changed along with the value; there are also varying District Rates and differing rates of convergence subsidies to consider. Finally, it is important to note that the figures for increase and decrease in rateable value include those that have increased or decreased by as little as one pound.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of home births, in each Health and Social Care Trust, in each of the last three years.
(AQW 45954/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The number of home births, in each Health and Social Care Trust, registered during 2011 to 2013 can be found in the table below. Finalised birth data for the 2013 registration year are the latest available. Finalised data for 2014 will be available in Summer 2015.

Table 1: Home Births by Health and Social Care Trust, 2011-2013

Trust Name	Registration Year
	2011	2012	2013
Belfast HSCT	14	10	20
Northern HSCT	15	22	22
South Eastern HSCT	13	13	30
Southern HSCT	16	13	15
Western HSCT	15	14	18
Northern Ireland	73	72	105

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel following the revaluation, how many businesses in Coleraine town centre business district had their rateable valuation (i) increased and (ii) decreased.
(AQW 45987/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not hold the data in the format requested; however, the old wards of Central, Mountsandel and Waterside have been used to define Coleraine town centre business district. Within this area there are 984 non domestic properties.

As a result of the revaluation 419 properties had an increase in Net Annual Value with an average increase of £3,886; 392 properties had a decrease in Net Annual Value with an average decrease of £7,082; and 173 were unchanged.
Coleraine Town Centre Business District

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what was the average (i) increase and (ii) decrease in the rateable valuation in the previous year for businesses in Coleraine town centre business district.
(AQW 45989/11-15)

Limavady Town Centre Business: Rateable Valuation

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel following the revaluation, how many businesses in Limavady town centre business district had their rateable valuation (i) increased and (ii) decreased.

(AQW 45990/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not hold the data precisely in the format requested; however, the old wards of Roeside and Rathbrady have been used to define Limavady town centre business district. Within this area there are 366 non domestic properties.

As a result of the revaluation 216 properties had an increase in Net Annual Value with an average increase of £2,634; 74 properties had a decrease in Net Annual Value with an average decrease of £1,160; and 76 properties were unchanged.

Welfare Reform Bill (NIA 13/11-15)

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, in light of the delay in progressing the Welfare Reform Bill (NIA 13/11-15), whether the Executive still has the flexibility to use £700m of capital borrowing to fund a Voluntary Exit Scheme; and to detail the latest estimated timescale for the Scheme in 2015/16.

(AQW 46057/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Please refer to the answer for AQW 45850/11-15.

Mr Lytle asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the Northern Ireland Civil Service Equal Pay Settlement.

(AQW 46155/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The matter remains with the Executive for consideration.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for her Department's assessment of the business case for the relocation of the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development Headquarters to Ballykelly.

(AQW 46196/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development's decision to direct her Accounting Officer to relocate the headquarters to Ballykelly was agreed, on behalf of the Executive, by the First Minister and deputy First Minister.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether any officials in her Department have expressed concern regarding the business case for the relocation of the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development Headquarters to Ballykelly.

(AQW 46201/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development's decision to direct her Accounting Officer to relocate the DARD headquarters to Ballykelly was agreed by the Executive. My Department therefore had no role in the assessment or approval of the business case in support of the Agriculture Minister's decision.

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, whether it is both her Department and Land & Property Services policy to pay reasonable legal and valuation costs to a landowner where an offer is made by Land and Property Service on behalf of a Department or council to purchase land under threat of vesting.

Mrs Foster: The Department has no policy on this matter as the payment of fees for acquiring land compulsorily arises from the exercise of statutory powers by an acquiring authority. Reasonable and necessary legal and valuation costs incurred by a landowner will be accepted as a head of claim for compensation where land is acquired compulsorily or is by agreement under threat of vesting.

The question of whether land is being acquired under threat of vesting is generally one of fact. The acquiring authority must have powers of vesting for the purposes for which the land is being acquired, and will have indicated its intention to do so if acquisition by agreement is not achieved.

Where there is no threat of vesting it is normal market practice for each party to cover their own costs, unless there is prior agreement with the acquiring authority to pay fees. If such a prior agreement to pay fees exists, and negotiations between the parties subsequently fail to reach an agreed purchase price, the acquiring authority may nevertheless choose to make an ex gratia payment in respect of fees. However, LPS is guided by client instructions in each case.

Finally, any part of a fee claimed that relates to work in connection with objections to a proposed scheme in its entirety during the planning and consultation phase will not normally qualify for payment.

Mr Elliott asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what is her Department's policy in respect of legal and valuation costs incurred by a landowner in respect of an agreement to sell land to a Department or council made with Land and Property Services under threat of vesting and the Department or council have reneged on the agreement.

(AQW 46666/11-15)

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of the waiting lists across all medical disciplines at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children.

(AQW 45075/11-15)

Mr Wells (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): Information on the number of patients waiting, in weeks, to receive (i) a first outpatient appointment, (ii) a diagnostic test and (iii) inpatient treatment at the Royal Belfast Hospital for Sick Children (RBHSC) is shown below.

- (i) Number of patients waiting, in weeks, to receive a first consultant led outpatient appointment at the RBHSC, at 9th April 2015

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, considering the provision of a specialised medicines fund is intended to be funded by prescription charges, whether there are plans in place should prescription charges fail to gain political support.

(AQW 45263/11-15)

Mr Wells: My Department's position is set out in a statement made in the Assembly by my predecessor on 17 February 2015. In the coming months I will be exploring every possible funding option for making these changes to the IFR process as quickly as possible.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many staff in each Health and Social Care Trust have contacted his Department regarding their pay and how it is impacting their standard of living.

(AQW 45456/11-15)

Mr Wells: No records are kept on the number of staff in each Health and Social Care Trust who have contacted this Department regarding their pay and how it is impacting on their standard of living. It is not, therefore, possible to provide the information requested.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the legal costs incurred by his Department in relation to the ban on gay men donating blood.

(AQW 45482/11-15)

Mr Wells: At this time the legal costs incurred by this Department in relation to the policy on blood donation by men who have had sex with men are not yet complete.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of the hospitality spend by (i) his Department; and (ii) its arm's-length bodies, in 2014/15.

(AQW 45624/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The total cost of hospitality provided by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety and each of the Department's Arms Length Bodies, in 2014/15, is set out in the table below. This cost has reduced to less than half of the 2008-9 spend of £837.2k. A breakdown of these costs can only be provided at disproportionate costs.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 44729/11-15, how many chargeable visitors have there been to Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.
(AQW 45625/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Data for 2014/15 is not yet available. Health and Social Care Trusts identified 808 chargeable visitors in 2013/14. Data prior to 2013/14 is not available, as some Trusts were still setting up data systems which responded to the department's 2012 guidance on invoicing chargeable healthcare treatment.

All HSC Trusts in Northern Ireland strive to obtain the permanent home address of any potential chargeable patients who present themselves for treatment.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 44729/11-15, whether the home addresses of chargeable visitors not recorded by Health and Social Care Trusts; and if not, why not.
(AQW 45626/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Data for 2014/15 is not yet available. Health and Social Care Trusts identified 808 chargeable visitors in 2013/14. Data prior to 2013/14 is not available, as some Trusts were still setting up data systems which responded to the department's 2012 guidance on invoicing chargeable healthcare treatment.

All HSC Trusts in Northern Ireland strive to obtain the permanent home address of any potential chargeable patients who present themselves for treatment.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to list his top three priorities for Health and Social Care for the remainder of the Assembly term.
(AQW 45631/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My top strategic priority is to make continued progress towards realising my vision of a world class health and social care service for Northern Ireland through reform, transformation and innovation.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he intends to improve conditions and morale amongst staff working in the Radiotherapy Department and the Cancer Centre at Belfast City Hospital.
(AQW 45719/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Conditions and morale of staff at the Cancer Centre is the responsibility of the Belfast Trust. I am assured by the Trust that there are excellent relations between staff trade union representatives and management at the Cancer Centre. Within the radiography department at the Cancer Centre, team briefs and senior staff meetings are held weekly and an 'open door' policy operates within the department to ensure that any staff concerns can be addressed promptly. In addition the Belfast Trust has policies to allow staff to voice concerns without inhibition. Those policies are available to all staff should they wish to raise any issue.

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have reported to Emergency Departments as a result of an assault, in each of the last 36 months.
(AQW 45725/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of individuals attending emergency care departments as a direct result of assault is not available.

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people have reported to Emergency Departments as a result of a stab wound, in each of the last 36 months.
(AQW 45726/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of individuals attending emergency care departments as a direct result of stab wounds is not available.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to clarify his Department's position on the commissioning of new National Institute for Health and Care Excellence approved drugs for 2015/16.

(AQW 45728/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: In line with Circular HSC (SQSD) 2/13, responsibility for the commissioning of new National Institute for Health and Care Excellence approved drugs for 2015/16 is that of the HSC Board as regional commissioner.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the spend on medicines with no generic versions available in (i) 2012/13; (ii) 2013/14, broken down by expenditure in primary care and secondary care; and to detail the budgeted expenditure for these medicines in primary care and secondary care in 2015/16.

(AQW 45787/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: It is not possible to detail the spend on medicines for which no generic versions are available. However details of the expenditure on branded medicines in primary and secondary care is as shown on the following table:-

Year	2012/2013	2013/2014
Primary Care ¹	£170.8m	£194.5m
Secondary Care ²	£121.7m	£132.7m
Total	£292.5m	£327.2m

Neither the Board nor the Trusts set separate budgets for branded medicines, rather there is a budget for overall medicines spend which includes both branded and generic drugs.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what cooperation is taking place between his Department and other parts of the UK Health Service to combat the threat of the Ebola virus.

(AQW 45817/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: On 6 August 2014 the World Health Organization declared the Ebola outbreak of West Africa a Public Health Emergency of International Concern (PHEIC). From that date there was significant and intensive liaison between Northern Ireland and colleagues in GB at official, Chief Medical Officer and Ministerial levels.

Discussions focused on the development of plans and protocols for responding to an imported case of Ebola in Northern Ireland, and covered a wide range of measures. These have included:

- surge capacity in a number of hospitals to treat any confirmed Ebola cases;
- protocols for managing and treating suspected and confirmed cases;
- communication plans;
- the production of guidance for specific professional groups;
- plans for transferring any Ebola patients to an appropriate hospital;
- ensuring that the appropriate personal protective equipment – or PPE – is available and that staff are fully trained in putting on and taking off PPE;
- arrangements for decontamination and for the safe disposal of waste;
- arrangements for laboratory testing of samples;
- entry-screening for passengers arriving in the UK from the three badly affected countries, with associated passenger follow-up plans;
- participation in UK-wide exercises at Ministerial, CMO and official level; and
- plans and processes for tracing contacts of confirmed cases.

At the height of the outbreak my officials liaised with their colleagues in the Department of Health, Public Health England, NHS England, the Cabinet Office and Scottish and Welsh health officials on a daily basis. Now that plans are in place this liaison has been scaled back to weekly updates on Ebola activity and ad hoc communication as required.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the proposals to introduce prescription charges.

(AQW 45829/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The consultation on the evaluation of the Individual Funding Request process, which ended on 8 May 2015, sought views on the re-introduction of prescription charges to support the establishment of a new Specialist Medicines Fund. Responses to that consultation are currently being analysed and will inform any further consultation on the reintroduction of prescription charges.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether in light of the industrial action by midwives he will accept the recommendations by the NHS pay review body to award health service staff a 1 per cent pay rise.

(AQW 45831/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The NHS Pay Review Body (NHSPRB) recommendations of a 1% increase from 1 April 2014 were considered in the context of the prevailing financial constraints and viewed unaffordable. Instead all eligible staff on Agenda for Change Terms and Conditions were awarded with either incremental progression or a 1% non-consolidated payment in respect of 2014/15 but not both. No decisions have yet been made in relation to the pay award for 2015/16.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the levels of support and access to health services provided to those with ME and Fibromyalgia
(AQW 45856/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: GPs may refer ME and Fibromyalgia patients to specialists, such as cardiology, rheumatology or neurology, depending on the most prominent presenting conditions by the patient determined on a case-by-case basis and tailored to the patient's need. Fibromyalgia patients are also referred to pain management services. NICE CG53 provides national guidance on diagnosis and management of ME in adults and children. A service model based on this guidance is provided in the Northern and Belfast Trust areas. Expansion of the model to other HSC Trusts will be subject to affordability within the current challenging financial position.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety given the rise in both scientific and public awareness of these illnesses, what additional support and access to health services will he provide for sufferers of ME and Fibromyalgia.
(AQW 45859/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: GPs may refer ME and Fibromyalgia patients to specialists, such as cardiology, rheumatology or neurology, depending on the most prominent presenting conditions by the patient determined on a case-by-case basis and tailored to the patient's need. Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail when funding will be aligned to the Community Resuscitation Strategy.
(AQW 45860/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: In Northern Ireland significant effort and resources are already invested in CPR training in schools and in other settings. The community resuscitation strategy is intended to increase the number of people, of all ages, trained in CPR skills. The strategy is also about making the best use of the available resources to achieve this through better co-ordination and use of existing services.

I believe the business case you have referred to relates to the establishment of a regional team of Community Resuscitation Development Officers. The Northern Ireland Ambulance Service has submitted an investment proposal regarding this to the Health and Social Care Board and is currently awaiting a final decision. I am unable to say when the HSCB will reach its final decision but I am aware that interim funding arrangements have been put in place to cover the existing posts until September 2015.

Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline how the Community Resuscitation Strategy will be implemented with no funding aligned to its delivery.
(AQW 45862/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: In Northern Ireland significant effort and resources are already invested in CPR training in schools and in other settings. Mrs McKevitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when will the business case submitted in January 2015, supporting the implementation of the Community Resuscitation Strategy be agreed,
(AQW 45863/11-15)

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail which waiting times for diagnosis or treatment are currently being affected by the pressures on his Department's budget.

(AQW 45895/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: At the quarter ended 31 March 2015 the specialties with the greatest number of patients waiting more than 15 weeks for a first outpatient appointment are trauma & orthopaedics, ophthalmology, general surgery, ENT, neurology, gastroenterology and gynaecology. For inpatient/day case treatment the specialties with the greatest number of patients waiting more than 26 weeks are trauma & orthopaedic surgery, general surgery, urology, ENT, pain management, gynaecology and plastic surgery. The diagnostic services with the greatest number of patients waiting longer than 9 weeks are echocardiography, non-obstetric ultrasound, MRI, pure tone audiometry, day case colonoscopy, day case gastroscopy and day case cystoscopy.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his estimate of the shortfall in his departmental budget for 2015/16; and to detail his proposed actions to address this.

(AQW 45896/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department faces significant financial challenges in 2015/16 and at this stage, there is an unresolved financial gap of some £30m-£40m, which is after the commitment to deliver savings of £160m and which also assumes that there will be no service developments.

In order to achieve a balanced financial position and finance service developments, my Department will be rigorously progressing all available opportunities to secure additional resources throughout 2015-16, including full participation in the Monitoring Round processes, and to take any other necessary action in order to break even.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many people were treated in each Emergency Department for self-harm and/or suicidal thoughts in (i) 2014/15; (ii) 2011/12; and (iii) 2007/08; and to detail how many were aged under 16 years old.

(AQW 45898/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of people treated for self-harm and/or suicidal thoughts is not available. However, information is available on the number of self-harm and suicidal ideations (thoughts) presentations at emergency care departments, and is detailed in the table overleaf.

This information is sourced from the Northern Ireland (NI) Registry of Self-Harm which was implemented in all five Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts on 1st April 2012, and information is therefore not available prior to this date. Information is however, available for emergency care departments in the Western HSC Trust, from 2007/08 onwards, as the register was piloted in this HSC Trust in 2007.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients who have received specialised National Institute for Health and Care Excellence approved drugs, in each of the last three years. (AQW 45923/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: It is not possible to provide figures on the number of patients who have commenced on existing or new NICE approved drugs in each of the last three years. The information is not held centrally and could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the benefits of moving other health services to be delivered on an all-island basis. (AQW 45926/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department is open to exploring opportunities for services to be delivered on an all-island basis where this makes sense in terms of improving access to high quality affordable health care for patients. Examples of service developments to date include: cross-border cancer and cardiac services at Altnagelvin; and, the all-island Congenital Heart Disease Network.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety when he intends to appoint a new chairperson to the board of the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service. (AQW 45929/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I intend to make an announcement on the appointment of a Chair to the NI Fire & Rescue Service by the end of June 2015.

My Department is committed to an appointment process which is open, fair, transparent and equitable to all and which complies fully with the Code of Practice issued by the Commissioner for Public Appointments for Northern Ireland (the Commissioner).

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to reduce the number of people waiting to see a consultant. (AQW 45939/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The HSC Board's approach over the last number of years has been to expand health service capacity through selective, targeted, recurrent investment in elective specialties where there is an agreed capacity gap. In parallel with this approach, the Board has provided non-recurrent funding to Trusts to undertake additional activity (both in-house and in the independent sector) however due to the wider HSC financial position it was not possible to fund Trusts to undertake additional activity in the second half of the year.

In order to minimise the increase in waiting times associated with the shortfall in funding, the HSC Board will continue to work with Trusts to maximise the delivery of funded capacity and ensure the application of good waiting list management practice, including assessing and treating urgent cases first, and thereafter seeing and treating patients in chronological order.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much the Southern Health and Social Care Trust spent on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years. (AQW 45950/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend by the Southern Health and Social Care Trust on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £6,584,000
- 2013/14 - £9,468,000

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has considered midwife led maternity units for non-acute hospitals; and whether he or his officials have had sight of the report into a midwife led maternity unit commissioned by the former Western Health and Social Services Board.

(AQW 45953/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department's regional maternity strategy, 'A Strategy for Maternity Care in Northern Ireland 2012-2018' is the current policy for this service. It proposed the development of midwife-led maternity units. Midwife-led units, alongside consultant obstetric units, are provided at the: Ulster Hospital, Craigavon Hospital, Daisy Hill Hospital, South West Acute Hospital and Altnagelvin Hospital. There are also freestanding midwife-led maternity units at Downe Hospital, Lagan Valley Hospital and the Mater Hospital. There are no plans for the development of further freestanding midwife-led units.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much the Northern Health and Social Care Trust spent on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years.

(AQW 45976/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend by the Northern Health and Social Care Trust on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £8,039,207
- 2013/14 - £9,381,986

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the funding allocations to children's respite care, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust in (i) 2014/15; and (ii) 2015/16.

(AQW 46000/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: As respite care is provided across a number of Programmes of Care, information on Health and Social Care Trust's funding allocations to children's respite services is not readily available and could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of how far his Department is succeeding in adhering to the National Institute for Health and Care Excellence guidelines on autism.

(AQW 46026/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Substantial progress has been made in Northern Ireland in delivering NICE Clinical Guidelines CG 128 'Autism Diagnosis in Children and Young People' and CG 170 'The Management and Support of Children and Young People on the Autism Spectrum', through the Six Steps of Autism Care regional model.

However, full implementation in achieving standard timescales from referral to assessment, assessment to diagnosis, and then to appropriate intervention, are not presently being met, as a result of the very considerable increase in referrals and the inability of current service capacity to meet this demand.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what innovative actions, and with what effect, have been taken since the introduction of the Autism Strategy.

(AQW 46027/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: It is intended that an update on the progress of the cross-departmental Autism Strategy (2013 - 2020) and Action Plan (2013 - 2016) will be shared with the Assembly by the end of June 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to clarify the current status on prescribing Sativex for Multiple Sclerosis patients, particularly those with more severe symptoms or in advanced stages of the illness, including whether there is an option for private prescription if Health Service prescribing is limited or not available.

(AQW 46030/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Advice on the use of Sativex will be included in an updated clinical guideline on the management of MS due to be published by NICE in October 2015. My Department will review the updated guidance for its applicability in Northern Ireland when it is available. In the interim, I would not expect to see Sativex routinely commissioned in the HSC, although it is open to clinicians to consider making applications for individual patients under the Individual Funding Request process.

Sativex is a licensed drug and if a clinician decides to prescribe it via a private prescription they can do so. The issuing and dispensing of a medicine on a private basis is a matter for the health professionals and patient involved.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much the Fire and Rescue Service spent on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years.

(AQW 46032/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend by the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £193,206
- 2013/14 - £202,559

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much the Health and Social Care Board spent on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years.

(AQW 46033/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend by the Health and Social Care Board on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £735,450
- 2013/14 - £641,185

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much his Department spent on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years.

(AQW 46034/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend by the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £346,426
- 2013/14 - £455,765

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority spent on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years.

(AQW 46036/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend by the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority on staff travel expenses in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £144,380
- 2013/14 - £159,904

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he can give assurances on issues such as blood donations from gay men and any other issue where his personal views are engaged, that he will remove those views from the decision making process to facilitate the best outcome for patients.

(AQW 46038/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: If the Northern Ireland Court of Appeal decides that it is my responsibility to determine deferral periods for blood donation my priority will be to protect the health of people who receive blood transfusions and I will be guided by the evidence.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many medical emergencies have required an emergency air lift in each of the last five years.

(AQW 46050/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of medical emergencies requiring an emergency air lift is not available, and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the percentage of patients with bilateral age-related hearing loss in each Health and Social Care Trust which are fitted with two hearing aids at a single appointment, as per the relevant quality standards.

(AQW 46055/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the proposal to close Northfield House will have any impact on his decision in relation to the 20 bed GP ward at Bangor Community Hospital.

(AQW 46063/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Trust proposals for change to their residential care homes will be subject to public consultation by each Trust. There will be no immediate change to Northfield House. I have written to existing permanent residents in order to provide an assurance that they will not be required to leave their home, providing their needs can continue to be safely met there.

The 20 bed Bangor Community Hospital Unit remains closed while the Trust carries out its consultation on proposals for the future provision of intermediate care in North Down and Ards. The consultation closed on 29 April 2015 and the Trust is currently considering responses.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures he is taking to address the shortage of consultants in the Paediatric Gastroenterology Department in the Royal Victoria Hospital.

(AQW 46071/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Recruitment matters are the responsibility of HSC employers. The Belfast Health and Social Care Trust has advised me that it currently employs two consultants and one nurse specialist in the Paediatric Gastroenterology Department in the Royal Victoria Hospital. At present one consultant is currently on a leave of absence and the Trust is in the process of appointing a locum to cover this post and is in discussion with the Health and Social Care Board regarding an increase in the number of theatre lists to reduce waiting times for patients.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he plans to appoint a Paediatric Gastroenterology consultant in the Western Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46072/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Recruitment matters are the responsibility of HSC Employers. At present Paediatric Gastroenterology is a specialist tertiary service commissioned for the whole of Northern Ireland and delivered by Belfast Health and Social Care Trust. The Western Health and Social Care Trust has advised me that there are no plans to appoint a consultant in this specialty area.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the current waiting lists for (i) private care homes; and (ii) Health and Social Care Trust care homes, broken down by Trust area.

(AQW 46075/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board has advised me that the Western Trust currently has 21 placement applications for temporary/permanent status in independent nursing/residential homes. These are considered and reviewed by the Trust on a regular basis and available funding allocated to those assessed at greatest need. The Trust has no one on a waiting list for its statutory residential homes.

The Northern Trust has 4 older people who are currently accommodated in intermediate care beds awaiting their nursing home of choice, with no-one on a waiting list for its statutory residential homes.

None of the other Trusts have anyone on a waiting list for either private or Trust care homes.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of carer grants provided to individuals to cover the additional costs of caring in (i) 2013/14; and (ii) 2014/15, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46077/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of carers grants made in 2013/14 is detailed in the table below. Information for 2014/15 is not yet available.

Number of one off Carers Grants made in-year

HSC Trust	2013/14
Belfast	1,246
Northern	166
South Eastern	553
Southern	233
Western	551
Northern Ireland	2,749

Mr Cree asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the rationale or strategy behind the Health and Social Care Board's decision to consider alternatives to the housing of older residents in its National Health residential care homes.

(AQW 46079/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Transforming your Care proposed a new model of care built around the needs of individuals rather than institutions, with more care delivered closer to home where it is safe and appropriate to do so.

Thanks to increases in life expectancy, older people are living longer and we know that they would rather stay in their own homes with the right support, retaining their independence for as long as possible. This has resulted in a fall in the demand for residential care for older people.

In line with this, the Health and Social Care Board has been leading on a review over the past two years on the future role and function of Trust's statutory residential care homes.

I remain committed to ensuring suitable, safe alternatives are provided before any proposed closures take place, and that no one will be required to leave their home against their wishes.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much has been spent on travel costs for staff in the Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service for each of the last two years.

(AQW 46090/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend by the Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service on travel costs for staff in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £19,587
- 2013/14 - £23,849

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his Department's capital works budget for next year.

(AQW 46094/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Department has no approved capital budget for 2016-17. It is expected that a Budget Exercise for 2016-17 onwards will be commissioned by DFP later this year.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many units of blood were donated in 2014.

(AQW 46095/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service has confirmed that 55,528 units of blood were donated in 2014.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 45455/11-15, whether the three new consultant posts were based in the Causeway Hospital.

(AQW 46114/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Health and Social Care Trust has confirmed that the three (2.5 whole-time equivalent) newly created consultant posts referred to in AQW 45455 are based in the Causeway Hospital.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service pay review that has been ongoing for eleven years.

(AQW 46119/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: A Regional Quality Assurance (RQA) Team has been asked to consider the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service (NIAS) paramedics' job evaluations and the Department and Trade Unions have been working together to help expedite the matter

Pending the outcomes of the Job Evaluation Process, Paramedics, Rapid Response Paramedics and Emergency Medical Technicians are being paid, on a without prejudice basis, on Agenda for Change pay bands. Paramedics and Rapid Response Paramedics are being paid a Band 5 salary and Emergency Medical Technicians are being paid a Band 4 salary.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many units of blood were imported to Northern Ireland from the rest of the UK in the last twelve months.

(AQW 46149/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: In the last twelve months, 23 units of blood have been imported to Northern Ireland from NHS Blood and Transplant.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what measures are taken to ensure that all imported blood is screened.

(AQW 46150/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Blood imported from Great Britain and Ireland is screened for the same infectious markers that are used in Northern Ireland and is therefore only released for issue to the Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service when these tests are complete and reported negative. Each unit has a unique identification number which provides full traceability from the donor to the recipient. The identification number enables the results of red cell serology and infectious screen to be accessed.

If blood is imported from outside of the UK and Ireland, written confirmation of infectious markers screened for is requested, along with the results and further information on the microbiological tests (specific assays) used in their transfusion centres.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much funding the Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service received in 2014/15.

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service received funding of £22.6m in 2014/15.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the (i) current number; and (ii) job titles of staff employed by the Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service.

(AQW 46152/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Headcount and whole-time equivalent (WTE) figures for employees of the NI Blood Transfusion Service at 31st March 2015 are shown in the table below.

Staff Group	Headcount	WTE
Administrative and Clerical	63	51.0
Driver/Porter/Domestic Services	10	6.9
Qualified Nurses	15	12.9
Nursing Support	43	35.6
Biomedical Science	58	54.9
Medical and Dental	4	3.9
Total	193	165.3

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of mobile units operated by the Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service.

(AQW 46153/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: There are currently three mobile units operated by the Northern Ireland Blood Transfusion Service (NIBTS). One unit is operated from the Omagh Unit base at the Tyrone & Fermanagh hospital and two units are operated from the NIBTS headquarters in Belfast.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the current waiting time for an (a) adult; and (b) child referral to mental health services; and (ii) the number of individuals awaiting their first professional assessment, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46163/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (a) Table 1 overleaf details the current waiting times for adults referred for mental health services at 30 April 2015 by Health and Social Care Trust.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on how many permanent residents are current residing in Northfield House, Donaghadee.

(AQW 46187/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: As at 27 May 2015, there are 3 permanent residents in Northfield House.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why his Department has not implemented the recommendations of previous general practice working planning reports from 2006 and 2009 which highlighted the need to urgently increase the numbers of GPs being trained.

(AQW 46191/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The implementation of any increase in trainee places on the foot of workforce planning reviews is subject to the availability of the necessary additional funding. Each GP trainee position currently costs in the order of £83k per annum over the three years of the training programme. This additional resource not identified in respect of the recommendations on GP training numbers provided in 2006 and 2010.

I am aware of the recent recommendation from the Health and Social Care Board / Public Health Agency to increase the number of GP trainees. However, any increase in trainee numbers needs to take account of the overall funding position for the HSC.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether the recommendations of the 2014 interim workforce planning report to urgently increase the number of GPs being trained from 65 to 80 will be implemented.

(AQW 46192/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The implementation of any increase in trainee places on the foot of workforce planning reviews is subject to the availability of the necessary additional funding. Each GP trainee position currently costs in the order of £83k per annum over the three years of the training programme. This additional resource not identified in respect of the recommendations on GP training numbers provided in 2006 and 2010.

I am aware of the recent recommendation from the Health and Social Care Board / Public Health Agency to increase the number of GP trainees. However, any increase in trainee numbers needs to take account of the overall funding position for the HSC.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the average number of forms a nurse is required to complete per day for each patient.

(AQW 46194/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Nursing and Midwifery Council Code of Professional Standards stipulates that each nurse 'must keep clear and accurate records relevant to their practice.'

Nurses complete forms depending on the acuity and dependency of each individual patient's care requirements.

The information required to respond to this question could only be provided at disproportionate costs.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his Department's policy on Independent Living.

(AQW 46195/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Until 30 June 2015, the responsibility for the administration and payment of Independent Living Fund (ILF) recipients in Northern Ireland rests with the Department for Social Development.

Thereafter, with effect from 1 July 2015 that responsibility will transfer to my Department. On 19 May 2015 I announced that I have reached agreement in principle with the Scottish Government that payments to ILF recipients in Northern Ireland will be administered through the newly created Scottish ILF infrastructure. This is a positive development for Northern Ireland and will ensure continuity of service for current ILF recipients.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much the Northern Health and Social Care Trust has spent on postage in each of the last two financial years.

(AQW 46203/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend on postage by the Northern Health and Social Care Trust in each of the last two financial years was:

- 2014/15 - £738,144
- 2013/14 - £672,476

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what strategy his Department has to reduce waiting times for breast cancer referrals.

(AQW 46219/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The HSCB met regularly with all Trusts in dedicated cancer performance and improvement meetings. The focus of these meetings is to apply the models of best practice that exist within Northern Ireland across all Trusts to ensure a consistent approach to delivery of the 14-day standard for urgent referrals. This included ensuring that existing triple assessment capacity is maximised, through using the most appropriate pathways for routine and review patients, and the implementation of effective triage practice in line with good practice.

The latest performance statistics, published on the 26th March 2015, show that during December 2014, 96.3% of patients waiting for an urgent breast cancer referral were seen within 14 days,

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of full time diabetic nurses in Daisy Hill Hospital, excluding those on maternity leave and long term illness, in each of the last five years to date.

(AQW 46230/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The requested information is shown in the table below, at 31st March in each year. The Diabetes Specialist Nursing team in Newry and Mourne does not work exclusively in Daisy Hill and works in both the hospital and community service. Headcount and whole-time equivalent (WTE) figures for the service, including part-time posts, are also given.

Year	Full-Time Staff	Total Headcount	Total WTE
2011	2	4	2.9
2012	0	5	2.86

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of full time speech therapists in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust, excluding those on maternity leave and long term illness, in each of the last five years to date.

(AQW 46231/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: HSC Trusts have supplied the following information. The tables below show the number of full-time staff, the total headcount and the total whole-time equivalent (WTE) for each service at 31st March in each year.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of full time speech therapists in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust, excluding those on maternity leave and long term illness, in each of the last five years to date.

(AQW 46233/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: HSC Trusts have supplied the following information. The tables below show the number of full-time staff, the total headcount and the total whole-time equivalent (WTE) for each service at 31st March in each year.

Ms Boyle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to address the GP workforce crisis which is affecting out of hours GP services in Strabane.

(AQW 46240/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: As part of the 2015/16 General Medical Services funding allocation an additional £3.1m is being invested in Out of Hours GP services (OOHs). The HSCB is currently working with Out of Hours providers to make additional clinical time available during the hours that the OOHs operates.

The following measures have been taken:

- funding for an additional 42 hours of GP time at weekends was allocated to OOHs providers in 2014/15, and again in 2015/16, to be used where the greatest demand is during the hours that the OOH operates;
- a Local Enhanced Service (LES) is in operation in the Western area. GP principals provide additional clinical time (via booked appointments) for a 2½ hour period for 5 evenings during the week. This service has been put in place in the Altnagelvin base which has the highest demand in the Western area. Supporting GPs in the Altnagelvin base helps minimise the number of times that GPs in the other 4 centres in the Western area have to move from their respective centres. This also allows a GP from the Altnagelvin base to travel to Strabane to see patients by appointment if the Strabane shift is unfilled; and
- Western Urgent Care (WUC) has been allocated funding to engage a Procedure Nurse to carry out procedures such as ECGs, Nebulising etc.

Other initiatives that have undertaken to support OOHs centres in the Western area include:

- an advertisement has been placed in UK wide magazine offering GPs shifts in all OOHs centres in Western area;
- a series of communications to GP practices in the Western area seeking their support for the local OOHs centre;
- locum agencies in the UK and Republic of Ireland have been contacted;
- all OOHs providers have received additional funding to uplift staffing capacity during public holidays; and
- WUC has increased the pool of nursing staff to work in Out of Hours.

GPs are also charged increased indemnity costs if they take on OOHs work and this can be a disincentive for taking on the work. The HSCB are currently considering how to financially incentivise individuals to take up multiple shifts, as a way of helping to address these indemnity costs.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the time allocated to each home care visit to the elderly by each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46241/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not hold information on the length of time allocated for individual sessions of domiciliary care. The duration of such visits will vary from individual to individual depending on the nature of their needs as determined by a professional assessment. In this context, where HSC professionals consider that specific needs can be met safely and with dignity in less than thirty minutes, they must have sufficient discretion to do so. It would not, therefore, be my intention to introduce a thirty minute minimum time for home care visits.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he will take to increase the amount of time allocated to each home care visit to a minimum of 30 minutes.

(AQW 46242/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not hold information on the length of time allocated for individual sessions of domiciliary care. The duration of such visits will vary from individual to individual depending on the nature of their needs as determined by a professional assessment. In this context, where HSC professionals consider that specific needs can be met safely and with dignity in less than thirty minutes, they must have sufficient discretion to do so. It would not, therefore, be my intention to introduce a thirty minute minimum time for home care visits.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what powers do local councils have to stop the sale of legal highs.

(AQW 46243/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Currently local councils have no specific powers to stop the sale of New Psychoactive Substances (so called 'legal highs'). However, several councils in Northern Ireland have used powers under the General Products Safety Regulations 2005 to apply for an order for the forfeiture of a product on the grounds that it is dangerous and there is inadequate labelling and safety information on such substances. Action taken by Belfast City Council, in partnership with the PSNI and the Attorney General, has led to an injunction against one operator and subsequently 3 people being sentenced in court. Belfast City Council believes this action has closed all the "headshops" operating in the city.

Following lobbying from my Department, the UK Government is currently developing UK-wide legislation to provide a blanket ban on the sale and supply of New Psychoactive Substances. Consideration is being given to how this legislation could be enforced and it is possible that further powers could be given to local councils in this regard.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 44644/11-15, to detail the negotiations which are currently ongoing with the manufacturer of the Meningitis B Vaccine Bexsero in relation to ensuring that adequate supplies are available to meet the scheduled commencement date of September 2015.

(AQW 46257/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Department of Health, England, are leading the negotiations with the vaccine manufacturer. The latest information indicates that there should be adequate supplies of the vaccine delivered into the UK to enable the Men B vaccination programme to begin in September 2015.

Work is ongoing to agree exactly how the programme will be implemented in Northern Ireland.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline his Department's timeline for consultation in relation to the Adoption and Children Bill.

(AQW 46309/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Jim Wells, issued an Executive paper on 6 March 2015 seeking Executive colleagues' agreement to proceed to public consultation on the draft Adoption and Children Bill. The paper has not yet been tabled for consideration. The timeline for consultation will depend on the outcome of the Executive's consideration. However, I remain committed to moving towards consultation on the Bill within the current mandate.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much has been spent on postage by the Western Health and Social Care Trust in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46377/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend on postage by the Western Health and Social Care Trust in each of the last three years was:

- 2014/15 - £457,467
- 2013/14 - £524,789
- 2012/13 - £494,984

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much has been spent on postage by the Northern Ireland Fire Service in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46380/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend on postage by the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service in each of the last three years was:

- 2014/15 - £29,142
- 2013/14 - £23,789
- 2012/13 - £30,249

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much his Department has spent on postage in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46392/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend on postage by the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety in each of the last three years was:

- 2014/15 - £17,834
- 2013/14 - £32,137
- 2012/13 - £30,394

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given the frustrations some charities experience due to delays in the payment of funds through the Infrastructure Grant, for his assessment of (i) when funds will be paid; and (ii) the impact of delays on the services offered by local charities.

(AQW 46430/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: All 67 organisations, which received core funding from my Department in 2014/2015, were advised last year to prepare for funding being unavailable in 2015/2016. It is my intention to inform all 67 organisations about the future of core grant funding very shortly.

Department of Justice

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice to outline the circumstances around the escape Thomas Valliday whilst at Ulster Hospital, Dundonald on Friday 1 May 2015; and whether any member of prison or hospital staff, patients or members of the public sustained any injury during the incident.

(AQW 45492/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): After undergoing a day procedure at the Ulster Hospital on 1 May Mr Valliday escaped from the custody of prison staff. He was subsequently arrested by police on 4 May and returned to custody. The circumstances of the escape are the subject of both a NIPS and PSNI investigation and it would not be appropriate to comment further pending the outcome of those investigations. I can however confirm that no member of prison or hospital staff, patients or members of the public sustained any injury during the incident.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45352/11-15, for the corresponding figures for each of the previous two years.

(AQW 45857/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is not possible to provide numbers of active cases within the court system on a retrospective basis. However, details of the number of cases received into the Magistrates' Courts in respect of offences involving indecent images of children are outlined in the table below shown by court division for 2013 and 2014. It should be noted that there is no direct correlation between these figures and those in the previous AQW/45352/11-15.

Court Division	2013	2014	Total
Antrim	4	4	8
Ards	17	16	33
Armagh And South Down	9	5	14
Belfast	24	19	43
Craigavon	8	7	15
Fermanagh And Tyrone	4	5	9
Londonderry	3	4	7
Grand Total	69	60	129

Cases involving offences of this type are initiated at the Magistrates' Court level and some may be committed to the Crown Court. It is not possible to provide Crown Court case numbers without a duplication of cases occurring.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of Justice what action is being taken to help counter the increasing sales and availability of legal-highs.

(AQW 45922/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Organised Crime Task Force Drugs sub group includes a wide range of organisations that have been working in partnership to address the issue of illicit substances, including so-called legal highs, being sold in Northern Ireland.

My Department continues to support the actions of local councils in their use of the General Product Safety Regulations 2005 to remove these harmful substances from sale and reduce their availability. In particular the recent successful prosecutions by Belfast City Council have been an example to other councils not just in Northern Ireland but across the United Kingdom.

Ultimately, we need to get the message to people, that these so-called and mis-named legal highs, could be potentially lethal as the user has no idea of the chemical make-up of the substance, its strength, its effects or how it might react with other substances such as alcohol.

It is clear that more needs to be done to respond to the emergence of these harmful substances. Prior to the election, I had advised the UK Minister of State for Crime Prevention on a number of occasions that the Irish legislation might prove a useful way forward.

Whilst drug legislation is a reserved matter, the Home Secretary has now written to me outlining future proposals for legislative change that aims to tackle the manufacture, distribution, sale and supply of these new psychoactive substances. Home Office officials are currently working with officials, in both my Department and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, on those proposals in order to ensure that any new legislation meets our needs.

I remain of the view that a consistent UK-wide legislative approach is integral to tackling the harms caused by these substances in our communities.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the standards of education in Magilligan Prison; and how he plans to improve standards.

(AQW 45933/11-15)

Mr Ford: The transfer of the Learning and Skills function from Magilligan Prison to the North West Regional College (NWRC) was officially launched on Thursday 28 May 15.

The outsourcing of Learning and Skills to the NWRC will provide a wider curriculum for prisoners with each course resulting in an accredited outcome.

The outsourcing of Learning and Skills to the Department of Employment and Learning is expected to improve the available opportunities for prisoners in Magilligan.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice given the Sexual Offences Prevention Order breach and the offences committed whilst under same, whether he will order a Serious Case Review into the circumstances which led to case number 14/113980 Stephen Bell at Newry Crown Court.

(AQW 45964/11-15)

Mr Ford: A serious case review has not been commissioned as the matter does not meet the threshold for a serious case review set out in the manual of practice for the public protection arrangements (PPANI). An internal review of the case has been conducted by PSNI which will shortly be presented to the PPANI Strategic Management Board. Any learning points which may emerge from this will be shared with partner agencies working within the PPANI arrangements.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 41876/11-15, to detail the costs, including legal aid, of each trial listing.

(AQW 45966/11-15)

Mr Ford: The estimated cost of this case, broken down by each separate trial stage, is outlined in the table below.

Cost Type	Pre-Trial Stages	1st Trial	2nd Trial	3rd Trial	4th Trial	Total
a) Legal Aid ¹	£1,855	£21,777	£34,902	-	£43,588	£102,122
b) PPS ²	-	-	£14,811	£14,245	£29,087	£58,143
c) Court Costs ³	£6,794	£5,526	£5,727	£7,707	£15,740	£41,494
Total 4	£8,649	£27,303	£55,440	£21,952	£88,415	£201,759

1 Fees for Junior Counsel for the 2nd, 3rd and 4th Trials have not yet been paid.

It is not possible to breakdown the fees further for trials 3 and 4 as the rules do not provide for this, one basic trial fee only being payable and an enhancement for the subsequent trial.

Fees in relation to the Magistrates' Courts proceedings are assessed in accordance with The Magistrates' Courts and County Court Appeals (Criminal Legal Aid) (Costs) Rules (Northern Ireland) 2009.

Fees in relation to the Crown Court proceedings are assessed in accordance with The Legal Aid for Crown Court Proceedings (Costs) Rules (Northern Ireland) 2005 as amended by the 2011 Rules.

2 In the absence of detailed records of time spent on individual cases it is not possible to produce precise or average costs for a particular case. Some costs are identifiable however, for example the fees paid to prosecuting counsel and expenses paid to witnesses and expert witnesses.

3 The estimated court cost include judicial and staff salaries, facilities and juror costs

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of filling stations in Belfast, broken down by area, that have been identified for purchasing and retailing laundered fuel; and what action his Department has taken.

(AQW 45973/11-15)

Mr Ford: As I have previously stated in the Assembly, under current legislation HM Revenue and Customs cannot release details of those suspected of duty evasion before conviction, but I have asked that this be reviewed. Action against those in possession of laundered fuel is the responsibility of HMRC.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Justice to outline the links between the Prison Service and ex-prisoners community groups offering training to provide former prisoners with qualifications or employment.

(AQW 45974/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) works with many partners in the Voluntary and Community Sector to provide a range of services to offenders and their families aimed at successfully re-integrating prisoners into society. Employment is a key factor in preventing re-offending and NIPS works hard to ensure that prisoners are offered the opportunity to undertake educational activities including work experience, where this is appropriate and available. Most of this activity takes place while individuals are still in custody.

None of the community sector partners would appear to be "ex-prisoners community groups". However, NIPS works with Extern to provide accredited employability training, vocational training and qualifications, and work placements for prisoners nearing the end of their sentences who are living within the community. This work is funded by NIPS, the Department for Employment and Learning and the European Social Fund. Likewise NIPS works with NIACRO to prepare prisoners for work and to engage with employers to find and sustain work placements for prisoners upon release.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45404/11-15, to detail the corresponding overall figures for each of the last two years.

(AQW 46047/11-15)

Mr Ford: It is not possible to provide numbers of active cases within the court system on a retrospective basis; however, details of the number of cases received into the Magistrates' Courts in respect of sexual offences, including breach of Sexual Offences Prevention Orders, are outlined in the table below. The information is shown by court division for 2013 and 2014.

It should be noted that there is no direct correlation between these figures and those in the previous AQW/45404/11-15.

Court Division	2013	2014	Total
Antrim	94	78	172
Ards	132	117	249
Armagh And South Down	98	76	174
Belfast	345	260	605
Craigavon	134	109	243
Fermanagh And Tyrone	182	159	341
Londonderry	213	184	397
Grand Total	1198	983	2181

Cases involving offences of this type are initiated at the Magistrates' Court level and may then be committed to the crown court. It is not possible to provide crown court case numbers without a duplication of cases occurring.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQO 8200/11-15, when a paper will be sent to the Executive on the issue of fatal foetal abnormality.

(AQW 46086/11-15)

Mr Ford: I circulated a draft paper, to seek Executive agreement for a Bill to change the law on abortion for fatal fetal abnormality, to Executive colleagues for comment on 1 June. I hope this will be considered by the Executive at its meeting on 11 June.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether Jonathan Turley has ever been categorised as dangerous under The Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008.

(AQW 46087/11-15)

Mr Ford: Mr Turley has never been categorised as dangerous as defined by the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45350/11-15, what is the current (i) integrated; and (ii) separated occupancy; and what was the overall average occupancy for the financial year 2014/15.

(AQW 46088/11-15)

Mr Ford: The current occupancy of Roe House for integrated prisoners is 63 and for separated prisoners is 44. The average occupancy for Roe House over the 2014/2015 financial year was 75 for Roe Integrated and 46 for Roe Separated.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45352/11-15, how many of these cases involve a previous relevant record.

(AQW 46089/11-15)

Mr Ford: As these cases are currently live within the court system, it would not be appropriate to provide the information requested.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice, given the continuing number of occasions on which Army Technical Officers are being called to deal with devices in the North West of Northern Ireland, whether he will hold discussions with the Chief Constable on the best way to deal with such incidents.

(AQW 46129/11-15)

Mr Ford: Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD) support to the PSNI is a matter between the PSNI and the Ministry of Defence. As Justice Minister I am committed to respecting the operational independence of the Chief Constable. I do, however, have regular engagement with the Chief Constable and I have been assured that the support which the EOD teams provide to the PSNI is delivered in the most operationally effective way possible.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice what strategy his Department has in place to reduce delays in criminal court cases involving young defendants.

(AQW 46131/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am overseeing an ambitious and far-reaching programme of work to transform the performance of the criminal justice system through a range of procedural and legislative reforms.

The programme has given a particular focus to cases involving young people and has already delivered Youth Engagement Clinics which provide additional support to young people at an early stage in proceedings to help them make better informed decisions about their case. Early indications are that this initiative, which was developed to begin to prepare the system in anticipation of statutory time limits in the Youth Court, has the potential to free up capacity by reducing the number of cases that proceed to court unnecessarily and are then withdrawn for a diversionary disposal to be administered.

My officials are also working with justice partners to improve the timeliness of forensic evidence and medical reports which tend to be the main causes of delay in youth cases.

In addition, the Justice Bill which is currently before the Assembly will deliver crucial reforms to improve performance in youth cases by streamlining the summons process and providing for the introduction of statutory case management, which will place a general duty on everyone in the system to expedite cases.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the effectiveness of the current witness services and special court measures.

(AQW 46134/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Victim Support Northern Ireland Witness Service and the NSPCC Young Witness Service consistently deliver quality services to prosecution witnesses called to give evidence at court. High levels of witness satisfaction are recorded by both organisations, as well as being reported in the last Northern Ireland Victim and Witness Survey. In 2014-15 over 7,000 prosecution witnesses were supported by the witness services and assisted to give their best evidence at court.

A programme of work to improve the effectiveness of special measures was completed in the autumn of 2013. Since then, there has been an increase in the number of special measures applications made, especially to give evidence by live link.

The Registered Intermediary special measure was introduced on a phased basis in May 2013. It was evaluated earlier this year and was found to be working well, enabling vulnerable people with significant communication difficulties to participate in a police interview and give evidence at court, where previously without a Registered Intermediary's assistance, they may not have been able to. In view of this, the availability of this special measure was extended in April to all cases being dealt with in the Crown Court.

Work is currently being undertaken to pilot the video recorded cross-examination special measure, which has not yet been commenced, next year.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice what strategy his Department has in place to respond to the increasing role of social media in the trial process and the repercussions for young people.

(AQW 46138/11-15)

Mr Ford: There is no specific Justice strategy in place for this. I am aware of concerns about young people making inappropriate, ill-advised or indeed criminal use of social media. This would need a broader consideration than from the justice perspective, and a wider range of Departments and organisations would have an interest in this matter.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45185/11-15, to detail (i) the cost of damage caused; (ii) what equipment will have to be replaced; and (iii) if those responsible have been charged with criminal offences, including whether this will be dealt with by the courts or the Prison Service.

(AQW 46144/11-15)

Mr Ford: Work is ongoing to identify the final costs of repairs. Damage is isolated to a store room, link corridor and staff control pod where re-decoration, repairs to electronic equipment and the replacement of smoke damaged items are required. The perpetrators have been charged with serious criminal offences including arson.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45855/11-15, whether the Northern Ireland Prison Service or any agency acting on their behalf (i) objected to this application and if so was the decision appealed; and (ii) alerted the court to the dangerousness of this individual.

(AQW 46145/11-15)

Mr Ford: The decision to release Mr Turley on bail is solely a matter for the courts. Before making the decision, the court service would have known about Mr Turley's previous conviction history.

With regard to compassionate bail, the Northern Ireland Prison Service does not have the authority to challenge the ruling of the court.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice to detail the travel and subsistence costs incurred by his Department on trips outside Northern Ireland in each year since May 2011, broken down by the costs incurred by (i) the Minister; (ii) special advisers; and (iii) support staff.

(AQW 46199/11-15)

Mr Ford: Expenditure on Ministerial and Special Adviser travel is not separately recorded by my Department. The cost of Ministerial and Special Adviser travel is recorded with travel costs for the Minister's Office support staff.

Expenditure on travel outside Northern Ireland is not separately recorded by my Department.

Total expenditure on Departmental Ministerial travel and subsistence (inside and outside Northern Ireland), including the costs of the Minister, Special Adviser and Minister's Office support staff during the last four financial years is shown in the table below:

Financial Year	Total £
2011-12	5,884
2012-13	6,068
2013-14	3,404
2014-15	4,505

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice why the unlawfully at large prisoner Jonathan Turley is not listed as such on the Northern Ireland Prison Service website.

(AQW 46211/11-15)

Mr Ford: Jonathan Turley is an untried prisoner whose release was not sanctioned by the Northern Ireland Prison Service. The circulation of his personal details is a matter for the Police Service of Northern Ireland.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Justice to outline the prison population of (i) Maghaberry Prison; (ii) Magilligan Prison; and (iii) Hydebank Wood Young Offenders Centre and Prison in each of the last six years.

(AQW 46222/11-15)

Mr Ford: The average daily population by prison establishment is shown in the table below:

	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014
Maghaberry	824	771	906	1,002	1,050	1,051
Magilligan	414	465	510	531	545	558
Hydebank	230	226	258	235	232	222

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Justice to detail the maximum capacity of (i) Maghaberry Prison; (ii) Magilligan Prison; and (iii) Hydebank Wood Young Offenders Centre and Prison.

(AQW 46224/11-15)

Mr Ford: Northern Ireland Prison Service (NIPS) establishments do not have a maximum operational capacity.

Each establishment has a Certified Normal Accommodation (CNA) figure and NIPS accommodates people in custody based upon the requirements of the courts. There is scope to increase that capacity through cell sharing.

	CNA
Maghaberry	988
Magilligan	568
Hydebank	362

Some accommodation at Hydebank Wood is currently temporarily closed to facilitate refurbishment.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Justice how much has been spent on training prison officers in each of the last five years. (AQW 46225/11-15)

Mr Ford: The expenditure on training all prison staff over the last 5 years is as follows:

Year	Budget
2010-2011	£276,500
2011-2012	£199,639
2012-2013	£206,558
2013-2014	£217,726
2014-2015	£162,011

It is not possible to give an exact breakdown of expenditure on prison officers and non- prison grades.

These figures include resources and equipment required to deliver the training. It does not include accommodation and salary costs associated with the Prison Service College.

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Justice to detail the number of prison staff broken down by job description in (i) Maghaberry Prison; (ii) Magilligan Prison; and (iii) Hydebank Wood Young Offenders Centre and Prison. (AQW 46226/11-15)

Mr Ford: Staff in the Northern Ireland Prison Service are employed on the basis of their ability to perform a range of duties at a particular grade. The following table provides the number of full time equivalent (FTE) prison staff, employed in each Prison Establishment, broken down by grade at 1 May 2015:

Grade	Maghaberry No. of Staff (FTE)	Magilligan No. of Staff (FTE)	Hydebank Wood No. of Staff (FTE)
Governor in Charge	2	1	1
Functional Head	3	1	2
Unit Manager	7	5	5
Senior Officers	55	27	20
Main Grade Officers	234.55	123.87	90.35
Custody Prison Officer	286	101.85	61.54
Operational Support Grade	3	8.89	7
Night Custody Officer	56	22	16.5
Total	646.55	290.61	203.39

Mr Anderson asked the Minister of Justice how much has been spent on repair and maintenance work in Maghaberry Prison in each of the last four years. (AQW 46227/11-15)

Mr Ford: The sums expended on maintenance and repair in Maghaberry Prison in the last four years are identified in the table below:-

Maintenance and Repair in Maghaberry Prison

Description	2011/12	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Direct Labour, Materials, response maintenance and planned maintenance	£2,757,000	£3,199,000	£2,261,000	£1,916,000

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of Sir Keir Starmer's report into the Public Prosecution Service handling of allegations made by Máiría Cahill and associated persons.

(AQW 46263/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Starmer Review is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions. That said, the Report is clearly a thorough and well-considered review. I welcome the Director's decision to publish the Report in full and to accept all its findings without reservation. I also welcome the programme of change that is underway based on Sir Keir's recommendations and that the Director has offered a sincere apology to the three victims involved in the cases in question.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Justice to detail every ministerial direction issued by his Department since May 2007 including the (i) date; and (ii) the nature of each.

Mr Ford: I have not issued any ministerial directions since taking office in April 2010.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether (i) the Director of the Public Prosecution Service has advised him if he has, or intends to, excuse himself from cases; and (ii) how many cases has the Director of the Public Prosecution Service excused himself from since his appointment, stating each instance.

(AQW 46277/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Director of Public Prosecutions is not required to advise me if he has, or intends to, excuse himself from individual cases and he has not done so.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the number of prisoners categorised as Supporting Prisoners at Risk and the impact on discipline officers within the Northern Ireland Prison Service who are responsible for a wing of upwards of 50 prisoners.

(AQW 46284/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Supporting Prisoners at Risk (SPAR) process is in place to support vulnerable prisoners at risk of self-harm or suicide. The number of individuals who are supported under SPAR can vary on a daily or hourly basis.

Following a joint inspection by Criminal Justice Inspection Northern Ireland and the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority, 'The Safety of Prisoners Held by the Northern Ireland Prison Service Report' was published in October 2014. This report included a recommendation to review the SPAR process to take account of the issues raised during the inspection, including the roles and responsibilities of operational staff.

The work is ongoing and has included consultation with internal and external stakeholders.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice what his Department is doing to rectify the dispute over criminal legal aid fees.

(AQW 46317/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Bar Council and Law Society have been granted leave by the High Court to proceed with a Judicial Review concerning recent changes to the levels of remuneration payable by way of criminal legal aid for cases in the Crown Court. Separately, the Criminal Bar Association has stated that its members will not undertake work which would be remunerated under the new rules, and individual solicitors appear to be taking similar action. It is surprising and disappointing that lawyers should take this action when they have a legal challenge pending.

I will be robustly defending this legal challenge against levels of remuneration which were set following detailed analysis; adjusted following consultation; and have been through the legislative process. While a range of factors need to be considered in developing fees, I must also take into consideration the available budget and the wider financial environment facing my Department.

I have asked my officials to monitor the impact the withdrawal of services will have on the Courts and they will engage with all sectors of the justice system to try to mitigate any impact on defendants, victims and witnesses. I remain open to representations from the Bar Council and the Law Society, and would encourage their members to reconsider and to act in the best interests of their clients.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice to detail the respondents to the recent consultation on the future of Limavady Courthouse.

(AQW 46344/11-15)

Mr Ford: Those who responded to the consultation on proposals for the rationalisation of the court estate and who included specific comments on proposals for Limavady courthouse are as follows:

- Mr Gregory Campbell MLA,
- Mr George Robinson MLA,
- Ald Alan Robinson, Mayor of Limavady,
- Cllr J E Scott,
- Cllr James McCorkell,
- Mr David Gilmour, and
- The Probation Board for Northern Ireland.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice what strategy his Department has in place to ensure the law will be fully implemented given it will become an offence to purchase sexual services as of 1 June 2015.

(AQW 46382/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department has undertaken its statutory requirement to raise public awareness of the new offence. Following introduction, enforcement will be an operational matter for the Police Service of Northern Ireland and prosecution decisions will be for the Public Prosecution Service.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the most recent release on bail of Paul Hunter Redpath, (i) whether a member of Probation Board NI staff gave evidence under oath in crown court during the bail application supporting his release or stating their willingness to have him released to reside in their hostel; (ii) what assurances were provided as to monitoring and adherence to bail conditions; and (iii) whether there were objections to bail from any other agency.

(AQW 46492/11-15)

Mr Ford: Probation Board for Northern Ireland has not had any recent involvement with Paul Hunter Redpath. This includes any recent bail applications.

Department for Regional Development

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the number of Translink (i) Metro; and (ii) Ulster buses unused (a) on a daily basis; and (ii) during peak times.

(AQW 45746/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): In common with other bus companies, Ulsterbus and Metro allocate approximately 10% of its vehicles to cover for engineering maintenance, vehicle inspections, PSV preparation and accident damage cover.

The percentage above equates to 33 Metro buses and 97 Ulster buses which are unused on a daily basis including peak hours. Without these vehicles, Ulsterbus and Metro would have insufficient capacity to cover the engineering issues listed above and as a result services would be affected.

The figures above do not include life expired vehicles awaiting disposal.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45227/11-15, to provide, or place in the Assembly library, a copy of the procurement and tendering procedures or policies relevant to Translink, as a Departmental related agency at the time of the tender in 2009; and detail any amendments to these procedures and policies since 2009.

(AQW 45808/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: A copy of the current Translink Policy and Procedures will be placed in the Assembly library, along with the equivalent documentation which was in use in 2009 when the original taxi contract was conducted. The procedures followed were in line with the Utility Regulations.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development what is the current realisable market value for the terminal buildings at (i) Dundonald; and (ii) Cairnshill Park and Ride facilities; and what plans he has for these currently locked-up premises.

(AQW 45837/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not have figures for the current market value of the terminal buildings at Dundonald or Cairnshill Park and Ride facilities.

These buildings are now closed 24/7 due to the resource pressures facing my Department.

Should additional funding be made available, I plan to review the current position.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development how many prosecutions for illegal parking in disabled bays have taken place in each of the last five years.

(AQW 45867/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Since parking enforcement was decriminalised in 2006 there have not been any prosecutions for illegal parking in disabled bays. Instead, Penalty Charge Notices (PCNs) are issued by Traffic Attendants to vehicles parked in a 'designated disabled person's parking place without clearly displaying a valid disabled persons parking badge'. The table below shows the number of PCNs issued for this category of parking contravention in each of the last five financial years:

Type of PCNs Issued	Number of PCNs issued for Disabled Bay Contraventions per Financial Year
	2010/2011	2011/2012	2012/2013	2013/2014	2014/2015
On-street	4,693	5,308	4,855	4,741	4,228
In Car parks	1,571	2,220	1,938	1,934	1,802

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Regional Development what impact assessment his Department has carried out on the funding reductions to Newry and Mourne Community Transport, in relation to older people and people with disabilities.

(AQW 46006/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The primary policy drivers for my department in regard to support for community transport schemes are the Regional Transportation Strategy (RTS) and the Accessible Transport Strategy (ATS)

In 2012 and building on the RTS, a new Strategy, "Ensuring a Sustainable Transport Future": A New Approach to Regional Transportation was adopted. This was subject to an EQIA at this time. The ATS was also subject to an EQIA at this time.

As there has not been any change to the underlying policies, no Impact Assessment has been undertaken. However I can confirm that a High Level Equality Screening Assessment was carried out for the draft budget that was issued for consultation on 27th November 2014.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the Craigantlet roundabout scheme.

(AQW 46009/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My officials have initiated a pre-application enquiry with colleagues from PlanningNI. The timescale for this is dependent upon PlanningNI receiving responses from the statutory agencies that have been consulted as part of this process. However, once the comments from the pre-application enquiry have been returned, I will make a decision on the most appropriate way forward.

Delivery of any scheme will then be subject to the availability of the necessary land and funding.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45164/11-15, why there has been a 50 per cent reduction in the amount of resurfacing in Upper Bann.

(AQW 46081/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The reduction in the length of road resurfacing completed in Upper Bann primarily reflects the reduced levels of funding for such works available to my Department in the 2014/15 financial year.

It should be noted that the type of work specified, for example urban/rural resurfacing, strengthening or reconstruction, along with the average road width, also significantly affects the length of resurfacing works that can be carried out within the available budget.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45164/11-15, to detail the lengths of road that have been resurfaced in each constituency in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46082/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I would remind the Member that information on completed and proposed road schemes can be found in my Department's Spring and Autumn Reports to Councils. These reports can be accessed from my Department's internet site at the following web addresses:

- <http://www.drdni.gov.uk/northern-division-council-reports.htm>
- <http://www.drdni.gov.uk/eastern-division-council-reports.htm>
- <http://www.drdni.gov.uk/southern-division-council-reports.htm>
- <http://www.drdni.gov.uk/western-division-council-reports.htm>

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development to list the Translink facilities in which staff are afforded taxi provision; and how many staff at each facility can avail of this provision.

(AQW 46092/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that train crew staff operate out of 8 separate locations, as outlined below. Numbers of relevant staff at each location are also identified.

Location	Train Drivers	Conductors
Belfast York Road / Fortwilliam Depot	37	-
Belfast Adelaide Depot	28	-
Belfast Central Station	-	59
Portadown Station	15	14
Bangor Station	14	13
Larne Harbour Station	14	10
Coleraine Station	13	14
Londonderry Station	10	9

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the progress of the maintenance and inspection of street lighting in 2015/16; and whether there have been any recent changes to contracts for executing such services.

(AQW 46102/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is facing a £60 million Resource budget pressure in 2015/16, more than half of which will fall to TransportNI.

This budget pressure has created an immediate impact on the delivery of routine maintenance services, including Street Lighting, and, as such, I have had no option other than to agree a skeletal service at some financial risk to my Department, until June monitoring.

There is insufficient funding currently available to engage external street lighting contractors who normally carry out around 75% of routine street lighting repairs. However, hazardous defects will be attended to and my Department's internal workforce will be providing a skeletal repair service for other street lighting defects.

My Department's street lighting term contractors have been informed that no new work instructions will be issued for routine maintenance.

Street lighting night scouting contractors have also been informed that no further work instructions will be issued, and that my Department does not intend to extend these contracts when they expire at the end of this September.

I will be making a strong bid for resource funding in June monitoring so that routine maintenance services can be restored to normal levels and I hope that the Member will support my Department's bid.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development what the additional resource cost is in (i) 2014/15; and (ii) 2015/16 to his Department arising from the settlement with NI Water staff.

(AQW 46105/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The additional resource cost arising from the settlement with NI Water staff is: (i) £1.44m for 2014/15; and (ii) £1.52m for 2015/16. By way of context, the NI Water Resource DEL Budget for staff costs in 2014/15 was £45.7m.

The element of the increases provided to NI Water staff above 1% are part of productivity and modernisation initiatives which will deliver overall operational efficiencies for the company, as well as providing additional resilience for out of hours operational cover. The costs over 2014/15 and 2015/16 associated with the 0.95% benefits payments total £960,000, whilst the resultant benefits over the same two year period total £3.79m. In other words, the Company will make savings of £2.83m over the period covered by the agreement.

The pay agreement also secures the commitment of the Water Group of Trade Unions (WGTU) to work positively, actively and jointly with NI Water to make further progress on the modernisation of working practices within the company.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the use of the Don't Mow, Let it Grow campaign as an answer to cuts to funding for urban grass cutting.

(AQW 46110/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is currently working in partnership with the local Council and the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA) on the 'Don't Mow, Let it Grow' project to restore a relatively small number of public grasslands and road verges within the Causeway Coast and Glens to flower-rich meadows.

This initiative does not mean that my Department will stop cutting grass as the effective biodiversity management of such areas will still require a single cut and removal of cuttings to avoid soil enrichment. However, it would not be considered economically justifiable to do so on a large scale.

As you may be aware, it is my Department's policy to only cut a strip or swathe width (1.2m) of grass at roadside verges unless noxious weeds take hold or visibility is a problem, in which case grass is cut back further, as appropriate, at each location.

Therefore, even if this project is successful with the results shared across the country, it is likely the initiative will only have a minimal impact both on the amount of urban grass to be cut, for which my Department is responsible, and within the overall context of the budgetary challenges facing my Department.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45441/11-15, to detail the change in the annual contract between TransportNI and local councils, which funds urban grass cutting; and for his assessment of the impact on the tourist economy.

(AQW 46111/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: TransportNI's objective in cutting grass on its lands is to prevent overgrowth onto footway and carriageway surfaces and the obstruction of sightlines and traffic signs. Grass cutting operations are therefore carried out for road safety reasons and not for aesthetic or amenity purposes.

The policy attempts to maintain the balance between road safety, the control of noxious weeds and environmental protection and historically provided for two cuts per year in rural areas and five cuts in urban areas. The area to be cut was one swathe width (1.2m), with the complete area required for sightlines to be cut as necessary.

In some cases, District Councils wish to have a higher standard of grass maintenance within their boundary than is provided by TransportNI, usually for aesthetic and amenity reasons. In these cases, the Councils accepted responsibility for the work within their respective boundary and were reimbursed by TransportNI for the cuts that would have been carried out under its policy. However, not all councils seek a higher standard of grass maintenance or adopt this practice.

As you may be aware, my Department is facing a £60 million resource budget pressure in 2015/16, more than half of which has fallen to TransportNI, and since 31 March 2015 my Department has been unable to employ external providers to undertake routine maintenance activities such as grass cutting or fund the grass cutting service provided by Councils on behalf of TransportNI.

However, our internal workforce will continue to provide a skeleton routine maintenance service in relation to grass cutting, which will allow all areas to be cut once between April and October, with sightlines at bends and junctions being cut more frequently as required in the interests of road safety.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 44740/11-15, whether his Department has considered paying for electricity used.

(AQW 46139/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department always strives to pay for electricity which it has used.

In the case of public lighting electricity, and in line with the rest of the UK and Ireland, payment is made within the agreed charging mechanisms for unmetered electricity. My Department has considered alternatives to this system, but it is not considered viable to move to widespread metering of public lighting supplies at this time.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, in relation to the £170,000 Translink expenditure on taxi provision for staff, whether taxis are individually booked as required or block booked in advance; and detail the percentage for both.

(AQW 46143/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that sampling of invoices during 2013 and 2014 confirms that approximately 50 percent of all taxi operations are block booked in advance. These are mostly short journeys where drivers start and finish shifts at different locations i.e. pick up a train in the middle of the day at Great Victoria Street and finish the shift at the train depot at Adelaide or Fortwilliam. The remaining 50 percent will be booked in response to specific unplanned operational requirements.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the owner of the ground Central Station, Belfast, stands on; (ii) whether the roads infrastructure surrounding these premises are public or private, including the access road and the exclusive taxi rank.

(AQW 46146/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that it owns the land on which Central Station is based along with the access road and car park, including the private hire taxi rank.

Mr Clarke asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 44740/11-15, what is the target time for repairing street lights that burn unnecessarily during the day.

(AQW 46147/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Due to the significant reduction in my Department's maintenance budget, I have had to stop using external contractors who previously carried out about 75% of street lighting repairs. My Department is currently only able to use its internal workforce to carry out routine street lighting repairs, which therefore affects the level of service that can be provided.

Street lighting repairs will generally be carried out in line with the following priorities:

- 1 faults that present an electrical or structural safety hazard;
- 2 groups of street lights which are off;
- 3 groups of street lights which are burning during the day; and
- 4 single outages and single day burners will be dealt with in the most efficient manner, bearing in mind the limited resources available.

In the current circumstances, it is therefore not possible to specify a target time for the repair of day burning street lights. In reality, it will depend upon the numbers of higher priority defects that have to be attended to first.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the Caw roundabout improvement scheme in Londonderry.

(AQW 46184/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Traffic surveys at this junction have recently been carried out on all approaches to Caw Roundabout, including the Waterfoot Park access onto the roundabout.

It was noted that during the morning weekday peak hour, approximately 5,100 vehicles access onto the Caw Roundabout, of which 122 emerge from Waterfoot Park. It was also noted that the traffic waiting time from joining a queue during the busy morning period to access onto the roundabout is greatest on the Waterfoot Park approach to the Caw roundabout, with the longest recorded waiting time during this peak hour being four minutes.

My Department considers that the Caw Roundabout is currently able to satisfactorily accommodate the large daily volume of traffic and there are no immediate proposals to carry out any improvements. However, my officials are aware of a number of significant Planning Applications which may further impact on this roundabout and this will be taken into account when dealing with these applications.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45182/11-15, (i) how do staff ascertain if a public hire taxi is intending to tout or pick up a fare; and (ii) are public hire taxis blocked from accessing the concourse even if there is a fare waiting, particularly for passengers with mobility issues who may prefer to use a fully disabled access public hire vehicle.

(AQW 46212/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As I have previously stated in AQW 45182/11-15, the terms and conditions of the Public Taxi licence do not permit soliciting for business within the confines of Central Station property.

Translink has advised that operators of public taxis at this location have, on occasions, flouted the licensing regulations by encroaching into the station entrance and vocally touting for customers.

In circumstances such as those outlined above, any passenger with mobility issues is currently readily able to exit via the station entrance to avail of the services of public hire taxis at East Bridge Street, should they so wish. Alternatively, they may access legally parked public hire taxis via the lift to the public taxi rank at Mays Meadow.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development if there are any company cars used by Translink staff.

(AQW 46288/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that there are currently 40 of their employees supplied with a company car.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, in light of the introduction of bus lane cameras on 1 June 2015, to outline the position should a member of the public hail a public hire taxi at front doors of Central Station, Belfast.

(AQW 46624/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Bus Lane Legislation for East Bridge Street does not permit taxis to enter this bus lane. Therefore, it would be an offence if a taxi entered the bus lane to pick up a passenger.

Signs in Central Station advise customers that taxis are available from Mays Meadows.

Department for Social Development

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development to outline any changes in his Department's commitment to the Glencairn Social Development Project in recent months.

(AQW 45737/11-15)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): You are asked to note that this project is known as the 'Glencairn Neighbourhood Centre Proposal'.

My Department provided Neighbourhood Renewal funding of £45,528 to St Andrew's Community Action Group to assist the Glencairn community develop plans for a new neighbourhood centre. This work was also supported by Belfast City Council. An economic appraisal testing the financial viability of a number of options has been completed. A new build facility on a brown field site within the Glencairn estate costing approximately £2.1 Million has been identified as the preferred option.

The budget my Department would use to support this project is to transfer to local Councils under Reform of local Government. As a result, the Department's Capital Programme for 2014/15 and 2015/16 has been focused on the practicalities of delivering projects before the planned transfer, now April 2016.

Due to the scale of this project and the risk of slippage beyond the planned transfer dates it has not been possible to consider funding for this project.

My officials continue to work with both St Andrew's Community Action Group and Belfast City Council in developing a business plan that will support the local community in identifying potential funders for the project, and if successful, plan for its delivery, future management and sustainability.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development to list the grants and funding streams which his Department (i) has facilitated for applications in 2014/2015; and (ii) intend to open for applications in 2015/2016.

(AQW 45749/11-15)

Mr Storey:

(i) In 2014/15 the Department for Social Development has facilitated applications for the following grants/funding streams:

- Neighbourhood Renewal Investment Fund;
- Areas at Risk;
- Support for the voluntary and community sector in things such as: Generalist Advice, Volunteering, women in disadvantaged areas, community support and investment, sustainability, women's centres childcare, faith based engagement and national citizen's service;
- Urban Development Grants;
- Volunteering Small Grants;
- Community Care Grants;
- Budgeting Loans;
- Crisis Loans;
- Belfast City Centre Event Grants;
- Belfast City Centre Community Activity Grants.

Northern Ireland Housing Executive grants/funding streams:

- Community Safety Grants;
- Community Cohesion Programmes including: Estate Based, Better Bonfires and Re-Imaging Communities;
- Private Sector Improvement Grants including: Disabled Facilities Grants, Repairs, Renovation, Replacement, Home Repairs Assistance; Houses in Multiple Occupation Grants; Group Repair Scheme, Boiler Replacement Scheme; Warm Homes Scheme and Affordable Warmth Scheme.

(ii) In 2015/16 the Department intends to open the following grants/funding streams to new applications:

- Volunteering Small Grants;
- Community Care Grants;
- Budgeting Loans;
- Crisis Loans;
- Belfast City Centre Events Grants;
- Belfast City Centre Community Activity Grants;

Northern Ireland Housing Executive grants/funding streams:

- Community Safety Grants;
- Community Cohesion Programmes including: Estate Based, Better Bonfires and Re-Imaging Communities;
- Private Sector Improvement Grants including: Disabled Facilities Grants, Repairs, Renovation, Replacement, Home Repairs Assistance; Houses in Multiple Occupation Grants; Group Repair Scheme, Boiler Replacement Scheme; and Affordable Warmth Scheme.

Mr B McCreagh asked the Minister for Social Development how he will ensure that socially deprived communities are protected as powers are transferred to local councils under the Regeneration Bill.

(AQW 45785/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Regeneration Bill will allow the conferral of powers to Councils, in April 2016, to undertake regeneration and community development activities. The Bill sits in the context of the framework provided for local government reform by the DOE's Local Government Act (Northern Ireland) 2014, which received Royal Assent last year. I believe that these new responsibilities will contribute significantly to the aims of local government reform, which are to provide a stronger and more efficient local government that delivers more effective services to its communities. It will give Councils the opportunity to really shape service provision for their citizens, whom they have been elected to serve, and to adapt to the local needs of those communities.

My Department will retain overarching policy responsibility for these matters and Councils will be required to have regard to any guidance issued by the Department relating to the exercise of these functions. The Department will also put in place appropriate and proportionate monitoring arrangements.

In addition to the regeneration and community development functions which are transferring to Councils my Department provides a wide range of support to individuals, families, households and communities through; the provision of decent and affordable housing, action to address fuel poverty, the delivery of child maintenance arrangements, comprehensive social security provisions, and supporting the voluntary and community sector. These social protection measures will continue to target substantial resources at addressing the needs of deprived communities.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department has assessed the need for further statutory powers to provide for more effective regulation of the private rental sector.

(AQW 45814/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department is currently undertaking a review of the role and regulation of the Private Rented Sector. Part of this review includes evaluating the effectiveness of existing regulation and considering regulatory practice in other jurisdictions. A discussion document will issue before Summer to garner views. A consultation paper, on proposals for change, will issue before the end of 2015. Any legislation that will need to be introduced will be taken forward during 2016/17.

Regulation, in order to be fully effective, requires robust enforcement. Better regulation does not necessarily mean 'more' but can mean enhanced focus on enforcement of existing regulation.

A key aim of the review will be to clarify the Department's approach to regulation.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister for Social Development whether his Department monitors non-compliance with tenancy deposit scheme requirements; and if so, to detail the number of prosecutions or fines imposed since 2013.

(AQW 45815/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Tenancy Deposit Schemes Regulations (NI) 2012 came into effect on 1 April 2013. Council environmental health departments are responsible for enforcement action where a landlord / agent does not comply with the law.

My Department monitors non compliance on a quarterly basis and is aware that standard council practice is to issue warning letters before issuing a fixed penalty.

Since the introduction of the Tenancy Deposit Schemes in April 2013 there have been 4 fixed penalties, 2 of which resulted in court referrals.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development what discussions he has had with the new local councils to ensure that economic redevelopment includes consideration of the role, and work, of the community and voluntary sector.

(AQW 45836/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Regeneration Bill will confer powers in relation to urban regeneration and community development on the new Councils from April 2016. It will be for Councils and their locally elected representatives to decide how best to address the needs of their areas through their respective Community Plans.

My department is committed to supporting the Councils in the lead up to and during the transition. For my part I have completed a series of meetings with Councillors and officials from each of the new Council areas where I discussed the transferring budgets alongside local issues raised. These meetings did not focus on the work of the community and voluntary sector.

However my Department has previously met with Councils to provide information on the department's work in relation to the Urban Regeneration and Community Development Policy Framework. These discussions included information on supporting action 4 of the Framework, to promote an effective and efficient voluntary and community sector.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of Disabled Facilities Grant applications which were received by his Department; and of these, to detail (i) how many were successful; and (ii) how many homes were improved as an outcome, in 2014/2015, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 45841/11-15)

Mr Storey: The table below, provided by the Housing Executive and broken down by Parliamentary constituency, details:-

- The number of Disabled Facilities Grant (DFG) applications made in 2014/15;
- The number of those applications which were approved; and
- The number of applications approved which are complete

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the review of The Appeals Service processes, roles and responsibilities; including the loading and grading of posts.
(AQW 45868/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Department for Social Development commissioned the Business Consultancy Service, Department of Finance and Personnel to undertake an organisational review of the administrative processes within The Appeals Service, including the loading and grading of a representative number of posts.

The review is now at draft report stage and is being considered by DSD in conjunction with NICTS.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development how his Department engages with relevant stakeholders to identify demand for supported housing for vulnerable adults.
(AQW 45881/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive, on behalf of the Department for Social Development, engages with relevant stakeholders in the voluntary and statutory agencies on an ongoing basis to identify demand for supported housing for vulnerable adults.

The Housing Executive is the administering authority for the Supporting People programme in Northern Ireland and demand for supported housing is identified and considered through a commissioning process.

Both the Commissioning Body and the 5 local commissioning groups known as the Area Supporting People Partnerships (ASSPS) include representatives from the Health and Social Care Board, Health and Social Care Trusts and the Probation Board for Northern Ireland. During the commissioning process, the needs of vulnerable adults are explored and validated, drawing on relevant research and agreed through consultation with all members.

Supporting People services that have been recommended by the Commissioning Body are then considered by the Housing Executive Board. Once a Supporting People service has been established the Housing Executive monitors quality and performance to ensure the needs of stakeholders and those of the vulnerable person receiving the service are being met.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development how widely or narrowly, will the term 'members of the same family' be used to describe tenants in the definition of Houses in Multiple Occupation, be interpreted.

(AQW 45916/11-15)

Mr Storey: The review of the Houses in Multiple Occupation (HMO) regulation concluded that the definition was inadequate. The new HMO Bill specifies the meaning of "household" for the purposes of HMO licensing. The term household primarily includes members of the same "family". The definition of family within the Bill includes married, unmarried and same-sex couples, step children and foster children, as well as blood relatives. The list of blood relatives includes parents, grandparents, children and step-children, grandchildren, brothers, sisters, uncles, aunts, nephews, nieces and cousins.

Additionally, a person who is a personal or domestic carer in a residential capacity is to be treated as a member of the household for the purposes of this Bill.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the window replacement scheme within North Down, including the number of properties that have still to be completed.

(AQW 45934/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that there are currently two window replacement schemes on site in Bangor and both are due to be completed within the next seven weeks. In the first scheme in Holywood, which comprises 250 properties, 205 have been completed and 45 properties remain to be completed. The second scheme, in the Jubilee/Rathgill/Kilcooley/Groomsport estates in Bangor, comprises 187 properties, 93 of which have been completed and a further 94 properties remain to be completed.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development whether he intends to transfer the totality of the Community Infrastructure Fund entirely to local councils via the Regeneration Bill.

(AQW 45977/11-15)

Mr Storey: Responsibility for supporting community development, including the Community Investment Fund will transfer to local councils via the Regeneration Bill.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development, in considering the potential passage of the Regeneration Bill, whether his Department has made an assessment of the difficulties and potential losses to Community Infrastructure Fund funded organisations.

(AQW 45978/11-15)

Mr Storey: At this time I am unable to make an assessment of how the transfer of powers for economic redevelopment to the new local councils and in particular the transfer of the Community Investment Fund is likely to impact on the Voluntary and Community Sector. However, I have met with the eleven new Councils to discuss the transfer of powers. I, and my Department are keen to support councils to take on board their new powers and I consider that councils are best placed to determine how to implement the powers and to maximise benefits for the Voluntary and Community Sector.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development what level of engagement he has had with Community Infrastructure Fund funded organisations (i) prior to the introduction of the Regeneration Bill; and (ii) since the Bill passed at Second Stage.

(AQW 45979/11-15)

Mr Storey: Prior to the introduction of the Regeneration Bill my Department wrote to all groups funded under the Community Investment Fund to advise of future transfer of associated powers and facilitated a number of public consultations attended by these and other stakeholder groups. Subsequently, I have met with the eleven new councils to discuss the transfer of powers and the Department's continued support around the new powers.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development whether there are any policy papers or legislative proposals from his Department being delayed from being presented to the Executive and currently tabled with the Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister.

(AQW 45980/11-15)

Mr Storey: Executive business and all aspects of the Executive decision making process are confidential.

Mr Swann asked the Minister for Social Development to provide an update on his Department's approach to the Office of the First and Deputy First Minister, on the possibility of developing a form of transition assistance for the voluntary and community sector as it adapts to transformed funding arrangements

(AQW 46014/11-15)

Mr Storey: I still await a response to my recent correspondence to the First Minister and the Deputy First Minister (OFMdFM) where I offered my assistance and that of my Department to the overview being undertaken by OFMdFM Junior Ministers on the budget decisions across departments and also raised, without prejudice, the possibility of developing some form of transition assistance for voluntary sector organisations, as they adapt to transformed funding arrangements.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Social Development how many self-referrals have been made to the Affordable Warmth Scheme from (i) individuals; and (ii) local councils.

(AQW 46016/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Affordable Warmth Scheme is primarily a targeted area based scheme which finds and assists households in extreme or severe fuel poverty. This scheme is administered in partnership with local councils and the Housing Executive. Councils have the discretion to accept non targeted referrals from a range of sources including health professionals, social workers and Environmental Health Officers.

The Housing Executive does not accept self-referrals directly from individuals; all referrals to the Housing Executive come from councils. By 19th May the Housing Executive had received 5,585 referrals from councils to the Affordable Warmth Scheme, 1,172 (21%) of these were self referrals from non targeted areas.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Social Development for his assessment of whether the focus on targeting households will discourage self-referrals to the Affordable Warmth Scheme.

(AQW 46017/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Affordable Warmth Scheme is primarily a targeted area based scheme which finds and assists households in extreme or severe fuel poverty. I expect that the vast majority of homes assisted will be in the targeted areas.

Councils have the discretion to accept non targeted referrals from a range of sources including health professionals, social workers and Environmental Health Officers. Therefore, I do not believe that eligible householders will be discouraged from applying for the scheme.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 43525/11-15, to clarify whether 1281 or 328 households have had measures installed under the Affordable Warmth Scheme.

(AQW 46018/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Affordable Warmth Scheme was piloted in 2012 and 2013 and was launched in September 2014. The 1,281 homes referred to in AQW 4325/11-15 included homes which had been assisted in the Affordable Warmth pilots.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how much has been spent on maintenance and improvements on housing in Foyle in each of the last five years.

(AQW 46098/11-15)

Mr Storey: I assume the Member is referring to Northern Ireland Housing Executive (NIHE) properties. The NIHE has provided the tables attached in relation to the amount spent on maintenance and improvements on housing in the Foyle area in each of the last five years: -

(i) Maintenance Spend on NIHE Homes (by Parliamentary constituency):

Year	Expenditure £
2010/11	3,616,592
2011/12	3,494,389
2012/13	3,478,707
2013/14	3,332,347
2014/15	3,059,775
Total	16,981,810

(ii) Improvements Spend on NIHE Homes (by NIHE District office area):

Year	Expenditure £
2010/11	5,495,356
2011/12	6,111,047
2012/13	4,692,205

Year	Expenditure £
2013/14	2,731,607
2014/15	3,321,650
Total	22,351,865

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 45547/11-15, to detail which stakeholders contributed to the evaluation report; and which of these are from East Londonderry.

(AQW 46113/11-15)

Mr Storey: The stakeholders who contributed to the evaluation of the Volunteering Strategy were randomly selected by Strategic Investment Board (SIB) and details can be found in Table 1.

Table 1

Organisation	Name	Position
Volunteer Now	Wendy Osborne Denise Hayward	Chief Executive Director of Outreach and Engagement
Limavady Volunteer Centre	Tricia Kelly	Centre Manager
Omagh Volunteer Centre	Michelle McRory	Centre Manager
North West Churches Volunteer Centre	Jacqueline Garnon	Centre Manager and SOLVE project contact
Causeway Volunteer Centre	Mary McNickle	Centre Manager
Craigavon and Banbridge Volunteer Centre	Donna Stewart	Centre Manager
Limavady Community Development Initiative (LCDI/AIVC)	Johnny McShane	Small Grants Officer
Ulster Rugby	Chris Webster	Sport in the Community Project Contact
Outdoor Recreation NI	Caro-lynn Ferris	Executive Director

The stakeholders who contributed to the evaluation of the Volunteering Strategy from East Londonderry are detailed at Table 2. It should be noted that some of the organisations listed in Table 1 are geographically based outside of the East Londonderry area however, the service they provide can include the East Londonderry area.

Table 2

Organisation	Name	Position
Limavady Volunteer Centre	Tricia Kelly	Centre Manager
Omagh Volunteer Centre	Michelle McRory	Centre Manager
Causeway Volunteer Centre	Mary McNickle	Centre Manager
Limavady Community Development Initiative (LCDI/AIVC)	Johnny McShane	Small Grants Officer

To further inform the evaluation of the Volunteering strategy a survey was developed by strategic Investment Board (SIB) and issued to Volunteering Small Grants recipients in order to seek their views and 492 responses were received to the survey. There were 658 successful groups in 14/15 and 661 for the 2014/15 year. This was an anonymised survey therefore the geographical split cannot be provided.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development for an update, including targets, actions completed, and delays in relation to the redevelopment plans for (i) the Curran Street site, Portadown; and (ii) the Girdwood site, Belfast.

(AQW 46120/11-15)

Mr Storey:

(i) The Curran Street Site, Portadown

The site at Curran Street in Portadown was acquired by Oaklee Homes Group for the provision of 36 homes and some commercial property. The first phase of the development is the supply of six social and six affordable homes by June this year.

The Northern Ireland Housing Executive gave Oaklee Homes Group permission to build six social houses on the basis of need in the area. The building contract was signed on 31 March 2014, with a contract period of fifteen months. This time period is on target to be achieved with a handover date of 16 June 2015 now proposed. Oaklee is confident that it will have all six properties occupied by mid to late June.

The successful sale of the six affordable homes will determine the way forward on this site for any subsequent phases. The affordable homes will be advertised for sale on the open market and will be eligible for shared equity sale through the Co-Ownership scheme. If the houses sell successfully, it is anticipated that Oaklee Homes Group will continue with phase two of the development and build further properties as the area is regenerated. In the event that there is not a market for shared equity affordable housing in the area, it is expected that the affordable homes will be transferred to fulfil any further social need in the area.

(ii) The Girdwood Site, Belfast

The development of Girdwood Park is being taken forward under the agreed Masterplan Conceptual Framework (MCF) which has cross community and cross political support. I have publicly stated my commitment to delivery of the Masterplan in its entirety and it remains a priority right across central and local government.

The Department is currently investing in excess of £5m to put in place infrastructure (roads, power, water and landscaping) at Girdwood Park together with the outdoor sports pitch which is expected to complete late this year. Construction work is progressing well on the Belfast City Council led; SEUPB funded Community Hub which is due to open in September 2015 whilst Apex Housing are due to complete construction of 60 housing units in early 2016.

The remaining elements of the masterplan to be delivered include the Indoor Sports Facility and Mixed Use Economic Units and the Department is currently undertaking important preparatory work with other stakeholders to help work out what these facilities could include and the best route for achieving their delivery.

Developing additional housing along Cliftonpark Avenue remains a priority and is likely to form the final phase of work at Girdwood Park.

Ownership of the site will pass to Belfast City Council in 2016 under Reform of Local Government.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development what innovative actions, and with what effect, have been taken since the introduction of the Autism Strategy.

(AQW 46121/11-15)

Mr Storey: I am fully committed to the Autism Strategy and to delivering on the appropriate commitments contained within the associated Autism Action Plan. Officials from my Department are members of the Autism Strategy Inter-departmental Senior Officials Group and the Autism Strategy Regional Multi-Agency Implementation Team.

As part of the work arising from the Autism Action Plan officials in my Department working with Autism NI developed an autism factsheet and associated training material which has been delivered to just over 2000 front line staff across my Department. Going forward a new e-learning Disability Awareness course giving general advice on autism has been developed by the Centre for Applied Learning and will be mandatory for all new front line staff within my Department.

Since the launch of the Autism Strategy and accompanying Action Plan the Improving Benefit Uptake team in the Social Security Agency has been part of a multi-agency advisory team facilitating the Adult Autism Advice Services based in both Ballymena and Belfast. That team also supports the work of the Western Adult Autism Service which covers the Londonderry, Strabane, Omagh and Enniskillen areas.

Involvement with the Adult Autism Advice Services enables the Social Security Agency to provide essential support and advice to individuals aged 16 years or over who have autism. Part of this support includes a full, comprehensive and confidential benefit entitlement check to ensure that individuals and their families receive all the benefits and support that they are entitled to.

Through the Supporting People programme my Department is committed to the provision of a range of supported housing options for people with disabilities including those people with autism.

The Supporting People programme funds a number of accommodation and floating support services across Northern Ireland specifically for adult clients with autism. 22% of the overall Supporting People budget is used to provide housing support services to people with a disability including those people with autism.

My Department's Interdepartmental Review of Housing Adaptations Services with the Department of Health Social Services and Public Safety has identified the need for further research into the housing design needs of people with autism. The Housing Executive is co-ordinating the review on behalf of the two departments.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Social Development what actions are being taken to improve the eight week delay in issuing arrears following a successful benefit appeal decision.

(AQW 46124/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Appeals Service Northern Ireland TAS (NI) is responsible for issuing appeal decision notices to all parties within three working days of the decision having been made by the Tribunal panel and this target is routinely achieved. Where a Tribunal decision results in arrears of benefit being payable to a claimant, the Social Security Agency on receipt of the relevant papers from TAS (NI) treats these cases as a priority and seeks to put the Tribunal's decision into effect as soon as possible. The Agency is unaware of any undue delays in processing arrears payments for these cases.

Exceptionally, the process for paying arrears may take longer and this can occur where there has been a change in the claimant's circumstances during the appeal period, which needs to be investigated, the Tribunal's decision is unclear and clarification is sought from TAS (NI), or the Agency Decision Maker is considering appealing the Tribunal's decision to the Social Security Commissioners.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown on the number of sanctions applied in relation to (i) Jobseeker's Allowance; and (ii) claims disallowed (adverse sanction) for each month from October 2012 until December 2014.

(AQW 46135/11-15)

Mr Storey: The information on the monthly figures for sanctions imposed is not available. Data is available for the total number of Jobseekers Allowance sanctions imposed for the period 1.04.12 to 31.01.15. All sanctions imposed are as a result of an adverse decision on benefit entitlement. For this period, a total of 24,555 sanctions were imposed.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development for a breakdown on the number of sanctions applied in relation to (i) Jobseeker's Allowance; and (ii) claims disallowed (adverse sanction) by each Social Security Agency office for each month from October 2012 until December 2014.

(AQW 46136/11-15)

Mr Storey: The information on the monthly figures for sanctions imposed is not available. Data is available for the total number of Jobseekers Allowance sanctions imposed for the period 1.04.12 to 31.01.15. All sanctions imposed are as a result of an adverse decision on benefit entitlement. For this period, a total of 24,555 sanctions were imposed, the table below provides a figure for all individual Social Security and Jobs and Benefits Offices.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of instances when sanctions were applied in accordance with articles 21(2) and 21(5) of the Jobseeker's (Northern Ireland) Order 1995, broken down per month from October 2012 to December 2014.

(AQW 46137/11-15)

Mr Storey: The information is not available in the format requested. Data is available for the number of Jobseekers Allowance sanctions imposed under Articles 21(2)(5) of the Jobseekers (NI) Order 1995 for the period 1.04.12 to 31.01.15 but cannot be broken down into a monthly figure. For this period, a total of 4,132 sanctions were imposed in accordance with this legislation, the attached table provides a breakdown.

1.04.12 – 31.03.13	1690 sanctions imposed under Article 21(2)(5)
1.04.13 – 31.03.14	1935 sanctions imposed under Article 21(2)(5)
1.4.14 – 31.01.15	507 sanctions imposed under Article 21(2)(5)

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development for update on the Ballymena Public Realm Scheme.

(AQW 46221/11-15)

Mr Storey: Work commenced on the ground in the Ballymena public realm scheme on 18 May 2015. The scheme is expected to last for 80 weeks and will be completed by November 2016.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Social Development to detail his Department's policy on Independent Living.

(AQW 46268/11-15)

Mr Storey: Since its establishment in 1998, the Independent Living Fund (ILF) has provided money to help disabled people live an independent life in the community rather than in residential care.

As announced by the Health Minister on 19 May, responsibility and funding for the administration of payments to ILF users will transfer from DSD to the Department of Health, Social Services & Public Safety from 1 July 2015. Following an agreement reached with the Scottish Government, payments to ILF recipients in Northern Ireland will be administered through the newly-created Scottish ILF infrastructure. Services will continue to be provided on the same basis and in line with the policies and procedures under which the UK ILF operated previously.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development how many people have been made redundant since the termination of the Warm Homes Scheme.

(AQW 46365/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Warm Homes Scheme contract with H&A Mechanical and Bryson Energy ended on 31 March 2015. My Department does not hold any information about redundancies since the contract ended.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission for (i) an update of its response to the BBC Spotlight programme of 18 November 2014 on the subject of abuse of MLA's expenses and (ii) to detail any actions taken.

(AQW 45955/11-15)

Mr Gardiner (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): In advance of the broadcast of the two BBC Spotlight programmes, the Assembly Commission's Accounting Officer initiated two investigations under the Assembly's Bribery and Fraud Response Plan and made two referrals to the PSNI. The internal aspects of these investigations are complete, however the PSNI's investigations are continuing.

The Commission also considered the content of the two BBC Spotlight programmes. In response to the internal investigations and following the review of the programmes, further enhancements to the controls in place for MLAs' expenses have been made. It was agreed that any further recommendations arising from the PSNI investigations would be considered in due course.

Actions taken include enhanced checks to verify original MLA signatures for every claim, a revision to the Bribery and Fraud Response Plan to explicitly include all payments to MLAs, the use of trend analyses of MLAs' expenditure to identify unusual or abnormal transactions, amending travel claims to include a declaration regarding business insurance cover and issuing regular reminders to MLAs regarding the importance of reviewing monthly expenditure reports.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission pursuant of AQW 39653/11-15 to provide an update on whether there have been any referrals to the PSNI, arising from the BBC Spotlight programme of 18 November 2014.

(AQW 45957/11-15)

Mr Gardiner (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Assembly's Accounting Officer made two referrals to the PSNI under the Assembly's Fraud and Bribery response plan in advance of the broadcast of the two BBC Spotlight programmes. It is not appropriate for the Assembly Commission to comment on the detail or nature of these on-going PSNI investigations.

The Commission considered the content of the BBC Spotlight programmes in detail and no further referrals to the PSNI were made as a result of these considerations.

Written Answers to Questions

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the travel and subsistence costs incurred by her Department on trips outside Northern Ireland in each year since May 2011, broken down by the costs incurred by (i) the Minister; (ii) special advisers; and (iii) support staff.
(AQW 46154/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development):

Financial Year 2012/13	Travel	Subsistence
Minister	£11,511	£2,691
Special Adviser	£9,522	£2,785
Support Staff	£9,963	£3,833

Financial Year 2013/14	Travel	Subsistence
Minister	£6,601	£2,379
Special Adviser	£3,406	£1,833
Support Staff	£6,869	£2,322

Financial Year 2014/15	Travel	Subsistence
Minister	£694	£1,482
Special Adviser	£544	£1,305
Support Staff	£823	£1,558

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the groups that have applied to the Rural Micro Capital Grant Programme, broken down by constituency.
(AQW 46178/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Rural Micro Capital Grant Programme opened for applications on 13 April 2015 and closed on 22 May 2015. A total of 454 applications were received by the closing date. The Programme is being delivered on a sub-regional basis by the Rural Support Networks (RSN's). The number of applications per RSN area is detailed in Table 1.

At present RSN and DARD staff are focused on the screening and selection processes of the Programme. To carry-out an analysis of applications by constituency area at present would impede this time sensitive work and potentially delay the award of funding to successful applicants. Once this work has been completed I will write to you and provide you with more detail on applications per constituency, as requested.

Table 1 – Applications per RSN area

Rural Support Network	Council Area Covered	No. of Applications Received
South Antrim Community Network (SACN)	Antrim & Newtownabbey and Mid & East Antrim	27
The Armagh, Down & Antrim Network (TADA)	Armagh, Banbridge & Craigavon	73
North Antrim Community Network (NACN)	Causeway Coast & Glens	40

Rural Support Network	Council Area Covered	No. of Applications Received
Rural Area Partnership in Derry (RAPID)	Derry City & Strabane District	60
Fermanagh Rural Community Network (FRCN)	Fermanagh & Omagh	84
Cookstown & Western Shores Area Network (CWSAN)	Mid Ulster	87
County Down Rural Community Network (CDRCN)	Newry, Mourne & Down, North Down & Ards and Lisburn & Castlereagh	83

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how rural groups and youth workers are being represented on the newly formed Local Action Groups.

(AQW 46182/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: All Local Action Groups are self forming as per the European Regulation however their composition is required to be representative of the composition of the local rural area which they wish to represent and in particular be section 75 compliant. The Department has provided assistance through the NI Rural Network and the Rural Development Council to animate local communities towards formation of Local Action Groups for the incoming 2014/2020 NI Rural Development programme. As part of this process a sectoral event covering community organisations was held on 5th November 2014 and a specific event targeting youth was held on 16th December 2015.

Within the formation process LAG members agreed their own composition requirements (as required under the LEADER methodology) and Board Selection criteria. Each new LAG has filled its board appointments through robust and transparent selection processes which are in line with the 'LEADER' approach i.e. bottom up, local people making local decisions.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what action her Department is taking to address rural crime in the Foyle constituency.

(AQW 46183/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I am very aware of the real concerns that the levels of crime are causing amongst the farming community, including the number of livestock thefts from farms. This is an issue that affects farmers throughout the country north and south.

I have met the PSNI Chief Constable and the Minister of Justice on a number of occasions and made them aware of my concerns. I explained the real worry this was causing in rural areas and highlighted the need for something to be done.

Responsibility for tackling rural crime lies primarily with the PSNI, however DARD, through its Veterinary Service Enforcement Branch and CAFRE, works closely with the PSNI particularly in relation to the detection, tracing and recovery of stolen livestock.

I am aware of some local PSNI initiatives to prevent rural crime, and these are to be welcomed. I am also aware of joint work being taken forward by the PSNI and Garda Síochána to combat crime in border areas. I welcome this multi-agency approach which has resulted in the recovery of stolen animals and in arrests and convictions in the north and in ongoing prosecutions the south. For example there was a successful prosecution in the North West for sheep theft, for which my Department assisted the PSNI by securing DNA matches between the stolen lambs and the rams on the farm of origin.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail every ministerial direction issued by her Department since May 2007 including the (i) date; and (ii) the nature of each.

(AQW 46249/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Since May 2007, 13 Ministerial Directions have been issued in DARD. The dates and nature of each of these Directions are listed in the table below.

Record of Ministerial Directions

Nature of Ministerial Direction	Date of Ministerial Direction
Bluetongue: Import Controls Scheme to provide support in response to import / export restrictions on animals susceptible to Bluetongue.	28 February '08
Assistance to Farmers Crop Loss due to Flooding Hardship support for farmers hit by crop loss due to severe weather / flooding.	9 February '09

Nature of Ministerial Direction	Date of Ministerial Direction
Fishing Hardship Up to £700k financial assistance for the north of Ireland Fishing Industry to reimburse fishermen for harbour fees and light dues incurred by vessels during 2008. The proposal acknowledged the difficulties encountered by the fleet initially through high input costs (primarily diesel).	13 March '09
DARD HQ Relocation To produce a business case for the relocation of the DARD headquarters considering only the viable options at the Minister's preferred location i.e. the Shackleton Site in Ballykelly.	3 September '12
Winter Hardship Support The creation of a Hardship scheme to provide emergency aid due to extreme weather conditions and, in the aftermath, for the collection and disposal of animal carcasses in order to prevent potential bio hazard incidents.	28 March '13
Hardship Payment Scheme A Hardship Payment Scheme at an estimated cost of £3 million. This recognised the hardship sustained at farm level as a result of sheep, dairy and beef cattle and other livestock losses arising from the Spring Blizzard. Payments helped to mitigate the costs of these livestock losses by assisting farmers towards the re-establishment of farm livestock. Farmers who had fallen stock collected and disposed of during the relevant period approved by renderers were eligible for the hardship funding.	16 May '13
Imported Fodder Transport Scheme Funding "in the region of £1 million" to be made available to provide support by means of subsidy on the additional haulage costs incurred via importing forage.	16 May '13
Assistance for the Fishing Industry A financial assistance package of "£0.45 - £0.6 million" to enable DARD to provide support to the fishing industry in the face of increased operating costs, reduced catches/ landings and working capital pressures.	4 July '13
Financial Support for the Fishing Industry Additional financial assistance to the fishing industry of £0.4 - £0.5 million in order to mitigate the effects of hardship brought about due to a prolonged period of severe weather, which prevented vessels from leaving port.	10 March '14
Test and Vaccinate or Remove Wildlife Intervention Research Project To implement a Test and Vaccinate or Remove (TVR) Wildlife Intervention Research Project in one 100km² area in the north of Ireland.	1 May '14
Implementation of an Area of Natural Constraint Scheme Establish a one year transition payment under State Aid de minimis rules to those farmers who will no longer be eligible for support from the new Rural Development Programme.	8 August '14
Transitional Payment to Disadvantaged Areas Transitional payment to affected farmers in the Disadvantaged Area at a cost of approximately £2.1m. As a State Aid, payment funded entirely from National monies. A revised Direction was issued to implement a transitional payment to farmers in the Disadvantaged Area.	8 August '14 Amended 2 January 15
HQ Relocation (Ballykelly Ministerial Directive continued) To progress the work necessary to relocate the Department's headquarters in a cost effective way to create a 600 workstation new build at Ballykelly in two phases of 400 (2017) and 200 (2020)	2 September '14

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the Forestry Fund including (i) monies assigned; (ii) projects supported; and (iii) monies as of yet unassigned.

(AQW 46281/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Under the Forestry Fund, my Department's Forest Service has continued its work with Councils, other recreational providers and local interest groups, to enhance recreation and leisure provision in forests.

The total £4m available under the Forestry Fund has been committed to numerous projects aimed at enhancing recreational infrastructure, supporting forest based community led initiatives and improving visitor information across the forest estate. Contractual commitments are in place for on-going project works, totalling £0.9m, which include a new caravan and camping site at Glenariff Forest Park, scheduled for completion by autumn 2015.

Up to 31st March 2015, £3.1m had been invested under the Forestry Fund in respect of works already completed. These works include: restoration of historic buildings at Tollymore and Castlewellan Forest Parks; a new visitor reception building at Florence Court forest and adventure play park equipment for Drum Manor and Gosford forests

Community led projects secured £0.2m of this funding which was further invested in play structures, walks, signage and digital interpretation at eight forest sites.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what strategy her Department has in place to mitigate the impact of transport cuts on rural communities.

(AQW 46325/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Through the Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation Programme my Department continues to fund the Assisted Rural Travel Scheme (ARTS) working in partnership with the Department for Regional Development (DRD). This Scheme, which has been in place since December 2009, provides free or half fare travel to those rural dwellers with a SmartPass (mainly the elderly and disabled) on Rural Community Transport Partnership vehicles across the north of Ireland. Officials continue to meet regularly with DRD to discuss this Scheme and the need for Departments to Rural Proof their strategies.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by her Department in Foyle in 2013/14; and the cost of each project.

(AQW 46333/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Department of Agriculture and Rural Development has spent £653,323 on capital infrastructure projects, in Foyle in the 2013/14 financial year.

This spend relates to the provision of play parks, funding under Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation and Culvert Renovation Works.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the change in (i) the number of farmers receiving Single Farm Payments; and (ii) the amount paid in Single Farm Payments in East Londonderry for each of the last three years.

(AQW 46345/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The number of farmers receiving Single Farm Payment (SFP) and the amount paid in East Derry for each of the last three years is detailed in the table below:-

Year	Total number of farmers	Single Farm Payment (£)
2012	2,330	21,051,870
2013	2,372	23,010,851
2014	1,965	21,521,502

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what strategy her Department has in place to protect young people from the risks of reservoirs.

(AQW 46381/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department is responsible for managing flood risk in the north of Ireland and is bringing forward legislation to ensure dams do not fail and cause flood damage. My Department is not responsible for managing the safety of individuals in reservoirs. Responsibility for protecting people, including young people, from the risks that reservoirs pose rests with individual reservoir managers. As the owner of a significant number of reservoirs NI Water has recently offered information sessions to local schools to inform young people about the risks of entering the water in reservoirs.

Mr McAleer asked Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the extension of the contract for Rural Community Development Support Services.

(AQW 46581/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I have agreed to extend the Rural Community Development Support Services Programme for another year from 1 April 2015 to 31 March 16. The process to obtain the necessary approvals is almost complete and I expect the contracts will be issued in the next few weeks.

I have also instructed my officials to discuss with Rural Support Networks the potential of an interim payment for work completed from the 1 April 2015, and this is being taken forward quickly.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, (i) when Glenariff Forest Park was closed to car and pedestrian access from the A43 Glenariff Road; (ii) when will this access be reopened; and (iii) are forest users being informed of access restrictions.

(AQW 46625/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department is investing £1million on the construction of a new high end caravan and camping facility at Glenariff Forest Park. This will provide support for forest-based tourism and build on the partnership developed between Forest Service and Moyle District Council.

- (i) To permit construction works, Glenariff Forest Park was closed at the A43 Glenariff Road on 16 February 2015.
- (ii) Reopening of this access point to day visitors is planned for 18 June 2015. Opening of the park will be kept under review taking account of the scheduling and impact of construction works required to complete the new development.
- (iii) Information on access restrictions are provided within the NI Direct website (Forests) as well as the A43 Glenariff Road entrance point.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail how much funding her Department has given to the Arts Council of Northern Ireland in each of the last four years.

(AQW 46294/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): My Department has provided the following funding to the Arts Council in each of the last four years. These are composite figures and include both revenue and capital funding.

2014/2015	£14,344,100
2013/2014	£14,127,461
2012/2013	£15,174,000
2011/2012	£18,873,000

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by her Department in Foyle in 2013/14; and the cost of each project.

(AQW 46334/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The infrastructure projects financed by my Department in Foyle in 2013/14 are listed in the attached table. The monetary values refer to grant made in the financial year only; some projects listed will have also received funding in other years.

Funder	Year	Capital Infrastructure Project	Amount
Sport NI	2013/14	Eglinton Community Limited - construction of court and changing facilities	£129,742
Sport NI	2013/14	University of the Third Age: Foyle - construction of an 'Active Ageing Centre'	£17,776
Northern Ireland Screen	2013/14	Derry Nerve Centre - to update and purchase equipment	£93,300
Arts Council NI	2013/14	In Your Space (Youth Theatre Group) – equipment grant	£11,940
Department	2013/14	Lumiere "Stitch in Time" sign	£50,000
Department	2013/14	Portable Community Marquee for use throughout the North West	£64,187
Department	2013/14	Armoured Pram for Derry (artwork)	£25,000
		Total	£391,945

Infrastructure projects financed by DCAL in Foyle in 2013/14

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for a breakdown of SportNI funding to Mountaineering Ireland in the last two years.

(AQW 46418/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Funding provided by Sport NI to Mountaineering Ireland in the last two years is set out in the table below.

2013/14
Athlete Investment Programme	£3,000
Transition Funding	£35,000
PerformanceFocus	£44,000
Total 2013/14	£82,000
2014/15
Athlete Investment Programme	£9,000
Transition Funding	£16,000
PerformanceFocus	£44,000
Equality Standard	£3,000
Total 2013/14	£72,000
Grand Total	£154,000

The Athlete Investment Programme supports talented sports people to develop to their full potential, contributing to the achievement of medal targets and improved international placing and rankings.

The Transition Funding Programme was an 18 month investment which bridged the gap between Investing in Performance Sport programme and the Active Clubs programme.

Performance Focus aims to improve athlete performance through advancing the development of a world class performance system. Investment is focused on improving the performance system across five interrelated areas - club development, coaching, talent identification and development, high performance operations and governance.

Equality Standard supports governing bodies and sporting Organisations to achieve a UK-wide Equality Standard for Sport, including promoting good relations through sport.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what plans she has for the development of cricket.

(AQW 46494/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: While responsibility for the development of cricket rests in the first instance with the Governing Body of the sport, Cricket Ireland, Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, works closely with Cricket Ireland in this regard.

As part of the plans to develop cricket at a grassroots level, Sport NI will be providing £366,524 over a four year period to December 2018 through the Active Clubs programme. This funding is to recruit, from the summer of 2015, two Active Club Co-ordinators who will have a specific remit to develop programmes and initiatives which will increase cricket club membership, including amongst young people, females and within areas of high social need. In addition, Sport NI is providing funding to a number of cricket clubs through the Active Awards for Sport Programme which will develop youth cricket and increase participation in the sport. These clubs include Strabane, Ballyspallen and Donaghadee Cricket Clubs.

With regard to the continued development of performance within cricket, Sport NI has committed funding through the Performance Focus Programme of £492,465 to Cricket Ireland. This funding covers a four year period up to 2016/17. In addition, Sport NI provides funding towards a number of key salaries within Cricket Ireland, for example, the National Strength and Conditioning Coach, the Performance Coach and the National Academy Manager.

Ongoing support is also provided to Cricket Ireland through the Sport NI staff at the Sports Institute in Jordanstown, to develop performance and talent systems within the sport. Generally, Sport NI continues to support Cricket Ireland on governance matters, club development schemes and building capacity within clubs.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what provision she will make to fund the development of marching bands.

(AQW 46497/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have continued to support the bands sector as it is an important element of our cultural and musical heritage and I am keen to support the development of organisations which encourage young people to learn to play musical instruments.

Due to a shortfall in my Department's capital budget for 2015-2016, the Musical Instruments for Bands scheme is on hold and I have submitted a bid in June monitoring for the scheme's commencement potentially later in the year.

I am aware of the calls for this scheme to be revised and expanded and I met with the bands Forum last month to discuss how the scheme could further be supported and maximised.

Should an opportunity for additional capital become available, I would fully support a case to continue and develop this high impact programme. However, due to the current economic climate and financial constraints, I must be realistic in terms of affordability.

Formally constituted bands can continue to apply to any relevant Arts Council Programme. Funding for example can be provided for developmental, intergenerational and community projects as well as the commissioning of a play.

Bands can also apply for support from the Ulster-Scots Agency through its Music and Dance Tuition Programme.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what funding or grants exist to develop community water sports initiatives.

(AQW 46528/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: On 18 May 2015, Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, announced plans to invest £17.5 million of Lottery funding into sports facility projects across the north of Ireland over the next five years. This will result in a significant investment in the sporting and leisure infrastructure in the north of Ireland, which may include water sports initiatives, which will help to increase participation in sport and physical activity across communities.

The first strand of this programme, the single facility fund, is currently open for applications to a range of organisations including clubs and community associations and has a closing date of 15 July 2015. Guidance notes are currently available on the Sport NI website for the single facility fund for projects valued between £10,000 and £100,000. Applicants are advised to register interest for this programme on the Sport NI website at the following link: <http://www.sportni.net/funding/funding-registrations/>

My Department is committed to the development of community sports, including water sports, and in the last three financial years up to March 2015, Sport NI has provided total funding of £9,112,958 to Governing Bodies, clubs and organisations towards the development of community water sports.

In addition, in 2012/13, £14.438 million was invested in North Down Borough Council for the development of the construction of a new leisure centre to include the north of Ireland's first 50 metre pool. The facilities are available to local residents and therefore provide opportunity for the development of community water sports.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much Musical Instruments for Bands scheme funding has been allocated to applications from North Down in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46553/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Arts Council has awarded the following funding through the Musical Instruments for Bands Scheme to applications from North Down in each of the last three years.

2014/2015	Nil
2013/2014	£7,698.75
2012/2013	£5,000.75

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the financial support her Department has given to each sports club in the Upper Bann constituency in each of the last five years, including the amount awarded to each sport.

(AQW 46583/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: In the last five financial years up to March 2015, Sport NI, an arms length body of my Department, provided a total of £1,517,090 to sports clubs in the Upper Bann constituency as detailed in Annex A.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure how much her Department and arm's-length bodies have spent on translation services, broken down by language, in each year since 2007.

(AQW 46585/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Detail on spending on translation services by the Department and its arm's length bodies, broken down by language, is provided in the tables which follow.

Table 1 details spending by the Department and its arm's length bodies (excluding North South bodies) and is listed by financial year.

Table 2 details spending by North South bodies. These bodies have a financial year which mirrors the calendar year; spending on translation services is listed in this format in the table.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure why her Department is transferring £150,000 to the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for Generator NI.
(AQW 46865/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment is transferring £150,000 to my Department in the June 2015 In-Year Monitoring Round.

DCAL and DETI have agreed to each contribute £330k from 2013 – 2016 to support the Generator NI contact which is designed to deliver the Music Strategy. DCAL manage payments to Generator NI on behalf of Invest NI.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 46074/11-15, to detail the amount of funding received by central hubs in (i) Coleraine; (ii) Portstewart; and (iii) Limavady through the North West Socio Economic Development Programme, since its inception.
(AQW 46892/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Through the North West Socio Economic Development Programme, a number of cultural hubs received funding to purchase high tech equipment and software.

In Coleraine, the Ballysally Youth and Community Centre received £20,000 for equipment including laptops, iPads and other music equipment. In Portstewart, the Flowerfield Centre received £10,000 for equipment including a 3D scanner and printer. In Limavady, St Mary's School received £30,000 for computers, camera equipment and printers, whilst the Glens Community Association received £8,000 for iPads.

In addition to funding for Cultural Hubs, Coleraine Borough Council also received £100,000 to procure a mobile stage facility for use by all communities in the Borough for community festivals and events in their local areas and estates and a further £20,000 to deliver the WOMAD Coleraine 'Culture of Peace' Legacy Programme.

Limavady Borough Council received £20,000 to deliver a cultural programme of events. The Stendhal Festival in Limavady also received £100,000 for site management and production equipment and a £30,000 resource grant to assist with the running of the 2015 festival, whilst the Dannyboy Jazz and Blues Festival received £26,400 for equipment.

Department of Education

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Education to detail (i) the number of pupils who are currently supported by the Education Welfare Service in each constituency; and (ii) the number of pupils currently on the Education Welfare waiting list for support or investigation.

(AQW 46164/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): The Interim Chief Executive of the Education Authority has advised that this information is not available by constituency; the information below sets out the position in each region of the Education Authority:-

Number of pupils supported by the Education Welfare Service

Belfast Region	1,119
North Eastern Region	977
South Eastern Region	628
Southern Region	921
Western Region	717
Total	4,362

Number of pupils on Waiting List for support or investigation

Belfast Region	146
North Eastern Region	396
South Eastern Region	215
Southern Region	0
Western Region	89
Total	846

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education, in relation to area based planning and the needs model, in which category jointly managed schools will be placed.

(AQW 46350/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Needs model, as a planning tool, employs three broad sectors - Controlled, Maintained and Integrated. Jointly managed schools will be attended by pupils who would otherwise attend schools in the Controlled or Maintained sectors.

Hence, in projecting future need for places, enrolments in jointly managed schools will be apportioned across the Controlled and Maintained broad sectors. It will be for local planners to ensure that area plans take full account of these schools.

DE Circular 2015/15, Jointly Managed Schools, published in April 2015, provides guidance on key issues in respect of schools of this type and is available on the Department's website, www.deni.gov.uk.

Mr McQuillan asked the Minister of Education how many students with a permanent address in Northern Ireland receive their education outside the United Kingdom; and who meets the cost.

(AQW 46411/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education does not collect information on students with a permanent address here who receive their education outside the United Kingdom.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Education, given the commitment to provide financial assistance to schools in formal intervention, as outlined in Every School is a Good School, why this has not been provided to Ashgrove Primary School to help them deal with the issues highlighted following their recent inspection.

(AQW 46433/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: When a school enters formal intervention it is the responsibility of the school's Board of Governors to prepare and implement an action plan to address the areas for improvement identified. In taking this work forward the school will be supported by the Education Authority and, in the case of catholic maintained schools, the CCMS. The action plan will identify the support and resources required to address the areas for improvement. The Education Authority will provide guidance and support through its Curriculum Advisory Support Service (CASS).

Schools in formal intervention do not automatically receive funding to assist them in addressing areas for improvement identified in an inspection report.

However, if it is identified that particular action(s) will require additional funding for resources or support beyond that provided by the school or the EA CASS then the EA can submit a request for such funding to the Department. Such requests are considered on a case by case basis and subject to the approval of a business case prepared by the EA and any subsequent bid for funding being successful.

The EA has advised that Ashgrove Primary School has not identified any significant need for additional financial assistance. However, the EA will be happy to meet with the school should they wish to discuss resource needs.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 45080/11-15, is the use of the catalogue for items purchased regularly by schools mandatory.
(AQW 46441/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: School principals and Boards of Governors must ensure proper accountability and control of public funds, that value for money is attained and compliance with all relevant legislation is achieved. To this end, all procurement must comply with EU Treaty based principles of non-discrimination, equal treatment, transparency, mutual recognition and proportionality and that some degree of advertising, appropriate to the scale of the contract, is likely to be necessary to demonstrate transparency. Adhering to these principles is mandatory.

To ensure compliance with EU Treaty based principles, Education Authority (EA) contracts for the procurement of works, goods and services should be used at all times (including "catalogue items" referred to in the question). By doing so, schools are assured that their purchases are compliant with procurement legislation and regulations, value for money is delivered, potential risk is contained and the possibility of conflict of interest is minimised.

That said, schools are physically / technically capable of raising purchase orders for common catalogue items from non-catalogue suppliers. If this occurs, schools and Boards of Governors must appreciate that:

- such actions run counter to EA Procurement Guidance;
- where additional costs are incurred as a result of a failure by a school to observe the EA's financial procedures, such costs will be met from the school's budget share; and
- the EA seeks to take a proportionate response to instances of non-compliance.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education whether under the new Education Authority, annual area profiles will continue to be published for each school and how often reviews of area planning will take place.
(AQW 46507/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My purpose in introducing the publication of Annual Area Profiles was to give the public a clear picture of the shape of education provision in their area and to encourage informed local involvement in the area planning process.

This remains the case regardless of the structures in place to administer education and therefore Annual Area Profiles will continue to be published for all schools now that the Education Authority has been established.

The 2015 Annual Area Profiles will be published in the near future by the Education Authority.

Area Plans will be reviewed, consulted upon and published on a three year cycle from 2016.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education whether (i) the Education Authority will act as a single body and publish annual area profiles altogether or (ii) each sub-region will be in charge of publishing their own area profile.
(AQW 46509/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My purpose in introducing the publication of Annual Area Profiles was to give the public a clear picture of the shape of education provision in their area and to encourage informed local involvement in the area planning process.

This remains the case regardless of the structures in place to administer education and therefore Annual Area Profiles will continue to be published for all schools now that the Education Authority has been established.

The 2015 Annual Area Profiles will be published in the near future by the Education Authority.

Area Plans will be reviewed, consulted upon and published on a three year cycle from 2016.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of bus operators based (i) in the Republic of Ireland; and (ii) locally, that are contracted by the Western Education and Library Board for the provision of services; and (iii) to outline the number of buses involved.
(AQW 46537/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority (Western Region) informs me that one bus operator based in the Republic of Ireland is on the current school transport tender, but no runs have been awarded to that operator. Thirty local bus operators are used and these provide 90 buses.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Education what measures are in place for detecting dyslexia in pupils.
(AQW 46563/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that all schools in the north of Ireland follow the Code of Practice on the Identification and Assessment of Special Educational Needs in order to identify and assess pupils with special educational needs (SEN), including dyslexia.

A range of capacity building projects are provided specifically to assist teachers to identify dyslexia including:

1 Report of the Task Group on Dyslexia

DE provided all schools with copies of the following materials to develop their understanding of dyslexia and provide them with guidelines on identifying and meeting the needs of pupils in their school in relation to dyslexia.

- Understanding Dyslexia: A guide for schools - CD-ROM;
- Understanding Dyslexia: Challenges and Opportunities Video;
- Dyslexia Friendly Learning Environment: booklet outlining indicators and strategies;

Dyslexia awareness training was also developed on a regional basis and made available to schools on request.

2 Good Practice Guidelines Booklet

Provides guidelines on relevant and purposeful measures and adjustments to the classroom environment for pupils experiencing literacy difficulties, including dyslexia.

3 SEN Resource File

Provides teaching staff with details of support for SEN, including a section on reading, writing and spelling.

4 Certificate of Competence in Educational Testing [CCET] Training Was made available to enable schools to carry out a range of assessments on pupils with SEN, including the detection of dyslexia type difficulties.

5 SEN Literacy Project:

A three year project delivered jointly by Stranmillis and St Mary's College, funded by the DE, provided schools with online and centre based training on the identification, assessment and the teaching of pupils with literacy difficulties in primary schools across the north of Ireland.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Education to detail what action schools can take to assist in the screening of pupils' eyesight.
(AQW 46564/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that screening of pupils' eyesight is the responsibility of health professionals in the Health and Social Care Trusts who operate a screening programme in schools in Year 1. The schools support and co-operate in this process.

Should school based support or teaching staff suspect an issue with eyesight, parents are contacted in the first instance and advised to make an appointment to have their child's vision assessed by an optician.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether he will bring forward guidance on the duties and responsibilities of education staff under Article 45 of the Education and Libraries (Northern Ireland) Order 1986.
(AQW 46619/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Article 45 of the Education and Libraries (NI) Order 1986, sets out the duty of parents to secure full-time education for their children who are of compulsory school age. Where it appears that a parent is failing in their duty, the Education Authority (EA) has an obligation to ensure the child receives an efficient full-time education suitable to his age, ability and aptitude and to any special educational needs he may have, either by regular attendance at school or otherwise.

The EA is currently developing guidance on issues around school starting age and Elective Home Education. Both of these will include details of the statutory duties and responsibilities of both the EA and parents under Article 45 of the 1986 Order.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of why the level of statementing is so high.
(AQW 46620/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: It is evident that the level of statementing has increased across the five regions of the Education Authority (EA) in recent years. However under legislation, if in light of a statutory assessment the EA decides that is necessary for it to determine the special educational needs (SEN) provision to meet a child's individual SEN, then it must make and maintain a statement of those needs.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the impacts on services following a reduction in funding to the Regional Resource Base of thirteen per cent in 2015/16.
(AQW 46621/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Executive's Budget has been reduced by the Westminster Government by £1.5bn over the last five years. As a direct result of this reduction there is significantly reduced money to spend on frontline services such as Education. I have taken every action possible to protect Education funding and those frontline services within the Department of Education's (DE) remit. However, it is simply impossible to protect everything.

Despite this, I have ensured the continuation of earmarked funding to the Education Authority (EA) in respect of the Regional Vision Resource Base (RVRB), albeit at a slightly lower level than in 2014-15. An allocation of £182k has been made available for 2015-16 to the Authority on top of the core funding for Special Education that the EA already receives. This will ensure that it can continue to develop and share its expertise and enhance the resources available for children and young people with a visual impairment. The EA is still finalising its budget process and will confirm the final, overall allocation to the RVRB in the coming weeks.

Mr Wilson asked the Minister of Education when his Department will complete and send the business case for the pay increase for Education Authority staff to the Department of Finance and Personnel.

(AQW 46640/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Staff in the Department and the Education Authority (EA) are working together to finalise the EA pay remit business case as quickly as possible. Once finalised, it will be submitted to the Department of Finance and Personnel for its consideration, in accordance with the Executive's Public Sector Pay Policy.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education when St Paul's High School applied for a temporary variation in their enrolment figures; and when a decision was made.

(AQW 46642/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: St Paul's High School, Bessbrook submitted a request to the Department of Education on 8 May 2015 for a temporary variation to its Year 8 admission number for September 2015 to permit the admission of an additional 24 pupils. The application was not approved and the school was advised of the decision on 14 May. On reviewing the decision I decided, on 27 May, that the request should be approved and the school was informed on 28 May.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education when Markethill High School applied for a temporary variation in their enrolment figures; and when a decision was made.

(AQW 46643/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Markethill High School submitted a request to the Department of Education on 7 April 2015 for a temporary variation to its Year 8 admission number for September 2015. The application for seven additional places was not approved and the school was advised of the decision in the Department's letter of 27 April.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education to detail the post primary schools in (i) Newry; (ii) Bessbrook; and (iii) Markethill that are (a) oversubscribed; and (b) undersubscribed.

(AQW 46644/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The post-primary schools in the areas specified which are over/undersubscribed with applications for admission in September 2015, are listed below. The information is valid as at the end of the process on 22 May 2015 and takes account of first and subsequent preference applications considered by the schools.

- (i) Newry
 - (a) Oversubscribed
 - Christian Brothers Abbey Grammar School
 - Our Lady's Grammar School
 - St Colman's College
 - Sacred Heart Grammar School
 - St Mary's High School
 - (b) Undersubscribed
 - Newry High School
 - St Joseph's Boys' High School
- (ii) Bessbrook
 - (a) Oversubscribed
 - St Paul's High School
- (iii) Markethill
 - (a) Oversubscribed
 - Markethill High School

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education what actions are being taken to ensure equipment purchased for children with special education needs is being used efficiently, including being properly stored, maintained and shared between schools. (AQW 46646/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that requests for equipment for children with special education needs are ordinarily considered following input from specialist health care professionals in the Health and Social Care Trusts who advise on the purchase of the most appropriate equipment to meet the assessed needs of the pupil.

Inventories of equipment are maintained and updated on a regular basis. Databases are checked to ensure that spare equipment is made available for reallocation or re-use where appropriate and that equipment is not purchased unnecessarily.

Equipment is catalogued and stored in designated storage facilities or within a school setting. Schools are advised to ensure that equipment is checked regularly for obvious defects and are responsible for the safe storage and maintenance of equipment in a school setting.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education whether a record of equipment for children with special educational needs is kept to ensure resources are allocated efficiently and equipment is not purchased unnecessarily. (AQW 46648/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that all regions maintain a record of specialist equipment for children with special educational needs and that every effort is made to ensure that spare equipment is re-allocated where appropriate and that equipment is not purchased unnecessarily.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education whether he or his officials have given any consideration to the number of compulsory staff redundancies there may be as a result of the new Education Authority. (AQW 46692/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Full Business Case (FBC) for the Education Authority did not promise significant reductions in posts in education administration compared to September 2014 staffing levels, as significant reductions had already been made in anticipation of the establishment of ESA. Nevertheless, the new Authority was expected to employ fewer staff in senior and middle management grades than were formerly employed by the five Education and Library Boards. The FBC envisaged a reduction of some 50 posts in these grades over a three-year period. It was anticipated that these remaining reductions would be achieved through voluntary redundancy, retirement and resignation.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail what communication his Department has had with Education Authority staff who work in more than one school in regards to (i) the future of their employment; (ii) when they will know if their positions are secure. (AQW 46727/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department does not employ staff in schools and therefore does not communicate directly with staff on employment matters. This is a matter for individual Boards of Governors and the Education Authority depending on the school setting.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Education to outline the rationale for his refusal to increase the enrolment and admission numbers at Ballymena Academy. (AQW 46738/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I did not agree to the proposal to increase the enrolment and admission numbers at Ballymena Academy as I do not believe the proposal was fully Area Plan proofed. I am also concerned that the school is not accessible to all the young people in the area, as a result of its admissions policy and charging of fees.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what steps his Department is taking to ensure young people have adequate support during exams. (AQW 46741/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The issue of support during exam time is primarily a matter for the individual schools however my Department does provide some resources.

The iMatter 'message of the month' issued in May to all post primary schools, covered Exam Stress and provided some useful tips on dealing with it.

The Independent Counselling Service for Schools is available in post primary schools for individual pupils who are experiencing stress or anxiety. Some schools have also used the new 'Drop In' Sessions over lunchtime to provide group sessions on coping with exam stress.

The iMatter diary inserts, available on the www.deni.gov.uk site, cover a range of 20 topics including Coping with Stress, Worry and Anxiety and Coping with Schools. These include details of support websites and telephone helplines.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children who remain without a year one place in North Down.

(AQW 46762/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that as at 9th June 2015 there were six children in North Down seeking a Year 1 place for September 2015 who remain unplaced.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of children who remain without a year eight place in North Down.

(AQW 46763/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority has advised that as at 9th June 2015 there were three children in North Down seeking a Year 8 place for September 2015 who remain unplaced.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of Education to provide (i) the names of the board members that govern the Teacher's Pension Scheme; (ii) the people they represent; and (iii) their term of office.

(AQW 46766/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The responsibility of the NI Teachers' Pension Scheme (NITPS) Pension Board is to assist the Department in securing compliance with scheme regulations and other legislation relating to governance and administration of the scheme.

Appointments to the Pension Board, with the exception of the DE members, are personal. The role of members is to represent the interests of all of the scheme's beneficiaries, the participating employers and the Accounting Officer and not simply the interests of the organisation that nominated them.

Information about the members of the NITPS Pension Board is set out in the table below:

NI Teachers' Pension Scheme Pension Board

(i) Name of Board Member	(ii) People they represent	(iii) Term Of Office
Barry Jordan (Interim Chair), Department of Education	Department of Education	Temporary-Pending appointment of Independent Chair
La'Verne Montgomery, Department of Education	Appointed by the Permanent Secretary of the Department of Education based on roles in the relevant policy and finance/audit areas.	This appointment is not personal. The role will be undertaken by the relevant post holder.
Gary Fair, Department of Education	Appointed by the Permanent Secretary of the Department of Education based on roles in the relevant policy and finance/audit areas.	This appointment is not personal. The role will be undertaken by the relevant post holder.
Margaret Coyle, Department of Finance and Personnel	Pension specialist from within the wider Public Sector. Appointed by the Department of Education.	Until 31 March 2020 (To be reviewed in event of significant change in job role)
Celine McCartan	Employer representative appointed by the Department of Education, nominated by Colleges NI.	Until 31 March 2020
Shane McCurdy	Employer representative appointed by the Department of Education, nominated by the Education Authority.	Until 31 March 2019
Robbie McGreevy	Employer representative appointed by the Department of Education, nominated by the Education Authority.	Until 31 March 2018
Maurice Johnston	Employer representative appointed by the Department of Education, nominated by NI Council for Integrated Education.	Until 31 March 2017
Justin McCamphill	Member representative appointed by the Department of Education, nominated by NASUWT.	Until 31 March 2020

(i) Name of Board Member	(ii) People they represent	(iii) Term Of Office
Graham Agnew	Member representative appointed by the Department of Education, nominated by NASUWT.	Until 31 March 2019
Nula O'Donnell	Member representative appointed by the Department of Education, nominated by INTO.	Until 31 March 2018
Rosemary Barton	Member representative appointed by the Department of Education, nominated by UTU.	Until 31 March 2017

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the proposed merger of Fane Street Primary School; and whether his Department has given any consideration to the possibility of an increase in the number of racist attacks following a merger.

(AQW 46768/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: It is a matter for the Education Authority, as managing authority for controlled schools, including Fane Street Primary School, to bring forward and publish a statutory development proposal (DP) if it wishes to make a change to the current pattern of education in the controlled sector. Should such a proposal be published, my Department will assess it and I will decide whether it should be approved.

To date, the Education Authority has not published a DP in respect of Fane Street PS, or any other primary school in inner south Belfast.

Until it does, I am not in a position to assess or comment specifically on any potential development proposal or individual school likely to be involved.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the average cost per unit, of providing a classroom for a new primary school. (AQW 46796/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department's current basic construction cost allowance for primary schools is £832/m² which includes a nominal allowance for substructures (assuming no unusual ground conditions). If this rate is applied to an area of 60m², the size of a single primary school classroom, this would equate to a value of £49,920.

It should be noted that the above figure excludes the following:

- Allowance applied to small new build primary schools
- Necessary ancillary accommodation (storage, wc's, cloakroom, circulation space etc)
- Requirements of other statutory bodies
- BREEAM
- VAT
- Professional fees
- Furniture and equipment

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the capital cost of providing a mobile classroom for a new primary school. (AQW 46798/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Depending on ground conditions or site issues, typically the cost of providing a mobile classroom would be circa £120,000.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education when the Education Authority intends to introduce the Cycle to Work scheme for its staff.

(AQW 46805/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority is currently exploring the possibility of introducing a Cycle to Work Scheme for its staff. No decisions have yet been made.

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the number of staff disciplinary hearings in his Department in the last two years.

(AQW 45397/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): In the last two years, there have been three unfair dismissal cases brought against the Department for Employment and Learning.

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the travel and subsistence costs incurred by his Department on trips outside Northern Ireland in each year since May 2011, broken down by the costs incurred by (i) the Minister; (ii) special advisers; and (iii) support staff.

(AQW 46157/11-15)

Dr Farry: The tables attached at Annex A show the cost per year of trips outside Northern Ireland since May 2011, broken down by Minister, Special Adviser and support staff.

Annex: A

Year 2011/12	Cost
Minister	£7,890
Special Adviser	£5,493
Support Staff	£7,890
	£21,273

Year 2012/13	Cost
Minister	£2,428
Special Adviser	£2,115
Support Staff	£2,219
	£6,762

Year 2013/14	Cost
Minister	£15,808
Special Adviser	£15,594
Support Staff	£15,594
	£46,996

Year 2014/15	Cost
Minister	£14,025
Special Adviser	£12,845
Support Staff	£13,644
	£40,514

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the extent of which life science degrees will be cut by his Department in 2015/16.

(AQW 46255/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department provides local Higher Education Institutions with funding for the purposes of teaching, learning and research activities and capital expenditure in relation to these activities.

While my Department sets the strategic direction for the higher and further education sectors, each university and college is responsible for its own course provision and curriculum content, therefore it is not within my Department's remit to determine which degree courses will be discontinued.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the benefits of life science degrees to Northern Ireland in terms of economic and health outcomes.

(AQW 46256/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Life Sciences sector (encompassing life, health, environmental and agri-food sciences) is identified as a priority growth area in Northern Ireland's Economic Strategy and remains one of the best performing sectors, averaging 10% growth per annum. The life sciences sector is leading the field in diverse areas such as agriculture/food science, food safety, disease/infection biology, cancer, diagnostics, medical devices, waste management, and services provided by ecosystems and the environment.

Queen's University, Ulster University and the Open University offer an extensive range of degree programmes in the Life Sciences at both undergraduate and postgraduate level – these provide trained graduates who are integral to the growth of our knowledge economy.

Regarding the health benefits to Northern Ireland of life science degrees, I cannot comment. You may wish to raise this issue with the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, Simon Hamilton MLA.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what support will his Department will give to the JTI working group established by Mid and East Antrim Borough Council to consider the impact of the JTI Gallagher factory closure.

(AQW 46332/11-15)

Dr Farry: My Department has been in regular contact with Japan Tobacco International (JTI) since the announcement of the factory closure, and I have appointed a senior member of staff to co-ordinate the Departmental response. JTI has recently appointed an Outplacement provider and my Department, along with Invest Northern Ireland, will work closely with the company and the service provider to provide appropriate and targeted interaction with relevant employees.

My officials would be happy to meet with the working group established by Mid and East Antrim Borough Council to explore how we can work together to assist those JTI staff affected by redundancy.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister for Employment and Learning (i) how many PHDs have been funded in each of the last 5 years; and (ii) how many of these have been related to mobile technology.

(AQW 46394/11-15)

Dr Farry: The number of postgraduate awards funded by my Department in each of the last five academic years is as follows:

Academic Year	Department Funded Studentships
2010/11	795
2011/12	695
2012/13	595
2013/14	625
2014/15	729

These awards include 26 three year postgraduate studentships in the area of mobile technology.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail every ministerial direction issued by his Department since May 2007 including the (i) date; and (ii) the nature of each.

(AQW 46401/11-15)

Dr Farry: There have been no ministerial directions issued by my Department since May 2007.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) how many people fall into the not in education, employment or training category in Dungannon; (ii) how does this differ from 2014; and (iii) what strategies or initiatives does his Department have in place to address this.

(AQW 46406/11-15)

Dr Farry: We do not have precise NEET figures by area. However, the figures taken from the National On-line Manpower Information System, provided by the Office for National Statistics, indicate that in April 2014 there were 295 young people in the NEET category aged 18-24 claiming Jobseekers' Allowance through Dungannon Jobs and Benefits Office and 195 in April 2015. Since we know that those on JSA make up some 50% of the overall NEET group we can estimate that the numbers involved are likely to be double those above. Also, the JSA figures will exclude the 16 and 17 year olds who are in the NEET category.

This estimate above is derived from the overall Northern Ireland figures, which show that while the NEET group has been growing in recent years, the 50/50 split within the group between JSA claimants and individuals who are economically inactive has remained fairly stable. The January to March 2014 Northern Ireland NEET figure, for example, was 32,000, whereas from January to March 2015 this figure was 39,000. The January to March 2015 NEET rate in Northern Ireland is 18% compared to a UK average of 12%.

In addressing the issue, my Department leads on the cross-departmental strategy for young people not in Education, Employment or Training (NEET), "Pathways to Success" (PTS). The 'Pathways to Success' approach has a particular focus on helping those young people who face barriers to participation, while also dovetailing with complementary actions to tackle the wider problem of youth unemployment in the current challenging economic context.

The initial round of funding for DEL-specific NEET interventions ceased at the end of March 2015. However, my department continues to support young people not in education, employment or training (NEET) through the new European Social Fund (ESF) Programme which runs from April 2015 to March 2018. As part of the implementation of the strategy, my Department also commissioned a formal evaluation. The outcomes of the evaluation were positive and will be used to inform decisions on the future direction of Pathways to Success including a refreshed action plan.

'Enabling Success' is the NI Executive's new 15 year strategy to sustainably reduce economic inactivity in Northern Ireland. Whilst primarily targeted at helping economically inactive adults of working age to make the transition towards and into the labour market, the Strategy also recognises the importance of early intervention, particularly in relation to young people not in education, employment or training.

Subject to securing the necessary resources, one of the Strategy's key delivery projects under the theme of 'breaking the cycle of inactivity', is the appointment of a series of 'Younger People's Advocates', on a regional basis, to engage with young people who are at risk of disengaging with education, employment or training and potentially becoming economically inactive in the future.

'Enabling Success' recognises that this work needs to be taken forward in conjunction with the existing 'Pathways to Success' infrastructure, including key delivery partners such as the independent NEET Strategy Forum.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on ongoing discussions between his Department, the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment and Tourism NI, to review the skills needs of the tourism sector.

(AQW 46558/11-15)

Dr Farry: Pursuant to AQW 43849/11-15, a Steering Group comprising of industry representatives and government officials has been established to advise and provide guidance on the development of the tender specification for the skills research.

The Group held a workshop on 24th April to agree the scope and remit of the research and is now in the process of finalising the tender specification.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for an update on the One Plan target of doubling maximum student numbers at the North West Regional College.

(AQW 46591/11-15)

Dr Farry: North West Regional College's allocation of student numbers, like all college allocations, is based on established current and future demand for higher education in each of the college areas; the college's alignment with my Department's strategic priority areas as demonstrated in the College Development Plan; and support for my Department's Widening Participation goals in the geographical distribution of higher education places across Northern Ireland.

Since 2013 I have allocated an additional 75 full time higher education places to North West Regional College for the delivery of new Foundation Degrees in Software Development, Computing and Software, and Applied Medical Sciences.

The college currently has 710 full time and 824 part time students enrolled in higher education courses across all of its campuses in the North West. However, the current financial climate, and the fact that I have recently had to pass budgetary reductions on to both of the higher education institutions and the further education regional colleges, means that there is little likelihood for further expansion at present.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning, pursuant to AQW 40499/11-15, whether the evaluation of the Collaboration and Innovation Fund has been completed and published: and how it has been made available for public reference.

(AQW 46654/11-15)

Dr Farry: The formal interim evaluation of the Pathways to Success Strategy and the various approaches within this to dealing with the issue of young people not in education employment or training was received in April 2015. This overall evaluation includes six main strands of work including the Collaboration and Innovation Fund. The evaluation was undertaken by the Centre for Economic & Social Inclusion (CESI), a London based not-for-profit-company.

Once I have considered the evaluation and its implications for a broad range of youth interventions within my Department, the evaluation will be posted on the DEL web-site, and along with, in due course, a refresh of the current Pathways Strategy.

Department of the Environment

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the public body or authorities that would be responsible for monitoring the public health impacts should permission issue for oil and gas exploration at Ballinlea, County Antrim.

(AQW 45795/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): Identified public health impacts have been addressed in the environmental statement which accompanies application E/2013/0093/F – Ballinlea. My officials are consulting with the relevant bodies that have the remit and expertise to assess this element of the proposed development.

The regulation of the development, should approval be granted, will fall across a number of bodies, for example NIEA: Water Management Unit (WMU) will exercise its functions under the Water (NI) Order 1999 in relation to the conservation of water resources and the cleanliness of water with regards to the protection of public health among other duties.

NIEA: Industrial Pollution and Radiochemical Inspectorate (IPRI) would be responsible for regulating the process of gas flaring and storage and disposal of any Naturally Occurring Radioactive Material (NORMS) generated through the Pollution Prevention and Control (Industrial Emissions) Regulation (NI) 2013 and Radioactive Substances Act 1993.

DOE Strategic Planning Division would be responsible for ensuring the proper discharge of any conditions of consent in consultation with relevant bodies.

In addition to this, there are powers in the Clean Neighbourhoods and Environment Act (NI) 2011 which provide councils with powers to deal with noise from premises which may be considered prejudicial to health or a nuisance. Statutory noise nuisance, monitoring and enforcement are the remit of the local Council.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment (i) what are the public safety and (ii) environmental risks of constructing and operating a waste incinerator immediately adjacent to a major liquid petroleum gas storage depot; (iii) whether the addendum to the environmental statement to Z/2012/1387/F which identified this depot as unknown storage yard contained ambiguous information; and (iv) why his Department as the competent authority for carrying out Environmental Impact Assessment did not question the citation of the contents of this adjacent storage yard as unknown before planning permission was granted (AQW 46021/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The planning application was accompanied by a voluntary environmental statement (ES). An ES is prepared by the applicant and submitted in support of the planning application. When processing a planning application accompanied by an ES, my Department will consult with environmental bodies and other bodies along with the public. The information provided by those bodies and the public, along with the ES, constitutes environmental information that should be taken into account in reaching the planning decision. Provided that the correct information is considered by the Department in reaching a decision, an inaccuracy or error within an ES would not mean that decision was taken in error. It would also not be necessary to amend an ES to contain accurate information when it is known to the Department.

In this case my officials consulted with the Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland as the site was situated in several Control of Major Accident Hazards (COMAH) sites. They identified that the site was adjoining land that contained LPG storage vessels. This was also apparent to my officials who undertook a site visit as part of the assessment process. There were also no objections to the development.

HSENI had no objections to the development and the potential for risks to the COMAH sites and also the development site were fully considered in reaching the decision on this application.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of the Environment how many farmers have been prosecuted by the NIEA, in each of the last three years, broken down by council area. (AQW 46166/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The numbers of farmers that have been prosecuted by NIEA in each of the last three years broken down by council area are as shown in the attached table.

Council Area	2012	2013	2014	Total Number
Antrim and Newtownabbey	0	1	1	2

Mr Swann asked the Minister of the Environment how many on farm inspections have been completed by the NIEA, in each of the last 3 years, broken down by council area.

(AQW 46167/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The locations of farms inspected from Single Farm Payment Claimants are recorded against the postcode of the registered address of the farm by the Northern Ireland Environment Agency (NIEA). This is not necessarily the location of the land to which the inspection applies. These visits are not recorded on a Local Council, Northern Ireland Assembly or Westminster constituency basis.

There are two methods of selection for inspection visits: 25% are randomly selected from a list of all Single Farm Payment claimants; the remaining 75% being selected through a risk-based approach based on a number of parameters and on previous compliance records.

Table 1 below shows the number of scheduled Cross Compliance inspections undertaken in each of the last 3 years.

Table 1: scheduled Cross Compliance inspections

Year	Number of Inspections
2012	379
2013	394
2014	320

NIEA officials from the DOE also carry out inspections in accordance with the requirements of The Waste Management and Contaminated Land (Northern Ireland) Order 1997 and The Waste Management Licensing Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2003. These visits are in relation to licensed or exempted activities being carried out on farms, for example, composting, anaerobic digestion and infilling. Table 2 below shows the number of inspections undertaken over the last three years.

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of the Environment what consideration he has given to the recommendations from the Committee for the Environment's Report on the Committee's Inquiry into Wind Energy.

(AQW 46186/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Committee's Inquiry into Wind Energy Report was debated in the Assembly on 3 March 2015. During the debate I acknowledged that the Committee's Report is the product of an extensive and thorough inquiry process and I committed to giving it full and proper consideration.

The Report contains a wide range of recommendations, a number of which fall outside of my Department's remit. I nevertheless indicated to the Assembly my willingness to look closely at all recommendations and to advance these where appropriate to do so.

My formal response issued to the Clerk of the Environment Committee on 28 May 2015 and my officials are due to provide oral briefing to the Committee on the 25 June.

I can advise that I have taken account of the Committee's Report in finalising the Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) which I will publish as soon as possible following consideration by the Executive Committee. Furthermore, I have already made public my intention to undertake a review of strategic planning policy for renewable energy following publication of the SPPS. I believe that some of the Report recommendations can be considered further as part of this review which will incorporate additional research, policy development and public consultation.

In addition, work is already in hand with a view to producing new procedural guidance for planning officials to assist them with the processing of applications for wind energy development. Where appropriate I will ensure that relevant recommendations of the Committee are fully reflected in this guidance.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on any correspondence or meetings he has had with the Secretary of State for Transport since the Assembly Motion on 27 January 2015 on The Union Flag on UK Driving Licences Issued in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 46198/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Since the Assembly Motion on 27 January 2015, I have received a letter (dated 4 March 2015) from the Parliamentary Under Secretary of State for Transport, Claire Perry. The letter summarises the correspondence on this issue since 2012 and indicates that Ms Perry is happy for further engagement to take place between officials if my Department wishes to progress an opt in/ opt out option for Northern Ireland driving licence holders.

I should emphasise – as I did in the Assembly debate – that there are Great Britain driving licences and Northern Ireland driving licences; there are not (as you imply in your question) UK driving licences.

Consideration was given to providing an opt in/opt out option in 2012 when my Department was first advised that DfT intended to include the Union Flag on Great Britain driving licences. The Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency (DVLA) however at that time indicated that the costs involved in making the system and associated changes required to offer such a choice were prohibitive. I believe that DVLA has recently estimated that the cost associated with individual choice, had it been offered to Great Britain driving licence holders, would be in the region of £14-19 million.

Given that the position has not changed in terms of the costs involved in offering such an option, I see no purpose in arranging further discussions between officials regarding an opt in/ opt out option.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the travel and subsistence costs incurred by his Department on trips outside Northern Ireland in each year since May 2011, broken down by the costs incurred by (i) the Minister; (ii) special advisers; and (iii) support staff.

(AQW 46205/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The table below provides the information as requested for the period 2011-12 to 2014-15.

DOE	2011-12 £	2012-13 £	2013-14 £	2014-15 £

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 45603/11-15, to clarify whether this means any taxi operator or driver can have a person tout on their behalf provided the individual in question is not a taxi driver.

(AQW 46209/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As I set out in my answer to AQW 45603/11-15, the law currently does not permit the authorities to take action against anyone other than a person employed as the driver of a taxi who is touting for work for their taxi.

You will be aware that section 43 of the Taxis Act (Northern Ireland) 2008, which is due to be commenced later this year, draws the touting provisions more broadly. This will enable authorities to take action against any person suspected of touting, whether they are a taxi driver or not.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the decision of the Equality Commission not to exert any further pressure to change the name of a Newry playground currently named after a convicted IRA terrorist.

(AQW 46220/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Equality Commission has the legal responsibility and authority to consider what action is fitting in relation to such matters. The Newry, Mourne and Down District Council are, I understand, currently working on the Equality Commission's recommendation which deals with policy on such issues.

Against that background, it would not be fitting for me to assess or comment on this ongoing situation.

Mr Agnew asked Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 45197/11-15, why likely effects on Belfast Lough Special Protection Area were not considered applicable to planning application Z/2014/1346/F, and if this failure to recognise the proximity of an European site is an indication that proper procedures were not followed when conducting an Environmental Impact Assessment determination before planning permission was granted.

(AQW 46235/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My answer to AQW 45197/11-15 outlined the information that was available to my Department in relation to Belfast Lough SPA and states that I was satisfied that planning application Z/2014/1346/F was not EIA development on the basis that the amendment to the application did not give rise to significant adverse effects. In support of that conclusion I stated the information that was available to my Department when carrying out the EIA determination and also in reaching the decision to grant planning permission.

I am therefore satisfied that proper procedures were followed in this case.

Mr Agnew asked Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 45670/11-15, to confirm that unlike other likely environmental effects identified in the Environmental Impact Assessment determination, no reference was made, or consideration given to the likely effects on an European site, or the species protected by the Habitats Directive; and to outline how the public can be reassured that such matters were taken into account, when neither the Environment Impact Assessment determination, nor case officer report make any mention of such effects.

(AQW 46236/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As I outlined in AQW 45197/11-15 consideration was given to the environmental statement submitted in support of planning permission Z/2012/1387/F which had been subject to scrutiny by the appropriate environmental bodies and was not the subject of any public objection. I advised in AQW 45670/11-15 that NIEA had considered the potential impact on the integrity of Belfast Lough SPA/Belfast Lough Open Water SPA and were of the opinion that significant adverse effects were unlikely to occur subject to suitable mitigation measures that were secured by planning conditions of the planning permission. The previous grant of permission and the proposed amendments to that permission were clearly documented in the EIA determination that was undertaken for planning application Z/2014/1346/F. The comments of NIEA and other environmental bodies, the environmental statement and the previous mitigation measures were also considered when concluding that the proposed amendments were not considered to have significant adverse effects on the environment.

The development management report that was before me identified the key issues for consideration. It included reference to the previous grant of planning permission, which was clearly a relevant and significant material consideration, and that the supporting environmental information and comments of all environmental bodies, including the views of NIEA were fully considered. The supporting environmental information in this case would have included the ES that accompanied Z/2012/1387/F and the comments of the environmental bodies. It would also have taken account of the fact that there had been no objection to the development.

I am satisfied that the key issues were fully considered before deciding to grant planning permission for this amendment to a previous grant of planning permission.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the current number of illegal landfill sites.
(AQW 46237/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The issue of illegal, or more accurately 'unauthorised' landfill is a complex area, involving matters of definition regarding particular sites. It is assumed to refer to the more broad issue of infilling carried out without the necessary authorisations. This will incorporate both historic and closed landfill sites which have been added to, as well as the unauthorised infilling of any land. Specific numbers cannot be provided as unauthorised landfill sites are not separately recorded as a category.

NIEA is continuing to uncover unauthorised infilling on a regular basis and will continue to do so through its regulatory and enforcement activities. It is currently involved in 71 active investigations into a range of environmental offending. This includes 45 sites where waste has been deposited without the necessary authorisations.

Mr Agnew asked Minister of the Environment whether his Department has been made aware of, or been involved in, any discussions with the Health and Safety Executive over concerns for public safety after the granting of planning permission Z/2014/1346/F.

(AQW 46238/11-15)

Mr Durkan: During the processing of the application officials consulted with the Health and Safety Executive Northern Ireland as the site was situated in several Control of Major Accident Hazards (COMAH) sites. HSENI had no objections to the development and the potential for risks to the COMAH sites and also the development site were fully considered in reaching the decision on the application.

My Department has not had any discussions with the Health and Safety Executive or been made aware of any potential concerns for public safety since the grant of this planning permission, which was an amendment to the previous permission Z/2012/1387/F.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 45141/11-15, for his assessment of (i) the written admission of the site operator that up until 2006 he periodically removed the contents of the settlement ponds and piled this material on the lagoon walls within the flood plain; (ii) the planning department's confirmation of this happening up until 2006; and (iii) NIEA's written confirmation on 16 March 2012 that the contents of the lagoons is highly contaminated.

(AQW 46239/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials have been unable to trace any correspondence or written admission to which you refer. If you can supply me with a copy of this paperwork, I would be happy to consider that matter further and provide you with an assessment.

However, I consider that the removal of material from the settlement ponds would, in normal circumstances, have been a necessary and responsible part of site management. Not doing so would have increased the water levels in the ponds and therefore left them more vulnerable to flooding.

Planning advises that as the majority of its functions transferred to the new councils on 1 April 2015, any information that may assist in answering part (ii) of the question is likely to be contained on files that are now the responsibility of Derry City and Strabane District Council.

The matter of alleged contamination of settling pools has previously been addressed.

I would also reiterate that testing on the river indicates good water quality, indicative of no current threat to the Faughan.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment why the Natural Heritage Research Partnership contract is not being renewed, given funding for new grants through the Natural Environment Fund is being made available.

(AQW 46264/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The time frame for the Natural Heritage Research Partnership (NHRP) contract between my Department and Queen's University was 4 years, with (subject to the agreement of both parties) an option to extend the contract for two further three year periods. Following the initial 4 year period, as the work was assessed as being of high quality, the contract was extended for one further three year period, ending 22 June 2015. However, due to the significant budgetary constraints arising from the budget allocation to the Department for 2015-16, contracted services provided by a diverse range of educational, public sector, voluntary, community based and private sector organisations, including those contracts with Queen's University, were ended or not renewed. Queen's University was informed that the NHRP contract would not be extended beyond the natural expiry date and that funding of up to £70k has been set aside to allow this work to continue up to the contract end date of 22 June 2015.

The new Natural Environment Fund (NEF) was established this year with funding from the Carrier Bag Levy. The NEF was open to those NGOs, and also Councils where they deliver landscape management body functions, who had previously been in receipt of funding up until 31 March 2015, or whose funding beyond that date was terminated with an appropriate notice period (mostly up until the end of June 2015), and those who had applications for funding under consideration at 31 March 2015. Public bodies, councils, except those who wished to continue to deliver landscape management, and Universities were therefore not eligible to apply. This reflects the fact that CBL receipts are separate from mainstream public expenditure and should be directed towards environmental programmes with a strong community foundation.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the current position in relation to planning enforcement at the former City Waste and Campsie Sand and Gravel sites at Mobouy Road.
(AQW 46265/11-15)

Mr Durkan: On 31 March 2015 the Strategic Planning Division (SPD) issued Enforcement Notices pursuant to Article 68 of The Planning (NI) Order 1991 in relation to the deposition of controlled waste and to the winning and working of minerals on lands at Mobouy Road.

A Regulation 26 Notice in accordance with that provision of the Planning Environmental Impact Assessment (EIA) Regulations (NI) 2012 was also served along with the Enforcement Notices advising those served that the development was EIA development.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment why Queen's University Belfast was excluded from the Natural Environment Fund in 2015.
(AQW 46267/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The time frame for the Natural Heritage Research Partnership (NHRP) contract between my Department and Queen's University was 4 years, with (subject to the agreement of both parties) an option to extend the contract for two further three year periods. Following the initial 4 year period, as the work was assessed as being of high quality, the contract was extended for one further three year period, ending 22 June 2015. However, due to the significant budgetary constraints arising from the budget allocation to the Department for 2015-16, contracted services provided by a diverse range of educational, public sector, voluntary, community based and private sector organisations, including those contracts with Queen's University, were ended or not renewed. Queen's University was informed that the NHRP contract would not be extended beyond the natural expiry date and that funding of up to £70k has been set aside to allow this work to continue up to the contract end date of 22 June 2015.

The new Natural Environment Fund (NEF) was established this year with funding from the Carrier Bag Levy. The NEF was open to those NGOs, and also Councils where they deliver landscape management body functions, who had previously been in receipt of funding up until 31 March 2015, or whose funding beyond that date was terminated with an appropriate notice period (mostly up until the end of June 2015), and those who had applications for funding under consideration at 31 March 2015. Public bodies, councils, except those who wished to continue to deliver landscape management, and Universities were therefore not eligible to apply. This reflects the fact that CBL receipts are separate from mainstream public expenditure and should be directed towards environmental programmes with a strong community foundation.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) what product research was conducted with the manufacturers and approved agencies in relation to the preferred taxi meter options of Digitax F1 Plus, Hale MCT 06 and Cygnus MR500; (ii) the specific manufacturers and approved agencies involved prior to his Department's final decision; and (iii) which option was selected and why.
(AQW 46339/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) As part of the preparations for implementing the Taxi Act (Northern Ireland) 2008, the Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) recently purchased a taximeter for the development of a new taximeter approval and testing scheme. The sourcing of a taximeter was on the basis that it complied with relevant legislative requirements, and was capable of supporting a printer. No product research was conducted during the procurement exercise.

The Digitax F3 Plus, Hale MCT 06, and Cygnus MR500 models were a representative sample of Measurement Instrument Directive compliant taximeters; it is worthy of note that the initial procurement correspondence was subsequently revised to refer to the updated Digitax F3 Plus model.

- (ii) The DVA contacted the following suppliers during the procurement exercise:

- a Cedel Communications;
- b Patterson Electronics Ltd;
- c SMK Digitax; and
- d Wired-or-less;

No taximeter manufacturer was contacted prior to final selection.

- (iii) The Digitax taximeter was selected as it was compliant with the relevant legislative requirements and represented best value for money on a least cost basis.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment how value for money, quality assurance and financial governance is monitored in relation to the Natural Environment Fund; and how this compares to monitoring in relation to the Natural Heritage Research Partnership.

(AQW 46348/11-15)

Mr Durkan: For all grant schemes and contracts, including the previous Natural Heritage grant scheme and the Natural Heritage Research Partnership, the Department ensures value for money, quality assurance and finance governance arrangements are in place to comply with the requirements set out in DFP's guidance "Managing Public Money Northern Ireland (MPMNI)". The monitoring of expenditure under the new Natural Environment Fund, the applications for which are currently being assessed, will also adhere to the processes in MPMNI.

Furthermore, the Department's financial management and corporate governance processes are underpinned by procedures to ensure efficient and economical administration of public funding including arrangements for the evaluation, selection of grant expenditure proposals and monitoring of grants expenditure proposals. Robust monitoring arrangements are also in place to ensure the department can operate within its authorised spending limits across all areas of expenditure. All expenditure proposals are subject to funding availability.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to outline his Department's financial priorities with respect to statutory research needs and grants related to non-statutory activities.

(AQW 46349/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As part of the process for allocating resources across the Department, the delivery of key statutory outcomes is taken into account. The Department does not specifically carry out 'statutory research', however there are some statutory obligations and associated outcomes which may require research to be undertaken to help deliver those obligations. For example, to help the Department deliver some key statutory environmental outcomes some specific work, including research which is required to underpin decisions relating to departmental statutory duties, is commissioned to external organisations through formal competitive tendering. All departmental expenditure is underpinned by specific legislation.

The Department will continue to explore options for delivery of the various statutory obligations associated with environmental outcomes.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment, further to his indication in the Assembly on 10 February 2015 of his intention to provide strategic direction for large-scale solar energy proposals, what progress has been made in doing so; and what practice directions have issued to planning staff.

(AQW 46353/11-15)

Mr Durkan: In finalising the Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) I have taken account of the comments received through the public consultation, including those relating to solar energy development. The final draft of the Strategic Planning Policy Statement (SPPS) was completed in March and subsequently circulated to Executive Colleagues. I have made every effort to bring it forward for Executive consideration since then and would hope that it is tabled at an Executive meeting in the near future.

The SPPS is largely a consolidation and update of the Department's existing suite of planning policy statements rather than a fundamental review of all planning policy. However, I acknowledge the significant issues raised during its formulation, particularly in relation to strategic planning policy for renewable energy development. That is why, on a priority basis, I have committed to subjecting the strategic renewable energy policy to a fundamental review, following publication of the SPPS. This review will require additional research, public consultation and further policy development. It is my intention that this work is concluded as rapidly as possible.

In relation to the guidance notes I can advise that my officials are currently preparing guidance notes for processing renewable energy applications which will provide useful advice and guidance to planning officers dealing with solar farm and other renewable energy proposals. This guidance will focus on the process that should be followed rather than adding to the existing policy and guidance documents. The internal guidance notes will be completed within the next few weeks.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment what steps have been taken to amend and re-issue the draft Strategic Planning Policy Statement to adequately cover large-scale solar farm applications; and to ensure that the public consultation on such is adequate.

(AQW 46354/11-15)

Mr Durkan: While I am aware that there is an increasing interest in large scale solar energy development, I am satisfied that existing planning policy is appropriate for considering proposals for solar farms.

Existing planning policy for renewable energy proposals, including solar energy, is included in Planning Policy Statement 18 'Renewable Energy' (PPS 18). The aim of PPS 18 is to facilitate the siting of renewable energy generating facilities in appropriate locations within the built and natural environment. PPS 18 advises that development that generates electricity from renewable sources will be permitted provided the proposal would not result in an unacceptable adverse impact on matters such as public safety, human health, or residential amenity; visual amenity and landscape character; biodiversity, nature conservation or built heritage interests; or on local natural resources.

As you will be aware, I issued the draft Strategic Planning Policy Statement for Northern Ireland (SPPS) for public consultation in February 2014. The draft SPPS consolidates and updates in a strategic way existing Planning Policy Statements to providing strategic planning policy for a range of subject policies, including Renewable Energy.

In finalising the SPPS I have taken account of the comments received through the public consultation including those relating to solar farms. I intend to publish the SPPS in final form as soon as possible following consideration by the Executive Committee and this will set out and confirm my Department's strategic planning policy for renewable energy development.

However, you may also be aware that I intend to complete an urgent review of strategic planning policy for renewable energy (including solar energy) following the publication of the SPPS in final form. This review will involve further research, policy development and public consultation.

In addition, it is important to note that all planning applications for solar farms are advertised in at least one local newspaper and neighbours are notified as appropriate. Furthermore, the Planning Act (Northern Ireland) 2011, places a statutory duty on applicants for planning permission to consult the community in advance of submitting a major application on or after 1 July 2015. A pre-application community consultation report must then accompany the planning application. This will ensure the community can be fully informed about proposed major developments requiring planning permission and can influence the proposal which is ultimately submitted.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by his Department in Foyle in 2013/14; and the cost of each project.

(AQW 46369/11-15)

Mr Durkan: In 2013/14 my Department provided Derry City Council with a capital grant of £365,055 from the Rethink Waste Capital Fund. This funding was used to enhance the waste infrastructure through the purchase of vehicles and equipment which are used for a separate weekly food collection service.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of the Environment to explain the EU Commission's referral of the UK to the Court of Justice of the EU due to a breach of the Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive for inadequate treatment and collection of waste water at Ballycastle; and the potential outcome and impact of this case.

(AQW 46375/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Urban Waste Water Treatment Directive sets minimum standards for the collection, treatment and discharge of urban wastewater, and timescales for the achievement of these standards.

On the basis of performance data submitted by the UK to the European Commission as required under Article 15 of the Directive, the Commission considered that the UK had failed to ensure the provision of secondary treatment as required under Articles 4(1) & (3) for agglomerations of 10,000 - 15,000 people and for agglomerations with a population of over 15,000 people. Ballycastle Waste Water Treatment Works (WwTW) was included in the list of non compliant sites.

The formal infraction process began on 20 July 2013 with the issue of a Letter of Formal Notice to the UK from the Commission. A Letter of Reasoned Opinion was issued by the Commission on 10 July 2014.

The UK response to the Commission stated that the NI authorities accepted that further measures were required to secure compliance with Article 4 for Ballycastle WwTW and a timescale for the upgrade of the site was provided to the Commission with completion of the upgrade by 2017.

The Commission has now referred the UK to the Court of Justice for non compliance with the UWWTD for 17 named sites, including Ballycastle.

Potential outcome and impact of this case:

The Commission may ask the Court of Justice to impose lump sum and/or penalty payments against the UK. However, based on previous infraction court cases, the Department anticipates that the Commission may allow a 'period of grace' for remedial work to be carried out before it would consider applying to the court for fines to be imposed. If the Commission is satisfied that a Member State has effective plans in place to deliver compliance within a reasonable timeframe it is unlikely to seek fines.

Given that the planned work to upgrade the site at Ballycastle is scheduled to be completed in 2017, and by that stage the site will no longer be in breach of the Directive, the Department does not anticipate that fines will be incurred for this infraction.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of the Environment why his Department has not listed on their website those beaches that recently received Blue Flag and Seaside Awards.

(AQW 46388/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The International Blue Flag Award Scheme is administered in Northern Ireland by Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful, on behalf of the Foundation for Environmental Education (FEE). FEE is an international umbrella organisation which operates the Blue Flag Awards scheme worldwide.

The Seaside Awards are UK based awards which are administered in Northern Ireland by Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful.

DOE has statutory responsibility for determining bathing water quality under the EU Bathing Water Directive. Bathing water quality is one of 33 eligibility criteria assessed for Blue Flags and 28 eligibility criteria for Seaside Awards.

Blue Flag status for bathing waters is provided at www.beachni.com, on the Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful webpage (<http://www.keeponthernirelandbeautiful.org/>) and on the International Blue Flag website (<http://www.blueflag.org>).

DOE's website has been undergoing a review and migration to the NI Direct website. Since Monday 1 June 2015 the bathing Water webpage on NI Direct contains a link to Keep Northern Ireland Beautiful's web page which lists the Blue Flag and Seaside Award beaches:

(<http://www.nidirect.gov.uk/index/information-and-services/environment-and-greener-living/the-wider-environment/environmental-quality-in-your-area/bathing-water-quality.htm>).

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 45603/11-15, under current legislation, whether a taxi-driver or operator that accepts a fare which has been touted for on their behalf by a non-taxi driver are breaching regulations. (AQW 46419/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As I set out in my answer to AQW 45603/11-15, the law currently does not permit the authorities to take action against anyone other than a person employed as the driver of a taxi who is touting for work for their taxi.

You will be aware that section 43 of the Taxis Act (Northern Ireland) 2008, which is due to be commenced later this year, draws the touting provisions more broadly. This will enable authorities to take action against any person suspected of touting, whether they are a taxi driver or not.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment in relation to the Road Traffic (NI) Order 1981 specifically Regulation 18, (i) whether taxi meters should have been installed in all taxis since this was passed into law; and if so (ii) why this did not occur; and (iii) why is new legislation being drafted and proposed when it already exists but has not been enforced. (AQW 46421/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Article 18 of the Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 refers to driving licences and makes no reference to taximeters. There is no reference to taximeters anywhere in the Order.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the legal advice he received prior to issuing enforcement notices to five sand extraction companies based at Lough Neagh; and to provide further details of the 'detailed investigation' undertaken by his Department which initiated his decision to issue the notices. (AQW 46466/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My decision to take enforcement action was based on advice from my officials in Strategic Planning Division following monitoring of activity on the Lough. I did not seek any specific legal advice in relation to this matter.

As this is a live enforcement case I am limited in the amount of information I can release at this stage.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment whether the wigwams in place since May 2014 on land adjacent to the NorthWest 200 pits, Portstewart, have planning permission; and if not, why enforcement action has not been taken. (AQW 46491/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The majority of Planning functions, including most planning applications and enforcement cases, transferred to the new councils on 1 April 2015. Any planning application or enforcement investigation on the lands referred to is now the responsibility of Causeway Coast and Glens Borough Council. I am able to advise that the matter is the subject of ongoing enforcement investigations by council.

You may therefore wish to contact the Council regarding the matters raised. The point of contact for Causeway Coast and Glens Council is Denise Dickson who can be emailed at planning@causewaycoastandglens.gov.uk

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of the Environment for his assessment of the number of jobs that will be lost as a direct result of his decision to issue enforcement notices to five companies that currently extract sand from Lough Neagh. (AQW 46518/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am aware of the economic importance of this long standing industry in terms of direct and indirect employment within local communities and the wider quarry products sector. My officials have been actively engaging with the sand traders and urging them to bring forward a planning application and the required environmental information to enable the Department to assess and determine, as quickly as possible, if the activities can and should be regularised. The onus is on the operators to comply with all statutory requirements and if this can be done in a timely manner it may minimise the threat of job losses. However, I cannot comment on the outcome of any future planning application as this involves a statutory process requiring input from various consultees as well as consideration of public representations.

Any forthcoming planning application will be thoroughly assessed to ensure that the Lough's conservation objectives and environmental features are protected; and that the economic benefits associated with the activities are fully considered and given appropriate weight in any final planning decision.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 45603/11-15, under current legislation, when a non-taxi driver touts for a private taxi driver or operator, whether it is legal to for the non-taxi driver to hand a business card to the passenger to present to a private taxi driver or operator as evidence of a booking when in actuality it is a touted fare.

(AQW 46572/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As I set out in my answer to AQW 45603/11-15, the law currently does not permit the authorities to take action against anyone other than a person employed as the driver of a taxi who is touting for work for their taxi.

You will be aware that section 43 of the Taxis Act (Northern Ireland) 2008, which is due to be commenced later this year, draws the touting provisions more broadly. This will enable authorities to take action against any person suspected of touting, whether they are a taxi driver or not.

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of the Environment what engagement he has had with all relevant stakeholders with regard to sand extraction from Lough Neagh.

(AQO 8340/11-15)

Mr Durkan: DOE Planning received a Pre-Application Discussion (PAD) request from the Sand Traders on the 13th October 2014 in relation to the abstraction of sand from Lough Neagh and the stated intention to submit a planning application to regularise the unauthorised operations.

As part of this process the Department has facilitated a number of meetings with the applicants and their agents to discuss the proposals. To date four PAD meetings have taken place (12th November 2014, 22nd January 2015, 23rd January 2015 and 20th March 2015) which have been attended by the following consultees when required:

- NIEA: Water Management Unit
- NIEA: Natural Environment Division
- NIEA: Landscape Architect Branch
- DETI: Geological Survey NI
- DCAL: Inland Fisheries
- Environmental Health Department (Cookstown/Craigavon/Lisburn/Antrim/Magherafelt)
- RSPB
- NI Water

The enforcement process relating to the unauthorised dredging is ongoing and enforcement notices were issued on 27 May 2015.

I am aware of the views and concerns of other stakeholders in relation to this issue including Friends of the Earth, the Green Party and elected representatives at various levels. I am also conscious that this is a complex issue involving important environmental and socio-economic considerations. I can assure the member that the views and interests of all relevant stakeholders will be taken into account in the exercise of my Department's powers.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister of the Environment to outline the impact of budget reductions on both Crawfordsburn and Redburn Country Parks.

(AQO 8341/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As a result of the unprecedented financial difficulties facing my Department, the Northern Ireland Environment Agency, which manages both Crawfordsburn and Redburn Country Parks, is unable to provide the usual dedicated staff presence daily at Redburn Country Park during the peak visitor season.

As a further consequence of the reduced staffing resources there will be reduced frequencies of site patrols and reduced levels of ground maintenance such as grass cutting. In the event of an unforeseen issue, such as excessive littering, there will be reduced capacity for local staff to respond as quickly as before.

Redburn Country Park will, however, remain available to public access at all times and Crawfordsburn Country Park will remain accessible to pedestrians at all times with the vehicle barriers closing at the same time as in previous years. The visitor centre will however close 30 minutes earlier than previous years.

I can assure you that the local staff who manage these two sites take great pride in the Parks and will continue to manage them to the best of their abilities. This has been demonstrated through their recent achievement of winning a Blue Flag Beach award and the 4 star Tourism NI Visitor Attraction Grade that Crawfordburn Country Park achieved earlier this year. An excellent achievement.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister of the Environment to confirm the number of applications and approvals for hydro schemes on the Foyle system.

(AQO 8342/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I have taken the 'Foyle system' to refer to the wider river system as defined by the Lough Foyle catchment or basin. In geographical terms, this is the area of land that drains naturally into Lough Foyle. It is an extensive river system and comprises not only the River Foyle itself but also a number of notable tributaries including the Rivers Finn, Mourne, Strule, Owenkillew, Derg and Mourne. It also includes the Rivers Roe and Faughan that flow directly into Lough Foyle.

I am able to provide the member with statistics for the Lough Foyle catchment/basin from 2005 up to 31 March 2015. During this period 36 applications were received by the Department with 17 approvals and 1 refusal. Of the remaining 18 applications, 14 transferred to the new Councils for decision on 1 April with 4 retained by DOE.

Mr Attwood asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on his proposed Better Environmental Regulation Bill, which is designed to improve environmental outcomes and reduce unnecessary bureaucratic burden on businesses.

(AQO 8343/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am currently seeking Executive agreement to the Environmental Better Regulation Bill and its introduction to the Assembly. If the draft Bill is not included on the agenda for the next scheduled meeting of the Executive on 11 June 2015, it is unlikely to have sufficient time to progress through all of the primary legislation stages in the current mandate.

However, if it is agreed to at that meeting, I intend, subject to the agreement of the Speaker, to introduce the Bill into the Assembly at the earliest opportunity on 22 June 2015.

The Bill is an important piece of environmental primary legislation which is designed to reduce the regulatory burden on business and, at the same time, enhance protection of the environment.

My officials briefed the Environment Committee on the details of the Bill on 5 March 2015.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department has carried out an environmental impact study of sand extraction from Lough Neagh.

(AQO 8344/11-15)

Mr Durkan: It would be the responsibility of the planning applicant(s) to prepare an Environmental Statement (ES) in support of any planning application for sand extraction from Lough Neagh.

In preparing the ES, the applicant would be expected to undertake a number of studies and include information on the main effects that the development is likely to have on the environment and any measures required to avoid, reduce and, if possible, remedy significant potential adverse impacts on the environment. The applicant would also be expected to engage with the Department and relevant bodies to discuss the potential impacts identified.

Upon receipt of a valid planning application and accompanying ES, my officials would review the contents of the environmental statement and consult with a range of environmental bodies that would have the remit and expertise to comment on specific impacts such as water quality, dust, noise, wildlife etc.

As you may be aware, my officials issued formal enforcement notices on the 27th May 2015 in relation to the extraction of sand on Lough Neagh. Prior to serving the notices, my officials carried out a detailed environmental assessment determination (of the dredging activity and its impacts) as required by the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2015. It was determined that an application must be accompanied by an Environmental Impact Statement.

Any forthcoming planning application will be thoroughly assessed to ensure that the Lough's conservation objectives and environmental features are protected; and that the economic benefits associated with the activities are fully considered and given appropriate weight in any final planning decision.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of the Environment for an update on the environmental research into the restoration of Modiolus horse mussels in Strangford Lough.

(AQO 8345/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Queens University has been assisting the Department with research to evaluate if artificial reefs could be used to restore the Modiolus in Strangford Lough.

In 2010, QUB created eight small artificial reefs and each reef was developed using one to two square metres of Modiolus from within Strangford Lough. These survived for at least a year but when the sites were revisited in 2014 it was found that the trial had failed. The reason for failure is unknown but could be associated with predation or the scale of the trial.

QUB has since been taking forward the research associated with a larger scale restoration trial that would involve translocating Modiolus from two healthy sites at Outer Ards into Strangford Lough.

However, following a mid-term review of the revised restoration plan, the Modiolus Restoration Working Group agreed not to proceed with the translocation because of the risk of failure and damage to these sites. Pursuing this option could result in a net loss of Modiolus.

The group hopes to finalise a further revised plan this month before seeking approval from the Commission. This revision will include formally setting aside translocation as an option, and introducing a proposal to designate the sites along Outer Ards as a compensatory measure.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister of the Environment, following the recent introduction of a consultation on increasing the road speed limit of agricultural tractors to 40 kilometers per hour, to outline the safety measures he has considered for other road users.

(AQO 8346/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am currently consulting on increasing the road speed limit of agricultural tractors to 40 kilometres per hour as a result of a report of the Independent Farming Regulation Taskforce which was published in May 2011. This report recommended that the government examined the allowable maximum speed of tractors travelling on roads.

The proposal – on which I welcome comments and information – is for a modest increase in speed for tractors of 4.8mph from the current speed of 20mph to 24.8mph (40kmh). Research that has been carried out on behalf of the Department for Transport (DfT) in Britain has indicated that the likely impact on road safety would be limited. Respondents' views on the DfT consultation were that tractor collisions related to speed are in the main caused because tractors drive too slowly. A slightly faster speed may avert some of those collisions. Tractors have also been designed and manufactured for a number of years to travel at 40kmh (24.8mph) which is the standard in the most of the EU.

The Independent Farming Regulation Taskforce report noted that some stakeholders perceive the current restrictions imposed in legislation are outdated and that an alteration to the speed restriction, raising it above 20mph, would maintain or improve road safety. Similarly, the report stated that the restriction does not reflect the capabilities of modern farm machinery, forcing farmers to drive unnecessarily slowly on public roads. This is said to cause unnecessary delay for farmers and is a nuisance to other road users.

That said, this is a proposal for consultation, on which I welcome views by 7 July. All responses will be considered in the policy development process.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of the Environment what discussions has he had with officials in the Northern Ireland Environment Agency regarding ammonia levels in Special Areas of Conservation in the context of responding to planning applications for pig fattening units and broiler houses.

(AQO 8347/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Expansion of the agricultural sector is an important topic and I have met with officials from the NIEA to discuss agricultural developments a number of times. Nitrogen deposition, of which ammonia emissions form a significant part, have been reported as being a threat to many sensitive habitats and, therefore, assessment of emissions is essential to ensuring sustainable expansion of the sector. I have requested an update from officials on the status of these planning applications.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for his assessment of the delay in approving the 2013 Business Plan and budgets for Waterways Ireland and the Language Body; and to detail how expenditure in 2013 was legal.

(AQW 33937/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure passed the 2013 Waterways Ireland Business Plan to the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) for retrospective approval in February 2014, well after the close of the Body's financial year.

The Language Body's 2013 Business Plan has not yet been provided to DFP.

The provision of Business Plans well after the period to which they relate is not acceptable and is a breach of governing legislation.

The late submission of the 2013 Waterways Ireland Business Plan for retrospective approval led my officials to seek legal advice from the Departmental Solicitor's Office (DSO). DSO advised that the payment of such grants without prior DFP approval constitutes a breach of the provisions of the legislation and the expenditure is therefore unlawful.

To address this critical issue, a letter issued from the DFP Budget Director to Departmental Accounting Officers on 23 May 2014, advising them of the possible illegality of the grants to date. It stated that departmental 2013-14 Resource Accounts should be noted accordingly, and the Northern Ireland Audit Office (NIAO) alerted to any illegal spend, as required by Managing Public Money NI.

In the event, the NIAO chose to accept the less contentious DCAL position, that approval for the grant came through the Estimate process, and qualified DCAL's 2013-14 accounts for irregular as opposed to illegal spend with reference to the DFP view.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what steps are being taken to deal with the situation whereby the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure is refusing to permit agreement on the 2013 Business Plans and Budgets of Waterways Ireland and the Language Body.

(AQW 33938/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Department of Culture Arts and Leisure (DCAL) passed the 2013 Waterways Ireland Business Plan to the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP) for retrospective approval in February 2014, well after the close of the Body's financial year.

The Language Body's 2013 Business Plan has not yet been provided to DFP.

The late submission of the 2013 Waterways Ireland Business Plan, prompted my officials to seek advice from the Departmental Solicitors Office (DSO). Following this advice, my Budget Director issued a letter on 23 May 2014 to all relevant Accounting Officers. This letter reminded the Accounting Officers of their responsibility to comply with the legislation governing the operation of the North/South Bodies, and their responsibility for providing Business Plans to DFP in sufficient time to allow my approval and the approval of the North South Ministerial Council (NSMC) prior to the commencement of the financial year to which the plan relates.

In addition, Accounting Officers were advised that if any illegal spend had been incurred, the 2013-14 Departmental Resource Accounts should be noted accordingly and the Northern Ireland Audit Office alerted. It would then be for the Comptroller and Auditor General (C&AG) to decide whether to report on the matter to the Assembly with the relevant Departmental Resource Account and whether to draw it to the attention of the Public Accounts Committee.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 44871/11-15, what proportion of rate payers' Regional Rate contribution goes towards the cost of water and sewerage services; and how much was generated from Regional Rate contributions towards these services in 2014/15.

(AQW 46096/11-15)

Mrs Foster: It is not possible to detail the contribution made by either domestic or non-domestic ratepayers towards specific areas of funding, given that rates are an unhyponthecated tax. While a contribution is made by domestic and non-domestic ratepayers towards supporting regional public services, including water and sewerage services, there is no specific proportion of any rates bill that can be linked to the funding of NI Water.

Separate water charges, however, are levied on non domestic customers and metering is the normal method of working out the charge. Those that are not yet metered pay a variable charge depending on the net annual value of the property in question. This policy is the responsibility of the Department for Regional Development with billing and collection the responsibility of NI Water. It does not comprise part of a rates bill.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the travel and subsistence costs incurred by her Department on trips outside Northern Ireland in each year of the current mandate, broken down by costs incurred by (i) the Minister (ii) special advisers and (iii) support staff.

(AQW 46193/11-15)

Mrs Foster: It is not possible to provide an accurate figure of the costs incurred by the Minister, Special Adviser and support staff on trips outside Northern Ireland as the financial reporting systems do not allow the required analysis.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the (i) number of rates valuation appeals received from businesses in the Banbridge and Craigavon areas; and (ii) the number which received a lower valuation as a result.

(AQW 46428/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The number of non domestic valuation challenge cases received for the Banbridge and Craigavon areas over each of the last 3 years was:

Banbridge

- 2012/13 – 29 cases
- 2013/14 – 19 cases
- 2014/15 – 33 cases

Craigavon

- 2012/13 – 107 cases
- 2013/14 – 64 cases
- 2014/15 – 89 cases

The number of non domestic valuation challenges completed that resulted in a reduced valuation for the Banbridge and Craigavon areas over the last 3 years was:

Banbridge

- 2012/13 – 22 cases
- 2013/14 – 18 cases
- 2014/15 – 12 cases

Craigavon

- 2012/13 – 55 cases
- 2013/14 – 24 cases
- 2014/15 – 25 cases

Reductions in assessments are attributable to several factors including changes to the physical characteristics of a property. It also includes situations where premises are removed from the Valuation List when it is determined that the property is incapable of beneficial occupation due to its physical condition.

The total number of applications received by Land & Property Services between 1st April 2015 and 31st May 2015 from all non domestic ratepayers in Northern Ireland requesting a review of the Net Annual Value of their property following the non domestic revaluation is 1,394. The figure for the same time period in 2014/15 was 289.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of rates valuation appeals received from businesses since 1 April 2015 and how this compares with the equivalent period in 2014.

(AQW 46429/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The number of non domestic valuation challenge cases received for the Banbridge and Craigavon areas over each of the last 3 years was:

Banbridge

- 2012/13 – 29 cases
- 2013/14 – 19 cases
- 2014/15 – 33 cases

Craigavon

- 2012/13 – 107 cases
- 2013/14 – 64 cases
- 2014/15 – 89 cases

The number of non domestic valuation challenges completed that resulted in a reduced valuation for the Banbridge and Craigavon areas over the last 3 years was:

Banbridge

- 2012/13 – 22 cases
- 2013/14 – 18 cases
- 2014/15 – 12 cases

Craigavon

- 2012/13 – 55 cases
- 2013/14 – 24 cases
- 2014/15 – 25 cases

Reductions in assessments are attributable to several factors including changes to the physical characteristics of a property. It also includes situations where premises are removed from the Valuation List when it is determined that the property is incapable of beneficial occupation due to its physical condition.

The total number of applications received by Land & Property Services between 1st April 2015 and 31st May 2015 from all non domestic ratepayers in Northern Ireland requesting a review of the Net Annual Value of their property following the non domestic revaluation is 1,394. The figure for the same time period in 2014/15 was 289.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of procurement agencies involved in the commissioning process across each Department and their arm's-length bodies.

(AQW 46434/11-15)

Mrs Foster: There are nine Centres of Procurement Expertise (CoPEs) in Northern Ireland providing a professional procurement service.

Central Procurement Directorate (CPD) is a central purchasing body and as such provides services to all departments and to those arm's length bodies that request them. The CPD CoPEs are:

- CPD Supplies and Services Division
- CPD Construction Division
- CPD Health Projects Division

The other CoPEs provide services to specific functions or sectors, namely:

- Department for Education - Education Authority

- Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety - Business Services Organisation Procurement and Logistics Service
- Department for Social Development - Northern Ireland Housing Executive
- Department for Regional Development - Northern Ireland Water, Translink and Transportni.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel when did Person A stand down from the Northern Ireland Advisory Committee of the National Assets Management Agency.

(AQW 46450/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department is not responsible for the National Asset Management Agency (NAMA), which is an agency of the Irish Government, or its Committees.

The now dissolved NAMA Northern Ireland Advisory Committee was established as a sub-committee of the NAMA Board. It was appointed by, and reported to that Board, not my Department. I am therefore not responsible for accounting for its actions or its membership. I have not met with the NAMA Northern Ireland Advisory Committee.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by her Department in Foyle in 2013/14; and the cost of each project.

(AQW 46460/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department financed 3 capital infrastructure projects in Derry/Londonderry in 2013-14 as follows:

- Foyle Jobs and Benefits Office Replacement windows – total cost of project £1.5m (£0.2m provided by DSD).
- Carlisle House Project – total cost of project £1.1m.
- North West Regional Science Park – total cost of project £12.1m. The Northern Ireland spend on this project was £9.3m (£7m from the European Regional Development Fund and £2.3m from DFP).

Please note we do not hold records by constituency.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what was the average (i) increase and (ii) decrease in rateable valuation in the previous year for businesses in (a) Bangor town centre, (b) Holywood Town Centre and (c) Donaghadee.

(AQW 46477/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department does not hold the data exactly in the format requested.

The question has been interpreted to provide the effect of the recent non-domestic revaluation on rateable values and sets out the change in values that occurred at the end of the previous year 2014-15, when the new valuation list came into force on 1st April 2015. The effect of the revaluation on Net Annual Values (NAVs) in these locations is set out in the attached table 1.

Table 1

	Bangor town centre	Holywood town centre	Donaghadee
Number of non domestic properties	674	282	141
Number with NAV increased	350	162	71
Average NAV increase	£2,603	£2,534	£1,193
Number with NAV decreased	226	114	33
Average NAV decrease	£8,586	£1,292	£2,092

Note: The Harbour electoral ward has been used to define Bangor town centre; the Holywood electoral ward has been used to define Holywood town centre; and the Donaghadee electoral ward has been used to define Donaghadee.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for (i) a list of the occasions the Minister met with the Northern Ireland Advisory Committee of Nama; (ii) to confirm if this committee still exists and if not why its role ended; and (iii) to name the representatives who served on it, specifying the period of service of each.

(AQW 46513/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department is not responsible for the National Asset Management Agency (NAMA), which is an agency of the Irish Government, or its Committees.

The now dissolved NAMA Northern Ireland Advisory Committee was established as a sub-committee of the NAMA Board. It was appointed by, and reported to that Board, not my Department. I am therefore not responsible for accounting for its actions or its membership. I have not met with the NAMA Northern Ireland Advisory Committee.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, following the non-domestic revaluation, how many non-domestic ratepayers in North Down have had their rates (i) increased and (ii) decreased.

(AQW 46557/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Information is available at the legacy district council level only. Between the rating years 2014/15 and 2015/16, 680 non-domestic ratepayers in the Ards District Council had their rate assessments increased and 851 had their assessments decreased. In the North Down District Council, 811 had their assessments increased and 717 had their assessments decreased.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail what this years budget will be reduced by as a result of the Chancellors announcement that there will be further cuts.

(AQW 46746/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I can confirm that the Executive's Budget will be reduced by £33 million Resource DEL and £5 million Capital DEL as a result of the Chancellor's latest announcement.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the criteria used by her Department when considering applications for the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

(AQW 46817/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The eligibility and selection criteria used by the NICS Voluntary Exit Scheme were published in the Scheme Information Booklet and also Frequently Asked Questions, all of which are available via the DFP website on the following link: http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/nics_voluntary_exit_scheme

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what training support her Department intends to provide to staff who will be taking up new responsibilities following the departure of other staff through the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

(AQW 46819/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Any training needs that arise as a result of the NICS Voluntary Exit Scheme will be determined by individual departments. A full range of training support is available from the NICS Centre for Applied Learning to assist staff at all levels across the organisation.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the loans the Executive is paying interest on, including the amount of interest for each loan.

(AQO 8350/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Reinvestment and Reform Initiative (RRI), announced in 2002, provided the Executive with the power to borrow to support infrastructure investment. Borrowing limits are generally agreed as part of the national Spending Review process.

Full details of the amounts borrowed in each year are detailed in the Executive's 2015-16 Budget document published on 19th January 2015. RRI borrowing to date has totalled over £2.4 billion, whilst the interest cost in 2014-15 was £51.0 million.

Ms P Bradley asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the new INTERREG VA Programme.

(AQO 8356/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The INTERREG VA programme was submitted to the European Commission on 22 September 2014 and was formally adopted on 13 February 2015. NSMC considered and approved the programme in April 2015.

The total indicative budget for the programme is €282m which will support projects across 4 thematic objectives; Research and Innovation; Environment; Health and, Sustainable Transport.

My officials are working with SEUPB with the aim of having the programme open for calls this summer.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline any discussions she has had on the implementation of the Stormont House Agreement.

(AQO 8357/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The UK Government has made it clear that the implementation of welfare reform is a key part of the Stormont House Agreement. Therefore the recent collapse of the Welfare Reform Bill risks the loss of the budget flexibilities and additional borrowing powers detailed in the Stormont House Agreement.

Should those flexibilities be removed the Executive would face a significant Budgetary pressure this year. This is further compounded by the Chancellor's recent announcement of in-year budgetary cuts which will equate to a reduction in the Executive's budget of approximately £40 million Resource DEL and £10 million Capital DEL.

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline any discussions she has had with the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety in relation to the pressures facing his budget in this financial year.

(AQO 8360/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I have had discussions with Executive colleagues, including the DHSSPS Minister, on the wide range of pressures confronting the Executive.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline what provisions are in place to ensure banking services are provided by post offices in both rural areas and in towns and villages where banks have closed.

(AQO 8361/11-15)

Mrs Foster: While financial services are a reserved matter, I welcome the expansion of partnership agreements between the Post Office and locals banks. Thanks to these arrangements, which were encouraged by the last UK Government as part of its wider Post Office restructuring programme, the Post Office now provides Branch Personal Banking Services to customers of all the main banks operating in Northern Ireland.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to outline the finance and welfare settlement reached in the Stormont House and Stormont Castle Agreements.

(AQO 8362/11-15)

Mrs Foster: In the Stormont Castle Agreement all five political parties agreed the implementation of Welfare Reform subject to a package of mitigating measures. An indicative budget for this package of measures was also agreed by the five parties. The outworking of the Stormont Castle Agreement was reflected in the Welfare Reform Bill brought to the Assembly by the Minister for Social Development whilst the financial impact for 2015-16 was detailed in Executive's Budget.

In the Stormont House Agreement the financial package of almost £2 billion from the UK Government was predicated on the implementation of welfare reform legislation by 2016-17.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr Lunn asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the number of patients currently waiting to see a consultant; and whether this number has increased or decreased over the current Assembly term.

(AQW 45938/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): At the 31st March 2015, the most recent quarter for which official statistics are available, the number of patients waiting for a first consultant led outpatient appointment had increased to 191,779.

The increase in elective care waiting times during the first half of 2014/15 was due to a combination of increased referrals and an underdelivery of commissioned volumes of core activity by Trusts across a range of specialties. Due to the wider HSC financial position, HSCB confirmed it was not possible to fund Trusts to undertake additional activity in the second half of the year therefore, given the gap between demand and funded capacity, regrettably this has led to an increase in the number of patients waiting longer than the Ministerial maximum waiting time standards across a range of specialties in all Trusts.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given the high levels of people who did not attend a GP appointment, to outline his plans for reducing this number and the associated financial expenditure, including whether he will implement an appointment reminder service.

(AQW 46013/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: A GP survey in 2013 estimated that over 5,000 people per week failed to turn up for a GP appointment and around 4,500 failed to turn up for an appointment with a nurse.

Whilst there is a financial cost associated with missed appointments, of approximately £36 per GP appointment, the real cost to the health service is the missed opportunity for GPs and nurses to see and treat other patients, which in turn has an adverse impact on the waiting times for other patients to receive the treatment they need. It is widely reported in the media that patients are finding it more and more difficult to get appointments with their GP Practice within a reasonable timescale. Patients who fail to attend appointments and fail to cancel appointments contribute to that difficulty. It is accepted that occasionally unexpected things happen which makes attendance for an appointment impossible, however this should be the exception rather than the rule; the scale of the problem is unacceptable. We all have a role to play in ensuring that missed appointments are kept to a minimum and that our valuable health and social care resources are utilised in the most efficient manner possible.

Currently, the issue of patients missing GP appointments is managed at Practice level. The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) does, however, support GP Practices to consider how to reduce missed appointments, including the use of reminder systems. This is funded through the Northern Ireland Local Enhanced Service (NILES) Demand Management in General Practice.

Whilst GP Practices have improved patients' access to their services under NILES, given the importance of this issue, Departmental officials will be working closely with the HSCB in order to identify measures to bring about further improvements.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if he has any plans to reduce the level of bureaucracy in the Health Service, particularly for doctors and nurses.
(AQW 46093/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Quality record keeping and document management is a necessary part of the provision of clinical care and an integral part of Health Care professionals' day to day responsibilities. Succinct purposeful records also assist to quality assure the service provided.

Innovative technologies are having a positive impact in terms of facilitating information sharing, streamlining processes and reducing bureaucracy. The Northern Ireland Electronic Care Record links clinical systems across Northern Ireland to give health and care professionals access to the key information they require about their patients. The Northern Ireland Picture Archiving and Communications System enables x-rays to be viewed and reported electronically. These information technology solutions – and others – help to reduce administration, repetition and delay as well as enabling quicker decision-making and improving the safety and quality of care which can be provided.

In addition to continuing investment in innovative technological solutions that can reduce bureaucracy, my predecessor announced on 1st April that the Quality Outcomes Framework for General Practitioners would be reduced by 102 points, allowing GPs to spend less time completing paperwork and more time treating patients.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of new permanent full time staff nurse posts created in each of the last three years, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.
(AQW 46213/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Qualified Nursing & Midwifery workforce has continued to grow over the last few years. The total whole-time equivalent, excluding bank staff and those with a WTE of less than 0.03, has increased by approximately 966, or 7.1%, between March 2011 and March 2015.

The South Eastern and Southern Trusts were unable to provide the information requested. The number of newly created permanent full-time Band 5 Staff Nurse posts in the Belfast, Northern and Western Trusts are shown in the table below.

Newly Created Permanent Full-Time Band 5 Staff Nurse Posts

	Belfast HSC Trust	Northern HSC Trust	Western HSC Trust
2012/13	0	10	*
2013/14	54	18	21
2014/15	14	14	30

* The Western Trust were unable to provide a figure for 2012/13.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of permanent full time staff nurse posts created in each of the last three years, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.
(AQW 46214/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Qualified Nursing & Midwifery workforce has continued to grow over the last few years. The total whole-time equivalent, excluding bank staff and those with a WTE of less than 0.03, has increased by approximately 966, or 7.1%, between March 2011 and March 2015.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has spent on postage in each of the last two financial years.

(AQW 46270/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend on postage by the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £597,501
- 2013/14 - £569,748

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail his Department's expenditure on resettlement as part of Transforming Your Care.

(AQW 46326/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Transforming Your Care recognised resettlement as one of the key mechanisms by which the learning disability and mental health programmes of care could, where appropriate, provide more patient centred care closer to home. The programmes make a valuable contribution to the overall 'shift left' from provision of services in a hospital setting to re-provision in a community setting. Cumulatively to the end of March 2015 a total of £27.53m has been invested recurrently by the Health and Social Care Board on resettlement.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of all financial resource shifted left as part of Transforming Your Care, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust, since 2011.

(AQW 46328/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The table below presents a summary of the financial resource "shifted left" as part of Transforming Your Care. A breakdown of the figures by Health and Social Care Trust is not available.

Shift Left by Year

£17.43m	£17.43m	£20.83m	£38.26m	£6.05m	£44.31m

Notes:

- 1) The Health and Social Care Board (HSCB) does not currently measure shift left values by Health and Social Care Trust due to the regional nature of a number of investments and the nature of care pathways which may involve individuals being dealt with by more than one healthcare provider.
- 2) Of the total £44.31m of Health and Social Care resources 'shifted left' by the end of 2014/15, the areas were:
 - resettlement of Mental Health / Learning Disability clients (£27.5m)
 - a range of transformational initiatives funded directly by HSCB recurrent funding (£16.29m)
 - 'shift left' as a result of hospital activity avoided (£0.52m)

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what steps he is taking to work collaboratively with his Executive colleagues to prevent and respond to female genital mutilation.

(AQW 46329/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Officials from my Department participated in a cross-departmental working group led by the Department of Finance and Personnel to develop Multi-agency Practice Guidelines on FGM which were issued in August 2014. Prior to this, in October 2012, DHSSPS and DOJ jointly launched a Safeguarding Conference on Cultural Diversity which highlighted issues such as FGM. Cultural competence has also been highlighted as a priority in the North South Ministerial Council (NSMC) child protection work programme which was agreed in July 2012. Also, my Department has engaged with other Departments on the issue and with the Safeguarding Board for Northern Ireland.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how many people are on waiting lists to receive spinal surgery; and to detail those waiting times.

(AQW 46343/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of patients waiting, in weeks, to receive inpatient spinal surgery treatment, at 31st March 2015 is shown in the table below.

Number of patients waiting, in weeks, to receive inpatient treatment for spinal surgery at 31st March 2015

	0-6	>6-13	>13-21	>21-26	>26	Total
Belfast	108	192	238	130	480	1,148
Northern	69	69	52	14	6	210

	0-6	>6-13	>13-21	>21-26	>26	Total

Western	78	78	76	19	1	252
Northern Ireland	288	383	415	205	571	1,862

Spinal surgery procedures have been identified using the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys tabular list of operations and procedures (OPCS – 4.6) codes V22.1 – V68.9, with the exception of code V55. Figures in the table above refer to the intended primary procedure.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what medical conditions or diseases are associated with contact with bird excrement.

(AQW 46366/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: There are a number of examples of diseases associated with contact with bird excrement. These include: cryptococcosis, which is a fungal disease associated with bird droppings; histoplasmosis, a disease caused by a fungus called Histoplasma capsulatum, which grows in pigeon droppings; and psittacosis, an infection caused by Chlamydia psittaci, a type of bacteria found in the droppings of some birds.

Bird flu, or avian flu, is an infectious viral illness that spreads among birds. In rare cases it can also affect humans. Bird flu is spread through direct contact with infected birds (dead or alive), an infected bird's droppings, or secretions from their eyes or respiratory tract.

Following good personal hygiene practices greatly reduces the chances of catching any of these diseases.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much has been spent on postage by the Public Health Agency in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46379/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend on postage by the Public Health Agency in each of the last three years was:

- 2014/15 - £18,685
- 2013/14 - £18,021
- 2012/13 - £13,691

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the extent to which Transforming Your Care, has given consideration to Section 75 of the Northern Ireland Act 1998.

(AQW 46437/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: As part of the Health and Social Care Board's (HSCB) consultation exercise on service change proposals to implement Transforming Your Care, the HSCB undertook an equality screening exercise. As outlined in the TYC Strategic Implementation Plan (part of the HSCB consultation) it was concluded that it would be more meaningful for specific service changes to be subject to full impact assessment as the impact on Section 75 groups could be better assessed once detailed plans were developed. The HSCB also indicated that some of the proposals for service change in TYC had already been subject to Equality Screening and EQIA when they were developed as policy.

Examples of TYC related projects where equality screening and impact assessments have been carried out include:

Project/Area	Equality Screening Required?	Equality Impact Assessment Required?	Comments
Self Directed Support	Yes	Yes	Formal consultation on EQIA closed 8 May 2015
Day Opportunities provision for patients with Learning Disabilities	Yes	HSCB policy on Day Opportunities Screened out	Individual proposals brought forward by Health and Social Care Trusts for significant changes to Day Opportunities provision may be subject to equality screening and potentially Equality Impact Assessments.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 46076/11-15, to detail the number of inspections the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority are required to carry out for (i) care; (ii) residential; and (iii) nursing homes per year.

(AQW 46445/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Under the Regulation and Improvement Authority (Fees and Frequency of Inspections) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2005, RQIA is required to conduct a minimum of two inspections in every 12 month period at nursing and residential care homes.

Where inspections have shown that regulations and standards are not being met in an establishment, RQIA may conduct a number of additional inspections to ensure that improvements have been put in place. RQIA may also conduct inspections when following up on concerns or disclosures.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he can provide assurances that no permanent residents will be forced to leave Northfield House in Donaghadee.

(AQW 46467/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I have written to all existing permanent residents in the statutory residential care homes under review, including those at Northfield House, to provide an assurance that, they will not be required to leave their home against their wishes.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he can give a reassurance that no staff will lose their jobs at Northfield House, Donaghadee

(AQW 46468/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The employment of staff within statutory residential care homes is a matter for individual HSC Trusts, as employers. HSC Trusts have redeployment and workforce planning policies in place to ensure that all their staff are treated fairly and equally when decisions are made about changes to services.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety if the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust have any future plans for the Northfield House site.

(AQW 46469/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: A final decision on the future role of Northfield House will not be taken until the South Eastern Trust has completed a public consultation on their proposals for its future. Pending this, the Trust have advised me that there are no specific plans for the future of the Northfield House site, although this will form part of the consultation process on the future role and function of Northfield House.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many staff are employed at Northfield House.

(AQW 46470/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust advises that there are 26 (19.0 whole-time equivalent) staff currently employed at Northfield House.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of beds at Northfield House.

(AQW 46471/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: At 1 June 2015, there were a maximum of 41 approved places at Northfield House.

This information is published on the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority's (RQIA) website at the following link:
http://www.rqia.org.uk/what_we_do/registration__inspection_and_reviews/service_provider_directory.cfm

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much a bed in a private residential home costs the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust for residential or respite care.

(AQW 46478/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has advised that the cost of a private residential home bed is £470 per week.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how many permanent residents are currently living at Northfield House residential home.

(AQW 46481/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: As at 27 May 2015, there are three permanent residents in Northfield House residential care home.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of people waiting for occupational therapist assessments for home adaptations, broken down by constituency.

(AQW 46531/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The figures requested are not available.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what support, including financial, is afforded to foster parents and kinship carers for children within their care.

(AQW 46533/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: All foster carers and formal kinship foster carers receive Foster Care Allowances; are allocated a supervising social worker to provide support and supervision; have access to a range of specialist and therapeutic supports as determined by the assessed needs of the child/young person; are provided with a range of learning and development opportunities as well as educational support for children in their care. In an informal kinship care arrangement, parental responsibility remains with the parent as does the responsibility to provide financial support. Within such arrangements, there is an entitlement to support services and a general duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children in those arrangements who are deemed to be "in need", within the definition of The Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the support and treatment services available to young people aged 12-25 years who are addicted to drugs or alcohol in Upper Bann.

(AQW 46605/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Under the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs Phase 2 a range of alcohol and drug education, early intervention, and treatment and support services are commissioned from a number of providers in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust area. Details of the current services are provided at the following link to the Public Health Agency's Directory of Services: http://www.publichealth.hscni.net/sites/default/files/DrugsAlcohol_Directory_Southern_12_12.pdf. These services are all available to people living in the Upper Bann area and, following the completion of the current re-tendering exercise, the directory will be updated shortly.

A number of these alcohol and drug services are targeted specifically at young people and their families; all are designed to provide appropriate advice, guidance and treatment for those who have issue with alcohol and drugs.

I would advise that if young people or their parents are concerned about their drug misuse they should speak to their GP in the first instance. Information can also be sought confidentially from the Talk to Frank service on 0800 776 600 or any of the local service providers. Where young people present in crisis or in an emergency there are a range of service responses in place: the Trust Gateway Service and the Regional Out-of-Hours Service; CAMHS Crisis Resolution & Home Treatment Service. In addition, the Lifeline service (0808 808 8000) which operates across the region also provides a response.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of young people aged 12-25 years who have presented at (i) GP surgeries; and (ii) hospitals for treatment relating to alcohol or drug addiction in each of the last two years.

(AQW 46607/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the number of young people aged 12-25 years who have presented for treatment relating to alcohol or drug addiction in each of the last two years at GP surgeries is not available.

Information on the number of young people aged 12-25 years admitted to hospital with a diagnosis of an alcohol or a drug related condition, is given in the table below;

Individuals Admitted	2012/13	2013/14
Alcohol only	840	916
Drug only	427	406
Alcohol and Drug	263	252

Source: Hospital Inpatient System

This information on admissions due to alcohol or drugs has been sourced from the Hospital Inpatient System. This records information on patients admitted to acute hospitals as inpatients or day cases. It does not hold details of patients treated in the Primary Care setting. It also does not hold information on patients attending hospital as outpatients or who attended an Emergency Care Department and were not admitted, nor does it hold details of patients admitted to Mental Health Hospitals.

Mr McElduff asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on any plans to build new, fit-for-purpose, primary care centres in Carrickmore and Fintona.

(AQO 8366/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Both Carrickmore and Fintona are included in the HSCB's draft Strategic Implementation Plan as spokes of the new hub based in Omagh. The draft Strategic Implementation Plan remains under consideration and cannot be progressed until the pilot Lisburn and Newry projects are evaluated later this year. The outcome of these evaluations will inform the potential roll out of the larger Primary Care Infrastructure Programme.

Delivery of the implementation plan will have to be considered alongside other capital investment priorities and will be dependent on future budget availability, confirmation of value for money, and affordability.

It is therefore not possible at this point to give an indication of the timescale for future health & care centres, such as the Carrickmore and Fintona schemes.

Mr Boylan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what strategies are in place to address negligence within social care.

(AQO 8367/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Social care workers provide services to some of the most vulnerable in our society and I am committed to ensuring that these are safe and of a high quality.

Organisations that provide social care services must have robust governance processes in place, including those that are commissioned from the independent sector.

There are a wide range of strategies to promote good social care practice and to detect and address negligent practice when it occurs. Allegations of negligence can be investigated through complaint and disciplinary processes, adult safeguarding procedures and by the police when an offence has been committed.

My Department has established two regulatory bodies to strengthen public protection. The Northern Ireland Social Care Council (NISCC) regulates the social care workforce and investigates complaints against individual staff. The Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority (RQIA) inspects the quality of care against Departmental standards and has enforcement powers to deal with services that fail to provide the expected quality of care.

Negligent practice is unacceptable. I can assure you that the provision of high quality and safe social care is one of my Department's key priorities and for all Health and Social Care organisations going forward.

Ms Fearon asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, given that the number of urgent referrals for breast cancer being seen by a specialist in 14 days has dropped from 100 per cent to 53 per cent, how he plans to address this.

(AQO 8368/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: According to figures released through the EUROCARE 5 project in 2013, the breast cancer survival rate in Northern Ireland is the best in the UK and Ireland. I want this position to be maintained and I therefore look to the Health and Social Care Board to work with the Trusts to ensure that cancer performance targets are achieved. In this respect, the latest performance statistics, published on the 26th March 2015, show that during December 2014, 96.3% of patients waiting for an urgent breast cancer referral were seen within 14 days.

I recently visited the Cancer Centre and was very impressed by both the first rate care that the Centre provides and the ground breaking research that is carried out there, but even more impressive were the expertise and dedication of all the staff I met.

The people of Northern Ireland are very well served by the Cancer Centre.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how he plans to address the 5.5 per cent cut in the Northern Ireland Fire Service budget.

(AQO 8369/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service's Savings Plan to meet the 5.5% reduction to its 2015/16 budget is currently being considered. The savings proposals being considered have been prioritised on the basis of those that minimise the impact on service delivery. Any changes to service delivery will be risk assessed to ensure the continued safety of both the public and firefighters. I will not preside over unsafe fire and rescue services. The safety of the public and our firefighters remains my priority.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the Northern Ireland Pensioners Parliament report that revealed serious concerns among older people in relation to health and social care provision.

(AQO 8370/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: A copy of the Northern Ireland Pensioner's Parliament report on a survey of older people's views on health and social care services was provided to my Department on 26 May and officials are considering its findings.

I am grateful to the Pensioner's Parliament for undertaking the survey, and helping to ensure that the experiences and views of older people, who make a significant contribution to our society, can be reflected in decisions about our health and social care services. HSC organisations always aim to provide care to all irrespective of age, and to treat everyone in a timely way and with dignity and respect. Demographic pressures increasingly mean that it is no longer a sustainable option for the health and social care system to continue delivering services in the way it has always done – which is why reform, transformation and innovation will be absolutely key if we are to deliver a world class health and social care service for all our citizens into the future.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of provision by the cancer centre at the City Hospital, Belfast.

(AQO 8371/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: According to figures released through the EURO CARE 5 project in 2013, the breast cancer survival rate in Northern Ireland is the best in the UK and Ireland. I want this position to be maintained and I therefore look to the Health and Social Care Board to work with the Trusts to ensure that cancer performance targets are achieved. In this respect, the latest performance statistics, published on the 26th March 2015, show that during December 2014, 96.3% of patients waiting for an urgent breast cancer referral were seen within 14 days.

I recently visited the Cancer Centre and was very impressed by both the first rate care that the Centre provides and the ground breaking research that is carried out there, but even more impressive were the expertise and dedication of all the staff I met.

The people of Northern Ireland are very well served by the Cancer Centre.

Mr Maskey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what are the implications of four out of the five Health and Social Care Trusts failing to balance their budget in 2013-14.

(AQO 8372/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The financial deficits reported by the four trusts in 2013/14 reflected the significant and increasing challenges faced by the health and social care system in endeavouring to meet ever increasing demand from within constrained resources.

Given this position, the HSC experienced considerable financial pressures in 2014/15. These were resolved through in year monitoring allocations, savings plans and contingency measures across a broad range of activities. Looking forward, the safety of patients and clients will remain my priority, whilst living within the available financial resources.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action he is taking to gain an understanding of the issues facing dementia sufferers.

(AQO 8373/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Significant progress has been made to date across a range of the recommendations in my Department's Regional Dementia Strategy, including the development of memory clinics across the five Health and Social Care Trusts, which provide timely diagnosis for people with dementia and information and support to inform decisions about future care and treatment.

Building on this, the Atlantic Philanthropies/Delivering Social Change Dementia initiative, which was launched in September 2014, will provide funding of £6.25m over three years to improve health and social care services for people living with dementia. The initiative will focus on three key strands: promoting greater understanding and awareness of dementia across the whole of the community; enhancing the quality of services through improved training opportunities for staff; and developing innovative support services for carers of people with dementia.

Looking to the future, my Department, working in partnership with Invest NI and DSD, has developed proposals for three further dementia related projects. The proposals include the development of a coherent regional strategy for housing and support for people with dementia and older people, a project to enhance the care and wellbeing of people with dementia and their families through effective utilisation of technology, building on existing investments in e-health and social care, and a third project on dementia analytics to improve the capacity to plan for and commission dementia care through the creation of an improved dementia evidence base, and the development of a data analytics capacity in health and social care.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the introduction of Referral to Treatment waiting time targets.

(AQO 8374/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: No decision on the introduction of Referral to Treatment waiting time targets has been made at present. However, the Health & Social Care Board has also been asked to look at its' eHealth Strategy to ensure that future developments of the IT infrastructure would allow for the tracking of patients though the complete patient pathway, should a decision be taken in the future to introduce a RTT target.

Mr A Maginness asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the Northern Ireland Human Rights Commission inquiry into emergency care, including the concerns raised over the implementation of Transforming Your Care.

(AQO 8375/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department is giving the Commission's report detailed consideration and will respond to the Commission as soon as possible.

The Member will be aware that the responsible statutory authority for assessing the quality of care provided by the HSC is the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority and not the NI Human Rights Commission. The RQIA has previously carried out a comprehensive review of emergency and unscheduled care, with their report being published in July 2014. The RQIA inspection report led to the establishment of an unscheduled care task group to support and monitor the implementation of the RQIA's recommendations, and two RQIA follow-up inspections of the Belfast Trust have found that there has been significant improvement.

The HSC in Northern Ireland is therefore very clearly focused on continuous improvement of the quality of care provided by our emergency departments.

TYC continues to guide the reform of health and social care service delivery. I believe that this will ensure services are structured and delivered in a safe and sustainable manner making best use of all resources available to us.

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Ministerial Group on Public Health.

(AQO 8376/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: 'Making Life Better', the Executive's overarching strategic framework for public health was published in June 2014. Since its publication, work has been taken forward to put in place the cross- departmental and cross – sectoral governance and implementation arrangements, as described in the framework.

As part of these structures Ministers agreed to the establishment of a Ministerial Committee for Public Health to provide strategic leadership and ensure coherence with other key strategic programmes and structures. I will chair the group.

The first meeting of the Ministerial Committee for Public Health is due to take place on Thursday 11th June 2015. The Terms of Reference will be discussed and agreed at this inaugural meeting.

Department of Justice

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the introduction of the composite fee in legal aid; and to outline the reasons for the introduction of this fee.

(AQW 46103/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): A key principle behind composite fees are that they provide an appropriate methodology for remunerating legally-aided work, which is administratively straightforward for both the lawyers and the Legal Services Agency. This is an important aspect in light of the 90,000 plus legal aid transactions each year. The composite fee structure is also capable of reflecting varying levels of complexity.

The initial composite fee structure was introduced prior to devolution, so I cannot comment on the original rationale. However, where they have been introduced these have demonstrated their utility and I am currently making arrangements to adopt this approach to other areas of legally-aided work.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, for a breakdown of costs for the failed prosecution case in relation to allegations by Mairia Cahill and associated persons, shown per year for each year the case was within the court system.

(AQW 46202/11-15)

Mr Ford: The estimated costs of the cases related to the allegations made by Mairia Cahill and associated persons are given in the table below:

Cost Type	2011	2012	2013	2014	Total
Legal Aid 1	£2,896	-	£12,652	£60,324	£75,872
Prosecution 2	-	-	-	£30,207	£30,207
Court 3	-	-	-	£4,311	£4,311
Total	£2,896	-	£12,652	£94,842	£110,390

- 1 Fees in relation to Magistrates' Courts proceedings have been assessed in accordance with The Magistrates' Courts and County Court Appeals (Criminal Legal Aid) (Costs) Rules (Northern Ireland) 2009. Fees in relation to the Crown Court proceedings have been assessed in accordance with The Legal Aid for Crown Court Proceedings (Costs) Rules (Northern Ireland) 2005 as amended by the 2011 Rules.
- 2 In the absence of detailed records of time spent on individual cases it is not possible to produce precise or average costs for a particular case. Some costs are identifiable however, for example the fees paid to prosecuting counsel and expenses paid to witnesses and expert witnesses. It is not possible to breakdown costs per year as counsel were paid the majority of fees at the end of the proceedings,
- 3 The estimated court cost include judicial and staff salaries and the cost of facilities. It is not possible to accurately breakdown the estimated costs per year.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, given Eamon Coyle's Category 3 high risk violent offender status, to detail (i) what monitoring was put in place following his release from a custodial sentence on 1 May 2015; and (ii) state which agencies were involved, clarifying the lead agency.

(AQW 46254/11-15)

Mr Ford: The assessment of dangerousness under the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008 is for a court alone to consider at the point of sentencing. Determining the restrictions that should be placed on an individual who is on bail pending trial is a matter for the judge setting the bail conditions.

All Category 3 offenders are jointly risk managed, in accordance with established practice under the public protection arrangements, by the co-located Public Protection Team representatives from agencies listed in section 49 of the 2008 Order. Whilst he was in the community, PSNI acted as Mr Coyle's lead designated risk manager but since his remand into custody on other matters this role is undertaken in liaison with the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the progress on the removal of all interface barriers by 2023.
(AQW 46262/11-15)

Mr Ford: My Department continues to work with other relevant Departments, key statutory agencies, community representatives and local residents to reduce the number of interface structures and deliver meaningful change for communities living nearby.

A bid for the interface programme has been made to the Together: Building a United Community programme fund in the June Monitoring Round. If funding is received, it will be divided between my Department, the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and Belfast City Council, with the aim of delivering physical change projects.

The delivery of these projects is reliant on community support, which remains a key challenge. A survey measuring attitudes to peace walls has just been completed and I hope to publish the results by the end of the summer. That survey will inform us of the opinions of those individuals who reside adjacent to those structures and provide a comparison to the previous survey in 2012. However, from our engagement with local communities, it is clear that change will be incremental in nature and will require a cross departmental approach.

In addition, research is being carried out by the Ulster University, which will be completed by the autumn, and will, I believe, support the development of policy and practice around the removal of peace walls.

The overall number of Department of Justice structures has been reduced from 59 to 52, with parts of three further structures removed. A number of further interventions are planned, subject to available funding and positive community consultation.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Justice whether age discrimination legislation was taken into consideration when drawing up the Northern Ireland Prison Service Voluntary Redundancy Scheme for prison officers; and to provide an explanation as to why years of service within the Northern Ireland Prison Service was not used as an alternative eligibility criteria.
(AQW 46282/11-15)

Mr Ford: The terms of the VER Scheme were predicated on the statutory Civil Service Compensation Scheme rules in place at that time. Early retirement only applied to those staff over the age of 50. The terms of the scheme were considered justified as a proportionate means of achieving a legitimate aim. Furthermore, it was voluntary.

Using length of service as a criterion for determining eligibility could have been viewed as indirect discrimination.

The VER Scheme closed on 31 May 2014.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the Northern Ireland Prison Service Voluntary Redundancy Scheme, to detail the number of officers within the Northern Ireland Prison Service who successfully availed of the scheme and their average years of service broken down by (i) 1-5 years; (ii) 6-10 years; (iii) 11-15 years; (iv) 16-20 years; and (v) over 20 years.
(AQW 46283/11-15)

Mr Ford: 520 staff availed of the Voluntary Early Retirement (VER) Scheme. The breakdown of years of service at the date of the launch of the VER Scheme on 8 November 2011 is set out in the table below.

Years of Service	Number of Leavers
1 - 5	2
6 - 10	1
11 - 15	34
16 - 20	36
21+	447
Total	520

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, given Eamon Coyle's Category 3 high risk violent offender status, has there been a dangerous definition as determined by the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008; and (i) if not, will this now be sought; and (ii) if so, what additional monitoring was put in place to prevent further offending.
(AQW 46315/11-15)

Mr Ford: The assessment of dangerousness under the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008 is for a court alone to consider at the point of sentencing. Determining the restrictions that should be placed on an individual who is on bail pending trial is a matter for the judge setting the bail conditions.

All Category 3 offenders are jointly risk managed, in accordance with established practice under the public protection arrangements, by the co-located Public Protection Team representatives from agencies listed in section 49 of the 2008 Order. Whilst he was in the community, PSNI acted as Mr Coyle's lead designated risk manager but since his remand into custody on other matters this role is undertaken in liaison with the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice whether his Department has a strategy in place to tackle the issue of legal highs. (AQW 46320/11-15)

Mr Ford: Whilst no individual Departmental strategy is in place on the specific issue of new psychoactive substances (NPS), my Department is a key contributor to the Executive's New Strategic Direction (NSD) on Alcohol and Drugs (Phase 2) led by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety.

This framework for reducing substance related harm clearly identifies NPS as an issue of emerging concern and includes a number of key outcomes around the scale of the issue and to raise awareness of the dangers of these products with the aim of preventing their misuse.

Action continues to be taken at both a strategic level and at a local level. At a strategic level the Organised Crime Task Force Sub Group on Drugs continues to provide a key mechanism for partnership working to tackle these substances. My Department continues to encourage and support the actions of District Councils as they utilise existing legislation, such as the General Product Safety Regulations 2005, to remove these products from sale at a local level. In particular, the recent successful prosecutions by Belfast City Council, with the support of the Attorney General for Northern Ireland, have been an example to councils across the United Kingdom.

NSD also outlines the commitment to work with colleagues across the UK jurisdictions in relation to the legal status of these products in order to prevent harm. Whilst this is a reserved matter, I have corresponded with Home Office Ministers and the Home Secretary to express the need for legislative change to restrict the availability of these substances. Consequently, I welcome the inclusion in the Queen's Speech of the Government's intention to bring forward measures to ban NPS.

Officials from the Home Office are currently working with officials across all of the devolved administrations in order to ensure that the provisions of any future Bill reflect their particular legislative circumstances.

My Department will continue to work in partnership with the Home Office, the Executive and other key stakeholders, in order to respond to the challenges presented by the emergence of these dangerous substances.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Justice to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by his Department in Foyle in 2013/14; and the cost of each project. (AQW 46336/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice, including its agencies but not its arm's-length bodies, did not undertake any capital infrastructure projects in Foyle in 2013-14.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the latest remand in custody of Eamon Coyle, what action is to be taken in light of his reported physical treatment of a custody officer who accompanied him in the dock at Omagh Magistrates Court on 17 May 2015. (AQW 46340/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Prison Service has investigated the matter and has determined that no further action is necessary.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Justice what steps he is taking to work collaboratively with his Executive colleagues to prevent, and respond to, female genital mutilation. (AQW 46376/11-15)

Mr Ford: The joint DOJ and DHSSPS strategy Stopping Domestic and Sexual Violence and Abuse in Northern Ireland is currently being developed; this strategy recognises that domestic violence and abuse can manifest itself through the perpetration of unlawful activities and practices such as female genital mutilation.

My Department has also been involved from the early stages in assisting in developing Multi-Agency Practice Guidelines on Female Genital Mutilation which were published in July by the Department of Finance and Personnel. These guidelines have been circulated to raise awareness of Female Genital Mutilation with agencies and stakeholders linked to the Justice system such as Policing and Community Safety Partnerships, Human Trafficking Support Service providers and Public Prosecutors.

Female Genital Mutilation is a serious crime and I fully support the need to tackle violence against women and girls. When such crimes happen the Criminal Justice system will hold perpetrators to account for their actions.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether the charges relating to case 14/125578 against Jonathan Turley are alleged to have been committed during a period of leave from custody, or whilst on licence after a completed sentence.
(AQW 46391/11-15)

Mr Ford: Jonathan Turley was remanded into custody for offences that are alleged to have been committed between 20 November and 10 December 2014.

Mr Turley had previously been released time served in March 2014. He was not on a period of leave or under licence conditions prior to committing his current offences.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) how much land is owned by his Department or the Policing Board at Desertcreat, Cookstown; (ii) how the land has been developed to date; and (iii) the amount spent to date in preparation for the Community Safety College, detailing the cost of the land separately.
(AQW 46410/11-15)

Mr Ford: The land at Desertcreat is owned by the Northern Ireland Policing Board and is approximately 98.6 hectares (244 acres) in area. It has not been developed to date, although there was some preparatory work undertaken which included, for example, archaeological excavations and backfilling of same, tree removal and newt re-location. The land remains in agricultural use through a short-term, publicly-procured, agricultural lease agreement. The total spend on the project to 31 March 2015 was £9.775m, excluding the original site purchase of £2.85m.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45703/11-15, for a breakdown of the total cost in Legal Aid in the combined instances of this challenge prior to moving to the European Court of Human Rights or to the point where jurisdictional funding ceased.
(AQW 46420/11-15)

Mr Ford: Article 24 of the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (NI) Order 1981 precludes the release of information in relation to specific persons seeking or receiving legal aid for civil cases.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, in relation to the latest remand in custody of Eamon Coyle, given his Category 3 high risk violent offender status, whether he was released from custody on 1 May 2015 to reside with or permitted association with Ryan Lynch, his co-accused in the latest incident; and if so, why this was permitted in light of the latter's criminal record.
(AQW 46423/11-15)

Mr Ford: The assessment of dangerousness under the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008 is for a court alone to consider at the point of sentencing. Determining the restrictions that should be placed on an individual who is on bail pending trial is a matter for the judge setting the bail conditions.

All Category 3 offenders are jointly risk managed, in accordance with established practice under the public protection arrangements, by the co-located Public Protection Team representatives from agencies listed in section 49 of the 2008 Order. Whilst he was in the community, PSNI acted as Mr Coyle's lead designated risk manager but since his remand into custody on other matters this role is undertaken in liaison with the Northern Ireland Prison Service.

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Justice whether he or his Department has had any discussions with their counterparts in Ireland and the other UK regions to limit the sale of psychoactive substances locally.
(AQW 46476/11-15)

Mr Ford: The impact of the Criminal Justice (Psychoactive Substances) Act 2010 was discussed during the most recent trilateral meeting held in Dublin, which I attended together with my Irish and Scottish counterparts.

Prior to this meeting in February 2015, I had written to the Home Secretary and the Minister for Crime Prevention stressing the need for improved legislation to assist with the efforts in tackling the impact of these substances within our communities.

In addition, my officials, with the assistance of the PSNI, have also discussed the impact of legislation in place in the Republic of Ireland to tackle these substances.

The Home Office's Psychoactive Substances Bill, which aims to disrupt the production, distribution, sale and supply of these substances, is now in the House of Lords.

Since the Home Secretary advised me of these legislative proposals, my officials have been in regular discussion with the Home Office on the individual Clauses in the Bill and these detailed discussions continue.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45600/11-15, and given preliminary enquiries are a decision for prosecution in indictable offences or instances of defendant election for trial and mandatory for transfer to crown court, and mixed committals or preliminary investigations are a defence decision, to clarify this response as to the rationale for using preliminary enquiries as a comparator.
(AQW 46488/11-15)

Mr Ford: Previous questions referred to preliminary investigations and mixed committals. The comparator was used to give context, as this was considered to be more relevant than a comparison using criminal cases before the Magistrates' Court that were not committed.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45404/11-15, how many cases involve a previous similar record, broken down by court division.

(AQW 46493/11-15)

Mr Ford: As these cases are currently live within the court system, it would not be appropriate to provide the information requested.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice what is the current prisoner to on-duty staff ratio in each house in Maghaberry Prison.

(AQW 46545/11-15)

Mr Ford: The requested information is detailed for each area of accommodation as below:

Residential Location	Officer to Prisoner Ratio at Unlock on 09-06-15
Bann House	1:16
Braid House	1:16
Erne House	1:15
Foyle House	1:18
Lagan House	1:14
Roe House (Integrated)	1:16
Roe House (Separated)	1:5
Bush House (Integrated)	1:20
Bush House (Separated)	1:5
Shimna House	1:13
Glen House	Not Occupied
Quoile House	1:12
Moyola Unit	1:5
Wilson/Martin House	1:14

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many staff at Maghaberry Prison have worked ten straight days, or more, in the last twelve months.

(AQW 46547/11-15)

Mr Ford: This information cannot be provided without disproportionate costs being incurred, as an examination of each member of staff's record would be required.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many incidents of malicious fire there has been in Maghaberry Prison in the last twelve months; and how many were attended by the Fire and Rescue Service.

(AQW 46548/11-15)

Mr Ford: Maghaberry Prison does not record fires using the terminology 'malicious'.

For the 12 month period, 1 June 2014 to 31 May 2015, 28 fires were recorded as deliberate. The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service attended 17 of these incidents.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice what discussions his Department has had with the Home Office on the contents of any proposed new legislation on legal highs.

(AQW 46551/11-15)

Mr Ford: I had written to previous Home Office Ministers highlighting the need for legislative change to tackle new psychoactive substances and I welcomed the letter on 14 May from the Home Secretary that advised me of the forthcoming publication of a Psychoactive Substances Bill that would apply across the UK.

The Psychoactive Substances Bill aims to prohibit and disrupt the production, distribution, sale and supply of new psychoactive substances (NPS) in the UK.

My officials, alongside those in DHSSPS, have been in regular contact with the Home Office discussing and commenting upon the detailed Clauses included in this Bill.

My Department will continue to work in partnership across the Executive and other key stakeholders, in order to develop and maintain our efforts to remove these substances from our communities.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice how many meetings he has held with (i) the Bar Council; (ii) the Law Society; and (iii) other groups to resolve the current dispute on legal aid rates.

(AQW 46552/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have not met with the Law Society or Bar Council since the current dispute commenced. However I held a number of meetings with them as part of the consultation process and when developing the final proposals for the 2015 Crown Court Rules. I recently met with a delegation from the Young Bar Association to hear their concerns.

My officials continue to meet with representatives of the Bar Council and Law Society on a wide range of legal aid reform issues.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, following the previous breach of release terms, on what date was Paul Hunter Redpath last granted bail; and on what date did he abscond.

(AQW 46574/11-15)

Mr Ford: There is no computer record of Paul Hunter Redpath having been granted bail in Northern Ireland. To review manual records prior to the introduction of the ICOS system in 2006 would incur disproportionate cost.

He last absconded from his approved accommodation in Northern Ireland on 25 July 2009.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice (i) whether all convicted sex offenders resident in Northern Ireland are registered with, or known to, the Public Protection Agency (PPANI); (ii) how many sex offenders are registered with the PPANI; and (iii) whether all the sex offenders registered with the PPANI are subject to monitoring or management arrangements.

(AQW 46575/11-15)

Mr Ford: All convicted sex offenders subject to the notification requirements in Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003, and those who are not notifiable sex offenders but about whom there are current significant concerns, are risk assessed under the public protection arrangements.

The highest risk offenders, assessed as Category 3, are jointly risk managed by a dedicated co-located multi-agency team. Offenders assessed as meeting the Category 2 criteria are risk managed by a lead agency, acting as designated risk manager, liaising regularly with partner agencies responsible for specific risk management plan actions. Individuals whose previous offending or current behaviour presents little evidence they could cause serious harm are assessed as Category 1 offenders. These offenders are primarily risk managed by a single lead agency, acting as designated risk manager, but with multi-agency reviews of their risk management every six months or at an earlier point where any agency raises specific concerns about the individual.

There are currently 1480 offenders convicted of sexual offences within these three categories and all continue to be risk managed in accordance with management plans which takes account of their current assessed risk in regard to public safety.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the functionality of Courts Fund Office; and whether his Department has any plans to reform the Office.

(AQW 46592/11-15)

Mr Ford: I am content that the Court Funds Office (CFO) provides a valuable service to its clients. Nonetheless, the Northern Ireland Courts and Tribunals Service is committed to the modernisation of CFO as part of my Department's reform programme.

There is a programme of work to further enhance governance arrangements; improve operational effectiveness through the introduction of a new IT system; enhance transparency, communication and customer service; put in place a new CFO cost recovery model; and initiate the development of proposals for consultation on legislative reform.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice (i) to provide a copy of the report into the previous investigation carried out into Paul Hunter Redpath's absconding while on bail in 2013; (ii) what changes have been made to the procedures as a result; and (iii) whether these changes remain ineffective.

(AQW 46613/11-15)

Mr Ford: There are no records of Paul Hunter Redpath having absconded while on bail.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 42438/11-15, whether this answer is under review in light of a reported investigation into continued school visits by Prison Service staff after a scheme had closed down.

(AQW 46614/11-15)

Mr Ford: I refer the Member to my previous response in respect of visits to schools by the Northern Ireland Prison Service to promote careers in the service.

I cannot comment on an ongoing investigation.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45703/11-15, where public funding is sourced or obtained for such instances.

(AQW 46615/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Legal Aid Scheme in Northern Ireland does not provide funding for such cases. The European Court of Human Rights has its own Legal Aid Scheme. Applications for funding can be made under that Scheme.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many (i) remand; and (ii) sentenced prisoners are currently unlawfully at large, broken down by prison facility.

(AQW 46626/11-15)

Mr Ford: Currently there are three sentenced prisoners 'Unlawfully at Large' (UAL) from Maghaberry, one from Hydebank Wood and two from Magilligan. Those remand prisoners who have been permitted leave by the courts and fail to return are not listed as UAL.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice on how many occasions has Paul Hunter Redpath (i) absconded whilst on bail or temporary release; and (ii) breached bail terms; and to detail the adjudications and penalties in respect of each incident.

(AQW 46686/11-15)

Mr Ford: There is no record of Paul Hunter Redpath absconding whilst on bail or temporary release while resident in Northern Ireland.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice whether public protections arrangements and monitoring remain in place on Eamon Foley.

(AQW 46764/11-15)

Mr Ford: Mr Foley continues to be risk managed under the public protection arrangements in accordance with his risk management plan.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice how many (i) remand; and (ii) sentenced prisoners were unlawfully at large during the 2014 calendar year or the 2014/15 financial year, broken down by prison facility.

(AQW 46767/11-15)

Mr Ford: There were 10 prisoners 'Unlawfully at Large' (UAL) from Maghaberry, one from Hydebank Wood and 10 from Magilligan during the 2014 calendar year. Those remand prisoners who have been permitted leave by the courts and fail to return are not listed as UAL.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the review of The Law on Unduly Lenient Sentences.

(AQW 46842/11-15)

Mr Ford: I published a consultation document on the Law on Unduly Lenient Sentences on 6 February 2015. After allowing some additional time for important responses, the consultation closed on 15 May 2015. My officials are currently analysing the responses received. A summary of those responses and my proposed way forward will be prepared for publication and consideration by the Justice Committee after the summer recess.

Department for Regional Development

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the policy by which kerbs can be dropped to allow people with limited mobility to traverse from their home to a car.

(AQW 46197/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): Blue Badge Holders, who have had an application for an accessible parking bay outside or near to their home approved, can also request a dropped kerb. The request will be considered where the applicant is dependent upon the use of a wheelchair and there are no other dropped kerbs in the vicinity or, exceptionally, where an applicant, who is not dependent on the use of a wheelchair, can provide evidence of severe mobility difficulties.

Beyond this, dropped kerbs or graded pedestrian accesses will generally only be provided in response to requests from individuals after an assessment of the level of provision in the general vicinity has been undertaken and where it is considered that a number of people would benefit from such provision.

More comprehensive details of my Department's approach to providing dropped kerbs can be found by accessing our 'Provision of Dropped Kerb' policy document via the following link

<http://www.drdni.gov.uk/rsppg-e043-provision-of-dropped-kerbs.pdf>

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister for Regional Development when the A21 Ballygowan Road Link, known locally as the Comber Bypass Phase 3 will commence.

(AQW 46200/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Ballygowan Road link is among a number of projects that my Department would consider for inclusion in a long term forward planning programme.

The funding currently available for this type of work is fully committed to a programme of major improvements to Northern Ireland's strategic road network.

Given the uncertainty about future funding levels, I am currently unable to indicate when the Ballygowan Link Road might be included in a future works programme.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development what plans he has to consult with older people and people with disabilities to highlight barriers to using public transport in respect of developing the Accessible Transport Strategy 2015-2025.

(AQW 46215/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Since November 2014, my Department has engaged extensively with older people and people with disabilities and the organisations that represent them, to identify the issues to be addressed in the Accessible Transport Strategy 2025. My officials have also taken advice from the Inclusive Mobility Transport Advisory Committee (IMTAC) on the priorities for the new Strategy and the indicators by which progress should be measured.

My Department has also worked closely with IMTAC in commissioning and carrying out a survey of the attitudes of disabled and older people to public transport. The results of this survey were published in April 2015.

The next stage in development of the Strategy will be a public consultation to be held over the coming months. This will provide a further opportunity for older people and people with disabilities to comment.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the Accessible Transport Strategy 2015-2025.

(AQW 46216/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is preparing a draft Accessible Transport Strategy 2025 for public consultation in the coming months.

A pre-consultation stage has involved engagement with focus groups comprising older and disabled people and their representative bodies to determine key issues of concern. Also, my Department has undertaken a survey of the attitudes of disabled and older people to public transport, in conjunction with the Inclusive Mobility Transport Advisory Committee (IMTAC). The results of this survey were published in April 2015.

An Inter Departmental Steering Group has met to provide advice on how the policies, strategies and initiatives of other Departments will impact on accessible travel and transport in the future.

In developing a draft Strategy for public consultation, my officials are consulting IMTAC as a source of advice on the issues to be addressed.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development when the Accessible Transport Strategy 2015-2025 will be published.

(AQW 46217/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department plans to publish the agreed Accessible Transport Strategy 2025 by the end of 2015. This date is dependent upon responses received from the public consultation phase and agreement with other Departments on any elements of the Strategy which are cross cutting.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail his Department's capital investment in roads, broken down by division, over the last 5 years.

(AQW 46244/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of my Department's capital investment in roads over the last 5 years, broken down by TransportNI Division, are provided in the table below:

	2010-2011	2011-2012	2012-2013	2013-2014	2014-2015

My Department's capital expenditure is prioritised on a country-wide basis, taking account of a broad range of criteria such as strategic planning policy, traffic flows, number of accidents, potential travel save times, environmental impact and value for money.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the level of current funding, including European funding, allocated to (i) Strangford Ferry; (ii) Rathlin Ferry; and (iii) Foyle Ferry.

(AQW 46245/11-15)

Mr Kennedy:

(i) Strangford Ferry

The Strangford Lough Ferry Service is operated by my Department, with specialist marine work undertaken through external contractors. The current level of funding allocated to the delivery of the service in 2015/16 is £1,177K, which comprises Staff Wages £823K; Operation and Maintenance £560K; Capital works to the Harbour & Ferry £605K; and a Fare Income target of - £811K. There has been no European funding allocated to the service.

(i) Rathlin Ferry

My Department currently has a 2 year contract in place with Rathlin Island Ferries Limited to provide the ferry services, with options to extend by 6 month periods up to a maximum of 5 years. The budget, excluding VAT, for the initial contract period up to 30 June 2016 is £1,400,000. There has been no European funding applied for in respect of this contract.

My Department is currently taking forward two ferry replacement projects for both Rathlin and Strangford and associated harbour improvements. For 2015/16 a capital budget of £4.3m has been allocated for the new Strangford Ferry and £2.8m for the new Rathlin Ferry.

(ii) Foyle Ferry

My Department does not have any operational or financial obligations in relation to this service.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the journey time by train between Derry and Belfast in (i) 1955; and (ii) 2015.

(AQW 46246/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that NI Railways do not have records of 1955 timetables. It does however have access to the 1948 and 1967 timetables.

A direct comparison between those years and the present day service is not possible as in both 1948 and 1967, Londonderry line trains terminated at, and started from the old York Road station, whereas currently they terminate at and start from Great Victoria Street station and there are more intermediate stops on the current service.

However, the equivalent running time for today's train service from York Road Station is 2 hours 1 minute, albeit with 9 intermediate stops. This compares with 1948 when it was 2 hours 15 minutes, with only 5 intermediate stops, and 2 hours 5 minutes in 1967, with 6 intermediate stops.

The current running time from Great Victoria Street station to Londonderry, with 12 intermediate stops, is 2 hours 15 minutes.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the number of cars operated by Translink; (ii) the make, model and year of each; and (iii) the cost and reasons for operating the cars.

(AQW 46247/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that:

- i It operates 40 company cars.
- ii. The make and model of those cars are detailed below, they are retained for 4 years or 100,000 miles, whichever comes first and there are 2 options available dependent on the position held in the Company.

Option 1: Skoda Octavia Elegance Saloon, Skoda Octavia SE Estate, Ford Focus and Volkswagen Golf.

The relevant positions applicable to Option 1 are Service Delivery Managers and Depot Engineers.

Option 2: Skoda Superb, Volvo S40, Volvo V50, Volkswagen Passat, Vauxhall Insignia, Ford Mondeo, Toyota Prius.

The relevant positions applicable to Option 2 are mainly Senior Operational Managers.

- iii. The fuel costs for 2013-14 were £126,284k and the leasing and maintenance costs totalled approximately £155,000 per annum.

Company cars are used for operational purposes linked to supporting engineering and operations across over 50 Translink sites throughout the province, as well as infrastructure assets such as structures, culverts, signalling, etc. Company car usage is connected to on-call arrangements and is also linked to business continuity and emergency planning.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the number of oil spills on roads in the last 5 years; and (ii) the cost of the clean ups.

(AQW 46248/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My officials have advised that the information requested is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost, and have provided details on the steps that are taken to address oil spills on roads.

TransportNI deals with oil spills, which includes road traffic accident collision site clean ups, on a reactive basis. When TransportNI receives a report of an oil spill during office hours, an inspector is sent to investigate and establish the nature and extent of the problem. If remedial work is considered necessary, a works squad is sent to the location and places signs warning drivers of the potential slippery road conditions. It will then initiate action to contain the oil, to prevent it entering any adjacent drains or watercourses, and appropriate treatment such as sand, oil absorbent granules or oil dispersing agents will then be applied to the affected area of road surface.

In other situations where treatment is requested by the PSNI, following a road traffic accident or if an emergency call is received out of office hours, a works squad is sent directly to the location and treats the affected road surface in the same manner as previously described.

If the oil spill is very large, a multi-organisational approach may be required. In such instances, the emergency services and/or the Northern Ireland Environment Agency will undertake the clean-up operation, with TransportNI providing assistance as required.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45620/11-15, whether it is standard procedure not to involve the Departmental Solicitor's Office in normal operational matters for Translink in respect of tenders and contracts, and if so in how many other matters has there been no involvement of the Departmental Solicitor's Office with regards to (i) Translink and (ii) other agencies under his Departmental remit.

(AQW 46269/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It is standard procedure not to involve the Departmental Solicitor's Office in normal procurement matters for Translink as it is a qualified Centre of Procurement Expertise. Translink has access to its own legal advice.

Northern Ireland Water (NIW) has advised it does not instruct the Departmental Solicitor's Office in any legal matter as it uses external lawyers who have been retained on foot of competitive tendering. DRD Water Service would have previously instructed DSO but since 2007 all matters held by DSO have either concluded or been passed back to NIW to conclude.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail every ministerial direction issued by his Department since May 2007 including the (i) date; and (ii) the nature of each.

(AQW 46275/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: There have been seven Ministerial Directions issued by the Minister for Regional Development since May 2007. Details are:

- 1 2 August 2010: The Preservation of Service and Civil Emergency Measures Direction (Relevant Undertaker) Northern Ireland 2010 was made under Article 295 of the Water and Sewerage Services Order 2006. It was made to give the Department assurances that the company had sufficient plans in place should an emergency arise.
- 2 26 October 2010: To instruct that the Northern Ireland Transport Holding Company should not make bonus payments to its Senior Team and subsidiaries.

From 30 December 2010 – 12 January 2011:

- 3 Preserving Services/Mitigating Effects of an Emergency - to give NI Water permission and legal cover to potentially rotate water supplies to the public without any notice.
- 4 23 March 2011: City of Derry Airport - To allow the DRD Accounting Officer to incur additional expenditure.
- 5 12 December 2014: Winter Service and Roads Maintenance – To allow the DRD Accounting Officer to continue to provide essential services relating to winter service, road maintenance and other roads related services as well as to maintain the NIW budget.

- 6 22 January 2015: Release of Value Belfast Harbour – To enforce the Executive decision that additional funding was not to be used to address the pressure from the Release of Value.
- 7 6 May 2015: Phase 2 of the Coleraine to Londonderry Track renewal project – To allow Translink to proceed with the Phase 2 project.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Regional Development if there are any company cars being used by NI Railway staff.
(AQW 46289/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that there are nine allocated company cars used by NI Railways staff.

Mr Moutray asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail how many people have been employed by Translink in administrative and management posts in each of the last four years.
(AQW 46295/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has provided statistics detailing the number of people employed by it, in administrative and management posts, in each of the last four years. These are outlined in the table below:

	As at 01/06/12	As at 01/06/13	As at 01/06/14	As at 01/06/15
Clerical / Admin.	340	355	359	353
Management / Professional / Technical	223	230	240	241

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the travel and subsistence costs incurred by his Department on trips outside Northern Ireland in each year since May 2011, broken down by the costs incurred by (i) the Minister; (ii) special advisers; and (iii) support staff.

(AQW 46298/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The travel and subsistence costs incurred on trips outside Northern Ireland for each of the financial years from May 2011 are as follows:

Travel & Subsistence Costs	Minister £	Special Advisor £	Support Staff £	Total £
2011 /2012	£9,105	£9,360	£19,916	£38,381
2012/2013	£3,170	£1,056	£6,384	£10,610
2013/2014	£8,687	£6,525	£17,566	£32,778
2014/2015	£8,156	£3,499	£8,046	£19,701

Ms McCorley asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45071/11-15, to outline the 53 streets in West Belfast which are unadopted.

(AQW 46302/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Of the 53 unadopted streets in West Belfast referred to in my answer to AQW 45071/11-15, Springfield Heights (2/ZN/2010/0023/01) has since been adopted into the Public Road network.

Details of the remaining 52 unadopted streets are provided in the following table:

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by his Department in Foyle in 2013/14; and the cost of each project.

(AQW 46335/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The table below gives the detail of capital infrastructure expenditure in the Foyle area for 2013-14. The Department records expenditure on a District Council basis, the parliamentary constituency of Foyle is largely made up of the wards of Derry City Council; however some wards fall into the East Londonderry Parliamentary Constituency. The table below gives the best estimate of expenditure in the Foyle area.

Enhanced detail of where works have been completed by Transport NI are identified in Council bi-annual reports, the Spring 2014 Report to Derry City Council is the relevant report for this AQW http://www.drdni.gov.uk/dr1_14_222547__final_pdf_derry_city_council_report_spring_2014.pdf

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45294/11-14, given there was no on-street rank for public hire taxis and it is the responsibility for his Department to provide such ranks, why was this not considered a priority in the business plan.

(AQW 46342/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that the Business Case submitted at the time (2002/03) catered for a wider traffic management system at Central Station which included the car park itself, the bus way and taxi rank.

Translink has advised that prior to this service being contracted, the situation with regard to taxi provision was a 'free for all', with all the related friction that this situation implies. As part of the upgrade of Central Station, a business opportunity arose to tender this service to competing taxi firms. It remains Translink's view that it is best to tender the service to the highest bidder and all proceeds arising from the contract are used to subsidise public transport services.

TransportNI (formally Roads Service) duly developed the public taxi facilities which currently exist in the vicinity of Mays Meadows which is adequate to facilitate safe drop off / pick up at Central Station by public hire taxis.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development why the Dundonald park and ride terminal was closed after six months given £310,000 was spent on the facility.

(AQW 46383/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is facing a £60 million Resource budgetary pressure for 2015/16, more than half of which will fall to TransportNI. The funding that is currently available is only sufficient to cover the fixed costs, such as PPP payments and staff costs, energy bills for street lighting and traffic signals and statutory inspections and testing of street lighting installations.

My Department has therefore had no option but to make savings wherever they can be found. Unfortunately this includes suspending the security and guarding arrangements at four park and ride sites, namely Black's Road, Sprucefield, Cairnshill and Dundonald.

This situation was not foreseen when Dundonald Park & Ride was being developed and, should additional funding become available, I plan to review the situation.

I can assure you I remain committed to developing and improving the provision of park and ride facilities across Northern Ireland.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45642/11-15, to detail (i) the number of successful compensation claims resulting from roads with unsatisfactory reinstatements; and (ii) the sums paid.

(AQW 46407/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department does not hold the information in the format requested.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45182/11-15, whether people who have pre-booked an alternative private hire taxi as opposed to the non-contracted on-site private firm and wish to be picked up at the lower door cannot use the shortest route which would be via the exclusive rank; and if so, whether he has considered the impact on drivers and passengers, particularly people with mobility issues.

(AQW 46422/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised that private hire taxis, other than those operated by the contracted company, predominately pick up their pre-booked passengers at the May's Meadow entrance to the station building where lift access to and from the main entrance / concourse is readily available for those with mobility issues.

Any taxi, whether public or private hire, may avail of the bespoke set-down area within the car park at Central Station, or indeed the specifically designated disabled parking spaces. The car park operates a policy of providing free parking for the first 20 minutes, which facilitates those simply dropping passengers off but not intending a lengthy stay.

The drop-off and disabled parking areas are adjacent to the pedestrian exit from the car park, immediately across from the May's Meadow entrance to the station.

Ms McCorley asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on maintenance quarterly work (i) carried out in Belfast detailing the area and type of work; (ii) scheduled to take place in Belfast in the next twelve months, providing a timeline of proposed work and the area.

(AQW 46472/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is facing a £60 million resource budget pressure in 2015/16, more than half of which will fall to TransportNI.

This budget pressure has created an immediate impact on the delivery of routine maintenance services, and, as such, I have had no option other than to agree a skeleton service at some financial risk to my Department, until June monitoring is completed.

There is insufficient funding currently available to fully engage the external contractors who normally carry out the majority of the routine maintenance activities in the Belfast area. However, a reduced level of service is being provided by my Department's internal workforce with some work being undertaken by external contractors.

To date, maintenance work has been restricted to:

- the repair of higher priority potholes;
- the provision of one grass cut across all areas with only safety related cutting, such as sightlines, thereafter;
- safety related renewal of road markings;
- responsive cleaning of gullies only, with the exception of those in areas prone to flooding; and
- the repair of primarily hazardous street lighting defects.

In addition, street lighting night scouting by contractors has ceased.

I will, however, be making a strong bid for resource funding in June monitoring when the situation will be reviewed and hopefully routine maintenance services can be restored to normal levels. I hope the Member will support my Department's bid.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the TransportNI skeletal service is being applied evenly across the region.

(AQW 46474/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can confirm that the skeleton service currently being operated by my Department is generally being applied consistently across all areas.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Regional Development what actions his Department has taken to identify opportunities for better integration and joined up service delivery to improve public transport provision and the more efficient use of resources.

(AQW 46485/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Following the running of a successful pilot project in the Dungannon area, a number of options have been developed in consultation with key stakeholders for the wider integration of public passenger transport in Northern Ireland. The options for change provide a more effective and sustainable way of meeting the diverse range of user needs over the longer term, and are currently being evaluated as part of an economic appraisal. They all involve changes to the way in which services are designed and delivered at present, and necessitate the more flexible use of resources across all operators including Translink, the Education Authority, the Health and Social Care Trusts and the specialist rural and disabled transport services funded by the Department for Regional Development. It will be necessary to reach agreement with the Department of Education and the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety on the preferred option and how best to take forward the proposals.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the change in the number of fixed penalty notices issued in respect of pay and display car park infringements, between 2004 and 2014.

(AQW 46522/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department has never been responsible for issuing fixed penalty notices, which are issued by the PSNI. Since decriminalised parking enforcement was introduced in October 2006, my Department has only issued Penalty Charge Notices (PCNs). There are no records for penalties issued prior to this date.

Details of the number of PCNs issued within all charged car parks in Northern Ireland, between October 2006 and December 2014, are shown in the table below:

Year	2006 (from Oct.)	2007	2008	2009	2010	2011	2012	2013	2014 (to Dec.)
Number of PCNs Issued	1,828	34,819	30,888	30,618	26,634	33,530	33,195	38,159	35,936

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the Millisle Pumping Station.
(AQW 46549/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: NI Water is currently progressing a £2.2 million capital project to upgrade the sewerage system in Millisle in order to reduce the risk of out-of-sewer flooding within the area and to deliver improved bathing waters.

There had been a delay in the construction of the new pumping station in Millisle due to legal negotiations and the site purchasing process taking longer than expected. NI Water has now acquired the land needed for the scheme. The contract for construction was awarded to BSG Civil Engineering Ltd in March 2015, and a public information event was held on 23 April 2015.

The contractor is carrying out preliminary activities including accommodation works to facilitate church car parking for the duration of the contract. Design revisions have been submitted and it is envisaged that full mobilisation on site will be in late June - early July 2015, with a planned completion date of Summer 2016.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Regional Development when he expects the provision of bicycle racks on trains will be feasible.
(AQW 46577/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that bicycle racks are not considered necessary or practicable on NIR trains.

NI Railways' trains can accommodate bikes standing on the floor. Hanging bikes up on racks on trains can be much more arduous for customers than simply wheeling them into position. Furthermore, bikes hanging on racks actually take up more floor space than bikes standing on the floor.

Currently the Class 3000 trains have capacity for 4 bicycles, and the newer Class 4000 trains have double this capacity and can accommodate 8 bicycles.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 8250/11-15, whether permitting bicycles on trains would allow for connecting segments of a journey to be cycled; and why the decision to allow bicycles on trains is left to the discretion of the conductor in the absence of corresponding guidelines.
(AQW 46578/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that the policy on carriage of bikes on trains was discussed and agreed with Sustrans prior to implementation in 2005.

Bikes can be carried on trains after 09:30 hours, up to 4 bicycles on the Class 3000 trains or 8 on the Class 4000 trains.

Prior to 09:30 hours bikes will not normally be carried because virtually all trains are filled to standing capacity with passengers.

On lightly loaded services, e.g. outwards from Belfast prior to 09:30 hours the Conductor can exercise discretion and bikes will normally be accommodated.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Regional Development whether there are restrictions in place for large items of luggage on trains during peak travelling times, given the current restrictions on bicycles on trains during peak times.
(AQW 46580/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Translink has advised me that there are no restrictions in place for the carriage of large items of luggage at any time because there is no perceived need for such restrictions.

The size of large items of luggage and the frequency with which they are carried is not considered sufficient to impact on the capacity available for passengers, whereas the size and frequency of carriage of bikes before 09:30 hours would certainly impact on the capacity available to passengers.

Trains are fitted with luggage racks overhead for smaller items and space is also provided between/under seats and in the case of the Enterprise also at the end of the carriages.

Mr Dunne asked the Minister for Regional Development whether he will take action to cut the grass on the central reservations on the A2 Bangor to Belfast Dual Carriageway, as motorists are at risk crossing the central reservations with restricted sightlines resulting from the overgrown grass.
(AQW 46628/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is facing a £60 million Resource budget shortfall in 2015/16, more than half of which has fallen to TransportNI. This budget pressure has created an immediate impact on the delivery of routine maintenance services right across Northern Ireland, including Ards and North Down.

The budget allocation currently available to TransportNI is only sufficient to cover its fixed costs and, since 1 April 2015, there has been no funding available to engage external contractors to carry out routine maintenance activities, including grass cutting.

With regard to the grass cutting on the A2 Bangor to Belfast Road, I can confirm that grass cutting operations by TransportNI's internal contractor are due to commence during the week beginning 8 June 2015 and are expected to be completed by the 5 July 2015, subject to favourable weather conditions.

I understand that, at a recent meeting with my officials on the 5 June 2015, you were updated of progress in relation to grass cutting within Ards and North Down Council area.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the £60 million pressures his Department faces for its 2015/16 budget.

(AQW 46647/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: It has been put forward in the 2015-16 Budget Document that the reduction to my Department's budget is only 0.6 percent. This is a figure that has been arrived at through the restating of baselines and presentation of figure work which hides the true funding impact on my Department's budget for 2015-16. My Department's budget has had cuts of £50million applied. This together with the £15million gap (£13million due to a DFP rates revaluation) between NI Water's requirement as per the Utility Regulator's Final determination and their existing budget resulted in total pressures of £65million. An additional £5 million was allocated to my Department by the Executive between the Draft and Final Budget. Thus the true pressure on my Department's budget is now £60.5 million.

The detail of these pressures by business area is shown below.

Pressures Across each Business area

	Final Budget £m
NI Water	5.0
Translink	13.0
Transport NI	38.5
Other Areas including Rural and Community Transport	4.0
Total Pressures	60.5

NI Water

At the draft budget stage, NI Water (NIW) had a pressure of £15 million, largely as a result of a massive rates revaluation. At that level of funding the company would not be able to meet its legal and licence obligations. To avoid this, money has been moved from Transport NI to reduce the shortfall to £5 million. Work is ongoing to assess changes to outputs required of NI Water because funding is not at the level required by the Regulator, but, NIW will be able to deliver a basic level of service.

Translink

Translink will record significant losses this year as a result of reduced funding from my Department. Some additional funding in the Final Budget has been allocated to safeguard key town services but there remains a need for Translink to make efficiencies in administration and overhead costs, to review the frequency of some services and reduce its workforce. The Company is currently in discussion with their unions in regard to these issues.

TransportNI

As a consequence of addressing pressures in NI Water, further reductions are required from TransportNI. The TransportNI budget has limited room for flexibility as a result of two long term PPP arrangements and other contractual and staff related costs. As a consequence, TransportNI has only some £13m to cover all remaining activities. These include street lighting and traffic signal energy, funding for external contractors including those who normally repair traffic signals and street lights, supplies including patching materials and salt, fleet maintenance and fuel.

The annual cost of street lighting and traffic signal energy alone is over £11 million. A further £2 million is required to meet legal obligations associated with the inspection and testing of street lighting installations.

As a result, I am unable to utilise external contractors to carry out routine maintenance work and street lighting repairs in 2015-16. However the cessation of these activities would likely have had serious public safety implications and resulted in around 500 industrial staff employed by my Department being largely confined to depots. I considered this position to be totally unacceptable and therefore I have allowed my Department's industrial staff to provide a skeleton routine maintenance service, until the outcome of June monitoring is known.

Other Areas including Rural and Community Transport

In light of the scale of the financial pressures facing my Department, my focus has been on addressing public health and safety issues. A consequence of this has necessitated a reduction in the level of funding available this year to community transport providers. I would reiterate that I, together with my officials, am committed to working with the providers to identify scope for efficiencies or other sources of income to mitigate the impacts.

My Department is also planning reductions of over £3 million in staffing and other administration costs in 2015-16, including savings associated with some 300 staff leaving through the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

To help address the pressures faced by my Department, a number of bids have been put forward in June Monitoring.

Mr G Robinson asked the Minister for Regional Development when weed spraying will take place in Limavady town in 2015. (AQW 46672/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As the Member will be aware, my Department is facing a £60 million Resource budget pressure in 2015/16, more than half of which will fall to TransportNI.

This budget pressure has created an immediate impact on the delivery of routine maintenance services and, as such, I have had no option other than to agree a skeleton service at some financial risk to my Department, until June monitoring.

There is currently insufficient funding available to employ external contractors to carry out weed control across Northern Ireland. Therefore, at present, my Department is unable to undertake weed spraying in Limavady Town.

I will, however, be submitting a bid for additional resource funding in June monitoring so that routine maintenance services can be restored to normal levels and I hope the Member will support my Department's bid.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45620/11-15 and given this is a publicly operated company under his departmental remit, in the absence of Departmental Solicitors Office input what legal advice was sought or obtained; and whether any legal scrutiny was applied in this instance.

(AQW 46769/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: As I stated in AQW 46269/11-15, it is standard procedure not to involve the Departmental Solicitor's Office in normal procurement matters for Translink as it is a qualified Centre of Procurement Expertise. Translink has access to its own legal advice.

Translink has advised that it was not deemed necessary to seek legal advice in relation to this contract.

Mr McCartney asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the fire on the Ulsterbus 212 service on 8 June 2015.

(AQW 46953/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: On 8 June at 17:45 the 212 Belfast to Derry/Londonderry was operating along the M22 in the direction of Toomebridge. The driver noticed smoke coming from the rear of the vehicle and immediately pulled over on to the hard shoulder, stopped the bus and evacuated the passengers. The NI Fire and Rescue Service attended the scene and the fire was extinguished promptly. An initial assessment has indicated extensive fire damage to the rear of the vehicle. It is not known at this stage what caused the fire. However, an investigation and a detailed forensic analysis of the cause of the fire are under way. Further details will be available when this has been completed.

Department for Social Development

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Social Development how many Housing Executive and housing association rental properties have had repair reinstatement and improvement alterations in each of the last three years; and to detail what this represents as a percentage of the total number of properties having work carried out.

(AQW 45639/11-15)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): In relation to Housing Executive properties, the information is not available in the format requested. However, the Housing Executive has provided the following information in the table below.

Year	Total Stock	No. of properties with repairs carried out	%	Planned Maintenance	%
2012/13	88,638	85,997	97%	41,537	47%
2013/14	87,764	85,568	97%	17,826	20%
2014/15	87,037	82,263	95%	30,897	35%

Note: The total stock figures include all NIHE properties (e.g. commercial properties and voids) as opposed to rental properties. In overall stock levels this would represent very low numbers.

Housing Associations have reported the following: -

- 2012/13
work carried out on 23,452 properties, which included repairs reinstatement and improvement alterations on 22,770 properties (97.09%);
- 2013/14
work carried out on 25,396 properties, which included repairs reinstatement and improvement alterations on 24,377 properties (95.99%);
- 2014/15
work carried out on 27,090 properties, which included repairs reinstatement and improvement alterations on 26,436 properties (97.58%).

Mr Agnew asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of decisions to apply a sanction in accordance with articles 21(3) and 21(6) of the Jobseekers (NI) Order 1995 for each month from October 2012 to December 2014, including the reason for, and the duration of, the sanction.

(AQW 46169/11-15)

Mr Storey: The information is not available in the format requested. Data is available for the number of Jobseeker's Allowance sanctions imposed under Articles 21(3) and (6) of the Jobseeker's (NI) Order 1995 for the period 1.04.12 to 31.01.15 but cannot be broken down into a monthly figure or duration of sanction. Sanctions imposed under this legislation are discretionary sanctions, which means that the period of the sanction will be between 1 week and 26 weeks. The Decision Maker determines the length of the sanction based on information provided by the claimant and their employer. For this period, a total of 1634 sanctions were imposed in accordance with this legislation, the attached table provides a breakdown.

Reason for Sanction	1.4.12 – 1.3.13	1.4.13 – 31.3.14	1.4.14 – 31.1.15
Employment terminated due to misconduct	129	121	80
Refusal or failure to apply for or accept employment	177	234	287
An offer of employment was refused	0	1	4
Voluntary unemployment	196	261	144
Total	502	617	515

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the travel and subsistence costs incurred by his Department on trips outside Northern Ireland in each year since May 2011, broken down by the costs incurred by (i) the Minister; (ii) special advisers; and (iii) support staff.

(AQW 46299/11-15)

Mr Storey: The information requested is set out in the following table.

DSD Business Traveller	2011-2012 £	2012-2013 £	2013-2014 £	2014-2015 £
Minister	7,042	3,878	3,338	897
Special Adviser	8,982	1,477	2,890	1,295
Support staff	1,695	9,350	6,472	1,571

Note: Figures have been rounded to the nearest £1.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development what was the perceived community background of the Direct Labour Organisation staff employed under the auspices of the Housing Executive on 31st December 2014.

(AQW 46347/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that at 31 December 2014 the community background of the Direct Labour Organisation staff was as follows:-

- Protestant 206
- Roman Catholic 121
- Not known 23

Mr Allister asked the Minister for Social Development how much his Department has spent on Special Advisers in each year since 2011, broken down by (i) salary; (ii) pension contributions; (iii) expenses; (iv) office costs; and (v) other costs.

(AQW 46357/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Department is subject to the Data Protection Act in the disclosure of remuneration details of civil servants other than in broad terms. The information which is provided below has therefore had regard to Data Protection considerations.

The table below sets out the minimum and maximum of the pay scales for Special Advisers within the Department for Social Development during the period from 1 April 2011 to 31 March 2015.

Salary Range

Year	Minimum	Maximum
2011/12	£57,300	£90,000
2012/13	£57,873	£90,900
2013/14	£58,452	£91,809
2014/15	£59,037	£91,809

- (i) Employer's pension contributions were paid over at a rate of 23½% in the period from 1 April 2011 to 31 March 2014 and at a rate of 26.3% in the period from 1 April 2014 to 31 March 2015.
- (ii) Expenses paid to Special Advisers in the period from 1 April 2011 to 31 March 2015 totalled £2,980.
- (iii) There were no incremental office costs as a result of Special Advisers using existing NICS DFP provided accommodation.
- (iv) Other costs in the period from 1 April 2011 to 31 March 2015 totalled £38,630 and include Employer's National Insurance Contributions, telephony costs, computer charges, stationery, hospitality and office equipment.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Social Development to (i) provide a projected timeframe for when approval for the introduction of the HMO Bill will be granted by the Northern Ireland Executive; and (ii) to indicate when he anticipates the HMO Bill will be brought before the Northern Ireland Assembly.

(AQW 46363/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Office of the Legislative Counsel has now drafted the Bill on the basis of the agreed policy. I will shortly be bringing forward a paper seeking Executive agreement to introduce the Houses in Multiple Occupation Bill in the Assembly. The Bill must pass final stage prior to the dissolution of the Assembly next year. Subject to Assembly process it is my aim to have the Bill completed in this mandate.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister for Social Development to provide a breakdown by council area of (i) how many inspections have taken place; and (ii) how many individual homes have been approved for work since the introduction of the Affordable Warmth Scheme.

(AQW 46364/11-15)

Mr Storey: Since the introduction of the Affordable Warmth Scheme, Housing Executive have carried out a total of 1,713 property inspections and have issued works approvals for 504 homes. The breakdown by council is shown below.

	Inspections	Approvals
Antrim & Newtownabbey Borough Council	95	24

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the processes and procedures for evicting a Housing Executive tenant due to anti-social behaviour.

(AQW 46386/11-15)

Mr Storey: Full details of the Housing Executive's processes and procedures on eviction of a tenant due to anti-social behaviour can be found on their web site at www.nihe.gov.uk; statement of policy and procedures on anti-social behaviour.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister for Social Development how many older people does he estimate will benefit from the new State Pension Scheme in the financial year commencing 1st April 2016.

(AQW 46415/11-15)

Mr Storey: An estimated 11,500 people in Northern Ireland will be eligible for the new State Pension in the 2016 – 17 financial year. Based on Department for Work and Pensions projections, 20 per cent of those reaching State Pension age in 2016 – 2017 (approximately 2,300 in Northern Ireland) will have a better outcome than under the current system had it continued. The median increase is estimated to be £9 per week.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development how many people are in receipt of Independent Living Fund payments in East Londonderry.

(AQW 46447/11-15)

Mr Storey: There are currently 27 service users in receipt of Independent Living Fund payments, in the East Londonderry area.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Social Development to detail every ministerial direction issued by his Department since May 2007 including the (i) date; and (ii) the nature of each.

(AQW 46465/11-15)

Mr Storey: One Ministerial Direction has been issued by the Minister for Social Development since May 2007.

On 4 July 2014 a Ministerial Direction was sought from Minister Nelson McCausland for the provision of transitional funding for the Integrated Services for Children and Young People project in Greater Shankill and West Belfast. This project was cross-cutting, involving contributions from both DHSSPS and DSD and Executive approval was sought. The Minister's Direction required that up to £270k would be made available to the Greater Shankill Partnership and the West Belfast Partnership. Ministers agreed that DSD should provide 75% (£199.5k) and DHSSPS 25% (£66.5k).

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 45683/11-15, for a breakdown of the 566 social housing new builds in Foyle for 2014/15.

(AQW 46536/11-15)

Mr Storey: The following table outlines the breakdown for the 566 social housing new builds in Foyle for 2014/15.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 45868/11-15, to detail (i) when the report will be made available to Members; and (ii) the posts that were downgraded.

(AQW 46616/11-15)

Mr Storey: As I advised in my response to the previous Question, the Review Report is currently at draft stage and is being considered by DSD and NI Courts & Tribunals Service management. As it contains information on internal operational matters, it would not be appropriate to make the Report available to Assembly Members.

In response to the second part of your question the draft report makes no recommendation that any posts be downgraded.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the process by which charities register with the Charities Commission; and the standard timeframe for each application.

(AQW 46812/11-15)

Mr Storey: Charities register with the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland by completing an online application form. Information requested includes key information on the charity and its trustees and how it meets the legal requirements to be a charity.

The standard timeframe for each application is between three and four months.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of charities waiting to be registered with the Northern Ireland Charities Commission.

(AQW 46813/11-15)

Mr Storey: There are currently around 8,800 organisations waiting to be registered with the Charity Commission for Northern Ireland.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Mr Hussey asked the Assembly Commission whether it has issued guidelines in relation to the use of constituency offices; and to detail any available sanctions for breaches of these guidelines.

(AQW 46449/11-15)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): Members may choose to establish and run a constituency office to assist them in carrying out their Assembly Duties. Such an office may or may not be funded under the framework of financial support for Members. If a Member chooses to claim the associated costs of establishing and running a constituency office, such claims are made under the provisions of paragraph 9 of the Northern Ireland Assembly Members' Salaries, Allowances, Expenses and Pensions Determination 2012 (as amended). This Determination is issued by the Independent Financial Review Panel (IFRP) and establishes the level of financial support and the qualifying conditions for that support. A full copy of the Determination may be found on the Independent Financial Review Panel's website at <http://ifrp.org.uk/reports-and-determinations/>

A Member can only recover Office Cost Expenditure that is incurred in connection with carrying out that Member's Assembly duties. To assist Members in applying the financial framework, the Assembly Commission has published a detailed guide on the administrative processes and the appropriate use of resources funded by this financial framework. The Financial Support for Members Handbook is issued to all Members at the start of each mandate was electronically re-issued to all Members in December 2012. The Handbook is also available on the Assembly website at http://www.niassembly.gov.uk/globalassets/documents/your_mlas/financial-support-for-members-handbook.pdf.

The Handbook clearly states that the purpose of OCE is to meet the expenditure that "is wholly, exclusively and necessarily incurred by a Member in carrying out his/her Assembly Duties". Each Member completes a declaration, confirming this, when a claim form is signed, and submitted for payment. Therefore, any constituency office that is used by Members and funded from OCE must only be used for these purposes. Specific advice on constituency office use and associated costs is given in Section 4, Paragraphs 24-28 of the Handbook. Any other office that is not funded from OCE is not subject to these rules. While the Handbook is the main form of guidance for Members, it may be necessary from time to time to contact Members directly by way of a reminder on specific issues or to offer additional advice. By way of example, guidance was recently issued to Members regarding the use of resources during an election campaign.

As detailed in Section 2, paragraph 8 of the Handbook, any potential breaches of rules that may arise from the scrutiny of claims by the Finance Office or by way of internal or external audit reviews, can be referred to the Clerk / Chief Executive who may bring the matter to the attention of the Assembly Commissioner for Standards. In addition, the Finance Office may seek recovery of the cost of any resources that are not used for Assembly purposes.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission to detail the access arrangements in place on 2nd and 3rd June 2015 affecting (i) the roof of Parliament Buildings, (ii) the discrete area where the flag poles are situated, and how and by whom the credentials of those approved to be in these areas were checked for each and every trip to the subject areas.

(AQW 46742/11-15)

Mrs Cochrane (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Assembly Commission appointed a main contractor for the repair and refurbishment of the roof of Parliament Buildings, henceforth known as the Roof Project, and work started on site in May 2014 with completion due in June 2015.

In order to facilitate this work, the entire fourth floor and roof of Parliament Buildings were handed over to the main contractor, who subsequently assumed responsibility for the management of those areas as a construction site.

The process for obtaining security clearance of any contractors involved in work at Parliament Buildings including those involved in the Roof Project, is managed on a daily basis within the Facilities Directorate by Usher Services staff.

All contractors entering Parliament Buildings are first required to produce written evidence that they have undergone appropriate security clearance, and once Usher Services are in receipt of this, a contractor may be granted unrestricted access. Where such clearance is pending, or occasionally to facilitate critical work, restricted access under escort may be granted.

You will have noted that the Speaker has written to all Members and provided an update report on the incident following a meeting of the Assembly Commission on 8 June 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Assembly Commission to detail (i) prior to the flag incidents at Parliament Buildings on both the 2 and 3 June 2015 how many contractors were routinely operating on-site; (ii) following the incidents how many contractors were found not to be authorised to have access to the building; and (iii) how and why was this security breach permitted to occur.

(AQW 46831/11-15)

Mr Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The number of contractor staff present in Parliament Buildings varies dependent upon the nature of ongoing work on any given day. This can also be said of the Roof Project.

Our records show that on Tuesday 2nd June 2015, 54 contractor staff were on site at Parliament Buildings, of whom 49 were involved in the Roof project. Similar figures for Wednesday 3rd June show 50 on site and 44 were involved in the roof project respectively.

No contractors were found to have had unauthorised access to Parliament Buildings on either date.

Following a formal complaint, the PSNI launched an investigation into the incident which is currently ongoing and has not yet concluded.

Following a meeting of the Assembly Commission on 8 June 2015, the Speaker has written to all Members and provided an update report on the incident.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission how a foreign flag came to be flown from Parliament Buildings on 3 June 2015 and what investigations have been concluded.

(AQW 46856/11-15)

Mr Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): On Wednesday 3rd June at around 1.10pm, Northern Ireland Assembly Police Unit reported to Usher Services that two flags were flying from the flagpoles on the roof of Parliament Buildings. The flags were later confirmed to be the Irish National flag and a green-coloured flag with the words "Irish Republic" written on it. Within a few minutes staff from Usher Services had removed the flags.

Acting on behalf of the Commission, senior officials instructed the contractor to provide a report on the incident and to report back. That report was received on 5th June and presented to the Commission at its meeting on 8th June. You will have noted that the Speaker has written to all Members and provided an update report on the incident following a meeting of the Assembly Commission on 8th June (Reference response to AQW46742/11-15).

Following a formal complaint, the PSNI launched an investigation into the incident which is currently ongoing and has not yet concluded.

Written Answers to Questions

Office of the First Minister and deputy First Minister

Mrs D Kelly asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether their Department is showing overspend on their budget for this financial year; and if so, by how much and what has led to this overspend.
(AQW 39675/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness (The First Minister and deputy First Minister): In 2014/15 financial year the Department maintained expenditure within budget and reported an overall outturn of 1.0% below budget.

Mr McKinney asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for a breakdown of all current spend on the implementation of the Dementia Services initiative, as part of the Delivering Social Change programme.
(AQW 44015/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Delivering Social Change Dementia initiative was launched in September 2014, with a budget of £6.25m over three years to 2017.

A Project Manager was appointed on 1 December 2014, and four Project Officers have been recruited. The estimated spend for 2014/15 is £230k, and relates to salary costs for the project team and providing support for carers of people with dementia.

Mr McKinney asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the progress of the Dementia Services Initiative delivered through the Delivering Social Change Programme.
(AQW 44016/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Delivering Social Change Dementia initiative was launched in September 2014, with a budget of £6.25m over three years to 2017.

The aims of this project are to promote greater understanding and awareness of dementia across the whole community; to enhance the quality of services for people with dementia through improved training opportunities for staff; and to develop a range of innovative support services for carers of people with dementia.

A Project Manager was appointed on 1 December 2014, and four Project Officers have been recruited. A Programme Plan was recently approved by the Delivering Social Change Dementia Project Board. Initial work is underway including:

- Initial scoping exercises have been undertaken;
- Focus groups are being established for all three workstreams;
- Engagements meetings have been held to consider the recruitment of dementia navigator posts;
- A logo has been developed (Dementia Together NI), and a newsletter will be issued on a regular basis to provide updates on progress; and
- Work has commenced on the development of an Outcomes Based Accountability Model.

Mrs Overend asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to list their current Special Advisers and the date that each assumed office.
(AQW 44149/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness:

Name	Date of Appointment
Richard Bullick	12 May 2011
Conor Heaney	8 April 2014
Timothy Johnston	12 May 2011
Mark Mullan	15 October 2014

Name	Date of Appointment
Dr Dara O'Hagan	12 May 2011
Emma Pengelly	12 May 2011

Ms Fearon asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, in their coordinating role for the Children and Young People Strategy 2006-2016, are they aware of any steps being taken to repeal the defence of reasonable chastisement to protect children.

(AQO 7833/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We are not aware of any steps being taken to repeal the defence of reasonable chastisement.

Mr Nesbitt asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 42830/11-15, of the six groups that received funding from the Good Relations Funding and Delivery Branch in 2014/15, to detail (i) when each application was received; (ii) when each decision was made; and (iii) when the awards were made.

(AQW 44355/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The table below details: when each application was received; when the initial decision to fund the group was made; and when the initial awards were made (i.e. the dates when the formal Letters of Offer (LoO) were issued). Groups are advised by email or telephone as soon as a funding decision is made.

Project Funding

Group	Application Received	Decision Made Re Funding	Award - Loo Issued
Co-operation Ireland	7/2/14	27/3/14	5/6/14
Cinemagic	10/2/14	25/4/14	25/6/14
Training for Women Network	10/2/14	21/8/14	31/10/14
Lower Ormeau Residents' Association	10/2/14	21/8/14	10/11/14
Annadale Haywood Residents' Association	10/2/14	10/2/15	6/3/15

Small Grant Funding

Group	Application Received	Decision Made Re Funding	Award - Loo Issued
Sandy Row Residents' Association	10/2/14	30/6/14	8/7/14

It should be noted that the application process for small grant funding remains open throughout the year and that some project funding was allocated to groups in phases as funding became available in year.

Mr Lyttle asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether the Child Poverty Act 2010 (Persistent Poverty Target) Regulations 2014 applies to Northern Ireland; and if not, what strategy the Executive has in place to define the persistent child poverty threshold and to report on it.

(AQW 45382/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Child Poverty Act 2010 (Persistent Poverty Target) Regulations 2014, which came into force on 31 December 2014, set a target for persistent poverty for the UK of below 7% by 2020. There are currently no official statistics relating to persistent poverty here and we await official data from the UK Government. The Department for Work and Pensions are currently investigating development of new persistent poverty statistics, including a regional breakdown, and hope to be in a position to publish these by the end of the year. Any new statistics would be pre-announced and published in compliance with the UK Statistics Authority Code of Practice. We will report on the Persistent Poverty measure in the Executive's Annual Reports on Child Poverty once this information becomes available.

Mr Dallat asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when a new Commissioner for Victims and Survivors will be appointed.

(AQO 8113/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: As the competition to appoint a new Victims Commissioner is still live, it would not be appropriate to comment further at this time.

We place great importance on ensuring that all victims and survivors have an appropriate representative voice through the Commissioner and we want to ensure we have the right person for the job.

Mr Eastwood asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister (i) to detail the Social Investment Fund projects in the Derry Zone; and (ii) for an update on each project.

(AQW 45667/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: There are three projects in the Derry/Londonderry zone that are within the zone's affordability limit:

- Capital Cluster: Invest in Play – This capital project will provide four play parks and Multi-Use Games Areas. A Letter of Offer has issued and work is ongoing to meet preconditions.
- Community Works Programme – A zone wide revenue project to provide work placements. A Letter of Offer has been issued and a Service Delivery
- Organisation has been appointed. The project will commence delivery shortly.
- Capital Cluster – Pitches – This project will increase sporting facilities throughout the Derry City Council area. This project is currently progressing through the approvals process.

Mr D McIlveen asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the progress of the Racial Equality Strategy.

(AQW 45672/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The analysis of responses submitted during the public consultation has now been completed.

In liaison with representatives from the sector, officials will now finalise a revised strategy. This will be published in due course.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail the duration of the North South Ministerial Council Meeting in Transport Sectoral Format on 22 April 2015.

(AQW 45686/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The duration of North South Ministerial Council meetings is not recorded.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the civic advisory panel proposed in the Stormont House Agreement which was to be in place by June 2015.

(AQW 45750/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Arrangements for establishing a new model for engaging with civic society, as envisaged in the Stormont House Agreement, are currently under consideration by the Executive party leaders.

Mr Rogers asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister, pursuant to AQW 40751/11-15, for an update on any progress with the Narrow Water Bridge project.

(AQW 45801/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The position remains as reported in AQW 40751/11-15, that during discussions at North South Ministerial Council meetings both Governments indicated that they remain supportive of the concept of a bridge at Narrow Water subject to the availability of funding for the project.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the strategic aims and immediate priorities in the Disability Strategy, as extended to 2017.

(AQW 45876/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Disability Strategy aims to improve the lives of people with disabilities, their families and carers. It also seeks to give people with disabilities the opportunity to participate, contribute and benefit equally from society. Within the Strategy there are 18 strategic priorities, details of which can be found at www.ofmdfmi.gov.uk/disability-strategy-2012-2015-revised-010313.pdf.

Mr Campbell asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister whether any assessment has been made of the potential private sector job creation which exists in the next three years through maximising the sites at Ballykelly and the Maze.

(AQW 45917/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The soft market testing exercise which was completed in 2014 identified a wide range of job creation opportunities for the Shackleton site. Our intention is to put the site on the market this year. A key criterion to be used to assess proposals for purchasing the site will be job creation.

There is no current agreement on Maze/Long Kesh issues.

Mr Dunne asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline any plans to introduce a new junction from the M1 to improve access to the Maze/Balmoral showground's site.

(AQW 45924/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: There is no current agreement on Maze/Long Kesh issues.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when the consultation document on the proposals for prohibiting unfair age discrimination by those providing goods, facilities and services will be issued.

(AQW 45985/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The consultation document is close to being finalised. Subject to agreement, we aim to issue the consultation document before the Summer Recess. The public consultation period will last for a minimum of 12 weeks.

Ms Sugden asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to detail all of the steps taken, since the Written Ministerial Statement to the Assembly on 19 February 2015, to further the proposals for prohibiting unfair age discrimination by those providing goods, facilities and services.

(AQW 45988/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: Following our Ministerial statement on 19 February 2015, departmental officials have been engaged in developing a policy consultation document and a supporting Equality Impact Assessment. Officials have also met with departments and key stakeholder organisations to progress the development of these documents. On 15 April 2015, the former Junior Minister Bell and Junior Minister McCann appeared before the Committee for OFMDFM to provide a progress update.

Mr Beggs asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to publish the names of the organisations that have applied for permission to hold events at Balmoral Park, since 2011.

(AQW 46058/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: This is a matter for the Royal Ulster Agricultural Society (RUAS) as the Balmoral Park site is occupied under Licence by the RUAs.

Mr Allister asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister what innovative actions, and with what effect, have been taken since the introduction of the Autism Strategy.

(AQW 46122/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Autism Strategy and associated Action Plan have been developed by the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to help improve access to services and support for people with autism, their families and careers, throughout their lives.

While there are no specific actions in the Action Plan for OFMDFM, as it is not a service delivery department, OFMDFM is providing input on two issues:

- (i) Participation in World Autism Awareness day where, over the last three years, ILEX has provided facilities to four local Autism Charities to celebrate International Autism day and;
- (ii) Involvement in signposting to services for people with autism. In the case of the latter, former Junior Minister Bell and Junior Minister McCann met with the group, Parents Education as Autism Therapists in May last year.

Additionally, as part of OFMDFM's research programme, we have funded Queen's University Belfast to carry out a research project entitled 'Helping the most vulnerable out of the poverty trap and reducing inequality: Policies, strategies, and services for individuals with Autism Spectrum Disorder, including intellectual and neurodevelopmental disabilities'. The research is currently reaching the final stages and it is anticipated that it will be published later this year.

Mr McKinney asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on the Goods, Facilities and Services legislation.

(AQW 46438/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We made a Written Ministerial Statement to the Assembly on 19 February 2015 announcing our decision to bring forward legislative proposals to prohibit unfair age discrimination by those providing, goods, facilities and services. The proposed legislation will apply to people aged 16 and over.

We aim to issue a consultation document in the near future setting out our proposals for legislation. When we have concluded our policy consultation, and agreed a robust policy position, we will then consider all the options available to us for bringing this legislation before the Assembly.

Mr McElduff asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister when the North South Ministerial Council will meet to discuss the North West Gateway Initiative.

(AQO 8237/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The next NSMC Plenary meeting is scheduled for 5 June and a discussion on the North West Gateway Initiative is included on the draft agenda.

A dedicated meeting of Ministers from both jurisdictions is due to take place in the North West. While it was originally intended that this should take place during May, respective diary issues have meant that it has not been possible to find a mutually suitable date. We have however proposed a further date to the Irish Government and are awaiting their response.

The North West has also been the initial focus of the Executive's Regional Opportunities Ministerial Sub-Group which has been established to consider the enhancement of economic opportunities in all areas where a special focus may be needed.

At its meeting on 5 March, the Sub-Group considered a range of issues relevant to the North West, including the digital and creative industries, the expansion of Magee University and also the future development of the North West Gateway Initiative. Particular emphasis was placed on the need for investment in road infrastructure, specifically the A5 and A6, and improved public transport links to increase access and connectivity.

We issued a statement following the meeting which is available on the OFMDFM website.

Ms Fearon asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for an update on age discrimination legislation on the provision of goods, facilities and services.

(AQO 8236/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We made a statement on 19 February giving a commitment to extend legislation to give legal protection from unfair age discrimination, to those aged 16 years and over, by those providing, goods, facilities and services. The statement also announced the intention to bring forward a consultation document setting out proposals for outlawing age discrimination.

Our officials have met with departments and key stakeholder organisations to progress the development of the proposed consultation document.

On the 15 April the Junior Ministers appeared before the Committee for OFMDFM to update Members on progress on the development of the consultation document.

Subject to agreement, we intend to issue the consultation document in the near future.

Mr D Bradley asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister to outline the rationale for extending the Disability Strategy until March 2017.

(AQO 8246/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: The Executive recently agreed to extend the life of the Disability Strategy until 2017, to provide additional time to fully implement the recommendations.

We are committed to protecting and promoting the rights of people with disabilities in our community and the extension will have the additional benefit of providing adequate time to consult on and develop a new strategy next year.

Mr D McIlveen asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the impact on the next Programme for Government of the recent election of the Conservative Government at Westminster.

(AQO 8248/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We are committed to delivering on the priorities of the Executive as articulated in the Programme for Government, and to using all of the resources at our disposal to improve the lives of people here.

Mr A Maginness asked the First Minister and deputy First Minister for their assessment of the quality of service provided by the Victims and Survivors Service.

(AQO 8118/11-15)

Mr P Robinson and Mr M McGuinness: We are committed to ensuring that Victims and Survivors receive the best services we can provide and that funding goes to those who need it most. As such we are continually looking at how we can improve the delivery of services.

Following an Independent Assessment in February 2014 a number of recommendations for improvements were implemented. A follow up report on their implementation was positive and highlighted improvements in several areas.

In collaboration with key stakeholders, the Department has commenced a review of the service delivery model which currently provides services to Victims and Survivors. Input from stakeholders, together with the recommendations from the recent reviews of the Victims and Survivors Service, will provide a useful steer on the changes required to ensure an improved victim centred service.

The collaborative design programme of work will extend throughout 2015-2016.

Department of Agriculture and Rural Development

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the measures the Forest Service uses to prevent tree seed from existing forests establishing on adjacent private land; and if there are no preventative measures, what remedial measures are used to remove or control such seeding.

(AQW 46475/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill (The Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development): The Forest Service does not take any measures to prevent trees seeding from its forests onto adjoining land. In most cases management by landowners through grazing or cropping is sufficient to prevent tree seeds germinating and growing into mature trees. In general I do not consider that management action by Forest Service is necessary to alleviate such problems, nor do I consider that this inconvenience is sufficient reason for removing trees.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether his Department has considered providing a grant scheme for individual household flood protection.

(AQW 46486/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: A business case has been approved for a Homeowner Flood Protection Grant Scheme, to part fund Individual Property-level Flood Protection as a viable option to reduce Flood Risk. Work is presently ongoing in relation to the development of contracts to provide technical expertise and undertake the installation of Individual Property Protection products, such as barriers for doorways. The scheme is likely to be launched in the final quarter of 2015.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development, pursuant to AQW 45645/11-15, why, in addition to the local Member of Parliament, MLA's, community association and community workers, a Sinn Féin Westminster candidate for another constituency was among the guests.

(AQW 46515/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: No Westminster candidates, apart from you as the sitting MP for the area, were invited as guests to the media event at the Ballykelly site on the 18th February by my department or me.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how much her Department and arm's-length bodies have spent on translation services, broken down by language, in each year since 2007.

(AQW 46659/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: A breakdown of translations costs for my Department and arm's length bodies in each year since 2007 is provided in the table below:

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to detail the implications of the suspected BSE case in County Louth on local farmers.

(AQW 47246/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: This isolated BSE case in County Louth does not represent any increased risk to public or animal health in the north of Ireland.

The BSE controls which have been in place here for many years continue to protect the public. These include rigorous surveillance, strict enforcement of cattle identification, registration and movement legislation and full controls in slaughterhouses and feed mills.

We will continue to make it clear to customers that our beef remains a quality product and safe to eat.

Mr Byrne asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what specific measures are being taken by local authorities to deal with any BSE scare resulting from the BSE occurrence recently diagnosed on a farm in County Louth.

(AQW 47247/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Since receiving reports about the BSE case in the south of Ireland, my officials have made every effort to provide clear and unambiguous reassurance to consumers and trading partners that adequate control measures are in place here to protect public and animal health.

The BSE controls which have been in place here for many years continue to protect the public. These include rigorous surveillance, strict enforcement of cattle identification, registration and movement legislation and full controls in slaughterhouses and feed mills.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development for an update on the current charge for off-course bookmakers shops under article 9 of the Horse Racing (Northern Ireland) Order 1990; and whether she has any plans to change the fee.

(AQW 47295/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The Horse Racing Fund was last reviewed in 2008/09. At that time, the two local racecourses agreed a new charge with the local bookmakers for a period of five years. This agreement included a return to the current rate of £1,123 in 2015.

Following representations from the local racecourses and bookmakers, earlier this year I commissioned my officials to review the charges and to make recommendations for public consultation. It is anticipated that this public consultation will commence in the summer, with any new charges, if required, in place for the coming year, 2016.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what her Department is doing to improve the viability of the fishing and seafood industry.

(AQO 8425/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: There are a number of initiatives in place that aim to improve the viability of the local fishing and seafood industry. As you will be aware, in June 2014, I created the Fishing Industry Taskforce to look at the long-term viability of the industry and to make recommendations on how, through partnership, we could best address the issues that were causing concern to the catching and processing sectors. The Taskforce delivered its interim report last December which made a number of recommendations on how viability could be enhanced. We have adopted all the Taskforce's recommendations, many of which will be supported through the pending European Maritime and Fisheries Fund Programme 2014-2020.

While the Fishing Industry Taskforce primarily focuses on our offshore vessels, my Department has also created Inshore Fisheries Partnership Group to examine the challenges facing our inshore fleet and to agree a way forward in addressing the viability of this sector. The recommendations made by this group will also be instrumental in shaping our EMFF investment proposals over the next few years.

The viability of our industry, including how we meet the challenging obligations set in the reformed Common Fisheries Policy, will be to the fore in developing proposals for our €13.4m share of the EMFF Programme that is ear-marked to assist, amongst others, the catching and processing sectors. The EMFF programme succeeds the, now ended, European Fisheries Fund Programme which, by December 2015, will have provided £19m financial assistance to our fishing industry and its dependent communities.

Mr I McCrea asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development whether the new Rivers Agency headquarters in Cookstown will be able to benefit from Gas to the West in 2017.

(AQO 8426/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: The current proposals for the new Rivers Agency Headquarters is to include a biomass boiler as the primary heat source with Liquefied Petroleum Gas (LPG) boilers as backup for maintenance or prolonged periods of cold weather. The decision to install a Biomass Boiler is based on energy efficiency, its renewable credentials and the economical benefits provided by the Governments "Renewable Heat Incentive" (RHI).

I am assured that the system can be easily converted to make use of natural gas. The utilisation of natural gas for the whole of the Loughry site will be a matter for consideration in the future.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development what engagement has she had with the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public safety about the potential impact of budget reductions to the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service on non-statutory services such as animal rescue.

(AQO 8427/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: I have not had any engagement with the Minister for Health, Social Services and Public Safety in relation to the potential impact of budget reductions on the NI Fire and Rescue Service and its non-statutory services.

I understand that as part of ongoing budget considerations the NI Fire and Rescue Service is considering all aspects of its service delivery and no decisions have been made as yet.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how her Department intends to assist farmers to improve the energy efficiency of their farms.

(AQO 8428/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: My Department continues to assist farmers on ways to improve the energy efficiency of their farms through the on-going training available at the College of Agriculture, Food and Rural Enterprise (CAFRE).

The guidance and training on energy efficiency is delivered through the Development Service Industry Training Programme at workshops and events such as the Practical On-farm Renewable Energy Events.

Each year approximately 300 farms have their energy use benchmarked. In addition, the Dairy Unit at CAFRE encompasses a number of leading edge energy efficiency technologies that are demonstrated to farmers during the knowledge and technology transfer programme. CAFRE students, the Young Farmers of the future, also avail of information on energy efficiency and on how new technology can be implemented in a practical way on farm. These training courses coupled with technical articles supplied to the agricultural press ensure that the local farming community are aware of options open to them to be more energy efficient on their farms.

Mr McCartney asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development how the Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation Framework has helped the health and wellbeing of rural people.

(AQO 8429/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Through my Department's Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation programme a number of initiatives have been funded that are having a positive impact on the health and well being of rural dwellers. Initiatives such as the MARA Project, the Farm Families Health Checks Programme, the work of the Rural Support charity, the Health in Mind Project, support of energy efficiency measures in rural homes, the Rural Challenge Programme, the Assisted Rural Travel Scheme and ongoing work with Libraries NI have improved health and well being as well as tackling poverty and social isolation.

Over the past four years over £16m has been invested in delivering a range of initiatives through the Tackling Rural Poverty and Social Isolation programme. The outworking of the schemes across the programme has shown that tackling poverty and social isolation issues has a direct positive impact on the long term health and well being of the rural dwellers. I will share the full programme evaluation with you when it is available later this year.

Mr Ó Muilleoir asked the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development to outline the benefits her recent trip to China will provide for the local agricultural sector.

(AQO 8430/11-15)

Mrs O'Neill: Our agriculture industry has identified China as a key strategic trade partner across a range of agriculture commodities. My overarching aim for my third visit to China was to enhance the relationships I have already established to further the range of export negotiations afoot.

Having just had an inspection of our pork processors I considered it important to personally thank the Chinese government for this visit and impress upon them the importance of this market to our industry. I held a very positive and constructive meeting with the General Administration of Quality Supervision, Inspection and Quarantine (AQSIQ) and was delighted to learn they were impressed by our high standards of pork production. We will shortly receive the inspection report and I look forward to the north of Ireland being approved to export in the next few months.

My meetings with the EU, Irish and British Ambassadors gave me the opportunity to discuss my priorities for China and areas of mutual interest. The insights of the Ambassadors into the negotiation process were invaluable. I also met with the largest food processor and trader in China, COFCO, to outline my aim of securing demand for our agri-products and to enlist their support in sharing the message that we are keen to supply our high quality products and wholesome food.

Whilst the main focus of my visit was to further trade negotiations I also met with representatives in the field of agricultural education, the Chinese People's Association for Friendship with Foreign Countries and had a visit to a dairy farm. I have no doubt these engagements deepened relations with our Chinese partners. They afforded me the opportunity to further develop those close working relationship between the north and China in terms of the agricultural, technical, scientific and educational exchanges which are valued by both sides.

Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure

Ms McCorley asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the departmental funding awarded to Ulster-Scots projects over the last five years.
(AQW 46689/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín (The Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure): In the last five years, the Department has allocated £10.08m to the Ulster-Scots Agency. This represents 75% of the Agency's total budget.

The Department has also provided £3.4m to the Ministerial Advisory Group Ulster-Scots Academy since its inception in March 2011.

In addition the Arts Council has allocated £709,535 of lottery funding to Ulster-Scots projects, events and organisations during this period.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail her Department's total spend on the Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion agenda, broken down by group and project, in each of the last three financial years.
(AQW 46864/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: All of the activity supported by my Department is focused on the Promoting Equality, Tackling Poverty and Social Exclusion (PETPSE) Agenda, aimed at improving the lives of those most in need. This includes the activity undertaken directly by my Department as well as that of its Arm's Length Bodies.

There is no specific grant scheme administered by Department in relation to PETPSE, as this agenda is a strategic direction, to underpin all departmental activity and is central as the driving force to DCAL's core functions.

In spite of there being no specific PETPSE budget nor a grant funding allocation, some excellent work has been undertaken to support this agenda, a few examples of which are below.

Coder Dojo is a social initiative that is run from the AmmA creative learning centre in Armagh, offering young people the opportunity to explore technology within a supported environment. The workshops are well attended and include youngsters with learning and behavioural difficulties. Coder Dojo is a prime example of how DCAL provides a tangible and positive impact on tackling disadvantage, demonstrating new pathways to learning to build literacy in learners who for health reasons may be excluded from engagement with traditional learning methodologies.

Another initiative, funded by DCAL, is the Reading Rooms delivered by the Verbal Arts Centre in Derry. It is a shared reading project to foster literacy and a joy of reading, which has resulted in positive community development and high participation levels within marginalised groups. This in turn has responded to its core objective to support the most marginalised, and assist them in gaining vital literacy and oral skills, the crucial first steps to tackle poverty.

The final example is a direct Departmental project operated in conjunction with the Waterside Theatre. Soundbeam delivered outreach workshops, which ultimately enabled 150 people with disabilities to participate in music therapy workshops, using soundbeam and vibracoustic equipment.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail her Department's spend on the Stadium Programme to date, broken down by each sports ground.
(AQW 46866/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: As of 31st March 2015 total spend on the Regional Stadium Programme was circa £42 million.

Spend to date across the Regional Stadium Programme can be allocated to each of the individual sports ground as follows:

- UCGAA, Casement Park Stadium - circa £5.6m
- IFA, Windsor Park Stadium - circa £19.9m
- Rugby, Kingspan Stadium - circa £16.5m

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure why the only stand her Department had at the Balmoral Show was exclusively devoted to the promotion of Irish; and what plans her Department has to redress this approach in future years and at other events.

(AQW 46869/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Líofo took a stand at this year's Balmoral Show as it provided an opportunity to promote the Irish language to both an urban and rural audience. In terms of wider representation, both agencies of the north south language bodies were approached but declined.

It is not possible at this stage to confirm whether Líofo or other business areas will be represented at the Balmoral show in future years. This will be assessed nearer to the time and in the context of budget availability.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure what was the cost of the Irish language stand at this year's Balmoral Show.

(AQW 46870/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The cost of the Líofo Stand at this year's Balmoral Show was £2,716.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the total expenditure to date on Líofo 2015.

(AQW 46974/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The total spend on Líofo, since it was launched in September 2011 to date is £748,493.

Mr McCausland asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure for an update on her discussions with the Department for Culture, Media and Sport on the Ulster-Scots Broadcast Fund and the Irish Language Broadcast Fund; and whether she has sought to ensure equality of funding for the two schemes.

(AQW 47026/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Although broadcasting powers remain a reserved matter, I am committed to ensuring that the specific characteristics and needs of the North of Ireland are fully considered in the development of all broadcasting policy.

I have been striving to ensure that DCMS makes a longer term commitment (to 2021), at a higher level of funding in both broadcast funds. I have again written to Ed Vaizey, Minister of State for Culture and the Digital Economy on 5th June 2015 to request such a commitment which, following the establishment of the new government, he should now be in a position to make. I am awaiting his response.

Mr Humphrey asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure when she expects the Department for Culture, Media and Sport to make an announcement on the future of the Ulster-Scots Broadcast Fund and the Irish Language Broadcast Fund; and if she has sought to ensure equality of funding for both schemes.

(AQW 47052/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: I have been striving to ensure that DCMS makes a longer term commitment (to 2021), at a higher level of funding in respect of both broadcast funds. On 5th June 2015, following the establishment of the new government, I have again written to Ed Vaizey, Minister of State for Culture and the Digital Economy to request such a commitment which he should now be in a position to make. I am awaiting his response. I would intend to negotiate for secured additional funding and an uplift on the current funding on the basis of need.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure, pursuant to AQW 33937/11-15, why the Language Body's 2013 Business Plan has not yet been provided to the Department of Finance and Personnel.

(AQW 47072/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: The 2013 business plans of the Language Body were not agreed between sponsor departments by the May 2013 deadline set by the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP).

DFP advised the Department that the Business Plans could not be approved retrospectively.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Culture, Arts and Leisure to detail the number of days the access disability lift at the front of Coleraine Library has been out of order since its installation.

(AQW 47086/11-15)

Ms Ní Chuilín: Libraries NI has informed me that, regrettably, the access disability lift at the front of Coleraine Library has been out of order for 147 days since its installation on 1st April 2014.

The 147 unavailable days comprises 18 separate occasions of varying length. The lift has been unavailable for different reasons including commissioning problems, mechanical breakdowns and defects as well as repairs which were necessary as a result of deliberate physical damage.

Department of Education

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education to detail every ministerial direction issued by his Department since May 2007 including the (i) date; and (ii) the nature of each.

(AQW 46403/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd (The Minister of Education): During the period since May 2007 no Ministerial directions were formalised.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of employees in the (i) Maintained; (ii) Controlled; (iii) Integrated; and (iv) Irish Medium sectors in 2005, 2010 and 2015.

(AQW 46510/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Information has been provided by the following categories: Controlled; Controlled Integrated; Catholic Maintained; Other Maintained; Grant Maintained Integrated and Irish Medium for ease of reference and presentational purposes.

Number of School Based Non Teaching Staff

	Controlled	Controlled Integrated	Maintained Catholic	Maintained Other	Irish Medium*	Grant Maintained Integrated

* Includes some staff working in Controlled Irish Medium School(s).

- Numbers for all school-based non-teaching staff employed in schools within the Controlled; Controlled Integrated; Catholic Maintained; Irish Medium and Other Maintained sectors have been provided by the Education Authority for the 5 regions (i.e. Belfast; North Eastern; South Eastern; Southern, and Western).
- Numbers for non-teaching staff are based on a reference week in the autumn term.
- This includes staff in schools delivering a centrally managed service e.g. catering, cleaning etc, with the exception of the Western and Belfast regions which are unable to provide this information at this time.
- The numbers of Grounds Maintenance Staff are detailed separately in the table below as this staff group cannot be categorised as requested in the question as they work across sectors in North Down, Ballynahinch and Lisburn within the South Eastern region.

September 2005	35
September 2010	39
September 2014	38

- Numbers for non-teaching staff employed in schools within the Grant Maintained Integrated sector have been provided by DE Statistics Research Team and were obtained from the annual survey of non-teaching staff working in schools within this sector. The latest available, validated numbers are for September 2014. Figures for this sector include only non-manual staff (for example, classroom assistants, nursery assistants, administrative staff and school nurses).
- The figures provided for non-teaching staff are a headcount. This means that a part-time employee will be counted in the same way as a full-time employee.
- The figures for Grant Maintained Integrated include staff on maternity or sick leave but do not include staff covering these posts.

- 8 In relation to non-teaching staff numbers for the remaining sectors these figures will include temporary staff covering sickness / maternity absence etc and this will have the effect of inflating the headcount.

The latest available validated data for teacher numbers is for 2013, figures for 2014 will be available from 16 June 2015. These figures are published each year in the 'Teacher Workforce Statistics in Grant-Aided Schools in Northern Ireland'.
- Teachers employed at more than one school are counted at the school at which they work the majority of their time.
- The following types of teacher are included:
 - full-time (FT) permanent teachers;
 - part-time (PT) permanent teachers;
 - temporary teachers filling vacant posts, secondments or career breaks.
- The following teachers are excluded:
 - substitute teachers covering illness or other short -term absences;
 - peripatetic teachers,
 - teachers employed under the Signature Project.
- The figures provided are a headcount of teaching staff. This means that a part-time employee will be counted in the same way as a full-time employee.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education to detail how much his Department and their arm's-length bodies have spent on translation services, broken down by language, in each year since 2007.

(AQW 46588/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The table below details how much the Department has spent on translation services, broken down by language, in each financial year since 2007/08. In addition to this expenditure, the Department has employed one full time Irish Language Officer from 2008 to date (at various stages during this period, two Irish Language Officers were simultaneously employed). As the translation of documents forms an integral part of a range of duties carried out by the Irish Language Officer it is not possible to provide a cost for this work.

The Council for Integrated Education (NICIE) has advised of no expenditure since 2007/08.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what strategy his Department has in place to encourage schools to look for innovative solutions and alternative funding streams in light of cuts to the education sector.

(AQW 46602/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The management of funds is delegated to schools through the Local Management of Schools scheme and all schools can seek voluntary contributions and undertake funding raising activities to enhance education provision for pupils attending their school. It is a matter for individual schools to investigate alternative sources of funding. However, I am conscious that more should be done to signpost schools to other sources of funding. I have therefore asked my officials to produce an easily accessible sources of funding toolkit for schools.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether all special schools have been allocated a budget for 2015-16.

(AQW 46623/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Special schools do not receive budget allocations directly from the Department; their budgets are determined and allocated by the Education Authority. The Education Authority has confirmed that special schools have not yet been allocated a budget for 2015-16; however the Authority expects to make an allocation to special schools shortly.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education to detail why the General Teaching Council for Northern Ireland will not issue teacher register numbers to those who have completed their Post Graduate Certificate in Education (Further Education) at Ulster University unless they have worked, as part of their course, at one of the six regional Further Education Colleges.

(AQW 46665/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The General Teaching Council (GTCNI) is responsible for determining the qualifications required in order to be registered as a teacher here. I understand the Post Graduate Certificate in Education (Further Education) is an in-service training course for lecturers employed in the Further Education sector. In order to be eligible to be registered as a teacher the GTCNI has determined that individuals who have obtained their PGCE(FE) qualification should be teaching in a Further Education College, recognised by the Department for Employment and Learning, for at least eight hours per week.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the Special Education Needs Literacy & Numeracy Programme; and how he plans to continue meeting the needs of pupils who participate on this programme in 2015/2016. (AQW 46691/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I understand that clarification was provided in relation to this question and that the information being sought is "how the special educational needs (SEN) framework will support the literacy and numeracy needs of pupils with SEN in the immediate to medium future; in the context of cuts to the Minister's departmental budget."

Although the Executive's budget has been reduced by the Westminster government by £1.5bn over the last five years, I have allocated an additional £10m to the Education Authority in 2015-16 to support frontline SEN services for those children that are most vulnerable or at risk of exclusion.

It remains my priority to ensure that every child receives a high quality education and has the opportunity to reach their full potential. To that end, the Education Authority (EA) has advised that it continues to offer a range of special education support and provision which is available to parents and schools for children with SEN, such as those with literacy and/or numeracy difficulties, including the following:

- specific learning difficulties awareness training to enhance the capacity of teachers to identify and respond appropriately in addressing pupils' needs;
- all Educational Psychologists are trained in the assessment and identification of SENs and provide a comprehensive range of support including recommendations and resources to parents and schools;
- a range of innovative strategies, resources and computer assisted programmes are available for pupils with literacy and/or numeracy difficulties for whom more traditional methods are unsuccessful;
- a range of measures to help pupils requiring support taking examinations.

A further range of capacity building projects are provided specifically to assist teachers including:

Good Practice Guidelines Booklet

Provides guidelines on relevant and purposeful measures and adjustments to the classroom environment for pupils experiencing literacy difficulties.

SEN Resource File

Provides teaching staff with details of support for SEN, including sections relating to literacy and numeracy.

Certificate of Competence in Educational Testing [CCET] Training

This training, which ended in June 2014, enables schools to carry out a range of assessments on pupils with SEN, including those with literacy difficulties.

SEN Literacy Project

A recently completed three year project delivered jointly by Stranmillis and St Mary's College, funded by the DE, provided schools with online and centre based training on the identification, assessment and the teaching of pupils with literacy difficulties in primary schools across the north of Ireland.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Education how much his Department has paid to consultants in each year since 2011; and how much each agency or individual received in each year.

(AQW 46694/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: A list of firms engaged by my Department for the provision of external consultancy services, in accordance with guidelines set out by the Department of Finance and Personnel (DFP), is set out below. The tables detail the spend incurred on external consultancy in respect of the financial years since 2011, namely 2011-12, 2012-13 and 2013-14. At this stage, final figures for 2014-15 are not available for inclusion in this response.

Such firms may also be engaged for other areas of work which are not classified as external consultancy in line with DFP guidance. Spend in relation to such activities is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate costs.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education whether his Department will instruct the General Teaching Council for Northern Ireland to issue teacher registration numbers to people who have completed the Post Graduate Certificate in Education (Further Education) at Ulster University, that worked as part of their course at an independent training college, subject to an inspection by the Education and Training Inspectorate.

(AQW 46708/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The General Teaching Council (GTCNI) is responsible for determining the qualifications required in order to be registered as a teacher here. I have no authority to overrule a decision of the statutory registering body.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of year one school places broken down by primary school.
(AQW 46765/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I have arranged for the information requested to be placed in the Assembly Library.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what actions his Department is taking to support local teachers following the termination of the Literacy and Numeracy Signature Programme.
(AQW 46770/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Delivering Social Change Literacy and Numeracy Signature Programme has over the last two years provided a valuable employment opportunity to over 300 recent graduate teachers.

The ETI evaluation of the programme stated that "Almost all of the signature funded teachers reported that they have benefitted well from their experience of the recruitment process and felt that they were better prepared for applying for teaching positions in the future".

Whilst I accept that, in the current economic climate, it can be difficult for many teachers to find employment in schools, the same can unfortunately be said of graduates in a wide range of professions. The signature programme teachers have had the benefit of up to two years experience which will stand them in good stead when applying for future teaching positions.

I have taken a number of significant steps to improve employment prospects of newly qualified teachers including for example, guidance enabling schools to identify newly qualified teachers from the NI Substitute Teacher Register, encouraging schools to employ newly qualified teachers and actively discouraging the employment of prematurely retired teachers.

In addition, news of the programme has reached other education authorities such as Aberdeen City Council and the National College for Teaching and Leadership who are actively seeking to recruit these experienced teachers.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 45882/11-15, to detail how many of the 80 applicants still remain unplaced, broken down by constituency.
(AQW 46838/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The table below shows the number of applicants that remain unplaced, as of 12 June. Figures provided by the Education Authority.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Education to list all the schools in need of a new school build by order of priority.
(AQW 46843/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education (DE) does not maintain a priority list of schools in need of a new school build; rather prioritisation is considered at the point when a further list of projects is being developed.

I announced lists of projects to proceed in planning for new builds in June 2012, January 2013 and June 2014. These will be released to the market in the order of readiness, subject to budget availability. The protocol which was applied for the selection of schools for my June 2014 announcement is available on the DE website - http://www.deni.gov.uk/protocol_for_selection_for_the_selection_of_major_capital_works_-_24_june_2014__pdf_290kb_.pdf

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education to outline (i) when the school meals service was last reviewed; and (ii) what changes were made to the service as a result of that review.

(AQW 46848/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: School Catering Services were most recently reviewed by the Performance and Efficiency Delivery Unit (PEDU) of the Department of Finance and Personnel in 2012. The recommendations made by PEDU offer a useful source of information to inform the design of service delivery across the five regions of the recently established Education Authority, which will determine how best to make use of the report's recommendations.

In the meantime, School Catering Services undertake an ongoing programme to enhance efficiency. Activities include reviewing the viability of production kitchens on an annual basis; reviewing the cost of transporting of meals; and a monthly review of food costs.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Education how many primary schools cook and serve school meals in their own premises for (i) their pupils; and (ii) other schools.

(AQW 46849/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There are a total of 541 primary schools that produce their own school meals on site. 181 of these also provide meals to one or more other schools.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 45918/11-15, to detail when he expects to have the review into pre school education (i) completed; and (ii) published.

(AQW 46878/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I expect this review to be completed in the 2015/2016 academic year. I have not set a timescale for publication yet.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 46126/11-15, whether all access and accommodation issues relating to the combined enrolment of the two Coleraine post-primary schools will be in place for the start of the new school term in September 2015.

(AQW 46879/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Education Authority, who are responsible for determining eligibility, inform me that those pupils in receipt of transport assistance at the date of the school amalgamation will retain their eligibility until the new school is established. As a result of the split site arrangement in Coleraine, pupils who will be attending a different school site may become eligible for transport as their eligibility is reassessed against this new location. Once the new school location is established the eligibility of all pupils will be reassessed. This approach will be applied and in place for all pupils who choose to attend Coleraine Grammar School in September 2015.

The Education Authority have informed me that the routes and operation of a number of vehicles in the Coleraine area are currently being reviewed. The Education Authority are actively engaging with Translink and the school Principal to ensure that any outstanding issues are resolved prior to the beginning of the new school term.

Modification to the accommodation to allow the new co-educational school to operate across the two existing sites is underway and is scheduled for completion before September.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Education what steps he is taking to ensure cuts to his budget will have as little impact as possible on teachers' ability to effectively deliver the curriculum; and which areas of his departmental spending have been identified for efficiency savings to limit the impact on frontline services.

(AQW 46887/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As you are aware, the Executive's Budget has been reduced by the Westminster Government by £1.5bn over the last five years. As a direct result of this reduction there is significantly reduced money to spend on frontline services such as education. The scale of the budget reductions required in 2015-16 means that these cannot be delivered through efficiency savings alone, especially in light of the savings already delivered during the Budget 2011-15 period.

Throughout the 2015-16 budget process my aim was to protect as far as possible frontline services and funding to schools. Therefore, following the final budget allocation and my wider education budget review I allocated £80m to the ASB. This funding will help ensure that schools can continue to deliver high quality education and enable them to plan according to their school's needs and priorities. This allocation also means that there has been no reduction in cash terms to schools delegated budgets, although in real terms, schools will still face pay and inflationary pressures in 2015-16.

Given the degree of protection afforded to schools' budgets, there remains considerable flexibility in how they deliver the statutory curriculum and I would expect all schools to make use of this flexibility in making sure that their curricular provision not only meets the requirements set out in the Education (Curriculum Minimum Content) Order (NI) 2007 but also meets the needs of their pupils. I have taken every action possible to protect education funding and those frontline services within the Department of Education's (DE's) remit. Unfortunately, it is simply impossible to protect everything.

In order to deliver a balanced 2015-16 Budget, a Savings Delivery Plan (SDP) was developed to address the £97.6m gap in funding facing education. This SDP is available to view in full on the DE website.

The reality is that the full financial challenges facing schools have been alleviated, not eradicated. Given the overall resource funding gap of £97.6m facing education in 2015-16 it is essential that schools make the difficult decisions required to allow them to live within their budgets as a matter of urgency.

In reaching my final decisions on the Budget reductions, I have:

- Focused on protecting frontline services as far as possible, promoting equality and raising education standards;
- Secured the continuation of specific programmes that reflect DE's statutory responsibilities;
- Continued to tackle social disadvantage; and
- Ensured that support for children with Special Education Needs is prioritised.

I acknowledge the demanding financial position still facing the education sector in 2015-16. It must be recognised that this constrained financial context is set to continue for the foreseeable future.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the siting of wind turbines close to school premises.
(AQW 46920/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Planning permission is required for all wind turbines and their siting is governed by the relevant planning authorities. Any school concerned about the proposal to erect a wind turbine close to school premises should raise their objections during the planning consultation process. The Education Authority will provide schools with support and appropriate professional advice, if requested.

Any potential impact on a school would be considered on a case by case basis.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education what advice his Department has issued to schools in relation to the siting of wind turbines that are close to school premises.
(AQW 46921/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department has not issued any advice to schools in relation to the siting of wind turbines that are close to school premises as each location where a wind turbine might be sited requires individual assessment. Planning permission is required for all wind turbines and the relevant planning authority will check the application of current planning regulations and planning policy statements.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the number of schools his Department has written to as a result of the inappropriate use of the study leave code in each of the last three years.
(AQW 46922/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: My Department issues guidance to schools each year on pupil attendance and recording of pupil absences. The guidance advises that study leave should be used at the school's discretion and only for pupils undertaking public examinations, such as GCSEs and A levels, during the examination period.

Following publication of the NI Audit Office (NIAO) and the Public Accounts Committee (PAC) reports on improving pupil attendance in 2014, my Department has been closely monitoring recording of pupil absences by schools. Pupil attendance statistics for the 2012/13 school year showed that 68 post primary schools had recorded study leave as a reason for absence for pupils in Years 8, 9 and 10. My Department wrote to these schools in May 2014 to remind them of the guidance and ask that they review their policy and practice in relation to study leave.

In April 2015, my Department wrote to 56 primary schools which had used the study leave code for some pupils in the 2013/14 school year.

My Department will continue to monitor recording of pupil absences and will raise any issues with schools directly.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education what actions his Department is taking to keep children and young people safe online in the absence of a cross-departmental internet safety strategy.
(AQW 46961/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education is supporting the work that the Safeguarding Board (SBNI) has been commissioned to undertake by the Executive in relation to the development of a new eSafety strategy and action plan. Through its representation on the SBNI, the Education Authority will ensure educational input to this work.

In schools, the duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of pupils is the responsibility of a school's Board of Governors and, in the exercise of those duties, schools are required to have in place policies on discipline, bullying and the safe and effective use of the Internet and Digital technologies. The Department is currently taking forward new Anti-Bullying Legislation which will further strengthen the role of Governors in addressing all forms of bullying between pupils, including cyber-bullying. ICT plays a central role in the statutory curriculum and Using ICT requires pupils to learn how to keep safe and display acceptable online behaviour.

The C2k ICT managed service, which provides a core ICT service for all grant-aided schools, has in place password protection, internet monitoring, web and email filtering and other eSafety related services. C2k also provides teachers with detailed advice and guidance on eSafety within an eSafety zone available via the C2k Exchange. Resources are also available within the C2k Virtual Learning Environment, Fronter, for both staff and pupils. Teachers have access to an Internet Safety Room within Fronter which has a range of resources and eSafety policies. C2k Helpdesk staff are fully briefed to deal with eSafety and Child Protection issues which are prioritised above all other calls.

During May and June 2015, C2k, in conjunction with UK Safer Internet, ran a number of eSafety Conferences attended by over 400 school representatives. This year the PSNI also had an input into these sessions under the SBNI banner. C2k will offer all schools further training and support in the entire area of eSafety during the coming year.

The DE website contains links to useful sites that can provide children and young people, as well as parents and carers, with specific information and advice on a range of internet safety topics.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Education whether his Department are involved in any transport pilot schemes; and if so, to detail the location; and reasoning for establishing the scheme.

(AQW 46975/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Department of Education and the Education Authority are currently involved in the Integrated Public Passenger Transport Pilot which is taking place in the Dungannon District Council area under the auspices of the Department for Regional Development.

The key objectives of the pilot project are to test the concept of a more joined-up approach to the delivery of publicly funded passenger transport services and how this could deliver improved operational efficiency and increased options for public transport users.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of playgroups and other projects that will have to close as a result of the reduction or removal of Early Years funding in 2015/2016.

(AQW 46986/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Executive's Budget has been reduced by the Westminster Government by £1.5bn over the last five years. As a direct result of this reduction there is significantly reduced money to spend on frontline services such as Education. I have taken every action possible to protect Education funding and those frontline services within the Department of Education's (DE) remit. However, it is simply impossible to protect everything.

The budget for the DE Early Years Fund, which is administered by Early Years the Organisation for Young Children (EYO), has been reduced by £2m in 2015/16. The residual 2015/16 Fund is enabling all (153) recipient groups to receive continued funding to the end of the current academic year i.e. 31 August 2015. Funding has not been removed from any of the settings.

I will continue to review my budget and other opportunities for funding to establish if a Fund can continue beyond August. However any such fund will have to be open to all applicants, not just current recipients, and reflect the policy priorities of DE. As part of the June monitoring round, I have submitted a bid of £2million to the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Groups currently supported by the Early Years Fund which are also offering funded pre-school places within the Pre-School Education Programme (PSEP) will continue to be funded through the PSEP. In accordance with the Programme for Government commitment to ensure that at least one year of pre-school is available to every family that wants it, I have allocated sufficient funding to the Education Authority to meet the projected need for pre-school places for children in their final pre-school year.

The pre-school admissions process for September 2015 has now concluded. DE officials have asked PEAG officers within the Education Authority to advise them of any groups participating in PSEP and receiving EYF support which have indicated that they are no longer able to provide places within the PSEP for September 2015. To date DE has not been made aware of any groups in this position. The PEAG officers will continue to monitor the situation and will take any necessary action to ensure that a place continues to be available for every child whose parent wants it.

A number of groups in the Early Years Fund also receive funding from sources other than my Department. It is not therefore possible to identify the impact on settings without consideration of the full details including the financial position of each group.

* setting did not accept the offer of funding for 2015/16.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education to detail the extent of funding cuts to early years groups in 2015/2016.
(AQW 46987/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The Executive's Budget has been reduced by the Westminster Government by £1.5bn over the last five years. As a direct result of this reduction there is significantly reduced money to spend on frontline services such as Education. I have taken every action possible to protect Education funding and those frontline services within the Department of Education's (DE) remit. However, it is simply impossible to protect everything.

The budget for the DE Early Years Fund, which is administered by Early Years the Organisation for Young Children (EYO), has been reduced by £2m in 2015/16. The residual 2015/16 Fund is enabling all (153) recipient groups to receive continued funding to the end of the current academic year i.e. 31 August 2015. Funding has not been removed from any of the settings.

I will continue to review my budget and other opportunities for funding to establish if a Fund can continue beyond August. However any such fund will have to be open to all applicants, not just current recipients, and reflect the policy priorities of DE. As part of the June monitoring round, I have submitted a bid of £2million to the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Groups currently supported by the Early Years Fund which are also offering funded pre-school places within the Pre-School Education Programme (PSEP) will continue to be funded through the PSEP. In accordance with the Programme for Government commitment to ensure that at least one year of pre-school is available to every family that wants it, I have allocated sufficient funding to the Education Authority to meet the projected need for pre-school places for children in their final pre-school year.

The pre-school admissions process for September 2015 has now concluded. DE officials have asked PEAG officers within the Education Authority to advise them of any groups participating in PSEP and receiving EYF support which have indicated that they are no longer able to provide places within the PSEP for September 2015. To date DE has not been made aware of any groups in this position. The PEAG officers will continue to monitor the situation and will take any necessary action to ensure that a place continues to be available for every child whose parent wants it.

A number of groups in the Early Years Fund also receive funding from sources other than my Department. It is not therefore possible to identify the impact on settings without consideration of the full details including the financial position of each group.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Education how his Department is contributing to the development of a cross-departmental internet safety strategy.

(AQW 47012/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: At its meeting on 29 January 2015, the Executive agreed to formally commission the Safeguarding Board (SBNI) to develop an e-safety strategy and action plan. Terms of Reference (TOR) have been developed and the SBNI has appointed a project manager to deliver the work within an 18 month timeframe. The aim is that the draft e-Safety strategy will be ready for consultation by the end of the financial year and the draft strategy and action plan will be presented to the Executive once complete.

My Department has a very effective working relationship with the Safeguarding Board (SBNI) which is why I was pleased to endorse this proposal.

My Department's involvement in agreeing the Terms of Reference for the project has ensured that two of the key aims of the strategy are to educate and support children young people and parent in developing the skills, knowledge and understanding to stay safe online, to recognise unsafe situations and to understand how to help children stay safe online and to promote safe and responsible behaviour in the use of internet and mobile technology and to keep up to date with developments.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Education to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by his Department in Foyle in 2014/15; and the cost of each project.

(AQW 47018/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: A total of four Major Capital Works Projects in the Foyle constituency were announced to be taken forward in planning in June 2012, January 2013 and June 2014 however there were no projects announced in the Foyle constituency in June 2014. Work was ongoing to progress the projects in 2014/15.

- Eglinton Primary School £2.6m
- Ardnashee School and College £7.4m
- Foyle College and Ebrington Primary School £31.45m
- Craigback/Mullabuoy/Listress Primary Schools £2m

Three School Enhancement Projects (SEP) in the Foyle constituency were approved for funding in March 2014 and design work continued on these projects throughout 2014/15.

- St Columb's College £2.669m
- Newbuildings PS £1.923m
- Broadbridge PS £2.63m

There are currently no other SEP schemes in the Foyle constituency.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether there is any provision for teaching animal welfare in schools.
(AQW 47064/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: There is no specific statutory requirement for schools to teach about animal welfare in primary or post-primary schools. However, there is flexibility within our curriculum to allow schools to teach about animal welfare if they wish to do so.

This topic could be taught in other subjects for example through Personal Development and Mutual Understanding (PDMU) in the primary curriculum or through subjects such as English, Science and Learning for Life and Work (Citizenship) at Key Stage 3. At Key Stage 4, students who choose Occupational Studies as a qualification have the option of studying a unit on Animal Care.

CCEA has also published some non-statutory resources for primary level that address animal welfare issues and introduced a GCSE in Agriculture and Land Use for first teaching from September 2013. The GCSE contains a unit on Animals in the Land.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Education whether any consideration has been given to increasing education within the curriculum on the need to adopt responsible behaviour and care towards animals.
(AQW 47065/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: As part of its curriculum monitoring remit, CCEA is currently conducting research with staff and pupils in primary and post-primary schools to obtain their views on the curriculum and their learning experience.

This will help to inform future developments in the curriculum here and includes gathering educationalists' and pupils' views about the need to include learning about responsible behaviour and care towards animals.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Education, pursuant to AQW 46338/11-15, to detail (i) how many providers availed of temporary flexibility arrangements in each of the last three years; (ii) if these providers solely received funding per pupil; and (iii) if any providers funded additional staff through school funds in order to maintain a staffing ratio of 1:13 adults to children.
(AQW 47083/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Temporary flexibility in enrolment/class size in statutory nursery settings was first introduced for admissions in the 2014/15 when temporary flexibility was approved in 30 settings. In 2015/16 temporary flexibility has been approved in 43 settings at this stage.

As indicated in the answer to AQW46338/11-15 approved additional places are funded on an equivalent per pupil basis in the next financial year. All pupil count and other funding arrangements, as outlined in the Common Funding Scheme, apply to the temporarily increased enrolment number for the school.

The Department does not routinely collect information on staffing levels in statutory nursery settings following the approval of temporary flexibility, or on how they were funded that year.

Schools applying for the temporary flexibility must confirm, prior to approval, that the premises and staffing structure can support the increase and that they can operate within the Common Funding Scheme arrangements.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what actions his Department is taking to educate children and young people about online safety.
(AQW 47092/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: In schools, the duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of pupils is the responsibility of a school's Board of Governors, and schools are required to have in place policies on discipline, bullying and the safe and effective use of the Internet and Digital technologies.

In terms of educating our pupils about online safety, ICT plays a central role in the statutory curriculum and Using ICT, a cross-curricular skill, requires pupils to learn how to keep safe and display acceptable online behaviour.

Support is available via the C2k ICT Managed Service which provides teachers with detailed advice and guidance on eSafety and resources are also available within the C2k Virtual Learning Environment, Fronter, for both staff and pupils. Teachers have access to an Internet Safety Room within Fronter which has a range of resources and eSafety policies. C2k also directly reaches pupils through the C2k News Desk which frequently raises issues of pupils' online safety, through news articles, highlighting current issues and providing Online Safety fact files and appropriate web resources for school use.

In addition, there are links on the DE website to useful sites that can provide children and young people, as well as parents and carers with specific information and advice on a range of internet safety topics.

The Department has also recently issued a circular letter to all schools and the Youth Council, containing advice provided by the PSNI and endorsed by the Safeguarding Board NI (SBNI) about how to stay safe online. The circular letter also includes advice for parents. This circular will be made available on the C2K Exchange.

The Department also funds the work of the NI Anti-Bullying Forum (NIABF). As part of its remit, the Forum visits schools and works with staff and pupils to raise awareness of all forms of bullying, promote best-practice responses to bullying incidents and, if required, signposting the school and individuals to other sources of specialist advice and support.

You may also be aware that the Department has endorsed the commissioning of the SBNI to produce a regional eSafety strategy and action plan and has contributed to the Terms of Reference to ensure that the needs of children and young people as well as parents are addressed within that strategy.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Education what actions his Department is taking to educate children and young people about how to manage their finances.

(AQW 47098/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Financial capability was made a statutory element of the Curriculum in 2007. At primary level it is embedded in the 'Money' strand of Mathematics and Numeracy and within Personal Development and Mutual Understanding (PDMU). At postprimary level, it is embedded within 'Mathematics (including Financial Capability)' and through the Home Economics strand of Learning for Life and Work at Key Stage 3.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Education for his assessment of the criteria for the allocation of nursery school places.

(AQW 47124/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: Legislation requires that all pre-school settings give priority to children from socially disadvantaged backgrounds. Pre-school settings are responsible for setting any subsequent criteria themselves.

Priority is given to children from socially disadvantaged circumstances in the pre-school admissions process because research has shown that they experience more difficulty at school than other children: this is part of wider efforts to tackle educational underachievement.

Learning to Learn – a Framework for Early Years Education and Learning - includes an action to implement remaining actions from the Review of Pre-School admissions including one to examine the definition of socially disadvantaged circumstances with a view to ensuring the relevant criteria are up-to-date. I also want to examine the criteria to ensure that they do not disadvantage low paid working parents.

I have asked my officials to consider the issues associated with extending the priority criterion.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Education to detail how the transfer of statutory functions for Outdoor Education Centres to the Education Authority will impact on the sustainability of Woodhall Outdoor Education Centre in Kilrea.

(AQW 47177/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: The transfer of statutory functions for Outdoor Education Centres to the Education Authority has had no impact on the sustainability of the Woodhall Outdoor Education Centre in Kilrea.

However, as part of the implementation of Priorities for Youth, there will be a review of Residential and Outdoor Education Service provision as outlined in the 2015-16 Regional Youth Development Framework.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister of Education how he plans to deal with any barriers to the uptake of events held at university level, as part of the widening access programmes and Science, Technology, Engineering and Maths delivery to primary schools.

(AQO 8486/11-15)

Mr O'Dowd: I understand that clarification was provided in relation to this question and that the barriers referred to relate to transport from primary schools to Sentinus events or other similar programmes at relevant universities.

It is matter for individual schools to determine how they transport pupils to Sentinus events or other similar programmes held at universities in the north.

Department for Employment and Learning

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail what actions the Managing Authority will take if Data collected throughout the ESF Programme, shows that there is an imbalance in the gender breakdown of participants accessing the ESF Programme.

(AQW 45575/11-15)

Dr Farry (The Minister for Employment and Learning): The implementation and delivery of the European Social Fund (ESF) Programme will be monitored and reviewed to ensure that my Department's section 75 duties, and commitment to mainstream equality, are met. The ESF Programme's participation, or take-up rates, will be monitored annually to identify any participation or take-up rates which are lower than expected, and their causes.

My Department plans and oversees a rolling programme of evaluations (updated annually) which ensures that labour market programmes and services are evaluated every five years. Equality issues are treated as an integral part of each evaluation. The ESF Programme will be included in my Department's rolling programme and it will have its own evaluation strategy that will include at least two evaluations during its lifespan. Equal opportunities, non discrimination and equality between men and women will be examined as part of the evaluation work.

If data collected throughout the ESF programme shows that there is an imbalance in the gender breakdown of participants, this will be identified through the actions detailed above and appropriate action taken. At this stage, it is not possible to define the exact nature of the action that would be taken as a decision on how to respond would depend on the particular circumstances at the time. However, possible measures might include efforts to target recruitment of under-represented groups.

Mr Flanagan asked the Minister for Employment and Learning pursuant to AQW 44667/11-15 could his Department provide (i) a list of successful applicants; (ii) the sums awarded to each organisation and (iii) the programmes to which the organisation will participate.

(AQW 45767/11-15)

Dr Farry: Over this initial three years of funding, 67 projects with a total value of £102 million will be supported to help over 42,700 individuals, and will also provide assistance to 2,340 families.

A total of 67 Projects have been sent Letters of Offer. The projects have been given until 30 June 2015 to confirm whether they have match funding in place.

My officials are awaiting the acceptance of these; so a decision on total funding to individual organisations has yet to be finalised but will be published in due course.

A list of the organisations in receipt of a funding offer is available via this link:

<http://www.delni.gov.uk/index/publications/pubs-euro-funding/ni-european-social-fund-programme-2014-2020.htm>

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning what provisions are in place to allow parental leave for new foster parents, including Kinship Carers.

(AQW 46532/11-15)

Dr Farry: Entitlement to shared parental leave is available to new mothers and adopters and their partners (who may be the child's father or the other adopter).

Entitlement to the right may arise for foster parents when a child enters a foster placement with them and there is a significant probability that the placement will become an adoptive placement. In those circumstances, entitlement to adoption leave and shared parental leave can arise prior to the formal placement for adoption.

There are no broader arrangements for shared parental leave for foster parents or kinship carers.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how many projects will be funded by his Department through the European Social Fund for this financial year.

(AQW 46554/11-15)

Dr Farry: Over the initial three years of funding, 67 projects with a total value of £102 million will be supported to help over 42,700 individuals and will also provide assistance to 2,340 families.

The full list can be accessed at:

<http://www.delni.gov.uk/index/publications/pubs-euro-funding/ni-european-social-fund-programme-2014-2020.htm>

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the group projects which will be funded through the European Social Fund in this financial year.

(AQW 46556/11-15)

Dr Farry: Projects which have been offered funding from the European Social Fund Programme 2014-2020, include 12 applicants in the young people not in education, employment or training priority (four of these applications include consortium members); 24 applicants in the disability priority (20 of which include consortium members); 25 applicants in the unemployed/economically inactive priority (16 of which include consortium members), and six applicants in the Community Family Support Programme priority (four of which include consortium members). Over 65% of applications have consortium members.

All of the 67 Projects were issued a Letter of Offer on Friday 5th June 2015 and have one month from the date of the Letter of Offer to accept the terms and conditions for funding.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning for his assessment of the benefits for students of having a Further Education College Campus located within a town centre.

(AQW 46655/11-15)

Dr Farry: Colleges are required to develop a business case when considering any major capital investment. In arriving at a preferred option, the business case will consider a range of social and economic factors including an assessment of the relative advantages and disadvantages of a range of proposed locations. This will take into account accessibility to facilities and services, transport links, etc. In addition to this there will also be an assessment of the overall value for money and affordability represented by each option. It is for the College to weigh up these various factors and to make a recommendation as to the option which best meets its needs and those of the student population.

The resultant business case will then be reviewed by my officials and subsequently those from the Department of Finance and Personnel to ensure that the best option has been selected.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail all the proposed sites for a new build for the Northern Regional College Campus, within the Northern Regional College area.

(AQW 46658/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Northern Regional College is preparing a business case to address deficiencies at its Coleraine, Ballymoney and Ballymena campuses.

The business case, which will carry out an assessment of all potential sites, is expected to be submitted to my Department for consideration by the end of June. It would, therefore, not be appropriate for me to make any further comment on any of the sites being considered at this stage.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning of his assessment of the current condition of the Northern Regional College facility at the Coleraine Campus.

(AQW 46660/11-15)

Dr Farry: It is accepted that the Coleraine campus of the Northern Regional College is in poor condition and unsuited for the delivery of a modern further education curriculum. The building dates back to the 1930's and requires considerable work to remain functional.

As I have previously stated in the Assembly, I see improvements in the Northern Regional College Estate as a priority. The preparation of the business case for the estate is ongoing, and a final draft is expected to be with my officials during July 2015 for consideration.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Employment and Learning how he is encouraging the development of links between Ulster University in Coleraine and the Further Education colleges in Coleraine and Limavady.

(AQW 46662/11-15)

Dr Farry: I believe that Further Education Colleges make a distinctive contribution to the overall provision of higher education in Northern Ireland. They have a particular strength in the provision of intermediate-level qualifications to meet the higher skills needs of local employers and regional communities.

My policy is to encourage the provision of Foundation Degrees offered in collaboration between the local universities and the regional colleges. Foundation degrees are professional and technical qualifications and have a major role to play in meeting the higher level priority skills needs of Northern Ireland. They equip learners with the combination of technical capabilities, academic knowledge and transferable skills at the associate professional and higher technician levels that employers are increasingly demanding.

Ulster University (UU) has taken a leading role in the validation of Foundation Degrees and has worked in collaboration with both the Northern Regional College and the North West Regional College in developing a range of Foundation Degree qualifications, including courses in Electrical / Electronic Engineering, Software Development, Sustainable Construction and Applied Medical Sciences.

Over the last two years, I have made increased funding available to provide an additional 75 full time higher education places at North West Regional College, and another 66 at Northern Regional College, in Foundation Degrees in STEM subjects. It is a matter for the senior management of each college to determine the location of specific courses across their campuses to best meet local demand.

I can confirm that a foundation degree course validated by UU in Building Technology and Management is currently being delivered in Coleraine campus. Students on the Northern Regional College Foundation degree in Sport Exercise and Fitness use UU Coleraine sports facilities on a regular basis. I can also confirm that a Level 4 Certificate in Counselling Studies and a Foundation Degree in Counselling validated by UU are currently being delivered at the Limavady campus of North West Regional College.

UU also collaborates with the colleges in the development of Access Diploma courses. These are key qualifications for widening participation in higher education, particularly for adult learners. Currently an Access Diploma in Social Sciences is being delivered at the Coleraine campus, and an Access Diploma in Combined Studies (Humanities) is being delivered at the Limavady campus. In addition, a small number of Level 3 Health Science students from the Limavady campus progress to degree provision at UU Coleraine in Nutrition.

Developing links include initial discussions between Northern Regional College Performing Arts Department at its Coleraine campus and UU Coleraine, concerning the potential to develop a Foundation Degree in Performing Arts. Beginning in September 2015, Northern Regional College will undertake academic visits to UU to examine course delivery, modules, industrial links, etc with a view to developing a Foundation Degree to begin in September 2016. Northern Regional College, Coleraine Level 3 courses in Music, Performing Arts and Production Arts already have strong links with the Riverside Theatre, UU Coleraine.

Finally, UU is also supportive of Northern Regional College establishing a Foundation Degree in Computing at Coleraine campus in September 2016 and a Foundation Degree in Business with IT commencing in September 2017.

Mr Easton asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the criteria his Department use when awarding payments from the European Social Fund.

(AQW 46674/11-15)

Dr Farry: Organisations must be financially viable to receive support through the European Social Fund. At stage 1 of the application process, my Department undertook Financial Capability Assessments to determine that organisations are financially capable of delivering the projects. Included in this assessment was the requirement that each organisation have net cash assets of 10% or more of the value of each proposed project on an annual basis. Other issues considered at stage 1 were; whether or not the project objectives addressed SMART criteria; did these objectives link to the overall ESF programme objectives; did the project demonstrate value for money, and that the project did not duplicate existing government programmes or local provision.

Projects which successfully passed stage 1 were considered by selection committees. Those projects which achieved a pass mark score of 115 points or above were listed in merit order for each of the four ESF Investment Priorities: Investment Priority 8 (I) a& b - Access to employment for job-seekers and inactive people; Investment Priority 8 (II) - Sustainable integration into the labour market of young people; Investment Priority 9 (I) a – Social Inclusion (Disability Strand) and Investment Priority 9 (I) b Community Family Support Programme (CFSP).

The breakdown of the proposed financing of all successful ESF Projects is ESF Funding of 40%; Department for Employment and Learning contribution of 25%; and Match Funding (from a public or private source) totalling 35%; projects must secure match funding to be funded through ESF.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail (i) what plans are underway to decentralise public sector jobs within his Department; and (ii) the number of jobs that will be relocated to South Down.

(AQW 46794/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Department for Employment and Learning does not have any plans to further decentralise public sector jobs either in South Down or throughout Northern Ireland.

Mrs Hale asked the Minister for Employment and Learning whether apprenticeship contracts post March 2016 will be subject to re-tendering.

(AQW 46929/11-15)

Dr Farry: As outlined in my Department's recent strategy on apprenticeships, Securing our Success, future apprenticeship provision will commence at professional and technical level 3.

The current contracts for the ApprenticeshipsNI programme support the provision of apprenticeships at levels 2 and 3, based upon a series of existing frameworks.

The new apprenticeship model, which will be introduced in 2016, will be owned by employers and will move away from the existing framework model. In future, opportunities brought forward by employers which meet the key components laid out in my strategy will be funded. Consequently, existing contracting arrangements will not be compatible with this new expansive, employer led model. In future, universities, further education colleges and other approved providers, who meet the necessary quality and standards, will deliver the broad education components.

This new apprenticeship model has required a new system of training for professional and technical areas at level 2. My Department's forthcoming strategy on youth training will outline policy proposals in this regard, a key component of which will include work based learning through both an employed route, replacing apprenticeships at level 2 and, a complementary non employed pathway.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister for Employment and Learning to detail the reasons for the abolition of the Pathways Education Maintenance Allowance for young people not in employment, education or training as this was designed to address an anomaly.

(AQW 47179/11-15)

Dr Farry: The Pathways Education Maintenance Allowance was not abolished. It was introduced as one of a series of measures under the Pathways to Success strategy, supported by a ring-fenced and time-limited budget secured under the Executive's Economy and Jobs Initiative in 2012. These programmes, and the associated budget, came to an end on 31 March 2015.

Organisations that were successful in the recent call for applications to the European Social Fund (ESF) Programme are free to utilise the overhead cost allocations they are receiving to cover expenditure, such as allowances for participants. Examples were given of the type of additional costs which could be claimed in the revised simplified model, and it was made clear in the guidance, which was made available when the call for applications was launched, that any such expenses should be included in the 40% overhead costs. It is the expectation of my Department that Education Maintenance Allowance will be paid out of this 40% overhead costs allowance.

The following is an excerpt from the guidance which issued to organisations in late November 2014, prior to the closing date for receipt of applications on 6th January 2015.

"It should be noted that the 40% ESF indirect Costs funding is to be used for all other costs associated with the delivery of your project and this should include participants' allowances, childcare, staff travel, rent, etc."

Therefore, projects were made aware, in writing, well in advance of the closing date that participant costs could be included, and claimed for, in the indirect costs allocation.

Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, in relation to InvestNI's support of sub-regional growth, how many of the 2213 businesses supported outside Belfast were in West Tyrone.

(AQW 46080/11-15)

Mr Bell (The Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment): The information you have requested is not currently available as Invest NI's full sub-regional results for 2014/15 have not yet been released.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail every ministerial direction issued by his Department since May 2007 including the (i) date; and (ii) the nature of each.

(AQW 46278/11-15)

Mr Bell: Approval has been given for three Ministerial Directions since May 2007. The dates of approval and the nature of each are detailed below.

The first Ministerial Direction was issued on 3 December 2009. This was for the provision of grant assistance to a manufacturing company.

A second Ministerial Direction was issued on 4 May 2011, for the provision of financial assistance to a company to carry out new capital works and repairs and improvements to existing property.

The third Ministerial Direction was issued on 21 October 2013, for the provision of grant assistance to a manufacturing company.

Mr B McCrea asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, given his Department's renewables target, whether he supports the Minister of the Environment's aim of bringing forward climate change legislation.

(AQW 46306/11-15)

Mr Bell: I understand that the DOE Minister has no plans to bring forward Northern Ireland climate change legislation in this Assembly term. Northern Ireland is already working within UK legislation and UK wide targets.

If, in the future, legislative proposals are brought forward to the Executive on Climate Change I will consider them at that time.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by his Department in Foyle in 2013/14; and the cost of each project.

(AQW 46337/11-15)

Mr Bell: My Department had no Capital infrastructure projects in Foyle in 2013-14.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether he or his officials have started the process of estimating the amount of (a) office space; and (b) industrial space, that will be required in addition to what is currently available, if a significant reduction in the rate of Corporation Tax is implemented.

(AQW 46346/11-15)

Mr Bell: Invest NI commissioned a review of the Northern Ireland commercial property market. The review was completed in October 2014 and provides a solid basis for making projections about future demand for office and industrial space. Invest NI recently announced plans to stimulate the development of Grade A office accommodation through the provision of mezzanine funding/equity to private sector property developers. Applications for this are currently open and will remain so until the 31 August 2015.

Invest NI can also provide support towards the development of new property solutions by way of capital grant, loans or shares to qualifying projects through its Property Assistance Scheme. Invest NI also holds serviced industrial land in various locations across Northern Ireland which can be sold to qualifying companies to develop their own bespoke facility meeting their unique business needs.

The Economic Policy Centre (EPC) at Ulster University has produced high level estimates of the potential additional job creation which could result from a lower rate of Corporation Tax. At this point, these estimates have not been converted into associated estimates of office space and industrial space. My Department, through Invest NI, and in conjunction with the Department for Employment and Learning, is in the process of procuring a research project to advise on the specific sectors, sub-sectors and activities that should be targeted with a lower rate of Corporation Tax. This research, together with the ongoing gathering of evidence regarding the property market, will be used to inform the likely requirements for different types of space in the future.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether any funding contributed by the Northern Ireland Executive towards the operation of Tourism Ireland will be spent on its promotion of the Republic of Ireland as a venue for same sex marriages and if not, how will same be assured.

(AQW 46355/11-15)

Mr Bell: The campaign was funded exclusively from promotional monies provided by the Irish Government.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether his Department has a renewable energy strategy.
(AQW 46385/11-15)

Mr Bell: The 2010 Strategic Energy Framework (SEF) which was endorsed by the Northern Ireland Executive sets the direction for energy policy, including renewables, to 2020. The key goals reflected in the current Programme for Government period are to achieve 20% renewable electricity and 4% renewable heat by 2015. The Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation scheme and the Northern Ireland Renewable Heat Incentive have been put in place to support achievement of these goals.

Mr B McCreagh asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for an update on the creation of a Chief Scientific Advisor role.

(AQW 46396/11-15)

Mr Bell: I recognise the benefits in appointing a Chief Scientific Advisor for Northern Ireland, as articulated in the Regional Innovation Strategy. However the timing and the priority given to such an appointment will have to be revisited in light of the current resource/budgetary constraints across public services.

Ad hoc links, supported by DETI and on a cross-departmental basis, remain in place with the UK Government's Chief Scientific Adviser's Advisory Committee (CSAC).

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what incentives and support his Department provides to households and businesses who choose to convert to natural gas.

(AQW 46487/11-15)

Mr Bell: My Department does not offer incentives to households and businesses who choose to convert to natural gas. However, there is provision within the regulated Price Controls for gas distribution companies in Northern Ireland to incentivise gas connections. Assistance for eligible households is also available through the Utility Regulator's Northern Ireland Sustainable Energy Programme (NISEP) and through Department of Social Development schemes such as the Boiler Replacement Scheme and Affordable Warmth programme.

Invest NI can offer interest free loans to businesses to support capital expenditure on equipment which reduces carbon emissions by improving energy efficiency, including the provision of gas fired combined heat and power units and natural gas boilers.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what discussions have been held with the Department for Energy and Climate Change on the possible early closure of the Renewables Obligation; and to detail any work that will be taken forward as a result.

(AQW 46526/11-15)

Mr Bell: I met with the DECC Secretary of State recently to discuss the future of renewable support including her plans to close the Renewables Obligation in GB in 2016. My Department will assess the policy implications arising from any announcement by DECC on early closure of the RO in GB.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment how his Department intends to utilise the recent Irish Open at Royal County Down to boost tourist numbers to Northern Ireland, and in particular South Down.

(AQW 46535/11-15)

Mr Bell: The Irish Open 2015 was undoubtedly a resounding success which positively showcased Newcastle, the Mournes and the wider South Down region. Its success demonstrates Northern Ireland's ability to deliver an outstanding event on the world stage and consolidates our reputation as a positive place not only to visit, but to invest, do business, work and learn.

A Golf Tourism Strategy was launched in March 2015, and a steering group of key stakeholders are working towards delivery of an action plan to drive Northern Ireland golf tourism to a level of £50 million by 2020.

As part of this Strategy there is a clear legacy path to maximize the opportunities arising from the hosting of major golfing events such as the Irish Open.

My Department and Tourism NI will continue working hard to attract major events to Northern Ireland and in partnership with Tourism Ireland, will seek every available opportunity to sustain the worldwide image of Northern Ireland.

We will also work to harness the success of the Irish Open, to increase awareness of Northern Ireland, not only as a premium golfing destination but also as an outstanding tourist destination.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what support is available for the development of Grade A office space.

(AQW 46540/11-15)

Mr Bell: Invest NI recently announced plans to stimulate the development of new Grade A office accommodation across Northern Ireland through the provision of mezzanine funding/equity to private sector property developers.

An expression of interest exercise commenced on 1st May and applications are now being accepted by the agency until 31st August 2015.

Further details on the scheme can be found on the Invest NI website at <http://www.investni.com/grade-a-office.html>

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment, pursuant to AQW 42410/11-15, and given that the shale layer is defined as an unconventional reservoir, how a mini-fall off test within this layer is not considered as shale exploration.

(AQW 46544/11-15)

Mr Bell: A mini fall-off test would provide information about the characteristics of any formation in which it is carried out, whether this is a low permeability sandstone or a shale. A mini fall-off test is considered a conventional technique, which is quite different to the High Volume Hydraulic Fracturing, used for testing, and producing, oil or gas from an unconventional reservoir. An exploration well targeting oil and gas in conventional reservoirs may commonly seek to assess all potential hydrocarbon bearing rock formations, as part of a review of the hydrocarbon prospectivity of the petroleum licence area.

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether there any plans to improve broadband supply and connection for the BT25 2HD postcode area.

(AQW 46573/11-15)

Mr Bell: In February 2014, my Department contracted BT to deliver the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project (NIBIP) which will extend the availability of basic and superfast broadband to those who have limited choice across Northern Ireland, particularly in rural areas.

I can confirm that, under Phase 3 of NIBIP, improvements have already been carried out to a number of premises in BT25 2HD. Further details on the project can be found on the NI Direct platform at: <http://www.nidirect.gov.uk/index/information-and-services/leisure-home-and-community/technology-and-online-services/broadband-improvement-project.htm>.

Recognising that NIBIP will not deliver superfast broadband to all premises, my Department, in February 2015, awarded a further contract to BT for the delivery of the Superfast Roll-out Programme (SRP). This project will provide superfast broadband improvements for 38,000 premises across Northern Ireland by December 2017. An extensive survey and design process is underway and will take several months to complete. The post code area BT25 2HD is included under the intervention area of this project. However, until the survey and design process is completed, it will not be possible to say how many premises in this post code area will benefit from the upgrades. Further details on roll-out will be published on the NI Direct platform when this becomes available.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what measures Tourism Ireland has taken to maximise the economic potential of Northern Ireland having the world's number one golfer and the Captain of the European Ryder Cup Team.

(AQW 46586/11-15)

Mr Bell: Rory McIlroy and Darren Clarke are great ambassadors and have brought a renewed focus on golf in Northern Ireland. Tourism Ireland is working hard to capitalise on their achievements, to highlight Northern Ireland as a top golfing destination around the world.

Tourism Ireland's extensive "Northern Ireland – Home of Champions" golf campaigns in key golf markets such as Great Britain, the United States, Germany, France and Sweden feature both Rory McIlroy and Darren Clarke (2016 European Ryder Cup Captain) – with recent examples including Tourism Ireland’s golf TV campaign on NBC Golf Channel in the United States and a range of print and online advertisements in the lead-up to the Irish Open at Royal County Down.

There is also a dedicated ‘Home of Champions’ golf page featuring Darren Clarke, Rory McIlroy and others on Tourism Ireland’s suite of international websites, which attracted 14.25 million visitors in 2014.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what assessment Tourism Ireland has made of the economic potential of the Irish Open Golf tournament hosted at Royal County Down, Newcastle.

(AQW 46587/11-15)

Mr Bell: Assessment of the economic potential of the Irish Open Golf tournament at Royal County Down is a matter for Tourism Northern Ireland and an evaluation of the direct economic impact is currently being undertaken and results are awaited.

However, Tourism Ireland capitalised on the estimated potential audience of 440 million households worldwide who could have tuned in to this year’s Irish Open by undertaking an extensive programme of promotions in key golf markets like Great Britain, the United States, Germany, France and Sweden to capitalise on this global publicity for Northern Ireland.

The campaign aims to attract high spending golf visitors to Northern Ireland. Golf is the world’s largest sports related travel market and it is estimated that every £1 spent on green fees creates £4 spend in the local economy. At the moment, golf tourism is estimated to be worth £33million per year to Northern Ireland.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what Tourism Ireland is doing to promote Northern Ireland as a destination for golf tourists.

(AQW 46589/11-15)

Mr Bell: Golf holidays are a major focus for Tourism Ireland promotions in key golf markets such as Great Britain, the United States, Germany and Sweden. Tourism Ireland’s ‘Home of Champions’ golf campaigns promote Northern Ireland as a ‘must see’ and ‘must play’ destination to golf enthusiasts overseas, capitalising on the global success of our golfers including Rory McIlroy, Graeme McDowell, Darren Clarke and others.

This year, the Irish Open at Royal County Down provided an additional opportunity to put Northern Ireland’s world-class golf in the global spotlight with further promotional opportunities around another Irish Open in 2017. In addition, Royal Portrush has been restored on the roster for the Open Championship from 2019 which is another exciting development.

Golf tourism currently generates £33million per annum for the local economy. The importance of golf tourism lies in attracting high spending visitors and dispersing their spending power throughout the visitor economy, with research suggesting that for every £1 spent on green fees in Northern Ireland a further £4 is spent elsewhere.

Tourism Ireland’s extensive programme of promotions this year has included a golf TV campaign in the United States; print and online advertising in conjunction with leading online golf tour operators; attendance, with Northern Ireland industry partners, at major golf events and extensive publicity activity, including media golf days and familiarisation visits for influential golf media.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what action his Department is taking to support an increase in the average wage.

(AQW 46611/11-15)

Mr Bell: The Executive’s Economic Strategy aims to rebalance the Northern Ireland economy, and improve our economic competitiveness through a focus on export-led economic growth, in order to increase wealth and prosperity for all. We will continue to do this by pursuing greater investment in our key drivers of Research & Development and Innovation, and by further developing our skills base.

My Department is committed to increasing wages in the economy which is why Invest NI focuses on promoting jobs that pay salaries above the private sector median.

Invest NI has a target of ensuring that 75% of inward investment jobs and 50% of local investment jobs pay salaries above the private sector median.

Ms McGahan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what his Department is doing to help the development and growth of the retail sector in Fermanagh and South Tyrone.

(AQW 46612/11-15)

Mr Bell: The Executive’s Economic Strategy provides a clear focus for supporting the retail sector and contains a range of actions aimed at revitalising our town centres and making them attractive places to invest, work and live. The policy responsibility for retail presently cuts across a number of Departments including DETI, DSD, DRD, DOE and DFP.

As Enterprise Minister I welcome opportunities for the development and growth of the retail sector, across all parts of Northern Ireland, which promote investment in the local economy and support sustainable job creation and economic growth.

My Department and Invest NI have worked closely with the full range of businesses across NI including those in the retail sector and a wide range of initiatives are available that offer support and guidance to local retailers. For example, Invest NI's Business Support Team and nibusinessinfo provides a valuable source of business information and signposting to specialist advice for retailers.

Invest NI has supported local councils to develop programmes that are open and accessible to retail businesses and they can also avail of Invest NI's wide range of workshops and seminars.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what effect Russian trade sanctions have had on local exporters.

(AQW 46632/11-15)

Mr Bell: Russian and European trade sanctions, following on from the Ukraine crises, have had a significant impact on local exporters, with the Power Generation and Materials Handling sector most affected. In this sector alone manufacturing exports fell by 61%, from £51 million to £19.8 million, in the year to March 2015.

Also, the importance of the Russian market to the EU dairy sector cannot be overstated, as it imports 33% of all cheese and 25% of all butter exported by the EU. In Northern Ireland, the milk and milk products sector has an annual turnover of over £1 billion, with 80% of its output sold in external markets. As such, the ongoing Russian sanctions will be damaging to local companies along with their EU counterparts.

Northern Ireland companies exported £70.1 million in manufactured goods to Russia in 2013/14 with the value falling by just over a third, to £39.8 million in 2014/15, up to Quarter 1 2015.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment whether he has received any assurances from Aer Lingus that flights from Northern Ireland will be protected following any potential sale of the company.

(AQW 46645/11-15)

Mr Bell: Frequent access to Heathrow, and its global connections to business and tourism markets, is important for the development of the Northern Ireland economy. The First Minister and I have urged any potential buyer, and everyone involved in the sale of Aer Lingus, to provide assurances that existing air links to and from Belfast will not be impacted as part of any proposed takeover of Aer Lingus.

While any potential sale of Aer Lingus to the International Airlines Group is a commercial matter for the airlines involved and their shareholders, the IAG Chief Executive has stated that it is the company's intention to continue to serve Northern Ireland and that the airline sees opportunities to work with George Best Belfast City Airport to further enhance connectivity.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the level of broadband provision in (i) central Bangor; and (ii) the Ward Park area of Bangor.

(AQW 46797/11-15)

Mr Bell: DETI undertook an assessment on the level of broadband provision across Northern Ireland in August 2014. A public consultation was produced to establish current and planned commercial coverage of broadband services in Northern Ireland over the next three years by existing, and any prospective, broadband infrastructure providers. This included central Bangor and the Ward Park area of Bangor.

The outcome of that analysis was the publication on DETI's website of a list of postcodes where public investment in broadband services would be permitted. This included areas of Bangor and the North Down constituency. The consultation response can be found at the following link http://www.detini.gov.uk/index/what-we-do/deti-telecoms-index/consultations_from_2014/superfast_rollout_programme_phase_2.htm

Separately OFCOM, through its infrastructure reports, publishes information on the availability of a range of telecoms services across the UK. Its most recent report indicates that superfast broadband services are widely available in central Bangor, including the Ward Park area.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what action his Department is taking to improve broadband provision in Bangor.

(AQW 46799/11-15)

Mr Bell: In February 2014, my Department contracted BT to deliver the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project (NIBIP), which will extend the availability of basic and superfast broadband to those who have limited choice across Northern Ireland.

I can confirm that, under Phase 3 of NIBIP, improvements have already been carried out to a number of premises in the Bangor area. Further details on the project can be found on the DETI website and the NI Direct platform at: <http://www.nidirect.gov.uk/index/information-and-services/leisure-home-and-community/technology-and-online-services/broadband-improvement-project.htm>.

Recognising that NIBIP will not deliver superfast broadband to all premises, my Department, in February 2015, awarded a further contract to BT for the delivery of the Superfast Roll-out Programme. This project will provide superfast broadband improvements for 38,000 premises across Northern Ireland by December 2017. An extensive survey and design process is underway and will take several months to complete. The post code areas of BT19 and BT20 are included under the intervention area of this project. However, until the survey and design process is completed, it will not be possible to say how many premises in these post code areas will benefit from the upgrades. Further details on roll-out will be published on the NI Direct platform when this becomes available.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what departmental schemes or grants are aimed at increasing broadband provision.

(AQW 46800/11-15)

Mr Bell: In February 2014, my Department contracted BT to deliver the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project (NIBIP) which will extend the availability of basic and superfast broadband to those who have limited choice across Northern Ireland.

Improvements have already been carried out for over 30,000 premises across Northern Ireland. Further details on the project can be found on the DETI website and the NI Direct platform at: <http://www.nidirect.gov.uk/index/information-and-services/leisure-home-and-community/technology-and-online-services/broadband-improvement-project.htm>.

Recognising that NIBIP will not deliver superfast broadband to all premises, my Department, in February 2015, awarded a further contract to BT for the delivery of the Superfast Roll-out Programme. This project will provide superfast broadband improvements for 38,000 premises across Northern Ireland by December 2017. An extensive survey and design process is underway and will take several months to complete. Further details on roll-out will be published on the NI Direct platform when this becomes available.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment when the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation Closure Order will be tabled in the Assembly.

(AQW 46815/11-15)

Mr Bell: It is my intention to bring forward the Renewables Obligation Closure Order (Northern Ireland) 2015 as soon as possible.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail what plans his Department has to phase out Renewables Obligation Certificates.

(AQW 46816/11-15)

Mr Bell: It is my intention to close the Northern Ireland Renewables Obligation (NIRO) to new generation from 1 April 2017. My Department has recently sought views on the closure of the NIRO and associated exceptions to closure, known as grace periods. I hope to publish a consultation response shortly.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what impact the lack of a data centre in Coleraine is having on foreign direct investment opportunities.

(AQW 46841/11-15)

Mr Bell: There is little evidence to suggest that the absence of a data centre has acted as a significant impediment to new investment. However, the development of data centres is an important component in our drive to grow the indigenous industry and attract Foreign Direct Investment.

The development of Northern Ireland's IT infrastructure to support the growth of our digital economy is a priority of the Executive. I warmly welcome any proposed private sector investment in Coleraine which would further improve Northern Ireland's already competitive ICT proposition.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail (i) how her Department has worked to improve the economic potential of Credit Unions; and (ii) any ongoing procedures to re-examine current restrictions on the lending ability of Credit Unions.

(AQW 46979/11-15)

Mr Bell:

- (i) My Department has long recognised the credit union movement as an important contributor to the economy. I acknowledge that expanding the role of Credit Unions allows the movement to improve its economic potential. To facilitate this, my Department has been working closely with the sector and regulators in identifying appropriate updates to the NI legislation governing credit unions. This will be achieved by way of the introduction of an Assembly Bill.
- (ii) On the 23 June 2015, I will introduce the Credit Union and Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies Bill in the Assembly. The Bill will remove restrictions on Northern Ireland credit unions and thereby permit them to expand further the range of services they offer to reach out to new groups. This will help enhance the range of products that a credit union can now offer customers, increasing its economic potential.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of Ofcom's announcement that broadband providers will have to give accurate information on broadband speeds to customers, with the freedom to leave contracts if that service is not received; and whether this regulation will be implemented locally.

(AQW 47058/11-15)

Mr Bell: I welcome this announcement by Ofcom.

Accurate information will help consumers with their choice of broadband provider. It is, however, important to recognise that this announcement is not a regulation as such, but a strengthening of the industry's Code of Practice.

As Ofcom is the communications regulator for the whole of the UK, Northern Ireland consumers will also benefit.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment for his assessment of the impact the decision to impose rates on renewable plants will have on the future of the renewable energy sector.

(AQW 47071/11-15)

Mr Bell: The general revaluation of non-domestic rates which came into effect in April 2015 resulted in significant increases for the renewable industry to reflect the transformation of the sector since the last revaluation in 2003. This is a cost that developers will have to take into account in making business decisions on investment in renewables.

It is my understanding that the new rates levels assessed by Land and Property Services (LPS) DFP, are broadly in line with those already in place across the UK. Any operator dissatisfied with their new valuation may submit an appeal application and present evidence to the District Valuer, LPS, with further appeal rights to the Commissioner of Valuation and the Lands Tribunal.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment to detail how the UK Super-Fast Broadband Rollout Programme funding has been allocated locally; and in what areas has service improved.

(AQW 47089/11-15)

Mr Bell: My Department awarded a contract in February 2015 to BT for the Superfast Rollout Programme. This is a UK wide programme, aimed at extending the reach of superfast broadband services across Northern Ireland, with a target completion date of 2017. Total funding of £17million has been allocated to this project, including £7.05million each from DETI and BDUK and the remainder from BT.

This project will bring more choice and improved speeds to over 38,000 premises across Northern Ireland.

The project is still at the survey and design stage and this will continue over a number of months. It is expected that the actual build stage and roll-out will commence in early 2016. Until the planning work is completed, it will not be possible to say which specific premises will benefit from this upgrade.

However, it is expected that the majority of areas that will see improved superfast broadband services, will be in rural areas.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what actions her Department is taking to ensure rural communities have access to high speed broadband.

(AQW 47099/11-15)

Mr Bell: In February 2014, my Department contracted BT to deliver the Northern Ireland Broadband Improvement Project (NIBIP), which seeks to provide improvements in access to a basic fixed-line broadband service (2Mbps) and to increase availability of fixed-line superfast broadband (24Mbps or more), across Northern Ireland by the end of 2015, and especially to those living in rural areas. Further details on the project can be found on the NI Direct platform at <http://www.nidirect.gov.uk/index/information-and-services/leisure-home-and-community/technology-and-online-services/broadband-improvement-project.htm>

Recognising that NIBIP will not deliver superfast broadband to all premises, in February 2015, my Department awarded another contract to BT for the Superfast Rollout Programme. This is a £17 million project aimed at extending the reach of superfast broadband services across Northern Ireland, with a target completion date of 2017. A contract for this Programme was signed on 27 February 2015 and will bring more choice and improved speeds to over 38,000 premises across Northern Ireland.

The Project has begun with an extensive survey and design process, which will continue over a number of months. Until this planning work is completed, it will not be possible to say what specific premises will benefit from this upgrade. However, it is expected that the majority of premises that will see improved superfast broadband services will be in rural areas.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Enterprise, Trade and Investment what his Department has done to improve broadband connection in the Dark Hedges area.

(AQW 47241/11-15)

Mr Bell: The Next Generation Broadband Project, which was completed in 2010, resulted in 1,265 street cabinets across Northern Ireland, (including 4 in the Armoy exchange, which serves the Dark Hedges area) being fibre-enabled, making them capable of carrying services of up to 40 Megabits per second. This public project acted as a catalyst for additional investment by BT, under which it upgraded a further 1,201 cabinets across its network. This has led to Northern Ireland having the highest availability of superfast broadband services in the UK.

In February 2015, following a public consultation, my Department awarded a contract to BT for the Superfast Rollout Programme. This is a £17 million project aimed at extending the reach of superfast broadband services across Northern Ireland, with a target completion date of December 2017. It is anticipated that this project will bring more choice and improved speeds to over 38,000 premises across Northern Ireland, particularly in rural areas.

The project has now commenced with an extensive survey and design process, which will continue over the next few months. I can confirm that a number of postcodes for the Dark Hedges area have been included in Phase 3 of this project. However, until this planning work is completed, it will not be possible to say what specific premises will benefit from this upgrade.

Department of the Environment

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment how he will avoid EU infractions arising from non-compliance with regard to (i) Modiolus modiolus horse mussel biogenic reefs of Strangford Lough; and (ii) other statutory obligations to monitor and restore designated species and habitats, in the absence of Natural Heritage Research Partnership.

(AQW 46266/11-15)

Mr Durkan (The Minister of the Environment): Responsibility for the protection of horse mussel reefs in Strangford Lough rests with DOE and DARD.

The European Commission closed the infraction case relating to the Strangford Lough horse mussel reefs in 2013 on the basis that both departments delivered on an action plan agreed by the Commission.

A Restoration Working Group was set up to monitor progress against the plan. In addition to officials from DOE and DARD the group comprises interested stakeholders including Ulster Wildlife, the complainant to the Commission.

The group is satisfied with progress to date and has just completed its mid-term review of the plan. As a consequence, the plan is now being revised and the group hopes to ratify these revisions in June before seeking further approval from the Commission shortly thereafter. I understand from informal discussions between my officials and officials from the Commission, that the Commission is broadly content with the proposed changes.

As regards wider obligations, my Department has been subject to the largest budget cuts of all Government departments despite my warnings of the impact on a diverse range of educational, public sector, voluntary, community based and private sector organisations, my opposition to and voting against the budget. Under direction my officials have been exploring new and innovative ways to deliver our statutory obligations to monitor and restore species and habitats within a context of a much reduced resource availability.

The Natural Heritage Research Partnership was one of the delivery mechanisms that had been utilised to provide quality data for evidence to underpin decision making in relation to a number of our statutory obligations to monitor and restore designated species and habitats. The Department is currently exploring alternative options to ensure delivery of our statutory obligations to monitor and restore designated species and habitats. I can also confirm that a bid of £1 million has been submitted at the June Monitoring Round to enhance the funding available to third parties for delivery of key environmental outcomes. This bid covers activities such as protecting our landscape, species and access to the countryside; the designation process and assessment of the condition and extent of modiolus biogenic reef in Strangford Lough including seabed mapping, ground truthing surveys and sample analysis and the essential monitoring of other high quality EU habitats and species such as the fresh water pearl mussel, Irish hare, and blanket bog.

My officials also use a range of other mechanisms to gather such evidence. This includes in house monitoring and surveillance activities, focused delivery through the Natural Environment Fund, influencing other funding sources e.g. INTERREG Va, and working with larger bodies to create more efficient delivery mechanisms at national levels e.g. JNCC. With respect to the infraction risk associated with monitoring and restoration I will continue to prioritise Departmental work to mitigate those risks.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of the Environment to detail every ministerial direction issued by his Department since May 2007 including the (i) date; and (ii) the nature of each.

(AQW 46404/11-15)

Mr Durkan: There have been no ministerial directions issued since May 2007.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment whether (i) mandatory rest periods are to be introduced for taxi drivers in line with HGV drivers; and (ii) this is included in existing legislation within the Road Traffic (NI) Order 1981, but has not been enforced, and if so why this was permitted.

(AQW 46495/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- i My department currently has no plans to introduce mandatory rest periods for taxi drivers.
- ii. There is no mandatory rest requirement for taxi drivers in either the Road Traffic Order (Northern Ireland) 1981 or in secondary legislation made under it.

Section 56 of the Road Traffic (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, in conjunction with section 63, provides the department with the power to make regulations with regard to the limitation of continuous hours of duty of drivers for both goods and public service vehicles. These regulations are set out in the Vehicles (Drivers' Hours of Duty) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1991. Regulation 3(d) provides the exemption from the regulations for a public service vehicle seating not more than 8 passengers in addition to the driver. Therefore, there are no such regulations or requirements pertaining to taxi drivers that the department would enforce against.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the (i) material; (ii) functional; and (iii) financial differences in his Department's preferred Digitax F1 Plus taxi meter compared to the Digitax F2 Plus and Digitax F3 Plus.

(AQW 46499/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) recently conducted a procurement exercise to acquire a taximeter to assist in developing standards and procedures for the new taximeter approval and testing scheme.

The original procurement correspondence, which specified the Digitax F1 Plus model of taximeter, was later revised to the Digitax F3 Plus model as it is a more modern Measuring Instruments Directive compliant taximeter. The DVA did not consider the material, functional or financial differences of the Digitax taximeters.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department records the make, model and serial number of a meter when completing a public service vehicle or taxi meter test; and if not, why the data isn't recorded.

(AQW 46569/11-15)

Mr Durkan: When conducting the annual roadworthiness inspection the vehicle examiner checks the make and model of the taximeter against an approved list and records compliance.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) the extent of his Department's monitoring of (a) Terns; (b) Grebes; and (c) Special Protection Area features, in the Lough Neagh Special Protection Area; and (ii) the findings of this monitoring.

(AQW 46637/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Northern Ireland Environment Agency, in conjunction with a number of partner organisations, monitors the Lough Neagh and Lough Beg Special Protection Area to assess changes in the bird populations for which the site was classified.

Monitoring of the breeding birds (including Common Tern) is achieved through a mixture of annual site monitoring (e.g. breeding Common Tern by the RSPB) and less frequent contracted surveys (e.g. Great Crested Grebe).

Monitoring of the passage and wintering waterbirds (including Great Crested Grebe) at this site is undertaken as part of the UK Wetlands Birds Survey (WeBS) programme with monthly counts of the SPA and wider area through the Autumn and Winter periods each year.

The formal assessment of the SPA condition is determined by a comparison of recent monitoring data against the historic populations at the time of designation. This is undertaken every 6 years and was last done in 2013.

Monitoring has shown that populations in the SPA of both Common Tern and Great Crested Grebe are now higher than at the time of the SPA designation. This assessment includes breeding, migrating and wintering Great Crested Grebe populations each of which are a feature of the SPA.

In addition to the above, wintering populations of Whooper Swan, Golden Plover and Scaup have all increased since designation.

A number of populations have declined since designation; these are Bewick's Swan, Tufted Duck, Pochard and Goldeneye.

In addition, Lough Neagh and Lough Beg SPA was classified for its total wintering waterbird population. This has also fallen due to the declines in the numbers of duck which made up a high proportion of the overall wintering bird numbers.

Of the species which have declined, research suggests that Bewick's Swan in Ireland have been affected by a combination of changing migration patterns, with fewer birds now wintering in Ireland, together with overall declines in the breeding population.

Research at Lough Neagh and elsewhere suggest that the declines in Tufted Duck, Pochard and Goldeneye populations are probably due to changes in migration patterns with more birds wintering closer to their breeding grounds.

Linked research suggests that a reduction in food availability in Lough Neagh may also be a factor. This is possibly a result of improvement in water quality. However, other independent work has indicated that food availability is unlikely to be a limiting factor due to the sheer abundance of invertebrates on the bed of the Lough.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department has received correspondence from (i) the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs; (ii) the European Commission; and (iii) any other European institution on (a) the Lough Neagh Special Protection Area; and (b) any failure to comply with European directives; and if so, provide the content of that correspondence.

(AQW 46650/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My Department has recently received correspondence from the European Commission, via DEFRA known as a 'pilot' case. This case seeks clarification on allegations relating to a number of environmental matters, including reference to the Lough Neagh Special Protection Area.

In addition to the Pilot case the Commission has, through the infraction process, raised other concerns with the UK as a Member State relating to various environmental directives. As has been the case in the past, whether infraction proceedings relate to the UK as a whole or Northern Ireland in particular, we will either seek to demonstrate that compliance has been achieved or prioritise any actions necessary to achieve full compliance to the satisfaction of the Commission.

Given the sensitivities around the infraction process, which is quasi-legal in nature, and in line with protocol, correspondence between the Commission and the Member State on infraction cases is regarded by both parties as confidential between them. I can however assure you that my Department and I are taking all steps necessary to minimise the risk of any infraction penalties.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment (i) whether a taxi meter only needs to be retested if the seal is broken; and if so, is this safety compliant and efficient in fraud prevention; and if not (ii) to detail all instances when a taxi meter needs to be retested.

(AQW 46687/11-15)

Mr Durkan:

- (i) The Driver & Vehicle Agency (DVA) tests taximeters on Belfast Public Hire taxis only. The taximeter test is carried out every year at the time of the taxis annual roadworthiness test where, after establishing the accuracy of the settings within the taximeter, the examiner seals the taximeter and seals the taximeter into the taxi to prevent tampering.

The taximeter test is not a safety compliance test. However, location and safe installation would be considered by the examiner at the time of test.

- (ii) Owners/operators of Belfast Public Hire taxis can request to have a taximeter retested at any time during the life of the taxi licence. The reasons for requesting a taximeter retest are:

- a a different taximeter has been installed;
- b the tariff programme has been changed;
- c the seals are broken or missing; or
- d components within the taxi have been changed and affect the taximeter settings, such as signal generator pulse or different road tyre circumference.

The DVA Enforcement & Compliance team can also have a taximeter retested if they suspect that it has been tampered with.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQO 8158/11-15, where the £0.5 million has been allocated. (AQW 46698/11-15)

Mr Durkan: Since the budget was announced, I have allocated over £2 million from the Carrier Bag Levy Fund for the environment giving some relief to environmental groups and programmes. Of this £2 million, £0.5m is to be spent on Listed Building grant schemes. The focus will be on supporting existing restoration and maintenance projects, in buildings that provide facilities for community access and use, including churches, and I expect to make an announcement on the funding allocation details shortly.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment to detail (i) why Stop Notices were not served on unregulated sand traders operating in the Lough Neagh Special Protection Area; and (ii) whether unauthorised development will be allowed to continue if an appeal to an Enforcement Notice is lodged by a trader, while the appeal decision is being determined.

(AQW 46711/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials served enforcement notice on 27 May 2015. The Department considers this the appropriate action to be taken at this time.

As this is an ongoing formal enforcement case, my Department is not in a position to comment further at this stage.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment whether his Department has been approached by, or met with, environmental consultants to advise on the content of an Environmental Impact Statement or Habitats Regulation Assessment, in relation to the unauthorised sand extraction from the Lough Neagh Special Protection Area.

(AQW 46712/11-15)

Mr Durkan: My officials have been engaged in pre-application discussions with agents acting on behalf of the Lough Neagh sand traders.

Mr McCarthy asked the Minister of the Environment whether any land ownership or access issues are inhibiting the Northern Ireland Environment Agency from making the necessary repairs to enable access to the Waterfall Walk in Crawfordsburn Country Park.

(AQW 46729/11-15)

Mr Durkan: There are no ownership or access issues preventing access to make repairs. However, senior engineers have advised that the steep slope on the left side of the Crawford's Burn, into which the closed path was cut, is inherently unstable.

With the prospect of further landslips I have asked NIEA to explore the creation of an alternative access path. Subject to the availability of capital funding, this would provide a long term solution and ensure public safety.

The outcome of a current bid for funding will determine whether the works can progress this financial year.

Meanwhile visitors to Crawfordsburn Country Park wishing to see the waterfall behind Crawfordsburn Village can still access the viewing platform from the path on the right bank of the Crawford's Burn.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, in relation to enquiries made by the PSNI and Trading Standards on tampering with taxi meters or the possession of any device capable of tampering with taxi meters, to provide, or place in the Assembly library, a copy of his Department's response to those enquiries.

(AQW 46758/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I am not aware of any enquiries received by my Department from PSNI or Trading Standards regarding tampering with taximeters or the possession of devices capable of tampering with taxi meters.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment to provide, or place in the Assembly library, a list of the taxi meter manufacturers' approved agents.

(AQW 46759/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The table below lists the details of manufacturers' approved agents held by the Driver & Vehicle Agency:

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of the Environment to detail what incentives his Department has in place to encourage supermarkets to donate food to local charities.

(AQW 46771/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As part of its Rethink Waste initiative the Department has allocated funding to support the establishment of outlets to allow supermarkets to donate food to local charities.

Since 2010 Fareshare have been awarded £112,500 of Rethink Waste revenue funding to cover set-up and running costs, including the rental of premises and refrigerated vehicles suitable for the transport of food.

Fareshare are working with approximately 40 suppliers, retailers and distributors. Supermarket chains Tesco, Sainsbury's and ASDA regularly deliver 'in-date' surpluses across all food types to the Fareshare food re-distribution depot in Belfast. The deliveries include cereals, breads, fresh fruit and vegetables and fresh and frozen meats. Local producers Dale Farm, Britvic, Dublin Meade and Clandeboye are also supporting the FareShare scheme.

Fareshare currently supplies 70 charities across Northern Ireland with surplus food on a weekly basis. These charities are providing meals to low-income families, senior citizens, lone parents, homeless people, 'at-risk' young people and destitute foreign nationals. In total they supply around 155 tonnes of surplus food every year to charitable causes which equates to 370,000 meals.

A further scheme, Food Cloud, was awarded £28,600 last year from the Rethink Waste revenue fund for a project to reduce waste in the retail sector. Food Cloud are a partner with City Church.

The award was based on the reduction of food waste in the retail sector by facilitating a link between businesses and charities by implementing a Food Cloud Network for use with mobile phones and website software.

The aim of this Project was to reduce food waste in the retail sector, supporting implementation of environmental best practice in participating food donation businesses and charities and educating project participants with regard to food wastage during the production of fresh vegetables.

In line with its 'Love Food Hate Waste' campaign the Department has been working more broadly to considerably reduce food waste across all sectors.

Belfast was chosen by WRAP (who are funded by the Department) as one of the 10 cities in the UK to focus on fighting food waste in 2014-16, helping the people of Belfast to 'do one thing differently' - changing kitchen habits and showing it is possible for everyone to make a difference and prevent our food from becoming waste. The initiative is in partnership with Tesco and Belfast City Council.

"10 Cities" was officially launched in the centre of Belfast in September 2014 and as part of 'Love Food Hate Waste' saw thousands of people come along to pledge their support to reduce their household food waste.

The Hospitality and Food Services Agreement (HaFS) has been developed with industry input and assistance, to build on the sector's achievements to reduce food and packaging waste arising in restaurants, hotels, foodservice, pubs and canteens across the whole of the UK. The aims were also to have a more sustainable management of waste that does arise. This is a voluntary agreement to support the hospitality sector to reduce waste.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment, following a briefing on 24th February 2015, to detail the reasoning behind his Department's three month delay in taking formal enforcement action over sand extraction from Lough Neagh.
(AQW 46802/11-15)

Mr Durkan: As this is an ongoing formal enforcement case, my Department is not in a position to comment further at this stage.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of the Environment to detail the (i) number of fixed penalty notices issued for littering offences, broken down by local council area for each of the last four years; and (ii) total revenue generated for each year.
(AQW 46809/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department requests information on fixed penalty notices issued by district councils after the end of each financial year. The following table sets out the number of fixed penalty notices issued by each district council for litter offences in the four financial years from 2010/11 to 2013/14. Information on fixed penalty notices issued during the 2014/15 year has not yet been collated.

You may note that the receipts generated are not directly proportional to the number of notices issued. This is due to a number of factors, including: non-payment of fixed penalty notices – some may be withdrawn and others pursued through the courts; the application of discounts for early payment; and the raising of the maximum penalty from £50 to £80 through the Clean Neighbourhoods and Environment Act (Northern Ireland) 2011.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of the Environment, given the Road Traffic Act 1981 states that tampering with taxi meters in an offence, to detail (i) the actions taken by his Department in relation to people found with equipment enabling installation, calibration and tariff abuses of taxi meters, particularly if it is unauthorised, stolen or unlawfully obtained; (ii) the number of times this has occurred; and (iii) whether all such instances are reported to the PSNI.

(AQW 46919/11-15)

Mr Durkan: I refer the member to my response to AQW 46421/11-15.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of the Environment, pursuant to AQW 46353/11-15, whether the guidance being prepared for processing renewable energy applications can be issued before the Strategic Planning Policy Statement is approved.

(AQW 46942/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The guidance is currently being finalised but its release is not linked to the publication of the SPPS. I have however committed to liaising with the Department for Enterprise, Trade and Investment before the guidance is finally made available. It is intended to release the guidance as soon as possible after this consultation is complete.

As stated in AQW 46353/11-15, the review of strategic renewable energy policy is linked to the publication of the SPPS.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of the Environment when the next stakeholder group meeting will be held to discuss the progress made and the concerns which persist with the Mobuoy Road illegal landfill site.

(AQW 46952/11-15)

Mr Durkan: The Department, at the Minister's direction, has set up a project team to consider the management of the site and the longer term options for its remediation. On this basis the Northern Environment Agency (NIEA) has commenced a detailed investigation of the illegal waste at the Mobuoy Road illegal waste sites. The outcome of this work will produce a comprehensive picture of the potential impacts of this waste and identify sustainable remediation solutions to address these.

You may be aware a stakeholder meeting was held at Derry City Council offices on 6 February 2015 to keep stakeholders informed about this project and also to take their views. Representatives included Local planning officers, DRD / Transport NI officers, River Faughan Anglers, Zero Waste North West and Friends of the Earth, along with other stakeholders attended this meeting.

The project is due to report on the final remediation options, including the short/medium term and long term options, in the early part of July 2015. NIEA will need further time to have the options peer reviewed, alongside further time to consider all of the outputs before further presentation to the stakeholders at a further meeting with the expectation this will happen in September 2015. NIEA will, of course, invite you to this event.

Department of Finance and Personnel

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) why AQW 33937/11-15 remains unanswered; (ii) when he was provided with a draft answer by officials; and (iii) when he will provide an answer to the question.

(AQW 41691/11-15)

Mr Hamilton (The Minister of Finance and Personnel): AQW 33937/11-15 was answered on 10 June 2015.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether her Department, on behalf of the Executive, has signed a Memorandum of Understanding with Cerberus; and if not, whether a draft Memorandum of Understanding ever existed, and if so, why it was not executed.

(AQW 46431/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The regulation of financial services is a reserved matter and my Department does not have any formal authority in this regard. Rather, it is for the proper, regulatory authorities to ensure businesses operating in the financial services industry comply with the legally defined standards of conduct and prudential management.

My Department does not have a Memorandum of Understanding with Cerberus. However, arrangements are in place whereby my officials meet with representatives of Cerberus on a regular basis to discuss the firm's activities in Northern Ireland and where they emphasise my expectation that borrowers are treated in a balanced, fair and transparent manner.

Cerberus is an investor with global experience of improving the assets it acquires and which also has the ability to invest in those assets. On that basis, I would hope Cerberus will have a positive impact in Northern Ireland. But it is too early to form a definitive view at this stage. Nor am I in a position to comment on the likely duration of Cerberus' activity in Northern Ireland. That is a matter for the firm itself.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether Cerberus is licensed to act as a bank in Northern Ireland; and if it is subject to the Financial Services Authority.

(AQW 46432/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The regulation of financial services is a reserved matter and my Department does not have any formal authority in this regard. Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for her assessment of whether Cerberus is treating Northern Ireland businesses in a balanced, fair and transparent manner and what mechanisms are in place to permit her to make an assessment on these matters.

(AQW 46451/11-15)

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for her assessment of how Cerberus is treating local businesses whose debts are not significantly impaired.

(AQW 46452/11-15)

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for her assessment of whether the actions of Cerberus are making a positive contribution to the Northern Ireland economy and on what does she base her assessment.

(AQW 46508/11-15)

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the total annual cost of employing a temporary agency worker at Executive Officer 1 grade for the financial year 2014/15, compared with the total annual cost, including NICS Nuvos

Pension and National Insurance Contributions, of a permanent NICS employee on step 1 of the Executive Officer 1 grade pay scale.

(AQW 46566/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The total annual cost, including NICS Nuvo Pension and National Insurance Contributions, of a permanent NICS employee on step 1 of the Executive Officer 1 grade pay scale is £32833.68.

The total annual cost of employing a temporary agency worker at Executive Officer 1 grade for the financial year 2014/15 cannot be released as this information is commercially sensitive.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether her Department has stipulated that a 'Swedish Derogation' and/or 'Regulation 10' clause be invoked when hiring temporary agency staff and temporary contract workers to fill posts within NICS, in order to circumvent the equal pay requirements under Regulation 5 of the Agency Workers' Regulations (NI) 2011.

(AQW 46570/11-15)

Mrs Foster: No. I can confirm that no stipulation has ever been made by my Department with regards to invocation of 'Swedish Derogation' or 'Regulation 10' clause to circumvent the equal pay requirements under the Agency Workers' Regulations (NI) 2011.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether the inclusion of a 'Swedish Derogation' and/or 'Regulation 10' clause in temporary agency worker contracts formed a key factor in the decision to award Contract P3436 (Supply of Temporary/short term, Workers to NICS 2011) to Kennedy Recruitment, Premier Employment Group Ltd, and Brooke Street Bureau PLC, in November 2011.

(AQW 46571/11-15)

Mrs Foster: No, the inclusion of a 'Swedish Derogation' or 'Regulation 10' clause in the temporary worker contracts had no bearing on the award of the contract.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, pursuant to AQW 46196/11-15, for her Department's assessment of the business case, including that of senior officials and of any observations noted by her predecessors.

(AQW 46664/11-15)

Mrs Foster: As stated in my answers to AQW 46196/11-15 and AQW 46201/11-15, the Minister of Agriculture and Rural Development's decision to direct her Accounting Officer to relocate the headquarters to Ballykelly was agreed, on behalf of the Executive, by the First Minister and deputy First Minister. My Department therefore had no role in the assessment or approval of the business case in support of the Agriculture Minister's decision.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel (i) whether umbrella companies are used as part of the recruitment and payroll process for temporary agency workers hired by the NI Civil Service and (ii) what steps her Department take to ensure legal compliance with the Agency Workers' Regulation (Northern Ireland) 2011.

(AQW 46671/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The majority of temporary workers assigned to NICS by Kennedy Recruitment have their recruitment and payroll processed by umbrella companies. No temporary workers assigned to NICS by Premiere have their recruitment and payroll processed through umbrella companies. Apple Recruitment provides temporary accountants and auditors to the NICS and at present do not use umbrella companies as part of their recruitment and payroll process.

Monitoring compliance with the Agency Workers' Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2011 does not fall within the remit of my Department.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail how many temporary workers were employed on Swedish Derogation or Regulation 10 contracts by (i) Kennedy Recruitment; (ii) Premier Employment Group Ltd; and (iii) Brook Street Bureau PLC for each year between 2011 and 2015.

(AQW 46681/11-15)

Mrs Foster: For temporary workers provided by Kennedy Recruitment all assignees to NICS operated under Swedish Derogation contracts. The number for each assignees each year is as the table below:

(i)

Year	No. Swedish derogation contracts
2011	46
2012	325
2013	410
2014	350

Year	No. Swedish derogation contracts
2015	163

- (ii) For temporary workers provided by Premiere no assignees operated under Swedish Derogation contracts.
- (iii) Brook Street is no longer a contracted supplier to the NICS for temporary worker services.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail who is the legal employer of temporary agency staff and temporary contract workers employed in the NICS through Kennedy Recruitment, Premier Employment Group Ltd and Brook Street Bureau PLC.

(AQW 46682/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Temporary workers provided by Kennedy:-

Kennedy Recruitment Ltd is the legal employer for some temporary workers assigned to NICS. However, the majority of temporary workers provided by Kennedy Recruitment Ltd are employed by the Zeva Group of companies.

Temporary workers provided by Premiere:-

The legal employer of all workers assigned to NICS by Premier Employment Group Ltd is Premier Employment Group Ltd.

Brook Street is no longer a contracted supplier to the NICS for temporary workers.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, in pursuant to AQW 45852/11-15, on what basis is it asserted that where Special Advisers are reappointed within one week of their previous NI Civil Service employment being terminated, they are considered to be in continuous employment, given that their first contract terminated and a new contract is required.

(AQW 46699/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The NICS Staff Handbook applies to Special Advisers, with the exception of those elements specifically covered in the Special Adviser Code. The Handbook sets out that previous service should count as continuous service provided there is no break in service: a break in service is defined as a period of at least one week.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail why temporary agency workers employed within the NI Civil Service do not receive equal pay commensurate with their permanent colleagues after twelve weeks continuous employment.

(AQW 46723/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The NICS contract for the supply of temporary workers to the NICS has been set up to comply with the Agency Workers Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2011. The legislation gives agency workers the right to the same basic employment and working conditions (including pay) as if they had been recruited directly, if/when they complete a qualifying period of 12 weeks in the same job. However, as per the Regulations, those agency workers who have signed up to the Swedish Derogation with their agency, are not entitled to the same pay as this effectively waives their right to equal pay.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel if she has met or plans to meet with George Osborne to discuss further cuts to the Executive Budget.

(AQW 46747/11-15)

Mrs Foster: I anticipate meeting with HM Treasury Ministers in the coming months.

My officials will continue to engage with their counterparts in HM Treasury on a wide range of public expenditure issues including the latest cuts to the Executive's Budget.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the relationship between her Department, Kennedy Recruitment and the business entity trading variously as Zeva/Corvus Contact Ltd/UKPA Ltd.

(AQW 46776/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Kennedy Recruitment was awarded a contract by the Department of Finance and Personnel in November 2011 on behalf of all NI Government departments and their sponsored bodies for temporary/short term workers to the NICS. This contract is due to expire on 30 November 2016. The Department has no contracts with Zeva/Corvus Contact Ltd or UKPA Ltd for the provision of temporary workers.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the estimate the total monetary value of wages withheld from temporary agency workers hired by the NI Civil Service, through the use of a 'Swedish Derogation' and/or 'Regulation 10' clause, between the awarding of Contract P3436 (Supply of Temporary /Short-term Workers to NI Civil Service 2011) in November 2011 and March 2015, compared to providing these workers with their equal pay rights as stipulated by Regulation 5 of the Agency Workers' Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2011.

(AQW 46778/11-15)

Mrs Foster: No wages have been withheld from temporary workers hired by the NI Civil service through agencies who use the Swedish Derogation Model/Regulation 10 clause, between the awarding of contract P3436 (Supply of Temporary/Short-term Workers to the NI Civil Service 2011) in November 2011 and March 2015.

The NICS contract for the supply of temporary workers to the NICS has been set up to comply with the Agency Workers Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2011 and staff have been paid accordingly. The legislation gives agency workers the right to the same basic employment and working conditions (including pay) as if they had been recruited directly, if/when they complete a qualifying period of 12 weeks in the same job. However, as per the Regulations, those agency workers who have signed up to the Swedish Derogation with their agency are not entitled to the same pay as this effectively waives their right to equal pay.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to confirm that temporary agency workers who have worked for more than 12 continuous weeks within the NI civil Service under a 'Swedish Derogation' and/or Regulation 10' contract will automatically receive a minimum of the four weeks 'between assignments pay' at National Minimum Wage once their contract concludes, in accordance with Regulation 10 of the Agency Workers' Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2011, unless the agency first finds them a suitable post within that time line.

(AQW 46782/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The NICS contract for the supply of temporary workers to the NICS has been set up to comply with the Agency Workers Regulations (Northern Ireland) 2011. The regulations provide that those agency workers who have signed up to Swedish Derogation/Regulation 10 contracts with their agencies will receive pay between assignments of at least 50% of the assignment pay, and not below the National Minimum Wage. In addition, the pay between assignments must be at least 4 weeks' pay before the contract is terminated.

Mr Dickson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail any Personal Tax Relief Schemes onto which temporary agency workers within the NI Civil Service are automatically enrolled, either by (i) the contracted temporary worker agency or (ii) an assigned 'umbrella' company.

(AQW 46784/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Department does not hold this information. This is a matter between the temporary worker and their employer. The Department is not the employer of temporary workers.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) what plans are underway to decentralise public sector jobs within her Department; and (ii) the number of jobs that will be relocated to South Down.

(AQW 46791/11-15)

Mrs Foster: There are no plans underway to decentralise public sector jobs within the Department of Finance and Personnel and there are no plans at present to relocate any posts to the South Down area.

Ms Lo asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for (i) an update on the Voluntary Exit Scheme and (ii) what consideration is being given to Civil Servants who have been given a conditional offer.

(AQW 46792/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The Scheme Information Booklet indicated that the progress of the Scheme was dependent upon funding for compensation costs being made available as part of the Stormont House Agreement. It had been anticipated that this funding would have been confirmed by now. Unfortunately that is not the case. However, in order for the Scheme to proceed, conditional offers have been issued to those staff selected to leave in the first tranche at the end of September, subject to funding becoming available. All other applicants have been informed that they have not yet been selected, until the position becomes clearer.

I can confirm that on 29 May 2015, the Head of the Civil Service issued a note to all staff to update them on the decision to proceed with conditional offers and next steps.

I appreciate the uncertainty this creates for those selected and hope that the funding position will be favourably resolved as soon as possible and before the end of August, which would be the cut-off point at which this group would have to be informed whether they are leaving on 30th September 2015, or not.

Staff have been assured that they will be provided with an update on the funding position when it becomes clearer and how it will impact on the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel whether all Civil Servants, upon commencing their employment, are offered the opportunity to add to their pension entitlement; and, how is this information communicated.

(AQW 46927/11-15)

Mrs Foster: All Civil Servants upon commencing their employment are issued with a New Entrant Starter Pack. This pack contains a booklet outlining the benefits of the pension scheme, which includes the opportunity to increase pension benefits.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail (i) the number of official cars provided for Civil Servants and (ii) the total cost of these vehicles in each of the last five years.

(AQW 46939/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Official cars are not provided for civil servants.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail on what basis are renewable energy sources, including wind turbines and hydro plants, being subjected to rates.

(AQW 47008/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Renewable energy sources are valued on exactly the same basis as other forms of energy generation, namely, on an estimate of the facility's 2013 annual rental value. To do otherwise would contravene EU State Aid rules. This is also the same basis that is applied to all other non domestic rateable property. The legislation does not lay out how the valuation should be arrived at. This is something that is established through the courts and tribunals both in NI and elsewhere in the UK. Accordingly, Land & Property Services (LPS) will adopt whatever methodology is appropriate. Energy sources, including renewable energy, tend to be valued using the receipts and expenditure method of valuation, given the absence of direct and reliable market rental evidence.

The rating system must value all rateable properties in a consistent manner and this does not allow discounts to be given for subsidised sectors of business. Reliefs can be and are given in certain circumstances to specific sectors, however, the circumstances in which these can be given is limited due to EU State Aid considerations. For example small business rate relief is able to operate under de-minimus rules because it allows a maximum possible annual relief of £1,789 per property and it applies across all sectors; industrial derating was introduced in 1929 and is therefore allowable as 'pre-accession aid'.

Renewable energy sources have always been subject to rates throughout the UK, as is the case with all business activities that are part of the built environment. There was no decision point nor was there any impact assessment carried out.

As Finance Minister I cannot interfere with the basis used for calculating rate bills. Land & Property Services (LPS) is the statutory authority for valuation assessment, billing and collection of rates and this is governed by the provisions of the Rates (NI) Order 1977, and is consistent with the methodology for calculation utilised in the rest of the UK. This legislation is fully devolved and any change to the current arrangements would be for the Assembly to approve.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail her Department's rationale in applying a Renewable Obligation Certificate payment to encourage renewables and then introduce rates on such facilities.

(AQW 47009/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Renewable energy sources are valued on exactly the same basis as other forms of energy generation, namely, on an estimate of the facility's 2013 annual rental value. To do otherwise would contravene EU State Aid rules. This is also the same basis that is applied to all other non domestic rateable property. The legislation does not lay out how the valuation should be arrived at. This is something that is established through the courts and tribunals both in NI and elsewhere in the UK. Accordingly, Land & Property Services (LPS) will adopt whatever methodology is appropriate. Energy sources, including renewable energy, tend to be valued using the receipts and expenditure method of valuation, given the absence of direct and reliable market rental evidence.

The rating system must value all rateable properties in a consistent manner and this does not allow discounts to be given for subsidised sectors of business. Reliefs can be and are given in certain circumstances to specific sectors, however, the circumstances in which these can be given is limited due to EU State Aid considerations. For example small business rate relief is able to operate under de-minimus rules because it allows a maximum possible annual relief of £1,789 per property and it applies across all sectors; industrial derating was introduced in 1929 and is therefore allowable as 'pre-accession aid'.

Renewable energy sources have always been subject to rates throughout the UK, as is the case with all business activities that are part of the built environment. There was no decision point nor was there any impact assessment carried out.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail what impact assessment was conducted on the viability of the renewable energy industry before the decision was taken to impose rates on renewable energy sources, including wind turbines and hydro plants.

(AQW 47010/11-15)

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of 'Meet the Buyer' events which have been facilitated by the Central Procurement Directorate, in each of the last three years, broken down by Constituency.
(AQW 47024/11-15)

Mrs Foster: CPD does not directly facilitate 'Meet the Buyer' events; however it participates in Meet the Buyer and supplier awareness / training events which are facilitated by a broad range of bodies. CPD participates in these events by providing an overview of public procurement policy and processes, and highlighting tendering opportunities for central government contracts.

The number of 'Meet the Buyer' events in which CPD has participated, in each of the last three years, broken down by Constituency, is detailed in the attached table.

Mr Dobson asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel for an update on the issue of equal pay for the Department of Justice and former Northern Ireland Office staff.

(AQW 47037/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The matter remains with the Executive for consideration.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the capital infrastructure projects financed by his Department in Foyle in 2014/15; and the cost of each project.

(AQW 47042/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Audited figures for total spend on capital infrastructure projects financed by the Department of Finance and Personnel in 2014-15 are not yet available.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail his rationale for the calculation deployed in imposing rates demands on renewable energy sources, including wind turbines and hydro plants.

(AQW 47035/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Renewable energy sources are valued on exactly the same basis as other forms of energy generation, namely, on an estimate of the facility's 2013 annual rental value. To do otherwise would contravene EU State Aid rules. This is also the same basis that is applied to all other non domestic rateable property. This legislation is fully devolved and any change to the current arrangements would be for the Assembly to approve.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel how many years back payment can Land and Property Services demand for non-payment of rates.

(AQW 47097/11-15)

Mrs Foster: Subject to a few exceptions, Land & Property Services (LPS) has a statutory duty under The Rates (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 (as amended) to demand payment for rates from the date liability commenced. A common exception is a revision to the Valuation List following a revaluation, where liability is constrained to the effective date of the revaluation. The Statute of Limitations (Northern Ireland) limits recovery of rate monies billed (rating debt) to 6 years.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel what consideration his Department has given to outcome based budgeting.

(AQW 47101/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department has previously engaged with the Finance and Personnel Committee on the issue of outcome based budgeting and the details of these discussions are set out in Hansard.

Linking budgets to outcomes for the purposes of determining allocations is extremely complex. There are a number of practical difficulties, not least of which is cost. There are a number of other issues such as concerns around transparency of budgeting and the potential for distorting behaviour. A switch to outcome based budgeting would require a fundamental change to the budgeting system currently in place and I am not of the opinion that the end result would merit the cost of such a change.

Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel, whether his Department has considered the pooling of funds and resources between Departments in order to achieve shared objectives.

(AQW 47103/11-15)

Mrs Foster: My Department is keen to explore avenues to better use resources to achieve shared objectives. It was with this in mind that the Budget 2015-16, announced in this Assembly in January 2015, included a £30 million Change Fund.

One of the aims of the Change Fund is to improve integration and collaboration between government departments, arms length bodies, the private sector and the third sector. The Fund was oversubscribed by five times its value illustrating its value and the commitment of Ministers to the principles of reform. Bids were assessed and scored and the 19 successful projects were detailed in Table 5 of the Final Budget document.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Finance and Personnel to detail the number of posts due to be released in the first tranche of the Voluntary Exit Scheme, broken down by Department,

(AQW 47128/11-15)

Mrs Foster: The first 1,200 staff with the best value for money scores have been selected and these staff received conditional offers on 2 June, subject to the necessary funding becoming available in order for these staff to leave.

The number of posts that will be released in the first tranche of the Voluntary Exit Scheme cannot be determined until acceptances have been received, the closing date for which is 30th June 2015. The breakdown in the overall number of posts selected by Departments is outlined in the table attached at Annex A.

Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what is the scale of cuts, in both actual and percentage terms, being implemented in his Department's budget in 2015/16, specifying the level of cut in each programme.
(AQW 45002/11-15)

Mr Wells (The Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety): My Department's budget for 2015/16 has increased by £155m, or 3.4%, compared to 2014/15.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the savings from the rejection of the NHS Pay Review Body's 1 per cent pay uplift recommendation for 2014/2015; and for a breakdown of how this money had been invested in Health and Social Care.
(AQW 45311/11-15)

Mr Wells: The decision not to implement the NHS Pay Review Body's recommendation for 2014/15 had the effect of reducing the pressures on the HSC pay bill by an estimated £12 million and hence contributed to the reduction in the Department's overall forecast funding gap in 2014/15.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what services are available to patients who have wasp or bee sting allergy.
(AQW 46039/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Emergency Departments provide full emergency and resuscitation facilities for patients having an acute allergic reaction.

Treatment, support and advice for people with wasp or bee sting allergy may be provided by GPs, hospital specialists and the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust as a tertiary centre for desensitisation therapy. Treatment is determined on a case-by-case basis and tailored to the patient's need.

The Regional immunology Service, based in the Belfast HSC Trust, provides specialist management of severe immune-mediated allergy, including venom allergy.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much has been spent on travel costs for staff in the Public Health Agency for each of the last two years.
(AQW 46091/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend by the Public Health Agency on travel costs for staff in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £342,175
- 2013/14 - £389,164

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the projected savings that would result from the proposed closure of Northfield House, Donaghadee.

(AQW 46190/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care Board have advised me that projected savings from the proposed closure of Northfield House will be £240k per year.

The figure is based on savings from staff costs and facilities management costs, namely rent, rates, heat, light and power.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much the Southern Health and Social Care Trust has spent on postage in each of the last two financial years.

(AQW 46271/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend on postage by the Southern Health and Social Care Trust in each of the last two years was:

- 2014/15 - £575,000
- 2013/14 - £714,000

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety why healthcare workers have not received the one per cent pay rise as recommended by the Independent Pay Review Body.

(AQW 46296/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The NHS Pay Review Body (NHSPRB) and the Review Body for Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration (DDRB) recommendations of a 1% increase from 1 April 2014 were considered in the context of the prevailing financial constraints and viewed unaffordable. Instead all eligible staff were awarded with either incremental progression or a 1% non-consolidated payment in respect of 2014/15 but not both. Incremental increases are not insignificant with an average rise in Agenda for Change spine point values of 3.7% in 2014/15, and some staff having received increases as high as 6.7%.

No decisions have yet been made in relation to the pay award for 2015/16, however, my first priority is to protect and properly staff frontline services in order to secure the provision of safe and effective services.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the cost of implementing the plan by the Business Services Organisation to redeploy the staff in the GP payments team from Ballymena to Belfast; and when the business case was approved.

(AQW 46297/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The business case to replace payment systems for Pharmaceutical, Dental and GP Payments Services was approved in April 2013 and the proposal to move the GP payments function from Ballymena to Belfast from January 2016 was approved by the BSO's Board on 28 May 2015.

The BSO is working to find suitable alternative employment in the Ballymena area for those GP Payments staff that do not wish to be redeployed to Belfast. The cost of any redeployment will therefore only be known once that process has been completed. The new GP payment system went live last month.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the process by which day care centres, for people with disabilities and learning difficulties, are procured through Health and Social Care Trusts.

(AQW 46312/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Health and Social Care (HSC) Board allocates funding to each HSC Trust for the provision of Day Care Centres. Much of this provision is delivered by HSC Trusts however Trusts also sub-commission services from the voluntary and community sector.

While the arrangements by which each HSC Trust procure these services may vary across the Trusts, each HSC Trust is required to comply with Northern Ireland Public Procurement Policy.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown of all spend on the implementation of Transforming Your Care, broken down by (a) year; and (b) Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46322/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I am advised by the Health and Social Care Board that the expenditure on the implementation of Transforming Your Care to cover project delivery costs and project support, broken down by (a) year; and (b) Health and Social Care Trust is:

Organisation	2012/13 £m	2013/14 £m	2014/15 £m	Total £m
Belfast	2.2	0.4	1.2	3.7
South Eastern	0.9	0.4	1.0	2.2
Southern	0.3	0.3	0.5	1.2

Organisation	2012/13 £m	2013/14 £m	2014/15 £m	Total £m
Northern	1.3	0.3	0.8	2.5
Western	1.1	0.6	2.4	4.0
NI Ambulance Service	0.0	0.1	0.4	0.5
Total Trust Expenditure	5.8	2.1	6.2	14.1
Health and Social Care Board	3.0	4.0	3.2	10.3
Total Expenditure on TYC	8.8	6.1	9.5	24.4

Notes:

- 1) HSCB expenditure relates to; projects that are led by the HSCB; funding provided to voluntary sector organisations; the costs of ICP Service Developments that are incurred by GPs (e.g. costs of backfill to permit attendance at meetings); ICP Business & Clinical Support Teams and the TYC Central Programme Team costs.
- 2) The above excludes expenditure on Quality Improvement Cost Reduction (QICR) Voluntary Redundancy/ Voluntary Early Retirement payments made in 2012/13.
- 3) The Belfast and Western Trusts have received a higher proportion of the resources to date because they host the 2 regional cardiac catheterisation labs which received TYC funding in 2012/13.
- 4) The above excludes expenditure on initiatives already started prior to financial year 2012/13 e.g. implementation of the Bamford Review.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the measures being taken by his Department to alleviate the waiting times for children awaiting an appointment for potential autism diagnosis within the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46324/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I refer the member to the answer given to AQW 45073/11-15 on 7 May 2015.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much has been spent on postage by the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46378/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend on postage by the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust in each of the last three years was:

- 2014/15 - £1,348,732
- 2013/14 - £1,331,420
- 2012/13 - £1,058,757

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 45160/11-15, in relation to Business Service Organisation and the new system for HR, Payroll, Travel and Subsistence (HRPTS), how much has been spent on (i) the acquisition of this new system, computer equipment and programs; and (ii) the maintenance of systems, computer equipment and programs by the Health and Social Care Board in the last three years.

(AQW 46399/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The HSCB spent £513k on the acquisition of the HRPTS system in 2014/15 and £55k and £26k on the related system maintenance costs in 2013/14 and 2014/15 respectively.

Mr McGlone asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 45161/11-15, of the 24 reported complaints regarding payroll issues (i) what investigations have taken place to identify the cause of those complaints; and (ii) what measures have been taken, and at what level, to rectify those issues associated with payments processed by the Business Service Organisation.

(AQW 46400/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: A range of investigations have taken place in relation to these complaints, including: obtaining further information by contacting the person making the complaint; discussing the complaint with the relevant staff; liaising with relevant specialists to obtain clarification (eg HR, pensions, HMRC) and escalating the complaint to the payroll shared services management team for further investigation/consideration.

A range of measures have been taken in response to these complaints, including: issuing letters of apology by members of the BSO senior management team; training staff to raise awareness and to avoid recurrence of issues; clarification of roles/responsibilities and the updating of internal procedures/processes; and the development of new processes/reporting protocols to enhance the monitoring capability.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail every ministerial direction issued by his Department since May 2007 including the (i) date; and (ii) the nature of each.

(AQW 46405/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Since 2007, there have been six Ministerial Directions as follows:

Direction	Date	Nature
Integrated Services for Children and Young People (ISCYP)	September 2012	To preserve services for children and young people.
Third Party Development schemes	March 2013	To proceed with the pathfinder projects using third party development procurement methodology rather than conventional capital procurement.
NI Hospice	July 2013	To enable the development of a new NI Hospice 18 bed Adult Hospice and Day Hospice facility on the Somerton Road, Belfast.
Mencap NI	July 2013	To enable the development of a new Mencap facility at Newtownbreda offering a range of support services to children and young people with learning disabilities and their families.
ISCYP	June 2014	To preserve services for children and young people.
ISCYP	January 2015	To preserve services for children and young people.

Mrs Overend asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline how the services at the Mid Ulster Hospital will change over the next five years.

(AQW 46409/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Health and Social Care Trust is currently developing a Community Rehabilitation Services strategy for consultation (previously referred to as Intermediate Care Services). The Trust views the Mid Ulster Hospital as a vital part of future service delivery. My Department continues to invest in services at the hospital and has allocated capital of £416,000 this year for an upgrade to accommodation for a pharmacy scheme.

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 44450/11-15, when the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service will make a decision on service delivery; and whether a public consultation on the future of the Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service's Large Animal Rescue Service is a mandatory requirement before any changes are made to the service.

(AQW 46427/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Fire and Rescue Service, as part of its ongoing planning process for 2015-16, will continue to keep under review a range of options and measures necessary to achieve a balanced budget. Any proposed changes in relation to the provision of a large animal rescue team will be subject to public consultation.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to define community healthcare.

(AQW 46435/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: There is no formal definition of community healthcare.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 46078/11-16, to detail all the work completed on the Atlantic Philanthropies/Delivering Social Change Dementia initiative since funding was received.

(AQW 46446/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Since the project was launched in September 2014, project staff have been recruited and appropriate project governance arrangements have been put in place. A programme plan has been developed and agreed by the Project Board. Initial scoping exercises have been completed for two out of the three work streams, on awareness raising, information and support, and training including delirium. The scoping exercise for the remaining work stream on short breaks and support for carers is due to be completed by the end of June.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the target waiting times for first consultant-led outpatient appointments in the Western Health and Social Care Trust; (ii) the number of patients currently waiting longer than the target waiting time and; (iii) the estimated waiting time where targets are not currently being met.

(AQW 46462/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The 2015/16 Ministerial target for outpatient waiting times states that, from April 2015, at least 60% of patients should wait no longer than nine weeks for their first outpatient appointment and no patient should wait longer than 18 weeks.
- (ii) The most recent date for which official statistics are available is at 31st March 2015. At this time the 2014/15 Ministerial target for outpatient waiting times applied, which states that from April 2014, at least 80% of patients should wait no longer than nine weeks for their first outpatient appointment and no patient should wait longer than 15 weeks.

Information on the number of patients waiting for a first consultant-led outpatient appointment in the Western Trust at 31st March 2015 is shown in the table below.

	Number of patients waiting, in weeks, for a first consultant-led outpatient appointment at 31st March 2015
	0-9 weeks	>9-15 weeks	>15 weeks	Total waiting
Western HSC Trust	12,224	3,001	7,212	22,437

These data are published on a quarterly basis in the Northern Ireland Waiting Times Statistics: Outpatient Waiting Times publication. The latest data can be found at the following link:

<http://www.dhsspsni.gov.uk/index/statistics/hospital/waitingtimes.htm>

- (iii) The allocation of appointments is determined by patient priority, therefore it is not possible to provide an "estimated" waiting time for a first outpatient appointment because the waiting list is renewed daily to take account of the prioritisation of new referrals, some of whom may need to be seen more quickly than those already on the list. In addition the waiting time will be affected by the level of activity in Trust outpatient clinics which will be subject to constant adjustment. If funding becomes available in year, additional activity in the independent sector may be commissioned, if there is an identified capacity gap in a particular specialty.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the target waiting time for first consultant-led outpatient appointments in neurology in the Western Health and Social Care Trust; (ii) the number of patients currently waiting longer than the target waiting time; and (iii) the estimated waiting time for cases where targets are not currently being met.

(AQW 46463/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The 2015/16 Ministerial target for outpatient waiting times states that, from April 2015, at least 60% of patients should wait no longer than nine weeks for their first outpatient appointment and no patient should wait longer than 18 weeks.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the target waiting time for first consultant-led outpatient appointments in general surgery in the Western Health and Social Care Trust; (ii) the number of patients currently waiting longer than the target waiting time; and (iii) the estimated waiting time for cases where targets are not currently being met.

(AQW 46464/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (ii) The most recent date for which official statistics are available is at 31st March 2015. At this time the 2014/15 Ministerial target for outpatient waiting times applied, which states that from April 2014, at least 80% of patients should wait no longer than nine weeks for their first outpatient appointment and no patient should wait longer than 15 weeks.

Information on the number of patients waiting for a first consultant-led outpatient appointment in the Western Trust at 31st March 2015 is shown in the following table.

	Number of patients waiting, in weeks, and by selected specialty, for a first consultant-led outpatient appointment at 31st March 2015
	0-9 weeks	>9-15 weeks	>15 weeks	Total waiting
Neurology	448	173	1,036	1,657
General Surgery	1,775	683	1,817	4,275
Urology	423	76	31	530
Ophthalmology	1,302	301	387	1,990
ENT	1,460	97	1	1,558

These data are published on a quarterly basis in the Northern Ireland Waiting Times Statistics: Outpatient Waiting Times publication. The latest data can be found at the following link:

- (iii) The allocation of appointments is determined by patient priority, therefore it is not possible to provide an "estimated" waiting time for a first outpatient appointment because the waiting list is renewed daily to take account of the prioritisation of new referrals, some of whom may need to be seen more quickly than those already on the list. In addition the waiting time will be affected by the level of activity in Trust outpatient clinics which will be subject to constant adjustment. If funding becomes available in year, additional activity in the independent sector may be commissioned, if there is an identified capacity gap in a particular specialty.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he can guarantee that no staff at Northfield House will lose their job if it is closed by the South East Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46480/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I refer the Member to the response given to AQW 46468/11-15.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what strategies her Department supports which aim to help consumers to eat well whilst also making their food budget go further.

(AQW 46498/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department supports a number of strategies which contain elements relating to healthy nutrition and/or food poverty including the obesity prevention framework A Fitter Future for All 2012-2014 and the public health strategy Making Life Better 2013-2023. My Department also supports the 'Healthy Start' programme, which aims to improve the health of low-income pregnant women and families on benefits and tax credits by issuing vouchers which can be exchanged for cow's milk, fresh or frozen plain fruit and vegetables and infant formula milk at local retailers.

The Public Health Agency (PHA) explicitly focuses on those communities in greatest need and experiencing the sharpest inequalities. It has invested significantly in supporting communities and building capacity at a local level to ensure their active participation and engagement in promoting positive health and wellbeing and tackling health inequalities.

Furthermore the Food Standards Agency (FSA) in Northern Ireland (NI) engages with food retailers and manufacturers to provide colour-coded nutrient information on the front of pre-packed foods (front of pack) to help consumers make healthier choices. The FSA in NI is also working with the Consumer Council for NI (CCNI) on a three-stage investigation into the balance of 'healthy versus less healthy' food promotions among food retailers in Northern Ireland.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the Mental Health Inpatient unit in Belfast; and the Hospital for Sick Children in the Royal Victoria Hospital.

(AQW 46501/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Mental Health Unit

The development of the Acute Mental Health Unit at the Belfast City Hospital continues. The enabling and demolition work is underway and work on the main construction is currently scheduled to commence in February 2016. It is planned that the facility will be completed in May 2018.

Regional Children's Hospital

This Executive priority project remains on schedule and it is anticipated that the handover of the facility will take place in December 2021. The first element of the Regional Children's Hospital enabling contract was awarded on 13 May 2015.

The precise timing of all capital investment projects remains dependent on budget availability.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the target waiting time for first consultant-led outpatient appointments in Urology in the Western Health and Social Care Trust; (ii) the number of patients currently waiting longer than the target waiting time; and (iii) the estimated waiting time for cases where targets are not currently being met.

(AQW 46503/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The 2015/16 Ministerial target for outpatient waiting times states that, from April 2015, at least 60% of patients should wait no longer than nine weeks for their first outpatient appointment and no patient should wait longer than 18 weeks.
- (ii) The most recent date for which official statistics are available is at 31st March 2015. Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the target waiting time for first consultant-led outpatient appointments in Ophthalmology in the Western Health and Social Care Trust; (ii) the number of patients currently waiting longer than the target waiting time; and (iii) the estimated waiting time for cases where targets are not currently being met.

(AQW 46504/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The 2015/16 Ministerial target for outpatient waiting times states that, from April 2015, at least 60% of patients should wait no longer than nine weeks for their first outpatient appointment and no patient should wait longer than 18 weeks.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the target waiting time for first consultant-led outpatient appointments in Ear, Nose and Throat in the Western Health and Social Care Trust; (ii) the number of patients currently waiting longer than the target waiting time; and (iii) the estimated waiting time for cases where targets are not currently being met.

(AQW 46505/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) The 2015/16 Ministerial target for outpatient waiting times states that, from April 2015, at least 60% of patients should wait no longer than nine weeks for their first outpatient appointment and no patient should wait longer than 18 weeks.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the target waiting time for first consultant-led outpatient appointments in radiology in the Western Health and Social Care Trust; (ii) the number of patients currently waiting longer than the target waiting time; and (iii) the estimated waiting time for cases where targets are not currently being met.

(AQW 46506/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Consultant- led outpatient appointments are not provided in the radiology specialty.

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has given any further consideration to the introduction of a cancer drugs fund.

(AQW 46511/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I have difficulty in supporting the concept of a 'Cancer Drugs Fund' because it is not equitable or fair to patient groups suffering from other serious health conditions who also need expensive specialist drugs and treatments. I am aware of similar concerns about the fund expression by professionals working in this field. For example, an article by Karl Claxton, Professor of Health Economics at the University of York, published in the New Scientist in January 2015 stated that... "the evidence suggests that much greater improvements in health would have been possible across a range of diseases, including cancer, if the fund's money had been made available to the wider NHS..... Examples include improved survival for people with circulatory, gastrointestinal and respiratory diseases, along with cancer, and improved quality of life for people with mental health, respiratory and neurological diseases".

My Department has recently evaluated the Individual Funding Request (IFR) process, which is designed to provide access to novel, off-label or non-NICE approved specialist drugs, and has publicly consulted on the recommendations from the published report. A key recommendation is to create a specialist drug fund to be financed by reintroducing a charge for prescriptions. The responses to the consultation are currently being analysed and when this has been concluded I will announce my decision on whether to create a specialist drugs fund, taking into consideration the views gathered, subject to available funding.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail any instances where kinship carers have been required to give up employment in order to meet the needs of children they care for, and if so, for his assessment of this issue.

(AQW 46534/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department does not collect information on this issue.

Mrs McKeivitt asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for a breakdown, by Health and Social Care Trust, of the approximate waiting time for people on the list for a prophylactic bilateral mastectomy.

(AQW 46541/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information on the waiting time for people on the list for a prophylactic bilateral mastectomy is not available.

Inpatient waiting lists only record the procedure that the patient is waiting for and not the reason for this procedure. It is therefore not possible to separately identify those patients waiting for a bilateral mastectomy where this is for prophylactic reasons.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust has in place to address the loss of beds at (i) Northfield House residential home; and (ii) the Bangor GP Ward for residential and respite care.

(AQW 46542/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) There will be no immediate change to Northfield House pending a public consultation by the Trust. I have written to the three existing permanent residents to provide an assurance that they will not be required to leave their home.

In the event of the future closure of Northfield House the Intermediate Care Beds currently provided in Northfield would be re-provided through alternative arrangements including increased domiciliary based rehabilitation supported through the Enhanced Care at Home Model.

- (ii) The South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust's public consultation on the future of intermediate care in North Down and Ards closed on 29 April 2015. The Trust is currently analysing the consultation responses. The Trust's preferred option is to provide in the future up to 105 intermediate care beds across the area. This would not include the 20 Beds GP Unit in Bangor Community Hospital which is temporarily closed.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether any of the Health and Social Care Trusts have plans to operate a Gamma Knife scanner.

(AQW 46546/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Gamma Knife is a registered trade mark of Elekta Inc. It refers to a radiotherapy machine capable of delivering stereotactic radio surgery (SRS) for the treatment of cranial tumours. Cyberknife, Truebeam and RapidArc refer to similar devices used to deliver SRS. While there are no plans to operate a Gamma Knife Scanner in NI, we are aiming to obtain the Truebeam equipment required to deliver SRS in the Regional Cancer Centre. In the meantime patients requiring this mode of treatment are referred to specialist treatment centres in England.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of referrals to Trust run residential care homes within the Northern Health and Social Care Trust for each of the last five years.

(AQW 46560/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern HSC Trust has advised that they do not keep records of the number of people who have been referred to their Trust run residential care homes.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the disparity in accessing services for kinship carers depending on whether the kinship arrangements are formal or informal.

(AQW 46561/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Health and Social Care Trusts have a duty to maintain and support formal placements, as these children and young people in those placements are 'looked-after' children under The Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995. As a result, all foster carers and formal kinship foster carers receive Foster Care Allowances; are allocated a supervising social worker to provide support and supervision; have access to a range of specialist and therapeutic supports as determined by the assessed needs of the child/young person; and are provided with a range of learning and development opportunities as well as educational support. In the majority of informal kinship care arrangements, parental responsibility, including provision of financial support, remains with the parent. Within such arrangements, there is an entitlement to support services and a general duty to safeguard and promote the welfare of children in those arrangements who are deemed to be "in need", within the meaning of The Children (Northern Ireland) Order 1995.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how his Department is working with officials in the Department of Agriculture and Rural Development to develop better access to health care for people who are rurally isolated.

(AQW 46562/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department is represented on the Interdepartmental Committee on Rural Policy which reports to DARD on implementation of the Rural White Paper Action plan. The latest annual report (see below) provides information on partnership working with DARD on programmes such as the Farm Family Health Checks, and the MARA (Maximising Access to Services, Grants and Benefits in Rural Areas) project which supports vulnerable rural dwellers living in, or at risk of poverty and social isolation. In addition, the PHA works in partnership with DARD, rurally based agencies and community partners on an ongoing basis in the design and delivery of health improvement programmes.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what support is available for parents who have suffered a miscarriage in the Southern Health and Social Care Trust area, in (i) the immediate aftermath in hospital; and (ii) the community.

(AQW 46565/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: All women and their partners who experience the loss of a child at any gestation of pregnancy are supported initially by the midwifery staff and obstetric team responsible for care at the time of their loss. Further bereavement care and support is available following discharge from hospital by the General Practitioner, Community Midwife and Health Visitor to whom the mother is referred for follow up care. Support is also provided in the form of Southern Trust bereavement booklets containing advice and links to relevant support and counselling organisations.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of patients that have utilised the Integrated Care Partnerships since their implementation, broken down by Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46598/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Integrated Care Partnerships are not constituted to provide direct care to patients or service users. Integrated Care Partnerships are collaborative networks of care providers, bringing together doctors, nurses, pharmacists, social workers, hospital specialists, other healthcare professionals, council officers with community planning responsibilities, voluntary and community sector representatives, as well as service users and carers, to design and coordinate local health and social care services. National Institute for Health and Care Excellence Approved Drugs

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, subject to clinical assessment, whether patients will be able to avail of all the new National Institute for Health and Care Excellence approved drugs in 2015/16.
(AQW 46600/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Funding is available for the provision of existing NICE therapies and treatments to new patients during 2015/16. However, the Department's budget does not include specific funding for new NICE drugs and in the absence of additional funding the HSCB has indicated it will not be able to fund all new NICE approved drugs. However, in line with the guidance, set out in Circular HSC (SQSD) 02/13, the HSCB is still required to assess NICE's Technology Appraisals individually for each new drug and arrive at a decision on timeframe etc. for implementation. This of course must take account of resource issues as well as the costs and benefits of that drug. Some new Drugs can generate efficiencies and reduce costs or may realise such significant benefits to patients and clients that they should still be funded. This is a judgement for the Commissioner to make in each case.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the cost of the service study being conducted into the provision of community pharmacy.
(AQW 46601/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The aim of the Cost of Service Investigation (CoSI) is to capture the total cost of providing Community Pharmacy Services in Northern Ireland for the financial year 2011/12. All pharmacy contractors in Northern Ireland will be invited to participate in a survey which will capture the relevant costs.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what progress has been made with regard to the actions and recommendations outlined in the Improving Dementia Services in Northern Ireland (2011) strategy.
(AQW 46627/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Significant progress has been made to date across a number of recommendations in my Department's regional Dementia Strategy, including the development of memory clinics across the five Health and Social Care Trusts, which will provide timely diagnosis for people with dementia and information and support to inform decisions about future care and treatment.

The Atlantic Philanthropies/Delivering Social Change Dementia Signature initiative, launched in September 2014, will also support implementation of recommendations in the Dementia Strategy. This initiative will focus on three key strands: promoting greater understanding and awareness of dementia across the whole community; enhancing the quality of services through improved training opportunities for staff; and developing innovative support services for carers of people with dementia.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to outline the (i) next steps; and (ii) timeline for reforming the Individual Funding Request process.
(AQW 46630/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I have difficulty in supporting the concept of a 'Cancer Drugs Fund' because it is not equitable or fair to patient groups suffering from other serious health conditions who also need expensive specialist drugs and treatments. I am aware of similar concerns about the fund expression by professionals working in this field. For example, an article by Karl Claxton, Professor of Health Economics at the University of York, published in the New Scientist in January 2015 stated that... Examples include improved survival for people with circulatory, gastrointestinal and respiratory diseases, along with cancer, and improved quality of life for people with mental health, respiratory and neurological diseases".

My Department's proposals for reforming the Individual Funding Request (IFR) process combined with the proposal to introduce a Specialist Drugs Fund, to be financed by reintroducing a charge for prescriptions, will provide a more equitable basis for all patients requiring access to specialist drugs. The responses to the consultation on these proposals are currently being analysed and when this has been concluded I will announce my decision on whether to create a specialist drugs fund, taking into consideration the views gathered, subject to available funding.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he can provide assurances that local cancer patients will have the same access to drugs as people living in England, Scotland and Wales, due to reforms put in place following the Individual Funding Request consultation.
(AQW 46636/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I have difficulty in supporting the concept of a 'Cancer Drugs Fund' because it is not equitable or fair to patient groups suffering from other serious health conditions who also need expensive specialist drugs and treatments. Mr Agnew asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of (i) occupational therapists employed; and (ii) assessments for special educational needs that have been completed by each of the Health and Social Care Trusts in each of the last five years.

(AQW 46649/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) At 31st March 2015, there were 984 (857.8 whole-time equivalent) occupational therapists employed within the Health and Social Care (HSC) Trusts, excluding bank staff, staff on career breaks and those with a WTE of less than 0.03. Table 1 below provides the number of occupational therapists employed by HSC Trust.

HSC Trust	Headcount	WTE
Belfast	270	239.76
Northern	228	192.12
South Eastern	149	133.67
Southern	207	177.85
Western	130	114.39

- (ii) The information requested is not available and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Mr Beggs asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 47511/11-15, to detail the number of elected theatre slots that may have been cancelled between January and March 2015, during the period when elective surgery was suspended and information on cancellations was not collected.

(AQW 46653/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Information is not collected on the number of cancelled theatre slots. The Department routinely collects information on operations cancelled due to hospital pressures, which was provided in AQW 45711/11-15.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how many locum GPs are available in Upper Bann.

(AQW 46656/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Business Services Organisation advises that there are currently 396 Locum GPs registered on the Performers List for Northern Ireland. As they are registered by their home addresses, it is not possible to identify from the list where they might be available to work.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on Brownlow Health Centre, Craigavon, following the resignation of two GPs.

(AQW 46661/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: A Selection Panel conducted interviews on Monday 18 May 2015. The successful applicant has been offered a GMS contract to provide primary medical services to the patients currently registered with Brownlow Medical Practice from 1 August 2015. Once the applicant confirms acceptance of the offer the HSCB will notify all interested parties.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQO 8177/11-15, of the 94 vacancies in the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service, to detail how many positions have been (i) offered; and (ii) filled.

(AQW 46700/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Of the 94 Emergency Medical Technician (EMT) vacancies in the Northern Ireland Ambulance Service referred to in my previous answer, 20 positions have already been filled and a further 24 positions will be filled by 24 July 2015. The remaining vacancies are being filled on a phased basis during 2015/16 to coordinate with the associated training programmes.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much has been spent on postage by the Patient Client Council in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46718/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend on postage by the Patient Client Council in each of the last three financial years was:

- 2014/15 - £13,285
- 2013/14 - £30,996
- 2012/13 - £23,610

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much has been spent on postage by the Regional Quality Improvement Agency in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46719/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Spend on postage by the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority in each of the last three years was:

- 2014/15 - £20,740
- 2013/14 - £18,147
- 2012/13 - £20,429

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how many (i) nurses have been trained in the last three years; and (ii) more nurses are needed to fill the vacancies in both the public and private sectors.

(AQW 46725/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) My Department annually commissions 685 new student nursing and midwifery places from Queen's University Belfast (QUB), the University of Ulster (UU) and the Open University (OU). Information on the total numbers of nurses graduating from each of these universities in each of the academic years 2011/12, 2012/13 and 2013/14 is detailed in the table below.

	QUB	UU	OU	Total
2011/12	365	204	24	593
2012/13	439	216	31	685
2013/14	410	218	10	638

- (ii) I have no immediate plans to increase the number of pre registration places commissioned. However, my officials continue to work with employers and staff side representatives in order to ensure that we retain the skills of those nurses we do train, in Northern Ireland.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 45953/11-15, whether he or his officials have (i) considered midwife led maternity units for non-acute hospitals; and (ii) have had sight of the report into a midwife led maternity unit commissioned by the former Western Health and Social Services Board.

(AQW 46728/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: My Department's strategy in regard to midwife-led maternity units for non-acute hospitals was explained in my answer to AQW 45953/11-15.

A report commissioned by the former Western Health and Social Services Board was forwarded to the Department in December 2007. Additional evidence from across all Trusts was subsequently collected to develop my Department's regional maternity strategy, 'A Strategy for Maternity Care in Northern Ireland 2012-2018'. This strategy is my Department's extant policy for maternity services as it supersedes any report produced prior to the publication of the strategy.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of children in Foyle that (i) have been placed in hotel accommodation; and (ii) for how long in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46732/11-15)

Mr Hamilton:

- (i) Figures supplied by the Western Health and Social Care Trust indicate that eight children in Foyle had been placed in hotel accommodation in the last three years. In each case specific circumstances led to this placement. The Trust provided a twenty four hour support package for each child during their placement in a hotel.
- (ii) Table 1 below details the total number of days children from Foyle were placed in hotel accommodation in each of the last three years.

Table 1

	2012/13	2013/14	2014/15
Total number of days children were placed in hotel accommodation during the year.	2 days	69 days	322 days

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much his Department has spent on using hotels due to the lack of residential care homes in Foyle.

(AQW 46733/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: There is no shortage of children's residential care provision in the Foyle area.

However, for some young people, accommodation in a children's home or in supported accommodation would not be deemed appropriate due to the intricacies of the individual care plan which could include risks presented to or by the individual child or young person.

The Western Trust has indicated that in the last three years eight young people in Foyle area had been placed in hotel accommodation at a total cost of £33,000.

In these circumstances the Trust provides a twenty four hour support package for each young person during their placement in a hotel.

Mr Ramsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what action his Department is taking to address the shortfall in residential care home provision in Foyle.

(AQW 46734/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: There is no shortfall in children's residential care home provision in the Foyle area.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what strategy his Department has in place to address drug addiction in Ballymena.

(AQW 46739/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Under the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs Phase 2, a range of alcohol and drug education, early intervention, and treatment and support services are commissioned from a number of providers in the Northern Health and Social Care Trust area. Details of the current services are provided at the following link to the Public Health Agency's Directory of Services: http://www.publichealth.hscni.net/sites/default/files/DrugsAlcohol_Directory_Northern_12_12.pdf. These services are all available to people living in the Ballymena area and, following the completion of the current re-tendering exercise, the directory will be updated shortly.

In addition, the New Strategic Direction for Alcohol and Drugs Phase 2 commits us to working in partnership with the Department of Justice, the Police Service of Northern Ireland, the Department for Social Development and other key stakeholders to restrict the availability and accessibility of alcohol and illicit drugs in our local communities.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail what monies have been transferred from acute/primary care to the community care budget since 2011.

(AQW 46748/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Details of monies transferred from acute/primary care settings to the community care setting are not held.

Information on the shift of services and associated resources from the acute care setting into primary, community and social care settings is recorded as part of the monitoring of the implementation of Transforming Your Care.

The table below presents a summary of this financial shift.

£17.43m	£17.43m	£20.83m	£38.26m	£6.05m	£44.31m

Note

- 1) Of the total £44.31m of Health and Social Care resources 'shifted left' by the end of 2014/15, the areas were:
 - resettlement of Mental Health / Learning Disability clients (£27.5m)
 - a range of transformational initiatives in the primary and community setting funded directly by HSCB recurrent funding (£16.29m)
 - hospital activity avoided (£0.52m)

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether he has given any consideration to where the South East Trust will find a sufficient number of beds for respite care following the closure of Northfield House and Bangor GP Ward.

(AQW 46774/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: No decision has been taken on the future of Northfield House, pending the outcome of a consultation on this by the South Eastern Trust.

Responsibility for provision of services, including respite care, in this area rests with the South Eastern Trust. The Trust has advised me that the additional beds in Northfield House are primarily used for intermediate care provision, and there are no designated respite beds in the Bangor GP Ward. Within the North Down & Ards area, the Trust has 10 designated respite beds. In addition, it spot purchases respite beds to meet service user demand or choice. The number of vacancies within independent sector homes varies on a daily basis.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail (i) the medications dispensed by; and (ii) the number of, private prescriptions in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46781/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: It is not possible to detail the medications dispensed by, and the number of private prescriptions, in each of the last three years, as this information is not collected centrally and is therefore not available.

Mr Givan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of prescription dispensed for (i) Mifepristone; (ii) Misoprostol; (iii) Gemeprost; and (iv) Methotrexate in each of the last five years.

(AQW 46783/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The number of prescriptions dispensed for Mifepristone; Misoprostol; Gemeprost; and Methotrexate, in each of the last five years is shown in Table 1 overleaf.

Table 1: Number of prescriptions dispensed for Mifepristone, Misoprostol, Gemeprost and Methotrexate in each of the last five years

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the estimated expenditure of implementing the pay increase to Health and Social Care workers as recommended by the NHS Independent Pay Review Body in (i) 2014/15; and (ii) 2015/16.

(AQW 46823/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Based on the latest quarterly staff in post figures at the time of the 2014/15 reports from the NHS Pay Review Body and the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration, the recommendations in relation to the pay increase were estimated to cost around £54 million for 2014/15 - £22m for the 1% uplift and £32m to cover contractual increments. A recommendation for 2015/16 was not made for Northern Ireland.

Mr McGimpsey asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety whether his Department had previously budgeted to award an increase in pay following the outcome of report of the NHS Independent Pay Review Body.

(AQW 46824/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The NHS Pay Review Body (NHSPRB) and the Review Body for Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration (DDRB) recommendations of a 1% increase from 1 April 2014 were considered in the context of the prevailing financial constraints and were considered to be unaffordable. However, a pay award was budgeted for and all eligible staff were awarded with either incremental progression or a 1% non-consolidated payment in respect of 2014/15 but not both. It should be noted that as a result of one step progression, the average pay increase for Agenda for Change staff was 3.7% with some staff receiving as much as 6.7%.

No decisions have yet been made in relation to the pay award for 2015/16.

Mr McMullan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 31979/11-15, whether he plans to set new performance indicators and targets for access to cancer services.

(AQW 46852/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: I have no plans to set new performance indicators and targets for Northern Ireland. The current performance indicators and targets are broadly consistent with those in the rest of the UK. My Department is therefore satisfied that Health and Social Care (HSC) in Northern Ireland is required to deliver access to cancer services by measuring performance in line with best practice across the UK. My focus is on ensuring that the Health and Social Care Board works with the HSC Trusts to achieve the current targets.

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the percentage difference in the number of referrals of children and adolescents to the Western Health and Social Care Trust due to the use of legal highs for each of the last three years.

(AQW 46853/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The number of people aged under 18 in the Western Health and Social Care Trust, presenting for treatment for New Psychoactive Substances, is outlined in the table below.

Number of people in the Western Health and Social Care Trust who received treatment for New Psychoactive Substances 2011/12 to 2013/14

2011/12	<5
2012/13	6
2013/14	19

Mr Buchanan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the added pressures legal highs are having on the health service.

(AQW 46854/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: It is difficult to get an accurate picture of how prevalent misuse of New Psychoactive Substances (sometimes mislabelled as 'legal highs') is and the subsequent impact on the Health Service. A survey in 2010/11 indicated that 2% and 2.4% of the population had taken Mephedrone (then legal but subsequently banned) and New Psychoactive Substances respectively. Figures from our treatment services in 2013/14 also indicated that 15% of those in treatment reported the use of Mephedrone.

However, we are aware of presentations to Emergency Departments and admissions to hospital following the use of New Psychoactive Substances and other drugs. In these settings, it is very difficult to know exactly what a person has taken and what has caused their presentation. Overall there were 3,360 drug related admissions to hospital in 2013/14 and figures have remained broadly consistent since 2010.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the cost of providing treatment for psychoactive substance abuse for each of the last five years, broken down by each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46858/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Substance misuse services based within each of the five Health & Social Care Trust areas are responsible for dealing with both alcohol and drug misuse. Many of the clients require support to recovery from misuse of multiple substances, including alcohol, illegal drugs, misused prescription drugs, and new psychoactive substances. Accordingly, information is not available in the format requested, as it is not possible to disaggregate substance misuse services from those that also deal with alcohol misuse.

However, each year approximately £8 million is invested each year in support of our overall Strategy to prevent and address the harm related to substance misuse, the New Strategic Direction (NSD) for Alcohol and Drugs Phase 2, and a further approximately £8 million is invested in statutory alcohol and drug treatment services through the mental health budget.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the proposed development of the North Wing at Altnagelvin Hospital.

(AQW 46859/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Detailed design work and tender preparation are progressing with respect to the North Wing Ward Accommodation at Altnagelvin Hospital. It is anticipated that the award of contract and construction will commence on site in autumn 2015 however this is subject to planning approval and budget availability.

Work with respect to associated enabling schemes, including the new multi-storey car park, continues and is expected to be completed in advance of the North Wing construction works commencing.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the rationale behind his decision to withdraw funding for ADD-NI.

(AQW 46873/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: No decision has been made on future core and grant funding arrangements. I am currently considering a range of options and intend to communicate my decision to those organisations, which received core grant in 2014/15, as soon as possible.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 46077/11-15, to detail the number of adult carers within each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46898/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The information requested is not available as Health and Social Care Trusts do not keep a register of carers.

Mr Swann asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety, pursuant to AQW 46366/11-15, to detail how often each condition has been reported in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46899/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: With the exception of Avian Influenza none of the diseases are notifiable diseases and therefore GPs are under no obligation to report these diseases to the Public Health Agency. The table below shows the numbers of cases reported over last three years for each condition.

	2012	2013	2014
Histoplasma	0	0	0
Cryptococcus	0	1 - 4	0

In order to ensure an individual cannot be identified the PHA report any number greater than zero and less than 5 as "1-4".

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety how much funding is required to complete Transforming Your Care.

(AQW 46906/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Transforming Your Care estimated that transitional funding of £70 million would be needed to implement the new service model. To date, my Department has obtained £26.4m:

- £19m for TYC and HSC savings initiatives via Invest to Save in 2012/13 (of which £9m was spent on TYC)
- £9.4m of funding via the 2013/14 June Monitoring Round
- £8m of funding via the 2014/15 Monitoring Round

I remain committed to securing the remaining funds necessary to implement the model of care described in Transforming Your Care.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust spent on bank nurses in each of the last three years.

(AQW 46907/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The table below shows the Belfast Health and Social Care Trust's expenditure on bank nursing for the last three financial years.

Mr Weir asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of locum GPs available in North Down.

(AQW 46923/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Business Services Organisation advises that there are currently 396 Locum GPs registered on the Performers List for Northern Ireland. As they are registered by their home addresses, it is not possible to identify from the list where they might be available to work.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the number of psychologists operating in each Health and Social Care Trust.

(AQW 46933/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Headcount and whole-time equivalent (WTE) figures for staff employed as Psychologists and Assistant Psychologists by each HSC Trust are shown in the table below. These are provisional figures as at 31st March 2015, and exclude staff on career breaks and those with a WTE of less than 0.03.

Trust	Headcount	WTE
Belfast Health and Social Care Trust	106	95.6
Northern Health and Social Care Trust	67	61.7
South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust	52	44.9
Southern Health and Social Care Trust	42	37.6
Western Health and Social Care Trust	44	41.5

A further 35 (35.0 WTE) trainee psychologists are employed through the Business Services Organisation.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail the financial cost to his Department in appealing the courts decision on the ban on gay men giving blood.

(AQW 46969/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: At this time, the financial costs incurred by this Department in relation to the policy on blood donation by men who have had sex with men, are not yet complete.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for his assessment of the effectiveness of the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority in regulating social care considering they do not take account of the reductions in expenditure reducing on services whilst assessing the quality of care received by patients.

(AQW 46970/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The role and functions of the Regulation and Quality Improvement Authority [RQIA] are governed by the legislation – the Health and Personal Social Services (Quality, Improvement and Regulation) (Northern Ireland) Order 2003 and related regulations.

In regulating provision of services, RQIA assesses the quality of services delivered by establishments and agencies, against relevant regulations and published minimum standards. Inspection reports include, where necessary, quality improvement plans detailing what improvements are required to meet regulations and minimum standards, and an associated timescale.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety for an update on the business case in relation to establishing genomic medicine.

(AQW 46972/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: The Northern Ireland Pathology Network is developing the business case for the establishment of a Genomic Medicines Centre. It is anticipated that the business case will be submitted to my Department in early July 2015.

Mr McKinney asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety what plans his Department has to make additional funding available to tackle drug-resistant infections over the next five years.

(AQW 46973/11-15)

Mr Hamilton: Drug-resistant infections are a sub-set of all infections. The regional strategic action plan for healthcare-associated infections (HCAIs), Changing the Culture, first published in 2006 and updated in 2010, is founded on two core principles, the first of which is a recognition that infection prevention and control (IPC) is an integral part of safe healthcare. For this reason it is not possible to meaningfully disaggregate healthcare expenditure in a way that would identify discretely all expenditure on IPC. By the same token, to quote specific investments or items of expenditure would not truly reflect the full resources devoted to IPC.

Tackling HCAIs requires a wide range of actions, and through the concerted efforts of healthcare and public health professionals in Northern Ireland there have been significant reductions in HCAIs since 2006/07, with in-patient episodes of MRSA down by 73% and in-patient episodes of Clostridium difficile in patients aged 65 and over reduced by 72%. My aim is to ensure that this progress continues.

The global rise of antimicrobial resistance has been recognised for decades as a serious threat to health and healthcare. In July 2012 my Department published the Strategy for Tackling Antimicrobial Resistance (STAR). STAR has five strands:

- (i) antimicrobial stewardship in all Health and Social Care settings;

- (ii) monitoring of antimicrobial usage and surveillance of resistance;
- (iii) professional education and practice;
- (iv) research and development; and
- (v) patient and public engagement and information.

Mr Department is currently working with the Public Health Agency on the implementation of STAR. In addition my Department is a signatory to the UK 5-year Antimicrobial Resistance Strategy published in September 2013.

I would also draw to your attention my Department's current consultation on the Medicines Optimisation Quality Framework which highlights the risk of inappropriate use of antimicrobials. This framework sets the foundation for good practice and proposes a new approach to pharmaceutical innovation to drive continuous improvement through the development and implementation of best practice.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to detail how much the South Eastern Health and Social Care Trust spent on bank nurses in each of the last three years.

Department of Justice

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice for an estimate of the number of cases which have been adjourned in the past month as a result of legal representation being withdrawn due to the ongoing legal aid dispute.

(AQW 46523/11-15)

Mr Ford (The Minister of Justice): While there is no requirement or process to record any specific reasons given when a legal representative applies to come off record in a case before the court, I am aware of six cases where the legal aid dispute has been cited as the reason for the legal representative coming off record. However, no cases have been adjourned specifically as a result of legal representation being withdrawn due to the ongoing legal aid dispute.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the development of a cross-departmental hate crime action plan.

(AQW 46559/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice leads on the implementation of the Executive's Building Safer, Shared and Confident Communities: A Community Safety Strategy for Northern Ireland 2012-2017.

The Strategy has a set of associated action plans, including a dedicated hate crime action plan detailing the measures which a multi-agency Hate Crime Delivery Group is taking forward under a safety remit to address hate crime.

These actions are designed to contribute to the wider Executive commitment to improve community relations and build a united and shared society, and to complement the policies and practice of government departments and their agencies intended to change the prejudices and attitudes within our wider society which are ultimately manifested in hate crime.

Examples of measures currently being delivered through the Hate Crime Delivery Group include: investment in a Hate Crime Advocacy Service, which aims to provide support, advice and assistance for victims of hate crime, and provide a third party reporting mechanism (PSNI and DOJ); investment in the tripartite (PSNI, Northern Ireland Housing Executive, DOJ) Hate Incident Practical Action Scheme, which provides personal and home protection measures for victims of hate crime; and the development of a pilot scheme by the Probation Board for offenders convicted of hate related crimes.

Copies of the action plan and annual progress reports are available in the publications section of the Department of Justice website.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice on how many occasions in the past year have dogs been deployed within (i) Maghaberry Prison; and (ii) its exercise yards.

(AQW 46633/11-15)

Mr Ford: Patrol dogs are deployed on a daily basis within Maghaberry Prison. During the past year patrol dogs have been deployed on 20 occasions within recreation rooms and yards.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how many staff have left the Prison Service in the last twelve months.

(AQW 46634/11-15)

Mr Ford: A total of 144 Prison Grade and Non Prison Grade Staff left the Northern Ireland Prison Service in the 12 month period up to 31 May 2015.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice what percentage of the staff in Maghaberry Prison are female.

(AQW 46635/11-15)

Mr Ford: At 1 May 2015 the percentage of female, Full Time Equivalent, staff in the Northern Ireland Prison Service, based in Maghaberry Prison was 32%.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice for a breakdown, or estimate, of the costs incurred in the recent trial of Padriac Wilson and Sean Hughes.

(AQW 46688/11-15)

Mr Ford: The estimated costs incurred in the recent Crown Court case is given in the table below:

Cost Type	Estimated Cost
(i) Legal Aid ¹	£23,596
(ii) Prosecution ²	£13,958
(iii) Court (Judiciary and staff costs)	£1,197
(iv) Facilities (e.g. courtroom accommodation)	£320
Total	£39,071

- 1 The estimate of fees provided are based on the fixed fee structure provided under the Crown Court Rules and include fees based on actual court attendances that have actually taken place. The estimates do not include subsidiary fees such as travel time, mileage or consultations by Senior and/or Junior Counsel. There may also be a claim for additional disbursement costs by Solicitor.

Fees in relation to the Crown Court proceedings are assessed in accordance with the provisions of the Legal Aid for Crown Court Proceedings (Costs) Rules (Northern Ireland) 2005 as amended by 2011 Rules.

- 2 In the absence of detailed records of time spent on individual cases it is not possible to produce precise or average costs for a particular case. Some costs are identifiable however, for example the fees paid to prosecuting counsel and expenses paid to witnesses and expert witnesses.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Justice to outline the reasons for the PSNI £16 million resource and capital underspend for the 2014/15 financial year; and when his Department became aware of the underspend.

(AQW 46755/11-15)

Mr Ford: Based on provisional figures, PSNI's 2014-15 outturn is as follows:

- an unringfenced resource DEL underspend of £14.9m;
- a capital DEL underspend of £1.3m; and
- a ringfenced resource DEL overspend of £8.7m.

2014-15 was an extremely challenging year for financial planning, with significant uncertainty over in-year budget cuts and the 2015-16 budget. The Chief Constable was very much alive to the need to make savings and to deliver a balanced budget. Therefore, in response to in-year cuts and the need to plan for an uncertain level of cuts in future years, PSNI implemented cost reduction plans with a focus on planning for the longer term. Establishing that trend resulted in this underspend, but breaking the trend simply to have avoided the underspend would have run counter to what the Chief Constable is trying to achieve.

Regular monthly reporting structures are in place between the PSNI, the Policing Board and my Department. In the final quarter 2014-15, following the completion of the January monitoring process, my Department was advised that there would be underspends for the reasons set out above.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Justice what steps his Department can take to ensure that the PSNI does not have an underspend in the 2015/2016 financial year; and what measures can be introduced to ensure that unspent resources can be redirected before the onset of a monitoring round.

(AQW 46756/11-15)

Mr Ford: The PSNI reports its financial position on a monthly basis to my Department and the Policing Board, including year to date spend and forecast annual outturn. In addition, my officials meet with PSNI and Policing Board colleagues on a regular basis to discuss financial matters.

I must respect the operational autonomy and independence of the Chief Constable – he is responsible for the allocation of the police budget, for which he is accountable to the Policing Board.

However, if there is potential PSNI underspend, my Department will seek to ensure that this is used as effectively as possible. Any underspends would be reallocated as part of the monitoring round process, in the context of Department of Finance and Personnel guidelines.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister of Justice what measures his Department can take to ensure that sufficient resources are redirected to the Police Ombudsman's Office as soon as possible.

(AQW 46757/11-15)

Mr Ford: In 2015-16, my Department faced very difficult funding and prioritisation decisions. In setting the budget, the Office of the Police Ombudsman was one of the most protected in the Department, with an unringfenced Resource DEL budget reduction of 5%.

A bid for resources from the Stormont House Agreement is currently under consideration, which includes funding for legacy related work within the remit of the Police Ombudsman's Office.

Mr Allister asked the Minister of Justice how the limitations on visiting times are enforced in Maghaberry Prison; and how the Prison Service ensure that there is an even handed approach for republican and loyalist prisoners.

(AQW 46775/11-15)

Mr Ford: Family visits are allocated timed slots which may be booked by those visiting the prisoner. All prisoners are able to avail of visits on an equitable basis regardless of category or any allegiance.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice what measures his Department can take to save proposals for a joint training academy for police, fire and prison services.

(AQW 46779/11-15)

Mr Ford: Given a number of uncertainties, particularly in relation to the Services' budgets, an urgent review was commissioned to clarify their training needs in the changed financial climate. This identified a reduction of 48% in the training day requirement from that in the approved business case. With support from the Minister for Health, Social Services and Public Safety and myself, the Steering Group has asked the Programme Board to develop a revised business case. That work is now underway. The business case is to assume maximum delivery of training at sites and premises currently owned by the Services and the Policing Board, including Desertcreat. The aim is to enable required funding to be sought within the 2016-17 spending review process.

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice whether his Department has given any consideration to the (i) establishment; and (ii) approximate running costs of the Office of the Public Guardian as proposed under the Mental Capacity Bill.
(AQW 46785/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice has been working with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to establish indicative costs in relation to the Mental Capacity Bill.

This work has estimated the costs for the establishment of the Office of the Public Guardian at £155,000 in the two years prior to implementation; £1.6m in Year 1; £1.4m in Year 2; and £1.8m in Year 3 and annually thereafter. These include estimated costs for IT, accommodation, training, staffing, and the investigatory function. The figures are based on a high level costing exercise and more work is required to refine them when the Office of the Public Guardian model is developed further.

Many of the current functions of the Office of Care and Protection will transfer to the Office of the Public Guardian. However the Office of Care and Protection function to support the administration of court work will remain and may increase through the broadening of the jurisdiction to take in health and welfare matters.

Mr Ross asked the Minister of Justice whether his Department has given any consideration to the estimated annual staffing cost of the Office of the Public Guardian as proposed under the Mental Capacity Bill.
(AQW 46786/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Department of Justice has been working with the Department of Health, Social Services and Public Safety to establish indicative costs in relation to the Mental Capacity Bill.

Mr Rogers asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the plans underway to decentralise public sector jobs within his Department; and (ii) the number of jobs that will be relocated to South Down.
(AQW 46833/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Bain Review on the relocation of public sector posts outside Belfast predates my Department, which came into existence on 12 April 2010.

The Department of Finance and Personnel has responsibility for taking forward the recommendations of the Bain Review.

There are currently no strategic or active plans to move any DOJ posts to South Down.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 45964/11-15, in what way this case fails to meet the criteria for a Serious Case Review; and under what circumstances can this be waived or amended, as in previous similar instances.
(AQW 46835/11-15)

Mr Ford: The objectives of a serious case review are to look at whether all the agencies involved in the risk management of an individual did all that could be expected of them to manage the assessed risks and to establish if there are lessons to be learned about the effectiveness of the current public protection arrangements.

The offender in this case was being proactively risk managed on a single agency basis for a sustained period, which warranted an internal review being conducted. The report of that review will be examined by the PPANI Strategic Management Board, which will determine if any further case review is merited. In the instances where such action was taken in the past, the cases evidenced exceptional or exacerbating factors relating to the offence or the offender or recent changes in categorisation or risk management.

Mr Easton asked the Minister of Justice how many female Prison Officers have been assaulted in Maghaberry in each of the last three years.
(AQW 46839/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Northern Ireland Prison Service system for recording assaults does not differentiate between assaults on male and female staff. For that reason it is not possible to provide the information requested.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice how many Prison Service staff were employed at Magilligan Prison in (i) 2009; and (ii) 2014.
(AQW 46931/11-15)

Mr Ford: The number of staff employed in Magilligan Prison in each of the years requested is: (i) 435; and (ii) 295. These figures are a snapshot as at 1 May in each year.

Mr Campbell asked the Minister of Justice what has been the change in the percentage of female Prison Service staff at Magilligan Prison between 2009 and 2014.
(AQW 46932/11-15)

Mr Ford: For comparator purposes the figures are based on 1 May in each year requested. On 1 May 2009 18.34% of Prison Service staff at Magilligan were female and this rose to 24.69% by 1 May 2014. This represents an increase of 6.35% over the period.

Mrs Hale asked the Minister of Justice how many security threats against members of the police, prison service and the judiciary have been recorded in the last twelve months.

(AQW 46950/11-15)

Mr Ford: It would not be appropriate to comment on threats against individuals. That includes releasing information on numbers which might inadvertently identify a specific person or persons. I can confirm, however, that there have been a number of general and specific threats in the past twelve months.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister of Justice, pursuant to AQW 35537/11-15, for a further update on the progress of this case since 4 September 2014.

(AQW 46984/11-15)

Mr Ford: This case is due back in court on 29 June 2015. Details of the hearings since 4 September 2014 are detailed in the table below.

Date	Hearing Type	Adjournment Reason
21-May-15	Preliminary Investigation	Defence Not Ready

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the issue of equal pay for the Department of Justice and former Northern Ireland Office staff.

(AQW 47036/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Finance Minister has submitted a draft paper on this matter for consideration by the Executive. I continue to be supportive of a centrally funded and centrally driven resolution.

To date, the Executive has not been given an opportunity to consider this paper and I am unaware when this issue will be discussed or resolved.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister of Justice to detail (i) the number of prison officers currently suspended from work; and (ii) the timescales and cost of (a) salaries; (b) pension contributions; and (c) national insurance contributions while suspended.

(AQW 47081/11-15)

Mr Ford: Due to the small number of staff, I cannot provide the number and timescales as disclosure would be contrary to the Data Protection Act 1998. However, the total salary costs are £91,461.56, the total employer pension contributions are £14,140.78 and the total employer national insurance contributions are £7,288.14.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice what actions his Department is taking to prevent online criminal gangs targeting vulnerable young people.

(AQW 47091/11-15)

Mr Ford: There is work ongoing in a number of areas across Government and its agencies to raise awareness and prevent this sort of crime and also to address non-criminal problem behaviour. The Safeguarding Board's work, into which a number of Departmental agencies have an input, is particularly relevant in that regard. The Policing Board also has a target on the issue of cyber bullying in its Policing Plan.

In terms of criminal gangs specifically, the PSNI, in conjunction with the Organised Crime Task Force sub-group on cyber-crime, is working on a strategy to deal with cyber-crime. This includes:

Prevention – Awareness campaigns to alert the community to the threats posed by cyber enabled platforms. This incorporates a young persons' education programme involving the Public Protection Unit which is engaged with the Safeguarding Board. Work is ongoing to develop this awareness to prevent young people becoming victims.

Protection – The development of effective liaison with social media providers, internet service providers and other industry contacts in this area to identify criminality and protect the community through collaborative partnerships with industry.

Enforcement – PSNI is engaging with the National Crime Agency nationally and Europol and Interpol internationally to progress investigations and identify criminals targeting the Northern Ireland community.

Mr Eastwood asked the Minister of Justice whether the United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice are applicable in Northern Ireland.

(AQW 47176/11-15)

Mr Ford: The United Nations Standard Minimum Rules for the Administration of Juvenile Justice have not been incorporated into UK law, and therefore are not directly applicable in Northern Ireland. They do, however, have persuasive authority and cognisance is paid to them when developing policies relating to children in the justice system.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the implications of a reduction in his departmental budget 2015-16 in line with the potential cuts recently set out by the Minister of Finance and Personnel.

(AQO 8386/11-15)

Mr Ford: Throughout the 2015-16 budget process, I highlighted that very difficult funding and prioritisation decisions have been, and will be, required, which will have a major impact on the wider justice system and the services we provide. The impact of savings already factored into 2015-16 budgets are set out in my Department's 2015-16 Savings Delivery Plan.

My priorities as part of the 2015-16 budget process included protecting frontline policing as far as possible; and protecting other frontline areas across the Department as far as possible, with the aim of protecting outcomes for the public.

However, it is unlikely that these priorities could be retained if further cuts were applied.

The core Department was previously asked to make baseline savings of 22% so that funding can be released to frontline priorities. It is unlikely that the core could deliver further savings, so other frontline areas would have to make higher cuts.

Whilst it is too early to quantify the impact of additional cuts, there would be very significant operational implications and in some cases there would potentially be public safety implications.

There would also be very significant risks to actually delivering cuts. For example, delivering further savings in staff costs in the short term would be extremely difficult, meaning that more radical cuts would have to be made in other areas.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister of Justice what discussion he has had with the Public Prosecution Service regarding Sir Keir Starmer's report on the Independent Review of the Prosecution of Related Sexual Abuse and Terrorism Cases.

(AQO 8387/11-15)

Mr Ford: The DPP briefed me on Sir Keir Starmer's report shortly before it was published. My officials are considering the Report, particularly in relation to the treatment of victims and witnesses within the justice system.

The Starmer Review is a matter for the Director of Public Prosecutions. That said, the Report is clearly a thorough and well-considered review. I welcome the Director's decision to publish the Report in full and to accept all its findings without reservation, the programme of change that is underway based on Sir Keir's recommendations and the Director's sincere apology to the three victims.

Mr McKay asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the damage being done to the justice system by the refusal of the Criminal Bar Association to take part in future criminal cases.

(AQO 8388/11-15)

Mr Ford: The decision by the Criminal Bar Association and individual solicitors to withdraw from participation in Crown Court cases in a dispute over remuneration is deeply regrettable, especially since the representative bodies are challenging the Rules through legal action.

It is too early at this stage to gauge the impact that the removal of services by the Criminal Bar Association will have on the justice system or to defendants who may be left unrepresented. The new Crown Court Rules came in to effect on 5 May, so the majority of cases before the courts at present will have certification for counsel pre-dating the new fees. I believe the new fees continue to provide appropriate remuneration for the work undertaken in the Crown Court. I therefore urge lawyers to consider the implications their actions will have for their clients and to reconsider their position.

As Judicial Review proceedings have been commenced against the Department, it would be inappropriate for me to discuss the specifics of this issue.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister of Justice for his assessment of the implications for policing and justice following the BBC Panorama programme Britain's Secret Terror Deals broadcast on 28 May 2015, reporting collusion.

(AQO 8389/11-15)

Mr Ford: The Panorama programme was another reminder of the toxic effect the past continues to have on modern policing, and of the pressing need to deal with the legacy of our past.

The practices of the past are not reflective of modern policing, which has a greater emphasis on accountability and policing with the community.

Any allegations of collusion by the State are very serious, and must be dealt with rigorously. It is important that no one, and that includes State agents, sees themselves as beyond the reach of the law.

The Police Ombudsman is conducting a number of investigations which reflect concerns raised in the Panorama programme. I will of course consider the implications of those reports in due course. The Policing Board will also want to consider the reports and discuss their implications for modern policing with the Chief Constable.

I would point to the great progress that we have made since the devolution of justice to ensure greater accountability and to build confidence in the police among all sections of the community.

My Department remains committed to that process as we work to set up the Historical Investigations Unit and make arrangements to improve the legacy inquest function. These institutions will shed greater light on Troubles related deaths and, in doing so, will address a number of the issues raised in the Panorama programme.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister of Justice to outline the financial implications for his Department of the ongoing failure to implement the Stormont House Agreement.

(AQO 8390/11-15)

Mr Ford: The financial implications for my Department of the ongoing failure to implement the Stormont House Agreement are significant.

The Stormont House Agreement includes a range of measures that affect my Department, in particular the establishment of the Historical Investigations Unit and improvements to the way the legacy inquest function is conducted. The Agreement also provides for the appropriate funding of these new arrangements – without the funding, these critical arrangements for dealing with the past will be unaffordable to my Department.

Given the lead-in time to establish the proposed arrangements there are a range of issues on which we have already started working. For example, I have a number of officials engaged in working on the project and preparing the legislation for the establishment of the Historical Investigations Unit – these costs are currently creating a pressure on my Department's budget.

I must, however, emphasise once again the importance of overcoming the impasse of Welfare Reform to ensure that we have the necessary capacity to deal with the issues of our past. If it transpires that the arrangements proposed by the Stormont House Agreement are to be established without the associated funding being released as anticipated, significant frontline cuts will have to be made in other areas. This will be a matter for the Executive.

The alternative is that the arrangements are simply not affordable and will not be implemented. If this is the case, responsibility for investigating Troubles related deaths will remain with my Department and I will have to find alternative arrangements to fulfil the Executive's commitments on these aspects of dealing with the past.

It is likely that legacy inquests and Troubles related investigations by the Police Ombudsman will continue as they have as additional resources will not be available to progress them more quickly. This raises the risk of increased reputational damage for the UK in a European context and at worst it could lead to costly infraction proceedings by the European Court of Human Rights.

My Department, and others in the justice family including the PSNI, are the subject of significant litigation on the basis of delay in holding investigations into deaths linked to the Troubles. Without the new arrangements outlined in the Stormont House Agreement the costs associated with such litigation are likely to increase significantly as my Department's capacity to deal with existing inquests will remain inadequate.

In summary, the costs to my Department in financial terms, and the costs to the people of Northern Ireland in terms of the delivery of justice, will both be significant. The failure of this agreement will impede our ability to effectively deal with the past and increase pressure on resources that we need to keep society safe in the present and future.

Mr Frew asked the Minister of Justice for an update on the consultation on proposals for the rationalisation of the court estate.

(AQO 8391/11-15)

Mr Ford: The consultation on the rationalisation of the court estate closed on the 18 May 2015. The responses to the consultation are currently being analysed and I do not anticipate final decisions on any of the proposals being made until the autumn.

Mr Newton asked the Minister of Justice to outline any discussions he has had with the Chief Constable regarding the implications of lack of progress on Welfare Reform on capacity to police unrest at interface areas.

(AQO 8384/11-15)

Mr Ford: I have regular discussions with the Chief Constable on a range of issues, including on police resources. The financial implications of lack of progress on welfare reform will continue to be felt across the entire public service. Unfortunately, the police cannot be immune from that. Nonetheless, I will continue to protect front-line services to the greatest extent possible.

Mr F McCann asked the Minister of Justice, in light of the proposal by the British government to ban all psychoactive substances, what discussions has he had with the Home Office in relation to the scope of the legislation.

(AQO 8385/11-15)

Mr Ford: As a reserved matter, the Psychoactive Substances Bill, as introduced in the House of Lords on 28 May, will apply across the UK.

Over the past year I have written to the Home Secretary and the Minister for Crime Prevention, making the case that further legislation was required to tackle NPS and, given the positive impact of the legislation introduced in the Republic of Ireland, that it would be valuable to consider their approach.

The Home Secretary wrote to me on 14 May outlining the provisions contained within the proposed Bill which draws heavily on the Irish approach.

I have welcomed the introduction of the Bill, which aims to tackle the production, supply, import and export of NPS and includes provision for a range of offences that could carry a maximum sentence of 7 years in prison.

The Bill also provides powers to stop and search persons, vehicles and vessels, enter and search premises in accordance with a warrant, and to seize and destroy psychoactive substances.

My officials will continue to discuss the proposed content of the Bill with the Home Office and, following advice from my officials, I am aware that the Home Office has also sought input from other Executive Departments.

Department for Regional Development

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW45182/11-15, who has responsibility for maintaining the exclusive rank.

(AQW 46280/11-15)

Mr Kennedy (The Minister for Regional Development): Translink has advised that as the taxi rank is located on Translink property, it falls to Translink's infrastructure and property staff to maintain the facility.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the operation of the Dundonald Park and Ride facility.
(AQW 46426/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The Park and Ride facility at Dundonald opened in December 2014 and initially was attracting an average of approximately 50 cars per day. This number has grown steadily to the current level of around 90 cars per day. The site also attracts a number of walk-in customers from the local area.

I remain committed to developing and improving the provision of Park and Ride facilities across Northern Ireland.

Mrs Cochrane asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on disability policy and wheelchair accessibility for public transport.

(AQW 46579/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's Accessible Transport Strategy 2005 -2015 continues to address the barriers that many older and disabled people face when using or trying to use public transport. The strategy has driven investment in the transport system with new accessible vehicles and stations. Improvements have also been delivered in other areas such as training, information provision and specialist transport services.

However I recognise that more still needs to be done and work is well underway to deliver a new Accessible Transport Strategy to 2025. This includes engagement with stakeholders including older people and people with disabilities to help identify the priority issues to be addressed in the new Strategy.

I intend to go out to public consultation on the new Strategy during the summer and I will also publish a third Monitoring Report detailing the progress made in the last five years of the current Strategy.

Mr Frew asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the proposed Cullybackey Throughpass.

(AQW 46604/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My officials are continuing to work on the design for this scheme and, at present, the junction strategy is being assessed.

As you may be aware, the Cullybackey Bypass is not currently included in any Departmental works programme. However, I am aware of the importance and benefits of the scheme and have asked my officials to continue to progress with the scheme design, as available resources permit.

Mr Hazzard asked the Minister for Regional Development what measures exist for a local primary school to enhance road safety in their locality.

(AQW 46631/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The safety of school children is one of my Department's highest priorities and over many years it has invested significantly in measures to reduce vehicle speeds and improve road safety for children. In the last three years road safety improvements have been provided at 73 schools as part of the School Travel and Safety Projects initiative.

Dangers arising from road traffic at schools are varied and are assessed by experienced TransportNI traffic engineers. The engineers can call upon a number of safety measures to improve safety including provision of enhanced signing and lining, central islands, lay-bys, and traffic calming features such as road humps. A recent innovation has been the development of part-time 20 mph speed limits at schools. TransportNI's policy and procedure guide for safety at schools is available for download at www.drdsn.gov.uk/rsppg_e070.pdf

Since 2013, my Department and the Public Health Agency have funded an Active School Travel programme. This programme aims to encourage children to walk or cycle to school and provides walking and cycling skills training so that children can travel to school more safely. Infrastructure in the vicinity of these schools has also been provided under the programme.

Each year schools throughout Northern Ireland have been invited to participate in this programme. Over 120 schools have done so in the past two years, and a further 65 schools will join the programme next school year. Officials are exploring the continuation of the programme beyond 2016.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Regional Development how much his Department and arm's-length bodies have spent on translation services, broken down by language, in each year since 2007.

(AQW 46657/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The table below details the costs of translations carried out by my Department and Arm's Length Bodies since April 2007 - by calendar year.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development, pursuant to AQW 45294/11-15, whether the existing public taxi hire rank was strategically placed in its current location to allow for an income generating opportunity to be gained by installing an exclusive taxi hire rank.

(AQW 46685/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: You have previously been provided with, in response to AQW 45505/11-15, a copy of the business plan and economic appraisal which outlines the rationale for the development at Central Station. This was placed in the Assembly Library.

Translink has advised that the provision of the current public taxi hire rank was a TransportNI (formerly Roads Service) project developed to provide a facility to replace that which was subsumed into the overall Central Station car park development. The decision was primarily driven by the need to provide enhanced customer arrangements and to formalise arrangements for taxi provision.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development to list the unadopted roads and streets in North Down.

(AQW 46701/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of unadopted streets in North Down, which have been the subject of determination in accordance with the provisions of the Private Streets (NI) Order 1980, are provided in the table below:

Mr Anderson asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail the total compensation paid by his Department for personal injury claims in each of the last three financial years; and the amount paid in legal costs for these cases. (AQW 46721/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Details of the total amount of compensation paid by my Department for public liability personal injury claims, in each of the last three financial years, are set out in the table below. As my Department's Claim's Unit database does not link to the NICS accounting system, details of the legal costs associated with these specific claims could only be obtained at disproportionate cost, as it would necessitate an extensive manual exercise by clerical staff.

Year	Public Liability Personal Injury Compensation
2012/2013	£1,889,551

Mr Rogers asked the Minister for Regional Development to detail (i) the plans underway to decentralise public sector jobs within his Department; and (ii) the number of jobs that will be relocated to South Down. (AQW 46828/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Given the need to manage and maintain the regional road network and to deliver effective local services, my Department is already well-dispersed with a high proportion of its staff based at work locations outside of Belfast.

Some 173 TransportNI staff already work at locations within the South Down area. These include Downpatrick, Seaforde, Corbet Depot (Banbridge) and the Strangford Ferry Terminal.

At present, my Department has no plans to further decentralise jobs to locations outside Belfast, whether to the South Down area or elsewhere. However, in the event of any such opportunities arising, these will be explored in accordance with the normal criteria of business need, value for money and affordability.

Mr McCallister asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the economic impact of his reduced roads maintenance budget.

(AQW 46901/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is facing a £60 million resource budget pressure in 2015/16. As more than half of this falls to TransportNI, I have had no option other than to cut routine maintenance activities and introduce a skeleton service until the outcome of June monitoring is known.

As well as impacts on service levels for activities such as pothole repairs, grass cutting, gully cleaning and street lighting repairs, there are underlying economic implications. With works orders not being issued to external contractors, there is a direct impact on jobs and investment in the construction industry.

Roads are a valuable asset and they are main arteries for the economy. A reduction in maintenance in the short term will inevitably lead to longer-term deterioration and higher long-term repair costs. Reduced maintenance has also the potential to impact on public safety and increase public liability claims and hence costs. In addition, at skeleton service levels, tens of thousands of street lights are likely to be out by the end of this year. I have no doubt that this has the potential to impact on perceptions of safety and security and hence on the night-time economy.

Whilst there are significant local economic impacts of not providing routine maintenance services, I have no doubt that the inability of the Executive to fund my Department to provide basic services reduces the attractiveness of Northern Ireland to both potential investors and tourists.

Mr Dallat asked the Minister for Regional Development what steps have been taken by Translink to reduce the risk of fire on buses following the incident on Monday 8 June 2015; and to explain the cause of this incident.

(AQW 46937/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: Road vehicles have a number of inherent fire risks mostly relating to fuel, oil, hot surfaces and electrical systems. Much care is taken at design stage to reduce the risk.

During the last 3 years there has been no-one injured directly as a result of a fire on a Translink bus service. However Translink is not complacent and has a number of strategies to manage the risk of vehicle fires. These include:

- drivers are trained on evacuation procedures;
- staff carry out First Use Safety Checks and these are formally documented;
- vehicle technicians are trained specifically on fire awareness issues;
- fire suppression systems have been specified on all new vehicles since 2013;
- fire suppression systems have been retro-fitted on a number of buses with further work under way on the remaining fleet;
- engineering investigation reports on all bus fires;
- where technical issues are identified as the cause of the fire, modifications are applied as appropriate; and
- Fleet replacement plans are informed by known technical issues, including matters pertaining to fire risks.

Translink will continue to keep focus on this important aspect of passenger safety.

In relation to the fire on 8 June 2015, a full investigation including a detailed forensic analysis of the cause of the fire is under way.

Lord Morrow asked the Minister for Regional Development to provide, or place in the Assembly Library, the legislation that bans public hire taxis from the bus lane in East Bridge Street, Belfast.

(AQW 47259/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: A copy of the Bus Lane (East Bridge Street, Belfast) Order (Northern Ireland) 2000 (2000 No. 352) has been placed in the Assembly Library.

Mr Girvan asked the Minister for Regional Development whether the A8 project will be completed within budget.

(AQO 8397/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I am very pleased to confirm that the new 14 kilometre long A8 dual carriageway between Belfast and Larne opened to traffic on 29 May and is within its £130million budget.

I have no doubt that this is money well spent in that this much needed upgraded section of the A8 will help grow the local economy and contribute to wider economic development across Northern Ireland. The scheme will also help with the development of the Port of Larne.

Throughout the works, which commenced in August 2012, TransportNI and its contractors have worked hard to minimise any inconvenience for the public.

However, traffic management arrangements will still be required to complete some works such as the tie in to side roads and accommodation works along the scheme, but every effort will be made to keep traffic disruption to a minimum.

Landscaping works will also be taking place in the autumn planting season and, with favourable weather conditions, should be completed by December 2015.

Mr Poots asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline how his Department and its arm's-length bodies adhere to the provisions of the Noxious Weeds (Northern Ireland) Order 1977 requiring noxious weeds to be controlled.

(AQO 8398/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department's policy and procedures on weed control aim to ensure the safety of road users, prevent deterioration of the road pavement and meet our statutory obligations in controlling noxious weeds.

Due to the £60 million Resource budget pressures, half of which fall to TransportNI, it is currently only able to provide a skeleton routine maintenance service using its internal workforce, with priority given to work to meet our legislative requirement in relation to noxious weeds.

In relation to our arms length bodies, Northern Ireland Water has a tender in place for grounds maintenance by an approved contractor, trained and experienced in the treatment and removal of noxious weeds.

In addition, Translink has introduced an annual rolling programme of weed spraying throughout its infrastructure and is currently in the process of spraying the rail corridor. The Londonderry Line has been completed and the equipment is currently on the Larne Line.

To ensure my Department continues to meet its statutory obligations in relation to noxious weeds, I have submitted a June Monitoring bid for the resources required to restore routine maintenance activities to normal levels and I trust the Member and the House will robustly support my Department's bid.

Mrs Cameron asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the road and rail network in South Antrim.

(AQO 8399/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is taking forward a programme of improvements to the strategic road network, which includes a number of schemes in South Antrim.

Schemes such as the A8 Belfast to Larne dual carriageway and A2 Shore Road, Greenisland will improve journey times and improve safety on the strategic network.

Construction work on the new 14km A8 Belfast to Larne dual carriageway is substantially complete and it opened to traffic, on programme, on 29th May.

The 3.5km, A2 Shore Road, Greenisland dualling scheme is progressing well and is on programme for completion in August 2015.

In addition, a contract to develop the detailed design A6 Randalstown to Castledawson Dual Carriageway was awarded on 1 May 2015. This will see the scheme advanced to a 'shovel ready' stage and allow construction of the project to commence at relatively short notice when funding becomes available.

With regard to the rail network, currently, daily services to and from Antrim represent a significant proportion of the total for the whole of Northern Ireland. There are around 40 services daily to and from Antrim and Mossley West, connecting to Belfast, Coleraine and Londonderry.

The quality of service is such that the network continues to enjoy significant levels of passenger growth, with an increase of over 12% on the Belfast-Coleraine-Derry line and over 7% on the Belfast-Carrickfergus-Larne line in 2014/15, compared to 2013/14.

Mr Hilditch asked the Minister for Regional Development when the A2 between Silver Stream Banks and Seapark will be fully functional.

(AQO 8400/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I can advise the Member that work is progressing well on the A2 Shore Road scheme at Greenisland.

Work on upgrading 3.5 kilometres of single carriageway to dual carriageway began in March 2013 and is programmed for completion in September this year.

Along the on-line section of the scheme, between Jordanstown Road and Station Road, the new carriageway in the Carrickfergus bound direction has been substantially constructed and a contra-flow traffic arrangement is currently in operation.

The existing road is now being reconstructed to become the Belfast bound carriageway. This work is nearing completion, and later this month traffic will revert to it while the final surfacing is completed on the Carrickfergus bound carriageway.

At the Carrickfergus end of the scheme, a contra-flow traffic management arrangement is in place at Seapark to allow construction of a new roundabout. At the start of June this switched from being on the Belfast bound carriageway to the Carrickfergus bound carriageway. This coincided with traffic first starting to use the off-line section of the scheme between Station Road and Seapark.

My Department has kept disruption to traffic to a minimum by maintaining one lane of traffic in each direction on weekdays throughout the works, however, it will be necessary to have full road closures to complete the final surfacing at junctions. These closures are planned for two consecutive Sundays in early August.

Like the many thousands of commuters who regularly use this route, I am looking forward to completion of the scheme and wish to thank them for their patience and forbearance over the past two years.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the proposed cuts to bus services between Bangor, Donaghadee and Ballywalter.

(AQO 8401/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: First of all I would emphasise that my aim is to provide the most effective Public Transport service for the travelling public throughout Northern Ireland but I have to do this within the reduced budget allocation that the Executive has given to my Department.

You will be aware that as part of a programme to reduce costs and overheads Translink had started a consultation on service adjustments. I suspended this in early May.

To help save costs without impacting frontline services in Translink I want to consider all possible options and I can advise you that after a meeting with representatives from Unite the Union on 1 May 2015, at which they indicated that they could produce an alternative set of proposals for Translink to implement but with less impact on front line services I agreed to defer consideration of the outcome of the consultation process, that was nearing completion, for a period of three months.

I have met with Unite recently and requests for information have been addressed and further meetings planned. It is clear that there is an urgency here and any proposals must be workable and deliverable immediately so that savings can be delivered this year.

At the conclusion of that period I will consider these alternative proposals alongside the outcome of Translink's consultation process.

Mr McKay asked the Minister for Regional Development, following the recent publication of the Consultation Report on the draft Bicycle Strategy, for an update on the delivery plan.

(AQO 8402/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I welcome the Member's continued interest in my 'cycling revolution'.

The final Bicycle Strategy is due out in the summer. Following this I intend to publish the Delivery Plan in October.

The Bicycle Strategy Delivery Plan will contain a series of specific, and time bound objectives, policies and projects. It will also identify a number of infrastructure schemes for Belfast which will link pieces of the existing infrastructure to the city centre. These will be constructed early in 2016.

Mr Milne asked the Minister for Regional Development to outline the recent pay settlement in NI Water.

(AQO 8403/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: The pay and pension agreement reached by NIW is consistent with Executive policy. The policy recognises that pay deals can take account of measures involving modernisation and resilience. Any pay policy that did not allow this would be too inflexible, as it would remove the incentive to improve ways of working.

The pay settlement represents a total increase in the wage bill of £1.442million in 2014 -15 and £1.522million in 2015-16. The 2015-16 figure for frontline staff includes a one-off payment to support a move from weekly to monthly pay. It is estimated that the increase in the wages bill to cover the benefits based payment will be £483k for the 2014/15 year and £476k in 2015/16.

That is the basis of the NIW deal. The element of the increases above 1% are part of productivity and modernisation initiatives which will deliver overall operational efficiencies for the company, as well as providing additional resilience for out of hours operational cover.

NI Water has identified savings well in excess of these costs to support the Pay Remit Business Case approved by DRD and the DFP Minister. Savings of around £1.7million were achieved in 2014/15, whilst the figure for 2015/16 is likely to be around £2million.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Regional Development for his assessment of the service provided by the Disability Action Transport Scheme.

(AQO 8404/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: I acknowledge the valuable services delivered by Community Transport providers. As Minister I have increased funding for these services in recent years. This has included funding to support the Disability Action Transport Scheme in towns and cities across Northern Ireland for elderly and disabled people.

The Scheme was introduced on 1 April 2013 and continues to operate well. Disability Action seeks the views of their members through user forums and provides feedback to my officials, which continues to be positive. In light of the reduction to grant made available to Disability Action recent discussions have focused on how operational adjustments could be made which would minimise changes to front line services.

I will be bidding, with support from the Committee for Regional Development, for additional funding in June monitoring for Community Transport.

Mr McNarry asked the Minister for Regional Development for an update on the work schedules planned for the summer months in relation to road repairs, maintenance of road gullies and grass and verge cutting throughout the Strangford constituency.

(AQO 8405/11-15)

Mr Kennedy: My Department is facing an £60 million resource budget pressure in 2015/16, more than half of which will fall to TransportNI.

This budget pressure has created an immediate impact on the delivery of routine maintenance services such as; road repairs, the maintenance of road gullies and grass a verge cutting. As such, I have had no option other than to agree a skeleton service, at some financial risk to my Department, until June monitoring.

With regards to the specific operation of the skeleton service in the Strangford constituency, I can confirm that only a single grass cut will be completed across all urban/rural areas and this work is already underway.

Patching of carriageway/footway defects will be restricted to only the most hazardous defects on roads carrying higher traffic volumes, while gully cleaning will be carried out on a responsive basis only and at known hotspots.

Department for Social Development

Mrs Dobson asked the Minister for Social Development to detail for each month of the last three years (i) the cost; and (ii) the number of days spent by Northern Ireland Housing Executive clients in, (a) Bed and Breakfast; and (b) hotel accommodation.

(AQW 46100/11-15)

Mr Storey (The Minister for Social Development): The information is not available in the format requested as the Housing Executive introduced a new IT system in September 2013 for recording the usage of temporary accommodation and information prior to this date is no longer available. However, the table attached provides details of (i) the cost and (ii) the number of days spent by Housing Executive clients in (a) Bed and breakfast and (b) hotel accommodation from September 2013 to March 2015.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail how many claimants are under each stage of sanction by the Social Security Agency for unacceptable behavior.

(AQW 46483/11-15)

Mr Storey: There are a number of preventative measures the Social Security Agency can take, after careful consideration, when dealing with unacceptable claimant behaviour. These, however, do not include the use of sanctions.

When a claimant's behaviour is deemed unacceptable, the Agency may invoke the Public Order (NI) Order 1987, thereby instructing someone to leave an office. Although relatively uncommon, the Agency may also seek the assistance of the Police.

On occasion it may be necessary following an incident to deem a claimant as potentially violent, exclude a claimant from visiting offices or to require them to be accompanied in future, for example by a Social Worker or Community Worker.

At present, there are 361 people recorded and categorised as either Potentially Violent (235), Potential Violent and to be Accompanied (61) or Excluded (65).

By way of context, the Agency has in the region of 13 million inbound/outbound telephony or ad hoc face to face contacts with its claimant base per annum.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the different stages of restrictions that the Social Security Agency can impose on claimants as sanctions due to unacceptable behavior.

(AQW 46484/11-15)

Mr Storey: There are a number of preventative measures the Social Security Agency can take, after careful consideration, when dealing with unacceptable claimant behaviour. These, however, do not include the use of sanctions.

When a customer's behaviour is deemed unacceptable, the Agency may invoke the Public Order (NI) Order 1987, thereby instructing someone to leave an office. Although relatively uncommon, the Agency may also seek the assistance of the Police.

On occasion it may be necessary following an incident to deem a claimant as potentially violent, exclude a claimant from visiting offices or to require them to be accompanied in future, for example by a Social Worker or Community Worker. Any measures taken will always be proportionate with the primary aim of safeguarding and protecting staff and other claimants.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister for Social Development to detail whether tenants in social housing properties that are larger than their need are encouraged by housing officers to consider downsizing to a smaller property.

(AQW 46594/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Housing Executive has advised that its Officers discuss such matters with tenants when appropriate, for example, where the circumstances of the household have changed following an assignment or succession. Information about the benefits of downsizing (for example, in terms of heating and maintaining a home) and the schemes available to help tenants move home are featured on the Housing Executive's website; in Information Leaflets which are made available to tenants; and in the Tenants magazine 'Housing News' which is delivered annually to almost 90,000 homes.

Tenants can apply for a transfer and may be eligible for up to 30 Under Occupation Points under the rules of the Housing Selection Scheme where the size of their current accommodation is in excess of their needs. This award of 30 points provides additional weighting under the Scheme to existing tenants who are seeking to downsize and enables Landlords to better manage their stock.

The Housing Executive also operates a mutual exchange service which allows tenants to exchange their home with another Housing Executive or Housing Association tenant. This may be where their home is larger than they need. The Housing Executive has procured an online 'HomeSwapper' service which is an internet based exchange service that allows all social housing tenants to register interest and obtain information on potential 'swaps' or exchanges of properties with other tenants across Northern Ireland and the UK.

It is anticipated that this may assist in addressing the impact on under-occupying tenants, should bedroom size restrictions be introduced as part of Welfare Reform in Northern Ireland. In this respect, it should also be noted that any new tenants are advised about potential implications of under-occupation in the event of Welfare Reform.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the number of (i) referrals to the Affordable Warmth Scheme since its introduction; and (ii) schemes successfully delivered in the Armagh City, Banbridge and Craigavon Borough Council area.

(AQW 46608/11-15)

Mr Storey: The new Affordable Warmth Scheme has been fully operational across all council areas since 1 April 2015. At 31 May 2015 the Housing Executive had received 554 referrals to the Affordable Warmth Scheme from the Armagh City, Banbridge and Craigavon Council area. Of these, 168 technical visits have been arranged, 38 approvals for work to commence have been issued and 5 homes in the area have had the measures installed. The Housing Executive continues to carry out technical inspections and issue approvals. I have asked officials to closely monitor progress of this scheme.

The Information provided in this response is governed by the Principles and Protocols of the Code of Practice for Official Statistics. This is enforced by UK Statistics Authority.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development whether he will implement unpaid voluntary development opportunities for Administrative Assistants as a way of increasing their workload, as identified by The Appeals Service management as a potential solution.

(AQW 46617/11-15)

Mr Storey: As advised in my response to AQW/38367/11-15, it remains the position that personal development opportunities are an integral part of the NICS Performance Management System and as such are agreed between members of staff and line management on an individual basis.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Social Development how much his Department has paid to consultants in each year since 2011; and how much each agency or individual received in each year.

(AQW 46695/11-15)

Mr Storey: The amounts paid to all consultancy firms/ individuals between 2011/12 – 2014/15 is as below, further detail is provided at Annex 1. These payments cover all professional services including consultancy, managed services, staff substitution and research.

Mr Weir asked the Minister for Social Development how many people receive Independent Living Fund payments in North Down.

(AQW 46726/11-15)

Mr Storey: There are currently 21 service users in receipt of Independent Living Fund payments in North Down.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Minister for Social Development what action his Department will take to ensure that businesses are not impacted by the ongoing development works included in the Ballymena Public Realm scheme.

(AQW 46740/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department continues to work closely with Mid and East Antrim Borough Council to progress the public realm scheme in Ballymena. Council is responsible for the delivery of the public realm scheme and they have confirmed that access to all trading premises will be maintained during opening hours. The contractor has established an office in the town centre with a dedicated liaison officer to keep traders informed and to deal with any issues traders may have. A senior council official will also meet with traders in the affected areas on a weekly basis.

Ms Sugden asked the Minister for Social Development, pursuant to AQW 43284/11-15, to detail the process for assessing applications.

(AQW 46754/11-15)

Mr Storey: In this difficult financial climate my Department's aim was to maximise the delivery of high quality services to the most disadvantaged though the introduction of a process that delivered within timeframe, ensured funding was prioritised against the highest quality projects, and allowed for a consistent and transparent process. Applications were sought from all existing projects and were prioritised against the following criteria at both at a strategic and project level to ensure uniformity:

- Linkage to Departmental Policies and Programme for Government priorities
- Evidence based need
- Value for Money
- Impact on area of disadvantage
- Ministerial Priority
- Sustainability – Impact of withdrawal/Other funding opportunities

These criteria along with regional and local intelligence gathered, feedback from the formal consultation process, our organisational / sectoral experience and knowledge of the funding environment were considered and the following project methodology was introduced.

Project Methodology

Stage 1 Remove costs relating to projects that would not require DSD funding in 2015/16. This included for example one-off projects (e.g. refurbishments of premises, purchase of equipment, design fees, community audits and so on) and those projects for which alternative funding in 2015/16 had been secured.

Stage 2 All remaining projects went through a robust Economic Appraisal process. The economic appraisal ensured that projects had effectively delivered against agreed existing contractual targets and continued to meet identified need and strategic priorities going forward. Those that failed to meet these criteria were no longer considered for funding. Those that passed the economic appraisal were considered suitable for funding. Where possible, efficiencies were identified through the economic appraisal process to improve value for money.

Stage 3 Finally, subject projects to the existing Senior level Approval Panel arrangements, where a sample of projects were considered against the set criteria.

Mr Kinahan asked the Minister for Social Development to detail what relationship the Northern Ireland Charities Commission has with its counterparts in other UK regions.

(AQW 46814/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Commission works closely with other regulators including the Charity Commission for England and Wales, the Office of the Scottish Charity Regulator and the Charities Regulatory Authority in the Republic of Ireland, to share information and learning on issues relating to charity regulation, the charity sector and charities.

The Commission also participates in the UK and Ireland Charity Regulators Forum, which provides charity regulators and tax authorities in the UK and Ireland with a forum to discuss policy and operational matters at a strategic level.

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister for Social Development to detail the criteria used by his Department when considering applications for the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

(AQW 46818/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Voluntary Exit Scheme is a Northern Ireland Civil Service Scheme. The eligibility and selection criteria used were published in the Scheme Information Booklet and also Frequently Asked Questions document both of which are available via the Department of Finance and Personnel website on the following link:

http://www.dfpni.gov.uk/nics_voluntary_exit_scheme

Mr Nesbitt asked the Minister for Social Development what training support his Department intends to provide to staff who will be taking up new responsibilities following the departure of other staff through the Voluntary Exit Scheme.

(AQW 46820/11-15)

Mr Storey: All necessary training and support will be provided to staff who take up new responsibilities in the Department in line with the Department's policy to ensure that all staff have the skills and knowledge they need to do their jobs effectively.

Mr Hussey asked the Minister for Social Development how much funding his Department is providing to the Omagh Independent Advice Service in 2015; and how much it has provided for each of the last five years as both direct or indirect funding.

(AQW 46826/11-15)

Mr Storey: In the current financial year 2015/16 my Department has provided, through its Community Support Programme, funding of £25,229 to Omagh Independent Advice Service with the same amount of funding provided for each of the last five years 2010/11 to 2014/15.

Ms Maeve McLaughlin asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the regeneration of the Fort George site in Derry.

(AQW 46861/11-15)

Mr Storey: I anticipate that a Planning decision will be made on the Fort George Development Framework by my Ministerial colleague Mark H Durkan in the near future. If Planning Permission is granted, my Department will be able to move forward with the remediation works required to enable the regeneration of the site.

An approach has also been made by a potential purchaser seeking a portion of the Fort George site. In line with normal practice the details of this offer remain 'commercial in confidence' at this point, and will require further consideration before any decision is made.

Mrs D Kelly asked the Minister for Social Development whether he plans to revise the guidelines for eligibility to the Affordable Warmth Scheme to exclude Disability Living Allowance as part of the income threshold.

(AQW 47005/11-15)

Mr Storey: The Affordable Warmth Scheme was piloted in 2012 and 2013 and evaluation of the pilots indicated that 67% of households surveyed had an income of less than £16,000 per year and 50% had an income less than £12,000 per year. My Department conducted a public consultation on proposals for the Affordable Warmth Scheme between 17 February and 9 May 2014 and proposed an income threshold of £16,000 per year as a qualification criterion for the scheme.

Responses to the public consultation suggested that disability benefits like Disability Living Allowance (DLA) and Attendance Allowance (AA) should be excluded from the calculation of income. My Department then increased the income threshold to £20,000 per year to include all income including disability benefits.

The policy intention of the Affordable Warmth Scheme is to target low income households considered to be in severe/extreme fuel poverty. The expectation of setting the income threshold at £20,000 was that it would capture large numbers of low income households including those receiving DLA and AA.

Officials will monitor the volume of Affordable Warmth cases which are disallowed due to income during the first year of the scheme, particularly where they are in receipt of DLA or AA. My Department will review the Affordable Warmth Scheme after one year of operation.

Mr Gardiner asked the Minister for Social Development how many new social housing units are planned for Upper Bann in 2015-16.

(AQO 8411/11-15)

Mr Storey: I can advise you that 12 schemes are currently programmed to be delivered through the Social Housing Development Programme in the Upper Bann area in 2015-16. These schemes will deliver a total of 102 social housing units.

Mr Givan asked the Minister for Social Development whether he will be in a position to transfer regeneration powers to local government by 2016.

(AQO 8412/11-15)

Mr Storey: The proposed transfer of powers to local government in April 2016 is dependent on the successful passage of the Regeneration Bill through the Assembly. The Bill completed its formal 'clause by clause' consideration by the Social Development Committee on 28 May and the Committee has proposed three amendments in its report. I am currently considering the amendments before bringing the Bill to the Assembly for Consideration Stage. However, it will be up to the Assembly to vote on whether or not any proposals to amend the Bill should be accepted. Operationally my Department is working closely with Councils to develop Transition Plans to ensure a smooth transfer. I remain committed to the transfer of my department's powers to local councils.

Mr McAleer asked the Minister for Social Development whether he has consulted with the Department of Finance and Personnel on the subject of restrictive security covenants in respect of departmental capital grants for regeneration projects. (AQO 8413/11-15)

Mr Storey: I am unsure whether this is a general question or one that relates to St Lucia Barrack which is within the Members constituency. My officials have sought clarification from the Member. In the absence of any such clarification:

General

Restricted Covenants are a legal matter and as such the Department would have to consult with the Departmental Solicitors Office who is part of the Department of Finance and Personnel.

Specific - St Lucia Barracks

I understand that there has been a Restrictive Covenant in relation to the St. Lucia Barracks in Omagh which is within the Members constituency.

St. Lucia Barracks was to be gifted from MOD to the Northern Ireland Executive through OFMdFM. However there was a 'Restrictive Covenant' on the site which delayed the transfer. The 'Restrictive Covenant' was that the site could only be used for Military Purposes.

The removal of the Restrictive Covenant would have been a matter for the MOD and until such was removed the site could not have been used for any alternative purposes.

I understand that the MOD has been in negotiations with the former owners of the site over the past number of years to try and have this Restrictive Covenant lifted.

In 2010 DSD completed a Masterplan for the site, but this was never taken to consultation because of the Restrictive Covenant issue. It was only in December 2014 that DSD was advised by OFMDFM (informally) that the Covenant has been lifted.

My Officials are currently working with Fermanagh and Omagh District Council Officials to have the Masterplan updated and issued for consultation. My Department is committed to supporting the development of a Masterplan for the St Lucia site.

Mr Ó hOisín asked the Minister for Social Development how many social housing units are being built in East Londonderry. (AQO 8414/11-15)

Mr Storey: I can advise you that 14 schemes are currently programmed to be delivered through the Social Housing Development Programme in the East Londonderry area in 2015-16. These schemes will deliver 114 social housing units.

Mr Middleton asked the Minister for Social Development how he ensures his Department is aware of the needs and views of local councils.

(AQO 8415/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department has a history of close collaboration with Councils. By taking into account Councils' local knowledge and experience my Department has successfully formulated and implemented Public realm schemes, area Masterplans and Development Frameworks. My Department also co-funds the Community Support Programme in partnership with the Councils.

Furthermore my Department have been working closely with Councils in relation to current regeneration projects and preparing for the proposed transfer of powers in April 2016. Council have an opportunity through this engagement to express their views and needs. Where appropriate, Council representative are invited to sit on programme or project boards to ensure the views and contributions of the Council are taken into account at a strategic level also.

The transfer of planning to councils and the creation of community plans brings an added dimension to this relationship. Despite not being named as a statutory partner I and my Officials are fully committed to this process and it is our intention to engage proactively with the new structures. I recently met with representatives from all councils and expressed my desire to build on the good relations that are already in place. To that end my officials have been engaging directly with each Council to discuss the Departments role in each of the community planning processes.

I will also continue to participate in the work of the Partnership Panel and to hear directly from local elected representatives about issues in which we have a shared interest.

Ms Lo asked the Minister for Social Development how his Department ensures that no tenant is disadvantaged when transferring housing association.

(AQO 8416/11-15)

Mr Storey: The views of tenants will be taken into account from the earliest stages of Small Scale Voluntary Stock Transfer proposals. Initially tenants' representatives will be involved in the process of selecting the preferred partner housing association. Tenants will be fully and formally consulted on the transfer proposal. Finally each tenant will be invited to vote on the proposed transfer in a tenant ballot, the outcome of which will decide if the transfer goes ahead.

Ms Ruane asked the Minister for Social Development how many Town Centre Master Plans has his Department sponsored or adopted in the last 12 months.

(AQO 8417/11-15)

Mr Storey: In the last 12 months Masterplans have been published for the towns of Ballynahinch, Comber, Donaghadee, Dromore and Holywood. Each of these documents is unique to their town centre and each contain many exciting ideas, which with support from the private and public sector will transform the town centre for the benefit of retailers, businesses and local people.

My Department has also worked in partnership with local councils and contributed to the production of Regeneration Development Frameworks in Castlereagh, Coalisland, Greenland and the Lansdowne area of Portrush. The purpose of the Development Framework is to provide a strategic focus for regeneration activities and initiatives to aide the drawdown of funding from other statutory agencies and investors.

Mr Lyttle asked the Minister for Social Development for an update on the review of housing to bring forward recommendations on shared neighbourhoods, identified as a headline action by the Together Building a United Community strategy published in May 2013.

(AQO 8418/11-15)

Mr Storey: My Department is undertaking the review in two stages. The first stage is a review of existing evidence on shared housing. This will be completed this summer and my Department will use it to identify key gaps in the evidence base. This will inform stage two which will involve engaging an external researcher to fill these gaps and offer recommendations on ways in which the framework for furthering shared housing can be improved. It is anticipated that stage two will be completed in 2016.

Northern Ireland Assembly Commission

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission whether an incident of interference with the flying of the Union flag on Parliament Buildings took place on 2nd June 2015.

(AQW 46743/11-15)

Mr Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): As was noted in the Report that the Speaker sent to Members on 8 June 2015 there was no evidence to suggest that the flags had been in any way tampered with on 2 June 2015. It is also worthy of note that there have been some occasions in the past when flags appear to have worked loose on poles during inclement weather. This may also have been in part due to their high level elevated exposure to the elements on the roof of Parliament Buildings.

Mr Allister asked the Assembly Commission what actions were taken and by whom to secure the removal of the unauthorised flags flown from Parliament Buildings on 3rd June 2015.

(AQW 46744/11-15)

Mr Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): At approximately 1.10pm on Wednesday 3rd June 2015, it was reported to Assembly Usher Services that two unauthorised flags were flying on the flag poles on the roof of Parliament Buildings.

On receipt of that information, Usher Services supervisors immediately made their way to the flag poles on the roof and retrieved the two flags which were the flag of the Republic of Ireland, and also a green coloured flag bearing the words "Irish Republic".

Supervisors then briefed Assembly Senior management in relation to the matter, and the flags were subsequently handed over to police.

Mr D McIlveen asked the Assembly Commission what steps will be taken to ensure tighter security at Parliament Buildings following the flag incident on 3rd June 2015.

(AQW 46745/11-15)

Mr Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The main Contractor who is carrying out work on the roof of Parliament Buildings, had been requested to provide an explanatory report into this incident and the Commission is now in receipt of that report, together with a report from Assembly Senior Management.

A police investigation is also already underway and is currently ongoing.

A range of measures have also been put in place by management to prevent any recurrence and to improve security on the construction site, a site which the main contractor has responsibility for.

The Commission has also requested a wider review of security arrangements to Parliament Buildings.

You will have noted that the Speaker has written to all Members and provided an update report on the incident following a meeting of the Assembly Commission on 8 June 2015.

Lord Morrow asked the Assembly Commission (i) to provide or place in the Assembly Library a copy of the Assembly's procedures for the vetting and/or authorisation of contract staff carrying out services in Parliament Buildings; (ii) to detail the dates on which these procedures have been reviewed; and (iii) under what specific circumstances these procedures can be waived.

(AQW 46917/11-15)

Mr Ramsey (The Representative of the Assembly Commission): The Assembly Security Clearance policy which is referred to at Chapter 1.08 of the Assembly Staff Handbook, and which is accessible via AsslSt, includes a section on security clearance of Contractors. These procedures were last reviewed in October 2014.

All contractors entering Parliament Buildings are first required to produce written evidence that they have undergone appropriate security clearance, and on receipt of this, a contractor may be granted unrestricted access. Where such clearance is pending, or occasionally to facilitate critical work, restricted access under escort may be granted by the Usher Services office.

Amendment 3

New Clause

After clause 12 insert -

‘Direct committal for trial: offences related to specified offences

Direct committal: offences related to specified offences

12A.—(1) Where—

- (a) this Chapter applies in relation to an accused (“A”) who—
 - (i) is charged with an offence (“offence A”) which is not a specified offence, and
 - (ii) is not also charged with a specified offence,
- (b) A appears or is brought before the court on the same occasion as another person (“B”) charged with a specified offence,
- (c) the court commits B for trial for the specified offence under section 12, and
- (d) offence A appears to the court to be related to the specified offence for which the court commits B for trial, the court shall forthwith commit A to the Crown Court for trial for offence A.

(2) Where—

- (a) this Chapter applies in relation to an accused (“A”) who—
 - (i) is charged with an offence (“offence A”) which is not a specified offence, and
 - (ii) is not also charged with a specified offence,
- (b) on a previous occasion another person (“B”) has appeared or been brought before the court charged with a specified offence,
- (c) the court has on that occasion committed B for trial for the specified offence under section 12, and
- (d) offence A appears to the court to be related to the specified offence for which the court committed B for trial, the court may forthwith commit A to the Crown Court for trial for offence A if the court considers that it is necessary or appropriate in the interests of justice to do so.

(3) Where the court commits the accused for trial for an offence under this section—

- (a) it shall accordingly not conduct committal proceedings in relation to that offence; and
- (b) the functions of the court then cease in relation to that offence, except as provided by—
 - (i) section 13; or
 - (ii) Article 29(2)(a) of the Legal Aid, Advice and Assistance (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 or any regulations under Article 26(3) of the Access to Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2003.

- (4) For the purposes of this section an offence is related to a specified offence if a count charging the offence could be included in the same indictment as a count charging the specified offence.'

Amendment 21New Clause

After clause 49 insert -

PART 6ADOMESTIC VIOLENCE PROTECTION NOTICES, ORDERS AND DISCLOSURES*Power to issue a domestic violence protection notice

- 49A.—(1) A member of a police force not below the rank of superintendent (“the authorising officer”) may issue a domestic violence protection notice (“a DVPN”) under this section.
- (2) A DVPN may be issued to a person (“P”) aged 16 years or over if the authorising officer has reasonable grounds for believing that—
- P has been violent towards, or has threatened violence towards or controlled or coerced, a former or current intimate partner or an associated person, and
 - the issue of the DVPN is necessary to protect that person from violence or a threat of violence by P.
- (3) Before issuing a DVPN, the authorising officer must, in particular, consider—
- the welfare of any person under the age of 18 whose interests the officer considers relevant to the issuing of the DVPN (whether or not that person is an associated person);
 - the opinion of the person for whose protection the DVPN would be issued as to the issuing of the DVPN;
 - any representations made by P as to the issuing of the DVPN, and
 - in the case of provision included by virtue of subsection (8), the opinion of any other associated person who lives in the premises to which the provision would relate.
- (4) The authorising officer must take reasonable steps to discover the opinions mentioned in subsection (3).
- (5) But the authorising officer may issue a DVPN in circumstances where the person for whose protection it is issued does not consent to the issuing of the DVPN.
- (6) A DVPN must contain provision to prohibit P from molesting the person for whose protection it is issued.
- (7) Provision required to be included by virtue of subsection (6) may be expressed so as to refer to molestation in general, to particular acts of molestation, or to both.
- (8) If P lives in premises which are also lived in by a person for whose protection the DVPN is issued, the DVPN may also contain provision—
- to prohibit P from evicting or excluding from the premises the person for whose protection the DVPN is issued;
 - to prohibit P from entering the premises;
 - to require P to leave the premises, or
 - to prohibit P from coming within such distance of the premises as may be specified in the DVPN.
- (9) An “associated person” means a person who is associated with P within the meaning of section 62 of the Family Law Act 1996;
- (10) Subsection (11) applies where a DVPN includes provision in relation to premises by virtue of subsection (8)(b) or (8)(c) and the authorising officer believes that—
- P is a person subject to service law in accordance with sections 367 to 369 of the Armed Forces Act 2006, and
 - the premises fall within paragraph (a) of the definition of “service living accommodation” in section 96(1) of that Act.
- (11) The authorising officer must make reasonable efforts to inform P’s commanding officer (within the meaning of section 360 of the Armed Forces Act 2006) of the issuing of the notice.
- (12) A former or current intimate partner means a person who is personally connected with P within the meaning of section 76 of the Serious Crime Act 2015.
- (13) Controlling or coercive behaviour includes behaviour by P that is within the meaning of section 76 of the Serious Crime Act 2015 and financial coercion.
- (14) Financial coercion means a series of acts of manipulation by P to the financial detriment of A as provided in regulations by Department.’

Amendment 22New Clause

After clause 49 insert -

‘Contents and service of a domestic violence protection notice

- 49B.—(1) A DVPN must state—
- the grounds on which it has been issued;
 - that a constable may arrest P without warrant if the constable has reasonable grounds for believing that P is in breach of the DVPN;
 - that an application for a domestic violence protection order under section 49D will be heard within 48 hours of the time of service of the DVPN and a notice of the hearing will be given to P;
 - that the DVPN continues in effect until that application has been determined, and
 - the provision that a magistrates’ court may include in a domestic violence protection order.
- (2) A DVPN must be in writing and must be served on P personally by a constable.
- (3) On serving P with a DVPN, the constable must ask P for an address for the purposes of being given the notice of the hearing of the application for the domestic violence protection order.’

Mrs Dolores Kelly
Mrs Karen McKeivitt
Mr Alban Maginness
Mr Colum Eastwood

Amendment 23New Clause

After clause 49 insert -

‘Breach of a domestic violence protection notice

49C.—(1) A person arrested by virtue of section 49B(1)(b) for a breach of a DVPN must be held in custody and brought before the magistrates’ court which will hear the application for the DVPO under section 49D—

- (a) before the end of the period of 24 hours beginning with the time of the arrest, or
- (b) if earlier, at the hearing of that application.

(2) If the person is brought before the court by virtue of subsection (1)(a), the court may remand the person.

(3) If the court adjourns the hearing of the application by virtue of section 49D(8), the court may remand the person.’

*Mrs Dolores Kelly
Mrs Karen McKeivitt
Mr Alban Maginness
Mr Colum Eastwood*

Amendment 24New Clause

After clause 49 insert -

‘Application for a domestic violence protection order

49D.—(1) If a DVPN has been issued, a constable must apply for a domestic violence protection order (“a DVPO”).

(2) The application must be made by complaint to a magistrates’ court.

(3) The application must be heard by the magistrates’ court not later than 48 hours after the DVPN was served pursuant to section 49B(2).

(4) A notice of the hearing of the application must be given to P.

(5) The notice is deemed given if it has been left at the address given by P under section 49B(3).

(6) But if the notice has not been given because no address was given by P under section 49B(3), the court may hear the application for the DVPO if the court is satisfied that the constable applying for the DVPO has made reasonable efforts to give P the notice.

(7) The magistrates’ court may adjourn the hearing of the application.

(8) If the court adjourns the hearing, the DVPN continues in effect until the application has been determined.

(9) On the hearing of an application for a DVPO, section 20 of the Magistrates’ Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 does not apply in relation to a person for whose protection the DVPO would be made, except where the person has given oral or written evidence at the hearing.’

*Mrs Dolores Kelly
Mrs Karen McKeivitt
Mr Alban Maginness
Mr Colum Eastwood*

Amendment 25New Clause

After clause 49 insert -

‘Conditions for and contents of a domestic violence protection order

49E.—(1) The court may make a DVPO if two conditions are met.

(2) The first condition is that the court is satisfied on the balance of probabilities that P has been violent towards, or has threatened violence towards or coerced, a former or current intimate partner or, an associated person.

(3) The second condition is that the court thinks that making the DVPO is necessary to protect that person from violence or a threat of violence by P.

(4) Before making a DVPO, the court must, in particular, consider—

- (a) the welfare of any person under the age of 18 whose interests the court considers relevant to the making of the DVPO (whether or not that person is a former or current intimate partner or an associated person), and
- (b) any opinion of which the court is made aware—
 - (i) of the person for whose protection the DVPO would be made, and
 - (ii) in the case of provision included by virtue of subsection (8), of any other associated person who lives in the premises to which the provision would relate.

(5) But the court may make a DVPO in circumstances where the person for whose protection it is made does not consent to the making of the DVPO.

(6) A DVPO must contain provision to prohibit P from molesting the person for whose protection it is made.

(7) Provision required to be included by virtue of subsection (6) may be expressed so as to refer to molestation in general, to particular acts of molestation, or to both.

(8) If P lives in premises which are also lived in by a person for whose protection the DVPO is made, the DVPO may also contain provision—

- (a) to prohibit P from evicting or excluding from the premises the person for whose protection the DVPO is made;
- (b) to prohibit P from entering the premises;
- (c) to require P to leave the premises, or
- (d) to prohibit P from coming within such distance of the premises as may be specified in the DVPO.

(9) A DVPO must state that a constable may arrest P without warrant if the constable has reasonable grounds for believing that P is in breach of the DVPO.

(10) A DVPO may be in force for—

- (a) no fewer than 14 days beginning with the day on which it is made, and
- (b) no more than 28 days beginning with that day.

(11) A DVPO must state the period for which it is to be in force.’

Mr Colum Eastwood*

Amendment 26

New Clause

After clause 49 insert -

‘Breach of a domestic violence protection order

49F.—(1) A person arrested by virtue of section 49E(9) for a breach of a DVPO must be held in custody and brought before a magistrates’ court within the period of 24 hours beginning with the time of the arrest.

(2) If the matter is not disposed of when the person is brought before the court, the court may remand the person.’’

Amendment 27

New Clause

After clause 49 insert -

‘Further provision about remand

49G.—(1) This section applies for the purposes of the remand of a person by a magistrates’ court under section 49C(2) or (3) or 49F(2).

(2) In the instance of a magistrates’ court remanding a person on bail for a period exceeding 8 clear days under section 47(4) of the Magistrates’ Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981, for those purposes the reference to the “other party” is to be read—

- (a) in the case of a remand prior to the hearing of an application for a DVPO, as a reference to the authorising officer;
- (b) in any other case, as a reference to the constable who applied for the DVPO.

(3) If the court has reason to suspect that a medical report will be required, the power to remand a person may be exercised for the purpose of enabling a medical examination to take place and a report to be made.

(4) If the person is remanded in custody for that purpose, the adjournment may not be for more than 3 weeks at a time.

(5) If the person is remanded on bail for that purpose, the adjournment may not be for more than 4 weeks at a time.

(6) If the court has reason to suspect that the person is suffering from a mental disorder within the meaning of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, the court has the same power to make an order under section 42 of that Act (remand to hospital for medical report) as it has under that section in the case of an accused person (within the meaning of that section).

(7) The court may, when remanding the person on bail, require the person to comply, before release on bail or later, with such requirements as appear to the court to be necessary to secure that the person does not interfere with witnesses or otherwise obstruct the course of justice.’

‘PART 7A
ENDING THE LIFE OF AN UNBORN CHILD

Ending the life of an unborn child

- 71A.—(1) Without prejudice to section 58 and section 59 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 and section 25 of the Criminal Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 1945 and subject to subsection (2) any person who ends the life of an unborn child at any stage of that child’s development shall be guilty of an offence and liable on conviction on indictment to a period of not more than ten years’ imprisonment and a fine.
- (2) It shall be a defence for any person charged with an offence under this section to show—
- (a) that the act or acts ending the life of an unborn child were lawfully performed at premises operated by a Health and Social Care Trust, or
 - (b) that the act or acts ending the life of the unborn child were lawfully performed without fee or reward in circumstances of urgency when access to premises operated by a Health and Social Care Trust was not possible.
- (3) For the purposes of this section a person ends the life of an unborn child if that person does any act, or causes or permits any act, with the intention of bringing about the end of the life of an unborn child, and, by reason of any such act, the life of that unborn child is ended.
- (4) For the purposes of this section ‘lawfully’ in subsection (2) means in accordance with any defence or exception under section 58 and section 59 of the Offences Against the Person Act 1861 and section 25 of the Criminal Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 1945.’

‘SCHEDULE 3A

DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION: VICTIM AND WITNESS SUPPORT SERVICES AND VICTIM INFORMATION SCHEMES

Disclosure by police to body providing support services for victims

1.—(1) A police officer or member of the police support staff may disclose relevant information relating to a victim to a prescribed body for the purpose of enabling that body to advise the victim about support services provided by the body, or offer or provide support services to the victim.

(2) For the purposes of this paragraph—

“relevant information relating to a victim” means—

- (a) the name and address of the victim;
- (b) any telephone number or e-mail address at which the victim may be contacted; and
- (c) such other information relating to the victim or the criminal conduct concerned as it appears to the police officer or member of the police support staff to be appropriate to disclose for the purpose mentioned in sub-paragraph (1);

“support services” means services involving the provision of information, advice, support or any other form of assistance to victims.

Disclosure by Public Prosecution Service to body providing support services for witnesses

2.—(1) Where the Director of Public Prosecutions has the conduct of criminal proceedings, a member of staff of the Public Prosecution Service may disclose relevant information relating to a witness for the prosecution in those proceedings to a prescribed body for the purpose of enabling that body to advise the witness about support services provided by the body, or offer or provide support services to the witness.

(2) For the purposes of this paragraph—

(a) “relevant information relating to a witness” means—

- (i) the name and address of the witness;
- (ii) the age of the witness;
- (iii) any telephone number or e-mail address at which the witness may be contacted; and
- (iv) such other information relating to the witness or the proceedings concerned as it appears to the member of staff of the Public Prosecution Service to be appropriate to disclose for the purpose mentioned in sub-paragraph (1).

(3) In this paragraph—

“support services” means services involving the provision of information, advice, support or any other form of assistance to prosecution witnesses in criminal proceedings;

“prosecution witness”, in relation to any criminal proceedings, means a person who has been or may be called to give evidence for the prosecution in such proceedings.

Disclosure by Public Prosecution Service for purposes of victim information schemes

3.—(1) A member of staff of the Public Prosecution Service may disclose relevant information relating to a victim to the Department for the purpose of enabling the Department to provide information and advice to the victim in connection with—

- (a) a scheme under section 68 of the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2002 (prisoner release victim information scheme); or
- (b) a scheme under section 69A of the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2002 (victims of mentally disordered offenders information scheme).

(2) A member of staff of the Public Prosecution Service may disclose relevant information relating to a victim to the Board for the purpose of enabling the Board to provide information and advice to the victim in connection with a scheme under Article 25 of the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2005 (the Probation Board for Northern Ireland victim information scheme).

(3) For the purposes of this paragraph “relevant information relating to a victim” means—

- (a) the name and address of the victim;
- (b) any telephone number or e-mail address at which the victim may be contacted;
- (c) details of the criminal conduct concerned; and
- (d) such other information relating to the victim or the criminal conduct concerned as it appears to the member of staff of the Public Prosecution Service to be appropriate to disclose for the purpose mentioned in sub-paragraph (1).

Unauthorised disclosure of information

4.—(1) If a person to whom this paragraph applies discloses without lawful authority any information—

- (a) acquired in the course of that person’s employment,
- (b) which is, or is derived from, information provided under this Schedule, and
- (c) which relates to a particular person, that person is guilty of an offence.

(2) This paragraph applies to any person who is—

- (a) employed in a body prescribed under paragraph 1 or 2 or in the provision of services to such a body;
- (b) employed in the Department or in the provision of services to the Department; or
- (c) employed by the Board or in the provision of services to the Board.

(3) It is not an offence under this paragraph to disclose information which has previously been disclosed to the public with lawful authority.

(4) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under this paragraph to show that at the time of the alleged offence—

- (a) that person believed that the disclosure in question was made with lawful authority and had no reasonable cause to believe otherwise; or
- (b) that person believed that the information in question had previously been disclosed to the public with lawful authority and had no reasonable cause to believe otherwise.

- (5) A person who is guilty of an offence under this paragraph is liable—
- on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum;
 - on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to a fine or to both.
- (6) For the purposes of this paragraph a disclosure of information by a person is to be regarded as made with lawful authority if, and only if, it is made—
- in the course of and for the purposes of that person's employment in a prescribed body;
 - in accordance with that person's official duty as a civil servant or as an employee of the Board;
 - in accordance with an authorisation given by the Department, the Board or the prescribed body;
 - in accordance with any statutory provision or order of a court;
 - for the purposes of any criminal proceedings; or
 - with the consent of the person to whom the information relates.
- (7) In this paragraph "employment"—
- includes employment as a volunteer; and
 - in relation to a particular person, shall be construed in accordance with sub-paragraph (2).

Saving for other powers of disclosure

5. Nothing in this Schedule affects any power to disclose information that exists apart from this Schedule.

Interpretation

6.—(1) In this Schedule—

"the Board" means the Probation Board for Northern Ireland;

"prescribed" means prescribed by regulations made by the Department.

(2) Section 29 (meaning of victim and related terms) applies for the purposes of this Schedule as it applies for the purposes of section 28.'

Amendment 69

New Schedule

After schedule 3 insert -

‘SCHEDULE 3B

Schedule inserted as Schedule 8A to the Police Act 1997

“SCHEDULE 8A

REVIEW OF CRIMINAL RECORD CERTIFICATES

Interpretation

1. In this Schedule—

"conviction" and "spent conviction" have the same meanings as in the Rehabilitation of Offenders (Northern Ireland) Order 1978;

"the independent reviewer" means the person appointed under paragraph 2;

"other disposal", in relation to a criminal record certificate or enhanced criminal record certificate issued to any person, means any caution, diversionary youth conference or informed warning relating to that person of which details are given in the certificate.

The independent reviewer

2.—(1) There is to be an independent reviewer for the purposes of this Schedule.

(2) The independent reviewer is a person appointed by the Department—

- for such period, not exceeding 3 years, as the Department decides; and
- on such terms as the Department decides.

(3) A person may be appointed for a further period or periods.

(4) The Department may terminate the appointment of the independent reviewer before the end of the period mentioned in sub-paragraph

(2)(a) by giving the independent reviewer notice of the determination not less than 3 months before it is to take effect.

(5) The Department may—

- pay such remuneration or allowances to the independent reviewer as it may determine;
- make arrangements for the provision of administrative or other assistance to the independent reviewer.

(6) The independent reviewer must, in relation to each financial year and no later than 3 months after the end of that year, make a report to the Department about the exercise of his or her functions under this Schedule in that year.

(7) The independent reviewer may make recommendations to the Department as to—

- any guidance issued by the Department under paragraph 3 or which the independent reviewer thinks it would be appropriate for the Department to issue under that paragraph;
- any changes to any statutory provision which the independent reviewer thinks may be appropriate.

(8) A person may at the same time hold office as the independent reviewer and as the independent monitor under section 119B.

Guidance

3. The Department may from time to time publish guidance to the independent reviewer as to the exercise of functions under this Schedule; and in exercising functions under this Schedule the independent reviewer must have regard to any guidance for the time being published under this paragraph.

Application for review after issue of certificate

4.—(1) A person who receives a criminal record certificate or an enhanced criminal record certificate may apply in writing to the Department for a review of the inclusion in that certificate of—

- the details of any spent conviction; or
- the details of any other disposal.

(2) An application under this paragraph must—

- be accompanied by such fee (if any) as may be prescribed; and
- be made within such period after the issue of the certificate as the Department may specify in a notice accompanying the certificate.

(3) The Department must refer any application under this paragraph to the independent reviewer together with—

- (a) any information supplied by the applicant in connection with the application; and
- (b) any other information which appears to the Department to be relevant to the application.

Review by independent reviewer after issue of certificate

5.—(1) The independent reviewer, on receiving an application under paragraph 4 in relation to a certificate, must review the inclusion in that certificate of—

- (a) the details of any spent conviction; and
- (b) the details of any other disposal.

(2) If, following that review, the independent reviewer determines that the details of any spent conviction or other disposal included in the certificate should be removed—

- (a) the independent reviewer must inform the Department of that fact; and
- (b) on being so informed the Department must issue a new certificate.

(3) In issuing such a certificate the Department must give effect to the determination of the independent reviewer and must (in the case of an enhanced certificate) again comply with section 113B(4).

(4) If, following that review, the independent reviewer determines that the details of any spent convictions or other disposals included in the certificate should not be removed—

- (a) the independent reviewer must inform the Department of that fact; and
- (b) the Department must inform the applicant that the application is refused.

(5) The independent reviewer must not determine that details of a spent conviction or other disposal should be removed from a certificate unless the independent reviewer is satisfied that the removal of those details would not undermine the safeguarding or protection of children and vulnerable adults or pose a risk of harm to the public.

Automatic review before issue of certificate containing only details of spent convictions or other disposals of person under 18

6.—(1) This paragraph applies where—

(a) the Department proposes to issue (otherwise than under sub-paragraph (4)(b) or (6)(b)) a criminal record certificate or an enhanced criminal record certificate relating to any person; and

(b) the certificate would—

- (i) contain details of any spent conviction or other disposal which occurred at a time when the person was under the age of 18; but
- (ii) not contain details of any conviction (whether spent or not) or other disposal occurring after that time.

(2) The Department must, before issuing the certificate, refer the certificate for review to the independent reviewer together with any information which appears to the Department to be relevant to that review.

(3) The independent reviewer, on receiving a referral under sub-paragraph (2) in relation to a certificate, must review the inclusion in that certificate of—

- (a) the details of any spent conviction; and
- (b) the details of any other disposal.

(4) If, following that review, the independent reviewer determines that the details of any spent conviction or other disposal included in the certificate should be removed—

- (a) the independent reviewer must inform the Department of that fact; and
- (b) on being so informed the Department must amend the certificate and issue the amended certificate.

(5) In issuing such a certificate the Department must give effect to the determination of the independent reviewer and must (in the case of an enhanced certificate) again comply with section 113B(4).

(6) If, following that review, the independent reviewer determines that the details of any spent convictions or other disposals included in the certificate should not be removed—

- (a) the independent reviewer must inform the Department of that fact; and
- (b) the Department must issue the certificate in the form referred to the independent reviewer.

(7) The independent reviewer must not determine that details of a spent conviction or other disposal should be removed from a certificate unless the independent reviewer is satisfied that the removal of those details would not undermine the safeguarding or protection of children and vulnerable adults or pose a risk of harm to the public.

(8) The fact that a review has been carried out under this paragraph before a certificate is issued does not prevent the operation of paragraphs 4 and 5 in relation to the certificate once issued.

Disclosure of information to the independent reviewer

7. The Chief Constable, the Department and the Probation Board for Northern Ireland must provide to the independent reviewer such information as the independent reviewer reasonably requires in connection with the exercise of his or her functions under this Schedule.”’

AMENDMENTS: SERIOUS PHYSICAL HARM TO CHILD OR VULNERABLE ADULT

The Law Reform (Year and a Day Rule) Act 1996 (c. 19)

1. In section 2 (restriction on institution of proceedings for fatal offence) in subsection (3)(c) for “(causing or allowing the death of a child or vulnerable adult)” substitute “of causing or allowing the death of a child or vulnerable adult”.

The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c. 42)

2. In Schedule 5 (offences for purposes of making sexual offences prevention orders) in paragraph 171A for “the death of a child or vulnerable adult” substitute “a child or vulnerable adult to die or suffer serious physical harm”.

The Domestic Violence, Crime and Victims Act 2004 (c. 28)

- 3.—(1) For the heading of section 7 substitute “Evidence and procedure in cases of death: Northern Ireland”.
 (2) In section 7(5) after “section 5” insert “of causing or allowing a person’s death”.
 (3) After section 7 insert—

“Evidence and procedure in cases of serious physical harm: Northern Ireland

- 7A.—(1) Subsections (3) to (5) apply where a person (“the defendant”) is charged in the same proceedings with a relevant offence and with an offence under section 5 in respect of the same harm (“the section 5 offence”).
 (2) In this section “relevant offence” means—
 (a) an offence under section 18 or 20 of the Offences against the Person Act 1861 (grievous bodily harm etc.);
 (b) an offence under Article 3 of the Criminal Attempts and Conspiracy (Northern Ireland) Order 1983 of attempting to commit murder.
 (3) Where by virtue of Article 4(4) of the Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1988 a court or jury is permitted, in relation to the section 5 offence, to draw such inferences as appear proper from the defendant’s failure to give evidence or refusal to answer a question, the court or jury may also draw such inferences in determining whether the defendant is guilty of a relevant offence, even if there would otherwise be no case for the defendant to answer in relation to that offence.
 (4) Where a magistrates’ court is considering under Article 37 of the Magistrates’ Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 whether to commit the defendant for trial for the relevant offence, if there is sufficient evidence to put the defendant on trial for the section 5 offence there is deemed to be sufficient evidence to put the defendant on trial for the relevant offence.
 (5) The power of a judge of the Crown Court under section 2(3) of the Grand Jury (Abolition) Act (Northern Ireland) 1969 (entry of “No Bill”) is not to be exercised in relation to a relevant offence unless it is also exercised in relation to the section 5 offence.
 (6) At the defendant’s trial the question whether there is a case for the defendant to answer on the charge of the relevant offence is not to be considered before the close of all the evidence (or, if at some earlier time the defendant ceases to be charged with the section 5 offence, before that earlier time).”.

The Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008 (NI 1)

4. In Part 1 of Schedule 2 (specified violent offences) in paragraph 30 for “the death of a child or vulnerable adult” substitute “a child or vulnerable adult to die or suffer serious physical harm”.

- “(2A) Guidance under this Article must contain provisions about arrangements for considering the disclosure, to any particular member of the public, of information concerning any relevant previous convictions of a person where it is necessary to protect a particular child or particular children from serious harm caused by that person; and the guidance may, in particular, contain provisions for the purpose of preventing a member of the public from disclosing that information to any other person.”.
- (4) In Article 50(3) for “Paragraph (2) does” substitute “Paragraphs (2) and (2A) do”.’

Minister of Justice

Amendment 6New Clause

After clause 81 insert -

‘Unpaid community service after early release

81A. In Article 19 of the Criminal Justice (Northern Ireland) Order 2008 after paragraph (1) insert—

- “(1A) The Department may by regulations, having consulted the Probation Board, provide for a community service scheme, under which a person released under paragraph (1) may be required to engage in unpaid community service for the remaining period of the fixed term they would have served but for their early release.”.’

Mr Alastair Ross

Amendment 7New Clause

After clause 89 insert -

‘Sentencing for violent offences against older people

- 89A.—(1) This section applies where an individual is convicted of a violent offence and that individual was aged 18 or over when the offence was committed.
- (2) The court shall impose a custodial sentence for a term of at least seven years (with or without a fine) unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify its not doing so.
- (3) For the purposes of this section “violent offence” means an offence which leads or is intended or likely to lead to the death of a person aged 65 years or more or to physical injury to a person aged 65 years or more and includes an offence which is required to be charged as arson (whether or not it would otherwise fall within this definition).
- (4) If there are exceptional circumstances which justify—
- the imposition of a lesser sentence than that provided for under subsection (2), or
 - the exercise by the court of its powers under section 18 of the Treatment of Offenders Act (Northern Ireland) 1968,
- the court shall state in open court that it is of the opinion that such exceptional circumstances exist and the reasons for that opinion.
- (5) Where subsection (4) applies the Chief Clerk shall record both the opinion of the court that exceptional circumstances exist and the reasons stated in open court which justify either the imposition of a lesser sentence or the exercise of its powers under section 18 of the Treatment of Offenders Act (Northern Ireland) 1968 as the case may be.
- (6) For the purposes of subsection (2) “custodial sentence” shall not include a sentence in relation to which the court has made an order under section 18 of the Treatment of Offenders Act (Northern Ireland) 1968.
- (7) For the avoidance of doubt, an offence falling within the definition of subsection (3) is a violent offence for the purposes of this section whether or not there is evidence that any individual who is convicted of such an offence knew or suspected that any person who dies or sustains physical injury, or any person who is intended or likely to die or sustain physical injury, is aged 65 years or more.
- (8) In section 36 (reviews of sentencing) of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 in subsection (9)(d) after “2015” insert the words—
- “and a sentence required to be imposed by virtue of section 89A of the Justice Bill 2015”.

‘SCHEDULE 6A
DOMESTIC VIOLENCE PROTECTION NOTICES AND ORDERS
Power to issue a domestic violence protection notice

- 1.—(1) A police officer not below the rank of superintendent (“the authorising officer”) may issue a domestic violence protection notice (“a DVPN”) under this paragraph.
- (2) A DVPN may be issued to a person (“P”) aged 18 years or over if the authorising officer has reasonable grounds for believing that—
- (a) P has been violent towards, or has threatened violence towards, an associated person, and
- (b) the issue of the DVPN is necessary to protect that person from violence or a threat of violence by P.

- (3) Before issuing a DVPN, the authorising officer must, in particular, consider—
- (a) the welfare of any person under the age of 18 whose interests the officer considers relevant to the issuing of the DVPN (whether or not that person is an associated person),
 - (b) the opinion of the person for whose protection the DVPN would be issued as to the issuing of the DVPN,
 - (c) any representations made by P as to the issuing of the DVPN, and
 - (d) in the case of provision included by virtue of sub-paragraph (8), the opinion of any other associated person who lives in the premises to which the provision would relate.
- (4) The authorising officer must take reasonable steps to discover the opinions mentioned in sub-paragraph (3).
- (5) But the authorising officer may issue a DVPN in circumstances where the person for whose protection it is issued does not consent to the issuing of the DVPN.
- (6) A DVPN must contain provision to prohibit P from molesting the person for whose protection it is issued.
- (7) Provision required to be included by virtue of sub-paragraph (6) may be expressed so as to refer to molestation in general, to particular acts of molestation, or to both.
- (8) If P lives in premises which are also lived in by a person for whose protection the DVPN is issued, the DVPN may also contain provision—
- (a) to prohibit P from evicting or excluding from the premises the person for whose protection the DVPN is issued,
 - (b) to prohibit P from entering the premises,
 - (c) to require P to leave the premises, or
 - (d) to prohibit P from coming within such distance of the premises as may be specified in the DVPN.

Contents and service of a domestic violence protection notice

- 2.—(1) A DVPN must state—
- (a) the grounds on which it has been issued,
 - (b) that a constable may arrest P without warrant if the constable has reasonable grounds for believing that P is in breach of the DVPN,
 - (c) that an application for a domestic violence protection order (“a DVPO”) under paragraph 4 will be heard within 48 hours of the time of service of the DVPN and a notice of the hearing will be given to P,
 - (d) that the DVPN continues in effect until that application has been determined, and
 - (e) the provision that a court of summary jurisdiction may include in a DVPO.
- (2) A DVPN must be in writing and must be served on P personally by a constable.
- (3) On serving P with a DVPN, the constable must ask P for an address for the purposes of being given the notice of the hearing of the application for the DVPO.

Breach of a domestic violence protection notice

- 3.—(1) A person arrested by virtue of paragraph 2(1)(b) for a breach of a DVPN must be held in custody and brought before the court of summary jurisdiction which will hear the application for the DVPO under paragraph 4—
- (a) before the end of the period of 24 hours beginning with the time of the arrest, or
 - (b) if earlier, at the hearing of that application.
- (2) If the person is brought before the court by virtue of sub-paragraph (1)(a), the court may remand the person.
- (3) If the court adjourns the hearing of the application by virtue of paragraph 4(7), the court may remand the person.

Application for a domestic violence protection order

- 4.—(1) If a DVPN has been issued, a constable must apply for a DVPO.
- (2) The application must be made by complaint to a court of summary jurisdiction.
- (3) The application must be heard by the court not later than 48 hours after the DVPN was served pursuant to paragraph 2(2).
- (4) A notice of the hearing of the application must be given to P.
- (5) The notice is deemed given if it has been left at the address given by P under paragraph 2(3).
- (6) But if the notice has not been given because no address was given by P under paragraph 2(3), the court may hear the application for the DVPO if the court is satisfied that the constable applying for the DVPO has made reasonable efforts to give P the notice.
- (7) The court may adjourn the hearing of the application.
- (8) If the court adjourns the hearing, the DVPN continues in effect until the application has been determined.
- (9) On the hearing of an application for a DVPO, Article 118 of the Magistrates’ Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981 (summons to witness and warrant for arrest) does not apply in relation to a person for whose protection the DVPO would be made, except where the person has given oral or written evidence at the hearing.

Conditions for and contents of a DVPO

- 5.—(1) The court may make a DVPO if two conditions are met.
- (2) The first condition is that the court is satisfied on the balance of probabilities that P has been violent towards, or has threatened violence towards, an associated person.
- (3) The second condition is that the court thinks that making the DVPO is necessary to protect that person from violence or a threat of violence by P.
- (4) Before making a DVPO, the court must, in particular, consider—
- (a) the welfare of any person under the age of 18 whose interests the court considers relevant to the making of the DVPO (whether or not that person is an associated person), and
 - (b) any opinion of which the court is made aware—
 - (i) of the person for whose protection the DVPO would be made, and
 - (ii) in the case of provision included by virtue of sub-paragraph (8), of any other associated person who lives in the premises to which the provision would relate.
- (5) But the court may make a DVPO in circumstances where the person for whose protection it is made does not consent to the making of the DVPO.
- (6) A DVPO must contain provision to prohibit P from molesting the person for whose protection it is made.

- (7) Provision required to be included by virtue of sub-paragraph (6) may be expressed so as to refer to molestation in general, to particular acts of molestation, or to both.
- (8) If P lives in premises which are also lived in by a person for whose protection the DVPO is made, the DVPO may also contain provision—
- to prohibit P from evicting or excluding from the premises the person for whose protection the DVPO is made,
 - to prohibit P from entering the premises,
 - to require P to leave the premises, or
 - to prohibit P from coming within such distance of the premises as may be specified in the DVPO.
- (9) A DVPO must state that a constable may arrest P without warrant if the constable has reasonable grounds for believing that P is in breach of the DVPO.
- (10) A DVPO may be in force for—
- no fewer than 14 days beginning with the day on which it is made, and
 - no more than 28 days beginning with that day.
- (11) A DVPO must state the period for which it is to be in force.

Breach of a DVPO

- 6.—(1) A person arrested by virtue of paragraph 5(9) for a breach of a DVPO must be held in custody and brought before a court of summary jurisdiction within the period of 24 hours beginning with the time of the arrest.
- (2) If the court finds that the person has breached the DVPO, the court may—
- order the person to pay a sum not exceeding £5000; or
 - commit the person to prison for a fixed period not exceeding 2 months.
- (3) Payment of any sum ordered to be paid under sub-paragraph (2)(a) is enforceable in the same manner as payment of a sum adjudged to be paid by a conviction.
- (4) If the matter is not disposed of when the person is brought before the court under sub-paragraph (1), the court may remand the person.
- (5) In section 44(5) of the Judicature (Northern Ireland) Act 1978 (appeals relating to punishment of contempt and other defaults) in paragraph (c) after “Article 112 of the Magistrates’ Courts (Northern Ireland) Order 1981” insert “or paragraph 6 of Schedule 6A to the Justice Act (Northern Ireland) 2015”.

Further provision about remand

- 7.—(1) This paragraph applies for the purposes of the remand of a person by a court under paragraph 3(2) or (3) or 6(4).
- (2) The court may remand the person—
- in custody, that is to say, commit the person to custody to be brought before the court at the end of the period of remand; or
 - on bail, that is to say, take from the person a recognizance conditioned for subsequent appearance before the court.
- (3) If the person is remanded in custody, the court may give its consent to the person being remanded on bail in accordance with sub-paragraph (2)(b) in which event the court must fix the amount of the recognizance with a view to its being taken subsequently.
- (4) Subject to sub-paragraphs (8), (11) and (12), the period for which a person is remanded in custody must not exceed—
- in case where the person is before the court and consents, 28 days;
 - in any other case, 8 days.
- (5) The period for which a person is remanded on bail must not exceed 28 days unless both the person and the relevant police officer consent.
- (6) For the purposes of sub-paragraph (5) the relevant police officer is—
- in the case of a remand prior to the hearing of an application for a DVPO, the authorising officer;
 - in any other case, the constable who applied for the DVPO.
- (7) In the case of a person over the age of 21, the power to remand in custody includes power, on an application made by a police officer not below the rank of inspector, to commit that person to—
- detention at a police station; or
 - the custody (otherwise than at a police station) of a constable.
- (8) The period for which a person is remanded under sub-paragraph (7) must not exceed 3 days.
- (9) A person shall not be committed to detention at a police station under sub-paragraph (7)(a) unless there is a need for the person to be so detained for the purposes of inquiries into a criminal offence; and, if a person is committed to such detention—
- the person shall, as soon as that need ceases, be brought back before the court;
 - the person shall be treated as a person in police detention to whom the duties under Article 40 of the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989 (responsibilities in relation to persons detained) relate; and
 - the detention of the person shall be subject to periodic review at the times set out in Article 41 of that Order (review of police detention).
- (10) A person shall not be committed to the custody (otherwise than at a police station) of a constable under sub-paragraph (7)(b) unless there is a need for the person to be kept in such custody for the purposes of inquiries into a criminal offence; and if a person is committed to such custody, the person shall, as soon as that need ceases, be brought back before the court.
- (11) If the court has reason to suspect that a medical report will be required, the power to remand a person may be exercised for the purpose of enabling a medical examination to take place and a report to be made; and if the person is remanded in custody for that purpose, the remand may not be for more than 21 days.
- (12) If the court has reason to suspect that the person is suffering from mental illness or severe mental impairment within the meaning of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986, the court has the same power to remand a person under Article 42 of that Order (remand to hospital for medical report) as it has under that Article in the case of an accused person (within the meaning of that Article).
- (13) The court may order a person to be brought before it at any time before the expiration of the period for which the person has been remanded.
- (14) The court may, when remanding the person on bail, require the person to comply, before release on bail or later, with such requirements as appear to the court to be necessary to secure that the person does not interfere with persons likely to give evidence at the hearing or otherwise obstruct the course of justice.

Guidance

- 8.—(1) The Department may issue guidance relating to the exercise by a constable of functions under this Schedule.
 (2) A constable must have regard to any guidance issued under this paragraph when exercising a function to which the guidance relates.
 (3) Before issuing guidance under this paragraph, the Department must consult—
 (a) the Chief Constable,
 (b) the Policing Board, and
 (c) such other persons as the Department thinks fit.

Interpretation

- 9.—(1) In this Schedule—
 “associated person” means a person who is associated with P within the meaning of Article 3 of the Family Homes and Domestic Violence (Northern Ireland) Order 1998;
 “the authorising officer” has the meaning given by paragraph 1(1);
 “a DVPN” has the meaning given by paragraph 1(1);
 “a DVPO” has the meaning given by paragraph 2(1)(c);
 “P” has the meaning given by paragraph 1(2).
 (2) In calculating—
 (a) when the period of 24 hours mentioned in paragraph 3(1)(a) or 6(1) ends, or
 (b) when the period of 48 hours mentioned in paragraph 4(3) ends,
 Christmas Day, Good Friday, any Sunday and any day which is a bank holiday in Northern Ireland under the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971 are to be disregarded.
 (3) In calculating the length of any period of remand, the period is to be taken as beginning on the day after the person is remanded.

Pilot schemes

- 10.—(1) The Department may by order provide for any provision of paragraphs 1 to 9 to come into operation for a period of time to be specified in or under the order for the purpose of assessing the effectiveness of the provision.
 (2) Such an order may make different provision for different areas.
 (3) More than one order may be made under this paragraph.
 (4) Provision included in an order under this paragraph does not affect the provision that may be included in relation to paragraphs 1 to 9 in an order under section 103.’
